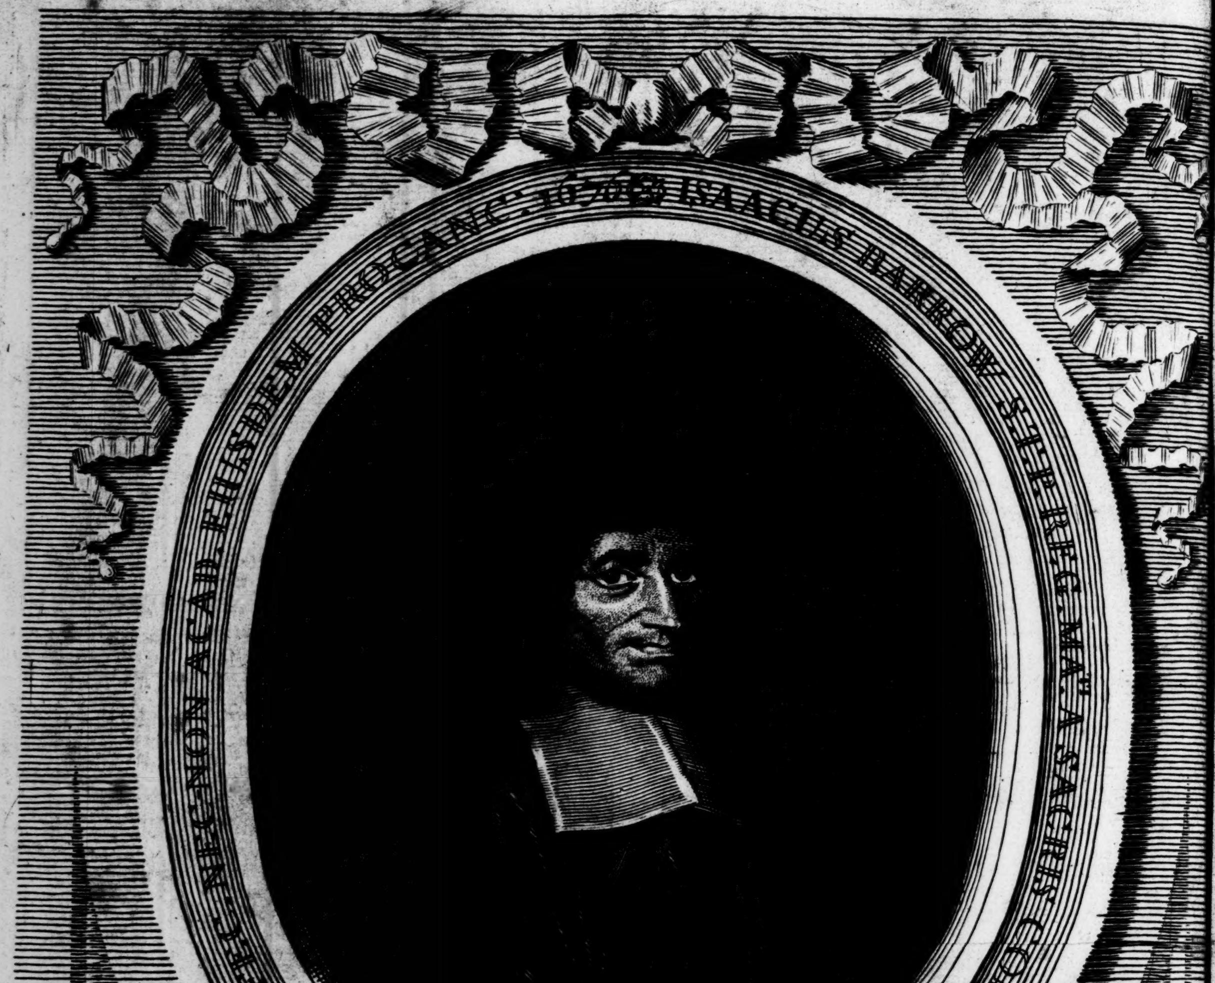
ISAACUS BARROW S.T.P. REG. MA^{tis} A SACRIS COLL. S.S. TRINI. CANTAB. PRÆFEC. NEC NON ACAD. EIUSDEM PROCANC: 1676
D. Loggan ad Vivum delin.

Sold by Brabazon Aylmer at the three Pigeons over against the Royall Exchang London.



ISAACUS BARROW S.T.P. REG. MA$^{\text{TI}}$ A SACRIS COLL. S.S. TRINI. CANTAB. PRÆFEC. NEC NON ACAD. EIUSDEM PROCANC: 1676
D. Loggan ad Vivum delin.

Sold by Brabazon Aylmer at the three Pigeons over against the Royall Exchang London.

THE WORKS

Of the Learned

Iſaac Barrow, D. D.

Late Maſter of Trinity-College in Cambridge.

(Being All his ENGLISH Works.)

In Three Volumes.

Publiſhed by His GRACE,
Dr. JOHN TILLOTSON,
Late Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

The Firſt Volume,

Containing
- Thirty two Sermons Preach'd upon ſeveral Occaſions.
- An Expoſition of the Lord's-Prayer, the Creed, &c.
- A Learned Treatiſe of the Pope's Supremacy.

LONDON:
Printed for BRABAZON AYLMER, at the Three Pigeons againſt the Royal-Exchange in Cornhill. M DCC.

341

THE WORKS

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

([illegible] All his [illegible] Works.

In Three Volumes.

[illegible]

Dr. JOHN TILLOTSON,
Late Archbishop of Canterbury.

[illegible]

[illegible]

LONDON:
[illegible]
[illegible]

To the Right Honourable

HENEAGE
Earl of Nottingham,

Lord High Chancellor of England,

AND

One of His MAJESTY's moſt Honourable PRIVY-COUNCIL.

MY LORD,

I Take the boldneſs to preſent your Lordſhip with ſome of the fruits of my deceaſed Son's Studies in Divinity. And ſince it hath pleaſed God, to my unſpeakable grief and loſs, to deprive me of ſo great a bleſſing, and comfort of my old age; it is no ſmall mitigation of my ſorrow, that whilſt he liv'd he was not unprofitable to the world, and that now he is dead, he hath left thoſe monuments of his piety and learning behind him, which I am told are generally thought not unworthy to be imparted to the publick.

If theſe Sermons be ſuch, I have no cauſe to doubt but they will eaſily obtain your Lordſhip's Patronage, who are ſo known a Favourer of all that is vertuous and worthy, eſpecially of Religion and the Miniſters of it. Of which I had particular experience upon the death of my good Son, when your Lordſhip was pleaſed, with ſo much humanity and condeſcenſion, to ſend to comfort me under that ſad loſs, and to expreſs your own reſentment of it.

But what-ever theſe Sermons be, ſince I have no other way to acknowledge my great obligations to your Lordſhip upon all occaſions, I hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe favourably to accept of this, how ſmall ſoever, yet ſincere teſtimony of my dutifull reſpects and gratitude. I am,

MY LORD,

Your Lordſhip's moſt obliged and moſt obedient Servant,

THOMAS BARROW.

The

THE PUBLISHER TO THE READER.

THE Authour of the following SERMONS was ſo publickly known, and ſo highly eſteemed by all Learned and Good men, that nothing either needs or can be ſaid more to his advantage. Not but that I think it very fit, that the Picture of this truly-great Man ſhould be drawn at full length, for the knowledge and imitation of poſterity; and it will, I hope, be done hereafter by ſome more ſkilfull hand: However I ſhall not within the narrow limits of a Preface, ſo much as attempt the Character of him; of whom, either not a little, or nothing at all ought to be ſaid.

And the Sermons themſelves do as little need commendation, as the Authour; their own excellency and eloquence will praiſe them beſt. I ſhall therefore only advertiſe the Reader of ſome few things concerning them.

The Deſign of the Five firſt is, to recommend Religion to our eſteem and practice, from the conſideration of the manifold excellencies and advantages of it. The Four next do treat of the two great Duties of Religion, and parts of Divine Worſhip, Prayer and Thankſgiving; and contain likewiſe a very powerfull perſuaſive to the practice of them. The Three following were preach'd upon three ſolemn Occaſions: The Firſt of them upon the 29. of May, 1676.

the Anniverſary of His MAJESTY's happy Reſtoration: The Second upon the 5. of November, 1675. in commemoration of our great Deliverance from the Powder-Treaſon: both in the year of his Vice-Chancellourſhip: The Third at the Conſecration of the Biſhop of Man, (afterwards Lord Biſhop of S. Aſaph), his Uncle; in which he pleads for the due Reſpect and Revenue of the Clergy with ſo much modeſty, and yet with ſo great force of reaſon and eloquence, that the whole Profeſſion may juſtly think themſelves for ever indebted to him.

Some of theſe twelve Sermons were the very firſt that he made; by which we may judge with what preparation and furniture he entred upon this Sacred employment. The firſt of them was preach'd at St. Mary's in Cambridge, June 30. 1661. and was, I think, the firſt that he ever preach'd. Thoſe two excellent Sermons of Thankſgiving were, as I am inform'd the next. The fourth in order, was the firſt that he preach'd before the King's Majeſty. In the placing of them as they now ſtand, I had very little regard to the order of Time, but rather to ſome ſmall reaſon taken from the Subject matter of them, not worth the mentioning; any reaſon almoſt being good enough in a matter ſo indifferent, and where none is neceſſary.

The next ten Sermons are thought fit to be put together, becauſe of their affinity to one another, all of them relating to the ſame Argument, and tending to reform the ſeveral Vices of the Tongue. The two laſt of them indeed againſt Pragmaticalneſs and medling in the affairs of others, do not ſo properly belong to this Subject; but conſidering that this Vice is chiefly managed by the Tongue, and is almoſt ever attended with ſome irregularity and indiſcretion of Speech, they are not altogether ſo foreign and unſutable to it. And never were Diſcourſes of this kind more neceſſary than in this wicked and perverſe Generation; wherein the Vices here reprehended are ſo very rife, and out of the abundant impiety of mens hearts there proceeds ſo much Evil-ſpeaking of all kinds, in Atheiſtical Diſcourſes, and blaſphemous Railery, and prophane Swearing; and when Cenſoriouſneſs, Detraction and Slander are ſcarce accounted faults, even with thoſe who would ſeem to be moſt ſtrict in other parts and duties of Religion.

The Authour of them, as he was exemplary in all manner of converſation, ſo eſpecially in this part of it; being of all men I ever had the happineſs to know the cleareſt of this common guilt, and moſt free from Offending in Word; coming as near as is poſſible for humane frailty to do, to the perfect Idea of St. James his perfect man. So that in theſe excellent Diſcourſes of his he hath only tranſcribed his own practice. All the Rules which he hath given he moſt religiouſly obſerv'd himſelf, and was very uneaſie when at any time he ſaw them tranſgreſſed by others in his company

There is one thing in them needs excuſe, namely, That ſeveral things which are more briefly and ſummarily ſaid in the Firſt of theſe Sermons about Evil-ſpeaking are repeated in ſome of the following Diſcourſes: which becauſe it could not well be avoided, but either by wholly leaving out the Firſt Sermon, or very much mangling ſome of the reſt, will, it is hoped, for that reaſon be eaſily pardoned.

The eight following Sermons are likewiſe ſorted together, becauſe they explain and enforce the two great Commandments of the Law, the Love of God, and of our Neighbour.

The two next were publiſhed by himſelf, and onely thoſe two. The firſt of them, about the Duty and Reward of Bounty to the Poor, was preach'd at the Spital, and publiſh'd at the deſire of the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen. This was received with univerſal approbation; and perhaps there is nothing exſtant in Divinity more perfect in its kind: it ſeems to have exhauſted the whole Argument, and to have left no conſideration belonging to it untouch'd. The other, on the Paſſion of our Bleſſed Saviour, was the laſt he preach'd, but one; and, I think, the occaſion of his death, by a Cold he then got, which, in all probability, was the cauſe of the Fever of which he died, to our unſpeakable loſs. This he ſent to the Preſs himſelf, but did not live to ſee it publiſh'd.

The laſt part of this Firſt Volume is his learned Treatiſe of the Pope's Supremacy, to which, becauſe there is prefix'd a Preface giving a ſhort account of it, I need not here to ſay any thing farther of it.

The next part of this Volume is a brief Explication of the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, the Decalogue, and the Doctrine of the Sacraments.

The Creed alſo he hath handled in a larger way, in a great many excellent Sermons upon the ſeveral Articles of it, wherein he hath not onely explain'd and confirm'd the great Doctrines of our Religion, but likewiſe ſhewn what influence every Article of our Faith ought to have upon our Practice. Which Diſcourſes make the Second Volume of his Works.

Beſides theſe, the Authour hath left many other excellent Sermons, upon ſeveral important and uſefull Subjects in Divinity: Which make the Third Volume, being All his Engliſh Works.

Now I heartily recommend theſe Sermons which are here publiſh'd to thy ſerious peruſal; and ſhall onely ſay this of them, That as they want no other kind of excellency, ſo particularly they are animated throughout with ſo genuine a ſpirit of true Piety and Goodneſs, that he muſt either be a perfectly-good, or prodigiouſly-bad man, that can read them over without being the better for them.

JOHN TILLOTSON.

SOME

SOME ACCOUNT OF THE LIFE OF Dr. Iſaac Barrow:

TO THE

Reverend Dr. TILLOTSON, Dean of Canterbury.

SIR,

THE affection of Friends, or intereſt of the Bookſeller has made it uſual to prefix the Life of an Authour before his works; and ſometimes it is a care very neceſſary to give him a high and excellent character, the better to protect his Writings againſt that cenſoriouſneſs and miſconſtruction to which all are ſubject. What Dr. Barrow has left do as little as any need ſuch an advantage, ſtanding firm on their own worth; nay, his Works may ſupply the want of a Hiſtory of his Life, if the Reader take along with him this general remark, That his Sermons were the counterpart of his Actions; therein he has drawn the true Picture of himſelf, ſo that in them being dead he yet ſpeaketh, or ra-

Heb. 11. 4. Marg. or rather, is ſpoken of. Yet we the Readers do gladly entertain any hopes of ſeeing his Example added to his Doctrine, and we think we expreſs ſome kind of gratitude for your reviewing, digeſting and publiſhing his Sermons, if we deſire from you his Life too. His Sermons have coſt you ſo much pains as would have produced many more of your own; if now his Life ſhould ask a farther part of your time, it were ſtill promoting the ſame ends, the Doctour's honour, and the publick good. What Memorials I can recollect, I here preſent you, that when you have refined this Ore, it may be admitted as my offering toward his Statue. What may be ſaid would have had a ſtronger impreſſion upon our Paſſions when they were moved upon the firſt news of ſo great a loſs; or perhaps 'twere beſt to forbear till the Publication of all his works, when the Reader will be farther prepared to admire him. But I proceed in the order of time, that the other particulars occurring to your memory or ſuggeſted by other friends may more readily find their proper place, and ſo give the better luſtre to one another: and this I think the fitter to be obſerved becauſe the harmonious, regular, conſtant tenour of his life is the moſt admirable thing in it. For though a life full of variety and even of contrariety were more eaſie to be writ, and to moſt more pleaſant to be read, it leſs deſerves to be imitated.

Dr. Iſaac Barrow was the ſon of Mr. Thomas Barrow (a Citizen of London of good reputation yet living, Brother to Iſaac Barrow, late L. Biſhop of St. Aſaph) Son of Iſaac Barrow, Eſq. of Spiny Abby in Cambridge-ſhire (where he was a Juſtice of Peace for 40 years) Son of Philip Barrogh who has in Print a Method of Phyſick, and had a brother Iſaac Barrow Doctour of Phyſick, a Benefactour to Trinity College, and there Tutour to Robert Cecil Earl of Salisbury and Lord Treaſurer.

He was born in London October 1630. his Mother was Ann, Daughter of William Buggin of North Cray in Kent, Eſq; whoſe tenderneſs he did not long enjoy, ſhe dying when he was about four years old.

His firſt ſchooling was at the Charterhouſe for two or three years when his greateſt recreation was in ſuch ſports as brought on fighting among the Boys; in his after-time a very great courage remained, whereof many inſtances might be ſet down, yet he had perfectly ſubdued all inclination to quarrelling, but a negligence of his Cloaths did always continue with him. For his Book he minded it not, and his Father had little hope of ſucceſs in the profeſſion of a Scholar, to which he had deſigned him. Nay, there was then ſo little appearance of that comfort which his Father afterward received from him, that he often ſolemnly wiſht, that if it pleaſed God to take away any of his Children, it might be his ſon Iſaac, ſo vain a thing is man's judgment, and our providence unfit to guide our own affairs

Removing thence to Felſted in Eſſex, he quickly made ſo great a progreſs in Learning and all things praiſe-worthy, that his Maſter appointed him a little Tutour to the Lord Viſcount Fairfax of Emely in Ireland. While he ſtay'd here he was admitted in Peter-houſe his Uncle the Biſhop's College; but when he removed to (and was fit for) the Univerſity of Cambridge, Feb. 1645. he was planted in Trinity College; His condition was very low, his Father having ſuffered much in his Eſtate on account of adhering to the King's Cauſe, and being gone away from London to Oxford, his chief ſupport at firſt was from the liberality of the famous and reverend Dr. Hammond, to whoſe memory he paid his thanks in an excellent Epitaph (among his Poems) wherein he deſcribes the Doctour and himſelf too; for the moſt, and moſt noble parts of the character do exactly agree to them both. Being now as it were without Relations, he abuſed not the opportunity to negligence in his ſtudies, or licentiouſneſs in his manners, but ſeaſoned his tender years with the principles and the exerciſe of diligence, learning and piety, the beſt preparatives for the ſucceeding varieties of life.

The Young-man continued ſuch a Royaliſt that he would never take the Covenant; yet carrying himſelf with fairneſs, candour and prudence he gained the good-will of the chief Governours of the Univerſity. One day Dr. Hill, Maſter of the College, laying his hand on his head, ſaid, thou art a good Lad, 'tis pity thou art a Cavilier: and when in an Oration on the Gun-powder-

treaſon

treaſon he had ſo celebrated the former times as to reflect much on the preſent, ſome Fellows were provok'd to move for his expulſion, but the Maſter ſilenced them with this; Barrow is a better man than any of us. Afterward when the Ingagement was impoſed, he ſubſcribed it, but upon ſecond thoughts, repenting of what he had done, he went back to the Commiſſioners and declared his diſſatisfaction, and got his name raſed out of the Liſt.

For the Juniours, he was always ready to give them his help and very freely, though for all the Exerciſes he made for them in verſe and proſe he never received any recompence but one pair of Gloves.

While he was yet a young Scholar his judgment was too great to reſt ſatisfied with the ſhallow and ſuperficial Phyſiology then commonly taught and received in the Univerſities, wherewith Students of meaner abilities contentedly took up, but he applied himſelf to the reading and conſidering the Writings of the Lord Verulam, Monſieur des Cartes, Galileo, and other the great Wits of the laſt Age, who ſeemed to offer ſomething more ſolid and ſubſtantial.

When the time came that he could be choſen Fellow of his College, Ann. Dom. 1649. he obtained by his merit, nothing elſe could recommend him who was accounted of the contrary Party. After his Election, finding the times not favourable to men of his opinion in the affairs of Church and State, to qualify him (as he then thought) to do moſt good, he deſigned the Profeſſion of Phyſick , and for ſome years bent his ſtudies that way, and particularly made a great progreſs in the knowledge of Anatomy, Botanicks and Chymiſtry. But afterward upon deliberation with himſelf and conference with his Uncle the late Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph, thinking that Profeſſion not well conſiſtent with the Oath he had taken when admitted Fellow, to make Divinity the end of his ſtudies, he quitted Medicine and apply'd himſelf chiefly to what his Oath ſeemed to oblige him.

He was upon all opportunities ſo open and communicative, that many of his friends in that College (for out of it he had few acquaintance) can, and I hope ſome one will report frequent inſtances of his calm temper in a factious ous time, his large charity in a mean eſtate, his facetious talk upon fit occaſions, his indefatigable induſtry in various ſtudies, his clear judgment on all arguments, his ſtedy vertue in all difficulties which they muſt often have obſerved and can better deſcribe.

Of his way of diſcourſe I ſhall here note one thing, that when his opinion was demanded, he did uſually ſpeak to the importance as well as to the truth of the queſtion; this was an excellent advantage, and to be met with in few mens converſation.

Tractare res multi norunt, æſtimare pauci. Cardan.

While he read Scaliger on Euſebius he perceived the dependence of Chronology on Aſtronomy, which put him on the ſtudy of Ptolomy's Almageſt, and finding that Book and all Aſtronomy to depend on Geometry, he applied himſelf to Euclide's Elements, not ſatisfied till he had laid firm foundations; and ſo he made his firſt entry into the Mathematicks, having the Learned Mr. John Ray then for his ſocius ſtudiorum, and always for his eſteemed friend: he proceeded to the demonſtration of the other ancient Mathematicians, and publiſhed his Euclide in a leſs form and a clearer method than any one had done before him; at the end of his demonſtration of Apollonius he has writ April 14. May 16. intra hæc temporis intervalla peractum hoc opus; to ſo much diligence nothing was impoſſible: and in all his ſtudies his way was not to leave off his deſign till he brought it to effect, only in the Arabick Language he made an Eſſay for a little while and then deſerted it. In the ſame place having alſo writ, Labore & conſtantiâ, he adds, Bonæ ſi conjungantur humilitati & ſubminiſtrent charitati. With theſe ſpeculations the largeneſs of his mind could joyn Poetry, to which he was always addicted and very much valued that part thereof which conſiſts of deſcription, but the Hyperboles of ſome modern Poets he as much ſlighted; for our Plays he was an enemy to them as a principal cauſe of the debauchery of theſe times, (the other cauſes he thought to be the French education and the ill examples of great Perſons;) for Satyrs, he writ none; his Wit was pure and peaceable.

When Dr. Duport reſigned the Chair of Greek Profeſſour, he recommended this his Pupil for his Succeſſour, who juſtified his Tutour's opinion by an excellent performance of the Probation exerciſe, but being thought inclined to Arminianiſm he obtained it not; however he always acknowledged the favour which Dr. Whichcote ſhewed him on that as on all occaſions. The partiality of others againſt him in that affair ſome thought might help forward his deſire to ſee Foreign Countrys. I make no doubt, but that he, who in leſſer occurrences did very judiciouſly conſider all circumſtances, had on good grounds made this reſolution, and wiſh we now knew them; for the reaſons and counſels of action would take off from the drineſs of this Narration, and more ſtrongly recommend him to imitation.

To provide for his Voyage, Ann. Dom. 1654. he ſold his Books and went firſt into France; at Paris he found his Father attending the Engliſh Court, and out of his ſmall viaticum made him a ſeaſonable preſent; he gave his College an account of his Voyage thither, which will be found among his Poems; and ſome farther obſervations in a Letter, which will ſhew his piercing judgment in Political affairs when he applied his thoughts that way.

After ſome Months he went to Italy, and made a ſtay at Florence, where he had the favour and neglected not the advantage to peruſe many Books in the Great Duke's Library and ten thouſand of his Medals, and diſcourſe thereon with Mr. Fitton, the fame of whoſe extraordinary abilities in that ſort of learning had cauſed the Duke to invite him to the charge of that great treaſury of Antiquity.

Florence was too dear a place for him to remain in long, his deſire was to viſit Rome rather than any other place, but the Plague then raging there, he took ſhip at Livorn (Nov. 1657.) for Smyrna, where he made himſelf moſt welcome to Conſul Bretton, and the Merchants; and ſo at Conſtantinople, to Sir Thomas Bendiſh the Engliſh Embaſſadour, and Sir Jonathan Daws, from whoſe civility he received many favours, and there ever after continued between them an intimate friendſhip.

As he could preſently learn to play at all Games, ſo he could accommodate his Diſcourſe to all Capacities, that it ſhould be grateful and profitable; he could argue a point without arrogance or paſſion to convince the Learned, and could talk pleaſantly to the entertainment of eaſier minds, yet ſtill maintaining his own character, which had ſome ſuch authority as is inſinuated in theſe words of Cicero to Atticus; Non te Bruti noſtri vulticulus ab iſta oratione deterret? Ep.20.l.14.

At Conſtantinople, the See of St. Chryſoſtome, he read over all the Works of that Father, whom he much preferred before any of the others, and remained in Turkey above a year; returning thence to Venice, as ſoon as he was landed the Ship took fire, and with all the goods was burnt, but none of the People had any harm: he came thence home through Germany and Holland; and ſome part of theſe Travels and Obſervations are alſo related in his Poems.

The term of time was now ſomewhat paſt before which all Fellows of Trinity College are by the Oath obliged to take upon them prieſtly Orders, or quit the College; he had no reſt in his mind till he got himſelf ordained, notwithſtanding the times were then very unſetled, the Church of England at a very low ebb, and circumſtances much altered from what they were when he took the Oath wherewith others ſatisfied themſelves in the neglect of Orders. When the Church and ſtate flouriſhed upon the King's reſtauration, his Friends expected great things for him who had ſuffered and deſerved ſo much, yet nothing came, ſo that he was ſenſible enough to ſay, (which he has not left among his Poems)

Te magìs optavit rediturum, Carole nemo,
Et nemo ſenſit te rediiſſe minùs.

1660. He was without a Competitor choſen to the Greek Profeſſourſhip in Cambridge, of which I can only ſay, that ſome Friend (to himſelf I mean) thought fit to borrow and never to reſtore thoſe Lectures.

July 16. 1662. He was choſen to the Geometry Lecture at Greſham College, vacant by the death of Mr. Laurence Rook. Dr. Wilkins, who while Trinity College had the happineſs of his Maſterſhip, thoroughly obſerved and much eſteemed him, and was always zealous to promote worthy men and generous deſigns, did interpoſe vigorouſly for his aſſiſtence, well knowing that few others could fill the place of ſuch a Predeceſſour; he not only diſcharged the duty incumbent on him, but ſupplied the abſence of his learned Collegue Dr. Pope, Aſtronomy Profeſſour; and among other of his Lectures were divers of the Projections of the Sphere, which he lent out alſo, and many other Papers we hear no more of. He ſo well anſwered all expectation and performed what Dr. Wilkins had undertaken for him, that when (1663) Mr. Lucas founded a Mathematick Lecture at Cambridge, the ſame good and conſtant Friend recommended him to the Executours, Mr. Raworth, and Mr. Buck, who very readily conferr'd on him that employment; and the better to ſecure the end of ſo noble and uſeful a foundation, he took care that himſelf and Succeſſours ſhould be bound to leave yearly to the Univerſity 10 written Lectures; and thoſe of his which have been, and others yet to be printed, will beſt give an account how well he acquitted himſelf of that ſervice. But after that learned piece Geometricæ Lectiones had been ſome while in the world, he had heard only of two Perſons that had read it through; theſe two were Monſieur Sluſius of Liege, and Mr. Gregory of Scotland, two that might be reckoned inſtead of thouſands, yet the little reliſh that ſuch things met with did help to looſen him from theſe Speculations, and the more engage his inclination to the ſtudy of Morality and Divinity, which had always been ſo predominant that when he commented on Archimedes, he could not forbear to prefer and admire much more Suarez for his Book de Legibus; and before his Apollonius I find written this divine Ejaculation.

Ὁ Θεὸς γεωμετρεῖ.

Tu autem, Domine, quantus es Geometra? quum enim hæc Scientia nullos terminos habeat; cum in ſempiternum novorum theorematum inventioni locus relinquatur, etiam penes humanum ingenium, tu uno hæc omnia intuitu perſpecta habes, abſque catena conſequentiarum, abſque tædio demonſtrationum. Ad cætera penè nihil facere poteſt intellectus noſter; & tanquam brutorum phantaſia videtur non niſi incerta quædam ſomniare, unde in iis quot ſunt homines tot exiſtunt ferè ſententiæ: in his conſpi-conſpiratur ab omnibus, in his humanum ingenium ſe poſſe aliquid, imo ingens aliquid & mirificum viſum eſt, ut nihil magìs mirum, quod enim in cæteris penè ineptum in hoc efficax, ſedulum, proſperum, &c. Te igitur vel ex hac re amare gaudeo, te ſuſpicor, atque illum diem deſiderare ſuſpiriis fortibus in quo purgatâ mente & claro oculo non hæc ſolum omnia abſque hac ſucceſſivà & laborioſa imaginandi cura verum multo plura & majora ex tua bonitate & immenſiſſima ſanctiſſimâque benignitate conſpicere & ſcire concedetur, &c.

The laſt kindneſs and honour he did to his Mathematick Chair was to reſign it (166 .) to ſo worthy a friend and ſucceſſour as Mr. Iſaac Newton, fixing his reſolution to apply himſelf intirely to Divinity; and he took a courſe very convenient for his publick perſon as a Preacher, and his private as a Chriſtian; for thoſe Subjects which he thought moſt important to be conſidered for his own uſe he caſt into the method of Sermons for the benefit of others, and herein was ſo exact as to write ſome of them four or five times over; and now he was onely a Fellow of Trinity College, till my L. Biſhop of St. Aſaph gave him a ſmall Sine-cure in Wales, and the R. Reverend Seth L. Biſhop of Salisbury (who very much valued his converſatian) a Prebend in his Church; the advantages of both which he beſtowed in a way of charity, and parted with them as ſoon as he was made Maſter of his College (1672.) he and his Relations being by that time out of a neceſſitous condition; the Patent for his Maſterſhip, being ſo drawn for him as it had been for ſome others, with permiſſion to marry, he cauſed to be altered, thinking it not agreeable with the Statutes, from which he deſired no diſpenſation.

He had hitherto poſſeſſed but a ſcanty Eſtate, which yet was made eaſie to him by a contented mind, and not made a trouble by envy at more plentifull fortunes; he could in patience poſſeſs his Soul when he had little elſe; and now with the ſame decency and moderation could maintain his character under the temptations of proſperity.

When the King advanced him to this dignity, he was pleaſed to ſay, he had given it to the beſt Scholar in England; his Majeſty had ſeveral times done him the honour to diſcourſe him, and this preferment was not at all obtained by faction or flattery; it was the King's own act though his deſert made thoſe of the greateſt power forward to contribute to it, particularly Gilbert Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Duke of Buckingham then Chancelour of Cambridge, and formerly a Member of Trinity College.

It were a diſreſpect to his College to doubt, that where he had ſpent ſo much time and obliged ſo many Perſons, he ſhould not be moſt welcome; they knew as his power increaſed, the effects of his goodneſs would do ſo too; and the Seniour Fellows ſo well underſtood and eſteemed him, that with good will and joy they received a Maſter much younger than any of themſelves.

Beſides the particular aſſiſtance he gave to many in their ſtudie, he concerned himſelf in every thing that was for the intereſt of his College; upon the ſingle affair of building their Library, he writ out quires of Paper, chiefly to thoſe who had been of the College, firſt to engage them, and then to give them thanks, which he never omitted; theſe Letters he eſteemed not enough to keep Copies of, but by the generous returns they brought in, they appeared to be of no ſmall value; and thoſe Gentlemen that pleaſe to ſend back their Letters will deſerve to be accounted farther Benefactours to the Library. He had always been a conſtant and early man at the Chappel, and now continued to do the ſame; and was therein incouraged not only by his own devotion, but by the efficacy his example had upon many others of his College.

In this place ſeated to his eaſe and ſatisfaction, a ſtation wherein of all others in the world he could have been moſt uſefull, and which he meant not to make uſe of as a ſtep to aſcend higher, he abated nothing of his ſtudies, he yielded the day to his publick buſineſs, and took from his Morning ſleep many hours to encreaſe his ſtock of Sermons and write his Treatiſe of the Pope's Supremacy. He underſtood Popery both at home and abroad, he had narrowly obſerved it, militant in England, triumphant in Italy, diſguiſed in France, and had earlier apprehenſions than moſt others of the approaching danger, and would have appeared with the forwardeſt in a needfull time; for his ingagement in that Cauſe, and his place in your Friendſhip, I would (with the leave of the moſt worthy Dean of St. Paul's, his highly reſpected Friend) call him another Dr. Stillingfleet.

But ſo it pleaſed God, that being invited to preach the Paſſion-Sermon, April 13. 1677. at Guildhall Chappel (and it was the ſecond Sermon for which he received a pecuniary Recompence) he never preached but once more, falling ſick of a Fever; ſuch a diſtemper he had once or twice before, otherwiſe of a conſtant health; this fatally prevailed againſt the skill and diligence of many Phyſicians his good Friends.

I think not my ſelf competent to give an account of his life, much leſs of his ſickneſs and death; if great grief had not forced ſilence, you Sir, his deareſt and moſt worthy Friend, had perpetuated the remarkables of that ſad ſcene, in a Funeral Sermon.

Our Paſſions, which have hitherto been kept within the banks, ſhould now be permitted to overflow, and they even expect to be moved by a breath of Eloquence, but that is not my talent. In ſhort, his death was ſuitable to his life; not this imperfect ſlight life as I relate it, but that admirable heroick divine life which he lived.

He died the 4th, of May, 1677. and had it not been too inconvenient to carry him to Cambridge, then Wit and Eloquence had paid their tribute for the honour he has done them.

Now he is laid in Weſtminſter-Abby, with a Monument erected by the contribution of his Friends, a piece of gratitude not uſual in this Age, and a reſpect peculiar to him among all the glories of that Church. I wiſh they would (as I have adventured) bring in their Symbols toward the Hiſtory of his Life: there are many which long before me had the advantage of his Converſation, and could offer more judicious obſervations, and in a ſtyle fit to ſpeak of Dr. Barrow.

In the Epitaph, Dr. Mapletoft, his much eſteemed Friend, doth truly deſcribe him; his Picture was never made from the life, and the Effigies on his Tomb doth little reſemble him. He was in perſon of the leſſer ſize and lean, of extraordinary ſtrength, of a fair and calm complexion, a thin Skin, very ſenſible of the cold; his Eyes gray, clear and ſomewhat ſhort-ſighted, his Hair of a light aubrun, very fine and curling. He is well repreſented by the Figure of Marcus Brutus on his Denarii, and I will transfer hither what is ſaid of that great Man.

Cowly.

Vertue was thy Life's centre, and from thence Did ſilently and conſtantly diſpenſe
The gentle vigorous influence
To all the wide and fair circumference.

The Eſtate he left was Books; thoſe he bought, ſo well choſen as to be ſold for more than they coſt; and thoſe he made, whereof a Catalogue is annexed, and it were not improper to give a farther account of his Works than to name them: Beſide their number, variety, method, ſtyle, fullneſs and uſefulneſs, I might thence draw many proofs to confirm what I have before endeavoured to ſay to his advantage, and many more important reflections will be obvious to you than to ſuch a Reader as I am. I will only take leave to ſay, that for his little piece of the Unity of the Church, he has better deſerved of the Church and Religion than many who make a greater Figure in Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory and Politicks. But ſuch Remarks will be more fitly placed in what we expect from his learned Friends of the Univerſity. And to them I muſt alſo refer for the Obſervables at the taking his ſeveral Degrees, and diſcharging the Office of Vice-chancelour.

There are beſide other particulars which are grateful to talk over among Friends, not ſo proper perhaps to appear in a publick Writing. For inſtance, One morning going out a Friend's Houſe before a huge and fierce Maſtiff was chained up (as he uſed to be all day) the Dog flew at him, and he had that preſent courage to take the Dog by the Throat, and after much ſtrugling bore him to the ground, and held him there till the People could riſe and part them, without any other hurt than the ſtreining of his Hands, which he felt ſome days after.

Some would excuſe me for noting that he ſeem'd intemperate in the love of Fruit, but it was to him Phyſick as well as Food; and he thought that if Fruit kill hundreds in Autumn, it preſerves thouſands; and he was very free too in the uſe of Tobacco, believing it did help to regulate his thinking.

I did at firſt mention the uniformity and conſtant tenour of his life, and proceeding on have noted ſeveral particulars of very different nature. I therefore explain my ſelf thus, that he was always one by his exact conformity to the rule in a vertuous and prudent converſation, he ſteered by the ſame compaſs to the ſame Port when the ſtorms forced him to ſhift his Sails. His fortune did in ſome occaſions partake of the unſettledneſs of the times wherein he lived; and to fit himſelf for the ſeveral works he was to do, he enter'd upon ſtudies of ſeveral kinds, whereby he could not totally devote himſelf to one, which would have been more for the publick benefit, according to his own opinion, which was, that general Scholars did more pleaſe themſelves, but they who proſecuted particular ſubjects did more ſervice to others.

Being thus engaged with variety of men and ſtudies, his mind became ſtored with a wonderful plenty of words wherewith to expreſs himſelf; and it happened that ſometime he let ſlip a word not commonly uſed, which upon reflexion he would doubtleſs have altered, for it was not out of affectation.

But his Life were a ſubject requiring other kind of Diſcourſes; and as he that acts another man, doth alſo act himſelf; ſo he that would give an account of the excellent qualities in Dr. Barrow, would have a fair field wherein to diſplay his own. Another Camerarius or Gaſſendus would make another Life of Melanchthon or Piereskius. What I am doing will not prevent them; I ſhall be well ſatisfied with my unskilfulneſs if I provoke them to take the argument into better hands.

All I have ſaid, or can ſay, is far ſhort of the Idea which Dr. Barrow's Friends have formed of him, and that Character under which he ought to appear to them who knew him not. Beſide all the defects on my part, he had in himſelf this diſadvantage of wanting foils to augment his luſtre, and low places to give eminence to his heights; ſuch vertues as his, Contentment in all conditions, Candour in doubtful caſes, Moderation among differing Parties, Knowledge without oſtentation, are Subjects fitter for praiſe than narrative.

If I could hear of an accuſation, that I might vindicate our Friend's fame, it would take off from the flatneſs of my expreſſion; or a well-managed Faction, under the name of zeal, for or againſt the Church, would ſhew well in ſtory; but I have no ſhadows to ſet off my Piece. I have laid together a few ſticks for the Funeral-fire, dry Bones which can make but a Sceleton, till ſome other hand lay on the Fleſh and Sinews, and cauſe them to live and move. You will encourage others by pardoning me, which I promiſe my ſelf from that goodneſs wherewith Dr. Barrow and you have uſed to accept the ſmall ſervice with the great devotion of,

SIR,

Your obedient

London, 10. April 1683.

and humble Servant,

A. H.

Iſaacus Barrow.

S. T. P. Regi CAROLO II. A SACRIS.

VIR propè Divinus, & verè Magnus, ſi quid Magni habent Pietas, Probitas, Fides, ſumma Eruditio, par Modeſtia, Mores ſanctiſſimi undequaque, & ſuaviſſimi.
Geometriæ Profeſſor Londini Greſhamenſis, Græcæ Linguæ, & Matheſeos apud Cantabrigienſes ſuos.
Cathedras omnes, Eccleſiam, Gentem ornavit.
Collegium S. S. Trinitatis Præſes illuſtravit, Jactis Bibliothecæ verè Regiæ Fundamentis auxit.
Opes, Honores, & univerſum vitæ ambitum,
Ad majora natus, non contempſit, ſed reliquit ſeculo.
Deum, quem à teneris coluit, cum primis imitatus eſt
Pauciſſimis egendo, benefaciendo quam plurimis, Etiam poſteris, quibus vel mortuus concionari non deſinit.
Cætera, & penè Majora ex ſcriptis peti poſſunt.

Abi, Lector, & æmulare.

Obiit IV. Die Maii, Ann. Dom. MDCLXXVII.

Ætat. ſuæ XLVII.

Monumentum hoc Amici poſuêre.

A CATALOGUE of The WORKS of Dr. Iſaac Barrow.

THE Firſt Volume, Containing thirty two Sermons on Several Occaſions.

A brief Expoſition of the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the Decalogue, and the Doctrine of the Sacraments.

A Treatiſe of the Pope's Supremacy.

A Diſcourſe of the Unity of the Church.

The Second Volume, Containing Sermons and Expoſitions on all the Articles of the Apoſtles Creed.

The Third Volume, Containing Forty five Sermons.

With Tables of the Contents to each Volume.

Euclidis Elementa, (which is tranſlated into Engliſh.) Euclidis Data.
Lectiones Opticæ 18.
Lectiones Geometricæ.
Archimedis Opera.
Apollonii Conicorum, Lib. 4.
Theodoſii Sphærica.
Lectio de Sphæra & Cylindro.
Lectiones Mathematicæ.
Opuſcula Theologica.
Poematia.
Orationes.

The End of the CATALOGUE.

VOL. I.

SERMON I.

The Pleaſantneſs of Religion.

PROV. III. 17.

Her ways are ways of pleaſantneſs, and all her paths are peace.

THE meaning of theſe words ſeem plain and obvious, and to need little explication. Her ways, that is, the ways of Wiſdom. What this Wiſdom is, I ſhall not undertake accurately to deſcribe. Briefly, I underſtand by it, An habitual skill or faculty of judging aright about matters of practice, and chuſing according to that right judgment, and conforming the actions to ſuch good choice. Ways and paths in Scripture-dialect are the courſes and manners of action. For doing there is commonly called walking; and the methods of doing are the ways in which we walk. By pleaſantneſs may be meant the joy and delight accompanying, and by peace the content and ſatisfaction enſuing ſuch a courſe of actions. So that, in ſhort, the ſenſe of theſe words ſeems ſimply to be this, That a courſe of life directed by wiſdom and good judgment is delightful in the practice, and brings content after it. The truth of which Propoſition it ſhall be my endeavour at this time to confirm by divers Reaſons, and illuſtrate by ſeveral inſtances.

I. Then, Wiſdom of it ſelf is delectable and ſatisfactory, as it implies a revelation of Truth, and a detection of Error to us. 'Tis like Light, pleaſant to behold, caſting a ſprightly luſtre, and diffuſing a benign influence all about; preſenting a goodly proſpect of things to the eyes of our mind; diſplaying objects in their due ſhapes, poſtures, magnitudes and colours; quickning our ſpirits with a comfortable warmth, and diſpoſing our minds to a chearful activity; diſpelling the darkneſs of ignorance, ſcattering the miſts of doubt, driving away the ſpectres of deluſive fancy; mitigating the cold of ſullen melancholy; diſcovering obſtacles, ſecuring progreſs, and making the paſſages of life clear, open and pleaſant. We are all naturally endowed with a ſtrong appetite to know, to ſee, to purſue Truth; and with a baſhful abhorrency from being deceived, and entangled in miſtake. And as ſucceſs in enquiry after Truth affords matter of joy and triumph; ſo being conſcious of Error, and miſcarriage therein, is attended with ſhame and ſorrow. Theſe deſires Wiſdom in the moſt perfect manner ſatisfies, not by entertaining us with dry, empty, fruitleſs theories, upon mean and vulgar ſubjects; but by enriching our minds with excellent and uſeful knowledge, directed to the nobleſt objects, and ſerviceable to the higheſt ends. Nor in its own nature only, but,

Veritatis luce menti hominis nihil dulcius. Cic. Acad. 2.

II. Much more in its worthy conſequences is Wiſdom exceedingly pleaſant and peaceable: in general, by diſpoſing us to acquire and to enjoy all the good, delight and happineſs we are capable of; and by freeing us from all the inconveniences, miſchiefs and infelicities our condition is ſubject to. For whatever good from clear underſtanding, deliberate advice, ſagacious foreſight, ſtable reſolution, dextrous addreſs, right intention and orderly proceeding doth naturally reſult, Wiſdom confers: whatever evil blind ignorance, falſe preſumption, unwary credulity, precipitate raſhneſs, unſteady purpoſe, ill contrivance, backwardneſs, inhability, unwieldineſs and confuſion of thought, beget, Wiſdom prevents. From a thouſand ſnares and treacherous allurements, from innumerable rocks and dangerous ſurprizes, from exceedingly many needleſs incumbrances and vexatious toils of fruitleſs endeavour, ſhe redeems and ſecures us. More particularly,

III. Wiſdom aſſures us we take the beſt courſe, and proceed as we ought. For by the ſame means we judge aright, and reflecting upon that judgment are aſſured we do ſo: as the ſame arguments by which we demonſtrate a theorem convince us we have demonſtrated it, and the ſame light by which we ſee an object makes us know we ſee it. And this aſſurance in the progreſs of the action exceedingly pleaſes, and in the ſequel of it infinitely contents us. He that judges amiſs, not perceiving clearly the rectitude of his proceſs, proceeds uſually with a dubious ſolicitude, and at length, diſcovering his error, condemns his own choice, and receives no other ſatisfaction but of repentance. Like a Traveller, who being uncertain whether he goes in the right way, wanders in continual perplexity, till he be informed, and then too late, underſtanding his miſtake, with regret ſeeks to recover himſelf into it. But he that knows his way, and is ſatisfied that it is the true one, makes on merrily and careleſly, not doubting he ſhall in good time arrive to his deſigned journey's end. Two troubleſome miſchiefs therefore Wiſdom frees us from, the company of anxious doubt in our actions, and the conſequence of bitter repentance, For no man can doubt of what he is ſure, nor repent of what he knows good.

IV. Wiſdom begets in us a hope of ſucceſs in our actions, and is uſually attended therewith. Now what is more delicious than hope? what more ſatisfactory than ſucceſs? That is like the purſuit of a flying enemy, this like gathering the ſpoil; that like viewing the ripe corn, this like the joy of harveſt it ſelf. And he that aims at a good end, and knows he uſes proper means to attain it, why ſhould he deſpair of ſucceſs, ſince effects naturally follow their cauſes, and the Divine providence is wont to afford its concourſe to ſuch proceedings? Beſide that ſuch well-grounded hope confirms reſolution, and quickens activity, which mainly conduce to the proſperous iſſue of deſigns. Farther,

V. Wiſdom prevents diſcouragement from the poſſibility of ill ſucceſs, yea and makes diſappointment it ſelf tolerable. For if either the foreſight of a poſſible miſcarriage ſhould diſcourage us from adventuring on action, or inculpable fruſtration were intolerable, we ſhould with no heart apply our ſelves to any thing; there being no deſigns in this world, though founded upon the moſt ſound advice, and proſecuted by the moſt diligent endeavour, which may not be defeated, as depending upon divers cauſes above our power, and circumſtances beyond our proſpect. The inconſtant opinions, uncertain reſolutions, mutable affections, and fallacious pretences of men, upon which the accompliſhment of moſt projects rely, may eaſily deceive and diſappoint us. The imperceptible courſe of nature exerting it ſelf in ſudden tempeſts, diſeaſes, and unlucky caſualties, may ſurprize us, and give an end to our buſineſſes and lives together. However, the irreſiſtible power of the Divine providence, guided by the unſearchable counſel of his will, we can never be aſſured that it will not interpoſe and hinder the effects of our endeavours. Yet notwithſtanding, when we act prudently, we have no reaſon to be diſheartened; becauſe, having good intentions, and uſing fit means, and having done our beſt, as no deſerved blame, ſo no conſiderable damage can arrive to us: and though we find Almighty God hath croſſed us, yet we are ſure he is not diſpleaſed with us. Which conſideration, wherewith Wiſdom furniſhes us, will make the worſt ſucceſs not only tolerable, but comfortable to us. For hence we have reaſon to hope, that the All-wiſe Goodneſs reſerves a better reward for us, and will ſometime recompence not only the good purpoſes we unhappily purſued, but alſo the unexpected diſappointment we patiently endured; and that however we ſhall be no loſers in the end. Which diſcourſe is mainly fortified by conſidering how the beſt and wiſeſt attempts have oft miſcarried. We ſee Moſes, authorized by God's command, directed by his counſel, and conducted by his hand, intended to bring the Iſraelites into the land of Canaan; yet by the unreaſonable incredulity and ſtubborn perverſeneſs of that people he had his purpoſe fruſtrated. The holy Prophets afterward earneſtly endeavoured to contain the ſame people within compaſs of obedience to the Divine commands, and to reduce them from their idolatrous and wicked courſes; yet without correſpondent effect. Our Saviour, by the example of his holy life, continual inſtruction, and vehement exhortations, aſſayed to procure a belief of and ſubmiſſion to his moſt excellent Doctrine; yet how few believed his report, and complied with his Diſcipline? Yea, Almighty God himſelf often complains, how in a manner his deſigns were defeated, his deſires thwarted, his offers refuſed, his counſels rejected, his expectations deceived. Wherefore, (ſaith he concerning his Vineyard) when I looked it ſhould bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes? And again, I have ſpread out my hands all the day to a rebellious people. And again, I have even ſent unto you all my prophets daily, riſing up early, and ſending them; yet they hearkened not unto me. Wherefore there is no good cauſe we ſhould be diſheartened, or vexed, when ſucceſs is wanting to well-adviſed purpoſes. 'Tis fooliſh and ill-grounded intentions, and practices unwarrantable by good reaſon, that make the undertakers ſolicitous of ſucceſs, and being defeated leave them diſconſolate. Yea farther,

Iſa. 5. 4.
Iſa. 65. 2.
Jer. 7. 25, 26.

VI. Wiſdom makes all the troubles, griefs and pains incident to life, whether caſual adverſities, or natural afflictions, eaſy and ſupportable; by rightly valuing the importance, and moderating the influence of them. It ſuffers not buſy fancy to alter the nature, amplify the degree, or extend the duration of them, by repreſenting them more ſad, heavy and remedileſs than they truly are. It allows them no force beyond what naturally and neceſſarily they have, nor contributes nouriſhment to their increaſe. It keeps them at a due diſtance, not permitting them to encroach upon the Soul, or to propagate their influence beyond their proper ſphere. It will not let external miſchances, as poverty and diſgrace, to produce an inward ſenſe which is beyond their natural efficacy: nor corporeal affections of ſickneſs and pain to diſturb the mind, with which they have nothing to do. The region of theſe malignant diſtempers being at moſt but the habit of the body, Wiſdom by effectual antidotes repels them from the heart, and inward parts of the Soul. If any thing, ſin, and our unworthy miſcarriages toward God, ſhould vex and diſcompoſe us: yet this trouble Wiſdom, by repreſenting the Divine Goodneſs, and his tender mercies in our ever-Bleſſed Redeemer, doth perfectly allay. And as for all other adverſities, it abates their noxious power, by ſhewing us they are either merely imaginary, or very ſhort and temporary: that they admit of remedy, or at moſt do not exclude comfort, not wholly hindring the operations of the mind, nor extinguiſhing its joys; that they may have a profitable uſe, and pleaſant end; and, however, neither imply bad Conſcience, nor induce obligation to puniſhment. For,

VII. Wiſdom hath always a good Conſcience attending it, that pureſt delight and richeſt cordial of the Soul; that brazen wall, and impregnable fortreſs againſt both external aſſaults, and internal commotions; that continual feaſt, whereon the mind, deſtitute of all other repaſt, with a never-languiſhing appetite may entertain it ſelf; that faithful witneſs, and impartial judge, whoever accuſes, always acquitting the innocent Soul; that certain friend, in no ſtrait failing, in no adverſity deſerting; that ſure refuge in all ſtorms of fortune, and perſecutions of diſgrace. Which (as Solomon here notes) renders a man's ſleep ſweet, and undiſturbed with fearful phantaſms, his heart light, and his ſteps ſecure; and, if any thing, can make the Stoical paradox good, and cauſe the Wiſe man to ſmile in extremity of torment; arming his mind with an invincible courage, and infuſing a due confidence into it, whereby he bears up chearfully againſt malicious reproach, undauntedly ſuſtains adverſity, and triumphs over bad fortune. And this invaluable treaſure the Wiſe man is only capable of poſſeſſing; who certainly knows, and heartily approves the grounds upon which he proceeds; whenas the fool, building his choice upon blind chance, or violent paſſion, or giddy fancy, or uncertain example, not upon the ſteddy warrant of good reaſon, cannot avoid being perplexed with ſuſpicion of miſtake, and ſo neceſſarily is deprivd of the comfort of a good Conſcience.

VIII. Wiſdom confers a facility, expert readineſs, and dexterity in action; which is a very pleaſant and commodious quality, and exceedingly ſweetens activity. To do things with difficulty, ſtruggling and immoderate contention, diſheartens a man, quells his courage, blunts the edge of his reſolution, renders him ſluggiſh and averſe from buſineſs, though apprehended never ſo neceſſary, and of great moment. Theſe obſtructions Wiſdom removes, facilitating operations by directing the intention to ends poſſible and attainable, by ſuggeſting fit means and inſtruments to work by, by contriving right methods and courſes of proceſs; the mind by it being ſtored with variety of good principles, ſure rules, and happy expedients, repoſed in the memory, and ready upon all occaſions to be produced, and employed in practice.

IX. Wiſdom begets a ſound, healthful and harmonious complexion of the Soul, diſpoſing us with judgment to diſtinguiſh, and with pleaſure to reliſh ſavory and wholeſome things, but to nauſeate and reject ſuch as are ingrateful and noxious to us; thereby capacifying us to enjoy pleaſantly and innocently all thoſe good things the Divine Goodneſs hath provided for, and conſigned to us; whence to the Soul proceeds all that comfort, joy and vigour, which reſults to the Body from a good conſtitution, and perfect health.

X. Wiſdom acquaints us with our ſelves, our own temper and conſtitution, our propenſions and paſſions, our habitudes and capacities; a thing not only of mighty advantage, but of infinite pleaſure and content to us. No man in the world leſs knows a fool than himſelf; nay, he is more than ignorant, for he conſtantly errs in the point, taking himſelf for, and demeaning himſelf as toward another, a better, a wiſer and abler man than he is. He hath wonderful conceits of his own qualities and faculties; he affects commendations incompetent to him; he ſoars at employment ſurpaſſing his ability to manage. No Comedy can repreſent a miſtake more odd, and ridiculous, than his: for he wanders, and ſtares, and hunts after, but never can find nor diſcern himſelf; but always encounters with a falſe ſhadow inſtead thereof, which he paſſionately huggs and admires. But a Wiſe man, by conſtant obſervation, and impartial reflection upon himſelf, grows very familiar with himſelf: he perceives his own inclinations, which if bad, he ſtrives to alter and correct; if good, he cheriſhes and corroborates them: he apprehends the matter he is fitting for, and capable to manage, neither too mean and unworthy of him, nor too high and difficult for him; and thoſe applying his care to, he tranſacts eaſily, chearfully and ſucceſsfully. So being neither puft up with vain and over-weening opinion, nor dejected with heartleſs diffidence of himſelf; neither admiring, nor deſpiſing; neither irkſomely hating, nor fondly loving himſelf; he continues in good humour, maintains a ſure friendſhip and fair correſpondence with himſelf, and rejoices in the retirement and private converſation with his own thoughts: whence flows a pleaſure and ſatisfaction unexpreſſible.

XI. Wiſdom procures and preſerves a conſtant favour and fair reſpect of men, purchaſes a good name, and upholds reputation in the world: which things are naturally deſirable, commodious for life, encouragements to good, and preventive of many inconveniences. The compoſed frame of mind, uniform and comely demeanour, compliant and inoffenſive converſation, fair and punctual dealing, conſiderate motions and dextrous addreſſes of Wiſe men naturally beget eſteem and affection in thoſe that obſerve them. Neither than theſe things is there any thing more commendable to humane regard. As ſymmetry and harmony to the animal ſenſes, ſo delectable is an even temper of Soul and orderly tenour of actions to rational apprehenſions. Folly is freakiſh and humorous, impertinent and obſtreperous, inconſtant and inconſiſtent, peeviſh and exceptious; and conſequently faſtidious to ſociety, and productive of averſation and diſreſpect. But the Wiſe man is ſtable in his ways, conſonant to himſelf, ſuting his actions to his words, and thoſe to his principles, and all to the rule of right reaſon; ſo that you may know where to find him, and how to deal with him, and may eaſily pleaſe him, which makes his acquaintance acceptable, and his perſon valuable: beſide that real worth of it ſelf commands reſpect; and extorts veneration from men, and uſually proſperity waits upon his well-adviſed attempts, which exceedingly adorn, and advance the credit of the undertaker: however, if he fail ſometime, his uſual deportment ſalves his repute, and eaſily makes it credible it was no fault of his, but of his fortune. If a fool proſper, the honour is attributed to propitious chance; if he miſcarry, to his own ill management: but the entire glory of happy undertakings crowns the head of Wiſdom; while the diſgrace of unlucky events falls otherwhere. His light, like that of the Sun, cannot totally be eclipſed; it may be dimmed, but never extinguiſhed, and always maintains a day, though over-clouded with misfortune. Who leſs eſteems the famous African Captain for being overthrown in that laſt fatal battel, wherein he is ſaid to have ſhewn the beſt skill, and yet endured the worſt of ſucceſs? Who contemns Cato, and other the grave Citizens of Rome, for embracing the juſt, but improſperous Cauſe of the Commonwealth? A Wiſe man's circumſtances may vary and fluctuate like the floods about a rock; but he perſiſts unmovably the ſame, and his reputation unſhaken: for he can always render a good account of his actions, and by reaſonable apology elude the aſſaults of reproach.

XII. Wiſdom inſtructs us to examine, compare, and rightly to value the objects that court our affections, and challenge our care; and thereby regulates our paſſions, and moderates our endeavours, which begets a pleaſant ſerenity and peaceable tranquility of mind. For when, being deluded with falſe ſhews, and relying upon ill-grounded preſumptions, we highly eſteem, paſſionately affect, and eagerly purſue things of little worth in themſelves, or concernment to us, as we unhandſomely proſtitute our affections, and prodigally miſ-ſpend our time, and vainly loſe our labour; ſo the event not anſwering our expectation, our minds thereby are confounded, diſturb'd and diſtempered. But when, guided by right reaſon, we conceive great eſteem of, and zealouſly are enamoured with, and vigorouſly ſtrive to attain things of excellent worth, and weighty conſequence, the conſcience of having well placed our affections, and well employed our pains, and the experience of fruits correſponding to our hopes raviſhes our mind with unexpreſſible content. And ſo it is; Preſent appearance and vulgar conceit ordinarily impoſe upon our fancies, diſguiſing things with a deceitful varniſh, and repreſenting thoſe that are vaineſt with the greateſt advantage; whilſt the nobleſt objects, being of a more ſubtile and ſpiritual nature, like faireſt Jewels encloſed in a homely Box, avoid the notice of groſs ſenſe, and paſs undiſcerned by us. But the light of Wiſdom, as it unmasks ſpecious impoſture, and bereaves it of its falſe colours; ſo it penetrates into the retirements of true Excellency, and reveals its genuine luſtre. For example, Corporeal Pleaſure, which ſo powerfully allures and enchants us, Wiſdom declares that it is but a preſent, momentany and tranſient ſatisfaction of brutiſh ſenſe, dimming the light, ſullying the beauty, impairing the vigour, and reſtraining the activity of the mind; diverting it from better operations, and indiſpoſing it to enjoy purer delights; leaving no comfortable reliſh or gladſome memory behind it, but often followed with bitterneſs, regret and diſgrace. That the Profit the World ſo greedily gapes after is but a poſſeſſion of trifles, not valuable in themſelves, nor rendring the Maſters of them ſo: accidentally obtained, and promiſcuouſly enjoyed by all ſorts, but commonly by the worſt of men; difficultly acquired, and eaſily loſt; however, to be uſed but for a very ſhort time, and then to be reſigned into uncertain hands. That the Honour men ſo dote upon is, ordinarily but the difference of a few petty circumſtances, a peculiar name or title, a determinate place, a diſtinguiſhing enſign; things of only imaginary excellence, derived from chance, and conferring no advantage, except from ſome little influence they have upon the arbitrary opinion and fickle humour of the people; complacence in which is vain, and reliance upon it dangerous. That Power and dominion, which men ſo impatiently ſtruggle for, are but neceſſary evils introduced to reſtrain the bad tempers of men; moſt evil to them that enjoy them; requiring tedious attendance, diſtracting care, and vexatious toil; attended with frequent diſappointment, opprobrious cenſure, and dangerous envy; having ſuch real burthens, and ſlaviſh encumbrances, ſweetned only by ſuperficial pomps, ſtrained obſequiouſneſs, ſome petty privileges and exemptions ſcarce worth the mentioning. That Wit and parts, of which men make ſuch oſtentation, are but natural endowments, commendable only in order to uſe, apt to engender pride and vanity, and hugely dangerous, if abuſed or miſemployed? What ſhould I mention Beauty, that fading toy; or bodily Strength and activity, qualities ſo palpably inconſiderable? Upon theſe and ſuch like flattering objects, ſo adored by vulgar opinion, Wiſdom exercising ſevere and impartial judgment, and perceiving in them no intrinſick excellence, no ſolid content ſpringing from them, no perfection thence accruing to the mind, no high reward allotted to them, no ſecurity to the future condition, or other durable advantages proceeding from them; it concludes they deſerve not any high opinion of the mind, nor any vehement paſſion of the Soul, nor any laborious care to be employed on them, and moderates our affections toward them: it frees us from anxious deſire of them; from being tranſported with exceſſive joy in the acquiſition of them; from being overwhelmed with diſconſolate ſorrow at the miſſing of them, or parting with them; from repining and envying at thoſe who have better ſucceſs than our ſelves in the procuring them; from immoderate toil in getting, and care in preſerving them: and ſo delivering us from all theſe unquiet anxieties of thought, tumultuous perturbations of paſſion, and tedious vexations of body, it maintains our minds in a chearful calm, quiet indifferency, and comfortable liberty. On the other ſide, things of real worth and high concernment, that produce great ſatisfaction to the mind, and are mainly conducible to our happineſs, ſuch as are a right underſtanding and ſtrong ſenſe of our obligations to Almighty God, and relations to men, a ſound temper and complexion of mind, a vertuous diſpoſition, a capacity to diſcharge the duties of our places, a due qualification to enjoy the happineſs of the other World; theſe and ſuch like things, by diſcovering their nature, and the effects reſulting from them, it engages us highly to eſteem, ardently to affect, and induſtriouſly to purſue; ſo preventing the inconveniences that follow the want of them, and conveying the benefits ariſing from the poſſeſſion of them.

XIII. Wiſdom diſtinguiſhes the circumſtances, limits the meaſures, determines the modes, appoints the fit ſeaſons of action; ſo preſerving decorum and order, the parent of peace, and preventing confuſion, the mother of iniquity, ſtrife and diſquiet. 'Tis in the buſineſs of human life as in a building: a due proportion of bigneſs, a fit ſituation of place, a correſpondency of ſhape, and ſutableneſs of colour, is to be obſerved between the parts thereof: a defect in any of which requiſites, though the materials hap to be choice and excellent, makes the whole fabrick deformed and ugly to judicious apprehenſion. The beſt actions, if they ſwell, and exceed their due meaſure, if they be unſkilfully miſplaced, if in uncouth manner performed, they loſe their quality, and turn both to the diſgrace and diſadvantage of life. 'Tis commendable to pray; but they that would always be performing that duty, by their abſurd devotion procured to themſelves the title of Hereticks: and they that will ſtand praying in places of publick concourſe, deſerved our Saviour's reprehenſions; and thoſe men who, againſt the cuſtom and ordinary uſe, would needs pray with their faces covered, you know S. Paul inſinuates of them, that they were fond and contentious perſons. Friendly admonition is very laudable, and of rare uſe; but being upon all occaſions immoderately uſed, or in publick ſociety ſo as to encroach upon modeſty, or endamage reputation; or when the perſon admoniſhed is otherwiſe employed, and attent upon his buſineſs; or being delivered in an imperiouſly-inſulting way, or in harſh and opprobrious language; it becomes unſavoury and odious, and both in ſhew and effect reſembles a froward malicious exceptiouſneſs. 'Twere infinite to compute in how many inſtances want of due order, meaſure and manner, do ſpoil and incommodate action. 'Tis Wiſdom that applies remedy to theſe miſchiefs. Things muſt be compared to, and arbitrated by, her ſtandard, or elſe they will contain ſomething of monſtrous enormity; either ſtrutting in unwieldy bulk, or ſinking in defective ſcantneſs. If ſhe do not faſhion and model circumſtances, they will ſit ugly on the things that wear them; if ſhe do not temper the colours, and deſcribe the lineaments, the draught of practice will be but rude and imperfect, and little reſemble the true patterns of duty: but if ſhe interpoſe, and perform her part, all things will appear conformable, neat and delicate.

XIV. Wiſdom diſcovers our relations, duties and concernments, in reſpect of men, with the natural grounds of them; thereby both qualifying and inclining us to the diſcharge of them: whence exceeding convenience, pleaſure and content enſues. By it we underſtand we are parts and members of the great Body, the Univerſe; and are therefore concerned in the good management of it, and are thereby obliged to procure its order and peace, and by no irregular undertaking to diſturb or diſcompoſe it; which makes us honeſt and peaceable men: that we proceed from the ſame primitive ſtock, are children of the ſame father, and partake of the ſame blood with all men; are endowed with like faculties of mind, paſſions of Soul, ſhape of body, and ſenſe of things: that we have equally implanted in our original conſtitution inclinations to love, pity, gratitude, ſociableneſs, quiet, joy, reputation: that we have an indiſpenſible need and impatient deſire of company, aſſiſtance, comfort and relief: that therefore it is according to the deſign of nature, and agreeable to reaſon, that to thoſe, to whom our natural condition by ſo many bands of cognation, ſimilitude and mutual neceſſitude, hath knit and conjoyned us, we ſhould bear a kind reſpect and tender affection; ſhould chearfully concur in undergoing the common burthens; ſhould heartily wiſh and induſtriouſly promote their good, aſſiſt them in accompliſhing their reaſonable deſires, thankfully requite the courteſies received from them, congratulate and rejoice with them in their proſperity, comfort them in their diſtreſſes, and, as we are able, relieve them; however, tenderly compaſſionate their diſappointments, miſeries and ſorrows. This renders us kind and courteous neighbours; ſweet and grateful companions. It repreſents unto us the dreadful effects and inſupportable miſchiefs ariſing from breach of faith, contravening the obligations of ſolemn pacts, infringing publick laws, deviating from the received rules of equity, violating promiſes, and interrupting good correſpondence among men: by which conſiderations it engages us to be good citizens, obedient ſubjects, juſt dealers, and faithful friends. It minds us of the blindneſs, impotence and levity, the proneneſs to miſtake, and misbehaviour that human nature neceſſarily is ſubject to; deſerving rather our commiſeration, than anger or hatred, which prompts us to bear the infirmities of our brethren, to be gentle in cenſure, to be inſenſible of petty affronts, to pardon injuries, to be patient, exorable and reconcileable to thoſe that give us greateſt cauſe of offence. It teaches us, the good may, but the evil of our neighbour can in no wiſe advantage us; that from the ſuffering of any man, ſimply conſidered, no benefit can accrue, nor natural ſatisfaction ariſe to us; and that therefore 'tis a vain, baſe, brutiſh and unreaſonable thing, for any cauſe whatſoever, to deſire or delight in the grief, pain or miſery of our neighbour, to hate or envy him, or inſult over him, or deviſe miſchief to him, or proſecute revenge upon him; which makes us civil, noble and placable enemies, or rather no enemies at all. So that Wiſdom is in effect the genuine parent of all moral and political vertue, juſtice and honeſty; as Solomon ſays in her perſon, I lead in a way of righteouſneſs, and in the midſt of the paths of judgment. And how ſweet theſe are in the practice, how comfortable in the conſequences, the teſtimony of continual experience, and the unanimous conſent of all wiſe men ſufficiently declare. But farther, Prov. 8. 20.

XV. The principal advantage of Wiſdom is, 'its acquainting us with the nature and reaſon of true Religion, and affording convictive arguments to perſuade to the practice of it; which is accompanied with the pureſt delight, and attended with the moſt ſolid content imaginable. I ſay, the Nature of Religion, wherein it conſiſts, and what it requires; the miſtake of which produceth daily ſo many miſchiefs and inconveniences in the world, and expoſes ſo good a name to ſo much reproach. It ſheweth it conſiſteth not in fair profeſſions and glorious pretences, but in real practice; not in a pertinacious adherence to any Sect or party, but in a ſincere love of goodneſs, and diſlike of naughtineſs, where-ever diſcovering it ſelf; not in vain oſtentations and flouriſhes of outward performance, but in an inward good complexion of mind, exerting it ſelf in works of true Devotion and Charity; not in a nice orthodoxy, or politick ſubjection of our judgments to the peremptory dictates of men, but in a ſincere love of Truth, in a hearty approbation of and compliance with the Doctrines fundamentally good, and neceſſary to be believed; not in harſh cenſuring and virulently inveighing againſt others, but in carefull amending our own ways; not in a peeviſh croſneſs and obſtinate repugnancy to received laws and cuſtoms, but in a quiet and peaceable ſubmiſſion to the expreſs Laws of God, and lawfull commands of man; not in a furious zeal for or againſt trivial circumſtances, but in a conſcionable practiſing the ſubſtantial parts of Religion: not in a frequent talking or contentious diſputing about it, but in a ready obſervance of the unqueſtionable rules and preſcripts of it. In a word, that Religion conſiſts in nothing elſe but doing what becomes our relation to God, in a conformity or ſimilitude to his Nature, and in a willing obedience to his holy Will: to which by potent incentives it allures and perſuades us; by repreſenting to us his tranſcendently-glorious Attributes, conſpicuouſly diſplayed in the frame, order and government of the World; that wonderful Power, which erected this great and goodly fabrick; that incomprehenſible Wiſedom, which preſerves it in a conſtant harmony; that immenſe Goodneſs, which hath ſo carefully provided for the various neceſſities, delights and comforts of its innumerable inhabitants. I ſay, by repreſenting thoſe infinitely-glorious Perfections, it engages us with higheſt reſpect to eſteem, reverence and honour him. Alſo, by minding us of our manifold obligations to him, our receiving being, life, reaſon, ſenſe, all the faculties, powers, excellencies, privileges and commodities of our natures from him; of his tender Care and loving Providence continually ſupporting and protecting us; of his liberal Beneficence, patient Indulgence, and earneſt deſire of our good and happineſs by manifold expreſſions evidently manifeſted toward us; it inflames us with ardent love, and obliges us to officious gratitude toward him. Alſo, by declaring the neceſſary and irreconcileable contrariety of his Nature to all impurity and perverſeneſs, his peerleſs Majeſty, his irreſiſtible Power, and his all-ſeeing Knowledge, it begets an awful dread and a devout fear of him. By diſcovering him from his infinite Benignity willing, and from his unlimited Power onely able to ſupply our needs, relieve us in diſtreſſes, protect us from dangers, and confer any valuable benefit upon us, it engenders faith, and encourages us to rely upon him. By revealing to us his ſupereminent Sovereignty, uncontrollable Dominion, and unqueſtionable Authority over us; together with the admirable excellency, wiſdom and equity of his Laws, ſo juſt and reaſonable in themſelves, ſo ſuitable to our nature, ſo conducible to our good, ſo eaſie and practicable, ſo ſweet and comfortable; it powerfully inclines, and by a gentle force as it were conſtrains us to obedience. By ſuch efficacious inducements Wiſdom urges us to all duties of Religion, and withall ſurely directs us (as I before ſaid) wherein it conſiſts; teaching us to have right and worthy apprehenſions of the Divine nature, to which our Devotion (if true and good) muſt be ſuited and conformed: And ſo it frees us, as from irreligion and profane neglect of God, ſo from fond ſuperſtitions, the ſources of ſo much evil to mankind. For he that wiſely hath conſidered the Wiſdom, Goodneſs and Power of God, cannot imagine God can with a regardleſs eye overlook his preſumptuous contempts of his Laws, or endure him to proceed in an outrageous defiance of Heaven, to continue hurting himſelf, or injuring his neighbour; nor can admit unreaſonable terrours, or entertain ſuſpicious conceits of God, as of an imperious Maſter, or implacable Tyrant over him, exacting impoſſible performances from, or delighting in the fatal miſeries of his Creatures; nor can ſuppoſe him pleaſed with hypocritical ſhews, and greatly taken with ſuperficial courtſhips of ceremonious addreſs; or that he can in any wiſe favour our fiery zeals, fierce paſſions, or unjuſt partialities about matter of opinion and ceremony; or can do otherwiſe than deteſt all factious, harſh, uncharitable and revengefull proceedings, of what nature, or upon what ground ſoever; or that he can be ſo inconſiſtent with himſelf, as to approve any thing but what is like himſelf, that is, Righteouſneſs, Sincerity and Beneficence.

Laſtly, Wiſdom attracts the Favour of God, purchaſeth a glorious Wiſd. 7. 28. Reward, and ſecureth perpetual Felicity to us. For God loveth none but
3. 15. him that dwelleth with wiſdom. And, glorious is the fruit of good la- bour: and the root of wiſdom ſhall never fall away. And, Happy is the Prov. 3. 13. 8. 35. man that findeth wiſdom: and, whoſo findeth her, findeth life, and ſhall obtain favour of the Lord. Theſe are the words of wiſe Solomon, in the Book of Wiſdom, and in the Proverbs. God loveth her, as moſt agreeable to his nature; as reſembling him; as an off-ſpring, beam and efflux of that Wiſdom which founded the earth, and eſtabliſhed the Heavens; as that which begetteth honour, love and obedience to his Commands, and truly glorifies him; and as that which promotes the good of his Creatures, which he earneſtly deſires. And the paths ſhe leads in are ſuch as directly tend to the promiſed Inheritance of joy and bliſs.

Thus have I ſimply and plainly preſented you with part of what my meditation ſuggeſted upon this Subject: It remains that we endeavour to obtain this excellent endowment of Soul, by the faithfull exerciſe of our Reaſon, carefull obſervation of things, diligent ſtudy of the Divine Law, watchfull reflexion upon our ſelves, vertuous and religious practice; but eſpecially, by imploring the Divine influence, the original ſpring of light, and fountain of all true knowledge, following S. James his advice, If any man lack wiſdom, let him ask it of God, who giveth freely. Therefore, O everlaſting Wiſdom, the Maker, Redeemer and Governour of all things, let ſome comfortable Beams from thy great Body of heavenly Light deſcend upon us, to illuminate our dark minds, and quicken our dead hearts; to enflame us with ardent love unto thee, and to direct our ſteps in obedience to thy Laws, through the gloomy ſhades of this world, into that region of eternal light and bliſs, where thou reigneſt in perfect Glory and Majeſty, one God ever-Bleſſed, world without end. Amen.

SERMON II.

The Profitableneſs of Godlineſs.

1 TIM. IV. 8.

----But Godlineſs is profitable for all things.

HOW generally men, with moſt unanimous conſent, are devoted to Profit, as to the immediate ſcope of their deſigns, and aim of their doings, if with the ſlighteſt attention we view what is acted upon this Theatre of human affairs, we cannot but diſcern. All that we ſee men ſo very ſerious and induſtrious about, which we call buſineſs; that which they trudge for in the Streets, which they work or wait for in the Shops, which they meet and croud for at the Exchange, which they ſue for in the Hall, and ſolicit for at the Court, which they plow and dig for, which they march and fight for in the Field, which they travel for at Land, and ſail for (among rocks and ſtorms) upon the Sea, which they plod for in the Cloſet, and diſpute for in the Schools, (yea, may we not adde, which they frequently pray for, and preach for in the Church?) what is it but Profit? Is it not this apparently for which men ſo eagerly conteſt and quarrel, ſo bitterly envy and emulate, ſo fiercely clamour and inveigh, ſo cunningly ſupplant and undermine one another; which ſtuffeth their Hearts with mutual hatred and ſpite, which tippeth their Tongues with ſlander and reproach, which often embrueth their Hands with bloud and ſlaughter; for which they expoſe their Lives and Lims to danger, for which they undergoe grievous Toils and Drudgeries, for which they diſtract their Mind with Cares, and pierce their heart with ſorrows; to which they ſacrifice their preſent Eaſe and Content, yea, to which commonly they proſtitute their Honour and Conſcience? This, if you mark it, is the great Miſtreſs, which is with ſo paſſionate rivality every where woed and courted; this the common Mark which all eyes aim, and all endeavours ſtrike at; this the Hire which men demand for all their Pains, the Prize they hope for all their Combats, the Harveſt they ſeek from all the year's aſſiduous Labour. This is the Bait, by which you may inviegle moſt men any-whither; and the moſt certain ſign, by which you may prognoſticate what any man will doe: for mark where his Profit is, there will he be. This ſome profeſſedly and with open face, others ſlily and under thin veils of pretence; (under guiſe of friendſhip, of love to publick good, of loyalty, of religious zeal;) ſome directly and in a plain track, others obliquely and by ſubtle trains; ſome by ſordid and baſe means, others in ways more cleanly and plauſible; ſome gravely and modeſtly, others wildly and furiouſly; all (very few excepted) in one manner or another, do clearly in moſt of their proceedings level and drive at.

Prov. 14. 23.
Φεῦ δύ' ὀβολὼ ὡς μέγα δύνασθον πανταχοῦ; Ariſtoph. Plut.

Prima ferè vota, & cunctis notiſſima Templis Divitiæ ut creſcant, &c. Juv. Sat. 10. Omnes ad affectum atque appetitum utilitatis ſuæ naturæ ipſius magiſterio atque impulſione ducuntur. Salv. ad Eccl. Cath. 2.

This practice then being ſo general, and ſeeing that men are reaſonable creatures, that it is ſo cannot ſurely proceed from mere brutiſhneſs, or dotage; there muſt be ſome fair colour or ſemblance of reaſon, which draweth men into, and carrieth them forward in this way. The reaſon indeed is obvious and evident enough, the very name of Profit implieth it, ſignifying that which is uſeful, or conducible to purpoſes really or ſeemingly good. The gain of money, or of ſomewhat equivalent thereto, is therefore ſpecially termed Profit, becauſe it readily ſupplieth neceſſity, furniſheth convenience, feedeth pleaſure, ſatisfieth fancy and curioſity, promoteth eaſe and liberty, ſupporteth honour and dignity, procureth power, dependencies and friendſhips, rendreth a man ſome-body, conſiderable in the world; in fine, enableth to doe good, or to perform works of beneficence and charity. Profit is therefore ſo much affected and purſued, becauſe it is, or doth ſeem, apt to procure or promote ſome good deſirable to us.

If therefore a Project ſhould be propoſed to us very fecible and probable to ſucceed, in purſuance whereof aſſuredly we might obtain great Profit; methinks, in conſiſtence with our ſelves, and conformably to our uſual manner of acting, we ſhould be very ready to embrace and execute it. Such a Project it is which in my Text, by a very truſty Voucher, and skilfull Judge of ſuch things, and one who had himſelf fully experimented it, is propoſed; which in it ſelf is very practicable, ſo that any of us may, if we have a mind to it, and will be at the pains, throughly compaſs and carry it on: which will exceedingly turn to accompt, and bring in Gains unto us unſpeakably vaſt; in compariſon whereto all other deſigns, which men with ſo much care and toil do purſue, are very unprofitable, or detrimental, yielding but ſhadows of profit, or bringing real damage to us.

It is briefly this, to be religious or pious; that is, in our minds ſtedfaſtly to believe on God, (ſuch as nature in ſome meaſure, and revelation more clearly declareth him,) in our hearts earneſtly to love and reverence him, through all our practice ſincerely and diligently to obſerve his Laws. This is it which Saint Paul affirmeth to be profitable for all things, and which it is my intent, by God's help, to recommend unto you as ſuch; demonſtrating it really to be ſo, by repreſenting ſome of thoſe numberleſs benefits and advantages which accrue from it, extending to all conditions and capacities of men, to all ſtates, all ſeaſons, and in effect to all affairs of life.

It hath been ever a main obſtruction to the practice of Piety, that it hath been taken for no friend, or rather for an enemy, to Profit; as both unprofitable and prejudicial to its followers: and many ſemblances there are countenancing that opinion. For Religion ſeemeth to ſmother or to ſlacken the induſtry and alacrity of men in following Profit, many ways: by charging them to be content with a little, and carefull for nothing; by diverting their affections and cares from worldly affairs to matters of another nature, place and time, preſcribing in the firſt place to ſeek things ſpirirual, heavenly and future; by diſparaging all ſecular wealth, as a thing in compariſon to Vertue and ſpiritual goods, very mean and inconſiderable; by checking greedy deſires and aſpiring thoughts after it; by debarring the moſt ready ways of getting it, (violence, exaction, fraud and flattery,) yea, ſtreightning the beſt ways, eager care and diligence; by commending ſtrict Juſtice in all caſes, and always taking part with Conſcience when it claſheth with Intereſt; by paring away the largeſt uſes of Wealth, in the prohibition of its free enjoyment to pride or pleaſure; by enjoyning liberal communication thereof in ways of charity and mercy; by engaging men to expoſe their goods ſometimes to imminent hazard, ſometimes to certain loſs; obliging them to forſake all things, and to embrace Poverty for its ſake.

It favoureth this conceit, to obſerve, that often bad men by impious courſes do appear to thrive and proſper; while good men ſeem for their goodneſs to ſuffer, or to be no wiſe viſibly better for it, enduring much hardſhip and diſtreſs.

It furthereth the prejudice, that ſome perſons, void of true Piety, or imperfectly good, (ſome Dabblers in Religion,) do not from their lame, ſlight and ſuperficial performances feel ſatisfactory returns, ſuch as they did preſume to find; and thence, to the defamation of Piety, are apt to ſay, with thoſe men in the Prophet, It is vain to ſerve God, and Mal. 3. 14.
what profit is it that we have kept his ordinances, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hoaſts? Yea, that ſometimes very pious men, being out of humour, and ſomewhat diſcompoſed by the urgent preſſures of affliction, the diſappointments and croſſes incident to all men here in this region of trouble, are apt to complain and expreſs themſelves diſſatisfied, ſaying with Job, It profiteth a man nothing, that Job. 34. 9.
he ſhould delight himſelf with God. What advantage will it be unto me, and what profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin? or, with Da- 35. 3.
vid, Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in in- Pſ. 73. 13,14.
nocency: For all the day long I have been plagued, and chaſtned every morning.

To theſe conſiderations, diſadvantagious in this reſpect to Piety, may be added, that the conſtant and certain profits emergent from it (although incomparably more ſubſtantial, and to the mind more ſenſible than any other) are not yet ſo groſs and palpable, that men, who from being immerſed in earth and fleſh are blind in errour, dull of apprehenſion, vain and inconſiderate in their judgments, tainted and vitiated in their palates, can diſcern their worth, or reliſh their ſweetneſs. Hence it is, that ſo many follow the judgment and pactice of thoſe in Job, who ſay unto God, Depart from us, for we deſire not the Job 21. 14, 15.
knowledge of thy ways. What is the Almighty, that we ſhould ſerve him? and what profit ſhould we have if we pray unto him?

For voiding which prejudices, and the recommendation of S. Paul's project, I ſhall (as I ſaid) propoſe ſome of thoſe innumerable advantages, by conſidering which the immenſe profitableneſs of Piety will appear. And firſt, I ſhall mention thoſe Conſiderations which more plainly do import Univerſality; then ſhall touch ſome Benefits thereof, ſeeming more particular, yet in effect vaſtly large, and of a very diffuſive influence.

I. Firſt then we may conſider, that Piety is exceeding uſefull for all ſorts of men, in all capacities, all ſtates, all relations; fitting and diſpoſing them to manage all their reſpective concernments, to diſcharge all their peculiar duties, in a proper, juſt and decent manner.

Eph 6. 9.
Col. 4. 1.

It rendreth all ſuperiors equal and moderate in their adminiſtrations; mild, courteous and affable in their converſe; benign and condeſcenſive in all their demeanour toward their Inferiours.

Eph. 6. 5.
Col. 3. 22.
1 Pet. 2. 18.

Coreſpondently it diſpoſeth Inferiours to be ſincere and faithfull, modeſt, loving, reſpectfull, diligent, apt willingly to yield due ſubjection and ſervice.

It inclineth Princes to be juſt, gentle, benign, carefull for their Subjects good, apt to adminiſter Juſtice uprightly, to protect Right, to encourage Vertue, to check Wickedneſs.

Rom. 13. 1.
Tit. 3. 1.
1 Pet. 2. 13.

Anſwerably it rendreth Subjects loyal, ſubmiſſive, obedient, quiet and peaceable, ready to yield due Honour, to pay the Tributes and bear the Burthens impoſed, to diſcharge all Duties, and obſerve all Laws preſcribed by their Governours conſcionably, patiently, chearfully, without reluctancy, grudging or murmuring.

1 Pet. 4. 9.
Phil. 2. 14.
Eph. 6. 4.
Col. 3. 21.
1 Tim. 5. 8.
Eph. 6. 1.
Col. 3. 20.
Eph. 5. 25.
Col. 3. 19.
1 Pet. 3. 7.
Eph. 5. 22.
Col. 3. 18.
Tit. 2. 5.
1 Pet. 3. 5.

It maketh Parents loving, gentle, provident for their Childrens good education, and comfortable ſubſiſtence; Children again, dutifull, reſpectfull, gratefull, apt to requite their Parents.

Husbands from it become affectionate and compliant to their Wives; Wives ſubmiſſive and obedient to their Husbands.

It diſpoſeth Friends to be Friends indeed, full of cordial affection and good-will, entirely faithfull, firmly conſtant, induſtriouſly carefull and active in performing all good offices mutually.

It engageth men to be diligent in their Calling, faithfull to their Truſts, contented and peaceable in their Station, and thereby ſerviceable to Publick good.

Gal. 6. 2, 10.
Phil. 4. 8.
1 Theſ. 3. 12.
2 Cor. 9. 13.

It rendreth all men juſt and punctual in their Dealing, orderly and quiet in their Behaviour, courteous and complaiſant in their Converſation, friendly and charitable upon all occaſions, apt to aſſiſt, to relieve, to comfort one another.

It tieth all Relations more faſtly and ſtrongly, aſſureth and augmenteth all Endearments, enforceth and eſtabliſheth all Obligations by the firm bands of Conſcience; ſet aſide which, no Engagement can hold ſure againſt temptations of Intereſt, or Pleaſure. Much difference there is between performing theſe Duties out of natural temper, fear of puniſhment, hope of temporal reward, ſelfiſh deſign, regard to credit, or other the like Principles, and the diſcharging them out of religious Conſcience: this alone will keep men tight, uniform, reſolute and ſtable; whereas all other Principles are looſe and ſlippery, will ſoon be ſhaken and faulter.

In Conſequence to thoſe Practices ſpringing from it, Piety removeth oppreſſion, violence, faction, diſorders and murmurings, out of the State; ſchiſms and ſcandals out of the Church; pride and haughtineſs, ſloth and luxury, detraction and ſycophantry out of the Court; corruption and partiality out of Judicatures; clamours and tumults out of the Street; brawlings, grudges and jealouſies out of Families; extortion and cozenage out of Trade; ſtrifes, emulations, ſlanderous backbitings, tings, bitter and foul language, out of Converſation: in all places in all Societies it produceth, it advanceth, it eſtabliſheth order, peace, ſafety, proſperity, all that is good, all that is lovely or handſome, all that is convenient or pleaſant for humane ſociety and common life. It is that which (as the Wiſe man ſaith) exalteth a nation; it is that which eſtabliſheth a throne.

Prov. 14. 34. & 16 12. & 20. 28. & 29. 14. & 8. 15. & 29. 8.

It is indeed the beſt prop and guard that can be of Government, and of the Commonweal: for it ſettleth the Body politick in a ſound conſtitution of health, it firmly cementeth the parts thereof; it putteth all things into a right order and ſteddy courſe. It procureth mutual reſpect and affection between Governours and Subjects, whence ariſeth ſafety, eaſe and pleaſure to both. It rendreth men truly good, (that is, juſt and honeſt, ſober and conſiderate, modeſt and peaceable,) and thence apt, without any conſtraint or ſtir, to yeild every one their due; not affected to needleſs change, not diſpoſed to raiſe any diſturbance. It putteth men in good humour, and keepeth them in it; whence things paſs ſmoothly and pleaſantly. It cheriſheth worth, and encourageth induſtry; whence Vertue flouriſheth, and Wealth is encreaſed; whence the occaſions and means of diſorder are ſtopt, the pretences for ſedition and faction are cut off. In fine, it certainly procureth the benediction of God, the ſource of all welfare and proſperity: whence, When it goeth well with the righteous, the city rejoyceth; and, When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoyce, ſaith the great Politician, Solomon.

Prov. 11. 10. 29. 2.

It is therefore the concernment of all men, who (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh) deſire to live well, and would fain ſee good days; it is the ſpecial intereſt of great Perſons, (of the Magiſtracy, the Nobility, the Gentry, of all perſons that have any conſiderable intereſt in the world,) who would ſafely and ſweetly enjoy their dignity, power or wealth, by all means to protect and promote Piety, as the beſt inſtrument of their ſecurity, and undiſturbedly enjoying the accommodations of their ſtate. 'Tis in all reſpects their beſt wiſdom and policy; that which will as well preſerve their outward ſtate here, as ſatisfie their conſciences within, and ſave their Souls hereafter. All the Machiavilian arts and tricks, all the ſleights and fetches of wordly craft do ſignifie nothing in compariſon to this one plain and eaſie way of ſecuring and furthering their Intereſts.

Pſal. 34. 12. 1 Pet. 3. 10.

If then it be a groſs abſurdity to deſire the fruits, and not to take care of the root, not to cultivate the ſtock, whence they ſprout; if every Prince gladly would have his Subjects loyal and obedient, every Maſter would have his Servants honeſt, diligent and obſervant, every Parent would have his Children officious and gratefull, every man would have his Friend faithfull and kind, every one would have thoſe juſt and ſincere with whom he doth negotiate or converſe; if any one would chuſe to be related to ſuch, and would eſteem their relation a happineſs: then conſequently ſhould every man in reaſon ſtrive to further Piety, from whence alone thoſe good diſpoſitions and practices do proceed.

II. Piety doth fit a man for all conditions, qualifying him to paſs through them all with the beſt advantage, wiſely, chearfully and ſafely; ſo as to incurre no conſiderable harm or detriment by them.

Is a man proſperous, high, or wealthy in condition? Piety guardeth him from all the miſchiefs incident to that ſtate, and diſpoſeth him to enjoy the beſt advantages thereof. It keepeth him from being ſwelled and puffed up with vain conceit, from being tranſported with fond complacence or confidence therein; minding him, that it is purely the gift of God, that it abſolutely dependeth on his diſpoſal, ſo that it may ſoon be taken from him, and that he cannot otherwiſe than by humility, by gratitude, by the good uſe of it, be ſecure to retain it; minding him alſo, that he ſhall aſſuredly be forced to render a ſtrict accompt concerning the good management thereof. It preſerveth him from being perverted or corrupted with the temptations to which that condition is moſt liable; from luxury, from ſloth, from ſtupidity, from forgetfulneſs of God, and of himſelf; maintaining among the floods of plenty a ſober and ſteddy mind. It fenceth him from inſolence, and faſtuous contempt of others; rendereth him civil, condeſcenſive, kind and helpfull to thoſe who are in a meaner ſtate. It inſtructeth and inciteth him to apply his wealth and power to the beſt uſes, to the Service of God, to the benefit of his Neighbour, for his own beſt reputation, and moſt ſolid comfort. It is the right balaſt of proſperity, the onely antidote for all the inconveniences of wealth; that which ſecureth, ſweetneth and ſanctifieth all other goods: without it all apparent goods are very noxious, or extremely dangerous: riches, power, honour, eaſe, pleaſure, are ſo many poiſons, or ſo many ſnares, without it. Again, Is a man poor and low in the world? Piety doth improve and ſweeten even that ſtate: it keepeth his ſpirits up above dejection, deſperation and diſconſolateneſs; it freeth him from all grievous ſollicitude and anxiety; ſhewing him, that although he ſeemeth to have little, yet he may be aſſured to want nothing, he having a certain ſuccour and never-failing ſupply from God's good Providence; that notwithſtanding the preſent ſtraitneſs of his condition, or ſcantneſs of outward things, he hath a title to Goods infinitely more precious and more conſiderable. A pious man cannot but apprehend himſelf like the Child of a moſt wealthy, kind and carefull Father, who although he hath yet nothing in his own poſſeſſion, or paſſing under his name, yet is aſſured that he can never come into any want of what is needfull to him: the Lord of all things (who hath all things in Heaven and Earth at his diſpoſal, who is infinitely tender of his Childrens good, who doth inceſſantly watch over them) being his gracious Father, how can he fear to be left deſtitute, or not to be competently provided for, as is truly beſt for him?

This is the difference between a pious, and an impious man. Is the pious man in need? he hath then an inviſible refuge to fly to, an inviſible ſtore to furniſh him; he hath ſomewhat beyond all preſent things to hope in, to comfort himſelf with: whereas the impious perſon hath nothing beſide preſent appearances to ſupport or ſolace himſelf by; the which failing, down he ſinketh into dejection and deſpair. Is the good man in affliction; he knoweth that it cometh not on him without God's wiſe appointment, nor without good intention toward him, for probation, exerciſe and improvement of his Virtues, or for wholeſome correction of his bad diſpoſitions; that it is onely Phyſick and Diſcipline to him, which ſhall have a comfortable iſſue; that it ſhall laſt no longer than it is expedient for him that it ſhould: wherefore he patiently ſubmitteth to it, and undergoeth it chearfully, with the ſame mind wherewith a Patient ſwalloweth down an unſavoury Potion, which he preſumeth will conduce to his Health. Never, indeed, hath any man enjoyed more real content, or hath been more truly ſatisfied, than good men have been in a ſeeming depth of adverſity. What men ever upon earth have been more ſorely afflicted, have underwent greater loſſes, diſgraces, labours, troubles, diſtreſſes in any kind, than did the H. Apoſtles? yet did they moſt heartily rejoyce, exult and triumph in them all. Such a wondrous virtue hath Piety to change all things into matter of conſolation and joy. No condition in effect can be evil or ſad to a pious man: his very ſorrows are pleaſant, his infirmities are wholeſome, his wants enrich him, his diſgraces adorn him, his burthens eaſe him; his duties are priviledges, his falls are the grounds of advancement, his very ſins (as breeding contrition, humility, circumſpection and vigilance) do better and profit him: whereas Impiety doth ſpoil every condition, doth corrupt and embaſe all good things, doth embitter all the conveniences and comforts of life.

Scimus amicos Dei ab amantiſſimo, miſericordiſſimo Patre Deo mala iſta pœnalia recipere, non ut pœnam ſeu vindictam iracundiæ, ſed magis ut correctiones & medicamenta ſtultitiæ, & adjumenta virtutis, ut malleationes ſive fabricationes, & tunſiones, ſive ablutiones, & candidationes. Guil. Par. de Sacram.

Ἐκείνους μὲν γὰρ ἐπεκούφιζεν ἡ χαρὰ τῆς μαρτυρίας, καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς τῶν ἐπηγγελμένων, καὶ ἡ πρὸς τὸν Χριστὸν ἀγάπη καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα, τὸ πατρικόν. Euſeb. 5 1. Mart. Lugd.

III. Piety doth virtually compriſe within it all other profits, ſerving all the deſigns of them all: what-ever kind of deſirable good we can hope to find from any other profit, we may be aſſured to enjoy from it.

He that hath it is ipſo facto vaſtly rich, is entituled to immenſe treaſures of moſt precious Wealth; in compariſon whereto all the gold and all the jewels in the world are mere baubles. He hath intereſt in God, and can call him his, who is the All, and in regard to whom all things exiſtent are leſs than nothing. The infinite Power and Wiſdom of God belong to him, to be ever, upon all fit occaſions, employed for his benefit. All the ineſtimable treaſures of Heaven (a place infinitely more rich than the Indies) are his, after this moment of life, to have and to hold for ever: ſo that great reaſon had the Wiſe man to ſay, that In the houſe of the righteous is much treaſure. Piety therefore is profitable, as immediately inſtating in wealth: and whereas the deſired fruits of profit are chiefly theſe, honour, power, pleaſure, ſafety, liberty, eaſe, opportunity of getting knowledg, means of benefitting others; all theſe we ſhall ſee do abundantly accrue from Piety, and in truth onely from it.

Prov. 15. 6.

The Pious man is in truth moſt honourable. Inter homines pro ſummo eſt optimus, ſaith Seneca; whom Solomon tranſlated thus, The righteous is more excellent than his neighbour. He is dignified by the moſt illuſtrious titles, a Son of God, a Friend and Favourite to the Sovereign King of the World, an Heir of Heaven, a Denizon of the Jeruſalem above: Titles far ſurpaſſing all thoſe which worldly ſtate doth aſſume. He is approved by the beſt and moſt infallible judgments, wherein true Honour reſideth. He is reſpected by God himſelf, by the H. Angels, by the bleſſed Saints, by all good and all wiſe perſons; yea, commonly, by all men: for the effects of genuine Piety are ſo venerable and amiable, that ſcarce any man can do otherwiſe than in his heart much eſteem him that worketh them.

Sen. Ep. 90. Prov. 12 26. Καθ' ἀλήθειαν ὁ ἀγαθὸς μόνος τιμητός Ariſtot. Eth. 3. 3.

Prov. 12. 8, 4.

The Pious man is alſo the moſt potent man: he hath a kind of omnipotency, becauſe he can do what-ever he will, that is, what he ought to doe; and, becauſe the Divine Power is ever ready to aſſiſt him in his pious enterpriſes, ſo that He can do all things by Chriſt that ſtrengthneth him. He is able to combat and vanquiſh him that is ὁ ἰσχυρὸς, the ſtout and mighty one; to wage war with happy ſucceſs againſt principalities and powers. He conquereth and commandeth himſelf, which is the Tantum quantum vult poteſt, qui ſe niſi quod debet non putat poſſe Senec. Ep. 90.

Prov. 16. 32. 2. 28.

braveſt victory, and nobleſt empire: he quelleth fleſhly luſts, ſubdueth inordinate paſſions, and repelleth ſtrong temptations. He, by his faith, overcometh the world with a conqueſt far more glorious than ever any Alexander or Cæſar could do. He, in fine, doth perform the moſt Worthy exploits, and deſerveth the moſt honourable triumphs that man can do.

Vide Sen de Ben. 5, 7.

The Pious man alſo doth enjoy the onely true Pleaſures; hearty, pure, ſolid, durable Pleaſures; ſuch Pleaſures as thoſe of which the divine Pſalmiſt ſingeth, In thy preſence is fulneſs of joy, at thy right hand there are pleaſures for evermore. That all joy in believing, that gayety of hope, that inceſſant rejoycing in the Lord, and greatly delighting in his Law, that continual feaſt of a good Conſcience, that ſerving the Lord with gladneſs, that exceeding gladneſs with God's countenance, that comfort of the Holy Spirit, that joy unſpeakable and full of glory; the ſatisfaction reſulting from the contemplation of Heavenly truth, from the ſenſe of God's favour, and the pardon of his ſins, from the influence of God's grace, from the hopes and anticipation of everlaſting bliſs; theſe are Pleaſures indeed, in compariſon whereto all other pleaſures are no more than brutiſh ſenſualities, ſordid impurities, ſuperficial touches, tranſient flaſhes of delight: ſuch as ſhould be inſipid and unſavoury to a rational appetite; ſuch as are tinctured with ſourneſs and bitterneſs, have painfull remorſes or qualms conſequent. All the Pious man's performances of duty and of devotion are full of pure ſatisfaction and delight here, they ſhall be rewarded with perfect and endleſs joy hereafter.

Pſal. 16. 11. Rom. 15. 13 Heb. 3. 6. Phil. 4. 4. Pſal. 43. 4. Pſal. 112. 1. & 1. 2. & 119. 16, 24, 47, 70, 77, 92, 143, 111. Pſal. 100 2 & 21. 6. & 94. 19. Iſa. 29. 19. Joh. 26. 20. &c. 1 Pet. 1. 8. Rom. 14. 17.

Quid enim jucundius, quàm Dei Patris & Domini reconciliatio, quàm veritatis revelatio, quàm errorum recognitio, quàm tot retrò criminum venia? quæ major voluptas, quàm faſtidium ipſius voluptatis, quàm ſeculi totius contemptus, quàm vera libertas, quàm conſcientia integra quàm vita ſufficiens, quàm mortis timor nullus? &c. Tert. de Spectac. 29.

As for ſafety, the Pious man hath it moſt abſolute and ſure: he being guarded by Almighty power and wiſdom: reſting under the ſhadow of God's wings; God upholding him with his hand, ordering his ſteps, ſo that none of them ſhall ſlide, holding his ſoul in life, and ſuffering not his feet to be moved; he being, by the grace and mercy of God, ſecured from the aſſaults and impreſſions of all enemies, from ſin and guilt, from the Devil, world and fleſh, from death and hell, which are our moſt formidable, and in effect only dangerous enemies.

Pſal. 17. 8. & 36. 7. & 57. 1. & 61. 4. & 91. 4. Pſal. 37. 24. & 119. 117. Pſal. 37. 23, 31. & 119. 133. Pſal. 66. 9.

As for Liberty, the Pious man moſt entirely and truly doth enjoy that; he alone is free from captivity to that cruel Tyrant, Satan, from the miſerable ſlavery to Sin, from the grievous dominion of luſt and paſſion. He can doe what he pleaſeth, having a mind to doe only what is good and fit. The Law he obſerveth is worthily called the perfect law of liberty; the Lord he ſerveth pretendeth only to command freemen and friends: Ye are my friends, ſaid he, if ye doe whatever I command you; and, If the Son ſet you free, then are ye free indeed.

Pſal. 119 45. Jam. 1. 25. Joh. 15. 14. Joh 8 36.

Οὐ γάρ ἐστιν, οὐκ ἔστιν ἐλεύθερος, ἀλλ᾽ ἢ μόνος ὁ Χριστῷ ζῶν. Chryſ. ad Theod.

And for Eaſe, 'tis he only that knoweth it; having his mind exempted from the diſtraction of care, from diſorder of paſſion, from anguiſh of Conſcience, from the drudgeries and troubles of the world, from the vexations and diſquiets which ſin produceth. He findeth it made good to him, which our Lord inviting him did promiſe, Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt: he feeleth the truth of thoſe Divine aſſertions, Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtayed on thee; and, Great peace have they which love thy Law, and nothing ſhall offend them.

Matt. 11. 28. ſ. 26 3. Pſ 119 165.

As for Knowledge, the Pious man alone doth attain it conſiderably, ſo as to become truly wiſe, and learned to purpoſe. Evil men (ſaith Prov. 28. 5, 7.
the Wiſe man himſelf, who knew well,) underſtand not judgment : but they that ſeek the Lord underſtand all things. It is the Pious man that employeth his mind upon the moſt proper and worthy objects, that knoweth things which certainly beſt deſerve to be known, that hath his Soul enriched with the choiceſt notions : he ſkilleth to aim at the beſt ends, and to compaſs them by the fitteſt means ; he can aſſign to each thing its due worth and value ; he can proſecute things by the beſt methods, and order his affairs in the beſt manner : ſo that he is ſure not to be defeated or diſappointed in his endeavours, nor to miſ-ſpend his care and pains, without anſwerable fruit. He hath the beſt Maſter to inſtruct him in his ſtudies, and the beſt rules to direct him in his proceedings : he cannot be miſtaken, ſeeing in his judgment and choice of things he conſpireth with infallible Wiſdom. Therefore ὁ εὐσεβῶν ἄ- Triſmeg. κρως φιλοσοφεῖ, the pious man is the exquiſite philoſopher. The fear of the Job 28. 28.
Lord that is wiſdom, and to depart from evil is underſtanding. The fear of Prov 9. 10.
the Lord (as is ſaid again and again in Scripture) is the head (or top) 1 7. Pſal. 111. 10.
of wiſdom. A good underſtanding have all they that keep his commandments. 119. 34. 99, Farther, the Pious man is enabled and diſpoſed (hath the power and 104, 130.

the heart) moſt to benefit and oblige others. He doth it by his ſuccour and aſſiſtence, by his inſtruction and advice, which he is ever ready to yield to any man upon fit occaſion : he doth it by the direction and encouragement of his good Example : he doth it by his conſtant and earneſt Prayers for all men : he doth it by drawing down Bleſſings from Heaven on the place where he reſideth. He is upon all accounts the moſt true, the moſt common benefactour to mankind ; all his neighbours, his Country, the World are in ſome way or other obliged to him : at leaſt, he doeth all the good he can, and in wiſh doth benefit all men.

Thus all the fruits and conſequences of Profit, the which engage men ſo eagerly to purſue it, do in the beſt kind and higheſt degree reſult from Piety, and, indeed, onely from it. All the Philoſophical Bravado's concerning a Wiſe man being onely rich, onely honourable, onely happy, onely above fortune, are verified in the Pious man : to him alone, as ſuch, with a ſure foundation, without vanity, with evident reaſon thoſe Aphoriſms may be applied. They are Paradoxes and fictions abſtracting from Religion, or conſidering men onely under the light and power of nature : but ſuppoſing our Religion true, a good Chriſtian ſoberly, without arrogance, in proportion and according to the meaſure of his Piety, may aſſume them to himſelf, as the H. Apoſtles did ; I poſſeſs all things, I can do all things, he may in a ſort ſay after S. Paul.

As for all other Profits, ſecluding it, they are but imaginary and Sen. Ep. 59.
counterfeit, mere ſhadows and illuſions, yielding onely painted ſhows inſtead of ſubſtantial fruit.

If from bare worldly wealth (that which uſurpeth the name of Profit here) a man ſeeketh Honour, he is deluded, for he is not thereby truly honourable ; he is but a ſhining Earth-worm, a well-trapped Aſs, a gaudy Statue, a theatrical Grandee : with God, who judgeth moſt rightly, he is mean and deſpicable : no intelligent perſon can inwardly reſpect him. Even here (in this world of fallacy and dotage) the wiſeſt and ſobereſt men, whoſe judgment uſually doth ſway that of others, cannot but contemn him, as Maſter of no real good, nor fit for any good purpoſe ; as ſeeing that in the end he will prove moſt beggarly and wretched.

If a man affecteth Power thence, he is grievouſly miſtaken; for, inſtead thereof, he proveth exceedingly feeble and impotent, able to perform nothing worthy a man, ſubject to fond humours and paſſions, ſervant to divers luſts and pleaſures, captivated by the Devil at his pleaſure, overborn by temptation, hurried by the ſtream of the World, and liable to the ſtroaks of furtune.

If he propoundeth to himſelf thence the enjoyment of Pleaſure, he will alſo much fail therein: for in lieu thereof he ſhall find care and trouble, ſurfeiting and diſeaſe, weariſome ſatiety and bitter regret; being void of all true delight in his mind, and ſatisfaction in his Conſcience; nothing here being able to furniſh ſolid and ſtable pleaſure.

If he fanſieth Safety, he deludeth himſelf: for how can he be ſafe, who is deſtitute of God's protection and ſuccour: who is the object of Divine wrath and vengeance; who is aſſailed by many fierce and powerful enemies; whom the roaring Lion is ready to devour; whom Death and ſudden deſtruction are coming to ſeiſe upon; whom Guilt threatneth, and Hell gapeth for; who without any guard or fence ſtandeth expoſed to ſuch imminent, ſuch horrid and ghaſtly dangers? 1 Theſſ 5. 3. Prov. 10. 29

If he thirſt for Liberty, he will be fruſtrated: for he can be no otherwiſe than a ſlave, while he continueth impious; ſervus tot dominorum, quot vitiorum, a ſlave to ſo many maſters as he keepeth vices: a ſlave to himſelf, and his own Luſts: carrying about with him the fetters of unſatiable deſire, being hampered with inconſiſtent and irregular affections? Auguſt. Prov. 25. 28.

Eaſe he cannot obtain, being oppreſſed with unwieldy burthens of ſin, of care, of trouble; being toſſed with reſtleſs agitations of luſt and paſſion; being like the troubled ſea, which cannot reſt, whoſe waters caſt up mire and dirt. Iſa. 57. 20.

If he meaneth to get Wiſdom, he is out: for wiſdom and Impiety are incompatible things. All his knowledg is vain, all his ſpeculations are no better than dreams, ſeeing he erreth in the main point, and is not wiſe to ſalvation.

He is, in fine, extreamly miſtaken, and in all his projects will be lamentably diſappointed, whoever fanſieth any true profit without Piety: he never can attain to be ſo much as wealthy; but drudge and plod what he can, muſt be a begger, and a forlorn wretch. For how can he be any-wiſe rich, who doth want all the beſt things, the onely valuable things in the world, which any man may have, which any good man doth poſſeſs? How can he be rich, who is deſtitute of the moſt needful accommodations of life; who conſtantly feedeth on the courſeſt and moſt ſordid fare, (the duſt of pelf, the dung of ſenſuality;) who hath no faithful or conſtant friends, (nothing earthly can be ſuch;) who is maſter of nothing but dirt, or chaff, or ſmoak? Whereas alſo Riches do conſiſt, not in what one enjoyeth at preſent, (for that can be little) but in a preſumed ability to enjoy afterward what he may come to need or deſire; or in well-grounded hopes that he ſhall never fall into want or diſtreſs. How can that man be rich, who hath not any confidence in God, any intereſt in him, any reaſon to expect his Bleſſing? yea, who hath much ground to fear the diſpleaſure of him, in whoſe hand all things are, and who arbitrarily diſpoſeth of all? Piety therefore is the onely profitable thing, according to juſt eſteem. She is more pretious than rubies, and all the things we can deſire are not to be compared to her. Upon this accompt it is moſt true, what the Pſalmiſt affirmeth, A little that the righteous hath, is better than great riches of the ungodly. Prov. 3. 15. Pſal. 37. 16.

IV. That Commendation is not to be omitted which is neareſt at hand, and ſuggeſted by S. Paul himſelf to back this aſſertion concerning the univerſal profitableneſs of Piety; For (ſaith he) it hath the promiſe of the life that now is, and of that which is to come: that is, God hath promiſed to reward it with Bleſſings appertaining to this mortal life, and with thoſe which concern the future eternal ſtate.

As for the Bleſſings of this life, although God hath not promiſed to load the godly man with affluence of worldly things, not to put him into a ſplendid and pompous garb, not to diſpenſe to him that which may ſerve for pampering the fleſh, or gratifyinng wanton fancy, not to exempt him from all the inconveniences to which humane nature and this worldly ſtate are ſubject; yet hath he promiſed to furniſh him with what-ever is needfull or convenient for him, in due meaſure and ſeaſon, the which he doth beſt underſtand. There is no good thing which a man naturally deſireth, or reaſonably can wiſh for, which is not in expreſs terms propoſed as a reward, or a reſult of Piety.

In general, it is declared, that Bleſſings are upon the head of the juſt; that, No good thing God will withhold from them that walk uprightly; that, what-ever otherwiſe doth fall out, it aſſuredly ſhall be well with them that fear God; that, Bleſſed is every one that feareth the Lord, that walketh in his ways: -- happy ſhalt thou be, and it ſhall be well with thee; that, There ſhall no evil happen to the juſt; that, All things work together for good to them that love God.

Prov. 10. 6. Deut. 28. 8. 30. 9. Pſal. 84. 11. Eccles. 8. 12. Iſa. 3. 10. Pſ. 128. 1, 2. (Prov. 8. 35.) Prov. 12. 21. Rom. 8. 28.

Particularly, there are promiſed to the Pious man,

A Supply of all wants. The Lord will not ſuffer the ſoul of the righteous to famiſh. The righteous eateth to the ſatiſfying of his ſoul. There is no want to them that fear God. The young Lions do lack, and ſuffer hunger; but they that ſeek the Lord ſhall not want any good thing.

Prov. 10. 3. Prov. 13. 25. Pſ. 34. 9, 10, & 33. 19. & 36. 3, 19.

A Protection in all Dangers. The eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy; to deliver their ſoul from death, and to keep them alive in famine. There ſhall no evil befall thee, neither ſhall any plague come nigh thy dwelling: He ſhall give his Angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways.

Pſal. 33. 18. & 34. 20. & 112. 7. & 37. 28. Pſ. 91. 10, 11

Guidance in all his undertakings and proceedings. The ſteps of a good man are ordered by the Lord —— none of his ſteps ſhall ſlide. —— In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy path.

Pſ. 37, 23, &c. Prov. 3. 6. (Prov. 11. 3, 5. & 16. 3.)

Succeſs and proſperity in his Deſigns. Commit thy way unto the Lord, truſt alſo in him, and he ſhall bring it to paſs. —— Whatſoever he doeth, it ſhall proſper. —— Thou ſhalt decree a thing, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed; and the light ſhall ſhine upon thy ways. The Lord ſhall command a bleſſing upon thee in thy ſtore-houſes, and in all that thou ſetteſt thine hand unto. Thine expectations ſhall not be cut off.

Pſal. 37. 5. Pſal. 1. 3. Job 22. 28. Deut. 28. 8, 12. Prov. 23. 18.

Comfortable enjoying the fruits of his induſtry. —— Thou ſhalt eat the labour of thine hands. ——

Pſal. 128. 2.

Satisfaction of all reaſonable Deſires. The deſire of the righteous ſhall be granted. Delight thy ſelf in the Lord, and he ſhall give thee the deſires of thine heart. He will fulfill the deſire of them that fear him: he will hear their cry, and will ſave them.

Prov. 10, 24. Pſal. 37. 4. 145. 19.

Firm Peace and quiet. The work of righteouſneſs ſhall be peace; and the effect of righteouſneſs, quietneſs and aſſurance for ever. Great peace have they which love thy Law. The fruit of righteouſneſs is ſowed in peace.

Iſa. 32. 17. Pſ. 119. 165. Jam. 3. 18.

Joy and alacrity. Light is ſown for the righteous, and gladneſs for the upright in heart. In the tranſgreſſion of an evil man there is a ſnare: but the righteous doth ſing and rejoyce.

Pſal. 97. 11. Prov. 29. 6.

Pſal. 147. 3. Support and comfort in afflictions. He healeth the broken in heart,
31. 24. and bindeth up their wounds. Be of good courage, and he ſhall ſtrengthen
27. 14. your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord.

34. 19. Deliverance from trouble. Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but
37. 39. the Lord delivereth him out of all. He keepeth all his bones, not one of them is broken.

37. 24. Preſervation and recovery from miſ-haps, or miſcarriages. Though he fall, he ſhall not be utterly caſt down: for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand.

Preferment of all ſorts, to honour and dignity, to wealth and proſperity.
Pſal 37. 34. Wait upon the Lord, and keep his way; and he ſhall exalt thee to Prov. 22. 4. inherit the land. By humility and fear of the Lord are riches and honour.
Pſal. 112. 1,3. Bleſſed is the man that feareth the Lord —— wealth and riches are in his Prov. 28. 10 houſe. The upright ſhall have good things in poſſeſſion. If they obey and (Job 36. 7.) ſerve him, they ſhall ſpend their days in proſperity, and their years in pleaſure.
Job. 36. 11. The tabernacle of the righteous ſhall flouriſh.

Prov. 14. 11. Long life. The fear of the Lord prolongeth days. By me thy days ſhall
10. 27. be multiplyed, and the years of thy life ſhall be encreaſed. Let thine heart
9. 11. keep my commandments: For length of days, and long life, and peace ſhall Prov. 3. 1,2, 16. they add unto thee.

Prov. 10. 7, 25. A Good name enduring after death. The memory of the juſt is bleſſed.

Pſal. 37. 26. Bleſſings entailed on poſterity. His ſeed ſhall be mighty upon earth;
112. 2 the generation of the upright ſhall be bleſſed. The root of the righteous
(Exo. 20. 6.) Prov. 12. 3. ſhall not be moved.

Thus is a liberal diſpenſation even of temporal goods annexed by God's infallible Word unto the practice of Piety. It is indeed more frequently, abundantly and explicitly promiſed unto God's ancient People, Prov. 11. 31. as being a conditional ingredient of the Covenant made with them, exhibited Deut. 28. 1. in that as a recompence of their external performance of Religious & 7. 12. & works preſcribed in their Law. The Goſpel doth not ſo clearly propound
11. 13. it, or ſo much inſiſt upon it, as not principally belonging to the Evangelical Covenant, the which, in reward to the performance of its conditions by us, peculiarly doth offer Bleſſings Spiritual, and relating 2 Cor. 4. 17. to the future ſtate; as alſo ſcarce deſerving to be mentioned in compariſon Rom. 8. 18. to thoſe ſuperior Bleſſings. Yet as the celeſtial Benefits, although not openly tendered in the Jewiſh Law, were yet myſtically couched therein, and cloſely deſigned for the ſpiritual and hearty Practiſers of Religion; ſo is the collation of temporal accommodations to be underſtood to belong to all pious Chriſtians: there is a Codicill (as it were) annexed to the New Teſtament, in which God ſignifieth his intention to furniſh his Children with all that is needfull or convenient for them.
His Providence hath not ceaſed to watch over us, his Bounty doth not fail toward us even in this reſpect; his care will not be wanting to feed us and cloath us comfortably, to protect us from evil, to proſper our good undertakings. Hence doth he command us to care for nothing, 1 Pet. 5. 7. but to caſt our care upon him, to recommend our buſineſs to him, becauſe he Phil. 4. 6. careth for us; he will never forſake us; he will hear our Prayers and Heb. 13. 5. help us. Hence we are enjoyned not to truſt in uncertain riches, but in Matt. 6. 25. 1 Tim. 6. 17. the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy. Hence it is ſaid, 2 Pet. 1. 3. that The divine power hath given us all things pertaining unto life and godlineſs, through the knowledg of him that hath called us to glory and vertue.
Matt. 6. 33 Hence it it is promiſed by our Lord, that If we ſeek firſt the Kingdom of God,

God, all things ſhall be added to us. Hence it is inferred as conſequential to the nature of the evangelical diſpenſation, that we cannot want any good thing; He (ſaith S. Paul) that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things? In fine, hence it is propoſed as notorious, that nothing is permitted to fall out otherwiſe than as conduceth to our good. We know (ſaith S. Paul,) that all things work together for good unto thoſe that love God: Nor will God, in any caſe, ſuffer us to be tempted, by any want or preſſure, beyond what we are able to bear. Thus is piety evidently profitable, as having the promiſes of this Life, or exhibiting all temporal bleſſings deſirable to the Practiſers thereof.

Rom. 8. 32.
Rom. 8. 28.
1 Cor. 10. 13.

But infinitely more profitable it is as having the promiſes of the future life, or as procuring a title to thoſe incomparably more excellent Bleſſings of the other world; thoſe indefectible treaſures; that incorruptible, undefiled, and neverfading inheritance, reſerved in heaven for us; that exceeding weight of glory; thoſe ineffable joys of Paradice, that lightſome Countenance and beatifying Preſence of God; that unconceivably and unexpreſſably joyfull, glorious, perfect and endleſs Bliſs; briefly, all that is compriſed and intimated in thoſe words of the Apoſtle, Eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither have entred into the heart of man the things which god hath prepared for them that love him. Infinitely profitable ſurely muſt that be which procureth thoſe things for us: and in theſe reſpects great reaſon had S. Paul to ſay, that Godlineſs is profitable for all things.

Luke 12. 33.
1 Pet. 1. 4.
2 Cor. 4. 17.
1 Pet. 1. 8.
4. 13.
1 Cor. 2. 9.

But farther to evidence and recommend this point, I might propound certain peculiar advantages ariſing from Piety, which have a very general influence upon our lives, and do afford unto them exceeding benefit: but this I muſt in regard to the time and your patience, at preſent forbear.

SERMON III.

The Profitableneſs of Godlineſs.

1 TIM. IV. 8.

----But Godlineſs is profitable for all things.

IN diſcourſing formerly upon theſe words, I did propound divers general Conſiderations, ſerving to confirm and recommend this Aſſertion of S. Paul. I ſhall now inſiſt upon ſome others more particular, which yet ſeem much conducible to the ſame purpoſe, declaring the vaſt Utility of Religion or Piety.

I. We may conſider, that Religion doth preſcribe the trueſt and beſt Rules of action; thence enlightning our mind, and rectifying our practice in all matters, and upon all occaſions, ſo that what-ever is performed according to it, is done well and wiſely, with a comely grace in regard to others, with a chearfull ſatisfaction in our own mind, with the beſt aſſurance, that things are here capable of, to find happy ſucceſs and beneficial fruit.

Of all things in the world there is nothing more generally profitable than Light: by it we converſe with the world, and have all things ſet before us; by it we truly and eaſily diſcern things in their right magnitude, ſhape and colour; by it we guide our ſteps ſafely in proſecution of what is good, and ſhunning what is noxious; by it our ſpirits are comfortably warmed and cheared, our life conſequently, our health, our vigour and activity are preſerved. The like benefits doth Religion, which is the Light of our Soul, yield to it. Pious men are children of the light; Pious works are works of Light ſhining before men. God's word (or true Religion) is a lamp unto our feet, and a light unto our path; enabling us to perceive things, and judge rightly of them; teaching us to walk ſtreightly and ſurely, without erring or ſtumbling; qualifying us to imbrace what is uſefull, and to avoid hurtfull things; preſerving our ſpiritual life, and diſpoſing us to act well with a vigorous alacrity: without it a man is ſtark blind, and utterly benighted, gropeth in doubt, wandreth in miſtake, trippeth upon all occaſions, and often falleth into miſchief. The path of the juſt (ſaith the Wiſe man) is as the ſhining light ----The way of the wicked is as darkneſs, they know not at what they ſtumble. Righteouſneſs keepeth him that is upright in the way; but wickedneſs overthroweth the ſinner.

Luk. 16. 8.
Eph 5. 8.
1 Theſſ. 5. 5.
Joh. 12. 36.
Matt. 5. 16.
Eph. 5. 11.
Pſ. 119. 105.

Iſ. 59. 10.
Job. 5. 14.
Deut. 28. 29.
Prov. 4. 18, 19
Prov. 13. 6. & 11. 3, 5.

Again, it is a fair ornament of a man, and a grand convenience both to himſelf, and to others with whom he converſeth or dealeth, to act regularly, uniformly and conſiſtently; freeing a man's ſelf from diſtraction and irreſolution in his mind, from change and confuſion in his proceedings; ſecuring others from deluſion and diſappointment in their tranſactions with him. *Even a bad rule conſtantly obſerved is therefore better than none: order and perſeverance in any way ſeemeth more convenient, than roveing and toſſing about in uncertainties. But, ſecluding a regard to the Precepts of Religion, there can hardly be any ſure or ſetled rule, which firmly can engage a man to, or effectually reſtrain a man from any thing.

* Viâ eunti aliquid extremum eſt; error immenſus eſt. Sen. Ep 16.

There is ſcarce in nature any thing ſo wild, ſo untractable, ſo unintelligible as a man who hath no bridle of Conſcience to guide or check him. A prophane man is like a Ship, without Anchor to ſtay him, or Rudder to ſteer him, or Compaſs to guide him; ſo that he is toſt with any wind, and driven with any wave none knoweth whither; whither bodily temper doth ſway him, or paſſion doth hurry him, or intereſt doth pull him, or example leadeth him, or company inveigleth and haleth him, or humour tranſporteth him; whither any ſuch variable and unaccountable cauſes determine him, or divers of them together diſtract him: whence he ſo rambleth and hovereth, that he can ſeldom himſelf tell what in any caſe he ſhould doe, nor can another gueſs it; ſo that you cannot at any time know where to find him, or how to deal with him: you cannot with reaſon ever rely upon him, ſo unſtable he is in all his ways. He is in effect a mere Child, all humour and giddineſs, ſomewhat worſe than a Beaſt, which, following the inſtinct of its nature, is conſtant and regular, and thence tractable; or at leaſt ſo untractable, that no man will be deceived in meddling with him. Nothing therefore can be more unmanly than ſuch a perſon, nothing can be more unpleaſant than to have to doe with him.

Nihil eſt tam occupatum, tam multiforme, tot ac tam variis affectibus conciſum atque laceratum, quàm mala mens. Quint 12. 1.

But a Pious man, being ſteddily governed by Conſcience, and a reguard to certain Principles, doth both underſtand himſelf, and is intelligible to others: he preſently deſcrieth what in any caſe he is to doe, and can render an account of his acting: you may know him clearly, and aſſuredly tell what he will doe, and may therefore fully confide in him.

What therefore Law and Government are to the publick, things neceſſary to preſerve the world in order, peace and ſafety, (that men may know what to doe, and diſtinguiſh what is their own,) that is Piety to each man's private ſtate, and to ordinary converſation: it freeth a man's own life from diſorder and diſtraction; it prompteth men how to behave themſelves towards one another with ſecurity and confidence.

Οἱ ἐπιεικεῖς ἑαυτοῖς ὁμονοοῦσι καὶ ἀλλήλοις, ἐπὶ τῶν αὐτῶν ὄντες, ὡς εἰπεῖν· τῶν τοιούτων μένει γὰρ τὰ βουλήματα, καὶ οὐ μεταῤῥεῖ, ὥσπερ εὔριπος. —Ariſt. Eth. 9. 6.

This it doth by confining our practice within ſetled bounds: but this advantage appeareth greater, conſidering that the Rules which it preſcribeth are the beſt that can be. Such they muſt needs be, as proceeding from infallible Wiſdom and immenſe Goodneſs; being indeed no other than Laws which the All-wiſe and moſt gracious Lord and Maker of the world, out of tender kindneſs to his ſubjects and creatures, with eſpecial reguard to our welfare, hath been pleaſed to enact and declare. What of old he ſaid to the Iſraelites, concerning their Laws, may with greater advantage be applied to thoſe which ſhould regulate our lives; And now, Iſrael, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to ſerve the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and all thy ſoul; To keep the Commandments of the Lord, and his Statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good? (For thy good, that was the deſign of their being commanded, thereto the obſervance of them did tend.) And that commendation which by the Levites in Nehemiah is given to that, doth more clearly and fully agree to the Chriſtian (general and perfect) inſtitution: Thou cameſt down from mount Sinai, and ſpakeſt with them from heaven, and gaveſt them right judgments, and true laws, good ſtatutes and commandments. And, The Law (ſaith the Apoſtle Paul) is holy, the commandment is holy, juſt and good: as ſuch it is recommended to us by its Author, ſo we Chriſtians are by many great Arguments aſſured that it is, and that it is ſuch even our natural reaſon dictateth; ſo (as to the chief inſtances thereof) the moſt wiſe and ſober men always have acknowledged, ſo the general conſent doth avow, and ſo even common experience doth atteſt. For, heartily to love and reverence the Maker of all things, who by every thing apparent before us demonſtrateth himſelf incomprehenſibly powerfull, wiſe and good, to be kind and charitable to our neighbours, to be juſt and faithfull in our dealings, to be ſober and modeſt in our minds, to be meek and gentle in our demeanours, to be ſtaunch and temperate in our enjoyments, and the like principal rules of duty, are ſuch, that the common reaſon of men and continual experience do approve them, as hugely conducible to the publick good of men, and to each man's private welfare. So notoriouſly beneficial they appear, that for the juſtification of them we might appeal even to the judgment and conſcience of thoſe perſons who are moſt concerned to derogate from them. For hardly can any man be ſo ſenſeleſs or ſo lewd, as ſeriouſly to diſapprove or condemn them, as inwardly to blame or ſleight thoſe who truly act according to them. The Will of men ſometimes may be ſo depraved, that diſſolute perſons wantonly and heedleſly may ſcoff at, and ſeem to diſparage goodneſs; that good men by very bad men for doing well may be envied and hated: (their being ſo treated is commonly an argument of the goodneſs of their perſons and of their ways:) but the Underſtanding of men can hardly be ſo corrupted, that Piety, Charity, Juſtice, Temperance, Meekneſs can in good earneſt conſiderately by any man be diſallowed, or that perſons apparently practiſing them can be deſpiſed; but rather, in ſpight of all contrary prejudice and diſaffections, ſuch things and ſuch perſons cannot but in judgment and heart be eſteemed by all men. The luſtre of them by a natural and neceſſary efficacy (like that of Heaven's glorious light) dazzleth the ſight and charmeth the ſpirits of all men living; the beauty of them irreſiſtibly conquereth and commandeth in the apprehenſions of men: the more they are obſerved, the more uſefull and needfull they appear for the good of men; all the fruits which grow from the obſervance of them being to all mens taſte very pleaſant, to all mens experience very wholeſome. Indeed, all the good whereby common life is adorned, is ſweetned, is rendred pleaſant and deſirable, doth ſpring thence; all the miſchiefs which infeſt particular men, and which diſturb the world, palpably do ariſe from the tranſgreſſion or neglect thereof.

Deut. 10. 12, 13.

Neh. 9. 13.

Rom. 7. 12.

If we look on a perſon ſticking to thoſe Rules, we ſhall perceive him to have a chearfull mind and compoſed paſſions, to be at peace within and ſatisfied with himſelf; to live in comely order, in good repute, in fair correſpondence and firm concord with his neighbours. If we mark what preſerveth the body ſound and luſty, what keepeth the mind vigorous and brisk, what ſaveth and improveth the eſtate, what upholdeth the good name, what guardeth and graceth a man's whole life; it is nothing elſe but proceeding in our demeanour and dealings according to the honeſt and wiſe Rules of Piety. If we view a place where theſe commonly in good meaſure are obſerved, we ſhall diſcern, that Peace and Proſperity do flouriſh there; that all things proceed on ſweetly and fairly; that men generally drive on converſation and commerce together contentedly, delightfully, advantageouſly, yielding friendly advice and aid, mutually ſtriving to render one another happy; that few clamours or complaints are heard there, few contentions or ſtirrs do appear, few diſaſters or tragedies do occur; that ſuch a place hath indeed much of the face, much of the ſubſtance of Paradiſe.

But if you mind a perſon who neglecteth them, you will find his mind galled with ſore remorſe, racked with anxious fears and doubts, agitated with ſtorms of paſſion and luſt, living in diſorder and diſgrace, jarring with others, and no leſs diſſatisfied with himſelf. If you obſerve what doth impair the health, doth weaken and fret the mind, doth waſte the eſtate, doth blemiſh the reputation, doth expoſe the whole life to danger and trouble; what is it but thwarting theſe good Rules? If you conſider a place where theſe are much neglected, it will appear like a wilderneſs of ſavage Beaſts, or a ſty of foul Swine, or a hell of curſed Fiends; full of roaring and tearing, of factions and fewds, of diſtractions and confuſions, of pittifull objects, of dolefull moans, of tragical events. Men are there wallowing in filth, wildly revelling, bickering and ſquabbling, defaming, circumventing, diſturbing and vexing one another; as if they affected nothing more than to render one another as miſerable as they can. It is from luſt and luxury, from ambition and avarice, from envy and ſpite, and the like diſpoſitions, which Religion chiefly doth interdict, that all ſuch horrid miſchiefs do ſpring.

In fine, the Precepts of Religion are no other, than ſuch as Phyſicians would preſcribe for the health of our Bodies, as Politicians would avow needfull for the peace of the State, as Epicurean Philoſophers do recommend for the tranquillity of our Mind, and pleaſure of our Lives; ſuch as common reaſon dictateth, and daily trial ſheweth conducible to our welfare in all reſpects: which conſequently, were there no law exacting them of us, we ſhould in wiſdom chuſe to obſerve, and voluntarily impoſe on our ſelves, confeſſing them to be fit matters of law, as moſt advantageous and requiſite to the good (general and particular) of mankind. So that what Plutarch reporteth Solon to have ſaid, that he had ſo ſquared his Laws to the Citizens, that all of them might clearly perceive, that to obſerve them was more for their benefit and intereſt, than to violate them, is far more true concerning the Divine Laws.

Plut. in Sol.

II. We may conſider more particularly, that Piety yieldeth to the practiſer all kind of interiour Content, Peace and Joy; freeth him from all kinds of diſſatisfaction, regret and diſquiet; which is an ineſtimable great advantage: for certainly the Happineſs and Miſery of men are wholly or chiefly ſeated and founded in the Mind. If that is in a good ſtate of health, reſt and chearfulneſs, what-ever the perſon's outward condition or circumſtances be, he cannot be wretched: if that be diſtempered or diſturbed, he cannot be happy. For what if a man ſeem very poor; if he be abundantly ſatisfied in his own poſſeſſions and enjoyments? What if he taſteth not the pleaſures of ſenſe; if he enjoyeth purer and ſweeter delights of mind? What if tempeſts of fortune ſurround him; if his mind be calm and ſerene? What if he have few or no friends; if he yet be throughly in peace and amity with himſelf, and can delightfully converſe with his own thoughts? What if men ſlight, cenſure, or revile him; if he doth value his own ſtate, doth approve his own actions, doth acquit himſelf of blame in his own conſcience? Such external contingencies can ſurely no more prejudice a man's real Happineſs, than winds bluſtring abroad can harm or trouble him that abideth in a good room within doors, than ſtorms and fluctuations at ſea can moleſt him who ſtandeth firm upon the ſhore. On the other hand, the greateſt affluence of ſeeming goods will avail nothing, if real content of mind be wanting. For what will the higheſt eminence of outward ſtate import to him that is dejected in his own conceit? What if the world court and bleſs him, or if all people do admire and applaud him; if he be diſpleaſed with, if he condemneth, if he deſpiſeth himſelf? What if the weather look fair and bright without, if ſtorms rage in his breaſt, if black clouds do overcaſt his Soul? What if he do abound with friends, and enjoy peace abroad: if he find diſtraction at home, and is at cruel variance with himſelf? How can a man enjoy any ſatisfaction, or reliſh any pleaſure, while ſore remorſe doth ſting him, or ſolicitous doubts and fears do rack him?

Prov. 18. 4.

Chryſoſt. in Rom. 1 Or. 1. Εὐθυμίαν γὰρ καὶ χαρὰν οὐκ ἀρχῆς μέγεθος, οὐ χρημάτων πλῆθος, οὐ δυναστείας ὄγκος, οὐκ ἰσχὺς σώματος, οὐ πολυτέλεια τραπέζης, οὐχ ἱματίων κόσμος, οὐκ ἄλλο τι τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων ποιεῖν εἴωθεν, ἀλλ' ἢ κατόρθωμα μόνον πνευματικὸν, καὶ συνειδὸς ἀγαθόν.

Now that from the practice of Religion, and from it alone, ſuch inward content and pleaſure do ſpring; that it only miniſtreth reaſon of content, and diſpoſeth the mind to enjoy it; that it extirpateth the grounds and roots of diſcontent: that it is the onely mother of true, ſober alacrity and tranquillity of mind, will, upon conſidering things, be manifeſt.

There is no other thing here in this world that can yield any ſolid or Prov. 27. 24. ſtable content to our mind. For all preſent enjoyments are tranſient and evanid; and of any future thing, in this kingdom of change and con- Prov. 27. 20. tingency, there can be no aſſurance. There is nothing below large enough to fill our vaſt capacities, or to ſatiate our boundleſs deſires, or to appeaſe our ſqueamiſh delicacy. There is nothing whoſe ſweetneſs we do not preſently exhauſt and ſuck dry; whereof thence we do not ſoon grow weary, quite loathing, or faintly liking it. There is not any thing which is not ſlippery and fleeting; ſo that we can for a long time hope to poſſeſs it, or for any time can enjoy it, without reſtleſs care in keeping it, and anxious fear of loſing it. Nothing there is, in the purſuance, the cuſtody, the defence and maintenance whereof we are not liable to diſappointments and croſſes. Nothing conſequently there is productive of any ſound content to the faſtidious, impatient, greedy and reſtleſs heart of man. The greateſt confluence of preſent, corporeal, ſecular things (of all the health, the riches, the dignity, the power, the friendſhips and dependences, the wit, the learning and wiſdom, the reputation and renown in this world) will not afford much of it: which yet is but an imaginary ſuppoſition; for in effect hardly do all ſuch accommodations of life concurre in any ſtate. There is ever Eccles 10. 2. ſome dead fly in our box, which marreth our ointment; ſome adherent inconvenience, which ſoureth the guſt of our enjoyments: there is always ſome good thing abſent, which we do want or long for; ſome ill thing preſent, or in proſpect, which we abhorre, would avoid, do fear may come. If therefore we would find content, we muſt not ſeek it here; we muſt want it, or have it from another world: it muſt come hither from Heaven, and thence onely Piety can fetch it down. This, inſtead of theſe unſatisfying, uncertain and unſtable things, ſupplieth Θησαυρὸν ἀνέκλειπτον, κληρονομίαν ἄφθαρτον, βασιλείαν ἀσάλευτον. us with goods adequate to our moſt outſtretched wiſhes, infallibly ſure, inceſſantly durable; an indefectible treaſure, an incorruptible inheritance, an unſhakeable Kingdom, a perfect and endleſs joy, capable to repleniſh the vaſteſt heart: which he that hath a good title to, or a confident hope of, how can he be otherwiſe than extreamly pleaſed, than fully content? It aſſureth the favour and friendſhip of God, of him that is abſolute Lord and diſpoſer of all things: the which he that hath, and confideth in, what can he want or wiſh more? what can he fear? what can annoy or diſmay him? what can hap to him worthy to be deemed evil or ſad? What is Poverty to him, for whom God is concerned to provide? What is Diſgrace to him, that hath the regard and approbation of God? What is danger to him, whom God continually protecteth? What can any Diſtreſs work on him, whom God doth comfort, and will relieve? What is any thing to him, who is ſenſible that all things are purpoſely diſpoſed to him by that Wiſdom which perfectly knoweth what is beſt, by that Goodneſs which entirely loveth him? In fine, he that is conſcious to himſelf of being well-affected in mind, and acting the beſt way, who is ſatisfied in the ſtate of his Soul, ſecure from God's diſpleaſure, and hopefull of his favour, what can make any grievous impreſſion on him? What other affections than ſuch as are moſt gratefull and pleaſant can lodge in his Soul? Joy and Peace have natural ſeeds in ſuch a mind, and neceſſarily muſt ſpring up there: (in proportion, I mean, and according to the degrees of Piety reſident therein.)

The Epicureans did conceit and boaſt, that having by their Atheiſtical explications of natural effects, and common events here, diſcarded the belief and dread of Religion, they had laid a ſtrong foundation for tranquility of mind, had driven away all the cauſes of grief and fear, ſo that nothing then remained troubleſome or terrible unto us; and conſequently, what, ſaid they could forbid, but that we ſhould be entirely contented, glad and happy? —— Nos exæquat victoria cœlo; No God then ſurely could be more happy than we. But their attempt in many reſpects was vain and lame. They preſumed of a victory which it is impoſſible to obtain: and ſuppoſing they had got it, their triumph would not have been ſo glorious, their ſucceſs would not have been ſo great, as they pretended. For ſeeing no Epicurean Diſcourſe can baffle the potent arguments which perſuade Religion; (thoſe arguments which the viſible conſtitution of Nature, the current Tradition of all Ages, the general Conſent of men, the pregnant atteſtations of Hiſtory and Experience concerning ſupernatural and miraculous events do afford;) ſince the Being and Providence of God have proofs ſo clear and valid, that no ſubtlety of man can ſo far evade them, as not to be ſhaken with them, as wholly to be freed from doubt and ſuſpicion of their truth; ſince there can be no means of evincing the negative part in thoſe queſtions to be true or probable; it is impoſſible that any conſidering man, in this cauſe againſt Religion, ſhould ſuppoſe himſelf to have acquired an abſolute and ſecure victory: or that he ſhould reap ſubſtantial fruit of comfort thence. It cannot be, that any man ſhould enjoy any perfect quiet, without acting ſo as to get ſome good hope of avoiding thoſe dreadfull miſchiefs, which Religion threatneth to the tranſgreſſours of its Precepts. Were there indeed but reaſon enough to ſtir, if not to ſtagger, an Infidel; were it ſomewhat dubious whether, yea, were it great odds that there are not reſerved any puniſhments for impiety, as indeed there is, if not the perfecteſt aſſurance imaginable, yet vaſt advantage on the contrary ſide; were there but any ſmall reaſon for a Judgment to come, as there are apparently very many and great ones; had moſt men conſpired in denying Providence, as ever generally they have conſented in avowing it; were there a pretence of miracles for eſtabliſhing the Mortality and Impunity of Souls, as there have been numberleſs, ſtrongly teſtified by good witneſſes and great events, to confirm the oppoſite doctrines; did moſt wiſe and ſober men judge in favour of Irreligion, as commonly they ever did and ſtill do otherwiſe: yet wiſdom would require that men ſhould chooſe to be pious, ſince otherwiſe no man can be throughly ſecure. It is a wildneſs, not to dread the leaſt poſſibility of incurring ſuch horrible miſchiefs: any hazzard of ſuch importance cannot but ſtartle a man in his wits. To be in the leaſt obnoxious to eternal Torments, if men would think upon it as men, (that is, as rational and provident creatures,) could not but diſturb them. And indeed ſo it is in experience; for what-ever they ſay or ſeem, all Atheiſts and profane men are inwardly ſuſpicious and fearfull; they care not to die, and would gladly ſcape the trial of what ſhall follow death. But let us grant or imagine the Epicurean ſucceſsfull as he could wiſh in this enterprize of ſubduing Religion: yet except therewith he can alſo trample down Reaſon, new mould humane nature, ſubjugate all natural appetites and paſſions, alter the ſtate of things here, and transform the world, he will yet in greateſt part fail of his conceited advantages; very ſhort he will fall of triumphing in a contented and quiet mind. That which accrueth thence will at moſt be no more than ſome negative content, or a partial indolency, ariſing from his being reſcued from ſome particular cares and fears; which exceedeth not the tranquility of a beaſt, or the ſtupidity of one that is out of his ſenſes: that is all he can claim, which yet is more than he can ever compaſs. For he cannot be as a Beaſt, or a mere Sot, if he would: Reaſon, reflecting on preſent evils, and boding others future, will afflict him; his own unſatiable deſires, unavoidable fears and untameable paſſions will diſquiet him. Were the other world quite out of his faith or his thought, yet this world would yield trouble ſufficient to render him void of any ſteddy reſt, or ſolid joy. All men ever have, and ever will complain, that the burthens, croſſes, ſatieties of this life, do much ſurpaſs the conveniences and comforts of it. So that, were no other to be expected or feared, this of it ſelf would become grievous and nauſeous; we ſhould ſoon have enough or too much of it, without a ſupport and ſupply from other-where. In the largeſt affluence of things, in the deepeſt calm of our ſtate, we are apt to nauſeate, and are weary even of our proſperity it ſelf; the which indeed commonly hath ingredients not only ſomewhat unſavoury, but very bitter and loathſome. We may adde, that had thoſe profane attempters quite baniſhed Religion, they with it muſt have driven away all the benefits and comforts of it: which, even ſuppoſing them but imaginary, are yet the greateſt which common life doth need, or can deſire: with it they would ſend packing Juſtice, Fidelity, Charity, Sobriety, and all ſolid Vertue, things which cannot firmly ſubſiſt without Conſcience: which being gone, humane life would be the moſt diſorderly, moſt unſafe, moſt wretched and contemptible thing that can be; nothing but inſipid and flaſhy ſenſualities would be left behind to comfort a man with; and thoſe hardly any man (by reaſon of competitions and contentions for them, no-wiſe reſtrainable) could enjoy quietly, or ſafely. It is therefore Piety alone, which, by raiſing hopes of bleſſings and joys incomparably ſuperior to any here, that cannot be taken from us, can lay any ground of true content, of ſubſtantial and poſitive content; ſuch as conſiſteth not onely in removing the objects and cauſes of vexatious paſſions, but in employing the moſt pleaſant affections (love, hope, joy,) with a delightfull complacence upon their proper and moſt noble objects. The Kingdom of God (and that onely, no other Kingdom hath that privilege) conſiſteth in righteouſneſs (firſt, then in) peace and ſpiritual joy. No Philoſopher, with truth and reaſon, can make that overture to us which our Lord doth; Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and ye ſhall find reſt to your ſouls. Out of Religion there can be no Aphoriſm pretended like to that of the Prophet, Thou ſhalt keep him in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtayed on thee.

Non tempeſtate vexor, ſed nauſeâ Senec. de Tranq. an 1.

Rom. 14 17.

Matt. 11. 28.

Iſa 26. 3.

If indeed we diſtinctly ſurvey all the grounds and ſources of Content, it will appear that Religion onely can afford it.

Doth it reſult from a well governing and ordering our Paſſions? Then it is plain, that onely a pious man is capable thereof; for Piety onely can effect that: it alone, with the powerfull aid of Divine Grace, doth guide our paſſions by exact rules, doth ſet them upon worthy objects, doth temper and tune them in juſt harmony, doth ſeaſonably curb and check them, doth rightly correct and reform them.

Mala mens --- cùm inſidiatur, ſpe, curis, labore diſtingitur & jam cùm ſceleris compos fuerit, ſolicitudine, pœnitentia, pœnarum omnium expectatione torquetur. Quint. 12. 1.

This no bare reaſon (which naturally is ſo dimm and ſo feeble in man) can atchieve: much leſs can Unreaſonableneſs do it, which is ever prevalent in irreligious perſons. Their Paſſions do ever run wildly and at randome, in no good pace, within no good compaſs, toward the meaneſt and baſeſt objects; whence they can have no reſt or quiet in their minds. As they are conſtantly offending, ſo will they ever be puniſhing themſelves, with inteſtine broils and conflicts, with diſſatisfactions and regrets. Hence, There is no peace to the wicked. He is like the troubled ſea, which cannot reſt. God (as S. Auſtine ſpeaketh) hath ſaid it, and ſo it is, Every inordinate mind is a puniſhment to it ſelf.

Nulla major pœna nequitiæ eſt, quàm quòd ſibi ac ſuis diſplicet. Sen. Ep. 42.
Τιμωρεία πάσης ἀδικίας ἀκόλουθος. Plat. de Leg. 5.
Iſa. 48. 22. 57. 20.
Deus juſſit, & ità eſt, Sibi pœna eſt omnis inordinatus animus. Aug. Conf.

Doth Content ſpring from a hearty approbation of, or a complacence in a man's own actions; from reflection that he conſtantly doth act according to reaſon and wiſdom, to juſtice and duty? Then can the pious man alone pretend to it, who knoweth that he walketh inoffenſively toward God and man; that he conſulteth his own beſt intereſt and welfare; that aſſuredly no bad conſequence can attend his unblameable behaviour; that moſt wiſe men have declared their approbation of his proceedings; that if he prove in his chief deſign miſtaken, yet no miſchief can thence befall him; yea, that he is not thereby quite diſappointed, ſeeing even much preſent ſatisfaction and convenience do ariſe up to him from his practice.

Niſi ſapienti ſua non placent: omnis ſtultitia laborat faſtidio ſui. Sen. Ep. 9.

Doth content grow from a ſound and healthfull conſtitution of Soul? It is the pious man alone that hath that, whoſe mind is clear from diſtempers of vice and paſſion. The impious man is infirm, out of order, full of diſeaſe and pain, according to the Prophet's deſcription of him; —— The whole head is ſick, and the whole heart faint: from the ſole of the foot even unto the head there is no ſoundneſs in it, but wounds, and bruiſes, and putrefying ſores. Iſa. 1. 5, 6.

Doth Content ariſe ſpecially from good ſucceſs in our attempts, or from proſperous events befalling us? Then it is the pious man who is moſt capable thereof: for he only is ſecure, that what ſeemeth good and proſperous is really ſuch to him, as meant for his good by the Divine Goodneſs, as tending thereto by the guidance of infallible Wiſdom. As he only hath ground to hope for ſucceſs, becauſe he confideth in God: becauſe he dutifully ſeeketh God's help, becauſe God is favourably diſpoſed toward him, becauſe God ordereth his ſteps, becauſe God is by promiſe engaged to bleſs him, becauſe he is conſcious of intentions to render God thanks and praiſe for it, to employ his ſucceſs to God's honour and ſervice: ſo he onely can be ſatisfied with the appearance of ſucceſs, being able with aſſurance to ſay after S. Paul, We know that to thoſe who love God all things co-operate for good. Rom. 8. 28.

Is ſecurity from danger, from trouble, from want, from all evil, a ſource or matter of Content? It certainly doth attend the pious man; God being his eſpecial Protector, his Comforter, his Purveyour. There ſhall no evil befall the juſt: There ſhall no plague come near his dwelling. God keepeth all his bones, not one of them is broken. He delivereth the righteous out of their troubles. The deſire of the righteous ſhall be granted. There is no want to them that fear God. So do the Holy Oracles aſſure us.

Prov. 12 21.
Pſal. 91. 10.
34. 20, 17.
Prov. 10. 24.
Pſal. 34. 9.

Doth contentedneſs ſpring from ſufficiency, real or apprehended? This appertaineth peculiarly to the pious man: for, having God, the Maſter of all, for his portion, he hath the richeſt eſtate that can be; he hath all that he can deſire, he cannot but take himſelf to have enough. Hence Godlineſs with contentedneſs (μετ᾽ αὐταρκείας, with ſufficiency) is (as

1 Tim. 6. 6.

(as S. Paul ſaith) μέγας πορισμὸς, the great way of gaining. He ſaith it not, as ſuppoſing Godlineſs and Contentedneſs to be ſeparable; but rather, as implying Godlineſs therefore to be moſt gainfull, becauſe Sufficiency and Contentedneſs do ever attend it. In fine, if that ſaying of Seneca be true, that, If to any man the things he poſſeſſeth do not ſeem moſt ample, although he be Maſter of the whole World, he is yet miſerable; then aſſuredly the pious man onely can be happy; for to him alone his poſſeſſions can ſeem the largeſt and beſt, ſuch as there can be no poſſible acceſſion to, or amendment of. For nothing can be greater or better than God, in whom he hath a ſtedſaſt propriety, whoſe infinite power and wiſdom are engaged to doe him the utmoſt good that he is capable of. And farther, Si cui ſua non videntur ampliſſima, licèt totius Mundi Dominus ſit, tamen miſer eſt. Sen. Ep. 9.

III. Seeing we have mentioned Happineſs, or the Summum bonum, the utmoſt ſcope of humane deſire, we do adde, that Piety doth ſurely confer it. Happineſs, whatever it be, hath certainly an eſſential coherence with Piety. Theſe are reciprocal Propoſitions, both of them infallibly true, He that is pious is happy; and, He that is happpy is pious. No man doth undertake or proſecute any thing, which he doth not apprehend in ſome order or degree conducing to that which all men under a confuſed notion reguard and tend to, which they call Happineſs, the higheſt Good, the chiefeſt deſirable thing. But in their judgments about this thing, or the means of attaining it, as men diſſent much: ſo of neceſſity moſt of them muſt be miſtaken. Moſt, indeed, do aim and ſhoot at a mere ſhadow of profit, or at that which is very little conſiderable, and in compariſon nothing at all; which little conduceth to the perfection of their nature, or the ſatisfaction of their deſire. If they miſs the mark, they are diſappointed; if they hit it, they are no leſs, and in effect hit nothing. But whatever this grand matter is, in what-ever it conſiſteth, however it be procured; be it the poſſeſſion and fruition of ſome ſpecial choice goods, or an agreegation an affluence of all goods; Piety ſurely is the main ingredient, and principal cauſe thereof. All other goods without it are inſignificant and unuſefull thereto; and it cannot be wanting, where Piety is. Be a man never ſo rich, ſo powerfull, ſo learned and knowing, ſo proſperous in his affairs, ſo honourable in the opinions and affections of men: yet no-wiſe happy can he be, if he is not pious; being he wanteth the beſt goods, and is ſubject to the worſt evils; being he wanteth the love and favour of God, he wanteth peace and ſatisfaction of Conſcience, he wanteth a right enjoyment of preſent things, he wanteth ſecurity concerning his final welfare. Be he never ſo poor, ſo low in the eyes of men, ſo forlorn and deſtitute of worldly conveniencies; yet if he be pious, he cannot be wretched: for he hath an intereſt in goods incomparably moſt precious, and is ſafe from all conſiderable evils; he hath a free reſort to the inexhauſtible fountain of all Happineſs, he hath a right to immenſe and endleſs Felicity, the which eminently containeth all the goods we are capable of; he is poſſeſſed thereof in hope, and certain reverſion, there is but a moment to paſs before his complete fruition of it. The want of all other petty things no more can maim the integrity of his felicity, than cutting the hair, or pairing the nails, do mutilate a man: all other things are but ſuperfluities or excreſences in regard to the conſtitution of Happineſs. What-ever happeneth, that will aſſuredly be true, which is ſo much inculcated in H. Scripture, Bleſſed is every one that feareth the Lord, that walketh in his ways; Happy ſhall he

Pſ 128. 1, 2.
112 1.

he be, and it ſhall be well with him. Piety is indeed fraught with Beatitudes, every part thereof yieldeth peculiar Bleſſedneſs. To the love of God, to charity toward our neighbour, to purity of heart, to meekneſs, to humility, to patience, to mercifulneſs, to peaceableneſs Beatitude is aſcribed by our Lord, (the great Judge and Diſpenſer of it.) Each religious performance hath happy fruits growing from it, and bliſsfull rewards aſſigned thereto. All pious diſpoſitions are fountains of pleaſant ſtreams, which by their confluence do make up a full Sea of Felicity. Matt. 5.

IV. It is a peculiar advantage of Piety, that it furniſheth employment fit for us, worthy of us, hugely gratefull, and highly beneficial to us. Man is a very buſie and active creature, which cannot live and doe nothing, whoſe thoughts are in reſtleſs motion, whoſe deſires are ever ſtretching at ſomewhat, who perpetually will be working either good or evil to himſelf: wherefore greatly profitable muſt that thing be, which determineth him to act well, to ſpend his care and pain on that which is truly advantageous to him; and that is Religion onely. It alone faſtneth our thoughts, affections and endeavours, upon occupations worthy the dignity of our nature, ſuting the excellency of our natural capacities and endowments, tending to the perfection and advancement of our Reaſon, to the enriching and ennobling of our Souls. Secluding that, we have nothing in the world to ſtudy, to affect, to purſue, not very mean and below us, not very baſe and misbecoming us, as men of reaſon and judgment. What have we to doe but to eat and drink, like horſes or like ſwine; but to ſport and play, like children or apes; but to bicker and ſcuffle about trifles and impertinences, like idiots? what, but ſcrape or ſcramble for uſeleſs pelf; to hunt after empty ſhews and ſhadows of honour, or the vain fancies and dreams of men? what, but to allow or bask in ſordid pleaſures, the which ſoon degenerate into remorſe and bitterneſs? To which ſort of employments were a man confined, what a pittifull thing would he be, and how inconſiderable were his life? Were a man deſigned onely, like a flie, to buzz about here for a time, ſucking in the air, and licking the dew, then ſoon to vaniſh back into nothing, or to be transformed into worms; how ſorry and deſpicable a thing were he? And ſuch without Religion we ſhould be. But it ſupplieth us with buſineſs of a moſt worthy nature, and lofty importance; it ſetteth us upon doing things great and noble as can be; it engageth us to free our minds from all fond conceits, and cleanſe our hearts from all corrupt affections; to curb our brutiſh appetites, to tame our wild paſſions, to correct our perverſe inclinations, to conform the diſpoſitions of our Soul and the actions of our life to the eternal laws of righteouſneſs and goodneſs: it putteth us upon the imitation of God, and aiming at the reſemblance of his perfections; upon obtaining a friendſhip, and maintaining a correſpondence with the High and Holy one; upon fitting our minds for converſation and ſociety with the wiſeſt and pureſt Spirits above; upon providing for an immortal ſtate; upon the acquiſt of joy and glory everlaſting. It employeth us in the divineſt actions, of promoting Vertue, of performing beneficence, of ſerving the publick, and doing good to all: the being exerciſed in which things doth indeed render a man highly conſiderable, and his life excellently valuable.

'Tis an employment moſt proper to us as reaſonable men. For what more proper entertainments can our mind have, than to be purifying and beautifying it ſelf, to be keeping it ſelf and its ſubordinate faculties in order, to be attending upon the management of thoughts, of paſſions, of words, of actions depending upon its governance?

'Tis an employment moſt beneficial to us: in purſuing which we greatly better our ſelves, and improve our condition; we benefit and oblige others; we procure ſound reputation and ſteddy friendſhips; we decline many irkſome miſchiefs and annoyances; we do not (like thoſe in the Prophet) ſpend our labour for that which ſatisfieth not, nor ſpend our money for that which is not bread: for both temporal proſperity and eternal felicity are the wages of the labour which we take herein.

Iſa. 55. 2.

Tis an employment moſt conſtant, never allowing ſloth or liſtleſneſs to creep in, inceſſantly buſying all our faculties with earneſt contention; according to that profeſſion of S. Paul, declaring the nature thereof, Herein always do I exerciſe my ſelf, to have a conſcience void of offence toward God and toward man. Whence it is called a Fight, and a Race, implying the continual earneſtneſs of attention and activity which is to be ſpent thereon.

Acts 4 16.

It is withall a ſweet and gratefull buſineſs: for it is a pious man's character, that he delighteth greatly in God's commandments; that the commandments are not grievous to him; that it is his meat and drink to doe God's will; that God's words (or precepts) are ſweeter than hony to his taſte; that the ways of religious wiſedom are ways of pleaſantneſs, and all her paths are peace. Whereas all other employments are weariſome, and ſoon become loathſome: this, the farther we proceed in it, the more pleaſant and ſatisfactory it groweth. There is perpetual matter of victory over bad inclinations peſtering us within, and ſtrong temptations aſſailing us without: which to combat hath much delight; to maſter, breedeth unexpreſſible content. The ſenſe alſo of God's love, the influences of his grace and comfort communicated in the performances of devotion and all duty, the ſatisfaction of good Conſcience, the aſſured hope of reward, the foretaſts of future bliſs, do ſeaſon and ſweeten all the labours taken, and all the difficulties undergone therein.

Pſal. 112 1.
1 Joh. 5. 3.
Joh. 4. 34.
Pſ. 119. 103.
Prov. 3. 17.
Non poteſt cuiquam ſemper idem placere, niſi rectum.
Sen. 20.
Dedit hoc providentia hominibus munus, ut honeſta magis juvarent.
Quint. 1. 12.

In fine, the bare light of Nature hath diſcerned, that were it not for ſuch matters as theſe to ſpend a man's care and pains upon, this would be a lementable world to live in. There was, for inſtance, an Emperour great and mighty as ever did wield ſceptre upon earth, whoſe excellent Vertue, coupled with wiſedome, (inferiour, perhaps, to none that any man ever without ſpecial inſpiration hath been endowed with) did qualifie him with moſt advantage to examine, and rightly to judge of things here; who, notwithſtanding all the conveniences which his Royal eſtate and well-ſetled proſperity might afford, (the which ſurely he had fully taſted and tried,) did yet thus expreſs his thoughts; Τί μοι ζῆν ἐν κόσμῳ κενῷ θεῶν, ἢ προνοίας κενῷ; What doth it concern me to live in a world void of God, or void of Providence? To govern the greateſt Empire that ever was, in the deepeſt calm; to enjoy the largeſt affluences of wealth, of ſplendour, of reſpect, of pleaſure; to be loved, to be dreaded, to be ſerved, to be adored by ſo many nations; to have the whole civil World obſequious to his will and nod; all theſe things ſeemed vain and idle, not worthy of a man's regard, affection, or choice, in caſe there were no God to worſhip, no Providence to obſerve, no Piety to be exerciſed. So little worth the while common ſenſe hath adjudged it to live without Religion.

M. Ant. II. 11. & VI. 10.

V. It is a conſiderable benefit of Piety, that it affordeth the beſt Friendſhips and ſweeteſt Society. Man is framed for Society, and cannot not live well without it: many of his faculties would be uſeleſs, many of his appetites would reſt unſatisfied in ſolitude. To have a friend wiſe and able, honeſt and good, unto whom upon all occaſions we may have recourſe for advice, for aſſiſtence, for conſolation, is a great convenience of life: and this benefit we owe to Religion, which ſupplieth us with various Friendſhips of the beſt kind, moſt beneficial and moſt ſweet unto us.

Nullius boni ſine ſocio jucunda poſſeſſio eſt. Sen. Ep. 6.

Ut aliarum rerum nobis innata dulcedo eſt, ſic amicitiæ. Sen. Ep. 9.

It maketh God our Friend, a Friend infinitely better than all friends, moſt affectionate and kind, moſt faithfull and ſure, moſt able, moſt willing, and ever moſt ready to perform all friendly offices, to yield advice in all our doubts, ſuccour in all our needs, comfort in all our troubles, ſatisfaction to all our deſires. Unto him it miniſtreth a free addreſs upon all occaſions; with him it alloweth us continually a moſt ſweet and pleaſant intercourſe. The pious man hath always the All-wiſe God to counſel him, to guide his actions and order his ſteps; he hath the Almighty to protect, ſupport and relieve him; he hath the immenſe Goodneſs to commiſerate and comfort him; unto him he is not onely encouraged, but obliged to reſort in need: upon him he may, he ought to diſcharge all his cares and burthens.

Prov. 12. 2.
Pſal. 34. 15. & 33. 18 & 145 19. & 37. 28.
Job 36. 7.

It conſequently doth engage all creatures in the world to be our friends, or inſtruments of good to us, according to their ſeveral capacities, by the direction and diſpoſal of God. All the ſervants of our great Friend will, in compliance to him, be ſerviceable to us, Thou ſhalt be in league with the ſtones of the field, and the beaſts of the field ſhall be at peace with thee: So Job's friend promiſeth him upon condition of Piety. And God himſelf confirmeth that promiſe, In that day (ſaith he in the Prophet) will I make a covenant for them with the beaſts of the field, and with the fouls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground. And again, When thou paſſeſt through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they ſhall not overflow thee: when thou walkeſt through the fire, thou ſhalt not be burnt; neither ſhall the flame kindle upon thee. And, The ſun ſhall not ſmite thee by day, nor the moon by night. Thou ſhalt tread upon the lion and adder, the young lion and the dragon ſhalt thou trample under foot. They ſhall take up ſcorpions; and if they drink any deadly thing, it ſhall not hurt them: (ſo our Lord promiſed to his Diſciples.) Not onely the Heavens ſhall diſpenſe their kindly influences, and the Earth yield their plentifull ſtores, and all the Elements diſcharge their natural and ordinary good offices; nor onely the tame and ſociable creatures ſhall upon this condition faithfully ſerve us; but even the moſt wild, moſt fierce, moſt ravenous, moſt venomous creatures ſhall, if there be need, prove friendly and helpfull, or at leaſt harmleſs to us: as were the Ravens to Elias, the Lions to Daniel, the Viper to S. Paul, the Fire to the Three Children.

Job 5. 23.
Hoſ. 2. 18.
Iſa. 43. 2.
Pſal. 121. 6.
Pſal. 91. 13.
Mark 16. 18.
Deut. 28. 12.
1 King. 17. 6.

But eſpecially Piety doth procure the friendſhip of the good Angels, that puiſſant hoaſt of glorious and happy Spirits: they all do tenderly love the pious perſon; they are ever ready to ſerve and doe him good, to protect him from danger, to aid him in his undertakings, to reſcue him from miſchiefs. What an honour, what a bleſſing is this, to have ſuch an innumerable company of noble Friends (the Courtiers and Favourites of Heaven) deeply concerned and conſtantly vigilant for our welfare?

Pſal. 34. 7.
91. 11.
Heb. 1. 14.

It alſo engageth the bleſſed Saints in glory, the Spirits of men perfected, the Church of the firſt-born, to bear deareſt affection to us, to further our proſperity with their good wiſhes and earneſt prayers, mightily prevalent with God.

It rendreth all ſorts of men our friends. To goodmen it uniteth us in holy communion; the communion of brotherly charity and hearty good will, attended with all the good offices they are able to perform: to other men it reconcileth and endeareth us; for that innocent and inoffenſive, courteous and benign, charitable and beneficent demeanour, (ſuch as Piety doth require and produce) are apt to conciliate reſpect and affection from the worſt men. For, Vincit malos pertinax bonitas; men hardly can perſiſt enemies to him whom they perceive to be their friend: and ſuch the pious man in diſpoſition of mind, and in effect when occaſion ſerveth, is toward all men; being ſenſible of his obligation to love all men, and, as he hath opportunity, to do good to all men. It aſſureth, and more ſtrictly endeareth our friends to us. For, as it maketh us hearty, faithfull, conſtant friends to others; ſo it reciprocally tieth others to us in the like ſincerity and faſtneſs of good will.

Sen. de Benef. 7. 21.

Qui ſibi amicus eſt, ſcito hunc amicum omnibus eſſe. Sen. Ep. 6.

Gal. 6. 1.

Οἱ ἀγαθοὶ ἡδεῖς ἀλλήλοις. Ariſt. Eth. 8. 4.

It reconcileth enemies. For, when a man's ways do pleaſe the Lord, he maketh his enemies to be at peace with him. It hath a natural efficacy to that purpoſe, and Divine bleſſing promoteth it.

Prov. 16. 7.

By it all converſation becometh tolerable, gratefull and uſefull. For a pious man is not eaſily diſturbed with any croſneſs or perverſeneſs, any infirmity or impertinency of thoſe he converſeth with: he can bear the weakneſſes and the failings of his company; he can by wholeſome reflections upon all occurrences advantage and pleaſe himſelf.

Συνδιάγειν τε ὁ τοιοῦτος ἑαυτῷ βούλεται, ἡδέως γὰρ αὐτὸ ποιεῖ.—(Ariſt. Eth. 9. 4.) τῶν τε γὰρ πεπραγμένων ἐπιτερπεῖς αἱ μνῆμαι, καὶ τῶν μελλόντων ἐλπίδες ἀγαθαί.

In fine, Piety rendreth a man a true friend and a good companion to himſelf; ſatisfied in himſelf, able to converſe freely and pleaſantly with his own thoughts. It is for the want of pious inclinations and diſpoſitions, that ſolitude (a thing which ſometimes cannot be avoided, which often ſhould be embraced) is to moſt men ſo irkſome and tedious; that men do carefully ſhun themſelves, and fly from their own thoughts; that they decline all converſe with their own Souls, and hardly dare look upon their own hearts and Conſciences: whence they become aliens from home, wholly unacquainted with themſelves, moſt ignorant of their own neareſt concernments, no faithfull friends or pleaſant companions to themſelves: ſo for refuge and eaſe they unſeaſonably run into idle or lewd converſation, where they diſorder and defile themſelves. But the pious man is (like Scipio) never leſs alone, than when alone: his ſolitude and retirement is not onely tolerable, but commonly the moſt gratefull and fruitfull part of his life: he can ever with much pleaſure, and more advantage, converſe with himſelf; digeſting and marſhalling his thoughts, his affections, his purpoſes into good order; ſearching and diſcuſſing his heart, reflecting on his paſt ways, enforcing his former good reſolutions, and framing new ones; enquiring after edifying truths; ſtretching his meditations toward the beſt and ſublimeſt objects, raiſing his hopes and warming his affections toward ſpiritual and heavenly things; asking himſelf pertinent queſtions, and reſolving incident doubts concerning his practice; in fine, converſing with his beſt Friend in devotion; with admiration and love contemplating the Divine Quæris quid profecerim? amicus eſſe mihi cæpi. Sen. Ep. 6.

Nemo eſt, cui non ſatius ſit cum quolibet eſſe, quàm ſecum. Sen Ep. 25.

Ἔνιοι τὸν ἴδιον βίον, ὡς ἀτερπέστατον θέαμα, προσιδεῖν οὐχ ὑπομένουσιν, &c. Plut. περὶ Πολυπρ. p. 916.

Ζητοῦσιν οἱ μοχθηροὶ μεθ' ὧν συνημερεύθουσιν, ἑαυτοὺς δὲ φεύγουσιν — Ariſt. 9. 4.

Nunquam minùs ſolus, quàm cùm ſolus.

Acquieſcit ſibi, cogitationibus ſuis traditus. Sen. Ep. 9.

Sapiens nunquam ſolus eſſe poteſt, habet ſecum omnes qui ſunt, quique unquam fuerunt boni; & animum liberum quocunque vult transfert: quod corpore non poteſt, cogitatione complectitur; & ſi hominum inops fuerit, loquitur cum Deo. Nunquam minùs ſolus erit, quàm cùm ſolus fuerit. Hier. adv. Jovin. 1. 28.

Divine perfections, diſplayed in the works of nature, of providence, of grace; praiſing God for his excellent benefits and mercies; confeſſing his defects and offences; deprecating wrath, and imploring pardon, with grace and ability to amend: praying for the ſupply of all his wants. All which performances yield both unconceivable benefit and unexpreſſible comfort. So that Solitude (that which is to common nature ſo offenſive, to corrupt nature ſo abominable) is to the pious man extremely commodious and comfortable: which is a great advantage peculiar to Piety, and the laſt which I ſhall mention.

So many, and many more that I can expreſs, vaſtly great and precious advantages do accrue from Piety; ſo that well may we conclude with S. Paul, that Godlineſs is profitable for all things.

It remaineth that, if we be wiſe, we ſhould, if we yet have it not ingraffed in us, labour to acquire it; if we have it, that we ſhould endeavour to improve it, by conſtant exerciſe, to the praiſe of God, the good of our neighbour, and our own comfort. Which that we may effectually perform, Almighty God in mercy vouchſafe, by his grace, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; to whom for ever be all glory and praiſe. Amen.

SERMON IV.

The Reward of Honouring God.

1 SAM. II. 30.

For them that honour me, I will honour.

THE words are in the ſtricteſt ſenſe the word of God, uttered immediately by God himſelf; and may thence command from us an eſpecial attention and regard. The Hiſtory of that which occaſioned them is, I preſume, well known, neither ſhall I make any deſcant or reflection thereon; but do take the words ſeparately, as a propoſition of it ſelf, affording a compleat inſtruction, and ample matter of diſcourſe. And as ſuch, they plainly imply two things: a Duty required of us, to honour God; and a Reward profered to us, upon performance of that Duty, being honoured by God. It is natural for us, before we are willing to undertake any work, to conſider the reward or benefit accruing from it; and it is neceſſary, before we can perform any duty, to underſtand the nature thereof. To this our method of action I ſhall ſuit the method of my Diſcourſe; firſt endeavouring to eſtimate the Reward, then to explain the Duty. Afterward I mean to ſhew briefly why in reaſon the Duty is injoyned; how in effect the Reward is conferred.

I. The Reward may be conſidered either abſolutely, (as what it is in it ſelf;) or relatively, (as to its riſe, and whence it comes.)

1. For it ſelf, it is Honour; a thing, if valued according to the rate it bears in the common market, of higheſt price among all the objects of humane deſire; the chief reward which the greateſt actions and which the beſt actions do pretend unto, or are capable of; that which uſually bears moſt ſway in the hearts, and hath ſtrongeſt influence upon the lives of men; the deſire of obtaining and maintaining which doth commonly overbear other moſt potent inclinations. The love of Pleaſure ſtoops thereto: for men, to get or keep Reputation, will decline the moſt pleaſant enjoyments, will embrace the hardeſt pains. Yea, it often prevails over the love of life it ſelf, which men do not onely frequently expoſe to danger, but ſometimes devote to certain loſs, for its ſake. If we obſerve what is done in the world, we may diſcern it to be the ſource of moſt undertakings therein: that it not onely moveth the wheels of publick action, (that not onely for it great Princes contend, great armies march, great battles are fought;) but that from it moſt private buſineſs derives its life and vigour: that for Honour eſpecially the Souldier undergoes hardſhip, toil and hazzard; the Scholar plods and beats his brains; the Merchant runs about ſo buſily, and adventures ſo far; yea, that for its ſake the meaneſt Labourer and Artificer doth ſpend his ſweat, and ſtretch his ſinews. The principal drift of all this care and induſtry (the great reaſon of all this ſcuffling for Power, this ſearching for Knowledge, this ſcraping and ſcrambling for wealth) doth ſeem to be, that men would live in ſome credit, would raiſe themſelves above contempt.

Ἴδοις δ' ἂν καὶ τῶν ἰδιωτῶν τοὺς ἐπιεικεστάτους ὑπὲρ ἄλλου μὲν οὐδενὸς ἂν τὸ ζῆν ἀντικαταλλαξαμένους, ὑπὲρ δὲ τοῦ τυχεῖν καλῆς δόξης ἀποθνήσκειν ἐθέλοντας. Iſocr. Orat. ad Philip.

Mors tum æquiſſimo animo appetitur, cùm ſuis ſe laudibus vita occidens conſolari poteſt. Cic. 1. Tuſc.

— Laudis avidi pecuniæ liberales erant, gloriam ingentem divitias honeſtas volebant; hanc ardentiſſimè dilexerunt, propter hanc vivere voluerunt, pro hac & mori non dubitaverunt. Cæteras cupiditates hujus unius ingenti cupiditate preſſerunt. Aug. de civ. D. 5. 12.

Αἱ γὰρ δυναστεῖαι καὶ ὁ πλοῦτος διὰ τὴν τιμήν ἐστιν αἱρετά. Ariſt. Eth. IV. 3.

Honos alit artes, omneſque incenduntur ad ſtudia gloriâ, &c. Cic. Tuſc. Qu. 1.

In ſuch requeſt, of ſuch force doth Honour appear to be. If we examine why, we may find more than mere faſhion (or mutual imitation and conſent) to ground the experiment upon. There is one obvious reaſon, why no mean regard ſhould be had thereto, its great convenience and uſefulneſs: for that a man cannot himſelf live ſafely, quietly or pleaſantly, without ſome competent meaſure thereof; cannot well ſerve the publick, perform offices of duty to his relations, of kindneſs to his friends, of charity to his neighbours, but under its protection, and with its aid: it being an engine very requiſite for the managing any buſineſs, for the compaſſing any deſign, at leaſt ſweetly and ſmoothly; it procuring to us many furtherances in our proceedings, removing divers obſtacles out of our way, guarding a man's perſon from offences, adding weight to his words, putting an edge upon his endeavours: for every one allows a favourable ear to his diſcourſe, lends an aſſiſting hand to his attempts, grants a ready credence to his teſtimony, and makes a fair conſtruction of his doings, whom he eſteems and reſpects. So is Honour plainly valuable among the bona utilia, as no ſmall accommodation of life; and as ſuch, reaſon approves it to our judgment.

Vide Hier. Ep. ad Celant.

Conſcientia nobis neceſſaria eſt, fama proxima. Qui conſcientiâ fidens, famam negligit, crudelis eſt. Aug.

Πρὸς χρείας ἐπιτήδειον ὄργανον ἡ δόξα. Galen.

Nec verò negligenda fama eſt; nec mediocre telum ad res gerendas exiſtimare oportet benevolentiam civium. Cic. de Amic.

Vide Chryſ. Tom. 6. Orat. 17.

But ſearching farther, we ſhall find the appetite of Honour to have a deeper ground, and that it is rooted even in our Nature it ſelf. For we may deſcry it budding forth in mens firſt Infancy (before the uſe of reaſon, or ſpeech ;) even little Children being ambitious to be made much of, maintaining among themſelves petty emulations and competitions, as it were, about punctilio's of Honour. We may obſerve it growing with Age, waxing bigger and ſtronger together with the encreaſe of wit and knowledge, of civil culture and experience: that the matureſt age doth moſt reſent and reliſh it; that it prevails moſt in civilized nations ; that men of the beſt parts, of the higheſt improvements, of the weightieſt employments, do moſt zealouſly affect it and ſtand upon it ; that they who moſt ſtruggle with it, do moſt feel its might, how difficult it is to reſiſt or reſtrain it, how impoſſible it is to ſtifle or extinguiſh it. For the Philoſopher with all his reaſons and conſiderations cannot diſpute it down, or perſuade it away ; the Anchoret cannot with all his auſterities ſtarve it, or by his retirements ſhun it: no affliction, no poverty, no wretchedneſs of condition can totally ſuppreſs it. 'Tis a ſpirit that not onely haunts our Courts and Palaces, but frequents our Schools and Cloiſters, yea creeps into Cottages, into Hoſpitals, into Priſons, and even doggs men into Deſarts and Solitudes: ſo cloſe it ſticks to our nature. Plato ſays it is the laſt coat which a wiſe man doth put off. But I queſtion whether he could ſhew us that wiſe man who had done it, or could tell us where he dwelt, except perhaps in his own Utopian Republick. For they who moſt pretend to have done it, (who in their diſcourſe moſt vilifie Honour ; who talk like Chryſippus, that a wiſe man for Reputation ſake will not ſo much as ſtretch out his finger, or like Seneca, that we ſhould doe every thing purely for conſcience ſake, without any regard to mens opinion ; who make harangues and write volumes againſt Glory,) do yet appear by their practice, ſometimes, by ſo doing, to aim at it : even as men do uſually complain of and eagerly quarrel with that which they moſt affect and woe. Chryſippus wrote, as we are * told, above 700 books, moſt of them concerning Logical quirks, and ſuch as one can hardly imagine what other drift he could have in compoſing them, beſides oſtentation of his ſubtility and ſharpneſs of wit. Seneca, if Hiſtory do not wrong him, and the face of his actions do not miſrepreſent him, was not in his heart exempt from a ſpice of Ambition. Yea, that excellent Emperour M. Aurelius, who would often ſpeak like a Stoick, could not but commonly act like a Man, more by his practice commending Honour, than he diſparaged it in his words. For Story repreſents him very carefull and jealous of his credit, very diligent to preſerve it and to repair it. * Tertullian calls ſuch Philoſophers negotiatores famæ, (Merchants for fame :) and it is perchance ſome part of their cunning in that trade, which makes them ſtrive to beat down the price of this commodity, that they may more eaſily engroſs it to themſelves. However, experience proves that ſuch words are but words ; (words ſpoken out of affectation and pretence, rather than in good earneſt and according to truth ;) that endeavours to baniſh or to extirpate this deſire are but fond and fruitleſs attempts. The reaſon why is clear : for tis as if one ſhould diſpute againſt eating and drinking, or ſhould labour to free himſelf from hunger and thirſt ; the appetite of Honour being indeed, as that of Food, innate unto us, ſo as not to be quenched or ſmothered, except by ſome violent diſtemper or indiſpoſition of mind ; even by the wiſe Authour of our nature originally implanted therein, for Vidi ego & expertus ſum zelantem parvulum, &c. Aug

In ſolitudine ſitis, ſubrepit ſuperbia. Hier.

Cic. de Fin. 3.

Nihil opinionis cauſâ, omnia conſcientiæ faciam. Sen. de V. B.

Nil ſit illi cum ambitione famâq; commune, ſibi placeat. Epiſt. 113.

Juſtum eſſe gratìs oportet. ib.

Id. de Ira. 3. 41.

* Laert.

Erat famæ ſuæ curioſiſſimus, & malè loquentium dictis vel literis vel ſermone reſpondebat. Capit.

* Tert. Apol.

Ut quidam morbo aliquo & ſenſûs ſtupore ſuavitatem cibi non ſentiunt ; ſic libidinoſi, avari, facinoroſi veræ laudis guſtum non habent. Cic. Philipp. 2.

very good ends and uſes, reſpecting both the private and publick benefit of men; as an engagement to Vertue, and a reſtraint from Vice; as an excitement of induſtry, an incentive of courage, a ſupport of conſtancy in the proſecution of worthy enterpriſes; as a ſerviceable inſtrument for the conſtitution, conſervation and improvement of humane ſociety. For did not ſome love of Honour glow in mens breaſts, were that noble ſpark quite extinct, few men probably would ſtudy for honourable qualities, or perform laudable deeds; there would be nothing to keep ſome men within bounds of modeſty and decency, to deterre them from doing odious and ugly things; men, not caring what others thought of them, would not regard what they did themſelves; a barbarous ſloth or brutiſh ſtupidity would overſpread the world, withdrawing from common life moſt of its ornaments, much of its convenience; men generally would, if not altogether ſhun ſociety, yet at leaſt decline the cares and burthens requiſite to the promoting its welfare, for the ſuſtaining which uſually the chief encouragement, the main recompence, is this of Honour. That men therefore have ſo tender and delicate a ſenſe of their Reputation, (ſo that touching it is like pricking a nerve, as ſoon felt, and as ſmartly offenſive,) is an excellent proviſion in nature; in regard whereto Honour may paſs among the bona naturalia, as a Good neceſſary for the ſatisfaction of nature, and for ſecuring the accompliſhment of its beſt deſigns.

Αἰδὼς δ' οἰχομένη πάντων γένετ' ἐργ. κακίστων. Naz Carm. 56.

A moderate regard to Honour is alſo commendable as an inſtance of humanity or good will to men, yea, as an argument of humility, or a ſober conceit of our ſelves. For to deſire another man's eſteem, and conſequently his love, (which in ſome kind or degree is an inſeparable companion of eſteem) doth imply ſomewhat of reciprocal eſteem and affection toward him; and to prize the judgment of other men concerning us, doth ſignifie, that we are not overſatisfied with our own.

Negligere quid de ſe quiſque ſentiat arrogantis eſt & diſſoluti. Cic. de Offic. 1.

We might for its farther commendation alledge the authority of the more cool and candid ſort of Philoſophers, (ſuch as grounded their judgment of things upon notions agreeable to common ſenſe and experience; who adapted their rules of practice to the nature of man, ſuch as they found in the world, not ſuch as they framed it in their own fancies,) who have ranked Honour among the principal of things deſireable, and adorned it with faireſt elogies; terming it a divine thing, the beſt of exteriour goods, the moſt honeſt fruit and moſt ample reward of true Vertue; adjudging, that to neglect the opinions of men (eſpecially of perſons worthy and laudable) is a ſign of ſtupid baſeneſs, that to contemn them is an effect of unreaſonable haughtineſs; repreſenting the love of Honour (rightly grounded and duely moderated) not onely as the parent and guardian (as productive and preſervative) of other Vertues, but as a vertue it ſelf, of no ſmall magnitude and luſtre in the Conſtellation of Vertues, the Vertue of Generoſity. A Vertue which next to the ſpirit of true Religion, (next to a hearty reverence toward the ſupreme Bleſſed Goodneſs, and that holy Charity toward men which ſpringeth thence,) doth lift a man up neareſt to Heaven; doth raiſe his mind above the ſordid deſires, the ſorry cares, the fond humours, the perverſe and froward paſſions, with which men commonly are poſſeſſed and acted: that Vertue, Θεῖον τι ἡ τιμή. Plat. de Leg. IV.

Καλὸν γὰρ πολλαῖς πόλεσι τὸ παρακέλευσμά ἐστι, προτιμᾶν εὐδοξίαν παρὰ τῶν πολλῶν. Idem de Rep. XII.

Μέγιστον γὰρ ἐκτὸς ἀγαθῶν ἡ τιμή. Ariſt. Eth. IV. 3.

Levis eſt animi, juſtam gloriam, qui eſt fructus virtutis honeſtiſſimus, repudiare. Cic. in Piſ.

Ex omnibus præmiis virtutis ampliſſimum eſt præmium gloria. Idem, pro. Mil.

Vertue, which enflames a man with Courage, ſo that he dares perform what reaſon and duty require of him, that he diſdains to doe what is bad or baſe; which inſpires him with Sincerity, that he values his honeſty before all other intereſts and reſpects, that he abhors to wrong or deceive, to flatter or abuſe any man, that he cannot endure to ſeem otherwiſe than he is, to ſpeak otherwiſe than he means, to act otherwiſe than he promiſes and profeſſes; which endows him with Courteſie, that he is ready to yield every man his due reſpect, to afford any man what help and ſuccour he is able: that Vertue, which renders a man upright in all his dealings, and correſpondent to all his obligations; a loyal Subject to his Prince, and a true lover of his Country, a candid judge of perſons and things, an earneſt favourer of whatever is good and commendable, a faithfull and hearty friend, a beneficial and uſefull neighbour, a gratefull reſenter and requiter of courteſies, hoſpitable to the ſtranger, bountifull to the poor, kind and good to all the world: that Vertue, in fine, which conſtitutes a man of honour, who ſurely is the beſt man next to a man of conſcience. Thus may Honour be valued from natural light, and according to common ſenſe.

Trahimur omnes laudis ſtudio, & optimus quiſque maximè gloriâ ducitur. Cic. pro Arch.

But beyond all this, the Holy Scripture (that moſt certain ſtandard by which we may examine and determine the true worth of things) doth not teach us to ſlight Honour, but rather in its fit order and juſt meaſure to love and prize it. It indeed inſtructs us to ground it well: (not upon bad qualities or wicked deeds, that's villainous madneſs; not upon things of a mean and indifferent nature, that vanity; not upon counterfeit ſhews and pretences, that's hypocriſie; but upon real worth and goodneſs, that may conſiſt with modeſty and ſobriety:) it enjoyns us not to be immoderate in our deſires thereof, or complacences therein, not to be irregular in the purſuit or acquiſt of it; (to be ſo is pride and ambition;) but to affect it calmly, to purchaſe it fairly: it directs us not to make a regard thereto our chief principle, not to propound it as our main end of action: it charges us to bear contentedly the want or loſs thereof, (as of other temporal goods:) yea, in ſome caſes, for Conſcience ſake or for God's ſervice, (that is, for a good incomparably better than it,) it obliges us willingly to proſtitute and ſacrifice it, chuſing rather to be infamous than impious, (to be in diſgrace with men, rather than in disfavour with God:) it, in fine, commands us to ſeek and embrace it onely in ſubordination and with final reference to God's honour. Which diſtinctions and cautions being provided, Honour is repreſented in Holy Scripture, as a thing conſiderably good, which may be regarded without blame, which ſometimes in duty muſt be regarded. It is there preferred before other good things, in themſelves not deſpicable. For, A good name is better than precious ointment; yea, A good name is rather to be choſen than great riches, (ſaith the Wiſe man.) 'Tis called a Gift of God: for, There is a man (ſaith the Preacher) to whom God hath given riches and honour. Yea, not onely a ſimple gift, but a Bleſſing, conferr'd in kindneſs, as a reward and encouragement of goodneſs: for, By humility and the fear of the Lord, ſaith he again, are riches and honour. Whence it is to be acknowledged as an eſpecial benefit, and a fit ground of thankſgiving; as is practiſed by the Pſalmiſt in his royal Hymn: Honour (ſaith he) and Majeſty haſt thou laid upon him. Wiſdom alſo is deſcribed unto us bearing in her left hand riches and honour: and Wiſdom ſurely will not take into any hand of hers, or hold therein, what is worth nothing. No, we are therefore moved to

Οἱ χαρίεντες ϗ πρακτικοὶ, plauſible and active men do (ſaith Ariſtot) place Happineſs in Honour. (Eth. 1. 4.)

Non vis eſſe juſtus ſine gloria? at mehercule ſæpe juſtus eſſe debes cum infamia. Sen. Epiſt. 113.

Eccles 7. 1.
Prov. 22. 1.

Eccles 6. 2.

Prov. 22. 4.

Pſal. 21 5.

Prov. 3. 16.

Prov. 4. 8, 9. procure her becauſe, exalting her, ſhe ſhall promote us. —— She ſhall give unto our head an ornament of grace, a crown of glory ſhall ſhe deliver to us. We are alſo enjoyned to render Honour as the beſt expreſſion of good-will and gratitude toward them who beſt deſerve in themſelves, or moſt deſerve of us; to our Prince, to our Parents, to our Prieſts, 1 Pet. 2. 17. (eſpecially to ſuch of them as govern and teach well, to all good men, 1 Tim. 5. 3, 17. (Have ſuch in reputation, ſays the Apoſtle.) And were not Honour a Phil. 2. 29. good thing, ſuch injunctions would be unreaſonable. Yea, becauſe we 1 Pet. 2. 17. are obliged to bear good will toward all men, S. Peter bids us to honour all men. From hence alſo, that we are eſpecially bound to render Ho- Ariſtot. Eth. IV. 3. nour unto God himſelf, we may well infer with Ariſtotle, that Honour is the beſt thing in our power to offer. To theſe conſiderations may be Rom. 13. 13. added, that we are commanded to walk εὐσχημόνως, (decently, or ſpeci- Rom. 12. 17. ouſly, which implies a regard to mens opinion ;) to provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men, (τὰ καλὰ, that is, not onely things good in 1 Pet. 2. 12. ſubſtance, but goodly in appearance ;) to have our converſation honeſt before the Gentiles, (καλὴν, again, that is, fair, or comely, and plauſible, ſuch as may commend us and our profeſſion to the judgment of Phil. 4. 8. them who obſerve us.) S. Paul alſo exhorts us to mind, not onely what things are true, are juſt, are pure; but alſo ὅσα σεμνὰ, (what-ever things are venerable, or apt to beget reſpect,) ὅσα προσφιλῆ, (what-ever things are lovely, or gracious in mens eyes and eſteem,) ὅσα εὔφημα, (what-ever things are well reported, or well reputed of.) He requires us not onely, if there be any vertue, (any thing very good in it ſelf,) but, if there be any praiſe, (any thing much approved in common eſteem,) that we ſhould mind ſuch things. Laſtly, the bleſſed ſtate hereafter (the higheſt inſtance of Divine bounty, the compleat reward of goodneſs) is repreſented and recommended to us as a ſtate of Honour and Rom. 2. 7. Glory; to be ambitious whereof is the character of a good man. To every man (ſaith S. Paul) ſhall God render according to his works: to them who by patient continuance in well doing ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality, Eternal life.

Such is the Reward propounded to us in it ſelf; no vile or contemptible thing, but upon various accompts much valuable; that which the common apprehenſions of men, plain dictates of reaſon, a predominant inſtinct of nature, the judgments of very wiſe men, and Divine atteſtation it ſelf conſpire to commend unto us as very conſiderable and precious. Such a Reward our Text preſcribes us the certain, the onely way of attaining.

2. Such a benefit is here tendred to us (that which yet more highly commends it, and exceedingly enhances its worth) by God himſelf: I (ſaith he) will honour. 'Tis ſanctified by coming from his holy hand; 'tis dignified by following his moſt wiſe and juſt diſpoſal; 'tis fortified and aſſured by depending on his unqueſtionable word, and uncontrollable power: who as he is the prime Author of all good, ſo he is in eſpecial manner the ſovereign diſpenſer of Honour. The King (we ſay) is the fountain of Honour. What any King, as the Repreſentative and Delegate of God, is in his particular Kingdom, that is Almighty God ab- 1 Chron. 29. 12. ſolutely and independently, in all the world. Both riches and Honour (ſaid good King David) come of thee, for thou ruleſt over all: in thine hand is power and might; in thine hand it is to make great, and to give ſtrength unto all. He whoſe grants are in effect onely ſure and valid, whoſe favours onely do in the end turn to good account, he freely offers us moſt deſirable preferment: he doth himſelf graciouſly hold forth moſt authentick patents, by virtue of which we may all become right honourable, and perſons of quality indeed; having not onely the names and titles, the outward enſigns and badges of dignity, (ſuch as earthly Princes confer,) but the ſubſtantial reality, the aſſured enjoyment thereof. (For man can onely impoſe law upon tongues and geſtures; God alone commandeth and enclineth hearts, wherein Honour chiefly reſideth.) He offers it, I ſay, moſt freely indeed, yet not abſolutely: he doth not goe to ſell it for a price, yet he propounds it under a condition; as a moſt juſt and equal, ſo a very gentle and eaſie condition. 'Tis but an exchange of Honour for Honour; of honour from God, which is a free gift, for honour from us, which is a juſt duty; of honour from him our ſovereign Lord, for honour from us his poor vaſſals; of honour from the moſt high Majeſty of Heaven, for honour from us vile worms creeping upon the earth. Such an overture one would think it not onely reaſonable to accept, but impoſſible to refuſe. For can any man dare not to honour invincible Power, infallible Wiſedom, inflexible juſtice? will any man forbear to honour immenſe Goodneſs and Bounty? Yes, it ſeems there are men ſo mad as to reject ſo fair an offer, ſo bad as to neglect ſo equal a duty. Let us therefore conſider what it is that is here required of us, or wherein this honouring of God conſiſts, that we may thereby diſcern when we perform this duty, when we are deficient therein.

II. There are ſeveral ways of honouring God, or ſeveral parts and degrees of this Duty: all which we may referr to two ſorts, conceiving the Duty as a compound made up of two main ingredients, (correſpondent to thoſe two parts in which they reſide, and of which our nature conſiſts; which diſtinction S. Paul ſuggeſteth, when he ſaith, Glorifie God in your body, and in your ſpirit, which are God's,) one of them being, as it were, the form and Soul, the other as the matter and Body of the Duty. 1 Cor. 6. 20.

1. The Soul of that Honour which is required of us toward God, is that internal eſteem and reverence which we ſhould bear in our hearts towards him; importing that we have impreſſed upon our minds ſuch conceptions about him as are worthy of him, ſutable to the perfection of his nature, to the eminency of his ſtate, to the juſt quality of his works and actions: that we apprehend him to be, what he really is, in his nature, ſuperlatively good, wiſe, powerfull, holy and juſt: that we aſcribe unto him the production and conſervation of all beings, together with an intire ſuperintendency over and abſolute diſpoſal of all events: that we conceive our ſelves obliged to ſubmit unto and acquieſce in all his diſpenſations of Providence, as moſt wiſe and moſt righteous; to rely upon the declarations of his mind, (whether in way of aſſertion, or promiſe,) as infallibly true and certain. In ſuch acts of mind the honouring of God doth primarily conſiſt. In acts, I ſay: not in ſpeculative Opinions concerning the Divine Excellences, (ſuch as all men have, who are not downright Atheiſts or Infidels,) floating in the fancy, or dormant in the mind; but in continually-preſent, lively, effectual acts of apprehenſion and judgment, ſinking down into the heart and affections, and quickning them to a congruous real performance. Such an apprehenſion of God's Power, as ſhall make us to dread his irreſiſtible hand, ſhall cauſe us to deſpair of proſpering in bad courſes, ſhall diſpoſe us to confide in him, as able to perform what-ever he wills us to expect from him: ſuch an opinion of his Wiſedom, as ſhall keep us from queſtioning whether that is beſt which God declares to be ſo: as ſhall hinder us from preſuming (in compliance with our own ſhallow reaſon, or vain fancy) to doe any thing againſt God's judgment and advice: ſuch a conceit of God's Juſtice, as ſhall render us carefull to perform what his Law promiſes to reward, and fearfull to commit what it threatens to puniſh: ſuch a perſuaſion concerning God's Goodneſs, as ſhall kindle in us an hearty affection toward him, ſhall make us very ſenſible of his bounty, and ready to yield returns of duty and gratitude unto him; as ſhall preſerve us from being diſtruſtfull of his Providence, or doubtfull in our need and diſtreſs of finding relief from him: ſuch a vigorous and fruitfull eſteem of God in all reſpects, as ſhall produce in us diſpoſitions of mind, and actions of life, agreeable to our various relations and obligations to him; becoming us as his creatures and children, as his ſubjects and ſervants. This is indeed the Soul of the duty, which being abſent, all exteriour (how ſpecious ſoever) either profeſſions or performances are but as pictures, having in them ſomewhat of reſemblance in ſhape and colour, nothing of life: yea rather, as carcaſes, not onely dead and ſenſeleſs, but rotten and filthy in God's ſight. Matt. 15. 8. This people (ſaith God) do honour me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. Such honour is indeed no honour at all, but impudent abuſe and profane mockery: for what can be more abominably vain, than for a man to court and cajoul him who knows his whole heart, who ſees that he either minds not, or means not what he ſays? It behoves us therefore by all proper means (by contemplating the Works and Actions of God, (his admirable works of nature, the wiſe proceedings of his Providence, the glorious diſpenſations of his Grace) by meditating on his Word, by praying for his Grace, by obſerving his Law and Will) to raiſe up in our hearts, to foment and cheriſh this internal Reverence, which is the true ſpring of all Piety, the principle which forms and actuates that other ſort, coming next to be touched on, being the Body of our due Honour to God; concurring in its order to the integrity thereof, as without which the interiour part would be a kind of Ghoſt, too thin in ſubſtance, too remote from ſenſe, too deſtitute of good fruit and uſe.

2. This Bodily part conſiſts in outward expreſſions and performances, whereby we declare our eſteem and reverence of God, and produce or promote the like in others. For our thus honouring God reſpects thoſe two ends and effects, the uttering our own, the exciting in others a reverence toward him. And it we may firſt view in the general, or groſs bulk thereof; then ſurvey its principal members.

Firſt, in general, God is honoured by a willing and carefull practice of all Piety and Vertue for conſcience ſake, or in avowed obedience to his holy will. This is the moſt natural expreſſion of our Reverence toward him, and the moſt effectual way of promoting the ſame in others. A Subject cannot better demonſtrate the Reverence he bears toward his Prince, than by (with a chearfull diligence) obſerving his Laws: for by ſo doing he declares that he acknowledgeth the Authority, and revereth the Majeſty which enacted them; that he approves the Wiſdom which deviſed them, and the Goodneſs which deſigned them for publick benefit; that he dreads his Prince's Power, which can maintain them, and his Juſtice, which will vindicate them; that he relies upon his Fidelity, in making good what of protection or of recompence he propounds to the obſervers of them. No leſs pregnant a ſignification of our Reverence toward God, do we yield in our gladly and ſtrictly obeying ing his Laws; thereby evidencing our ſubmiſſion to God's ſovereign Authority, our eſteem of his Wiſdom and Goodneſs, our awfull regard to his Power and Juſtice, our confidence in him, and dependence upon his word. As alſo the practice of wholeſome Laws, viſibly producing good fruits, (peace and proſperity in the commonwealth,) doth conciliate reſpect unto the Prince, he thereby appearing wiſe and good, able to diſcern, and willing to chuſe what conferrs to publick benefit: ſo actions conformable to the Divine Law, being (by God's wiſe and gracious diſpoſal) both in themſelves comely and lovely, and in effect (as S. Paul ſaith) good and profitable to men, conducing indeed not Tit. 3. 8. onely to private, but alſo to publick welfare, to the rendring humane Neh. 9. 13. Society comfortable, to the ſettling and ſecuring common tranquillity,) Deut 10. 13. the performance of them muſt needs bring great commendation to the author and ordainer of them. By obſerving them we ſhall (as S. Peter ſpeaks) ſet forth the vertues of him that called us to ſuch a practice. 1 Pet. 2. 9. The light and luſtre of good works, done in regard to Divine command, will cauſe men to ſee clearly the Excellences of our moſt wiſe and gracious Lord; will conſequently induce and excite them to glorifie our Father which is in Heaven. In this (ſaith our Saviour) is my Matt. 5. 16. Father glorified, if you bear much fruit. The goodlineſs to the ſight, Joh. 15. 8. the pleaſantneſs to the taſte, which is ever perceptible in thoſe fruits which genuine Piety beareth, the beauty men ſee in a calm mind and a ſober converſation, the ſweetneſs they taſte from works of juſtice and charity, will certainly produce veneration to the Doctrine which teacheth ſuch things, and to the Authority which enjoyns them. It is an aggravation of Impiety, often inſiſted upon in Scripture, that it ſlurrs Rom. 2. 23. (as it were) and defames God, brings reproach and obloquy upon him, Tit. 2. 5. cauſes his Name to be profaned, to be curſed, to be blaſphemed: and 2 Sam. 12. 14. Iſa. 52. 5. 'tis anſwerably a commendation of Piety, that by the practice thereof Ezek. 36. 20. we (not onely procure many great advantages to our ſelves, many bleſſings and comforts here, all joys and felicities hereafter; but do alſo thereby) beget eſteem to God himſelf, and ſanctifie his ever-bleſſed Eph. 4. 1. Name; cauſe him to be regarded and reverenced, his name to be praiſed Phil. 1. 27. Coloſ. 1. 10. and bleſſed among men. It is by exemplary Piety, by * providing 1 Theſ. 2. 12. things honeſt in the ſight of all men, by doing things honourable and laudable, * Rom. 12. 17. (ſuch are all things which God hath been pleaſed to command us,) that we ſhall be ſure to fulfill that precept of S. Paul, of doing all 1 Cor. 10. 31. things to the glory of God; which is the Body of that duty we ſpeak of.

Secondly, But there are, deſerving a particular inſpection, ſome members thereof, which in a peculiar and eminent manner do conſtitute this Honour; ſome acts which more ſignally conduce to the illuſtration of God's glory. Such are,

1. The frequent and conſtant performance (in a ſerious and reverent manner) of all religious Duties, or Devotions immediately addreſſed to God, or converſant about him: that which the Pſalmiſt ſtyles, Giving the Lord the honour due to his Name, worſhipping the Lord in the beauty Pſal. 29. 2. of Holineſs.

2. Uſing all things peculiarly related unto God his holy Name, his holy Word, his holy Places, (the places where his honour dwelleth,) his Pſal. 26. 8. holy Times, religious Faſts and Feſtivities) with eſpecial reſpect. Iſa. 58. 13.

3. Yielding due obſervance to the Deputies and Miniſters of God Rom. 13. 4. (both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical) as ſuch, or becauſe of their relation to Mal. 2. 7. 1 Sam. 8. 7. God: the doing of which God declares that he interprets and accepts Matt. 10. 40. as done unto himſelf. Joh. 13. 20.

4. Freely ſpending what God hath given us (out of reſpect unto 2 Cor 9 13. him) in works of Piety, Charity and Mercy; that which the Wiſe man Prov. 3 9. calls Honouring the Lord with our Subſtance.

14 31. 5. All penitential Acts, by which we ſubmit unto God, and humble Joſh. 7. 19 our ſelves before him. (As Achan, by confeſſing of his ſin, is ſaid to Apoc. 16. 9. give glory to the Lord God of Iſrael.)

6. Chearfull undergoing afflictions, loſſes, diſgraces, for the profeſ- Joh. 21. 19. ſion of God's truth, or for obedience to God's commands. (As S. Peter is ſaid by his death, ſuffered upon ſuch accompts, to glorifie God.)

Theſe ſignal inſtances of this duty (repreſented as ſuch in Holy Scripture) for brevitie's ſake I paſs over; craving leave onely to conſider one, moſt pertinent to our preſent buſineſs, and indeed a very comprehenſive one; which is this:

7. We ſhall eſpecially honour God, by diſcharging faithfully thoſe offices which God hath intruſted us with; by improving diligently thoſe talents which God hath committed to us; by uſing carefully thoſe means and opportunities, which God hath vouchſafed us, of doing him ſervice, and promoting his glory. Thus he to whom God hath given Wealth, if he expend it (not to the nouriſhment of pride and luxury, not onely to the gratifying his own pleaſure or humour, but) to the furtherance of God's honour, or to the ſuccour of his indigent neighbour, (in any pious or charitable way,) he doth thereby in eſpecial manner honour God. He alſo on whom God hath beſtowed Wit and parts, if he employ them (not ſo much in contriving projects to advance his own petty intereſts, or in procuring vain applauſe to himſelf, as) in advantageouſly ſetting forth God's praiſe, handſomely recommending goodneſs, dexterouſly engaging men in ways of vertue, (doing which things is true wit and excellent policy indeed,) he doth thereby remarkably honour God. He likewiſe that hath Honour conferr'd upon him, if he ſubordinate it to God's honour, if he uſe his own credit as an inſtrument of bringing credit to goodneſs, thereby adorning and illuſtrating Piety, he by ſo doing doth eminently practiſe this duty. The like may be ſaid of any other good quality, any capacity or advantage of doing good; by the right uſe thereof we honour God: for that men, beholding the worth of ſuch good gifts, and feeling the benefit emergent from them, will be apt to bleſs the donour of them; as did they in the Goſpel, who, ſeeing our Saviour cure the Paralitick man, did preſently Matt. 9. 8. glorifie God, who had given ſuch power unto men. but eſpecially they to whom Power and Authority is committed, as they have the chief capacity, ſo they are under an eſpecial obligation thus to honour God: they are particularly concerned to hear and obſerve that Royall proclamation, Give unto the Lord, O ye mighty, give unto the Lord glory and ſtrength; Pſal. 29. 1, 2. Give unto the Lord the honour due unto his name. When ſuch perſons (like King Nebuchadnezzar returned to his right ſenſes) do ſeriouſly Dan. 4. 34. I bleſſed the moſt High, and praiſed and honoured him, &c. acknowledg their power and eminency derived from God alone; when they profeſs ſubjection unto him, and expreſs it in their practice, not onely driving others by their power, but drawing them by their example, to piety and goodneſs; when they cauſe God's Name to be duly worſhipped, and his Laws to be ſtrictly obſerved; when they favour and encourage Vertue, diſcourage and chaſtiſe wickedneſs; when they take care that juſtice be impartially adminiſtred, innocence protected, neceſſity relieved, all iniquity and oppreſſion, all violence and diſorder, yea, (ſo much as may be) all affliction and wretchedneſs be prevented, or removed; when they by all means ſtrive to promote both the ſervice of God, and the happineſs of men; (diſpenſing equally Matt. 24. 45. and benignly, to the family over which their Lord hath ſet them, their meat in due ſeaſon; providing that men under them may live a peaceable 1 Tim. 2. 2. and quiet life in all godlineſs and honeſty; doing which is the buſineſs allotted to them, the intereſt (as it were) of God, which he declares himſelf concernedly to tender, and by their miniſtry to proſecute:) when they carefully do ſuch things, then do they indeed approve themſelves worthy honourers of their High Maſter, and Heavenly King; then do they truly act God's part, and repreſent his perſon decently. When the actions of theſe viſible Gods are ſo divinely good and beneficial, men will be eaſily induced, yea, can hardly forbear to reverence and magnifie the inviſible Founder of their Authority. By ſo doing, as they will ſet before mens eyes the beſt pattern of Loyalty; as they will impreſs upon mens hearts the ſtrongeſt Argument for Obedience and reſpect toward themſelves; as they ſhall both more plainly inform, and more effectually perſuade people to the performance of their duty unto them, than by all the law and all the force in the world; as they will thereby conſequently beſt ſecure and maintain their own honour, and their own welfare: (for men will never be heartily loyal, and ſubmiſſive to Authority, till they become really good; nor will they ever be very good, till they ſee their Leaders ſuch:) ſo they will together greatly advance the praiſe and glory of Him in whoſe name they rule, to whoſe favour they owe their power and dignity; in whoſe hand (as Dan. 5. 23. the Prophet ſaith) is their breath, and whoſe are all their ways. For all men will be ready moſt awfully to dread Him, unto whom they ſee Princes themſelves humbly to ſtoop and bow: no man will be aſhamed or unwilling to ſerve Him, whom he ſhall obſerve that his Lords and Governours do concern themſelves to worſhip: the world cannot but have a good opinion of Him, a participation of whoſe power and majeſty yields ſuch excellent fruits; it will not fail to adore him, whoſe ſhadows and images are ſo venerable. 'Tis a moſt notorious thing, both to reaſon and in experience, what extreme advantage Great perſons have, eſpeciall by the influence of their practice, to bring God himſelf, as it were, into credit: how much it is in their power eaſily to render Piety a thing in faſhion and requeſt. For in what they doe, they never are alone, or are ill attended; whither they goe, they carry the world along with them: they lead crowds of people after them, as well when they goe in the right way, as when they run aſtray. The cuſtom of living well, no leſs than other modes and garbs, will be ſoon convey'd and propagated from the Court; the City and Country will readily draw good manners thence, (good manners truly ſo called, not onely ſuperficial forms of civility, but real practices of goodneſs.) For the main body of men goeth not quà eundum, ſed quà itur, not according to rules and reaſons, but after examples and authorities; eſpecially of great perſons, who are like ſtars, ſhining in high and conſpicuous places, by which men ſteer their courſe: their actions are to be reckon'd not as ſingle or ſolitary ones, but are, like their perſons, of a publick and repreſentative nature, involving the practice of others, who are by them awed, or ſhamed into compliance. Their good example eſpecially hath this advantage, that men can find no excuſe, can have no pretence why they ſhould not follow it. Piety is not onely beautified, but fortified by their dignity; it not onely ſhines in them with a clear luſtre, but with a mightier force and influence: a word, a look (the leaſt intimation) from them will doe more good, than others beſt eloquence, cleareſt reaſon, moſt earneſt endeavours. For it is in them, if they would apply themſelves to it, as the wiſeſt Prince implies, to ſcatter iniquity with their eyes. (Prov. 20 8.) A ſmile of theirs were able to enliven Vertue, and diffuſe it all about; a frown might ſuffice to mortifie and diſſipate wickedneſs. Such apparently is their power of honouring God; and in proportion thereto ſurely great is their obligation to doe it: of them peculiarly God expects it, and all equity exacts it. What the meaner rank of ſervants (who are employ'd in baſer drudgeries, whoſe fare is more courſe, whoſe wages are more ſcant, who ſtand at greater diſtance from their Lord, and receive no ſuch ample or expreſs marks of his favour, what theſe) doe is of ſome conſequence indeed, but doth not import ſo much to the Maſter's reputation; their good word concerning him, their good carriage toward him doth not credit him ſo much. But thoſe whom he employs in matters of higheſt truſt, and importance to his affairs, whom he places in the neareſt degree to himſelf, (ſeats even in his own throne, upon his own tribunal,) whom he feeds plentifully and daintily, maintains in a handſome garb, allows largely, as their deportment doth much reflect on their Lord's eſteem, as they are highly capable of advancing his repute; ſo all the rules of ingenuity and gratitude, all the laws of juſtice and equity do oblige them earneſtly to endeavour it. And it is indeed no leſs their concernment to doe ſo. For if there be diſorders, prejudicial to the Maſter's honour and intereſt, frequently committed in the family, 'tis thoſe ſervants muſt be reſponſible: if due order be there kept to his glory and advantage, they ſhall chiefly be commended, and peculiarly hear the Euge, bone ſerve. (Matt. 25. 23. Luk. 12. 48.) They muſt be loaded with other mens faults, or crowned for other mens vertues, as their behaviour hath reſpectively contributed to them. Thoſe univerſal Rules of equity, propoſed in the Goſpel, will, in God's reckoning with and requiting men, be punctually obſerved: To whomſoever much is given, of him much ſhall be required: anſwerable to the improvement of what is delivered in truſt, ſhall the acceptance be.

I have inſiſted ſomewhat more largely on this point, becauſe our Text hath a particular aſpect thereon; the words being uttered upon occaſion of Eli, then Judge in Iſrael, his not uſing authority to theſe purpoſes; his forbearing to redreſs a grievous abuſe, committed by his own Sons, to the diſſervice and diſhonour of God. Whence to perſons of his rank is this Law eſpecially directed; upon them is this duty chiefly incumbent; on them aſſuredly, (as ſure as God is true,) if they will obſerve the Duty, the Reward ſhall be conferred. God will certainly not onely preſerve the honour they have already, but will accumulate more Honours on them.

Theſe are general Truths; the particular application of them is ours. God, I pray, vouchſafe his grace and bleſſing, that it may be made to our benefit and comfort.

III. I ſhould now ſhew why the Duty is required of us, or how reaſonable it is. I muſt not (and the matter is ſo palpable that I need not) ſpend many words on that. God ſurely doth not exact Honour from us becauſe he needs it, becauſe he is the better for it, becauſe he (for its ſelf) delights therein. For (beſide that he cannot want any thing without himſelf, that he cannot anywiſe need mortal breath to praiſe him, or hands of fleſh to ſerve him, who hath millions of better creatures than we abſolutely at his devotion, and can with with a word create millions of millions more fitter than we to honour him) the beſt eſtimation we can have of him is much below him; the beſt expreſſion we can make is very unworthy of him. He is infinitely excellent beyond what we can imagine or declare: his Name is exalted Nehem. 9. 5. above all bleſſing and praiſe; his glory is above the earth and heaven. Pſal. 148. 13. So Ecclus 43. 30. that all our endeavours to honour him are, in compariſon to what is due, but defects, and in a manner diſparagements to him. 'Tis onely then (which ſhould effect our ingenuity to conſider) his pure goodneſs, that moves him, for our benefit and advantage, to demand it of us.

Ἀκήρατος γὰρ αὐτοῦ ἡ οὐσία καὶ ἀνενδεὴς οὖσα, οὐδενὸς ἑτέρου προσδεῖται· οἱ δὲ αἰνοῦντες αὐτὸν λαμπρότεροι γίνονται. Chryſ. in Pſal. 144. & vide in Pſ. 103.

1. For that to honour God is the moſt proper work of Reaſon; that for which primarily we were deſign'd and framed: (for as other things were made to afford the matter and occaſion, ſo Man was deſigned to exerciſe the act of glorifying God:) whence the performance thereof doth preſerve and perfect our nature; to neglect it being unnatural and Sen. Ep. 76. monſtrous.

2. For that alſo it is a moſt pleaſant duty. He is not a man (hath loſt all natural ingenuity and humanity) who doth not delight to make ſome returns thither, where he hath found much good will, whence he hath felt great kindneſs. Since then all the good we have, we have received from God's favour, it cannot but be very pleaſant to render ſomewhat of requital (as it were) unto him; and we can render no other but this. We cannot make God more rich, more joyfull, more happy than he is: all that we can do is, to expreſs our reverence toward him.

3. For that likewiſe our honouring God diſpoſes us to the imitation of him, (for what we do reverence we would reſemble,) that is, to the doing thoſe things wherein our chief perfection and happineſs conſiſts, whence our beſt content and joy doth ſpring.

4. In fine, for that the practice of this duty is moſt profitable and beneficial to us; unto it by an eternal rule of juſtice our final welfare and proſperity being annexed: whence God hath declared it to be the way and condition of our attaining that thing which we ſo like and prize, Honour to our ſelves; the which by promiſe he hath engaged himſelf to confer on thoſe who honour him. And,

IV. This promiſe he makes good ſeveral ways: Some of them I ſhall briefly ſuggeſt.

1. The honouring God is of it ſelf an honourable thing; the employment which ennobles Heaven it ſelf, wherein the higheſt Angels do rejoyce and glory. 'Tis the greateſt honour of a Servant to bring credit to his Maſter, of a Subject to ſpread his Prince's renown, and (upon grounds vaſtly more obliging) of a Creature to glorifie his Maker: that we may doe ſo is an honour we ſhould be glad, may be proud of.

2. By honouring God we are immediately inſtated in great Honour; we enter into moſt noble relations, acquire moſt illuſtrious titles, enjoy moſt glorious priviledges: we become the friends and favourites of Heaven, are adopted into God's family, and are ſtyled his Children; do obtain a free acceſs unto him, a ſure protection under him, a ready aſſiſtence from him in all our needs. And what honour can exceed, can equal this?

3. God hath ſo ordered it, that Honour is naturally conſequent upon the honouring him. God hath made Goodneſs a noble and a ſtately thing; hath impreſſed upon it that beauty and majeſty which commands an univerſal love and veneration, which ſtrikes preſently both a kindly and an awfull reſpect into the minds of all men. * The righteous is (not onely in himſelf, but in common eſteem) more excellent than his neighbour. Power may be dreaded, Riches may be courted, Wit and Knowledge may be admired; but onely Goodneſs is truly eſteemed and honoured. Not onely men of goodneſs and diſcretion, but even the vulgar ſort of men (yea, as Plato hath well obſerved, the worſt men) do paſs this judgment, do prefer true Goodneſs above all things.

Γίνου τοῦ πλησίον τιμιώτερος ἐκ τοῦ φανῆναι χρηστότερος, &c. Naz Orat. de Paup.

Is gloriâ maximè excellit, qui virtute plurimùm præſtat. Cic.

Κατ' ἀλήθειαν ὁ ἀγαθὸς μόνος τιμητός. Ariſtot. Eth. 4. 3.

* Prov. 12. 26.

Adeo gratioſa virtus eſt, ut inſitum ſit etiam malis probare meliora. Sen de Benef 4. 17.

Θεῖόν τι καὶ εὔστοχόν ἐστι καὶ τοῖς κακοῖς· ὥστε πάμπολλοι τῶν σφόδρα κακῶν εὖ τοῖς λόγοις καὶ ταῖς δόξαις διαιρεῖν.) τοὺς ἀμείνους τῶν ἀνθρώπων, καὶ τοὺς χείρους. Plat. de Repub. XII.

4. God by his extraordinary providence, as there is reaſon and occaſion, doth interpoſe, ſo as to procure Honour to them, to maintain and further their reputation, who honour him. God faſhioneth the hearts of men: The hearts of the greateſt men are in his hand; he turneth them as the rivers of waters, whitherſoever he will: he conſequently raiſeth or depreſſeth us, as he pleaſes, in the judgments and affections of men. When a man's ways pleaſe the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him, ſaith the Wiſeman; that is, he diſpoſeth the moſt averſe minds to love and honour him. No envy can ſupplant, no ſlander can deface the credit of ſuch a perſon; ſince God hath taken it into his charge and care, ſince he hath ſaid it, that he will bring forth his righteouſneſs as the light, and his judgment as the noon-day. God alſo by ſecret methods, and undiſcernible trains, ordereth all events, managing our thoughts and deſigns, our enterprizes and actions ſo, that the reſult of them ſhall be matter of benefit, comfort and reputation, or of diſaſter, regret and diſgrace, as he thinks good. Victory and ſucceſs he abſolutely diſpoſeth of, and conſequently of the Honour that follows them; and they do uſually attend the honourers of God: for (as it is in the Pſalm) A good ſucceſs have they who keep his commandments. Many are the inſtances of perſons (ſuch as Abrahan, Joſeph, Moſes, David, Job and Daniel) who, for their ſignal honouring of God, from a baſe and obſcure, or from an afflicted and forlorn condition, have, in ways ſtrange and wonderfull, been advanced to eminent dignity, have been rendred moſt illuſtrious, by the providence of him, who raiſeth the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth the begger out of the dunghill, to ſet them among Princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory. He doeth it in an evident manner, and eminent degree, to ſome; he doth it in a convenient way, and competent meaſure, to all that honour him.

Pſal. 33. 15.
Prov. 21. 1.
Prov. 16 7.
Pſal 37. 6.
Pſal. 30. 7. & 90. 17.
Pſ. 111. 10.
Prov. 3. 4.
1 Sam. 2. 8.
Pſ. 107. 41.

5. Whereas men are naturally inclined to bear much regard to the judgment of Poſterity concerning them, are deſirous to leave a Good name behind them, and to have their memory retained in eſteem: God ſo diſpoſes things, that the memory of the juſt ſhall be bleſſed; that his righteouſneſs ſhall be had in everlaſting remembrance; that his light ſhall rejoyce, (or burn clearly and pleaſantly, even when his life is put out here.) No ſpices can ſo embalm a man, no monument can ſo preſerve his name and memory, as a pious converſation, whereby God hath been honoured, and men benefited. The fame of ſuch a perſon is, in the beſt judgments, far more precious

Cic. Tuſc. 1.
Prov. 10. 7.
Pſal 112. 6.
Prov. 13. 9.

Ἀνάγκη, ὡς ἔοικε, μέλειν ἡμῖν καὶ τοῦ ἔπειτα χρόνου· ἐπειδὴ καὶ τυγχάνουσι κατά τινα φύσιν, οἱ μὲν ἀνδραποδωδέστατοι, οὐδὲν φροντίζοντες αὐτοῦ. οἱ δ' ἐπιεικέστατοι, πᾶν ποιοῦντες ὅπως ἂν εἰς τὸν ἔπειτα χρόνον εὖ ἀκούωσιν. Plat. Epiſt. 2.

precious and truly glorious, than is the fame of thoſe who have excelled in any other deeds or qualities. For what ſober man doth not in his thoughts afford a more high and hearty reſpect to thoſe poor Fiſhermen, who by their heroical activity and patience did honour God in the propagation of his heavenly Truth, than to all thoſe Hectors in Chivalry, thoſe Conquerors and atchievers of mighty exploits, (thoſe Alexanders and Cæſars) who have been renowned for doing things which ſeemed great, rather than for performing what was truly good? To the honour of thoſe excellent poor men conſpicuous monuments have been erected every-where; anniverſary memorials of their names and vertues are celebrated; they are never mentioned or thought of without reſpect; their commendations are interwoven with the praiſes of their great Lord and Maker, whom they honoured.

Τῶν δὲ δούλων τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ τὰ σήματα λαμπρὰ, καὶ ἡμέραι καταφανεῖς, ἑορτὴν τῇ οἰκουμένῃ ποιοῦσαι, &c. Chryſ. in 2 Cor. Or. 27.

6. Laſtly, to thoſe who honour God here, God hath reſerved an Honour infinitely great and excellent, in compariſon whereto all Honours here are but dreams, the loudeſt acclamations of mortal men are but empty ſounds, the brighteſt glories of this world are but duskiſh and fleeting ſhadows; an honour moſt ſolid, moſt durable; an eternal weight of glory. They ſhall in the face of all the world be approved by the moſt righteous Judge his unqueſtionable Sentence; they ſhall be eſteemed in the unanimous opinion of Angels and Saints; they ſhall be applauded by the general voice and atteſtation of Heaven; they ſhall then be ſeated upon unmovable Thrones, their heads encircled with unfading Crowns, their faces ſhining with rays of unconceivable Glory and Majeſty. The leſs of Honour they have received here, in this tranſitory moment of life, the more thereof they ſhall enjoy in that future eternal ſtate: where, with him who, through the whole courſe of his life, ſought not his own honour, but the honour of him that ſent him; who, for the ſuffering of death, was crowned with glory and honour; who, for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is ſet at the right hand of God; with thoſe who conſecrated all their endeavours, and who ſacrificed their lives to the promoting of God's Honour, they ſhall poſſeſs everlaſting glory. Which, together with them, God Almighty of his infinite mercy grant unto us all, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; to whom, with God the Father, and God the Holy Ghoſt, be for ever all Honour and Praiſe. Amen.

2 Cor. 4. 17.

Joh. 8. 49, 50.
Heb. 2. 9.
12. 2.

SERMON V.

Upright walking Sure walking.

PROV. X. 9.

He that walketh uprightly, walketh ſurely.

THE world is much addicted to the Politicks; the heads of men are very buſie in contrivance, and their mouths are full of talk about the ways of conſulting our ſafety, and ſecuring our intereſts. May we not therefore preſume, that an infallible Maxim of Policy, propoſing the moſt expedient and certain method of ſecurity in all our tranſactions, will be entertained with acceptance? Such an one the greateſt Politician and wiſeſt man for buſineſs (if we may take God's own word for it) that ever was or will be, doth here ſuggeſt to us. For the practice couched in our Text he otherwhere voucheth for a point of Policy, telling us, that A man of underſtanding walketh uprightly: and here he recommendeth it as a method of Security, He that walketh uprightly, walketh ſurely.

1 King. 3. 12.

Prov. 15. 21.

Treating upon which Aphoriſm, I ſhall, by God's help, Endeavour, firſt, in way of Explication, briefly to deſcribe the practice it ſelf; then, in way of Proof, by ſome Conſiderations to declare, that Security doth attend it.

For Explication. To walk (as well in the ſtyle of Holy Scripture, as in other Writings, and even in common ſpeech) doth ſignifie our uſual courſe of dealing, or the conſtant tenour of our practice.

Uprightly, according to the original, might be rendred, in perfection, or, with integrity: and by the Greek Tranſlators in ſeveral places is ſuppoſed chiefly to denote Sincerity and Purity of intention.

בתום

In effect, the Phraſe, He that walketh uprightly, doth import, One who is conſtantly diſpoſed in his deſigns and dealings to bear a principal regard to the rules of his duty, and the dictates of his Conſcience; who in every caſe emergent is ready to perform that, which upon good deliberation doth appear moſt juſt and fit, in conformity to God's Law and ſound Reaſon, without being ſwayed by any appetite, any paſſion, any ſiniſter reſpect to his own private intereſt of profit, credit, or pleaſure, to the commiſſion of any unlawfull, irregular, unworthy, or baſe act; who generally doth act out of good principles; (namely, reverence to God, charity to men, ſober regard to his own true welfare;) who doth aim at good ends, that is, at God's honour, publick benefit, his own Salvation, other good things ſubordinate to thoſe, or well conſiſtent with them; who doth proſecute his deſigns by lawfull means, in fair ways, ſuch as honeſt providence and induſtry, veracity and fidelity, dependence upon God's help, and prayer for his bleſſing: In ſhort, One who never adviſedly doth undertake any bad thing, nor any good thing to ill purpoſes; nor doth uſe any foul means to compaſs his intents.

He that walketh in his uprightneſs, feareth the Lord. Prov. 14. 2.

For Proof. That ſuch an one doth ever proceed with much ſecurity, from the following Conſiderations may appear.

I. An upright walker is ſecure of eaſily finding his way. For it commonly requireth no reach of wit or depth of judgment, no laborious diligence of enquiry, no curious intentneſs of obſervation, no ſolicitous care, or plodding ſtudy, to diſcern in any caſe what is juſt; we need not much trouble our heads about it, for we can hardly be to ſeek for it. If we will but open our eyes, it lieth in view before us, being the plain, ſtreight, obvious road, which common Reaſon prompteth, or which ordinary Inſtruction pointeth out to us: ſo that uſually that direction of Solomon is ſufficient, Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eye-lids look ſtreight before thee —— Turn not to the right hand, nor to the left.

Prov. 4. 25, 27. & 17. 24. & 14. 6.

The ways of iniquity and vanity, (if we may call them ways, which indeed are but exorbitances and ſeductions from the way,) ill deſigns and bad means of executing deſigns, are very unintelligible, very obſcure, abſtruſe and intricate; being infinitely various, and utterly uncertain: ſo that out of them to pick and fix on this or that, may puzzle our heads, and perplex our hearts; as to purſue any of them, may involve us in great difficulty and trouble. But the ways of Truth, of Right, of Vertue, are ſo very ſimple and uniform, ſo fixed and permanent, ſo clear and notorious, that we can hardly miſs them, or (except wilfully) ſwerve from them. For they by Divine wiſdom were chalked out, not onely for ingenious and ſubtle perſons, (men of great parts, of refined wits, of long experience,) but rather for the vulgar community of men, the great Body of God's ſubjects, conſiſting in perſons of meaneſt capacity, and ſmalleſt improvement: being deſigned to make wiſe the ſimple, to give the young man knowledge and diſcretion; to direct all ſorts of people in their duty, toward their happineſs; according to that in the Prophet, A high way ſhall be there, and it ſhall be called the way of Holineſs---- the way-faring men, though fools, ſhall not erre therein.

Pſal. 19. 7. & 119. 130. Prov. 8. 5. 1. 4. Pſal. 119. 9. Iſa. 35. 8. Ὁδὸς καθαρά. LXX.

They are in very legible characters graven by the finger of God upon our hearts and conſciences, ſo that by any conſiderate reflection inwards we may eaſily read them: or they are extant in God's Word, there written as with a Sun-beam, ſo perſpicuouſly expreſſed, ſo frequently inculcated, that without groſs negligence or ſtrange dulneſs we cannot but deſcry them. For who with half an eye may not ſee, that the practice of pious love and reverence toward God, of entire juſtice and charity toward our neighbour, of ſober temperance and purity toward our ſelves, is approved by Reaſon, is preſcribed by God to us?

Rom. 2. 15. Iſa. 30. 21. Pſal. 37. 31.

Hence in the Holy Scriptures, as bad ways are called dark, crooked, rough, ſlippery ways; ſo the good ways are ſaid to be * clear, plain, direct, even ways. || The path of the juſt (ſay they) is as a ſhining light. All the words of my mouth are plain to him that underſtandeth, (or, that conſidereth them.) My foot ſtandeth in an even place. The Law of his God is in his heart: none of his ſteps ſhall ſlide.

Prov. 4. 19 & 2. 13, 15. Joh. 8 12. Pſal. 82. 5. & 125. 5. & 35. 6. & 73. 18. Jer. 23. 12.
* Heb. 12. 13. Pſal. 5. 8. Luke 3. 5. Prov. 3. 23 Deut. 5. 32, & 28. 14.
|| Prov. 4 18.
Prov. 8. 8, 9. & 14. 6.
Πάντα ἐνώπια τοῖς συνιοῦσι, LXX.
Pſal. 26. 12. & 37. 31 & 26. 1. & 17. 5. & 18. 36.

Hence it is affirmed, that an upright man doth hardly need any conduct beſide his own honeſty. For, the integrity (ſaith Solomon) of the upright ſhall guide them; and, The righteouſneſs of the perfect ſhall direct his way.

Prov. 11. 3. 11. 5.

But in caſe ſuch an one ſhould ever be at a ſtand or at a loſs, in doubt of his courſe, he hath always at hand a moſt ſure guide to conduct or direct him. It is but asking the way of him, or ſaying, with the Pſalmiſt, Shew me thy ways, O Lord, teach me thy paths; Teach me to doe thy will, and, Lead me in the way everlaſting; O let me not wander from thy commandments: and then * his ears (as the Prophet ſaith) ſhall hear a word behind him ſaying, This is the way, walk ye in it; then the Words of the Pſalmiſt ſhall be verified, What man is he that feareth the Lord? him ſhall he teach in the way that he ſhall chuſe. The meek will he guide in judgment, and the meek he will teach his way.

Pſal. 25. 4. &
16.11.& 17.5.
Pſal. 143. 10.
& 139. 24.
& 119. 27.
Pſal. 119. 10.
27,33,35,&c.
*Iſa 30. 21.
Pſal. 25. 9.
12. & 37. 23.

Hence is the upright man happily ſecured from tiring pains in the ſearch, from racking anxieties in the choice, from grating ſcruples and galling regrets in the purſuit of his way.

(Prov. 12. 5.)

II. The upright walker doth tread upon firm ground. He doth build his practice, not upon the perillous bogs, the treacherous quagmires, the devouring quick-ſands of uncouth, bold, impious Paradoxes, (ſuch as have been vented by Epicurus, by Machiavel, by others more lately, whoſe infamous names are too well known, as the effects of their peſtilent notions are too much felt;) but upon ſolid, ſafe, approved, and well-tried principles; viz. theſe, and the like coherent with them: That there is an eternal God, incomprehenſibly powerfull, wiſe, juſt and good; who is always preſent with us, and ever intent upon us; viewing not onely all our external actions, (open and ſecret,) but our inmoſt cogitations, deſires and intentions, by the which our actions chiefly are to be eſtimated: That He, as Governour of the world, and Judge of men, doth concern himſelf in all humane affairs, diſpoſing and managing all events according to his righteous pleaſure; exacting punctual obedience to his laws, and diſpenſing recompences anſwerable thereto; with impartial juſtice rewarding each man according to the purpoſes of his heart, and the practices of his life: That all our good and happineſs doth abſolutely depend on God's favour; ſo that to pleaſe him can onely be true wiſdom, and to offend him the great folly: That vertue is incomparably the beſt endowment whereof we are capable, and Sin the worſt miſchief to which we are liable: That no worldly good or evil is conſiderable in compariſon with goods or evils ſpiritual: That nothing can be really profitable or advantageous, to us, which doth not conſiſt with our duty to God, doth not ſomewiſe conduce to our ſpiritual intereſt, and eternal welfare: yea, That every thing not ſerviceable to thoſe purpoſes is either a frivolous trifle, or a dangerous ſnare, or a notable damage, or a wofull bane to us: That content of mind, ſpringing from innocence of life, from the faithfull diſcharge of our duty, from ſatisfaction of Conſcience, from a good hope in regard to God and our future ſtate, is in our eſteem and choice much to be preferred before all the delights which any temporal poſſeſſion or fruition can afford; and, That a bad mind is the soreſt adverſity which can befall us. Such are the grounds of upright practice, more firm than any rock, more unſhakeable than the foundations of heaven and earth; the which are aſſured by the Sacred Oracles, and atteſted by many remarkable Providences; have ever been avowed by the wiſer ſort, and admitted by the general conſent of men, as for their truth, moſt agreeable to Reaſon, and for their uſefulneſs, approved by conſtant experience. The belief of them having apparently moſt wholſome influence upon all the concerns of life, both publick and private; indeed, being abſolutely needfull for upholding Government, and preſerving humane Society; no obligation, no faith or confidence between men, no friendſhip or peace being able to ſubſiſt without it. Whence the practice built on ſuch foundations muſt be very ſecure. And if God ſhall not ceaſe to be, if he will not let go the reins, if his Word cannot deceive, if the wiſeſt men are not infatuated, if the common ſenſe of mankind do not prove extravagant, if the main props of life and pillars of Society do not fail; he that walketh uprightly, doth proceed on ſure grounds.

III. The upright perſon doth walk ſteddily, maintaining his principal reſolutions, and holding his main courſe, through all occaſions, without flinching or wavering, or deſolutory inconſiſtence and fickleneſs; his integrity being an excellent ballaſt, holding him tight and well-poiſed in his deportment; ſo that waves of temptation daſhing on him do not make him roll in uncertainty, or topple over into unworthy practices.

Luſt, paſſion, humour, intereſt, are things very mutable, as depending upon temper of body, caſualties of time, the winds and tides of this vertiginous world: whence he that is guided or moved by them muſt needs be many-minded, and unſtable in all his ways; will real to and fro like a drunken man, and be at his wits ends; never enjoying any ſettled reſt of mind, or obſerving a ſmooth tenour of action. But good Conſcience is very ſtable, and perſiſteth unvaried through all circumſtances of time, in all viciſſitudes of fortune. For it ſteereth by immovable pole-ſtars, the inviolable rules of duty; it aimeth at marks which no force can ſtir out of their place; its objects of mind and affection are not tranſitory; its hopes and confidences are fixed on the rock of ages. Whence an upright perſon in all caſes, and all conditions, (proſperous or adverſe,) is the ſame man, and goeth the ſame way. Contingences of affairs do not unhinge his mind from its good purpoſes, or divert his foot from the right courſe. Let the weather be fair or foul, let the world ſmile or frown, let him get or loſe by it, let him be favoured or croſſed, commended or reproached, (by honour and diſhonour, by evil report and good report,) he will doe what his duty requireth: the external ſtate of things muſt not alter the moral reaſon of things with him. This is that which the Pſalmiſt obſerveth of him; He ſhall not be afraid of evil tidings, for his heart ſtandeth faſt, and believeth in the Lord. His heart is ſtabliſhed, and will not ſhrink. And this the Wiſe man promiſeth to him; Commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed.

Jam. 1. 8.
Pſal 107. 27.

Τετράγωνος.
Juſtum & tenacem propoſiti virum, &c.
Hor.

2 Cor 6. 8.

Pſal 112. 7 8.
Prov. 3 25.

Prov. 16. 3.

Hence a man is ſecured from diffidence in himſelf, and diſtraction in his mind, from frequently being off the hooks, from leading an unequal life, claſhing with it ſelf, from deluding and diſappointing thoſe with whom he converſeth or dealeth, and conſequently from the inconveniences iſſuing thence,

IV. The way of Uprightneſs is the ſureſt for diſpatch, and the ſhorteſt cut toward the execution or attainment of any good purpoſe; ſecuring a man from irkſome expectations and tedious delays, the which (as the Wiſe man ſaith) do make the heart ſick.

Prov. 13. 12.

It in Scripture is called the ſtreight and the plain way. And as in Geometry, of all lines or ſurfaces contained within the ſame bounds, the ſtreight line and the plain ſurface are the ſhorteſt: ſo it is alſo in Morality:

Luke 3. 5.

lity: by the right line of Juſtice, upon the plain ground of Vertue, a man ſooneſt will arrive to any well-choſen end.

Prov. 4. 27. Deut. 5. 32. & 28. 14.

In this way there are no bewildring intrigues and mazes, no crooked windings and turnings, no occaſions forcing men to dance hither and thither, to skip backward and forward, to doe and undoe; which courſes do protract buſineſs, and commonly do hinder from ever diſpatching it. But a man acting juſtly and fairly, doth continually proceed on in the direct open road, without retreat, excurſion, or deflection; not turning aſide (as the phraſe is in Holy Writ) to the right hand, or to the left.

Eccles 10. 8.

(Prov. 23. 10, 11.) Prov. 13. 11. & 22. 16. & 28. 22. 20. & 13. 11. & 21. 6. Jer. 17. 11.

Prov. 10. 4. & 28 19. & 13. 11. & 22. 4 Pſal. 112 3.

To clamber over fences of Duty, to break through hedges of Right, to treſpaſs upon hallowed encloſures, may ſeem the moſt ſhort and compendious ways of getting thither where one would be: But doth not a man venture breaking his neck, or ſcratching his face, incurring miſchief and trouble thereby? Is he not liable to the fate to which the Preacher doometh him, He that diggeth a pit ſhall fall into it: and whoſo breaketh a hedge, a ſerpent ſhall bite him? For inſtance, to grow rich, fraud, extortion, corruption, oppreſſion, over-reaching and ſupplanting may ſeem the readieſt and moſt expedite ways; but in truth they are the fartheſt ways about, or rather no ways at all: for that which is got by thoſe means is not our own; nor is the poſſeſſion of it truly wealth, but uſurpation, or detention of ſpoil and rapine, which we ought to diſgorge. And however, to the getting it there are often mighty difficulties occurring from men, there are commonly inſuperable obſtacles interpoſed by God; who hath expreſly condemned and curſed thoſe ways, declaring, that Wealth gotten by vanity (or cozenage) ſhall be diminiſhed; that He that oppreſſeth to encreaſe his riches, ſhall ſurely come to want; that; He who (thus) haſteth to be rich, hath an evil eye, and conſidereth not that poverty ſhall come upon him; that, As the partridge ſitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not: ſo he that getteth riches, and not by right, ſhall leave them in the midſt of his days, and at his end ſhall be a fool. Whereas the plain way of honeſt harmleſs induſtry, (joyned with a pious regard to him who is the diſpenſer of all good things,) how ſlow ſoever it may ſeem, is the moſt ſpeedy, becauſe the onely ſafe, way to thrive; having, beſide all ſecondary advantages, the ſecurity of thoſe Oracles; The hand of the diligent ſhall make rich: He that gathereth by labour, ſhall increaſe: By humility and the fear of the Lord are riches, and honour, and life.

Prov. 28 18. & 16. 17. & 13. 6. & 10. 29. & 12 21, 28.

V. The way of Uprightneſs is in it ſelf very ſafe, free of danger, tending to no miſchief; according to thoſe ſayings of the Wiſe man; There ſhall no evil happen to the juſt: In the way of righteouſneſs is life; and in the path thereof there is no death.

Pſal 37. 24.

He who deſigneth onely that which is juſt and reaſonable, who innocently and fairly proſecuteth his intent, can run no great hazzard, cannot fall into any extreme diſaſter, cannot irrecoverably ſink into miſerable diſappointment.

He probably will not receive much harm from men, or trouble from the world: for, as he meaneth innocently, as he dealeth inoffenſively, (not violently aſſailing, not fraudulently circumventing, not any-wiſe injuriouſly or maliciouſly abuſing any man,) as he doth yield no juſt provocation or urgent temptation to oppoſe him; ſo he is not very likely to meet with obſtructions or croſſes thwarting his deſigns. He can hardly raiſe up adverſaries; at leaſt ſuch as will prove very formidable, or very fierce and implacable toward him.

He may be ſure that few wiſe men, and no good men will trouble him; but that ſuch rather will afford their countenance and furtherance to his undertakings.

But aſſuredly he ſhall have the favourable protection of Almighty God, who throughly knowing his heart, and obſerving the righteouſneſs of his intentions and proceedings, will not ſuffer him to incurr any notable, deſtructive, remedileſs calamity. His prayer, dictated by good conſcience, Let integrity and uprightneſs preſerve me, will certainly be heard; God having paſſed his word for it in numberleſs places of Scripture; particularly in thoſe remarkable words of Iſaiah: * He that walketh righteouſly and ſpeaketh uprightly, he that deſpiſeth the gain of oppreſſions, that ſhaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that ſtoppeth his ears from hearing of bloud, and ſhutteth his eyes from ſeeing evil; He ſhall dwell on high, his place of defence ſhall be the munitions of rocks, his bread ſhall be given him, his water ſhall be ſure. That is, A man who is conſtantly uprightly in his dealings, ſhall by the Divine Providence be infallibly and impregnably preſerved from any grievous miſchief, from any ſore want, from any extreme diſtreſs.

Pſal. 25. 21. (Prov. 13. 6. & 11. 6.) Prov. 2. 7. & 18. 10. & 28. 18 & 29 25. Pſal. 18 2, 30. 35. & 23. 4. & 24. 4, 5. Job 11. 14, 15. * Iſa. 33. 15, 16.

The way of Uprightneſs is ever guarded with Angels, ready to promote the affairs of the honeſt perſon, or at leaſt to protect him from evil. He may hopefully ſay to himſelf, as Abraham did to his Servant, The Lord, before whom I walk, will ſend his Angel with thee, and proſper thy way: or he confidently may apply to himſelf that of the Pſalmiſt, He ſhall give his Angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways: They ſhall bear thee up in their hands, leſt thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone.

Gen 24. 40.

Pſ. 91 11, 12.

However, the ſequel will be tolerable: what-ever the ſucceſs of his undertaking be, it can be no ruin, no ſlurr, no heart-breaking to him. His Conſcience is ſafe, his credit is entire, his hopes are good; he is perfectly ſecure from being tainted with foul guilt, from being expoſed to due reproach, from being ſtung with vexatious remorſe, from being plunged into a gulf of deſperation or diſconſolateneſs. For,

VI. The way of Uprightneſs is fair and pleaſant. He that walketh in it hath good weather, and a clear skie about him; a hopefull confidence and a chearfull ſatisfaction do ever wait upon him. It is joy (as the Wiſe man ſaith) to the juſt to do judgment.

Prov. 21. 15.

Being conſcious to himſelf of an honeſt meaning, and a due courſe of proſecuting it, he feeleth no check or ſtrugling of mind, no regret or ſting of heart; being throughly ſatisfied and pleaſed with what he is about, his judgment approving, and his will acquieſcing in his procedure, as worthy of himſelf, agreeable to reaſon, and conformable to his duty.

(Prov. 23. 17, 18.)

He therefore briskly moveth forward with alacrity and courage; there being within him nothing to controll or countermand him, to pull him back, to make him halt, to diſtract or diſturb him.

Nor hardly can any thing abroad diſmay or diſcourage him. For he may reaſonably hope for the good will of men, and cannot hugely dread their oppoſition. He may ſtrongly preſume upon the propitious aſpect and favourable ſuccour of Heaven, which always ſmileth and caſteth benign influences on honeſt undertakings.

Prov. 11. 20.

He that hath choſen a good way, may with aſſurance commend his way to God's providence; he may depend upon God for his concurrent benediction; he with an humble boldneſs may addreſs prayers to God

Jer. 32. 19.
Prov. 24. 14.
Heb. 4 16.

Pſal. 37. 5. & 55. 22.
Prov. 16. 3.
Ecclus 2. 10.
Pſal. 34. 22. & 26. 1. & 33. 21.
Prov. 10. 24.
Pſal. 145. 18, 19. & 34. 15. & 26. 11.

for his protection and aid. He ſo doing hath intereſt in divers clear declarations and expreſs promiſes of good ſucceſs; ſuch as thoſe; Commit thy way unto the Lord, truſt alſo in him, and he ſhall bring it to paſs. The Lord is nigh unto all that call upon him in truth: he will fulfill the deſire of them that fear him; he will hear their cry, and will ſave them.

Job 22. 27.
Job 31. 6.
Pſal. 7. 8. & 26. 1.

He may dare to refer his caſe to the ſevereſt examination, ſaying with Job, Let me be weighed in an even balance, that God may know mine integrity; and with the Pſalmiſt, Judge me, O Lord, according to my righteouſneſs, and according to mine integrity, that is in me.

2 King 20. 3.

He with an humble confidence can appeal to God, borrowing the words of Hezekiah, I beſeech thee, O Lord, remember how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy ſight.

Prov. 10. 28.

Hence, The hope of the righteous (as the Wiſe man telleth us) is gladneſs. He conſidering the goodneſs, the juſtice, the fidelity of God, whereof his integrity doth render him capable and a proper object, cannot but conceive a comfortable hope of a good iſſue.

Pſal. 18. 20, 21.

And obtaining ſucceſs, he doth not onely enjoy the material pleaſure thereof, but the formal ſatisfaction that it is indeed good ſucceſs, or a bleſſing indulged to him by ſpecial favour of God; enabling him to ſay with the Pſalmiſt, The Lord rewarded me according to my righteouſneſs; according to the cleanneſs of my hands hath he recompenſed me. For I have kept the ways of the Lord, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

(Prov. 24. 16.)
Job 27. 5, 6.

However, an upright dealer hath this comfortable reſerve, that whatever doth befall him, however the buſineſs goeth, he ſhall not condemn, and puniſh himſelf with remorſe; he ſhall not want a conſolation able to ſupport and to erect his mind. He ſhall triumph, if not in the felicity of his ſucceſs, yet in the integrity of his heart, and the innocence of his deportment; even as Bleſſed Job did under all the preſſures of his adverſity: for, Till I die, (ſaid he) I will not remove my integrity from me. My righteouſneſs I hold faſt, and will not let it go: my heart ſhall not reproach me ſo long as I live.

Pſal. 97. 11.

So true it is upon all accompts, that, according to that aſſertion in the Pſalm, Light is ſown for the righteous, and joyfull gladneſs for the upright in heart.

VII. He that walketh uprightly is ſecure as to his honour and credit. He is ſure not to come off diſgracefully, either at home in his own apprehenſions, or abroad in the eſtimations of men. He doth not bluſh at what he is doing, nor doth reproach himſelf for what he hath done. No blemiſh or blame can ſtick upon his proceeding.

By pure Integrity a man firſt maintaineth a due reſpect and eſteem for himſelf, then preſerveth an entire reputation with others: he reflecteth on his own heart with complacence, and looketh upon the world with confidence. He hath no fear of being detected, or care to ſmother his intents. He is content that his thoughts ſhould be ſounded, and his actions ſifted to the bottom. He could even wiſh, that his breaſt had windows, that his heart were tranſparent, that all the world might ſee through him, and deſcry the clearneſs of his intentions. The more curiouſly his ways are marked, the more exactly his dealings are ſcann'd, the more throughly his deſigns are penetrated and known; the greater approbation he is ſure to receive.

The iſſue of things aſſuredly will be creditable to him; and when the day-light hath ſcattered all miſts, hath cleared all miſpriſions and miſtakes, his reputation will ſhine moſt brightly: the event declaring, that he had no corrupt ends; the courſe of his proceedings being juſtified by the very light of things.

God himſelf will be concerned to vindicate his reputation, not ſuffering him to be conſiderably defamed; according to that promiſe, He ſhall bring forth thy righteouſneſs as the light, and thy judgment as the noon-day. That in Job will be made good to him, Then ſhalt thou lift up thy face without ſpot: and he may confidently averre with the Pſalmiſt, Then ſhall I not be aſhamed, when I have reſpect to all thy commandments.

Pſal. 37. 6, 19. & 34. 5. 1 Pet. 2. 6.
Job 11. 15.
Pſal. 119 6, 39, 46.

If he findeth good ſucceſs, it will not be invidious, appearing well deſerved, and fairly procured: it will be truly honourable as a fruit and recompence of Vertue, as a mark and pledge of the Divine favour toward him.

Pſal. 91. 15.

If he ſeemeth diſappointed, yet he will not be diſparaged: wiſe and candid men will excuſe him; good men will patronize his cauſe; no man of ſenſe and ingenuity will inſult on his misfortune. He ſhall not (as the Pſalmiſt aſſureth) be aſhamed in an evil time. Yea, often his repute from under a cloud will ſhine, if not with ſo glaring ſplendour, yet with a pleaſant luſtre; Uprightneſs diſpoſing him to bear adverſe events with a gracefull decency.

Pſal 37. 19.

VIII. The particular methods of acting which Uprightneſs diſpoſeth to obſerve, do yield great ſecurity from troubles and croſſes in their tranſactions.

What is the conduct of the upright man? He is clear, frank, candid, harmleſs, conſiſtent in all his behaviour, his diſcourſe, his dealing. His heart commonly may be ſeen in his face, his mind doth ever ſute with his ſpeech, his deeds have a juſt correſpondence with his profeſſions: he never faileth to perform what he doth promiſe, and to ſatisfie the expectations which he hath raiſed.

Prov. 13. 5. Pſal 36. 3, 4. & 3. 13. & 15. 2.

He doth not wrap himſelf in clouds, that none may ſee where he is, or know how to find him; may diſcern what he is about, or whither he tendeth.

He diſguiſeth not his intents with fallacious pretences of conſcience, of publick good, of ſpecial friendſhip and reſpect.

Prov. 10 18.

He doth uſe no diſingenuous, ſpitefull unjuſt tricks or ſleights to ſerve the preſent turn.

He laieth no baits or ſnares to catch men, alluring them into miſchief or inconvenience.

As he doth not affect any poor baſe ends, ſo he will not defile his fair intentions by ſordid means of compaſſing them; ſuch as are illuſive ſimulations and ſubdolous artifices, treacherous colluſions, ſlie inſinuations and ſycophantick detractions, verſatile whifflings and dodgings, flattering colloguings and glozings, ſervile crouchings and fawnings, and the like.

Jer. 5. 26. (Pſal. 64 5. & 56. 6 & 9 15. & 7. 15. & 10. 2. & 57. 6. & 35. 7. & 140. 5. Prov. 26. 27. Eccles 10. 8) Pſal. 10 7. & 55 21. & 64. 6. & 10 9, 10. & 56. 5.

He hath little of the Serpent, (none of its lurking inſidiouſneſs, of its ſurprizing violence, of its rancorous venom, of its keen mordacity,) but much of the Dove, (all its ſimplicity, its gentleneſs, its fidelity, its innocence,) in his converſation and commerce.

Rom. 16. 18. Ecclus 19 26. 2 Sam. 15. 5. Prov. 11. 9. & 26. 25.

His wiſedom is ever tempered with ſincerity, and ſeaſoned with humanity, with meekneſs, with charity; being the wiſedom which is from above, firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, eaſie to be entreated, full of good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocriſie.

Jam. 3. 17.

Prov. 14 33. & 29 11. & 13. 16. & 13. 3. & 21. 23. & 12. 23. Ecclus 20. 7. Prov. 22. 3. & 27. 12. & 14. 8. & 14. 15, 16. Eccles 8. 5. Prov. 12. 16. 19. 11.

He ſometime may prudently reſerve his mind, not venting it by fooliſh loquacity: but his words do never claſh with his meaning, ſo as to deceive or diſappoint any man.

He may warily prevent harm and decline perils: but it is without hurtfull countermining, or deriving miſchief on his neighbour.

He may diſcreetly pick out ſeaſons and embrace opportunities of righting or benefitting himſelf: but he never will will ſeek or lay hold of advantages to prejudice others.

He ſometimes may repreſs inſurrections of anger or diſguſt: but he never doth allow them to bake into rancour or malice.

He may be apt to uſe courteous, affable, obliging demeanour, ſerving to breed friendſhips, and to ſtifle enmities: but he never thereby meaneth to gull, inveigle and entrap men; or to procure inſtruments and aids of any perverſe deſign.

He is no enemy to himſelf, but (according to the obligations of reaſon and conſcience) he hath always a regard to the good of others; nor is ever ſo ſelfiſh, as to be unjuſt or uncharitable to any man.

The principal engines he doth employ for atchieving his enterpriſes are, a carefull and cautious providence in contriving, a ſedulous and ſteddy diligence in acting, a circumſpect heedfulneſs not to provoke any man by offenſive carriage, by injury, by diſcourteſie, to obſtruct him, but rather by kind demonſtrations and real beneficence to engage men to further him in his proceedings: but eſpecially his main inſtrument, wherein he moſt confideth, is devout ſupplication to God for his ſuccour and bleſſing.

Now is not this conduct the moſt ſecure that can be? doth it not afford many great commodities and advantages? doth it not exempt from manifold fears, and cares, and croſſes, and ſlaveries?

Prov. 12. 22. (Pro. 12. 19.)

It cannot but derive bleſſings from the God of truth, the great friend of ſimplicity and ſincerity, the hater of falſhood and guile.

Prov. 26. 25. 10. 18. 21. 6. Pſal. 26. 4.

And humanely regarding things, he that uſeth theſe methods, doth from them obtain many conveniences. He doth not lie under perpetual conſtraint, engaged to keep a conſtant guard upon himſelf, to watch his memory, to curb his tongue, to manage his very looks and geſtures, leſt they betray his intentions, and diſcloſe his plots. He is not at the trouble of ſtopping holes, of mending flaws, of patching up repugnances in his actions, that his mind do not break through them. He is not afraid of the diſappointment and ſhame which attend the detection of unworthy deſigns. He is not at pains to obviate the jealouſies, the ſurmiſes, the diffidences, the counterplots, the preventive oppoſitions and aſſaults, which gloomy cloſeneſs and crafty diſſimulation ever do raiſe againſt the practiſers of them. In fine, men do not ſhun the converſation and the commerce of an upright perſon, but gladly do conſort and deal with him; do ſeek his acquaintance and alliance: they are not apt to diſtruſt him, to ſuſpect him, to be ſhy and reſerved in their intercourſe with him; but readily do place an entire confidence in him, and uſe a clear frankneſs toward him. No man doth fear him as dangerous, or will croſs him as an adverſary. Whence as he ſeldom hath cauſe to fear, or occaſion to conteſt with others; ſo he doth undiſturbedly enjoy the benefits of Society with great ſafety, eaſe and comfort.

IX. Laſtly, An upright walker hath perfect ſecurity, as to the final reſult of affairs, that he ſhall not be quite baffled in his expectations and deſires. And if proſperity doth conſiſt in a ſatisfaction of mind concerning events, he cannot fail of moſt proſperous ſucceſs. Whatſoever he doeth (ſaith the Pſalmiſt of him) it ſhall proſper. How is that? Doth he, if he warreth, always get the victory? is he perpetually, when he tradeth, a conſiderable gainer? will he certainly after ſowing reap a plentifull crop? Probably yes; and perhaps no: Yet aſſuredly he ſhall proſper, in the true notion of proſperity, explained by thoſe Divine ſayings; Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace. The work of righteouſneſs ſhall be peace, and the effect of righteouſneſs quietneſs and aſſurance for ever. Surely I know it ſhall be well with them that fear God.

Pſal. 1. 3.
Prov. 12. 21.
Pſal. 37. 37.
Iſa. 32. 17.
Eccles 8. 12.

He cannot be much defeated in his purpoſes: for, as to his general, principal, abſolute deſigns, (that is, his deſign of pleaſing God, and procuring his favour; his deſign of ſatisfying himſelf, and diſcharging his Conſcience; his deſign of promoting his own ſpiritual intereſt, and ſaving his Soul; his deſign of doing good, of exerciſing charity to his neighbour, of ſerving the publick, of obliging the world by vertuous example, and by real beneficence,) theſe he cannot fail thoroughly to accompliſh; nothing can obſtruct him in the proſecution, nothing can debarre him from the execution of theſe undertakings; in ſpite of all the world, by the ſuccour of that Divine grace which ever doth favour and further ſuch deſigns, he moſt happily will atchieve them. And for other inferiour deſigns, he can hardly be croſſed in regard to them: for it is an eſſential part of integrity, not otherwiſe to affect or aim at private ſecular intereſts, than under condition, and with a reſervation, if it be God's pleaſure, if it ſeem good to Divine Wiſedom. He knoweth that his pains employed on any honeſt purpoſe, in a fair way, (be it to procure ſome worldly advantage for himſelf, for his relations, for his friend,) are not loſt, if they have the fruit of ſubmiſſion to God's will, and acquieſcence in the event diſpoſed by him. He is aſſured that it is good luck to have his project blaſted, and that miſſing is better than getting, when by Sovereign Wiſedom it is ſo determined. He therefore could not ſo fix his heart, or engage his affection in any ſuch concern, that his mind is ſurpriſed, or his paſſions diſcompoſed by a ſeeming adverſneſs of events to his endeavours. So that in effect he can have no bad ſucceſs. For how can that occurrence be deemed bad, which plain reaſon dictateth in certain judgment to be moſt expedient for him; about which he ever was very indifferent, and with which at preſent he is not heartily diſpleaſed? How can it be taken for diſappointment and misfortune, which one was prepared to embrace with ſatisfaction and complacence?

Yea, to a perſon ſo diſpoſed, that ſucceſs which ſeemeth moſt adverſe, juſtly may be reputed the beſt and moſt happy, as promoting ends incomparably more excellent than any worldly gain; as producing fruits exceedingly more wholeſome and more ſavoury than any temporal commodity; as exerciſing and improving the divineſt Vertues, (Humility, Patience, Meekneſs, Moderation, Contentedneſs) a grain whereof is worth all the wealth, all the preferment, all that is deſirable in the world.

Wherefore let the worſt that can arrive, (or that which humane blindneſs and fondneſs do count the worſt,) yet upright perſons do not come off ill, or ſo (matters being rightly ſtated) as to be loſers upon the foot of the accompt.

Pſal. 35. 27.
Prov. 11. 20.
15. 9
Prov. 14. 2.
Deut. 28 2, &c. & 30. 9.
Pſ. 128 1, 2.
& 91. 1—— & 34. 9, 10.
& 84. 11.
Matt. 6. 33.
Eccleſ. 8. 5.
Prov 28. 10, 20. & 10. 6.

If this do not ſatisfie groſſer apprehenſions, we may adde, that even in theſe meaner concerns Almighty God is pleaſed commonly to reward and encourage upright perſons by the beſt ſucceſs. For He hath as it were a natural inclination to gratifie thoſe who deſire to pleaſe him; and (as the Pſalmiſt expreſſeth it) hath pleaſure in the proſperity of his ſervants. He may ſeem concerned in honour to countenance thoſe who have regard to his will, and who repoſe confidence in his aid; diſcriminating them from ſuch as preſume to act againſt or without him, in defiance to his will, with no deference to his Providence. As they do render him his due reſpect, by ſubmitting to his authority, and avowing his power; ſo he will acknowledge them by ſignally favouring their concerns. Even his truth and fidelity are engaged in their behalf; ſeeing he very often hath declared and promiſed, that in all matters, and upon all occaſions, he will be ready to bleſs them.

(Prov. 11. 18.)
Rom. 2. 16.
1 Cor. 3. 13.
1 Cor. 4 5.
1 Tim. 1. 17.

X. To conclude; It is an infinite advantage of upright dealing, that at the laſt iſſue, when all things ſhall be moſt accurately tried and impartially decided, a man is aſſured to be fully juſtified in it, and plentifully rewarded for it. As then all the deceits, which now paſs under ſpecious masks, ſhall be laid bare; all varniſh of pretence ſhall be wiped off; all perverſe intrigues ſhall be unravelled; all wicked and baſe intentions ſhall be quite ſtripp'd of the veils which now enfold them; all ſhrewd contrivers and engineers of miſchief, all practiſers of unjuſt and malicious guile, ſhall be expoſed to ſhame, ſhall lie down in ſorrow: So then The righteous man ſhall ſtand in great boldneſs; his caſe will be rightly ſtated, and fully cleared from ſlanderous aſperſions, from odious ſurmiſes, from unluckey prejudices and miſtakes: what he hath done, ſhall be approved; what he hath ſuffered, ſhall be repaired. So that it then evidently will appear; that upright ſimplicity is the deepeſt wiſedom, and perverſe craft the meereſt ſhallowneſs: that he who is true and juſt to others, is moſt faithfull and friendly to himſelf: that who-ever doth abuſe his neighbour, is his own greateſt cheater and foe. For, In the day when God ſhall judge the ſecrets of men by Jeſus Chriſt, every man's work ſhall be made manifeſt. The Lord will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the counſels of the hearts; and then ſhall every man have praiſe of God. Unto which our upright Judge, the King eternal, immortal, inviſible, the onely wiſe God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

SERMON VI.

Of the Duty of Prayer.

1 THES. V. 17.

Pray without ceaſing.

IT is the manner of S. Paul in his Epiſtles, after that he hath diſcuſſed ſome main Points of doctrine or diſcipline, (which occaſion required that he ſhould clear and ſettle,) to propoſe ſeveral good advices and rules, in the obſervance whereof the life of Chriſtian practice doth conſiſt. So that he thereby hath furniſhed us with ſo rich a variety of moral and ſpiritual precepts, concerning ſpecial matters, ſubordinate to the general laws of Piety and Vertue; that out of them might well be compiled a Body of Ethicks, or Syſtem of Precepts de officiis, in truth and in compleatneſs far excelling thoſe which any Philoſophy hath been able to deviſe, or deliver. Theſe he rangeth not in any formal method, nor linketh together with ſtrict connexion, but freely ſcattereth them ſo as from his mind (as out of a fertile ſoil, impregnated with all ſeeds of wiſdom and goodneſs) they did haply ſpring up, or as they were ſuggeſted by that Holy Spirit which continually guided and governed him,

Among divers ſuch delivered here, this is one, which ſhall be the Subject of my preſent Diſcourſe; the which, having no other plain coherence (except by affinity of matter) with the reſt encloſing it, I ſhall conſider abſolutely by it ſelf, endeavouring ſomewhat to explain it, and to urge its practice.

Pray without ceaſing. For underſtanding theſe words, let us firſt conſider what is meant by the act enjoyned, Praying; then, what the qualification or circumſtance adjoyned, without ceaſing, doth import.

1. The word Prayer doth in its uſual latitude of acception comprehend all ſorts of Devotion, or all that part of Religious practice wherein we do immediately addreſs our ſelves to God, having by ſpeech (oral or mental) a kind of intercourſe and converſation with him. So it includeth that Praiſe which we ſhould yield to God, implying our due eſteem of his moſt excellent Perfections, moſt glorious Works, moſt juſt and wiſe diſpenſations of Providence and Grace; that Thankſgiving whereby we ſhould expreſs an affectionate reſentment of our obligation to him for the numberleſs great benefits we receive from him; that Acknowledgment of our entire dependence upon him, or our total ſubjection to his power and pleaſure; together with that Profeſſion of Faith in him, and avowing of ſervice to him, which we doe owe as his natural creatures and ſubjects; that humble Confeſſion of our infirmity, our vileneſs, our guilt, our miſery, (joyned with deprecation of wrath and vengeance,) which is due from us as wretched men, and grievous ſinners; that Petition of things needfull or convenient for us,

(of ſupply in our wants, of ſuccour and comfort in our diſtreſſes, of direction and aſſiſtence in our undertakings, of mercy and pardon for our offences,) which our natural ſtate (our poor, weak, ſad and ſinfull ſtate) doth engage us to ſeek; that Interceſſion for others, which general charity, or ſpecial relation do require from us, as concerned or obliged to deſire and promote their good. All theſe Religious performances Prayer in its larger notion doth compriſe; according whereto in common uſe the whole Body of Divine Service, containing all ſuch acts, is termed Prayer; and Temples, conſecrated to the performance of all holy duties, are ſtyled Houſes of prayer; and that Brief Directory, or pregnant Form of all Devotion, which our Lord dictated, is called his Prayer: and in numberleſs places of Scripture it is ſo taken.

In a ſtricter ſenſe, it doth onely ſignifie one particular act among thoſe, the Petition of things needfull or uſefull for us.

But according to the former more comprehenſive meaning I chuſe to underſtand it here; both becauſe it is moſt commonly ſo uſed, (then, eſpecially, when no diſtinctive limitation is annexed, or the nature of the ſubject matter doth not reſtrain it,) and becauſe general reaſons do equally oblige to performance of all theſe duties in the manner here preſcribed: nor is there any ground to exclude any part of Devotion from continual uſe; we being obliged no leſs inceſſantly to praiſe God for his excellences, and thank him for his benefits, to avow his Sovereign Majeſty and Authority, to confeſs our infirmities and miſcarriages, than to beg help and mercy from God. All Devotion therefore, all ſorts of
Eph. 6. 18. proper and due addreſs to God (that πᾶσα προσευχὴ, all prayer and ſupplication, which S. Paul otherwhere ſpeaketh of) are here injoyned, according to the manner adjoyned, without ceaſing, ἀδιαλείπτως, that is, indeſinently, or continually.

2. For the meaning of which expreſſion, we muſt ſuppoſe, that it muſt not be underſtood as if we were obliged in every inſtant or ſingular point of time actually to apply our minds to this practice: for to doe thus is in it ſelf impoſſible, and therefore can be no matter of duty; it is inconſiſtent with other duties, and therefore muſt not be practiſed; yea, will not conſiſt with it ſelf; for, that we may pray, we muſt live, that we may live, we muſt eat, that we may eat, we muſt work, and muſt therefore attend other matters: ſo that actual Devotion neither muſt, nor can ſwallow up all our time and care. The deliberate operations of our mind are ſometimes interrupted by ſleep, ſometimes will be taken up in ſatisfying our natural appetites, ſometimes muſt be ſpent in attendence upon other reaſonable employments, commanded or allowed by God; whence there can be no obligation to this practice according to that unlimited interpretation. This Precept therefore (as divers others of a like general purport and expreſſion) muſt be underſtood, not in a natural, but moral ſenſe, according as the exigence of things permitteth, or as the reaſon of the caſe requireth; ſo far as it is conveniently practicable, or as it is reaſonably compatible with other duties and needs. But we muſt not ſo reſtrain it as to wrong it, by pinching it within too narrow bounds. How then it may be underſtood, and how Adoro Scripturæ plenitudinem. Tertull. far it ſhould extend, we ſhall endeavour to declare by propounding divers ſenſes whereof it is capable, grounded upon plain teſtimonies of Scripture, and enforcible by good Reaſon; according to which ſenſes we ſhall together preſs the obſervance thereof.

I. Firſt then, Praying inceſſantly, may import the maintaning in our Souls a ready diſpoſition or habitual inclination to Devotion; that which in Scripture is termed the ſpirit of ſupplication. This in moral eſteem, and according to current language, derived thence, amounteth to a continual practice; a man being reckoned and ſaid to doe that, to which he is ever prompt and propenſe: as it is ſaid of the righteous man, that he is ever mercifull, and lendeth, becauſe he is conſtantly diſpoſed to ſupply his neighbour with needfull relief; although he doth not ever actually diſpenſe alms, or furniſh his neighbour with ſupplies for his neceſſity. The words may ſignifie this; they do at leaſt by conſequence imply ſo much: for if we do not in this, we can hardly perform the duty in any ſenſe; without a good temper fitting, and a good appetite prompting to Devotion, we ſcarce can, or will ever apply our ſelves thereto. If there be not in our heart a root of Devotion, whence ſhould it ſpring? how can it live, or thrive? If the organs of Prayer are out of kelter, or out of tune, how can we pray? If we be not accincti, have not the loins of our mind girt, and our feet ſhod in preparation to the ſervice, when ſhall we ſet forward thereto? My heart (ſaid David) is fixed, I will ſing and give praiſe: fixed, that is, readily prepared, and ſteddily inclined to devotion. So ſhould ours conſtantly be. As a true friend is ever ready to entertain his friend with a frank courteſie and complacency; as he ever is apt upon occaſion for advice and aſſiſtence to have recourſe to him: ſo ſhould we be always diſpoſed chearfully and decently to converſe with God, when he freely cometh to us, or we have need to apply our ſelves to him. If there be (from ſtupidity of mind, from coldneſs of affection, from ſluggiſhneſs of ſpirit, from worldly diſtraction) any indiſpoſition or averſeneſs thereto, we ſhoul by ſerious conſideration and induſtrious care labour to remove them; rouſing our ſpirits, and kindling in our affections ſome fervency of deſire toward ſpiritual things: otherwiſe we ſhall be apt to ſhun, or to ſlip the opportunities inviting to Devotion; our hearts will be ſo reſty, or liſtleſs, that hardly we ſhall be induced to perform it, when it is moſt neceſſary or uſefull for us.

Zech. 12. 10.

Pſal. 37. 26.

Ut quamvis tacet Hermogenes, cantor tamen æquè eſt, &c. Hor.

1 Pet. 1. 13.
Luke 12. 35.
Eph. 6 14.
Pſal. 108. 1.
(2 Chr. 30. 19 Ezr. 7. 10)

II. Praying inceſſantly may denote a vigilant attendence (with earneſt regard, and firm purpoſe) employed upon Devotion: ſuch attendence as men uſually beſtow on their affairs, whereof although the actual proſecution ſometime doth ſtick, yet the deſign continually proceedeth; the mind ever ſo directing its eye toward them, as quickly to eſpy, and readily to ſnatch any advantages of promoting them. This is a kind of continuance in practice, and is commonly ſo termed: as we ſay that ſuch an one is building a houſe, is writing a book, is occupying ſuch land, although he be at preſent ſleeping, or eating, or following any other buſineſs; becauſe his main deſign never ſleepeth, and his purpoſe continues uninterrupted. This is that which is ſo often injoyned under the phraſe of watching about Prayer. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, ſaith our Lord. Continue in prayer, and watch in the ſame, ſaith S. Paul. Be ye ſober, and watch unto prayer, ſaith S. Peter. Which expreſſions import a moſt conſtant and carefull attendance upon this duty: that we do not make it a πάρεργον, or by-buſineſs in our life, (a matter of ſmall conſideration or indifference, of curioſity, of chance,) to be tranſacted drowzily or faintly, with a deſultorious and ſlight endeavour, by fits, as the humour taketh us; but that, accounting it a buſineſs of the choiceſt nature and weightieſt moment, we do adhere thereto with unmoveable purpoſe, regard it with undiſtracted attention, purſue it with unwearied diligence, being always upon the guard, wakefull and expedite, intent upon and apt to cloſe with any

Luke 21. 36.
Col. 4. 2.
Eph. 6 18.
1 Pet. 4. 7.
Matt. 24. 42.
25. 13.

K occaſion

occaſion ſuggeſting matter thereof. That we ſhould doe thus reaſon alſo doth oblige: for that, as in truth no buſineſs doth better deſerve our utmoſt reſolution and care, ſo none doth more need them; nature being ſo backward, and occaſion ſo ſlippery, that if we doe not ever mind it, we ſhall ſeldome practiſe it.

2 Pet. 1 12. ἀεὶ ὑπομιμν. Gal. 4 18. πάντοτε ζηλοῦσθαι.

III. Praying inceſſantly may ſignifie, that we do actually embrace all fit ſeaſons, and emergent occaſions of Devotion. This in moral computation doth paſs for continual performance: as a tree is ſaid to bear that fruit, which it produceth in the ſeaſon; and a man is accounted to work in that trade, which he exerciſeth whenever he is called thereto. This ſenſe is in ſeveral Precepts parallel to that in hand plainly expreſſed.

Eph. 6. 18. Luke 21. 36.

Pray (ſaith S. Paul) with all prayer and ſupplication ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ· and, Watch (ſaith our Lord) ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ δεόμενοι, praying in every ſeaſon, or upon every opportunity. Devotion indeed is rarely unſeaſonable, or impertinent; we may offer it εὐκαίρως, ἀκαίρως, in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon; that is, not onely taking opportunities preſented for it, or urgently requiring it, but catching at them and creating them to our ſelves, when there is no ſuch apparent and preſſing need of it. But there are ſome ſpecial occaſions, which more importunately and indiſpenſably do exact it: ſome ſeaſons there are (either miniſtred by extrinſecal accidents, or ſpringing from internal diſpoſitions) when, without both great blame, and much damage to our ſelves, we cannot neglect it: times there be moſt proper, and acceptable, when we do eſpecially need to pray, and when we are likely to ſpeed well therein.

2 Tim. 4 2.

Pſal. 32. 6. Pſal 69. 13. 2 Cor. 6. 2. Iſa. 49 8.

Every one (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) that is godly will pray unto thee in a time when thou mayeſt be found: and, My prayer (ſaith he again) is unto thee in an acceptable time.

Thus, when we have received any ſingular bleſſing or notable favour from God, when proſperous ſucceſs hath attended our honeſt enterpriſes, when we have been happily reſcued from imminent dangers, when we have been ſupported in difficulties, or relieved in wants and ſtraits; then it is ſeaſonable to render ſacrifices of Thankſgiving and praiſe to the God of victory, help and mercy; to admire and celebrate him, who is our ſtrength, and our deliverer, our faithfull refuge in trouble, our fortreſs, and the rock of our ſalvation. To omit this piece of Devotion then, is vile ingratitude, or ſtupid negligence and ſloth.

Pſal. 18 1, 2. & 71. 3, &c.

When any rare object or remarkable occurrence doth upon this theatre of the world preſent it ſelf to our view, in ſurveying the glorious works of Nature, or the ſtrange events of Providence; then is a proper occaſion ſuggeſted to ſend up hymns of Praiſe to the power, the wiſdom, the goodneſs of the World's great Creatour and Governour.

Δεῖ πάσης πράξεως προηγεῖσθαι προσευχήν. Marc. Erem.

When we undertake any buſineſs of ſpecial moment and difficulty; then it is expedient (wiſdom prompting it) to ſue for God's aid, to commit our affairs into his hand, to recommend our endeavours to the bleſſing of him, by whoſe guidance all things are ordered, without whoſe concourſe nothing can be effected, upon whoſe arbitrary diſpoſal all ſucceſs dependeth.

The beginning of any deſign or buſineſs (although ordinary, if conſiderable) is a proper ſeaſon of Prayer unto him, to whoſe bounty and favour we owe our ability to act, ſupport in our proceedings, any comfortable iſſue of what we doe: (for All our ſufficiency is of him: Without him we can doe nothing.) Whence we can never apply our ſelves to any buſineſs or work, not go to eat, to ſleep, to travel, to trade, to ſtudy, with any true content, and reaſonable ſecurity, any ſatisfactory hope, if we doe not firſt humbly implore the favourable protection, guidance and aſſiſtence of God.

2 Cor. 3. 5. John 15. 5.

When we do fall into doubts, or darkneſſes, (in the courſe either of our ſpiritual or ſecular affairs,) not knowing what courſe to ſteer, or which way to turn our ſelves; (a caſe which to ſo blind and ſilly creatures, as we are, muſt often happen;) then doth the time bid us to conſult the great Oracle of truth, the mighty Counſeller, the Father of lights, ſeeking reſolution and ſatisfaction, light and wiſdom from him; ſaying with the Pſalmiſt, Shew me thy ways, O Lord, lead me in thy truth, and teach me; for thou art the God of my ſalvation: Order my ſteps in thy word, and let not any iniquity have dominion over me; following the advice of S. James, If any man lack wiſedom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it ſhall be given him.

Jer 10. 23.
Prov. 20. 24. 16. 9.
Iſa 9 6.
Jam. 1. 17.
Pſal. 25. 4, 5, 8 & 27. 11. & 86. 11 & 143. 10. & 32. 8. & 119. 125.
Pſa 119 133.
Jam 1. 5.
Prov. 2. 6.

When any ſtorm of danger bluſtereth about us, perillouſly threatning, or furiouſly aſſailing us with miſchief, (ſo that hardly by our own ſtrength or wit we can hope to evade) then with the wings of ardent Devotion we ſhould fly unto God for ſhelter, and for relief.

Iſa. 30. 1.
Pſal. 56. 3.
& 34 4.
& 18 3.

When any anxious care diſtracteth, or any heavy burthen preſſeth our minds, we ſhould by Prayer eaſe our ſelves of them, and diſcharge them upon God, committing the matter of them to his care and providence; according to that direction of S. Paul, Be carefull for nothing: but in every thing by prayer and ſupplication with thanksgiving, let your requeſts be made known to God.

Phil. 4. 6.

When we do lie under any irkſome trouble, or ſore diſtreſs, (of want, pain, diſgrace;) then, for ſuccour and ſupport, for eaſe and comfort, we ſhould have recourſe to the Father of pities, and God of all conſolation; who is nigh to all that call upon him, will alſo hear their cry, and will ſave them; who, when the righteous cry, doth hear them, and delivereth them out of all their troubles; who is ſo often ſtyled the hiding-place from troubles, the help and ſtrength, the ſhield and buckler, the rock, the fortreſs, the high tower, the horn of ſalvation, to all good and diſtreſſed people. To him we ſhould in ſuch a condition have recourſe, imitating the pious Pſalmiſt, whoſe practice was this: In the day of my trouble I ſought the Lord: I poured out my complaint before him, I ſhewed before him my trouble: I called unto the Lord in my diſtreſs: the Lord anſwered me, and ſet me in a large place.

2 Cor. 1. 3.
Pſal. 145. 18, 19. & 147. 3.
Pſal. 34. 17.
Pſal. 18. 1, 2. & 56. 3. & 84. 9 & 32. 7. & 33. 20. & 71. 3.
Pſal. 77. 2 & 18. 6 & 142. 2. & 118. 5.

When any ſtrong temptation doth invade us, with which by our own ſtrength we cannot grapple, but are like to ſink and faulter under it; then is it opportune and needfull that we ſhould ſeek to God for a ſupply of ſpiritual forces, and the ſuccour of his Almighty grace, as S. Paul did: when there was given to him a thorn in the fleſh, a meſſenger of Satan to buffet him; then he beſought the Lord thrice that it might depart from him: and he had this return from God, My grace is ſufficient for thee.

2 Cor. 12. 7, 8, 9.

When alſo (from ignorance, or miſtake, from inadvertency, negligence, or raſhneſs, from weakneſs, from wantonneſs, from preſumption) we have tranſgreſſed our duty, and incurred ſinfull guilt; then, (for avoiding the conſequent danger and vengeance, for unloading our Conſciences of the burthen and diſcomfort thereof,) with humble Confeſſion in our mouths, and ſerious contrition in our hearts, we ſhould apply our ſelves to the God of mercy, deprecating his wrath, and imploring pardon from him; remembring that promiſe of S. John, If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithfull and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all iniquity; and that declaration of the Wiſe man, He that covereth his ſins ſhall not proſper: but he that confeſſeth and forſaketh them ſhall have mercy.

1 Joh. 1. 9.
Prov. 28. 13.
Pſal. 32. 5. & 51. 1, &c.
Job 7 20.

Heb. 4. 16.
* πρὸς εὔκαιρον βοήθειαν.

In theſe and the like caſes God by our neceſſities doth invite and ſummon us to come unto him; and no leſs fooliſh than impious we are, if we do then ſlink away, or fly from him. Then we ſhould (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews exhorteth) come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need, (or, * for ſeaſonable relief.)

Jer. 35. 15.
Prov. 1. 24.
Iſa. 50. 2. & 65. 12. & 66. 4.

And beſide thoſe outwardly prompting and urging us, there be other opportunities, ſpringing from within us, which we are no leſs obliged and concerned to embrace. When God by his gentle whiſpers calleth us, or by his ſoft impulſes draweth us into his preſence; we ſhould then take heed of ſtopping our ears, or turning our hearts from him, refuſing to hearken, or to comply. We muſt not any-wiſe quench or damp any ſparks of devout affection kindled in us by the Divine Spirit; we muſt not repell or reſiſt any of his kindly ſuggeſtions or motions.

When-ever we find our ſelves well affected to, or well framed for Devotion; that we have a lively ſenſe of, and a coming appetite to ſpiritual things; that our ſpirits are briſk and pure, our fancy calm and clear, our hearts tender and ſupple, our affections warm and nimble; then a fair ſeaſon offereth it ſelf; and when the iron is ſo hot, we ſhould ſtrike.

If at any time we feel any forward inclinations or good diſpoſitions to the practice of this duty, we ſhould never check or curb them, but rather ſhould promote and advance them; puſhing our ſelves forward in this hopefull career; letting out the ſtream of our affections into this right channel, that it may run freely therein, that it may overflow and diffuſe it ſelf in exuberance of Devotion. Farther,

Luke 18. 1.

Luke 18. 1.
Col. 1. 9.
Eph. 1. 16.
Rom. 12. 12.
Col. 4. 2, 12.
1 Tim. 5. 5.
Eph. 6. 18.

IV. Praying inceſſantly may ſignifie, that we ſhould with aſſiduous urgency drive on the intent of our Prayers, never quitting it, or deſiſting, till our requeſts are granted, or our deſires are accompliſhed. Thus doing, we may be ſaid to pray continually: as he that goeth forward in his journey, (although he ſometime doth bait, ſometime doth reſt and repoſe himſelf,) is ſaid yet to be in travel; or as he that doth not wave the proſecution of his cauſe, (although ſome demurrs intervene) is deemed ſtill to be in ſuit. This is that which our Lord did in the Goſpel preſcribe and perſuade, where 'tis recorded of him, that He ſpake a parable unto them, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint. That praying always the enſuing diſcourſe ſheweth to import reſtleſs importunity, and perſeverance in prayer: the ſame which ſo often is commended to us by the phraſes of μὴ ἐκκακεῖν, not to faint or faulter; μὴ παύεσθαι, not to ceaſe, or give over; προσκαρτερεῖν, to continue inſtant, or hold out ſtoutly; ἀγωνίζεσθαι, to ſtrive earneſtly, or conteſt and ſtruggle in prayers; προσμένειν ταῖς δεήσεσι, to abide at ſupplications; ἀγρυπνεῖν ἐν πάσῃ προσκαρτερήσει, to watch with all perſeverance.

* Pſal. 10. 4. & 9. 10. & 14 2. &. 24. 6. & 63. 1. & 69. 6, 32. & 70. 4. & 83. 16. Job 8. 5. Deut. 4. 29. Prov. 8. 17. Pſal. 77. 6.

* Pſal. 123. 2. &. 69. 3. & 130. 5. & 37. 7. & 25. 5. & 27. 14 & 37. 34. & 25. 21. & 52. 9. & 59. 9. & 145. 15. Iſa. 8. 17. & 40 31. & 49. 23 Hoſ. 12. 6. Lam. 3. 25, 26. Prov. 20, 22.

That which alſo is implied by thoſe terms, which in Scriptural ſtyle do commonly expreſs Devotion: by * ſeeking God: which implieth, that God doth not preſently, upon any ſlight addreſs, diſcover himſelf in beneficial effects anſwerable to our deſires, but after a carefull and painfull continuance in our applications to him: by * waiting upon God; which ſignifieth, that if God do not preſently appear granting our requeſts, we ſhould patiently ſtay, expecting till he be pleaſed to doe it in his own beſt time, according to that in the Pſalm, Our eyes wait upon the Lord our God, untill he have mercy upon us: by knocking; which intimateth, that the door of grace doth not ever ſtand open, or that we can have an effectual acceſs to God, untill he, warned and (as it were) excited by our earneſt importunity, pleaſeth to liſten, to diſcloſe himſelf, to come forth unto us.

Pſal. 123. 2. Luke 12. 36. Mat. 7. 7.

And this practiſe Reaſon alſo doth enforce. For there are ſome good things abſolutely neceſſary for our ſpiritual life and welfare, (ſuch as are freedom from bad inclinations, diſorderly affections, vicious habits, and noxious errours; the ſanctifying preſence and influence of God's Holy Spirit, with the bleſſed Graces and ſweet fruits thereof; growth in Vertue, delight in ſpiritual things, the ſenſe of God's love and favour, with the like,) which good reaſon engageth us ſo perſeveringly to ſeek, as never to reſt, or be ſatisfied, till we have acquired them in perfect degree; ſince we cannot ever doe well without them, or ever get enough of them. In begging other inferior things, it may become us to be reſerved, indifferent and modeſt; but about theſe matters (wherein all our felicity is extreamly concerned) it were a folly to be ſlack or timorous: as we cannot be ſaid immoderately to deſire them, ſo we cannot be ſuppoſed immodeſtly to ſeek them there, where onely they can be found, in God's preſence and hand. The caſe doth bear, yea doth require, that we ſhould be eager and hot, reſolute and ſtiff, free and bold, yea, in a manner peremptory and impudent ſolicitours with God for them. So our Saviour intimateth, where, comparing the manner of God's proceeding with that of men, he repreſenteth one friend yielding needfull ſuccour to another, not barely upon the ſcore of friendſhip, but διὰ τὴν ἀναίδειαν, for his impudence; that is, for his confident and continued urgency, admitting no refuſal or excuſe. So doth God in ſuch caſes allow, and oblige us to deal with him, being inſtant and pertinacious in our requeſts, giving him no reſt, (as the phraſe is in the Prophet;) not enduring to be put off, or brooking any repulſe: never being diſcouraged, or caſt into deſpair, by any delay, or ſemblance of neglect. We may wraſtle with God, like Jacob, and with Jacob may ſay, I will not let thee go, except thou bleſs me. Thus God ſuffereth himſelf to be prevailed upon, and is willingly overcome: thus Omnipotence may be maſtered, and a happy victory may be gained over Invincibility it ſelf. Heaven ſometime may be forced by ſtorm; (or by the aſſaults of extremely-fervent prayer;) it aſſuredly will yield to a long ſiege. God will not ever hold out againſt the attempts of an obſtinate ſuppliant. So the Kingdom of Heaven ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. We read in S. John's Goſpel of a man, that, being thirty eight years diſeaſed, did wait at the pool of Betheſda ſeeking relief: him our Lord pitied and helped, crowning his patience with miraculous relief, and propoſing it for an example to us of perſeverance. It is ſaid of the Patriarch Iſaac, that he intreated the Lord for his wife, becauſe ſhe was barren; and the Lord was intreated of him, and Rebekah his wife conceived. Whereupon S. * Chryſoſtome doth obſerve, that he had perſevered twenty years in that petition.

Vid. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Orat. 8. ad Theod. 2.

Αἰδὼς οὐκ ἀγαθὴ κεχρημένῳ ἀνδρὶ προΐκτῃ.

Luke 11. 8.

Iſa. 62. 7.

Gen. 32. 26.

Matt. 11. 12.

Joh. 5. 5.

Vid. Chryſ. Tom 5. Orat. 40. & in Joh. Or. 36.

Gen. 25. 21.

* Vid. Tom. 5. Orat. 68.

Of good ſucceſs to this practice we have many aſſurances in Holy Scripture. The Lord is good unto them that wait for him, to the ſoul that ſeeketh him. Bleſſed are all they that wait for him. None that wait on him ſhall be aſhamed. * They that wait upon the Lord ſhall renew their ſtrength, they ſhall mount up with wings as eagles; they ſhall run, and not be weary; they ſhall walk, and not faint. So hath God aſſured by his

Lam. 3. 25. Iſa. 30. 18. & 49 23. Pſal. 25. 3. & 37. 9. * Iſa. 40. 31. 1 Chr. 28. 9. Ezr. 8. 22.

Amos 5. 4. 2 Chr. 15. 12. Pſal. 9 10. Seeking God the periphraſis of a religious man. Pſal. 14. 2. & 24. 6. & 69. 6. & 70. 4. & 119 2 & 10. 4

Word, and engaged himſelf by promiſe, that he will yield unto conſtant and patient Devotion: ſo that it ſhall never want good ſucceſs.

Without this practice we cannot indeed hope to obtain thoſe precious things; they will not come at an eaſie rate, or be given for a ſong; a lazy wiſh or two cannot fetch them down from Heaven. God will not beſtow them at firſt asking, or deal them out in one lump: but it is upon aſſiduous ſoliciting, and by gradual communication, that he diſpenſeth them. So his wiſe good will for many ſpecial reaſons diſpoſeth him to proceed: that we may (as it becometh and behoveth us) abide under a continual ſenſe of ournatural impotency and penury; of our dependence upon God, and obligation to him for the free collation of thoſe beſt gifts: that by ſome difficulty of procuring them we may be minded of their worth, and induced the more to prize them: that by earneſtly ſeeking them we may improve our ſpiritual appetites, and excite holy affections: that by much converſing with Heaven, our minds may be raiſed above earthly things, and our hearts purified from ſordid deſires: that we may have a conſtant employment anſwerable to the beſt capacities of our Souls, worthy our care and pain, yielding moſt ſolid profit and pure delight unto us: that, in fine, by our greater endeavour in religious practice we may obtain a more ample reward thereof.

For the ſame reaſon indeed that we pray at all, we ſhould pray thus, with continued inſtance. We do not pray to inſtruct or adviſe God; not to tell him news, or inform him of our wants: (He knows them as our Saviour telleth us, before we ask:) nor do we pray by dint of argument to perſuade God, and bring him to our bent; nor that by fair ſpeech we may cajoul him, or move his affections toward us by pathetical orations: not for any ſuch purpoſe are we obliged to pray. But for that it becometh, and behoveth us ſo to doe; becauſe it is a proper inſtrument of bettering, ennobling and perfecting our Souls; becauſe it breedeth moſt holy affections, and pure ſatisfactions, and worthy reſolutions; becauſe it fitteth us for the enjoyment of happineſs, and leadeth us thither: for ſuch ends Devotion is preſcribed; and conſtant perſeverance therein being needfull to thoſe purpoſes, (praying by fits and ſtarts not ſufficing to accompliſh them,) therefore ſuch perſeverance is required of us. Farther,

Matt. 6. 8

V. Praying inceſſantly may import, that we do with all our occupations and all occurrences interlace devout ejaculations of prayer and praiſe; lifting up our hearts to God, and breathing forth expreſſions of devotion, ſutable to the objects and occaſions which preſent themſelves. This as it nearly doth approach to the punctual accompliſhment of what our Text preſcribeth; ſo it ſeemeth required by S. Paul, when he biddeth us pray always ἐν πνεύματι, in ſpirit, and to ſing ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ, in the heart: that is, with very frequent elevations of ſpirit in holy thoughts, and deſires toward Heaven; with opportune reſentments of heart, directing thanks and praiſe to God. We cannot ever be framing or venting long Prayers with our lips, but almoſt ever our mind can throw pious glances, our heart may dart good wiſhes upwards; ſo that hardly any moment (any conſiderable ſpace of time) ſhall paſs without ſome lightſome flaſhes of Devotion. As bodily reſpiration, without intermiſſion or impediment, doth concurr with all our actions: ſo may that breathing of Soul, which preſerveth our ſpiritual life, and ventilateth that holy flame within us, well

Eph. 6. 18.
& 5. 19.
Col. 3. 16.

Sed non ſatis perſpiciunt quantum natura humani ingenii valeat, quæ ità eſt agilis & velox. ſic in omnem partem, (ut ità dixerim) ſpectat, ut nè poſſit quidem aliquid agere tantùm unum; in plura verò non eodem die modo, ſed eodem temporis momento, vim ſuam impendat. Quint l. 12.

Μνημονευτέον γὰρ Θεοῦ μᾶλλον ἢ ἀναπνευστέον· καὶ εἰ οἷόν τε τοῦτο εἰπεῖν, μηδὲ ἄλλο τι ἢ τοῦτο πρακτέον. Naz. Or. 33.

well conſpire with all other occupations. For Devotion is of a nature ſo ſpiritual, ſo ſubtile and penetrant, that no matter can exclude or obſtruct it. Our minds are ſo exceedingly nimble and active, that no buſineſs can hold pace with them, or exhauſt their attention and activity. We can never be ſo fully poſſeſſed by any employment, but that divers vacuities of time do intercurr, wherein our thoughts and affections will be diverted to other matters. As a Covetous man, what-ever beſide he is doing, will be carking about his bags and treaſures: an Ambitious man will be diviſing on his plots and projects; a Voluptuous man will have his mind in his diſhes; a Laſcivious man will be doting on his amours; a Studious man will be muſing on his notions; every man, according to his particular inclination, will lard his buſineſs, and beſprinkle all his actions with cares and wiſhes tending to the enjoyment of what he moſt eſteemeth and affecteth: ſo may a good Chriſtian, through all his undertakings, wind in devout reflexions and pious motions of Soul toward the chief object of his mind and affection. Moſt buſineſſes have wide gaps, all have ſome chinks, at which Devotion may ſlip in. Be we never ſo urgently ſet, or cloſely intent upon any work, (be we feeding, be we travelling, be we trading, be we ſtudying,) nothing yet can forbid, but that we may together wedge in a thought concerning God's Goodneſs, and bolt forth a word of praiſe for it; but that we may reflect on our ſins, and ſpend a penitential ſigh on them; but that we may deſcry our need of God's help, and diſpatch a brief petition for it: a God be praiſed, a Lord have mercy, a God bleſs or God help me, will no wiſe interrupt or diſturb our proceedings. As worldly cares and deſires do often intrude and creep into our Devotions, diſtracting and defiling them: ſo may ſpiritual thoughts and holy affections inſinuate themſelves into, and hallow our ſecular tranſactions. This practice is very poſſible, and it is no leſs expedient: for that if our employments be not thus ſeaſoned, they can have no true life or ſavour in them; they will in themſelves be dead and putrid, they will be foul and noiſome, or at leaſt flat and inſipid unto us.

Vid. Chryſ. Orat. 5. in Annam. Tom. V. p. 78, 79.

Εἰπὲ κατὰ διάνοιαν, Ἐλέησόν με, ὁ Θεὸς, καὶ ἀπήρτισταί σου ἡ εὐχή. Chryſ. ibid.

There are ſome other good meanings of this Precept, according to which Holy Scripture, (back'd with good Reaſon) obligeth us to obſerve it: but thoſe (together with the general Inducements to the practice of this Duty,) that I may not farther now treſpaſs on your patience I ſhall reſerve to another opportunity.

SER-

SERMON VII.

Of the Duty of Prayer.

1 THES. V. 17.

Pray without ceaſing.

WHAT the Prayer here enjoyned by S. Paul doth import, and how by it univerſally all ſorts of Devotion ſhould be underſtood, we did formerly diſcourſe. How alſo according to divers ſenſes (grounded in Holy Scripture, and enforced by good Reaſon) we may perform this duty inceſſantly, we did then declare; five ſuch ſenſes we did mention and proſecute: I ſhall now adde two or three more, and preſs them.

VI. Praying then inceſſantly may imply, that we do appoint certain times conveniently diſtant for the practice of Devotion, and carefully obſerve them. To keep the Jews in a conſtant exerciſe of Divine worſhip, God did conſtitute a Sacrifice, which was called Tamidh, (ἡ διαπαντὸς θυσία) the continual ſacrifice. And as that Sacrifice being conſtantly offered at ſet times, was thence denominated continual; ſo may we, by punctually obſerving fit returns of Devotion, be ſaid to pray inceſſantly.

Dan. 8. 11.
Heb. 13. 5.
Neh. 10. 33.

And great reaſon there is that we ſhould doe ſo. For we know that all perſons who would not lead a looſe and ſlattering life, but deſign with good aſſurance and advantage to proſecute an orderly courſe of action, are wont to diſtribute their time into ſeveral parcels; aſſigning ſome part thereof to the neceſſary reflection of their bodies, ſome to the convenient relaxation of their minds, ſome to the diſpatch of their ordinary affairs, ſome alſo to familiar converſation, and interchanging good offices with their friends; conſidering, that otherwiſe they ſhall be uncertain, and unſtable in all their ways. And in this diſtribution of time Devotion ſurely ſhould not lack its ſhare: it rather juſtly claimeth the choiceſt portion to be allotted thereto; as being incomparably the nobleſt part of our duty, and manifeſt concernment of our lives. The feeding our Souls and nouriſhing our ſpiritual life, the refreſhing our ſpirits with thoſe no leſs pleaſant than wholeſome exerciſes, the driving on our correſpondence and commerce with Heaven, the improveing our friendſhip and intereſt with God, are affairs which above all others do beſt deſerve, and moſt need being ſecured. They muſt not therefore be left at random, to be done by the bye, as it hitteth by chance, or as the fancy taketh us. If we do not depute vacant ſeaſons, and fix periodical returns for Devotion, engaging our ſelves by firm reſolution, and inuring our minds by conſtant uſage to the ſtrict obſervance of them, ſecluding from them, as from ſacred encloſures, all other buſineſſes; we ſhall often be dangerouſly tempted to neglect, we ſhall be commonly liſtleſs to it, prone to defer it, eaſily ſeduced from it by the encroachment of other affairs, or enticement of other pleaſures. It is requiſite that

Cur ipſi aliquid forenſibus negotiis, aliquid deſideriis amicorum, aliquid rationibus domeſticis, aliquid curæ corporis, nonnihil voluptati quotidie damus? Quint. I. 12.

that our Souls alſo (no leſs than our Bodies) ſhould have their meals, ſettled at ſuch intervals as the maintenance of their life, their health, their ſtrength and vigour do require; that they may not periſh or languiſh for want of timely repaſts; that a good appetite may duly ſpring up, prompting and inſtigating to them; that a ſound temper and robuſt conſtitution of Soul may be preſerved by them.

Prayers are the bulwarks of Piety and good Conſcience, the which ought to be placed ſo as to flank and relieve one another, together with the interjacent ſpaces of our life; that the enemy (the ſin which doth ſo Heb. 12. 1. eaſily beſet us) may not come on between, or at any time aſſault us, without a force ſufficiently near to reach and repell him.

In determining theſe ſeaſons and meaſures of time according to juſt proportion, honeſt prudence (weighing the ſeveral conditions, capacities and circumſtances of each perſon) muſt arbitrate. For ſome difference is to be made between a Merchant and a Monk; between thoſe who follow a Court, and thoſe who reſide in a Cloiſter or a College. Some men having great encumbrances of buſineſs and duty, by neceſſity impoſed on them, which conſume much of their time, and engage their thoughts; of them in reaſon neither ſo frequent recourſes to, nor ſo long continuance in prayer can be demanded, as from thoſe who enjoy more abundant leiſure, and free ſcope of thoughts. But ſome fit times all may, and muſt allow, which no avocation of buſineſs, no diſtraction of care ſhould purloin from them.

Certain ſeaſons and periods of this kind Nature it ſelf (in correſpondence to her unalterable revolutions) doth ſeem to define and preſcribe: thoſe which the Royal Prophet recommendeth, when he ſaith, It is a good Pſal. 92. 1. thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to ſing praiſes unto thy Name, O thou 55. 17. moſt high: To ſhew forth thy loving-kindneſs every-morning, and thy faithfulneſs every night. Every day we doe recover and receive a new life from God; every Morning we doe commence buſineſs, or revive it; from our bed of reſt and ſecurity we then iſſue forth, expoſing our ſelves to the cares and toils, to the dangers, troubles and temptations of the world: then eſpecially therefore it is reaſonable, that we ſhould ſacrifice thanks to the gracious Preſerver of our life, and the faithfull Reſtorer of its ſupports and comforts; that we ſhould crave his direction and help in the purſuit of our honeſt undertakings; that to his protection from ſin and miſchief we ſhould recommend our ſelves and our affairs; that by offering up to him the firſt-fruits of our diurnal labours, we ſhould conſecrate and conſign them all to his bleſſing; that as we are then wont to ſalute all the world, ſo then chiefly with humble obeiſance we ſhould accoſt him, who is ever preſent with us, and continually watchfull over us. Then alſo peculiarly Devotion is moſt ſeaſonable, becauſe then our minds being leſs prepoſſeſſed and peſtered with other cares, our fancies becomeing lively and gay, our memories freſh and prompt, our ſpirits copious and brisk, we are better diſpoſed for it.

Every Night alſo reaſon calleth for theſe Duties; requiring that we ſhould cloſe our buſineſs, and wind up all our cares in Devotion; that we ſhould then bleſs God for his gracious preſervation of us from the manifold hazzards and the ſins to which we ſtood obnoxious; that we ſhould implore his mercy for the manifold neglects and tranſgreſſions of our duty, which through the day paſt we have incurred; that our minds being then ſo tired with ſtudy and care, our ſpirits ſo waſted with labour and toil, that we cannot any longer ſuſtain our ſelves, but do of our own accord ſink down into a poſture of death; we ſhould, as dying men, reſign our Souls into God's hand, depoſiting our ſelves and our concernments into his cuſtody, who alone doth never ſleep nor ſlumber; praying that he would guard us from all the dangers and diſturbances incident to us in that ſtate of forgetfulneſs, and interregnum of our Reaſon; that he would grant us a happy reſurrection in ſafety and health, with a good and chearfull mind, enabling us thereafter comfortably to enjoy our ſelves, and delightfully to ſerve him.

Thus if we do conſtantly bound and circumſcribe our days, dedicating thoſe moſt remarkable breaks of time unto God's ſervice, ſince beginning and end do comprehend the whole, ſeeing in the computation and ſtyle of Moſes Evening and Morning do conſtitute a Day; we may with ſome good congruity be ſaid to pray inceſſantly.

Eſpecially if at the middle diſtance between thoſe extreams we are wont to interpoſe ſomewhat of Devotion. For as then uſually our ſpirits, being ſomewhat ſhattered and ſpent, do need a recruit, enabling us to paſs through the reſidue of the day with its incumbent buſineſs: ſo then it would do well, and may be requiſite, in a meal of Devotion to refreſh our Souls with ſpiritual ſuſtenance, drawn from the never-failing ſtore-houſe of Divine grace; which may ſo fortifie us, that with due vigour and alacrity we may perform the enſuing duties to God's honour, and our own comfort. Thus to practiſe was the reſolution of the Pſal. 55. 17. Pſalmiſt, that great Maſter of Devotion; Evening (ſaid he) and morning, and at noon will I pray, and cry aloud. And this was the cuſtom of the noble Daniel, from which no occaſion could divert, no hazzard Dan. 6. 10. could deterr him: He kneeled, ſaid the ſtory, upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God.

Theſe are times which it is neceſſary, or very expedient, that all men (even perſons of higheſt rank, and greateſt employment) ſhould obſerve. Theſe even of old were the practices of Religious perſons, not expreſly preſcribed by God's Law, but aſſumed by themſelves; good reaſon ſuggeſting them to the firſt practiſers, and the conſenting example of pious men afterward enforcing them.

God indeed did himſelf in his Law, or by his Prophets, appoint publick and ſolemn celebrations of worſhip to himſelf, in Sacrifices (involving Prayer, and accompanied therewith) conſtantly to be offered 2 Chron. 2. 4. 1 Chron. 16, 40, 41. & 23. 30. Ezr. 3 3. every morning and evening; religious Princes alſo did inſtitute ſervices of thankſgiving and praiſe to be performed at thoſe times: but there doth not appear any direct inſtitution of private Devotion, or its circumſtances; but the practice thereof ſeemeth originally to have been purely voluntary, managed and meaſured according to the reaſon, by the choice of each perſon: yet ſo, that the practice of eminently-good men leading, and others following, it grew into a kind of common law, or ſtanding rule, (ſeeming to carry an obligation with it,) to obſerve the times ſpecified.

Beſides thoſe three times, there were farther other middle times obſerved by devout people, who had leiſure, and diſpoſition of mind thereto; once between morning and noon, and once between noon and evening were ſequeſtred to that purpoſe: whence in the Acts the ninth hour of the day (that is, the middle interval between noon and evening) Act. 3. 1. is called the hour of prayer. Yea, ſome did impoſe on themſelves the obſervation of two other times, one between evening and midnight, the other between midnight and morn. To which practice Pſal. 63. 5, 6. thoſe places in the Pſalms do ſeem to allude; My mouth ſhall praiſe thee with joyfull lips, when I remember thee on my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches. I prevented the dawning of the morning, and cried: Mine eyes prevent the night-watches, that I may meditate on thy word. And plainly the whole number of thoſe times, which the Pſalmiſt obſerved, is expreſſed in thoſe words, Seven times a day will I praiſe thee, becauſe of thy righteous judgments. Which examples whoever ſhall chuſe to follow, (in any meaſure) he ſhall doe wiſely and commendably; he ſhall certainly have no cauſe to repent; he will find it richly worth his while; great benefit and comfort will thence accrue unto him.

Pſ. 119. 147, 148.

Pſ. 119. 164.

If indeed Jews were ſo liberal in aſſigning, ſo punctual in affording ſuch portions of time for yielding praiſe and offering ſupplications unto God; how much more free and ready, more carefull and diligent ſhould we be in this way of practice? we who have a Religion ſo far more ſpiritual, and exempt from corporeal incumbrances; Precepts ſo more expreſs and clear; ſo much higher obligations and ſtronger encouragements to this duty; whom God in eſpecial manner ſo graciouſly doth invite, ſo powerfully doth attract unto himſelf? But farther,

VII. More eſpecially this Precept may be ſuppoſed to exact from us a compliance in carefully obſerving the times of Devotion ordained by publick Authority, or ſettled by general Cuſtom. This in a popular and legal ſenſe is doing a thing indeſinently, when we perform it ſo often as is required by law or cuſtom. So the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſaith of the Prieſts, that they went always into the Tabernacle, accompliſhing the ſervice of God: always, that is, at all the ſolemn times appointed. And thus of the Apoſtles it is affirmed by S. Luke, that they were continually in the Temple, bleſſing and praiſing God; that is, they conſtantly reſorted thither at the ſtated times of concourſe for prayer. This good Reaſon alſo plainly doth injoyn: For that the neglecting it is not onely a diſorderly behaviour in a matter of high conſequence; a criminal diſregard and diſobedience to Authority; a ſcandalous contempt of our neighbours, from whoſe laudable faſhion we diſcoſt; a wrongfull deſerting the publick, to whoſe good, mainly promoted by the publick worſhip of God, we do owe the contribution of our endeavour: but a hainous affront to Almighty God, who thereby is plainly diſhonoured, and in a manner openly diſavowed; a huge prejudice to Religion, the credit and power whereof, without viſible profeſſion, exemplary compliance, mutual conſent and encouragement, cannot be upheld. Were there times by law or cuſtom defined, (as in ſome places indeed there are,) when all men ſhould be required in perſon ſolemnly to attend on their Prince, for profeſſing their Allegeance, or deferring any Homage to him; would not thoſe who ſhould wilfully refuſe or decline appearance, be juſtly chargeable as guilty of diſhonouring and wronging him? would not their ſuch defailance paſs for ſufficient proof, that they do not acknowledge him, that at leaſt they do not much regard or value him? So by not joyning at ſtated times in celebration of Divine worſhip, we may be well conceived wholly to diſclaim God, or greatly to diſeſteem him; to ſlight Religion, as a thing inſignificant and unprofitable. Do we not indeed thereby more than intimate, that we little believe God to be our Sovereign Lord and Governour; that we ſtand in no great awe or dread of him; that we are not much ſenſible of his benefits and mercies; that we repoſe ſmall truſt or hope in him; that we doe not take our ſelves much to want his protection, his guidance, his aſſiſtence, his favour and mercy? Are we not in effect like unto thoſe in Job, who ſay unto God, depart from us, for we deſire not the knowledge of thy ways. What is the Almighty, that we ſhould ſerve him? or what profit ſhall Levit. 19. 30. & 26. 2 Ye ſhall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my Sanctuary.

Heb 9. 6.

Luke 24. 53.

Job 21. 14, 15.

we have, if we pray unto him? Thus the ſtanders by commonly (ſome ſo as to be much offended at, others ſo as to be corrupted by our bad example) will interpret this neglect: and ſo aſſuredly God himſelf will take it from us, and accordingly deal with us. As he claimeth this publick attendance on him for his due: (Give, proclaimeth he by the Pſal. 29. 1, 2. 66. 2. mouth of one of his great Heraulds, Give unto the Lord, O ye mighty give unto the Lord glory and ſtrength: Give unto the Lord the glory due to his Name; worſhip the Lord in the beauty of holineſs:) ſo if we to his wrong and diſgrace refuſe to yield it, we ſhall certainly find anſwerable reſentment and recompence from him; that as we are careleſs to ſerve him, ſo he will be unmindfull to bleſs us; as we are backward to avow and glorifie him, so he will not be forward to own and grace us; as 2 Tim. 2. 12. Matt. 10. 33. Luke 9 26. 12. 9. we do ſo deny him before men, ſo he will deny us before them alſo. What other meaſure indeed can we imagine, or expect to receive? Will God, think we, be ſo partial and fond to us, ſo diſregardfull and injurious toward himſelf, that he will vouchſafe to appear in favour to us, when we deign not to appear in reſpect to him? that he will openly tender our repute, when we apparently diſregard his honour? that he will employ his wiſdom, or exert his power in our behalf, when we ſcarce will think a thought, or ſtir a ſtep for his ſervice? Can we hope, that he will freely diſpenſe proſperous ſucceſs to our enterpriſes, when we either care not, or ſcorn to implore his help? that he will reach forth undeſerved bleſſings to us, when we ſubtract due praiſes from him? that he will any-wiſe ſhew himſelf bountifull and mercifull toward us, when we Prov. 3. 34. 1 Sam. 2. 30. ſo palpably are injuſt and ingratefull toward him? No, Surely he ſcorneth the ſcorners; and, Whoſoever deſpiſeth him, ſhall be lightly eſteemed: ſo he expreſſely hath threatned; and ſeeing he is both infallibly true, and invincibly able, we may reaſonably preſume that he will accompliſh his word.

VIII. Laſtly, Praying inceſſantly may import at large a frequency in Devotion. This the words at leaſt do exact, or neceſſarily imply, however expounded. For doing inceſſantly cannot imply leſs than doing frequently: in no tolerable ſenſe can we be ſaid to doe that continually, which we doe ſeldome; but it is an ordinary ſcheme of ſpeech to ſay that a man doth that always, which he is wont to doe, and performeth Act. 10. 2. often. As of the pious ſouldier Cornelius it is ſaid, that he gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always; and of Anna the Propheteſs, Luk. 2. 37. that ſhe departed not from the Temple, but ſerved God with prayers and faſtings night and day; that is, ſhe frequently reſorted to the Temple, and ſerved God with an aſſiduous conſtancy. As the words may bear, and doe involve this ſenſe, ſo doth the reaſon of the caſe inforce it: for very juſt, very fit, very needfull it is to practiſe thus. There is ever at hand abundant reaſon for, and appoſite matter of Devotion; therefore no longer ſpace of time ſhould paſs without it: there be perpetually depending many cauſes thereof; whence there is not to be allowed any long vacation from it. As every moment we from God's mercy and bounty partake great favours: ſo ſhould we often render thanks and praiſe for them: for perpetually to receive courteſies, and rarely to return acknowledgments, is notorious ingratitude and iniquity. We frequently (and in a manner continually) do fall into ſins; often therefore we are obliged to confeſs ſins, we are concerned to deprecate Wrath, and beg mercy: otherwiſe we muſt long crouch under the ſore burthen of guilt, the ſad dread of puniſhment, the bitter pangs of remorſe, or the deſperate hazzard of ſtupid obduration. What-ever we deſign or undertake, toward the good management and happy ſucceſs thereof we (being ignorant and impotent creatures) do need the guidance, the aſſiſtence and the bleſſing of God: ſo often therefore it is requiſite that we ſhould be ſeeking and ſuing for them: if not, we do not onely tranſgreſs our duties, but fondly neglect, or foully betray our own concernments. The Cauſes therefore of Devotion being ſo conſtant, the Effects in ſome correſpondence ſhould be frequent.

Such frequency is indeed neceſſary for the breeding, the nouriſhment, the growth and improvement of all Piety. Devotion is that holy and heavenly fire, which darteth into our minds the light of ſpiritual knowledge, which kindleth in our hearts the warmth of holy deſires: if therefore we do continue long abſent from it, a night of darkneſs will overſpread our minds, a deadning coldneſs will ſeiſe upon our affections. It is the beſt food of our Souls, which preſerveth their life and health, which repaireth their ſtrength and vigour, which rendreth them luſty and active: if we therefore long abſtain from it, we ſhall ſtarve, or pine away; we ſhall be faint and feeble in all religious performances; we ſhall have none at all, or a very languid and meager Piety.

To maintain in us a conſtant and ſteddy diſpoſition to obedience, to correct our perverſe inclinations, to curb our unruly paſſions, to ſtrengthen us againſt temptations, to comfort us in anxieties and diſtreſſes, we do need continual ſupplies of grace from God; the which ordinarily are communicated in Devotion, as the channel which conveyeth, or the inſtrument which helpeth to procure it, or the condition upon which it is granted. Faith, Hope, Love, ſpiritual Comfort and Joy, all Divine Graces are chiefly elicited, expreſſed, exerciſed therein and thereby: it is therefore needfull that it ſhould frequently be uſed; ſeeing otherwiſe we ſhall be in danger to fail in diſcharging our chief Duties, and to want the beſt Graces.

It is frequency of Devotion alſo which maintaineth that Friendſhip with God, which is the ſoul of Piety. As familiar converſation (wherein men do expreſs their minds and affections mutually) breedeth acquaintance, and cheriſheth good will of men to one another; but long forbearance thereof diſſolveth, or ſlackneth the bonds of amity, breaking their intimacy, and cooling their kindneſs: ſo is it in reſpect to God; it is frequent converſe with him which begetteth a particular acquaintance with him, a mindfull regard of him, a hearty liking to him, a delightfull taſte of his goodneſs, and conſequently a ſincere and ſolid good will toward him; but intermiſſion thereof produceth eſtrangement, or enmity toward him. If we ſeldome come at God, we ſhall little know him, not much care for him, ſcarce remember him, reſt inſenſible of his love, and regardleſs of his favour; a coldneſs, a ſhyneſs, a diſtaſt, an antipathy toward him will by degrees creep upon us. Abſtinence from his company and preſence will caſt us into converſations deſtructive, or prejudicial to our friendſhip with him; wherein ſoon we ſhall contract familiarity and friendſhip with his enemies, (the World and the Fleſh,) which are inconſiſtent with love to him, which will diſpoſe us to forget him, or to diſlike and loath him.

It is, in fine the frequency of Devotion which alone can ſecure any practice thereof, at leaſt any practice thereof duly qualified; ſo hearty, ſo eaſy, ſo ſweet and delightfull as it ſhould be. We have all a natural averſeneſs or indiſpoſition thereto, as requiring an abſtraction of thoughts and affections from ſenſible things, and a faſtning them upon objects purely ſpiritual; a rearing our heavy ſpirits above their common pitch; a ſtaying and ſettling our roving fancies; a compoſing our vain hearts in a ſober and ſteddy frame, agreeable to Devotion: to effect which things is a matter of no ſmall difficulty and pain; which therefore without much uſe and exerciſe cannot be accompliſhed; but with it, may; ſo that by frequent practice the bent of our heart being turned, the ſtrangeneſs of the thing ceaſing, the difficulty of the work being ſurmounted, we ſhall obtain a good propenſion to the duty, and a great ſatisfaction therein.

This will render the way into God's preſence ſmooth and paſſable; removing, as all other obſtacles, ſo particularly thoſe of fear and doubt in reſpect to God, which may deterre or diſcourage us from approaching to him. God being moſt holy and pure, moſt great and glorious, we, ſenſible of our corruption and vileneſs, may be fearfull and ſhy of comimg near unto him. But when, comeing into his preſence, we do Pſal. 34. 8. find, that ſuch as his Majeſty is, ſuch is his Mercy; when we do taſte and Pſal 16. 11. ſee that the Lord is good; when by experience we feel, that in his pre- Pſal. 36. 8. ſence there is fulneſs of joy; being abundantly ſatisfied with the fatneſs of
63. 5. his houſe; having our Souls there ſatisfied as with marrow and fatneſs;
84. 10. finding, that a day in his courts is better that a thouſand ſpent other-where; perceiving that he biddeth us welcome, that he treateth us kindly, that he ſendeth us away refreſhed with ſweeteſt comforts, and rewarded with moſt excellent benefits: this will not onely reconcile our hearts to Devotion, but draw us into a cordial liking, and earneſt deſire 84. 2. thereof; ſuch as the Pſalmiſt expreſſeth, when he ſaith, My ſoul longeth, yea even fainteth for the courts of the Lord: my heart and my fleſh crieth out for the living God. This will engage us into ſtrong reſolutions of conſtantly practiſing it; ſuch as the ſame Holy perſon again declareth in 116. 1. thoſe words, I love the Lord, becauſe he hath heard my voice and my 138. 2. ſupplications: Becauſe he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live. Hence, inſtead of a ſuſpicious enſtranged-neſs, a ſervile dread, or an hoſtile diſaffection toward God, there will ſpring up an humble confidence, a kindly reverence, a hearty love toward him; which will upon all occaſions drive us to him, hoping for his friendly ſuccour, longing after his kind embraces. So will the frequency of Devotion render it facil and pleaſant. Whereas, on the contrary, diſ-uſe thereof will make it at any time hard and irkſome; ſtrengthening and encreaſing our natural averſeneſs thereto: performing it ſeldome, we ſhall never perform it well; with that attention, that affection, that promptitude, that willingneſs and alacrity, which are due thereto.

According to ſo many ſenſes, in ſo many reſpects, may we, and ſhould we obſerve this Precept. From thus praying continually there can be no good exception, or juſt excuſe. The moſt common pleas that will be alledged for the omiſſion thereof are two; one drawn from external avocations, the other from internal indiſpoſitions, obſtructing it: both of which are ſo far from being good, that, being ſcanned, they will ſoon appear ſerving rather to aggravate, than to excuſe or abate the neglect.

I. I cannot (ſaith one) now attend to Prayers, becauſe I am not at liberty, or at leiſure, being urgently called away, and otherwiſe engaged by important affairs. How much a flamme this Apology is, we ſhall preſently deſcry, by asking a few Queſtions about it.

1. Do we take Devotion it ſelf to be no buſineſs, or a buſineſs of no conſideration? Do we conceit, when we pay God his debts, or diſcharge our duties toward him, when we crave his aid or mercy, when we ſolicit the main concernments of our Soul, (yea of our body alſo, and its eſtate,) that we are idle, or miſemployed? that we laviſh our time, or loſe our pains?

2. What other affairs can we have of greater moment or neceſſity than this? Can there be any obligation more indiſpenſable, than is that of yielding due reſpect and ſervice to our Maker, our great Patron, our moſt liberal Benefactour? Can there be any intereſt more cloſe or weighty than this, of providing for our Souls eternal health and happineſs? Is not this indeed the great work, the onely necessary matter, in compariſon whereto all other occupations are mere trifling, or unprofitable fidling about nothing? What will all other buſineſs ſignifie, what will come of it, if this be neglected? Buſie we may be, we may plod, we may drudge eternally; but all to no end. All our care is in effect improvidence, all our induſtry may be well reckoned idleneſs, if God be not ſerved, if our Souls are not ſecured.

Luk. 10. 24.
Job 23. 12.
Αἱ τέχναι τῶν πιστῶν ἐπέργειά εἰσιν· ἔργον δὲ ἡ θεοσέβεια.
Conſt. Apoſt.
2. 61.

3. If we ſurvey and prize all worldly buſineſſes, which among them will appear ſo importunate as to demand, ſo greedy as to devour, ſo worthy at leaſt as to deſerve all our time, that we cannot ſpare a few minutes for maintaining our moſt pleaſant intercourſe, and moſt gainfull commerce with Heaven? What are the great buſineſſes of the world? what but ſcraping and ſcrambling for pelf, contriving and compaſſing deſigns of ambition, courting the favour and reſpect of men, making proviſion for carnal pleaſure, gratifying fond curioſity or vain humour? And do any of theſe deſerve to be put into the ſcale againſt, ſhall all of them together be able to ſway down our ſpiritual employments? Shall theſe images, theſe ſhadows of buſineſs ſupplant or croud out Devotion; that which procureth wealth ineſtimably precious, pleaſure infinitely ſatiſfactory, honour incomparably noble above all this world can afford? If the expence of time be (as the Philoſopher ſaid) πολυτελέστατον ἀνάλωμα, the moſt precious expence that can be; how can it better be laid out, than upon the worthieſt things, ſuch as Devotion alone can afford the purchaſe and poſſeſſion of? True Vertue, ſound Wiſdom, a quiet Conſcience, and ſteddy tranquility of mind, the love and favour of God, a title unto endleſs joy and bliſs, are purely the gifts of Heaven; and thence they will not deſcend of themſelves, but Prayer muſt fetch them down. If nothing then in the world be comparable to thoſe things, how can any time be ſo well ſpent as in Prayer, which acquireth them; which alſo beſt ſecureth what-ever we have, and is the readieſt way to procure what-ever we want?

Theophr.

4. Should we not farther honeſtly comparing things, eaſily diſcern, that it is no ſuch indiſpenſable buſineſs, but rather indeed ſome baſe dotage on lucre, ſome inveigling bate of pleaſure, ſome bewitching tranſport of fancy, that croſſeth our Devotion? Is it not often a complemental viſit, an appointment to tattle or tipple, a match for ſport, a wild ramble in vice or folly, that ſo deeply engageth us to put off our duty?

5. Yea, is it not commonly ſloth rather than activity, an averſeneſs from this rather than an inclination to any other employment, which diverteth us from our Prayers? Is not, I ſay, the true reaſon why we pray ſo ſeldome, not becauſe we are very buſie, but becauſe we are extremely idle; ſo idle, that we cannot willingly take the pains to unſcrew our affections from ſenſible things, to reduce our wandring thoughts, to compoſe our hearts into a right frame, to bend our untoward inclinations to a compliance with our duty? Is it not becauſe we do not feel that ſavour and ſatiſfaction in theſe, which we do in other trivial and worthleſs employments, nor will be at the trouble to work ſuch diſpoſitions in our Souls? Do we not betake our ſelves to other converſations and commerces merely for refuge, ſhunning this intercourſe with God, and with our ſelves? Theſe, I fear, are oftner the real cauſes of our neglecting Devotion, than any ſuch mighty avocations which we pretend.

6. But were there indeed not onely a counterfeit or imaginary, but a real competition between Devotion and other lawfull buſineſs; which, in reaſon, ſhould carry it? in conſcience, which of the two ſhould be forborn or ſuſpended? Is it not evidently better, that the purſuit of our temporal intereſts, what-ever they be, ſhould be a little checked, than that our affairs of everlaſting conſequence ſhould be quite laid aſide? that we ſhould venture a ſmall impairing of our eſtate, than ſurely endamage our Souls? that we hazzard to diſappoint or diſpleaſe a man, than dare to affront and offend the Almighty God?

7. Were it not ſtrangely abſurd and unhandſome to ſay, I cannot wait on God, becauſe I muſt ſpeak with a friend; I cannot go to Church, although God calleth me thither, becauſe I muſt haſte to market; I cannot ſtand to pray, becauſe I am to receive money, or to make up a bargain; I cannot diſcharge my duty to God, becauſe a greater obligation than that doth lie upon me? How unconceivable an honour, how unvaluable a benefit is it, that the incomprehenſibly-great and glorious Majeſty of Heaven doth vouchſafe us the liberty to approach ſo near unto him, to converſe ſo freely with him, to demand and derive from his hand the ſupply of all our needs, and ſatisfaction of all our reaſonable deſires? and is it then juſt or ſeemly, by ſuch compariſons to diſparage his favour, by ſuch pretences to baffle with his goodneſs?

Put the caſe our Prince ſhould call for us to ſpeak with him about matters nearly touching his ſervice, and our welfare; would it be according unto duty, diſcretion, or decency, to reply, that we are at preſent buſie, and have no leiſure, and muſt therefore hold our ſelves excuſed; but that if he will ſtay a while, at another time, when we have leſs to doe, we ſhall be perhaps diſpoſed to wait upon him? The caſe is propounded by our Lord in that Parable, wherein God is repreſented as a great man, that had prepared a feaſt, and invited many gueſts thereto; but they excuſed themſelves: One ſaid, that he had purchaſed land, and muſt needs go out to ſee it; another had bought five yoak of oxen, and muſt go to prove them; another had married a wife, and therefore could not come. Theſe indeed were affairs very conſiderable, as this world hath any; but yet the excuſes did not ſatisfie: for, notwithſtanding, the great perſon was angry, and took the neglect in huge diſdain.

Matt. 22. 2, &c.
Luk. 14 16, &c.
Ἔπειτα ὅτι σκῆψις ταῦτα ϗ πρόφασις, &c. Chryſ. in Joh. Orat. 11.

8. Moreover, if we reflect what vaſt portions of time we ſquander away upon our petty matters, upon voluptuous enjoyments, upon fruitleſs paſs-times, upon impertinent talk; how can we ſatisfie our ſelves in not allotting competent time upon God's Service, our own ſalvation, and the future everlaſting ſtate? Doth not he, who with the continuance of our life beſtoweth on us all our time, deſerve that a pittance of it ſhould be reſerved for himſelf? Can all the world duly claim ſo great an allowance thereof? May not our ſoul (which is far our nobleſt part, which indeed is all our ſelves) juſtly challengeth a good ſhare of our time to be expended on it? or ſhall this mortal husk engroſs it all? Muſt Eternity, which comprehendeth all Time, have no time belonging to it, or allotted for its concernments?

9. Again, is it not great imprudence ſo to lay our buſineſs, that any other matter ſhall thwart or thruſt out Devotion? Eaſily with a little providence may things be ſo ordered, that it, without interfering or juſtling, may well conſiſt with all other, both needfull buſineſs, and convenient divertiſement; ſo that it ſhall neither obſtruct them, nor they extrude it: and are we not very culpable, if we do not uſe ſo much providence?

providenc

Πρῶτον μὲν, αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἔγκλημα οὐ μικρὸν, τὸ κωλύεσθαι τούτων πραγμάτων πλήθει, καὶ τοῖς βιωτικοῖς οὕτω προσηλῶσθαι διὰ παντὸς, ὡς μηδὲ μικρὸν εἰς τὰ πάντων ἀναγκαιότερα ἄγειν σχολήν. Chryſ. in Joh. 1. 14. (Or.)

10. In truth, attending upon Devotion can be no obſtacle, but will be great furtherance to all other good buſineſs. It is the moſt ſure, moſt pleaſant, moſt advantageous and compendious way of tranſacting affairs, to mix Prayers and Praiſes with them, it is the beſt oil that can be, to make the wheels of action go on ſmoothly and ſpeedily: it not onely ſanctifieth our undertakings, but much promoteth and exceedingly ſweetneth the management of them. For the conſcience of having rendred unto God his due reſpect and ſervice, of having intruſted our affairs to his care, of having conſequently engaged his protection and aſſiſtence for us, will diſpoſe us to do things with a couragious alacrity and comfortable ſatisfaction; will fill us with a good hope of proſpering; will prepare us however to be ſatisfied with the event, what-ever it ſhall be; will in effect procure a bleſſing and happy ſucceſs, ſuch as we may truly rejoyce and triumph in, as conferred by God in favour to us. Whereas neglecting theſe duties, we can have no ſolid content or ſavoury complacence in any thing we undertake: reflecting on ſuch misbehaviour (if we be not downright infidels, or obdurate reprobates in impiety) will quaſh or damp our courage: having thence forfeited all pretence to God's ſuccour, and provoked him to croſs us, we muſt needs ſuſpect diſappointment: as we have no reaſonable ground to hope for ſucceſs; ſo we cannot, if ſucceſs arriveth, be heartily ſatisfied therein, or take it for a bleſſing.

He therefore that is ſuch a niggard of his time, that he grudgeth to withhold any part thereof from his worldly occaſions, deeming all time caſt away, that is laid out in waiting upon God, is really moſt unthrifty and prodigal thereof: by ſparing a little, he waſteth all his time to no purpoſe; by ſo eagerly purſuing, he effectually ſetteth back his deſigns; by prepoſterouſly affecting to diſpatch his affairs, he rendreth them endleſs, or, which is the ſame, altogether unprofitable.

In fine, we may be ſure that no time is ſpent even ſo prudently and politickly, with ſo great advantage, and ſo real fruit to our ſelves, as that which is employed upon devotion. In ſacrificing his time, his pains, his ſubſtance, any thing he hath or can doe, to God's ſervice, no man can be a loſer.

We have alſo many examples plainly demonſtrating the conſiſtency of this practice with all other buiſineſs. Who ever had more or greater affairs to manage, and who ever managed them with greater ſucceſs, than David; upon whom did lie the burthen of Royal eſtate, and the care over a moſt populous nation; the which he fed with a faithful and true heart, and ruled prudently with all his power; who waged great wars, vanquiſhed mighty enemies, atchieved many glorious exploits, underwent many grievous troubles? Yet could not ſuch engagements diſtract or depreſs his mind from a conſtant attendance on Devotion. I will bleſs the Lord at all times, his praiſe ſhall be continually in my mouth. My mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy righteouſneſs, and thy ſalvation all the day. I will abide in thy tabernacle for ever. So he declareth his reſolution and his practice. Who is more preſſingly employed than was Daniel, firſt Preſident over ſo vaſt a Kingdom, chief Miniſter of

Pſal. 78. 73.

Pſal. 34. 1. & 71. 6. & 145. 2. & 35. 28. & 61. 4.

Dan. 6. 10.

2 Cor. 11. 28.

2 Theſſ, 3. 8.

Καιροῖς ἑκάστης ἡμέρας τακτοῖς ἑαυτὸν ἐγκλείων, μόνος μόνῳ τῷ αὐτῷ προσωμίλει Θεῷ. Euſeb. de Vita Conſt. 4. 22.

State to the greateſt Monarch on earth? Yet conſtantly thrice a day did he pray, and give thanks unto his God. Who can be more entangled in varieties and intricacies of care, of pains, of trouble, than was he that preſcribeth unto us this rule of Praying continually? Upon him did lie the care of all the Churches; Night and day with labour and toil did he work for the ſuſtenance of his life, that he might not (to the diſparagement of the Goſpel) burthen any man; perpetually he was engaged in all ſorts of labour and travail, ever conflicting with perils, with wants, with inconveniences numberleſs: yet did he exactly conform his practice to his rule, being no leſs indefatigable and inceſſant in his Devotion than he was in his buſineſs. Who ever managed a greater Empire than Conſtantine? Yet every day (as Euſebius reporteth) at ſtated times, ſhutting himſelf up, he alone privately did converſe with his God. The moſt pious men indeed have never been idle or careleſs men, but always moſt buiſie and active, moſt induſtrious in their callings, moſt provident for their families, moſt officious towards their friends, moſt ready to ſerve their country, moſt abundant in all good works: yet have they always been moſt conſtant in Devotion. So that experience clearly doth evidence, how reconcileable moſt Devotion is to much buſineſs; and that conſequently, the proſecution of the one cannot well palliate the neglect of the other.

II. No better can any man ward himſelf from blame, by imputing the neglect of Devotion to ſome indiſpoſition within him thereto. For this is onely cover one fault with another, or to lay on a patch more ugly than the ſore. 'Tis, in effect, to ſay we may ſin, becauſe we have a mind to it, or care not to do otherwiſe. Our indiſpoſition it ſelf is criminal; and, as ſignifying ſomewhat habitual or ſettled, is worſe than a ſingle omiſſion: it ought therefore to be corrected and cured; and the way to doe it is, by ſetting preſently upon the practice of the Duty, and perſiſting reſolutely therein: otherwiſe how is it poſſible that it ſhould ever be removed? The longer we forbear it, the more ſeldom we perform it, the ſtronger ſurely will our indiſpoſition grow, and the more difficult it will be to remove it. But if (with any degree of ſerioushneſs and good intention) we come indiſpoſed to Prayer, we may thereby be formed into better diſpoſition, and by continual attendance thereon, we ſhall (God's grace co-operating, which never is wanting to ſerious and honeſt intentions) grow toward a perfect fitneſs for it: Prayer by degrees will become natural and delightfull to us.

SER-

SERMON VIII.

The Duty of Thankſgiving.

EPHES. V. 20.

Giving thanks always for all things unto God.

THESE words, although (as the very Syntax doth immediately diſcover) they bear a relation to, and have a fit coherence with thoſe that precede, may yet (eſpecially conſidering S. Paul's ſtyle, and manner of expreſſion in the preceptive and exhortative part of his Epiſtles) without any violence, or prejudice on either hand, be ſevered from the Context, and conſidered diſtinctly by themſelves. And (to avoid encumbrance by farther compariſon) ſo taking them, we may obſerve, that every ſingle word among them carries with it ſomething of notable emphaſis, and eſpecial ſignificancy. The firſt [Giving thanks] expreſſes the ſubſtance of a Duty, to which we are exhorted. The next (I mean, in order of conſtruction) [to God] denotes the Object, or Term to which it is directed. The following [always] determines the main Circumſtance of this and all other Duties, the Time of performance. The laſt [for all things] declares the adequate Matter of the Duty, and how far it ſhould extend. Theſe particulars I ſhall conſider ſeverally, and in order.

Vid. Rom. 12.
Epheſ. 6, &c.

I. Firſt then, concerning the Duty it ſelf, to give thanks, or rather, to be thankfull; (for εὐχαριστεῖν doth not onely ſignifie gratias agere, reddere, dicere, to give, render, or declare thanks, but alſo gratias habere, gratè affectum eſſe, to be thankfully diſpoſed, to entertain a gratefull affection, ſenſe, or memory: in which more comprehenſive notion I mean to conſider it, as including the whole Duty or Vertue of Gratitude due to Almighty God for all his benefits, favours and mercies:) I ſay, concerning this Duty it ſelf, (abſtractedly conſidered,) as it involves a reſpect to benefits or good things received; ſo in its employment about them it imports, requires, or ſuppoſes theſe following particulars.

1. It implies a right Apprehenſion of, and conſequently a conſiderate Attention unto Benefits conferred. For he that is either wholly ignorant of his obligations, or miſtakes them, or paſſes them over with a ſlight and ſuperficial view, can no-wiſe be grate-full. Whoſo is wiſe, and will obſerve theſe things, even they ſhall underſtand the loving-kindneſs of the Lord. Men ſhall fear, and ſhall declare the work of God; for they ſhall wiſely conſider of his doings. The works of the Lord are great, ſought out of all that have pleaſure therein. O taſte (firſt, and then) ſee that the Lord is good.

Pſal. 107. 43.
Pſal 64. 9.
Pſal. 111. 2.
34 8.

This is the method that great Maſter of Thankſgiving preſcribes; firſt experimental notice, then wiſe conſideration, then gratefull ſenſe, then publick acknowledgment. And thoſe we find both by him, and by the Prophet Iſaias (in the very ſame words) reprehended, as wickedly ingratefull perſons, who regarded not the work of the Lord, nor conſidered the operation of his hands. 'Tis part therefore of this Duty incumbent on us, to take notice of diligently, and carefully to conſider the Divine Benefits; not to let them paſs undiſcerned, and unregarded by us, as perſons either wofully blind, or ſtupidly drowzy, or totally unconcerned.

Pſal. 28. 5.
Iſa. 5. 12.

'Tis a general fault, that the moſt common and frequent, the moſt obvious and conſpicuous Favours of God, (like the ordinary Phænomena of Nature, which, as Ariſtotle obſerves, though in themſelves moſt admirable, are yet leaſt admired,) the conſtant riſing of the Sun upon us, the deſcent of fruitfull Showrs, the recourſe of temperate Seaſons, the continuance of our Life, the enjoyment of Health, the providential diſpenſation of Wealth, and competent means of livelyhood, the daily Protection from incident dangers, the helps of improving Knowledge, obtaining Vertue, becoming happy, and ſuch like moſt excellent Benefits, we commonly little mind or regard; and conſequently ſeldom return the thanks due for them. Poſſibly ſome rare accidents of Providence, ſome extraordinary Judgment, ſome miraculous deliverance may rouze and awaken our attention: (as it is ſaid of the Iſraelites, When he ſlew them, then they ſought him, and remembred that God was their Rock, and the high God their Redeemer:) but ſuch advertency is not the effect ſo much of Gratitude, as of curioſity, or of neceſſity: the notable rarity invites, or ſome powerfull impulſe commands our notice. But the truly gratefull induſtriouſly deſign, and are ſtudious to know throughly their obligations, that they may be able to render anſwerable returns for them.

Pſ. 78. 34, 35.

2. This Duty requires a faithfull Retention of Benefits in memory, and conſequently frequent Reflections upon them. For, he that is no longer affected with a Benefit than it incurs the ſenſe, and ſuffers not it ſelf to be diſregarded, is far from being gratefull; nay, if we believe the Philoſopher, is ingratefull in the worſt kind, and higheſt degree. For, Ingratus eſt, (ſaith he) qui beneficium accepiſſe ſe negat, quod accepit; ingratus eſt, qui diſſimulat; ingratus, qui non reddit: ingratiſſimus omnium, qui oblitus eſt. He that falſly denies the reception of a Benefit, and he that diſſembles it, and he that doth not repay it, is ingratefull; but moſt ingratefull of all is he that forgets it. It is a ſign the Benefit made no deep impreſſion on his mind, ſince it left no diſcernible footſtep there; that he hardly ever thought of making recompence, ſince he hath ſuffered himſelf to become altogether uncapable of doing it: neither is there any hope of his amending the paſt neglect; no ſhame, no repentance, no fair occaſion can redeem him from Ingratitude, in whom the very remembrance of his obligation is extinguiſhed.

Ἀχάριστος ὅστις εὖ παθὼν ἀμνημονεῖ.

Sen. 3. de Benef. cap. 1.

If to be ſenſible of a preſent good turn, deſerved the title of Gratitude, all men certainly would be gratefull: the Jews queſtionleſs were ſo. When Almighty God, by his wonderfull power, in extraordinary ways, delivered them from the tyranny and oppreſſion of their prevalent enemies; when he cauſed ſtreams to guſh forth from the bowels of a hard rock, to refreſh their thirſt; when bread deſcended from Heaven in ſhowrs, and the winds were winged with fleſh, to ſatisfie their greedy deſires; then ſurely they were not altogether unſenſible of the Divine goodneſs; then could they acknowledge his power, and be forward enough to engage themſelves in promiſes of correſpondent obſervance toward him for the future. But the miſchief was, immediately after, as the Pſalmiſt complains, They forgat his works, and the wonders he had ſhewed them: They remembred not his hand, nor the day when he delivered them from the enemy. They refuſed to obey, neither were mindfull of the wonders that God did among them; as Nehemiah confeſſes in their behalf. Of the Rock that begat them they were unmindfull, and forgot the God that formed them; as it is in Deuteronomy. They diſtruſted his Promiſes, repined at his dealings, diſobeyed his Laws, and treacherouſly apoſtatized from his Covenant. Such were the fruits of their ingratefull forgetfulneſs; which therefore that people is ſo often charged with, and ſo ſharply reproved for by the Prophets.

Pſ. 78. 11 42.
Neh. 9. 17.
Deut. 32. 18.

On the contrary, we find that great pattern of Gratitude, the Royal Prophet David, continually revolving in his thoughts, imprinting upon his fancy, ſtudying and meditating upon, recollecting and renewing in his memory the reſults of Divine favour. I will remember, ſaith he, thy wonders of old; I will meditate of all thy works, and talk of thy doings: and I remember the days of old; I will meditate on all thy works, I muſe on the works of thy hands: and, Bleſs the Lord O my ſoul, and forget not all his benefits: and my mouth ſhall praiſe thee with joyfull lips, when I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night-watches, becauſe thou haſt been my help. No place unfit, it ſeems, no time unſeaſonable, for the practice of this Duty; not the place deſigned for reſt, not the time due to ſleep, but, as David thought, more due to a wakeful contemplation of the Divine goodneſs. Whoſe vigilant Gratitude we ſhould ſtrive to imitate, devoting our moſt ſolitary and retired, our moſt ſad and ſerious thoughts (not the ſtudies only of our cloſet, but the conſultations alſo of our pillow) to the preſervation of thoſe bleſſed Idea's; that neither length of time may deface them in our fancy, nor other care thruſt them out thence.

Thy loving-kindneſs is ever before mine eyes. Pſal. 26. 3.
& 77. 11, 12.
Pſal. 143. 5.
103. 2.
63. 5, 6, 7.

It was a ſatyrical anſwer, (that of Ariſtotle,) and highly opprobrious to mankind; who being asked, Τί τάχιστον γηράσκει; What doth the ſooneſt grow old? replied, Χάρις, Thanks: and ſo was that adagial verſe, Ἅμ' ἠλέηται, καὶ τέθνηκεν ἡ χάρις· No ſooner the courteſie born, than the reſentment thereof dead. Such reproachfull Aphoriſms we ſhould labour to confute, eſpecially as they are applicable to the Divine favours, by ſo maintaining and cheriſhing our thanks for them, that they neither decay with Age, nor prematurely die, nor be buried in oblivion; but may reſemble the pictures and poetical deſcriptions of the Graces, thoſe goodly Daughters of Heaven, ſmiling always with a never-fading ſerenity of countenance, and flouriſhing in an immortal youth.

The middle, we may obſerve, and the ſafeſt, and the faireſt, and the moſt conſpicuous places in Cities are uſually deputed for the erections of Statues and Monuments dedicated to the memory of worthy men, who have nobly deſerved of their Countries. In like manner ſhould we in the heart and centre of our Soul, in the beſt and higheſt apartments thereof, in the places moſt expoſed to ordinary obſervation, and moſt ſecure from the invaſions of worldly care, erect lively repreſentations of, and laſting memorials unto the Divine bounty; conſtantly attending to which we may be diſpoſed to Gratitude. Not one bleſſing, not the leaſt favourable paſſage of Providence ought to periſh with us, though long ſince paſt, and removed out of the ſphere of preſent ſenſe.

We muſt not in our Old age forget who formed us in the Womb, who brought us into the light, who ſuckled our Infancy, who educated our Childhood, who governed our Youth, who conducted our Manhood through the manifold hazzards, troubles and diſaſters of life.

Pſal 71. 6.

Nor in our Proſperity, our affluence of good things, our poſſeſſion of Canaan, Deut. 6 12. 8. 11. ſhould we be unmindfull of him who relieved us in our ſtraits, who ſupplied our wants, ſuſtained our adverſity, who redeemed us from Egypt, and led us through the wilderneſs. A ſucceſſion of new and freſh Benefits ſhould not (as among ſome Savages the manner is for the young to make away the old) ſupplant and expunge ancient ones, but make them rather more dear and venerable to us. Time ſhould not weaken or diminiſh, but rather confirm and radicate in us the remembrance of God's goodneſs; to render it, as it doth gold and wine, more precious, and more ſtrong. We have uſually a memory more than enough tenacious of injuries and ill turns done us: let it never be ſaid, to the diſgrace of that noble faculty, that we can hardly forget the diſcourteſies of man, but not eaſily remember the favours of God. But farther,

3. This Duty implies a due eſteem and valuation of Benefits; that the nature and quality, the meaſure and quantity, the circumſtances and conſequences of them be well expended; elſe the Gratitude is like to be none, or very defective. For we commenſurate our thankfulneſs, not ſo much to the intrinſick excellency of things, as to our peculiar eſtimations of them. A Cynick, perhaps, would not return more thanks for a diamond, than for a pebble; nor more gratefully receive a talent of gold, than an ounce of copper; becauſe he equally values, or rather alike contemns both.

Wherefore we find our (never to-be-forgotten) example, the devout Thankſgiver David, continually declaring the great price he ſet upon the Divine favours; admiring and diſplaying their tranſcendent perfections, their wonderfull greatneſs, their boundleſs extenſion, their exceſſive multitude, their endleſs duration, their advantageous circumſtances, (the excellent needfulneſs, convenience and ſeaſonableſs of them; together with the admirable freeneſs, wiſdom and power of the Benefactour ſhining forth in and by them.) Pſ. 108. 3, 4. I will praiſe thee, O Lord, (ſaith he) among the people, I will ſing unto thee among the nations: For thy mercy is great unto the heavens, and thy faithfulneſs reacheth unto the clouds: and, Pſ. 105. 5, 7 Remember the marvellous works that he hath done, his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth. He is the Lord our God, his judgments are in all the earth: and again, Pſ 36. 5, 6, 7. Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens, thy faithfulneſs reacheth unto the clouds. Thy righteouſneſs is like the great mountains; thy judgments are a great deep: O Lord, thou preſerveſt man and beaſt. How excellent is thy loving kindneſs, O God! and, Pſ. 139. 17, 18. How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O Lord! O how great is the ſum of them! If I ſhould count them, they are more in number than the ſand: and again, Pſ 111. His work is honourable and glorious, his righteouſneſs endureth for ever: and, Pſal. 145. 9. The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works: and, Pſal. 68. 19. Bleſſed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with his benefits.

In ſuch manner ought we diligently to ſurvey, and judiciouſly to eſtimate the effects of Divine beneficence, examining every part, and deſcanting upon every circumſtance thereof: like thoſe that contemplate ſome rare beauty, or ſome excellent picture; ſome commending the exact proportions, ſome the gracefull features, ſome the lively colours diſcernible therein. There is not the leaſt of the Divine favours, which, if we conſider the condeſcenſive tenderneſs, the clear intention, the undeſerved frankneſs, the chearfull debonairity expreſſed therein, hath not dimenſions larger than our comprehenſion, colours too fair, and lineaments too comely for our weak ſight throughly to diſcern; requiring therefore our higheſt eſteem, and our utmoſt thanks.

'Tis, perhaps, ſomewhat dangerous to affix a determinate value upon any of God's Benefits: (for to value them ſeems to undervalue them, they being really ineſtimable:) what then is it to extenuate, to vilifie, to deſpiſe the greateſt? We ſhould eſteem them, as we meaſure the Heavens with our eye, as we compute the ſands upon the ſhore, as we would prize inexhauſtible mines of gold, and treaſures of pearl; that is, by confeſſing heartily their worth ſurpaſſes the ſtrength of our imagination to conceive, and of our ſpeech to utter; that they are immenſe, innumerable, unconceivable and unexpreſſible. But ſtill,

4. Giving thanks imports, that benefits be received with a willing mind, a hearty ſenſe, a vehement affection. The forementioned particulars are indeed neceſſary properties, inſeparable concomitants, or prerequiſite conditions to; but a chearfull and cordial acceptance of Benefits is the form (as it were) and ſoul, the life and ſpirit, the principal and moſt eſſential ingredient of this Duty.

It was not altogether unreaſonable, though it went for a Paradox, that dictate of the Stoicks, That animus ſufficit animo, and, That qui libenter accepit, beneficium reddidit: that he, who with a willing and well-affected mind receives a courteſie, hath fully diſcharged the duty of Gratitude; that other endeavours of return and compenſation are rather handſome acceſſions to it, than indiſpenſably requiſite to the completion thereof. For as in the Collation, 'tis not the gold or the ſilver, the food or the apparel, in which the Benefit conſiſts, but the will and benevolent intention of him that beſtows them; ſo reciprocally 'tis the good acceptance, the ſenſibleneſs of, and acquieſcence in the Benefactour's goodneſs, that conſtitutes the Gratitude; which who affords, though he be neveur capable of yielding other ſatisfaction, voluntate voluntati ſatiſſecit; and, Regnum æquavit opes animo ——. 'Tis ingenuity that conſtitutes (reſpectively) both a bountifull Giver, and a thankfull Receiver. A truly noble Benefactour purely aimeth at not any material reward, or advantage to himſelf; (it were trading this, not beneficence;) but the good, profit, and content of him to whom he diſpenſeth his favour: of which being aſſured, he reſts ſatisfied, and accounts himſelf royally recompenſed.

Quoties quod propoſuit quis conſequitur, capit operis ſui fructum. Qui beneficium dat, quid proponit ſibi? prodeſſe ei cui dat, & ſibi voluptati eſſe: Non ſibi invicem reddi voluit; aut non fuit beneficium, ſed negotiation. Beneficii proprium eſt, nihil de reditu cogitare. Senec.

Nec eſt dubium quin is qui liberalis benignuſque dicitur, officium, non fructum, ſequatur. Cic. de Leg. I.

Such a Benefactour is Almighty God, and ſuch a tribute he requires of us; a ready embracement of, and a joyfull complacency in his kindneſs; even ſuch as he expreſſed, who ſaid, Becauſe thy loving-kindneſs is better than life, my lips ſhall praiſe thee: and, My ſoul ſhall be filled as with marrow and fatneſs, and my mouth ſhall praiſe thee with joyfull lips: and, I will praiſe thee with my whole heart; I will be glad and rejoyce in thee: and, Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul; and all that is within me, praiſe his holy Name. Pſal. 63. 3. & 104. 33. & 71. 22. & 63. 5. & 9 1, 2. & 103. 1.

No Holocauſt is ſo acceptable to God, as a Heart enflamed with the ſenſe of his Goodneſs. He loves not onely ἱλαρὸν δότην, (a merry giver) 2 Cor. 9. 7. but ἱλαρὸν δέκτην, (a chearfull receiver) alſo. He would have us, as to deſire his favour with a greedy appetite, ſo to taſte it with a ſavoury reliſh. He deſigns not onely to fill our mouths with food, but our hearts alſo with gladneſs. Acts 14. 17.

We muſt not ſeem to grudge or repine, to murmur or diſdain, that we are neceſſitated to be beholden to him; leſt it happen to us as it did to them of whom 'tis ſaid, While the meat was yet in their mouths, the wrath of God came upon them, and ſlew the fatteſt of them. Pſal 78. 30, 31 Yea, 'tis our duty not to be contented only, but to be delighted, to be tranſported, to be raviſhed with the emanations of his love: to entertain them with ſuch a diſpoſition of mind, as the dry and parched ground imbibes the ſoft due and gentle ſhowrs: as the chill and darkſome air admits the benign influences of heavenly light; as the thirſty ſoul takes in the ſweet and cooling ſtream. He that with a ſullen look, a dead heart; a faint ſenſe, a cold hand, embraces the gifts of Heaven, is really unthankfull, though with deluges of wine and oil he makes the altars to o'erflow, and clouds the sky with the ſteam of his ſacrifices. But yet farther,

5. This Duty requires due Acknowledgment of our oblation, ſignifications of our notice, declarations of our eſteem and good acceptance of favours conferr'd. 'Tis the worſt and moſt deteſtable of ingratitudes, that which proceeds from pride and ſcorn: and ſuch is he guilty of, who is either unwilling, or aſhamed to confeſs himſelf obliged; who purpoſely diſſembles a Benefit, or diſavows the Benefactour; who refuſes to render thoſe moſt manifeſtly due, and moſt † eaſily diſcharged, thoſe neither toilſome, nor expenſive oblations of praiſe and acknowledgment. This part of our duty requires, that we offer to God, not coſtly Hecatombs, but the calves onely of our lips, (as the Prophet Hoſea ſpeaks;) not the fruit of our lands, but καρπὸν χειλέων onely, (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſtyles it,) the fruit of our lips, * confeſſing to his name: that we employ ſome few blaſts of the breath he gave us, on the celebration of his goodneſs, and advancement of his repute. I will praiſe the name of God with a ſong, and will magnifie him with thankſgiving. This ſhall pleaſe the Lord better than an oxe or bullock that hath horns and hoofs, ſaith David.

† Οὐδὲ γὰρ βαρύ τι καὶ ἐπαχθὲς ἐπιζητεῖ παρ' ἡμῶν, ἀλλ' ἢ τὸ ὁμολογεῖν μόνον τὰς τοσαύτας εὐεργεσίας, καὶ τὰς ὑπὲρ τούτων αὐτῷ εὐχαριστίας ἀναφέρειν. Chryſ. Tom. I pag. 54.

Hoſ. 14. 2.

Heb. 13. 15.

* ὁμολογούντων.

Pſal. 69. 30, 31.

And ſurely 'tis the leaſt homage we in gratitude owe, and can pay to Almighty God, to avow our dependence upon and obligation to him for the good things we enjoy, to acknowledge that his favours do deſerve thanks, to publiſh to the world our experience of his goodneſs, to proclaim ſolemnly with the voice of thankſgiving his moſt deſerved
Pſal. 89. 1. praiſe; reſembling him who abounds in ſuch expreſſions as theſe: I will ſing of the mercies of the Lord for ever, with my mouth will I make known
26. 7 his faithfulneſs to all generations. I will publiſh with the voice of thankſ-
145. 5 giving, and tell of all his wondrous works. I will ſpeak of the glorious ho-
40. 10. nour of thy Majeſty, and of thy wondrous works. I have not hid thy righteouſneſs in my heart, I have declared thy faithfulneſs and thy ſalvation: I have not concealed thy loving-kindneſs and thy truth from the great congregation.

Vid. Pſ. 66 5. O come hither, and behold the works of God, &c.

Thus if a gratefull affection live in our hearts, it will reſpire through our mouths, and diſcover it ſelf in the motion of our lips. There will be a conſpiracy and faithfull correſpondence between our mind and our tongue: if the one be ſenſible, the other will not be ſilent; as if the ſpring works, the wheels will turn about, and the bell not fail to ſpeak. Neither ſhall we content our ſelves in loneſome tunes, and private ſoliloquies, to whiſper out the Divine praiſes; but ſhall loudly excite and provoke others to a melodious conſonance with us. We ſhall, with the ſweet Singer of Iſrael, cite and invoke Heaven and Earth; the celeſtial quire of Angels; the ſeveral eſtates and generations of Men, the numberleſs company of all the Creatures, to aſſiſt and joyn in conſort with us, in celebrating the worthy deeds, and magnifying the glorious name of our moſt mighty Creatour, of our moſt bountifull Benefactour.

Gratitude is of a fruitfull and diffuſive nature, of a free and communicative diſpoſition, of an open and ſociable temper: it will be imparting, diſcovering and propagating it ſelf; it affects light, company and liberty; it cannot endure to be ſmothered in privacy and obſcurity. Its beſt inſtrument therefore is Speech, that moſt natural proper and eaſie mean of converſation, of ſignifying our conceptions, of conveying, and, as it were transfunding our thoughts and our paſſions into each other. This therefore glory of ours, and beſt organ that we have, (as the Pſalmiſt ſeems to call it,) our Tongue, we ſhould in all reaſon devote to the honour, and conſecrate to the praiſe of him who made it, and who conſerves it ſtill in tune.

Ψυχὴ γὰρ οἶμαι ψυχῇ καὶ πνεῦμα πνεύματι συναπτόμενα κατὰ τὴν τοῦ λόγου σπορὰν, &c. Clem. Alexan. Strom I. pag. 270.

Pſal. 57. 8.

And the farther to provoke us, we may conſider, that it hath been the manner, prompted by Nature, and authorized by general practice, for men of all nations, and all times, and all ways, by compoſed Hymns and panegyrical Elogies, to expreſs their gratitude for the gifts of Nature, and for the Benefits indulged by Providence; in their publick Sacrifices and ſolemn Feſtivities extolling the excellent qualities of their imaginary Deities; and reciting the famous atchievments of their Heroes, and ſuppoſed Benefactours: to whoſe favourable help and bleſſing, in their conceit, they owed the fruits of the earth, the comforts of life, the defence and patronage of their countries: being indeed miſtaken in the object, but not tranſgreſſing in the ſubſtance of the Duty; paying a due debt, though to falſe creditours. And I wiſh we were as ready to imitate them in the one, as we are, perhaps, prone to blame them for the other. For, certainly, acknowledgments of the Divine Goodneſs, and ſolemn teſtifications of our thankfull ſenſe thereof, (whatever the abuſed world may now imagine,) was always, is now, and ever will be the principal and moſt noble part of all Religion immediately addreſſed to God. But moreover,

6. This Duty requires endeavours of real Compenſation, and a ſatiſfactory Requital of Benefits, according to the ability and opportunity of the receiver: that we doe not onely verbally dicere, and agnoſcere; but really agere, and referre gratias: that to him who hath by his beneficence obliged us, we miniſter reciprocal aſſiſtence, comfort and relief, if he need them, and be capable to receive them; however, by evident teſtimonies to diſcover our ready diſpoſition to make ſuch real returns; and withall, to ſute our actions to his good liking, and in our carriage to comply with his reaſonable deſires. For, as the earth which drinketh the rain often coming upon it, and having been by great labour tilled, and manured with expence, yieldeth yet no * meet herbage, or fruit agreeable to the expectation of him that dreſſeth it, but is either wholly barren, or produceth onely thorns and briars, is (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews tells us) to be reprobated, and nigh unto curſing; that is, deſerves no farther care or culture to be employed on it, and is to be reputed deſperately worthleſs: ſo is he, (that we may apply an Apodoſis to the Apoſtle's compariſon) who, daily partaking the influences of Divine Providence and Bounty, affords no anſwerable return, to be accounted execrably unthankfull, and unworthy of any farther favour to be ſhewed toward him.

1 Sam. 12. 24 Onely fear the Lord, and ſerve him in truth, with all your heart: for conſider how great things he hath done for you

Heb. 6. 7, 8.

* εὔθετον βοτάνην.

Pſal. 16. 2. 'Tis true, our righteouſneſs (or beneficence, ſo the word there ſignifies) doth not extend unto God: His Benefits exceed all poſſibility of any proportionable requital: He doth not need, nor can ever immediately receive any advantage from us: we cannot enrich him with our gifts, who by unqueſtionable right, and in unalterable poſſeſſion, is Lord and Maſter of all things that do actually, or can poſſibly exiſt; nor advance him by our weak commendations, who already enjoyeth the ſupreme pitch of glory; nor any-way contribute to his in it ſelf compleat and indefectible Beatitude. Yet we may by appoſite ſignifications declare our willingneſs to ſerve and exalt him: we may by our obſequious demeanour highly pleaſe and content him: we may, by our charity and benignity to thoſe whoſe good he tenders, yield (though not an adequate, yet) an acceptable return to his Benefits. Pſal. 116. 12. What ſhall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits? ſaith David, in way of counſel and deliberation: and thereupon reſolves, Verſ. 13, 14. I will take the cup of ſalvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord: I will pay my vows unto the Lord. Seaſonable benedictions, officious addreſſes, and faithfull performances of vows, he intimates to bear ſome ſhadow at leaſt, ſome reſemblance of compenſation. And ſo did his wiſe Son likewiſe, when he thus adviſed, Prov 3. 9. Honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance, and with the firſt-fruits of thy encreaſe.

Almighty God though he really doth, and cannot otherwiſe doe, yet will not ſeem to beſtow his favours altogether gratis, but to expect ſome competent return, ſome ſmall uſe and income from them. He will aſſert his rightfull title, and be acknowledged the chief proprietary, by ſignal expreſſions of our fealty, and the payment of ſome, though inconſiderable, quit-rent, for our poſſeſſions derived from him: he will rather himſelf be ſeemingly indigent, than permit us to be really ingratefull. For, knowing well that our performance of duty and reſpect toward him greatly conduceth to our comfort and happineſs, he requireth of us ſuch demonſtrations of them, as we conveniently are able to exhibit; he appoints ſervices expreſſive of thankfulneſs, exacts tributes and cuſtoms, demands loans and benevolences, encourages and accepts free-will-offerings from us. Exod. 23 15 Thou ſhalt not appear empty before the Lord, was a Statute to the Jews, qualified and moderated by certain meaſures: The Firſt-fruits of their Lands, the Firſt-born of their Cattle and of themſelves, the tenths of their annual encreaſe, and a certain allotment from the Spoils acquired in wars, did God challenge to himſelf, as fitting recompences due for his bounty to and care over them.

Ἀκήρατος γὰρ αὐτοῦ ἡ οὐσία καὶ ἀνενδεὴς ἐστι, οὐδενὸς ἑτέρου προσδεῖται· οἱ δὲ αἰνοῦντες αὐτὸν, αὐτοὶ λαμπρότεροι γίνονται. S. Chryſ. in Pſal. 144 p. 885. Savil.

Neither did the Gentiles conceive themſelves exempted from the like obligation. For the ἀκροθίνια, the top or chief of their Corn-heaps, they were wont to conſecrate unto him who had bleſſed their fields with encreaſe; and the ἀκρόλεια, the firſt and beſt of the prey, they dedicated to the adornment of his temple by whoſe favourable diſpoſal they had obtained the victory. Neither would they ſooner begin their meal, and partake of their neceſſary refreſhment, than, by pouring forth their gratulatory libation, they had performed ſome homage to Heaven for it.

—— ——οὐδέ τις ἔτλη
Πρὶν πιέειν πρὶν λεῖψαι ὑπερμενέϊ Κρονίωνι, Hom. Il. η'. ad finem.

was the cuſtom, it ſeems, in Homer's time. I ſhall not inſiſt upon their ἀναθήματα, their anniverſary or their caſual Sacrifices; but onely obſerve, (what, if ſeaſonable, might by many ſufficient teſtimonies be evinced,) ced,) that thoſe men (at leaſt the moſt intelligent of them) were not ſo ſenſeleſs as to imagine, that the Gods to whom they performed thoſe ſervices, and Devoted thoſe oblations, did any-wiſe need, or were truly benefited by them; but that they eſteemed it a comely thing, by the moſt ſignificant means they could invent, to declare their gratefull ſenſe of the Divine goodneſs and indulgence toward them.

Vid. Platonis Alcib. II. pag, 459. Οὐ γὰρ, οἶμαι, τοιοῦτόν ἐστι τὸ τῶν θεῶν, ὥστε ὑπὸ δώρων παράγεσθαι, οἷον κακὸν τοκιστὴν, &c.

And though we are, perhaps, diſobliged now from the circumſtantial manner, yet are we no-wiſe freed from (but rather more ſtrongly engaged to) the ſubſtantial performance of this ſort of Gratitude. We are to offer ſtill, not dead bulls and goats, but (as S. Paul ſaith) our own bodies, living ſacrifices, holy and acceptable to God. We are excuſed from material, but are yet bound to yield πνευματικὰς θυσίας, ſpiritual ſacrifices unto God, as S. Peter tells us. We muſt burn incenſe ſtill, that of frequent Devotion; and ſend up continually to Heaven θυσίαν τῆς αἰνέσεως, that thank-offering of praiſe, which the Apoſtle to the Hebrews mentions. We muſt conſecrate the firſt-born of our Souls, (pure and holy Thoughts,) and the firſt-fruits of our ſtrength, (our moſt active Endeavours,) to God's Service. We muſt ſlay our impure deſires, mortifie our corrupt affections, and abandon our ſelfiſh reſpects for his ſake. We muſt give him our hearts, and preſent our wills entirely to his diſpoſal. We muſt vow to him, and pay the daily oblation of ſincere Obedience. We muſt officiouſly attend his pleaſure, and labour to content him by an innocent and unblemiſhed converſation. With theſe things Almighty God is effectually gratified; he approves of and accepts theſe, as real teſtimonies of our Thankfulneſs, and competent returns of his Benefits.

Rom. 12. 1.

1 Pet. 2. 5.

Heb. 13. 15.

Μία ἀμοιβὴ κυριωτάτη παρὰ ἀνθρώπων, ταῦτα δρᾶν ἅπερ ἀρεστὰ τῷ Θεῷ. Clem. Alex. Strom. 7. p. 511.

Eſpecially our Charity and Beneficence, our exhibiting love and reſpect to good men, (his faithful ſervants and near relations,) our affording help and ſuccour to perſons in need and diſtreſs, he accounts a ſuitable retaliation of his kindneſs, acknowledges to be an obligation laid upon himſelf, and hath by ſettled rules and indiſpenſable promiſes obliged himſelf to requite them. For, He that hath pity on the poor, lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given, he will pay him again: and, God is not unrighteous, to forget your work, and labour of love, which ye have ſhewed toward his Name, in that ye have miniſtred to the Saints, and do miniſter: and, To do good and to communicate, forget not; for with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed: and, I deſire fruit (ſaith S. Paul to the Philippians) that may abound to your account. But I have all, and abound; I am full, having received of Epaphroditus the things which were ſent from you, an odour of a ſweet ſmell, a ſacrifice acceptable, well pleaſing to God. And, Inaſmuch as ye have done it to (that is, fed, and clothed, and comforted) the leaſt of theſe my brethren, ye have done it unto me, ſaith our Saviour; manifeſtly declaring, that the good we doe, and the reſpect we ſhew unto good and needy men, God reckons it done unto himſelf.

Prov. 19. 17.

Heb. 6. 10.

Heb. 13. 16.

Phil. 4 17, 18.

Matt. 25. 40.

And this point I ſhall conclude with the ſayings of the wiſe Hebrew Philoſopher Ben-Sirach, He that keepeth the Law, bringeth offerings enough: He that taketh heed to the Commandment, offereth a peace-offering. He that requiteth a good turn, offereth fine flower: and he that giveth alms, ſacrificeth praiſe. To depart from wickedneſs, is a thing pleaſing to the Lord: and to forſake unrighteouſneſs, is a propitiation. To theſe I ſhall onely adde this one particular.

Ecclus 35. 1, 2, 3.

7. That true Gratitude for Benefits is always attended with the Eſteem, Veneration and Love of the Benefactour. Beneficence is a Royal and God-like thing, an argument of eminent Goodneſs and Power conſpiring; and neceſſarily therefore, as in them that perceive, and duly conſider it, it begets Reſpect and Reverence, ſo peculiarly in thoſe that feel its benign influence, it produces Love and Affection: like the heavenly Light, which to all that behold it appears glorious; but more powerfully warms thoſe that are directly ſubject to its rays, and is by them more vigorouſly reflected.

And as to thoſe that are immediately concerned therein, it imports more particular Regard and Good will; ſo, if they be duly ſenſible thereof, it engages them in mutual correſpondence, to an extraordinary Eſteem and Benevolence: ſuch as David upon this account profeſſes to Pſal 18. 1. have been in himſelf toward God, and frequently excites others to. I Verſe 3. will love thee, O Lord my ſtrength. I will call upon the Lord, who is Verſe 46. worthy to be praiſed. The Lord liveth, and bleſſed be my rock; and let the God of my ſalvation be exalted.
Pſal. 116. 1. I love the Lord, becauſe he hath heard my voice, and my ſupplications. And, (in the Goſpel)
Luk. 7. 47. Becauſe
Ἔστιν χάρις γὰρ ἡ χάριν τίκτουσ' ἀεί. Soph. her ſins, being many, were forgiven, therefore ſhe loved much. So true it is, that ſenſe of favour indulged is naturally productive of love.

Thus have I plainly and ſimply preſented you with what my meditations ſuggeſted concerning the Nature and Subſtance of this Duty, with the ſeveral branches ſprouting from the main ſtock thereof: I proceed now to that which will exceedingly enlarge the worth, and engage to the performance thereof.

II. The Object and Term to which it is to be directed; we are to give thanks to God. To God, I ſay; that is, to Him unto whom we are obliged, not for ſome ſmall and inconſiderable trifles, but for the moſt weighty and valuable Benefits: from whom we receive, not few or ſome, but all good things; what-ever is neceſſary for our ſuſtenance, convenient for our uſe, pleaſant for our enjoyment; not onely thoſe that come immediately from his hand, but what we obtain from others, who from him receive both the will and the power, the means and the opportunities of doing us good: to whom we owe, not onely what we ever did, or doe at preſent poſſeſs, or can hereafter hope for of good; but that we were, are, or ſhall ever be in capacity to receive any: to the Authour, Upholder and Preſerver of our being; without whoſe goodneſs we had never been, and without whoſe care we cannot ſubſiſt one moment.

To Him who is the Lord and true owner of all things we partake of; whoſe air we breathe, whoſe ground we tread on, whoſe food ſuſtains us; whoſe wholly we are our ſelves, both the Bodies we carry about us, (which is the work of his hands,) and the Soul we think with, which was breathed from his mouth.

To Him who hath created a whole World to ſerve us, a ſpacious, a beautifull, a ſtately World for us to inhabit, and to diſport in: who hath ſubjected ſo fair a territory to our dominion, and conſigned to our uſe ſo numerous a progeny of goodly creatures, to be managed, to be governed, to be enjoyed by us.

So that where-ever we direct our eyes, whether we reflect them inward upon our ſelves, we behold his Goodneſs to occupy and penetrate the very root and centre of our beings; or extend them abroad toward the things about us, we may perceive our ſelves encloſed wholly, and ſurrounded with his Benefits. At home we find a comely body framed by his curious artifice, various Organs fitly proportioned, ſituated and tempered for ſtrength, ornament and motion, actuated by a gentle heat, and invigorated with lively ſpirits, diſpoſed to health, and qualified for a long endurance; ſubſervient to a Soul endued with divers Senſes, Faculties and Powers, apt to enquire after, purſue and perceive various delights and contents. To the ſatisfaction of which all extrinſecal things do miniſter matter and help; by his kind diſpoal, who furniſhes our Palats with variety of delicious fare, entertains our Eyes with pleaſant ſpectacles, raviſhes our Ears with harmonious ſounds, perfumes our Noſtrils with fragrant odours, chears our Spirits with comfortable gales, fills our Hearts with food and gladneſs, ſupplies our manifold needs, and protects us from innumerable dangers.

To Him who hath inſpired us with immortal Minds, and impreſſed upon them perſpicuous characters of his own Divine Eſſence; hath made us, not in ſome ſuperficial lineaments, but in our moſt intimate conſtitution, to reſemble himſelf, and to partake of his moſt excellent Perfections; an extenſive Knowledge of truth, a vehement Complacency in good, a forward Capacity of being compleatly happy, (according to our degree, and within our ſphere.) To which bleſſed end by all ſutable means (of external miniſtry and interiour aſſiſtence) he faithfully conducts us; revealing to us the way, urging us in our proceſs, reclaiming us when we deviate; engaging us by his Commands, ſoliciting us by gentle Advices, encouraging us by gracious Promiſes; inſtructing us by his holy Word, and admoniſhing us by his loving Spirit.

To him who vouchſafes to grant us a free acceſs unto, a conſtant intercourſe and a familiar acquaintance with Himſelf; to eſteem and ſtyle us his Friends and Children; to invite us frequently, and entertain us kindly with thoſe moſt pleaſant delicacies of ſpiritual repaſt; yea, to viſit us often at our home, and (if we admit) to abide and dwell with us; indulging us the enjoyment of that Preſence, wherein the life of all joy and comfort conſiſts, and to behold the light of his all-chearing countenance.

Is there any thing more? Yes: To Him who, to redeem us from Miſery, and to advance our eſtate, hath infinitely debaſed Himſelf, and eclipſed the brightneſs of his glorious Majeſty; not diſdaining to aſſume us into a near affinity, yea, into a perfect union with himſelf; to inhabit our frail and mortal nature, to undergo the laws and conditions of Humanity, to appear in our ſhape, and converſe, as it were, upon equal terms with us, and at laſt to taſte the bitter Cup of a moſt painfull and diſgracefull Death for us.

Yea, To Him who not only deſcended from his Imperial Throne, became a Subject, and (which is more) a Servant for our ſake; but deſigned thereby to exalt us to a participation of his Royal dignity, his Divine nature, his eternal glory and bliſs; ſubmitting Crowns and Sceptres to our choice; Crowns that cannot fade, and Sceptres that can never be extorted from us.

Farther yet, To him, the excellent quality, the noble end, the moſt obliging manner of whoſe Beneficence doth ſurpaſs the matter thereof, and hugely augment the Benefits: who, not compelled by any neceſſity, not obliged by any law, (or previous compact) not induced by any extrinſick arguments, not inclined by our merits, not wearied with our importunities, not inſtigated by troubleſome paſſions of pity, ſhame, or fear, (as we are wont to be,) not flattered with promiſes of recompence, nor bribed with expectation of emoulment thence to accrue unto himſelf; but being abſolute Maſter of his own actions, onely both Law-giver and Counſellour to himſelf, all-ſufficient, and incapable of admitting any acceſſion to his perfect bliſsfulneſs ; moſt willingly and freely, out of pure bounty and good will, is our friend and benefactour ; preventing not only our deſires, but our knowledge ; ſurpaſſing not our deſerts onely, but our wiſhes, yea, even our conceits, in the diſpenſation of his ineſtimable, and unrequitable benefits ; having no other drift in the collation of them, beſide our real good and welfare, our profit and advantage, our pleaſure and content.

Tho Him who not lately began, or ſuddenly will ceaſe, that is either uncertain or mutable in his intentions, but from everlaſting deſigned, continues daily, and will (if we ſuffer him) to all eternity perſevere unmoveable in his reſolutions to doe us good.

To him whom no ingratitude, no undutifull carriage, no rebellious diſobedience of ours could for one minute wholly remove, or divert from his ſteddy purpoſe of caring for us : who regards us, though we do not attend to him ; procures our welfare, though we neglect his concernments ; employs his reſtleſs thought, extends his watchful eye, exerts his powerfull arm, is always mindfull, and always buſie to doe us good ; watching over us, when we ſleep, and remembring us, when we forget our ſelves : in whom yet 'tis infinite condeſcenſion to think of us, who are placed ſo far beneath his thoughts ; to value us, who art but duſt and dirt ; not to deſpiſe and hate us, who are really ſo deſpicable and Pſ. 113. 5, 6. unworthy. For though he dwelleth on high, (ſaith the Pſalmiſt truly and emphatically,) he humbleth himſelf to behold the things that are done in heaven and earth.

To Him that is as mercifull and gracious, as liberal and munificent toward us : that not onely beſtows on us more gifts, but pardons us more debts, and forgives us more ſins, than we live minutes : that with infinite patience endures, not only our manifold infirmities and imperfections, but our petulant follies, our obſtinate perverſeneſſes, our treacherous infidelities ; overlooks our careleſs neglects, and our wilfull miſcarriages ; puts up the exceedingly-many outragious affronts, injuries and contumelies continually offered to his Supreme Majeſty by us baſe worms, whom he hath always under his feet, and can cruſh to nothing at his pleaſure.

Jam 1. 5. To Him yet who (as S. James ſaith) giveth freely and upbraideth no man : who calls us neither very frequently, nor over ſtrictly to accounts : who exacts of us no impoſſible, no very difficult, no greatly-burthenſome or coſtly returns ; being ſatisfied with the chearfull acceptance of his favours, the hearty acknowledgments of his goodneſs, the ſincere performance of ſuch duties to which our own welfare, comfort and advantage (rightly apprehended) would otherwiſe abundantly diſpoſe us.

To him, laſtly, whoſe Benefits to acknowledge is the greateſt benefit of all ; to be enabled to thank whom deſerves our greateſt thanks ; to be ſenſible of whoſe Beneficence, to meditate on whoſe Goodneſs, to admire whoſe Excellency, to celebrate whoſe Praiſe, is Heaven it ſelf and Paradiſe, the life of Angels, the quinteſſence of joy, the ſupreme degree of Felicity.

Pſal. 106. 2. In a word, To Him whoſe Benefits are immenſely great, innumerably many, unexpreſſibly good and precious. For, Who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord? who can ſhew forth all his praiſe? ſaid he, who had employed often his moſt active thoughts, and his utmoſt endeavours thereupon, and was incomparably better able to doe it.

To this God, to this great, to this onely Benefactour of ours, we owe this moſt natural and eaſie, this moſt juſt and equal, this moſt ſweet and pleaſant Duty of giving Thanks. To whom if we wilfully refuſe, if we careleſly neglect to pay it, I ſhall onely ſay thus much, that we are not onely monſtrouſly ingratefull, and horribly wicked; but abominably fooliſh, and deplorably miſerable. I ſhall repeat this ſentence once again, and wiſh it may have its due effect upon us: To this great, to this onely Patron and Benefactour of ours, if we doe not in ſome meaſure diſcharge our due debt of Gratitude, for his ineſtimable Benefits and Mercies, we are to be adjudged not onely moſt prodigiouſly unthankfull, moſt deteſtably impious; but moſt wofully ſtupid alſo and ſenſeleſs, moſt deſperately wretched and unhappy.

I ſhould now proceed to conſider the Circumſtance of Time, determined in the word Always; and the Extenſion of the Matter, implied in thoſe words, for all things: and then to ſubjoyn ſome farther inducements, or arguments perſuaſive to the practice of this Duty. But the time (and, I fear, your patience,) failing, I ſhall reſerve them to ſome other opportunity.

SERMON IX.

The Duty of Thankſgiving.

EPHES. V. 20.

Giving thanks always for all things unto God.

HAving formerly diſcourſed upon theſe words, I obſerved in them Four Particulars conſiderable: 1. the ſubſtance of a Duty, to which we are exhorted, to give thanks; 2. the Term unto which it is directed, to God; 3. the Circumſtance of time, determined in that word, always; 4. the Extent of the Matter about which the Duty is employed, for all things. Concerning the Two former Particulars, wherein the Duty conſiſted, and wherefore eſpecially related unto God, I then repreſented what did occur to my meditation.

III. I proceed now to the Third, the Circumſtance of Time allotted to the performance of this Duty, expreſſed by that univerſal and unlimited term, Always.

Which yet is not ſo to be underſtood, as if thereby we were obliged in every inſtant (or ſingular point of time) actually to remember, to conſider, to be affected with, and to acknowledge the Divine Benefits: for the deliberate operations of our minds being ſometimes wholly interrupted by ſleep, otherwhile preoccupied by the indiſpenſable care of ſerving our natural neceſſities, and with attendance upon other reaſonable employments,) it were impoſſible to comply with an obligation to the performance of this Duty ſo interpreted. And thoſe Maxims of Law, Impoſſibilium nulla eſt obligatio, and, Quæ rerum naturâ prohibentur, tur, nullà lege confirmata ſunt, (that is, No law or precept can oblige to impoſſibilities,) being evidently grounded upon natural equity, ſeem yet more valid in relation to his Laws, who is the Judge of all the world, and in his diſpenſations moſt tranſcendently juſt and equal.

We may therefore obſerve, that the Hebrews are wont (in way of Synecdoche, or grammatical Hyperbole) ſo to uſe words of this kind, that their univerſal importance ought to be reſtrained by the quality or circumſtances of the matter about which they converſe. As when our Matt. 10. 22. Saviour ſaith, Ye ſhall be hated by all men for my ſake; All is not to be taken for every ſingular perſon, (ſince there were ſome that loved our Saviour, and embraced the Evangelical Doctrine,) but for many, or Pſal. 14. 1. the moſt. And when David ſaith, There is none that doeth good; he ſeemeth onely to mean, that in the general corruption of his times there were few righteous perſons to be found. And ſo for ever is often uſed, not for a perpetual and endleſs, but for a long and laſting duration; and always, not for a continual (unintermitted) ſtate of being, or action, but for ſuch a perſeverance as agrees to the condition of the thing to which it is applied.

Exod. 28. 30. 'Tis (for inſtance) preſcribed in Exodus, that Aaron ſhould bear the judgment of the children of Iſrael (the Urim and Thummim) upon his heart before the Lord continually; that is, (not in abſolute and rigorous acception continually, but) conſtantly ever when he went into the Holy place to diſcharge the Pontifical function, as the context declares. Joh. 18. 20. And our Saviour in the Goſpel ſaith of himſelf, Ἐγὼ πάντοτε ἐδίδαξα, I always taught in the temple; that is, very often, and ever when fit occaſion was preſented. And the Apoſtles, immediately after Chriſt's aſ- Luk. 24. 53. cenſion, ἦσαν διαπαντὸς ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, were (as S. Luke tells us) continually in the temple, praiſing and bleſſing God; that is, they reſorted thither conſtantly at the uſual times, or canonical hours of prayer. In like 1 Theſſ. 5. 16, 18 manner thoſe injunctions (of neareſt affinity) of rejoycing, of giving Eph. 6. 18. thanks always, and particularly of praying without ceaſing, (as I have Luke 18. 1. ſhewn more largely in another Diſcourſe,) are to be taken in a ſenſe ſo 1 Theſ. 5. 17. qualified, that the obſervance of them may be at leaſt morally poſſible.

Thus far warrantably we may limit the extenſion, and mollifie the rigour of this ſeemingly-boundleſs term; but we can hardly allow any farther reſtriction, without deſtroying the natural ſignification, or diminiſhing the due emphaſis thereof. As far therefore as 'tis poſſible for us, we muſt endeavour always to perform this duty of Gratitude to Almighty God: and conſequently,

1. Hereby is required a Frequent performance thereof; that we doe often actually meditate upon, be ſenſible of, confeſs and celebrate the Divine Beneficence. For what is done but ſeldome or never (as we commonly ſay) cannot be underſtood done always, without a Catachreſis, or abuſe of words too enormous. As therefore no moment of our life wants ſufficient matter, and every conſiderable portion of time miniſters notable occaſion of bleſſing God; as he allows himſelf no ſpacious intervals or diſcontinuances of doing us good: ſo ought we not to ſuffer any of thoſe many days (vouchſafed by his goodneſs) to flow beſide us, void of the ſignal expreſſions of our dutifull thankfulneſs to him; not to admit in our courſe of life any long vacations from this Duty. If God inceſſantly, and through every minute, demonſtrates himſelf gracious unto us; we in all reaſon are obliged frequently and daily to declare our ſelves gratefull unto him.

So at leaſt did David, (that moſt eminent example in this kind, and therefore moſt appoſite to illuſtrate our Doctrine, and to enforce the practice thereof;) for, Every day, ſaith he, I will bleſs thee; I will praiſe thy Name for ever and ever. Every day. The Heavenly bodies did not more conſtantly obſerve their courſe, than he his diurnal revolutions of praiſe: Every day in his Kalendar was as it were Feſtival, and conſecrated to Thankſgiving. Neither did he adjudge it ſufficient to devote ſome ſmall parcels of each day to this ſervice: for, My tongue (ſaith he) ſhall ſpeak of thy righteouſneſs, and of thy praiſe all the day long: and again, My mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy righteouſneſs, and thy ſalvation all the day, for I know not the numbers thereof. The Benefits of God he apprehended ſo great and numerous, that no definite ſpace of time would ſerve to conſider and commemorate them. He reſolves therefore otherwhere to beſtow his whole life upon that employment: While I live, I will praiſe the Lord; I will ſing praiſes unto my God, while I have any being: and, I will bleſs the Lord at all times; his praiſe ſhall continually be in my mouth. No man can reaſonably pretend greater impediments, or oftner avocations from the practice of this duty, than he, upon whom the burthen of a royal eſtate, and the care of governing a populous nation were incumbent: yet could not they thruſt out of his memory, nor extinguiſh in his heart the lively ſenſe of Divine goodneſs; which (notwithſtanding the company of other ſecular encumbrances) was always preſent to his mind, and like a ſpirit, (excluded from no place by any corporeal reſiſtence,) did mingle with and penetrate all his thoughts, and affections, and actions. So that he ſeems to have approached very near to the compleat performance of this Duty, according to the extremity of a litteral interpretation; and to have been always without any intermiſſion employed in giving thanks to God. The conſideration (methinks) of ſo noble a pattern, adjoyned to the evident reaſonableneſs of the Duty, ſhould engage us to the frequent practice thereof.

Pſal 145. 2.

Pſal 35. 28.

Pſal 71. 8, 15. 24.

Pſal 146. 2. & 104. 33. Pſal. 34. 1. & Pſ. 71. 6.

Εἰ δὲ βασιλεὺς ἀνὴρ μυρίαις βαπτιζόμενος φροντίσι καὶ πανταχόθεν περιελκόμενος, τοσαυτάκις παρεκάλει τὸν Θεόν· τίνα ἂν ἔχοιμεν ἀπολογίαν ἢ συγγνώμην ἡμεῖς τοσαύτην σχολὴν ἄγοντες, καὶ μὴ συνεχῶς αὐτὸν ἱκετεύοντες, &c. Chryſ. Tom. V. pag. 76.

But if the conſideration of this excellent example doe not, yet certainly that may both provoke us to emulation, and confound us with ſhame, of Epictetus, a Heathen man, whoſe words to this purpoſe ſeem very remarkable: Εἰ γὰρ νοῦν εἴχομεν, ſaith he in Arrian's Diſſert.) ἄλλο τι ἔδει ἡμᾶς ποιεῖν καὶ κοινῇ, καὶ ἰδίᾳ, ἢ ὑμνεῖν τὸ θεῖον, καὶ εὐφημεῖν, καὶ ἐπεξέρχεσθαι τὰς χάριτας; οὐκ ἔδει καὶ σκάπτοντας, καὶ ἀροῦντας, καὶ ἐσθίοντας ᾄδειν τὸν ὕμνον τὸν εἰς τὸν Θεόν; Μέγας ὁ Θεός, &c. that is, in our language, If we underſtood our ſelves, what other thing ſhould we doe, either publickly, or privately, than ſing Hymns to, and ſpeak well of God, and perform Thanks unto him? Ought we not, when we were digging, or plowing, or eating, to ſing a (ſutable) Hymn to him? Great is God, in that he hath beſtowed on us thoſe inſtruments wherewith we till the ground: Great is God, becauſe he hath given us hands, a throat, a belly; that we grow inſenſibly, that ſleeping we breathe. Thus (proceeds he) ſhould we upon every occurrence celebrate God, and ſuperadde of all the moſt excellent and moſt Divine Hymn, for that he hath given us the faculty of apprehending and uſing theſe things orderly. Wherefore ſince moſt men are blind and ignorant of this, ſhould there not be ſome one, who ſhould diſcharge this office, and who ſhould for the reſt utter this Hymn to God? And what can I, a lame (and decrepit) old man doe elſe, than celebrate God? Were I indeed a Nightingale, I would doe what belongs to a Nightingale; if a Swan, what becomes a Swan: but ſince now I am endued with Reaſon, I ought to praiſe God. This is my duty and concernment, and ſo I doe; neither will I deſert this employment, while it is in my power: and to the ſame ſong I exhort you all. Thus that worthy Philoſopher, not inſtructing us onely, and exhorting with pathetical diſcourſe, but by his practice inciting us to be continually expreſſing our Gratitude to God.

Lib 1 cap. 17.

Πάντα τοίνυν τὸν βίον ἑορτὴν ἄγοντες, πάντῃ πάντοθεν παρεῖναι τὸν Θεὸν πεπεισμένοι, γεωργοῦμεν αἰνοῦντες, πλέομεν ὑμνοῦντες, κατὰ τὴν ἄλλην πολιτείαν ἐντέχνως ἀναστρεφόμεθα. Clem. Alex. Strom. VII p 517.

And although neither the admonition of Prophets, nor Precepts of Philoſophers, nor the examples of both, ſhould prevail; yet the precedents (methinks) of dumb and ſenſeleſs creatures ſhould animate us thereto; which never ceaſe to obey the law impoſed on them by their Pſal. 19. 1, 2, 3. Maker, and without intermiſſion glorifie him. For, The Heavens declare the glory of God, and the Firmament ſheweth his handy-work. Day unto day uttereth ſpeech, and Night unto night ſheweth knowledge. There is no ſpeech nor language, where their voice is not heard. 'Tis S. Chryſo-
In Pſal. 144. ſtom's argumentation. Καὶ γὰρ αἰσχρὸν ἂν εἴη, ſaith he, τὸν λογικὸν ἄνθρωπον, καὶ τῶν ὁρωμένων ἁπάντων τιμιώτερον, ἔλαττον τῆς κτίσεως φέρειν κατὰ τὸν τῆς εὐφημίας λόγον· οὐκ αἰσχρὸν δὲ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἄτοπον, &c. 'Twere an ugly thing, that Man, endued with Reaſon, and the moſt honourable of all things viſible, ſhould in rendring thanks and praiſe be exceeded by other creatures: neither is it onely baſe, but abſurd. For how can it be otherwiſe, ſince other creatures every day and every hour ſend up a doxology to their Lord and Maker? For, The Heavens declare the glory of God, &c.

If the buſie Heavens are always at leiſure, and the ſtupid Earth is perpetually active in manifeſting the wiſdom, power and goodneſs of their Creatour; how ſhamefull is it, that we (the flower of his creation, the moſt obliged, and moſt capable of doing it) ſhould commonly be either too buſie, or too idle to doe it; ſhould ſeldome or never be diſpoſed to contribute our endeavours to the advancement of his glory? But,

2. Giving thanks always may import our Appointing, and punctually Obſerving certain convenient times of performing this Duty; that is, of ſerious meditation upon, and affectionate acknowledgment of the Divine Bounty. We know that all perſons, who deſign with advantage to proſecute an orderly courſe of action, and would not lead a tumultuary life, are wont to diſtinguiſh their portions of time, aſſigning ſome to the neceſſary reflections of their body, others to the divertiſement of their minds, and a great part to the diſpatch of their ordinary buſineſs:
Jam. 1. 8. otherwiſe (like S. James his double-minded man) they would be unſtable in all their ways; they would ever fluctuate in their reſolutions, and be uncertain when, and how, and to what they ſhould apply themſelves. And ſo, this main concernment of ours, this moſt excellent part of our duty, if we doe not depute ſome vacant ſeaſons for it, and obſerve ſome periodical recourſes thereof, we ſhall be tempted often to omit it; we ſhall be liſtleſs to doe it, apt to defer it, and eaſily diverted from it by the encroachments of other leſs-behoving affairs.

The Jews, to preſerve them in the conſtant exerciſe of this Duty, had Dan. 8. 11. inſtituted by God a ſacrifice called תמיד (Judge,) rendred by the Greek Tranſlatours ἡ διαπαντὸς θυσία, the continual ſacrifice; to which the divine Author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews ſeems to allude, when in
Heb. 13. 15. theſe words he exhorts: Δι' αὐτοῦ οὖν ἀναφέρωμεν θυσίαν αἰνέσεως διαπαντὸς τῷ Θεῷ· By him therefore let us offer the ſacrifice of praiſe to God continually (or the continual ſacrifice of praiſe,) the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his Name. As that ſacrifice therefore, being offered conſtantly at a ſet time, was thence denominated continual: ſo perhaps may we, by conſtantly obſerving ſome fit returns of praiſe and thankſgiving, be ſaid always to give thanks.

In determining the ſeaſons and proportions of which, what other rule or ſtandard can we better conform to, than that of the Royal Prophet; I ſhall not urge his example ſo much; (according to which we ſhould be obliged to a greater frequency;) for, Seven times a day Pſal. 119 64.
(ſaith he) do I praiſe thee, becauſe of thy righteous judgments: but rather alledge his general direction and opinion, propoſed to us in thoſe words of his; It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to ſing Pſal 92. 1, 2 praiſes unto thy Name, O though Moſt high; to ſhew forth thy loving-kindneſs Pſal. 55. 17.
every morning and thy faithfulneſs every night. It is a good thing; that is, a ſeemly, a convenient, a commendable, a due performance: every morning: that is, when our ſpirits, being recreated with ſleep, are become more vigorous, our memories more freſh, our fancies more quick and active: to ſhew forth thy loving-kindneſs; that is, from a hearty ſenſe of our obligation, to acknowledge the free bounty of him, who, in purſuance of his former kindneſs, hath been pleaſed to accumulate new favours on us: to guard us by his watchfull care, when we were buried, as it were, in a ſenſeleſs ignorance, and total neglect of our own welfare; to raiſe us from that temporary death, and to confer a new life upon us, reſtoring us to our health, to our means of ſubſiſtence, to all the neceſſary ſupports, and the deſirable comforts of life: every night alſo; that is, when our ſpirits are exhauſted with action, and our minds tired with thoughtfulneſs; when we are become weary, not of doing onely, but almoſt of being; we ſhould conclude our toils, and wrap up our cares in the ſweet ſenſe, and gratefull memory of his goodneſs, who hath protected us ſo many hours from the manifold dangers, and more ſins, to which by our weakneſs, and our folly, and our bad inclinations, we are through every minute expoſed; and withall hath provided us ſo eaſie, and ſo delightfull a means of recovering our ſpent activity, of repairing our decayed ſtrength.

Thus if we conſtantly begin, and thus cloſe up, thus bound and circumſcribe our days, dedicating thoſe moſt remarkable periods of time to bleſſing God, and making (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks) the out-goings of Pſal. 65. 8.
the morning and evening to rejoyce in him; (ſince beginning and ending doe in a manner comprehend the whole; and the morning and evening, in Moſes his computation and ſtyle, doe conſtitute a day;) we may (not incongruouſly) be ſuppoſed and ſaid to give thanks always. But yet farther this may import,

3. A Vigilant attendance upon this Duty, ſuch as men beſtow on their employments, whereof though the actual proſecution ceaſes, yet the deſign continually proceeds. As we ſay, ſuch a one is writing a book, building a houſe, occupying a piece of land, though he be at that preſent peradventure ſleeping, or eating, or ſatisfying ſome other deſire; becauſe his deſign never ſleeps, and his purpoſe perſiſts uninterrupted. And thus it ſeems we are to underſtand our Saviour, and the Apoſtles, when they exhort us προσκαρτερεῖν, to continue instant in prayer and Rom. 12 12.
thankſgiving; and ἀγρυπνεῖν ἐν πάσῃ προσκαρτερήσει to watch with all Eph. 6. 18 perſeverance; and γρηγορεῖν, to wake in thankſgiving; and μὴ παύεσθαι, Coloſſ 4. 2.
not to give over giving thanks: and, to perform theſe duties ἀδιαλείπτως, Eph. 1 16.
inceſſantly, or without giving off; μὴ ἐκκακεῖν, not to grow worſe, faint, 1 Theſſ 5. 17.
or faulter: (which is, in that place, made equivalent to, and explica- Luk. 18. 1.

tory of doing duty always.) Which expreſſions denote a moſt diligent attendance on theſe Duties: that we make them not a πάρεργον, a diverſion or by-buſineſs of our lives, allowing onely a perfunctory and deſultorious endeavour on them; but eſteem them a weighty buſineſs, to be purſued with ſtedfaſt reſolution, and unwearied induſtry.

As our beings and powers did proceed from the Goodneſs, ſo the reſults of them naturally tend to the Glory of God; and the deliberations of our Will ought to conſpire with the inſtincts of our Nature; it ſhould be the principal deſign which our intention ſhould aim at, and our endeavour always drive on, to glorifie our Maker. Which doing, we may be reputed to diſcharge this Duty, and in ſome ſenſe ſaid always to give thanks. But farther,

4. This term [always] doth neceſſarily imply a Ready diſpoſition, or habitual inclination to give Thanks, ever permanent in us: that our Hearts, as David's was, be fixed always (that is, fittingly prepared, and ſteddily reſolved) to thank and praiſe God; that our Affections be like tinder, though not always inflamed, yet eaſily inflamable by the ſenſe of his Goodneſs.) Pſal. 108. 1.

Pſal. 37. 26. 'Tis ſaid of the righteous man, that he is ever merciful, and lendeth: not for that he doth ever actually diſpenſe alms, or furniſh his poor neighbour with ſupplies; but becauſe his mind is ever inclinable to doe it, when need requires. So a gratefull man doth always give thanks, by being diſpoſed to doe it upon all fit occaſions. 'Tis the habit that qualifies and denominates a man ſuch or ſuch in any kind or degree of morality. A good man is in Scripture frequently compared to a Tree bringing forth fruit in due ſeaſon; and the root thereof is this habitual diſpoſition, which being nouriſhed by the dew of heaven, and quickned by the benign influence of Divine grace, ſprouts forth opportunely, and yields a plentifull encreaſe of good fruit. Though we cannot always ſing, our organs may be always rightly tuned for praiſe; at leaſt they ſhould never be unſtrung, (and wholly out of kelter..

We ſhould maintain in our ſelves a conſtant good temper of mind, that no opportunity ſurpriſe, and find us unprepared to entertain worthily the effects of Divine favour: otherwiſe we ſhall as well loſe the benefit, as God the thanks and glory due to them. That we be always thus diſpoſed, is not impoſſible, and therefore requiſite. But moreover,

5. Laſtly, Giving thanks always imports, that we Readily embrace every opportunity of actually expreſſing our thankfulneſs! For ſo, what in ſome places of Scripture is injoyned to be done continually, and without ceaſing, is in others onely required to be done upon all opportunities. Which ſhews, that πάντοτε is to be expounded, not ſo much ἐν παντὶ χρόνῳ, at all times, as ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ, in every ſeaſon. So προσευχόμενοι ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ ἐν πνεύματι, praying upon every opportunity in your ſpirit: and, Ἀγρυπνεῖτε οὖν ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ δεόμενοι, Be watchfull, praying in every ſeaſon. And this ſenſe ſeems probably to be chiefly intended by this Apoſtle, whenever he hath (as he hath often) this expreſſion, πάντοτε εὐχαριστεῖν, that we embrace every overture, or fit occaſion of giving thanks. Epheſ. 6. 18. Luk. 21. 36.

'Tis true, no time is unſeaſonable to doe it; every moment we receive favours, and therefore every minute we owe Thanks: yet there are ſome eſpecial ſeaſons, that do more importunately require them. We ſhould be like thoſe trees, that bear fruit (more or leſs) continually; but then more kindly, and more abundantly, when more powerfully cheriſhed by the heavenly warmth.

When any freſh, any rare, any remarkable Benefit happens to us; when proſperous ſucceſs attends our honeſt endeavours; when unexpected favours fall as it were of their own accord into our boſoms; (like the grain in the Golden age ſpringing up ἀσπαρτα ϗ ἀνήροτα, without our care, or our toil, for our uſe and enjoyment;) when we are delivered from ſtraits in our apprehenſion inextricable, ſurmount difficulties ſeeming inſuperable, eſcape hazzards (as we ſuſpected) inevitable: Then is a ſpecial ſeaſon preſented us of offering up the ſacrifice of praiſe to the God of mercy, help and victory.

When we revolve in our minds (as we ſhould often doe) the favourrable paſſages of Providence, that in the whole courſe of our lives have befallen us: how in our extreme poverty and diſtreſs (when, perhaps no help appeared, and all hopes ſeemed to fail us) God hath raiſed us up friends, who have commiſerated, comforted and ſuccoured us; and not onely ſo, but hath changed our ſorrowfull condition into a ſtate of joy; hath (to uſe the Pſalmiſt's expreſſions) turned our mourning into Pſal. 30. 11.
dancing; hath put off our ſackcloth, and girdeth us with gladneſs; hath conſidered our trouble, and known our ſoul in adverſity; hath ſet our Pſal 31. 7, 8.
feet in a large room, and furniſhed us with plentifull means of ſubſiſtence: how in the various changes, and adventures, and travels of our life, upon ſea and land, at home and abroad, among friends and ſtrangers and enemies, he hath protected us from wants and dangers; from devouring diſeaſes, and the diſtemperatures of infectious air; from the aſſaults of bloody thieves, and barbarous pirates; from the rage of fire, and fury of tempeſts; from diſaſtrous caſualties; from treacherous ſurpriſes; from open miſchiefs, that with a dreadfull face approached and threatned our deſtruction: Then moſt opportunely ſhould we with all thankfull exultation of mind admire and celebrate our ſtrength, and our deliverer; our faithfull refuge in trouble, and the rock of our ſalvation.

Alſo when the ordinary effects of Divine Providence doe in any advantageous manner preſent themſelves to our view; when we peruſe the volumes of ſtory, and therein obſerve the various events of humane action; eſpecially the ſeaſonable rewards of Vertue, the notable protections and deliverances of Innocence, and the unexpected puniſhments of malicious Wickedneſs: Then we ſhould with thankfull acclamations celebrate the Divine Goodneſs and Juſtice; joyning in conſort with that Heavenly quire, and ſaying, Allelujah; Salvation, and glory, and honour, Apoc. 19. 1, 2.
and power unto the Lord our God: for true and righteous are his judgements.

Or, when we contemplate the wonderfull works of Nature, and, walking about at our leiſure, gaze upon this ample theatre of the world, conſidering the ſtately beauty, conſtant order, and ſumptuous furniture thereof; the glorious ſplendour, and uniform motion of the Heavens; the pleaſant fertility of the Earth; the curious figure and fragrant ſweetneſs of Plants; the exquiſite frame of Animals; and all other amazing miracles of Nature, wherein the glorious Attributes of God (eſpecially his tranſcendent Goodneſs) are moſt conſpicuouſly diſplayed; (ſo that by them not onely large acknowledgments, but even gratulatory Hymns, as it were, of praiſe have been extorted from the mouths of Ariſtotle, Pliny, Galen, and ſuch like men, never ſuſpected guilty of an exceſſive devotion:) Then ſhould our hearts be affected with thankfull ſenſe, and our lips break forth into his praiſe.

Yea, from every object of Senſe, from every event of Providence, from every common occurrence we may extract fit matter of Thankſgiving:

giving: as did our Saviour, when, conſidering the ſtupid infidelity of thoſe proud people of Chorazim, Bethſaida and Capernaum, (who were not at all affected by his miraculous Works, nor moved to repentance by his pathetical Diſcourſes,) and comparing it with the pious credulity of his meaner Diſciples, he brake forth into that Divine ejaculation; Luk. 10. 21. I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thouſt haſt concealed theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt revealed them unto babes. Ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ καιρῷ ἀποκριθεὶς Ἰησοῦς εἶπε, ſaith the Evangelical narration; Upon that occaſion Jeſus thus ſpake: he embraced that convenient opportunity of thankfully acknowledging God's wiſe and gracious diſpenſation. And frequent occaſion is afforded us daily (were our minds ſutably diſpoſed) of doing the like.

But ſo much concerning the Time of performing this Duty.

IV. We proceed to the Matter thereof, For all things: S. Chryſoſtome (in his Commentary upon the 145. Pſalm) having enumerated ſeveral particulars for which we are bound to thank God; " Becauſe (I recite his words punctually rendred) " Becauſe (ſaith he) he hath made us, " who before had no being, and made us ſuch as we are; becauſe he " upholds us being made, and takes care of us continually, both pub- " lickly and privately, ſecretly and openly, with and without our know- " ledge; for all viſible things created for our ſake, the miniſtery of them " afforded to us; the conformation of our Bodies, the nobleneſs of our " Souls; his daily Diſpenſations by miracles, by laws, by puniſhments; " his various and incomprehenſible Providence; for the chief of all, " that he hath not ſpared his onely-begotten Son for our ſake; the Be- " nefits conferred on us by Baptiſm, and the other holy Myſteries, (or " Sacraments;) the ineffable good things to be beſtowed on us hereafter, " the Kingdom of heaven, the Reſurrection, the enjoyment of perfect " Bliſs; having, I ſay, in theſe words compriſed the things for which we are obliged to thank and praiſe God, he thus deſpondently concludes: (Ἂν γὰρ ἕκαστόν τις τούτων καταλέγῃ, εἰς πέλαγος ἄφατον ἐμπεσεῖται εὐεργεσιῶν, καὶ εἴσεται πόσων ἐστὶν ὑπεύθυνος τῷ Θεῷ.) " If any one " ſhall endeavour to recount particularly every one of theſe things, he " will but plunge himſelf into an unexpreſſible deep of Benefits, and " then perceive for how unexpreſſibly and inconceivably many good " things he ſtands engaged to God. And to the like Non plus doth the Pſal. 139. 17, 18. Pſ. 36. 5, 6, 7. devout Pſalmiſt ſeem to be reduced, when he thus exclaims, How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God? how great is the ſumme of them? If I ſhould count them, they are more in number than the ſand.

I ſhall not therefore confound my ſelf, by launching too far into this immenſe Ocean; nor ſtrive minutely to compute the incomprehenſible ſumme of the Divine Benefits: but onely obſerve, that in groſs, according to our Apoſtle's calculation, all things, which how-ever happen to us, are ingredients thereof. No occurrence (great or ſmall, common or particular, preſent or paſt, pleaſant or ſad, perpetual or tranſitory) is excluded from being the ſubject of our Thankſgiving: each one may prove beneficial to us; and we are with a chearfull contentedneſs, and a gratefull reſentment, to receive them all from God's hand. But to obſerve ſome little diſtinction: I ſay,

1. We are to give thanks, not onely for great and noble Benefits, but for the leaſt and moſt ordinary Favours of God: though indeed none of God's Favour's are in themſelves ſmall and inconſiderable. Men are wont to bleſs themſelves, if they receive but a tranſient glance from a Prince's eye; a ſmile from a great perſonage; any ſlender intimation mation of regard from him that is in capacity to doe them good: what is it then to receive the leaſt teſtimony of his good will, from whom alone every good thing can be expected; upon whoſe diſpoſal all happy ſucceſs of our wiſhes, our hopes and our endeavours do entirely depend? We repute him injuſt, who withholds the leaſt part of what is due from the true owner: and is not he ingratefull then, that omits to render thanks for the leaſt of Divine mercies?

There is one glory of the Sun, another of the Moon, another of the Stars, ſaith S. Paul. Some works of God indeed excell in luſtre; yet all are glorious, all are to be diſcerned, all to be eſteemed, and thankfully entertained by us. The brightneſs of the one ſhould not wholly obſcure the other; if it doe, it argues the weakneſs of our ſenſe, the dulneſs of our ſpiritual faculty. For every beam of light that delights our eye, for every breath of air that chears our ſpirits, for every drop of pleaſant liquor that cools our thirſt, for every minute of comfortable repoſe, for every ſtep we ſafely take, for the happy iſſue of the leaſt undertaking, for eſcaping the vengeance due to an idle word, or a wanton thought, we owe a Hymn of praiſe to God. But, 1 Cor. 15. 41.

2. We are to render thanks, not onely for new and preſent Benefits, but for all we have formerly, all that we may hereafter receive. We find David not onely frequently acknowledging the gracious diſpenſations of Providence toward him through the whole courſe of his life, but looking back in his thankfull Devotions as far as his very original being, and praiſing God for favours conferred on him beyond his memory, yea before his life. I will praiſe thee, ſaith he, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvellous are thy works, and that my ſoul knoweth right well. My ſubſtance was not hid from thee, when I was made in ſecret, and curiouſly wrought in the lower parts of the earth. Thine eyes did ſee my ſubſtance yet being imperfect, and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were faſhioned, whenas yet there was none of them. And S. Paul, yet farther reflecting his gratefull conſideration, bleſſes God for his favour commenced before the beginning of things. Bleſſed (ſaith he) be God and the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who hath bleſſed us with all ſpiritual bleſſings in the heavenly places in Chriſt, according as he hath choſen us before the foundation of the world. Pſal. 139. 14, 15, 16. Epheſ. 1. 3, 4.

Neither doth the memory only of former, and the enjoyment of preſent, but the hope and foreſight alſo of future Bleſſings worthily claim our thanks. For, (ſaith S. Peter) Bleſſed be God and the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead: to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, reſerved in heaven for you. Beaſts onely, and men not much better than they, are affected with preſent good turns: but men of honeſt and generous temper reſent indifferently the obligations of all times. Senſe doth not confine their Gratitude, nor abſence remove, nor age wear it out. What once is done, is ever done to them; and what of courteſie is purpoſed, ſeems to them performed. But having before diſcourſed ſomewhat largely concerning the remembrance of Benefits, I leave this point. Furthermore, 1 Pet. 1. 3, 4.

3. We ſhould bleſs God, not onely for new, rare, extraordinary accidents of Providence, but for the common and daily benefits and indulgences thereof. Theſe Favours are uſually the greateſt, and moſt valuable in their own nature. (For what can be imagined of higher conſequence to us, than the preſervation of our Lives, and of our Eſtates, Quem verò aſtrorum ordines, quem dierum noctiúmque viciſſitudines, quem menſium temperatio, quémque ea quæ nobis gignuntur ad fruendum non gratum eſſe cogant; hunc hominem omnino numerare quî decet? Cic. de Leg. II.

Eſtates, by which they are comfortably maintained; than the continuance of our Bodies in good health, and our Minds in their right wits; than the knowledge of heavenly Truth, the encouragements to Vertue and Piety, the aſſiſtences of Divine Grace, and the Promiſes of eternal Bliſs continually exhibited to us?) Shall the commonneſs and continuance of theſe exceeding Favours, that they are not given us once onely, and tranſitorily, but continued (that is, given us ſo often as time hath inſtants,) and with an uninterrupted perſeverance renewed unto us; ſhall this abate and enervate our Gratitude, which in all reaſon ſhould mainly encreaſe and confirm it? But this point I alſo touched before, and therefore forbearing to inſiſt thereon, I proceed.

4. We ſhould give thanks, not onely for private and particular, but 1 Tim. 2. 1. for publick Benefits alſo, and for ſuch as befall others. I exhort therefore (ſaith S. Paul) before all things, that ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions and thanksgivings be made for all men: not prayers onely, for good things to be beſtowed on others; but thanksgivings alſo, for the Benefits received by others. (And ὑπὲρ πάντων in our Text, however otherwiſe commonly interpreted, may well admit this ſenſe alſo; and be taken indifferently, pro omnibus, for all perſons, and propter omnia, for all things.)

Vid Chryſ. in 2 Cor. Or. 2. We are all Citizens of the World, and concerned in its good conſtitution; and thence obliged thankfully to adore the mighty Upholder and wiſe Governour thereof, praiſing him for all the general Benefits liberally poured forth upon mankind. We partake in the commodities of Civil Society; and therefore ſhould heartily thank him, by whoſe gracious diſpoſal Order is maintained, Peace continued, Juſtice adminiſtred, Plenty provided, our Lives made ſafe and ſweet to us therein. We are Members of a Church, and highly intereſted in the proſperous eſtate and well-being thereof: when unity therefore is preſerved, and Charity abounds; when knowledg is encreaſed, and Vertue encouraged; when Piety flouriſhes, and truth triumphs therein; we are bound to render all poſſible thanks to the gracious Beſtower of thoſe ineſtimable Bleſſings.

We are much miſtaken in our account, if we either determine our own concernments, or meaſure this Duty, by the narrow rule of our private advantage: for ſubducting either the Benefits commonly indulged to mankind, or thoſe which accrue from the welfare of publick ſociety, what poſſibility will remain of ſubſiſtence, of ſafety, of content unto us? what but confuſion, want, violence and diſquiet?

As we are concerned with our utmoſt endeavours to promote, to wiſh and pray for, to delight and rejoyce in the publick good of mankind, the peace of our Country, the proſperity of Sion; ſo we are to bleſs and thank him, by whoſe gracious help and furtherance they are attained.

If we conſult all Hiſtory, (Sacred and civil,) we ſhall find it to contain hardly any thing elſe conſiderable, but the earneſt endeavours of good men for publick benefit, and their thankfull acknowledgments to the Divine goodneſs for it. Moſes, David, Nehemiah, S. Paul, all the Prophets, and all the Apoſtles, what other things memorable did they doe, but ſerve God in procuring publick Good, and bleſs God for conferring it?

Neither onely as we are combined with others in common intereſt, but without ſelfiſh reſpects, purely out of charity and humanity, and ingenuous pity, are we obliged to thank God for the Benefits he is pleaſed to impart to others. If upon theſe accounts we are commanded to doe good to all men; to rejoyce with thoſe that rejoyce; to love even thoſe that hate us, and bleſs thoſe that curſe us; 'tis (by fair conſequence) ſurely intended, that we ſhould alſo bleſs God for the good iſſue of our honeſt endeavours, or of our good wiſhes for them.

Gal. 6. 10.
Rom. 12. 15.
Matt. 5. 44.

And verily could we become endowed with this excellent quality of delighting in others good, and heartily thanking God for it, we needed not to envy the wealth and ſplendour of the greateſt Princes, not the wiſdom of the profoundeſt Doctors, not the religion of the devouteſt Anchorets, no, nor the happineſs of the higheſt Angels: for upon this ſuppoſition, as the glory of all is God's, ſo the content in all would be ours. All the fruit they can perceive of their happy condition (of what kind ſoever) is to rejoyce in it themſelves, and to praiſe God for it: and this ſhould we then doe as well as they. My neighbour's good Succeſs is mine, if I equally triumph therein: his Riches are mine, if I delight to ſee him enjoy them: his health is mine, if it refreſh my ſpirits: his Vertue mine, if I by it am better'd, and have hearty complacence therein. By this means a man derives a confluence of all joy upon himſelf, and makes himſelf, as it were, the centre of all Felicity, enriches himſelf with the plenty, and ſatiates himſelf with the pleaſure of the whole world: reſerving to God the praiſe, he enjoys the ſatisfaction of all good that happens to any.

Thus we ſee David frequently thanking God, not for his Favour onely and mercy ſhewed particularly to himſelf, but for his common munificence toward all; for (to uſe his own phraſes) his goodneſs to all, and his tender mercies over all his works; for executing judgment in behalf of the oppreſſed; for feeding the hungry; for looſening the priſoners; for opening the eyes of the blind; for raiſing them that are bowed down; for preſerving the ſtrangers, and relieving the fatherleſs and widow; for lifting up the meek; for loving, and caring for, and defending the righteous; for opening his hand, and ſatisfying the deſire of every living thing; for giving to the beaſt his food, and to the young ravens when they cry unto him; in a word, for his goodneſs to every particular creature, not excluding the moſt contemptible, nor the moſt ſavage of all. And how affectionately doth S. Paul every-where thank God for the growth in grace and ſpiritual wiſdom, for the patience in affliction, and perſeverance in faith, of thoſe good Chriſtians he writes unto? So ſhould, with an unreſtrained exuberance, both our Charity to men, and our Gratitude to God abound. But moreover,

Pſal. 145. 9.
Pſal. 146. 7, 8, 9.
Pſal 147. 6.
1 Pet. 5. 7.
Pſal 5. 11.
Pſal. 104. 28.
& 145. 16.
& 147. 9.

5. We are obliged to give thanks, not onely for pleaſant and proſperous occurrences of Providence, but for thoſe alſo which are adverſe to our deſire, and diſtaſtfull unto our natural ſenſe; for Poverty, Sickneſs, Diſgrace; for all the Sorrows and Troubles, the Diſaſters and Diſappointments that befall us. We are bound to pay thanks, not for our Food onely, but for our Phyſick alſo: (which though ingratefull to our palate, is profitable to our health:) We are obliged, in the School of Providence, not onely for the good Inſtructions, but for the ſeaſonable Corrections alſo vouchſafed unto us, (whereby though our ſenſes are offended, our manners are bettered.) What-ever proceeds from good purpoſe, and tends to a happy end, that is graciouſly deſigned, and effectually conduces to our good; is a fit ſubject of Thankſgiving: and ſuch may all Adverſities prove unto us. They proceed uſually from love and kind intention toward us: for, Whom God loveth, he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth:

Τὸν Θεὸν ὁμοίως ἀνυμνεῖν χρὴ, καὶ κολάζοντα, καὶ ἀνιέντα κολάσεως· ἀμφότερα γὰρ κηδεμονίας, ἀμφότερα ἀγαθότητος, &c. Chryſoſt. in Pſal 148.

Heb. 12. 6.

Pſ. 119. 75. ceiveth: and, I know, O Lord, (ſaith David) that thy judgments are right, and that thou in faithfulneſs haſt afflicted me: in faithfulneſs, that is, with a ſincere intention of doing me good.

God throughly knows our conſtitution, what is noxious to our health, and what may remedy our diſtempers; and therefore accordingly diſpoſeth to us ——— pro jucundis aptiſſima quæque ——— ;

inſtead of pleaſant hony, he ſometimes preſcribes wholeſome wormwood for us. We are our ſelves greatly ignorant of what is conducible to our real good, and, were the choice of our condition wholly permitted to us, ſhould make very fooliſh, very diſadvantageous elections.

We ſhould (be ſure) all of us embrace a rich and plentifull Eſtate: when as, God knows, that would make us ſlothfull and luxurious, ſwell us with pride and haughty thoughts, encumber us with anxious cares, and expoſe us to dangerous temptations; would render us forgetfull of our ſelves, and neglectfull of him. Therefore he wiſely diſpoſeth Poverty unto us; Poverty the mother of Sobriety, the nurſe of Induſtry, the miſtreſs of Wiſdom; which will make us underſtand our ſelves, and our dependence on him, and force us to have recourſe unto his help. And is there not reaſon we ſhould be thankfull for the means by which we are delivered from thoſe deſperate miſchiefs, and obtain theſe excellent advantages?

We ſhould all (certainly) chuſe) the Favour and Applauſe of men: but this, God alſo knows, would corrupt our minds with vain conceit, would intoxicate our fancies with ſpurious pleaſure, would tempt us to aſcribe immoderately to our ſelves, and ſacrilegiouſly to deprive God of his due honour. Therefore he adviſedly ſuffers us to incurr the Diſgrace and Diſpleaſure, the Hatred and Contempt of men; that ſo we may place our glory onely in the hopes of his Favour, and may purſue more earneſtly the pure delights of a good Conſcience. And doth not this part of Divine Providence highly merit our thanks?

We would all climb into high Places not conſidering the precipices on which they ſtand, nor the vertiginouſneſs of our own brains: but God keeps us ſafe in the humble valleys, allotting to us employments which we are more capable to manage.

We ſhould perhaps inſolently abuſe Power, were it committed to us: we ſhould employ great Parts on unweildy Projects, as many doe, to the diſturbance of others, and their own ruine: vaſt Knowledge would cauſe us to overvalue our ſelves, and contemn others: enjoying continual Health, we ſhould not perceive the benefit thereof, nor be mindfull of him that gave it. A ſutable mediocrity therefore of theſe things the Divine Goodneſs allotteth unto us, that we may neither ſtarve for want, nor ſurfeit with plenty.

In fine, the advantages ariſing from Afflictions are ſo many, and ſo great, that (had I time, and were it ſeaſonable to inſiſt largely on this ſubject) it were eaſie to demonſtrate, that we have great reaſon, not onely to be contented with, but to rejoyce in, and to be very thankfull for all the croſſes and vexations we meet with: to receive them chearfully at God's hand, as the medicines of our Soul, and the condiments of our fortune; as the arguments of his Good will, and the inſtruments of Vertue; as ſolid grounds of Hope, and comfortable preſages of future Joy unto us.

6. Laſtly, we are obliged to thank God, not onely for Corporeal and temporal Benefits, but alſo (and that principally) for Spiritual and eternal Bleſſings. We are apt, as to deſire more vehemently, to rejoyce more heartily in the fruition, and more paſſionately to bewail the loſs of temporal good things; ſo more ſincerely and ſeriouſly to expreſs our gratitude for the reception of them, than for others relating to our ſpiritual good, to our everlaſting welfare. Wherein we miſjudge and miſbehave our ſelves extremely. For, as much as the reaſonable Soul (that goodly image of the Divine Eſſence, breathed from the mouth of God) doth in dignity of nature, and purity of ſubſtance, excell this feculent lump of organized clay, our Body; as the bliſsfull raviſhments of Spirit ſurpaſs the dull ſatisfactions of Senſe; as the bottomleſs depth of Eternity exceeds that ſhallow ſurface of Time, which terminates this tranſitory life: in ſuch proportion ſhould our appetite unto, our complacence in, our gratitude for ſpiritual Bleſſings tranſcend the affections (reſpectively) engaged about theſe corporeal accommodations.

Luk. 10. 20. Conſider that injunction of our Saviour to his Diſciples; in this rejoyce, not, that the ſpirits are ſubject unto you: but rather rejoyce, becauſe your names are written in heaven. Rejoyce not, that is, be not at all affected with this (although in it ſelf very rare accompliſhment, eminent privilege, glorious power of working that indeed greateſt of miracles, ſubjecting Devils; that is, baffling the ſhrewdeſt craft, and ſubduing the ſtrongeſt force in nature,) in compariſon of that delight, which the conſideration of the Divine Favour in order to your eternal Felicity doth afford.

We are, 'tis true, greatly indebted to God for our Creation, for that he hath extracted us from nothing, and placed us in ſo lofty a rank among his creatures; for the excellent faculties of Soul and Body, wherewith he hath endued us; and for many moſt admirable prerogatives of our outward Eſtate: but much more for our Redemption, and the wonderfull circumſtances of unexpreſſible love and grace therein declared; for his deſcending to a conjunction with our Nature, and elevating us to a participation of his; for dignifying us with more illuſtrious titles, and inſtating us in a ſure capacity of a much ſuperiour Happineſs. Our daily Food deſerves well a Grace to be ſaid before and after it: but how much more that conſtant proviſion of Heavenly Manna, the Evangelical Verity; thoſe ſavoury delicacies of Devotion, whereby our Souls are nouriſhed to eternal life? 'Tis a laudable cuſtom, when we are demanded concerning our health, to anſwer, Well, I thank God: but much more reaſon have we to ſay ſo, if our Conſcience can atteſt concerning that ſound conſtitution of Mind, whereby we are diſpoſed vigorouſly to perform thoſe vertuous functions, due from reaſonable nature, and conformable to the Divine Law. If for the proſperous ſucceſs of our worldly attempts; for avoiding dangers, that threatned corporal pain and damage to us; for defeating the adverſaries of our ſecular quiet, we make Te Deum laudamus our ἐπινίκιον, (our ſong for victory:) how much more for the happy progreſs of our Spiritual affairs; (affairs of incomparably-higheſt conſequence;) for eſcaping thoſe dreadfull hazzards of utter ruine, of endleſs torture; for vanquiſhing Sin and Hell, thoſe irreconcileable enemies to our everlaſting peace; are we obliged to utter triumphal Anthymns of joy and thankfulneſs?

Pſ. 103. 1, &c. This is the order obſerved by the Pſalmiſt: inciting his Soul to bleſs God for all his benefits, he begins with the conſideration of God's mercy in pardoning his Sins; then proceeds to his goodneſs in beſtowing temporal Favours. Who forgiveth all thy ſins, leads the van; Who ſatisfieth thy mouth with good things, brings up the rere in the enumeration and acknowledgment of God's Benefits. That our minds are illuſtrated with the knowledge of God and his glorious Attributes, of Chriſt and his bleſſed Goſpel, of that ſtreight path which conducteth to true Happineſs; that by Divine aſſiſtence we are enabled to elude the allurements, to withſtand the violence of temptation, to aſſwage immoderate deſires, to bridle exorbitant paſſions, to correct vitious inclinations of mind; requires more our hearty thanks, than for that we were able by our natural wit to penetrate the abſtruſeſt myſteries; or to ſubjugate Empires by our bodily ſtrength. The forgiveneſs of our Sins doth more oblige us to a gratefull acknowledgement of the Divine Goodneſs, than ſhould God enrich us with all the treaſures contained in the bowels of the Earth, or bottom of the Ocean. One glimpſe of his favourable countenance ſhould more enflame our affections, than being inveſted with all the imaginable ſplendour of worldly glory.

Of theſe ineſtimable Benefits, and all the advantageous circumſtances wherewith they are attended, we ought to maintain in our hearts conſtant reſentments; to excite our thankfulneſs, to kindle our love, to quicken our obedience, by the frequent contemplation of them.

Thus have I (though, I confeſs, much more ſlightly than ſo worthy a ſubject did require) proſecuted the ſeveral particulars obſervable in theſe words. I ſhould conclude with certain Inducements perſuaſive to the practice of this Duty; whereof I have in the tenour both of the former and preſent Diſcourſe inſinuated divers, and could propound many more: but (in compliance with the time) I ſhall content my ſelf briefly to conſider onely theſe three very obvious ones.

I. Firſt therefore, We may conſider, that there is no diſpoſition whatever more deeply radicated in the original conſtitution of all Souls endued with any kind of perception or paſſion, than being ſenſible of Benefits received; being kindly affected with love and reſpect toward them that exhibit them; being ready with ſutable expreſſions to acknowledge them, and to endeavour competent recompences for them. The worſt of men, the moſt devoid of all not onely piety, but humanity and common ingenuity, the moſt barbarous and moſt wicked, (whom neither ſenſe of equity nor reſpect to law, no promiſe of reward or fear of vengeance can any-wiſe engage to doe things juſt and fitting, or reſtrain from enormous actions,) retain notwithſtanding ſomething of this natural inclination, and are uſually ſenſible of good turns done unto them. Experience teaches us thus much; and ſo doth that ſure oracle of our Saviour: If (ſaith he) you doe good to thoſe who doe good to you, what thanks is it? for even ſinners (that is, men of apparently leud and diſſolute converſation) doe the ſame. Luk. 6. 33.

Yea even Beaſts, and thoſe not onely the moſt gentle and ſociable of them, (the officious Dog, the tractable Horſe, the docile Elephant,) but the wildeſt alſo and fierceſt of them (the untameable Lion, the cruel Tiger, and ravenous Bear, as ſtories tell us, and experience atteſts) bear ſome kindneſs, ſhew ſome gratefull affection to thoſe that provide for them. Vid. Gell. lib. V. c. 14.

Neither wild beaſts onely, but even inanimate creatures ſeem not altogether inſenſible of Benefits, and lively repreſent unto us a natural abhorrence of Ingratitude. The Rivers openly diſcharge into the ſea thoſe waters, which by indiſcernible conduits they derive thence: the Heavens remit in bountifull ſhowrs what from the Earth they had exhaled in vapour: and the Earth by a fruitfull encreaſe repays the culture beſtowed thereon; if not, (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews doth pronounce,) it deſerves curſing and reprobation. So monſtrous a thing, and Heb. 6. 8.

and univerſally abominable to nature, is all ingratitude. And how execrable a prodigy is it then toward God, from whom alone we receive what-ever we enjoy, what-ever we can expect of good?

II. The Second Obligation to this Duty is moſt juſt and equal. For, (as * he ſaid well, Beneficium qui dare neſcit, injuſtè petit; He injuſtly requires (much more injuſtly receives) a benefit, who is not minded to requite it. In all reaſon we are indebted for what is freely given, as well as for what is lent unto us. For the freeneſs of the giver, his not exacting ſecurity, nor expreſſing conditions of return, doth not diminiſh, but rather encreaſe the debt. He that gives, indeed, according to humane (or political) law, (which, in order to preſervation of publick peace, requires onely a punctual performance of contracts,) transfers his right, and alienates his poſſeſſion: but according to that more noble and perfect rule of ingenuity, (the Law which God and Angels and good men chiefly obſerve, and govern themſelves by,) what is given is but committed to the faith, depoſited in the hand, treaſured up in the cuſtody of him that receives it: and what more palpable iniquity is there, than to betray the truſt, or to detain the pledge, not of ſome inconſiderable trifle, but of ineſtimable good will? Exceptâ Macedonum gente, (ſaith Seneca) non eſt ulla data adverſus ingratum actio: In no nation (excepting the Macedonians) an action could be preferred againſt ingratefull perſons, as ſo. (Though Xenophon, no mean Author, reports, that among the Perſians alſo there were judgments aſſigned, and puniſhments appointed for Ingratitude.) However, in the court of Heaven, and at the Tribunal of Conſcience, no offender is more conſtantly arraigned, none more ſurely condemned, none more ſeverely puniſhed, than the ingratefull man.

* Liberius.

Καλὸν γὰρ θησαύρισμα κειμένη χάρις.

De Benef. lib. 8. cap 6.

Since therefore we have received all from the Divine bounty; if God ſhould in requital exact, that we ſacrifice our lives to the Teſtimony of his Truth; that we employ our utmoſt pains, expend our whole eſtate, adventure our health, and proſtitute all our earthly contents to his ſervice; ſince he did but revoke his own, 'twere great injuſtice to refuſe compliance with his demands: how much more, when he onely expects from us and requires ſome few acknowledgments of our obligation to him, ſome little portions of our ſubſtance, for the relief of them that need, ſome eaſie obſervances of his moſt reaſonable commands?

III. Thirdly, This is a moſt ſweet and delightfull Duty. Praiſe the Lord (ſaith the moſt experienced Pſalmiſt) for the Lord is good; ſing praiſes to his Name, for it is pleaſant: and otherwhere, Praiſe the Lord, for it is good to ſing praiſes to our God; for it is pleaſant, and praiſe is comely. The performance of this Duty, as it eſpecially proceeds from good humour, and a chearfull diſpoſition of mind; ſo it feeds and foments them; both root and fruit thereof are hugely ſweet and ſapid. Whence S. James; If any man be afflicted, let him pray; is any merry, let him ſing Pſalms. (Pſalms, the proper matter of which is praiſe and thankſgiving.)

Pſal. 135 3.
Pſal. 147. 1.
Vid. Pſal. 9. 1.

Jam. 5. 13.

Other Duties of Devotion have ſomething laborious in them, ſomething diſguſtfull to our ſenſe. Prayer minds us of our wants and imperfections; Confeſſion induces a ſad remembrance of our miſdeeds and bad deſerts: but thankſgiving includes nothing uneaſie or unpleaſant; nothing but the memory and ſenſe of exceeding Goodneſs.

All Love is ſweet; but that eſpecially which ariſes, not from a bare apprehenſion onely of the objects worth and dignity, but from a feeling of its ſingular beneficence and uſefulneſs unto us. And what thought can enter into the heart of man more comfortable and delicious than this, That the great Maſter of all things, the moſt wiſe and mighty King of Heaven and earth hath entertained a gracious regard, hath expreſſed a real kindneſs towards us? that we are in capacity to honour, to pleaſe, to preſent an acceptable ſacrifice to him, who can render us perfectly happy? that we are admitted to the practice of that wherein the ſupreme joy of Paradiſe, and the perfection of Angelical bliſs conſiſts? For Praiſe and Thankſgiving are the moſt delectable buſineſs of Heaven; and God grant they may be our greateſt delight, our moſt frequent employment upon earth.

Vid. Pſal. 69. 30, 31. Pſal. 50 13, 14, 23.

Vid. diviniſſ. Chryſoſt. locum Tom. V. pag. 76.

Plin. Epiſt.

To theſe I might adde ſuch farther conſiderations. That this Duty is of all moſt acceptable to God, and moſt profitable to us. That Gratitude for Benefits procures more, diſpoſing God to beſtow, and qualifying us to receive them. That the ſerious performance of this Duty efficaciouſly promotes, and facilitates the practice of other Duties; ſince the more we are ſenſible of our obligations to God, the more ready we ſhall be to pleaſe him, by obedience to his Commandments. What S. Chryſoſtom ſaith of Prayer, It is impoſſible that he who with competent promptitude of mind doth conſtantly apply himſelf thereto, ſhould ever ſin, is moſt eſpecially true of this part of Devotion: for how can we at the ſame time be ſenſible of God's Goodneſs to us, and willingly offend him? That the memory of paſt Benefits, and ſenſe of preſent, confirms our Faith, and nouriſhes our Hope of future. That the circumſtances of the Divine Beneficence mightily ſtrengthen the obligation to this Duty; eſpecially his abſolute freeneſs in giving, and our total unworthineſs to receive; our very Ingratitude it ſelf affording ſtrong inducements to Gratitude. That giving thanks hath de facto been always the principal part of all Religion; (whether inſtituted by Divine Command, or prompted by natural Reaſon, or propagated by general Tradition;) the Ethnick devotion conſiſting (as it were totally) in the praiſe of their gods, and acknowledgment of their Benefits; the Jewiſh more than half in Euchariſtical oblations, and in ſolemn commemorations of providential favours; and that of the ancient Chriſtians ſo far forth, that by-ſtanders could hardly diſcern any other thing in their religious practice, than that they ſang Hymns to Chriſt, and by mutual ſacraments obliged themſelves to abſtain from all villany. But I will rather wholly omit the proſecution of theſe pregnant Arguments, than be farther offenſive to your patience.

Pſal. 72. 18, 19.

Pſal 106. 48.

Now the Bleſſed Fountain of all Goodneſs and Mercy inſpire our hearts with his heavenly Grace, and thereby enable us, rightly to apprehend, diligently to conſider, faithfully to remember, worthily to eſteem, to be heartily affected with, to render all due acknowledgment, praiſe, love, and thankfull obedience for all his (infinitely-great and innumerably-many) Favours, Mercies and Benefits freely conferr'd upon us: and let us ſay with David, Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, who onely doeth wondrous things: and bleſſed be his glorious Name for ever, and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael from everlaſting to everlaſting: and let all the people ſay, Amen.

SERMON X.

A Sermon on the King's Happy Return.

1 TIM. II. 1, 2.

1. I exhort therefore, that firſt of all ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions, and giving of thanks be made for all men:
2. For Kings, and for all that are in authority.

SAint Paul in his preceding diſcourſe having inſinuated directions to his Scholar and Spiritual Son, Timothy, concerning the diſcharge of his office, of inſtructing men in their Duty according to the Evangelical Doctrine; (the main deſign whereof he teacheth to conſiſt, not (as ſome men conceited) in fond ſtories, or vain ſpeculations, but in practice of ſubſtantial Duties, holding a ſincere Faith, maintaining a good Conſcience, performing offices of pure and hearty Charity;) in purſuance of ſuch general Duty, and as a principal inſtance thereof, he doth here firſt of all exhort or, doth exhort that firſt of all all kinds of Devotion ſhould be offered to God, as for all men generally, ſo particularly for Kings and Magiſtrates. From whence we may collect two particulars. 1. That the making of Prayers for Kings is a Chriſtian Duty of great importance. (S. Paul judging fit to exhort thereto πρῶτον πάντων, before all other things; or, to exhort that before all things it ſhould be performed.) 2. That it is incumbent on the Paſtours of the Church, (ſuch as S. Timothy was,) to take ſpecial care, that this Duty ſhould be performed in the Church; both publickly in the Congregations, and privately in the Retirements of each Chriſtian: according to what the Apoſtle, after the propoſing divers enforcements of this Duty, ſubſumeth in the 8. verſe, I will therefore, that men pray every-where, lifting up holy hands, without wrath or doubting.

1 Tim. 1. 3.

Verſe 6.

Verſe 5, 19.

Παρακαλῶ οὖν πρῶτον πάντων ποιεῖσθαι —

The Firſt of theſe particulars, That it is a Duty of great importance to pray for Kings, I ſhall inſiſt upon: it being indeed now very fit and ſeaſonable to urge the practice of it, when it is perhaps commonly not much conſidered, or not well obſerved; and when there is moſt need of it, in regard to the effects and conſequences which may proceed from the conſcionable diſcharge of it.

My endeavour therefore ſhall be to preſs it by divers Conſiderations, diſcovering our obligation thereto, and ſerving to induce us to its obſervance: ſome whereof ſhall be general, or common to all times; ſome particular, or ſutable to the preſent circumſtances of things.

I. The Apoſtle exhorteth Chriſtians to pray for Kings with all ſorts of Prayer: with δεήσεις, or deprecations, for averting evils from them; with προσευχαὶ, or petitions, for obtaining good things to them, with ἐντεύξεις,, or occaſional interceſſions, for needfull gifts and graces to be collated

Aug. Ep. 59. Beza, Grotius, &c. collated on them: as, after S. Auſtin, Interpreters in expounding S. Paul's words, commonly diſtinguiſh; how accurately, I ſhall not diſcuſs; it ſufficing, that aſſuredly the Apoſtle meaneth, under this variety of expreſſion, to comprehend all kinds of Prayer. And to this I ſay we are obliged upon divers accounts.

1. Common Charity ſhould diſpoſe us to pray for Kings. This Chriſtian diſpoſition inclineth to univerſal benevolence and beneficence; according to that Apoſtolical precept, as we have opportunity, let us doe good unto all men: Gal. 6. 10. it conſequently will excite us to pray for all men; ſeeing this is a way of exerting good will, and exerciſing beneficence, which any man at any time, if he hath the will and heart, may have opportunity and ability to purſue.

No man indeed otherwiſe can benefit all; few men otherwiſe can benefit many; ſome men otherwiſe can benefit none: but in this way any man is able to benefit all, or unconfinedly to oblige mankind, deriving on any ſomewhat of God's immenſe beneficence. By performing this good office, at the expence of a few good wiſhes addreſſed to the Sovereign Goodneſs, the pooreſt may prove benefactours to the richeſt, the meaneſt to the higheſt, the weakeſt to the mightieſt of men: ſo we may benefit even thoſe who are moſt remote from us, moſt ſtrangers and quite unknown to us. Our Prayers can reach the utmoſt ends of the earth; and by them our Charity may embrace all the world.

And from them ſurely Kings muſt not be excluded. For if becauſe all men are our Fellow-creatures, and brethren by the ſame Heavenly Father, becauſe all men are allied to us by cognation and ſimilitude of nature, becauſe all men are the objects of God's particular favour and care; if becauſe all men are partakers of the common Redemption, by the undertakings of him who is the common Mediatour and Saviour of all men; and becauſe all men, according to the gracious intent and deſire of God, are deſigned for a conſortſhip in the ſame bleſſed Inheritance; (which enforcements S. Paul in the context doth intimate;) 1 Tim. 2. 4, 5, 6. if, in fine, becauſe all men doe need Prayers, and are capable of benefit from them, we ſhould be charitably diſpoſed to pray for them: then muſt we alſo pray for Kings, who even in their perſonal capacity, as men, doe ſhare in all thoſe conditions. Thus may we conceive S. Paul here to argue: For all men, ſaith he, for Kings; that is, conſequently for Kings, or, particularly for Kings; to pray for whom, at leaſt no leſs than for other men, univerſal Charity ſhould diſpoſe us.

Indeed, even on this account we may ſay, eſpecially for Kings; the law of general Charity with peculiar advantage being applicable to them: for that law commonly is expreſſed with reference to our neighbour, that is, to perſons with whom we have to doe, who come under our particular notice, who by any intercourſe are approximated to us; and ſuch are Kings eſpecially. For whereas the greateſt part of men (by reaſon of their diſtance from us, from the obſcurity of their condition, or for want of opportunity to converſe with them) muſt needs ſlip beſide us, ſo that we cannot employ any diſtinct thought or affection toward them: it is not ſo with Kings, who by their eminent and illuſtrious Station become very obſervable by us; with whom we have frequent tranſactions, and mutual concerns; who therefore in the ſtricteſt acception are our neighbours, whom we are charged to love as our ſelves; to whom conſequently we muſt perform this moſt charitable office of Praying for them.

2. To impreſs which conſideration, we may reflect, that commonly we have onely this way granted us of exerciſing our Charity toward Princes; they being ſituated aloft above the reach of private beneficence: ſo that we cannot enrich them, or relieve them by our alms; we cannot help to exalt or prefer them to a better ſtate; we can hardly come to impart good advice, ſeaſonable conſolation, or wholeſome reproof to them; we cannot profit or pleaſe them by familiar converſation. For as in divers other reſpects they reſemble the Divinity; ſo in this they are like it, that we may ſay to them, as the Pſalmiſt to God, thou art my Lord; my goodneſs extendeth not to thee. Yet this caſe may be reſerved, wherein the pooreſt Soul may benefit the greateſt Prince, imparting the richeſt and choiceſt goods to him: He may be indebted for his ſafety, for the proſperity of his affairs, for God's mercy and favour toward him, to the Prayers of his meaneſt vaſſal. And thus to oblige Princes, methinks, we ſhould be very deſirous; we ſhould be glad to uſe ſuch an advantage, we ſhould be ambitious of ſuch an honour.

Privatorum iſta copia eſt, inter ſe eſſe munificos. Auſon. ad Gratian.

Abſit, Auguſte, & iſtud Sancta Divinitas omen avertat, ut tu à quoquam mortalium expectes vicem beneficii. Mamert. ad Julian.

Pſal. 16. 2.

3. We are bound to pray for Kings out of charity to the Publick; becauſe their Good is a general Good, and the Communities of men (both Church and State) are greatly concerned in the Bleſſings by Prayer derived on them.

The Safety of a Prince is a great part of the common welfare; the Commonwealth, as it were, living and breathing in him: his fall, like that of a tall Cedar, (to which he is compared,) ſhaking the earth, and diſcompoſing the State; putting things out of courſe, and drawing them into new chanels; tranſlating the adminiſtration of affairs into untried hands, and an uncertain condition. Hence, Let the King live, (which our Tranſlatours render, God ſave the King,) was an uſual form of ſalutation, or prayer: and, O King live for ever, was a cuſtomary addreſs to Princes, whereto the beſt men did conform, even in application to none of the beſt Princes; as Nehemiah to King Artaxerxes, and Daniel to King Darius. Hence not onely good King David is called the light of Iſrael; (Thou ſhalt not, ſaid Abiſhai, any more go out with us to battle, that thou quench not the light of Iſrael;) but even the wicked and perverſe King Zedekiah is by the Prophet Jeremiah himſelf (who had been ſo miſuſed by him) ſtyled the breath of our noſtrils. (The breath, ſaith he, of our noſtrils, the anointed of the Lord, was taken in their pits.) Hence not onely the fall of good King Joſiah was ſo grievouſly lamented; but a ſolemn mourning was due to that of Saul; and Ye daughters of Jeruſalem, weep for Saul, was a ſtrain becoming the mouth of his great Succeſſour King David. Hence the Primitive Chriſtians, who could not be conſtrained to ſwear by the Genius of Cæſar, did not yet, in compliance with the uſual practice, ſcruple to ſwear by their health, or ſafety; that is, to expreſs their wiſhing it, with appeal to God's teſtimony of their ſincerity therein; as Joſeph may be conceived to have ſworn * by the life of Pharaoh, Hence well might the people tell King David, Thou art worth ten thouſand of us; ſeeing the publick was ſo much intereſted in his ſafety, and had ſuffered more in the loſs of him, than if a myriad of others had miſcarried.

Iſa. 2. 13.
1 King. 1. 25.
2 King. 11. 12
2 Chr. 23. 11.
1 King. 1. 31.
Dan. 2. 4 & 3. 9 & 5. 10. & 6. 6.
Neh. 2. 3.
Dan. 6. 21.
2 Sam. 21. 17.
2 King. 24. 19.
Jer. 32. 3.
Lam. 4. 20.
Zech. 12. 11.
2 Chr. 35. 24.
2 Sam. 1. 12, 24.

Sed & juramus, ſicut non per genios Cæſarum, ità per ſalutem eorum, quæ eſt auguſtior omnibus geniis. Tert. Apol. c. 32.

* Gen. 42. 15, 16.
2 Sam. 18. 3.

This Honour likewiſe of a Prince is the glory of his people; ſeeing it is founded on qualities or deeds tending to their advantage; ſeeing it can hardly be ſuppoſed that he ſhould acquire honour without their aid and concurrence, or that he ſhould retain it without their ſupport and their ſatisfaction. And as the chief grace and beauty of a body is in the head, and the faireſt ornaments of the whole are placed there; ſo is any Commonwealth moſt dignified and beautified by the reputation of its Prince.

Prov. 4. 9.

The Wealth and Power of a Prince are the ſupports and ſecurities of a State: he thereby being enabled to uphold and defend its ſafety, its order, its peace; to protect his people from foreign injuries and invaſions; to ſecure them from inteſtine broils and factions; to repreſs outrages and oppreſſions annoying them.

Pſ. 72. 4 —.

The Proſperity of a Prince is inſeparable from the proſperity of his people; they ever partaking of his fortunes, and thriving or ſuffering with him. For as when the Sun ſhineth brightly, there is a clear day, and fair weather over the world: ſo when a Prince is not overclouded with adverſity, or diſaſtrous occurrences, the publick State muſt be ſerene, and a pleaſant ſtate of things will appear. Then is the Ship in a good condition, when the Pilot in open Sea, with full ſails and a briſk gale, chearfully ſteereth on toward his deſigned port.

Eſpecially the Piety and Goodneſs of a Prince is of vaſt conſequence, and yieldeth infinite benefit to his Country. For, Vita Principis Cenſura eſt, The life of a Prince is a calling of other mens lives to an account. His * Example hath an unſpeakable influence on the manners of his people, who are apt in all his garb, and every faſhion to imitate him. His Practice is more powerfull than his Commands, and often doth controll them. His Authority hath the great ſtroke in encouraging Vertue, and checking Vice, if it bendeth that way; the diſpenſation of honours and rewards, with the infliction of ignominies and corrections, being in his hand, and paſſing from it according to his inclinations. His Power is the ſhield of innocence, the fence of right, the ſhelter of weakneſs and ſimplicity againſt violences and frauds. His very Look (a ſmile or a frown of his countenance) is ſufficient to advance goodneſs, and ſuppreſs wickedneſs; according to that of Solomon, A King ſitting in the throne of judgment ſcattereth away all evil with his eyes. His Goodneſs pleaſing God procureth his favour, and therewith deduceth from Heaven all kinds of bleſſings on his people. And if thoſe politick Aphoriſms of the Wiſe man be true, That righteouſneſs exalteth a nation, and eſtabliſheth a throne; That when it goeth well with the righteous, the city rejoyceth; and the ſame by the bleſſing of the upright is exalted: then upon his inclinations to Vertue the advancement and ſtability of publick welfare do mainly depend. So for inſtance, how did Piety flouriſh in the times of David, who loved, favoured and practiſed it? and what abundance of proſperity did attend it? What ſhowrs of bleſſings (what peace, what wealth, what credit and glory) did God then pour down upon Iſrael? How did the goodneſs of that Prince tranſmit favours and mercies on his Country till a long time after his deceaſe? How often did God profeſs for his ſervant David's ſake to preſerve Judah from deſtruction? ſo that even in the days of Hezekiah, when the King of Aſſyria did invade that Country, God by the mouth of Iſaiah declared, I will defend this city to ſave it for mine own ſake, and for my ſervant David's ſake.

Flexibiles in quamcunque partem ducimur à Principe, atque, ut ità dicam, ſequaces ſumus. Huic enim chari, huic probati eſſe cupimus; quod fruſtrà ſperaverint diſſimiles. Eóque obſequii continuatione pervenimus, ut propè omnes homines unius moribus vivamus. Plin. Paneg.

Vita Principis cenſura eſt, eáque perpetua, ad hanc dirigimur, ad hanc convertimur; nec tam imperio nobis opus eſt, quàm exemplo. Ibid.

* Ecclus 10. 2.

Prov. 20 8.

Prov. 14. 3 4.
& 16. 12.
2 Sam. 7. 16.
Prov. 11. 10, 11.

2 Sam. 7 9.
(Pſal. 72. 7.)

(2 Sam. 7. 16.
1 King. 11. 13
Jer. 33 21.
Pſal. 89 29.
& 132. 10—.)
Iſa. 37. 35.
(1 King. 11. 32, 34)

We may indeed obſerve, that, according to the repreſentation of things in Holy Scripture, there is a kind of moral connexion, or a communication of merit and guilt, between Prince and people; ſo that mutually each of them is rewarded for the Vertues, each is puniſhed for the Vices of the other. As for the iniquities of a people, God withdraweth from their Prince the free communications of his Grace and of his Favour, (ſuffering him to incurre ſin, or to fall into misfortune, which was the caſe of that incomparably-good King Joſiah, and hath 2 King. 23. 25. been the fate of divers excellent Princes, whom God hath ſnatched Iſa. 3. 1, &c. away from people unworthy of them, or involved with ſuch a people in common calamities; according to the rule propounded in the Law, Deut. 28. 36. of God's dealing with the Iſraelites in the caſe of their diſobedience; and according to that of Samuel, If ye ſhall doe wickedly, ye ſhall be conſumed, both ye and your King:) 1 Sam. 12. 25. ſo reciprocally, for the miſdemeanours (Prov. 28. 2) of Princes, (or in them, and by them,) God doth chaſtiſe their people. For what confuſions in Iſrael did the offences of Solomon create? 1 King. 11. 33. what miſchiefs did iſſue thereon from Jeroboam's wicked behaviour? How did the ſins of Manaſſeh ſtick to his Country, 1 King. 15 30. ſince that even after that notable Reformation wrought by Joſiah, it is ſaid, 2 King. 17. 21. Notwithſtanding the Lord turned not from the fierceneſs of his great wrath, wherewith his 2 King. 23. 26. anger was kindled againſt Judah, becauſe of all the provocations wherewith Manaſſes had provoked him? And how ſorely, by a tedious three years 2 Sam. 21. 1. famine, did God avenge Saul's cruelty toward the Gibeonites?

Nor are onely the ſins of bad Princes affixed to people conſpiring (Jer. 32. 32.) with them in impiety; for even of King Hezekiah it is ſaid, 2 Chr. 32. 25. But Hezekiah rendred not again according to the benefit done unto him; for his heart was lifted up: therefore there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jeruſalem. So the pride and ingratitude of an excellent Prince were avenged on his Subjects. And when good King David (God averting his Grace from him) did fall into that arrogant tranſgreſſion of counting his forces, that, as Joab prudently foretold, became a cauſe of treſpaſs to Iſrael: 1 Chr. 21. 3, 7. and God (ſaith the Text) was diſpleaſed with this thing, therefore he ſmote Iſrael.

David indeed ſeems to apprehend ſome iniquity in this proceeding, expoſtulating thus, Is it not I that commanded the people to be numbred? 1 Chr. 21. 17. even I it is that have ſinned, and done evil indeed: but as for theſe ſheep, what have they done? But God had no regard to his plea, nor returned any anſwer to it: for indeed God's wrath began with the people, and their King's ſin was but a judgment executed on them: for, The anger 2 Sam. 24. 1. (it is ſaid) of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael, (by their ſin ſurely, which is the onely incentive of Divine wrath,) and he moved David againſt them, to ſay, Goe number Iſrael and Judah.

So indeed it is, that Princes are bad, that they incurre great errours, or commit notable treſpaſſes, is commonly imputable to the fault of Subjects; and is a juſt judgment by Divine Providence laid on them, as for other provocations, ſo eſpecially for their want of Devotion, and neglecting duly to pray for them. For if they conſtantly with hearty ſincerity and earneſt fervency would in their behalf ſue to God, who faſhioneth all the hearts of men, Pſal. 33. 15. who eſpecially holdeth the hearts of Kings Prov. 21 1. in his hand, and turneth them whitherſoever he will; we reaſonably might preſume, that God by his Grace would direct them into the right way, and incline their hearts to goodneſs; that he would accompliſh his own word in the Prophet, I will make thy officers peace, and thine exactours righteouſneſs; Iſa. 60 17. that we might have occaſion to pay thankſgivings like that of Ezra, Bleſſed be the Lord God of our fathers, who hath put Ezr. 7. 27. ſuch things as this in the King's heart, to beautifie the houſe of the Lord, which is in Jeruſalem.

We are apt to impute the ill management of things, and the bad ſucceſs waiting on it, unto Princes, being in appearance the immediate Agents and Inſtruments of it: but we commonly doe therein miſtake, not conſidering that our ſelves are moſt guilty, and blamable for it; that it is an impious people, which maketh an unhappy Prince; that their offences doe pervert his counſels, and blaſt his undertakings; that their prophaneneſs and indevotion doe incenſe God's diſpleaſure, and cauſe him to deſert Princes, withdrawing his gracious conduct from them, and permitting them to be miſs-led by temptation, by ill advice, by their own infirmities, luſts and paſſions, into courſes fit to puniſh a naughty Pſal. 106. 32, 33. Exod. 32. Deut. 9. people. So theſe were the cauſes of Moſes his ſpeaking unadviſedly with his lips, and that it went ill with him for their ſakes: of Aaron's forming the molten calf; of David's numbring the people; of Joſiah's unadviſed enterpriſe againſt Pharaoh Neco; of Zedekiah's rebellion againſt the Aſſyrians, (notwithſtanding the ſtrong diſſuaſions of the Prophet Jeremy;) 2 King 24. 20. concerning which it is ſaid, For through the anger of the Lord it came to paſs in Jeruſalem and Judah, untill he had caſt them out from his preſence, that Zedekiah rebelled againſt the King of Babylon.

Conſidering which things, it is apparent, that Prayer for our Prince is a great office of Charity to the Publick; and that in praying for his Safety, for his Honour, for his Wealth, for his Proſperity, for his Vertue, we doe in effect pray for the ſame Benefits reſpectively to our Country; that in praying for his Welfare, we doe in conſequence pray for the good of all our neighbours, our friends, our relations, our families, whoſe good is wrapped in his welfare, doth flow from it, doth hang upon it.

We are bound, and it is a very noble piece of Charity, to love our Country, ſincerely to deſire and earneſtly to further its happineſs, and therefore to pray for it; according to the advice and practice of the Pſal. 122. 6. (128. 5.) Pſal. 122. 7. Pſalmiſt, O pray for the peace of Jeruſalem; they ſhall proſper that love thee. Peace be within thy walls, and proſperity within thy palaces. We are obliged more eſpecially upon the higheſt accounts, with deareſt affection to love the Church, (our Heavenly Commonwealth, the Society of our Spiritual Brethren,) moſt ardently to tender its good and ſeek its advantages; and therefore moſt urgently to ſue for God's favour Pſal. 51. 18. Pſal. 102. 13, 16. (Iſa 61. 1--) toward it: being ready to ſay after David, Doe good, O God, in thy good pleaſure to Sion, build the walls of Jeruſalem. Ariſe, O Lord, and have mercy upon Sion, for the time to favour her, yea the ſet time is come. Now theſe duties we cannot more eaſily, more compendiouſly, or more effectually diſcharge, than by earneſtly praying for our Prince; ſeeing that if we doe by our Prayers procure God's favour to him, we doe certainly draw it on the State, and the Church. If God, moved by our devout importunities, ſhall pleaſe to guard his perſon from dangers, and Pſal. 21. 4. to grant him a long life; to endue his Heart with Grace, with the love and fear of himſelf, with a zeal of furthering publick good, of favouring piety, of diſcountenancing ſin; if God ſhall vouchſafe to inſpire him with Wiſdom, and to guide his counſels, to bleſs his proceedings, and to crown his undertakings with good ſucceſs: then aſſuredly we have much promoted the publick intereſt: then infallibly, together with theſe, all other bleſſings ſhall deſcend on us, all good will flouriſh in our land. This was the ancient practice of Chriſtians, and directed to this end. For, * We (ſaith Lactantius to Conſtantine) with daily prayers doe ſupplicate God, that he would would firſt of all keep thee, whom he hath willed to be the keeper of things; then that he would inſpire into thee a will, whereby thou mayeſt ever perſevere in the love of God's name; which is ſalutary to all, both to thee for thy happineſs, and to us for our quiet.

---

* Cui nos quotidianis precibus ſupplicamus, ut te imprimis, quem rerum cuſtodem voluit eſſe, cuſtodiat; deinde inſpiret tibi voluntatem, quâ ſemper in amore Divini nominis perſeveres; quod eſt omnibus ſalutare, & tibi ad felicitatem, & nobis ad quietem. Lact. 7. 26.

4. Wherefore conſequently our own intereſt, and Charity to our ſelves ſhould diſpoſe us to pray for our Prince. We being nearly concerned in his welfare, as parts of the publick, and as enjoying many private advantages thereby; we cannot but partake of his good, we cannot but ſuffer with him. We cannot live quietly if our Prince is diſturbed; we cannot live happily, if he be unfortunate; we can hardly live vertuouſly, if Divine Grace doe not incline him to favour us therein, or at leaſt reſtrain him from hindring us. This is S. Paul's own conſideration: I exhort you, ſaith he, to make prayers for Kings —— that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godlineſs and honeſty. Upon ſuch an account God did command the Jews to pray for the welfare of that Heathen State, under which they lived in Captivity: And ſeek, ſaid he, the peace of the city whither I have cauſed you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it; for in the peace thereof ye ſhall have peace. And for the like cauſe the Chriſtians of old deemed themſelves bound to pray for the Gentile Magiſtrates; according to that of Tertullian, We pray for you, becauſe with you the Empire is ſhaken: and the other members of it being ſhaken, aſſuredly even we, how far ſoever we may be thought from troubles, are found in ſome place of the fall. Farther, Neſcio an plus moribus conferat Princeps, qui bonos eſſe patitur, quàm qui cogit. Plin. Panegyr.

Jer. 29. 7.

Vobiſcum enim concutitur imperium: concuſſis etiam cæteris membris ejus, utique & nos, licèt extranei à turbis æſtimemur, in aliquo loco caſûs invenimur. Tert. Apol. c. 32.

5. Let us conſider, that Subjects are obliged in gratitude and ingenuity, yea in equity and juſtice, to pray for their Princes. For

They are moſt nearly related to us, and allied by the moſt ſacred bands; being conſtituted by God, in his own room, the Parents and Guardians of their Country; being alſo avowed and accepted for ſuch by ſolemn Vows, and moſt holy Sacraments of Allegeance: whence unto them as ſuch we owe an humble piety, a very reſpectfull affection, a moſt dutifull obſervance; the which we cannot better expreſs or exerciſe, than in our heartieſt Prayers for their welfare.

Quem ſciens (Chriſtianus) à Deo ſuo conſtitui; neceſſe eſt, ut & ipſum diligat, & revereatur, & honoret, & ſalvum velit. — Tert. ad Scap. 2.

Jurant per Deum, & per Chriſtum, & per Spiritum S. & per Majeſtatem Imperatoris, quæ ſecundùm Deum generi humano diligenda eſt, & colenda. Veget. 2. 5.

They by God are deſtined to be the Protectours of the Church, the Patrons of Religion, the Foſterers and Cheriſhers of Truth, of Vertue, of Piety: for of the Church in the Evangelical times it was propheſied, Kings ſhall be thy nurſing Fathers; Thou ſhalt ſuck the breaſts of Kings; Kings ſhall miniſter to thee: wherefore to them, not onely as men and citizens, but peculiarly as Chriſtians, we owe the higheſt duty; and conſequently we muſt pay the beſt Devotion for them.

Iſa. 49. 23. & 60. 16, 10.

To them we ſtand indebted for the greateſt Benefits of common life: they neceſſarily doe take much care, they undergoe great trouble, they are expoſed to many hazzards for our advantage; that under their ſhadow we may enjoy ſafety and quiet, we may reap the fruits of our induſtry, we may poſſeſs the comforts and conveniencies of our life, with ſecurity from rapine, from contention, from ſolicitude, from the continual fears of wrong and outrage.

Lam. 4. 20.

To their induſtry and vigilancy under God we owe the fair adminiſtration of Juſtice, the protection of Right and Innocence, the preſervation of Order and Peace, the encouragement of Goodneſs, and correction of Wickedneſs: for they, as the Apoſtle telleth us, are God's Miniſters, attending continually on theſe very things. They indeed ſo attend, as to deny themſelves, as to foregoe much of their own eaſe, their pleaſure, their ſatisfaction; being frequently perplexed with cares, continually enſlaved to buſineſs, and ſubject to various inconveniences, rendring their life to conſiderate Spectatours very little deſirable.

Rom. 13. 6.

Luk. 22. 25.

Οὐ κολακεία ἐστὶ τὸ πρᾶγμα, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸν τοῦ δικαίου γίνεται λόγον. Chryſ. in 1 Tim. 2. 1.

Act. 24 2. 3.

As therefore, according to our Lord's obſervation, they are uſually ſtyled Benefactours, ſo they really are; even the worſt of them (ſuch as Claudius, or Nero, of whom our Apoſtles ſpeak) in conſiderable meaſure; at leaſt in compariſon of Anarchy: and conſidering the miſchiefs iſſuing from want of Government. Οὐ κολακεία ἐστὶ τὸ πρᾶγμα· The matter is not flattery; (ſaith S. Chryſoſtom, himſelf of all men fartheſt from a flatterer;) but according to the reaſon of the caſe we muſt eſteem our ſelves much obliged to them for the pains they ſuſtain in our behalf, and for the benefits we receive from them. For he indeed muſt be a very bad Governour, to whom that Speech of the Oratour Tertullus may not without glozing be accommodated; Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietneſs, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence, we accept it always, and in all places, moſt noble Felix, with all thankfulneſs.

However, what Seneca ſaith of Philoſophers, that they of all men are moſt obliged, and moſt gratefull to Kings and Magiſtrates, becauſe from their care they enjoy the leiſure, quiet and ſecurity of contemplating and practiſing the beſt things; upon which account, ſaith he, they could not but reverence the authors of ſo great a good, as Parents; that is, or ſhould be far more true of Chriſtians. That leiſure (to uſe his words) which is ſpent with God, and which rendreth us like to God; the liberty of ſtudying Divine truth, and of ſerving God with ſecurity and quiet; are ineſtimable benefits, for the which they are indebted to the protection of Magiſtrates: Therefore in all reaſon a gratefull retribution of good will, and of all good offices, particularly of our Prayers, is to be payed to them. Is it not very abſurd, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome, that they ſhould labour and venture for us, and we not pray for them?

Nulli adverſus Magiſtratus ac Reges gratiores ſunt; nec immeritò, nullis enim plus præſtant, quàm quibus frui tranquillo otio licet. Itaque hi quibus ad propoſitum bene vivendi confert ſecuritas publica, neceſſe eſt auctorem hujus boni ut parentem colant ——— Sen. Ep. 73.

Quanti æſtimamus hoc otium, quod inter Deos agitur, quod Deos facit? Ibid.

Πῶς οὖν οὐκ ἄτοπον αὐτοὺς, &c. Chryſ. ubi ſupra.

1 Pet. 2. 13, 17.
Rom. 13. 1.
Tit. 3. 1
Prov. 24. 21.

6. Whereas we are by Divine command frequently injoyned to fear and reverence, to honour, to obey Kings, we ſhould look on Prayer for them as a principal branch, and the neglect thereof as a notable breach of thoſe duties. For

As to Honour and Reverence, it is plain, that no exteriour ſignification, in ceremonious unveiling or cringing to them, can ſo demonſtrate it, as doth the wiſhing them well in our hearts, and from thence framing particular addreſſes to the Divine Majeſty for their welfare. Than which practice there can be no ſure argument, that we hold them in great account and conſideration. And how indeed can we much honour them, for whom we doe not vouchſafe ſo much as to offer our good wiſhes, or to mention them in our interceſſions unto him, who requireth us to make them for all men, and particularly for thoſe for whom we are concerned? Doth not this omiſſion evidently place them in the loweſt rank, beneath the meaneſt of our friends and relations? doth it not imply a very ſlender regard had to them?

And as for Obedience, Prayer for Princes is clearly an inſtance thereof; ſeeing it may be ſuppoſed, that all Princes doe require it from their Subjects. Not onely Chriſtian Princes, who believe God the ſole Diſpenſer of all good things, and the great efficacy of Devotion in procuring them from him, may be deemed to exact this beneficial office from us; but even Heathens and Infidels, from their dimme notion of a Sovereign Providence, (which hath ever been common in the world,) have made an account of this practice: as we may ſee by that Decree of the Perſian King in Ezra, charging his Officers to furniſh the Jewiſh Elders with ſacrifices, that, ſaid he, they may offer ſacrifices of ſweet ſavour unto the God of Heaven, and pray for the life of the King, and of his Sons. And that ſuch was the practice of the Romans even in their Heatheniſh State, doth appear from thoſe words of Pliny; We have, ſaith he, been wont to make vows for the eternity of the Empire, and for the welfare of the Citizens, yea for the welfare of the Princes, and in their behalf for the eternity of the Empire.

Ezr. 6. 10.

Nuncupare vota & pro æternitate Imperii, & pro ſalute Civium, imo pro ſalute Principum, ac propter illos pro æternitate Imperii, ſolebamus. Plin. Paneg.

Not onely pious Princes with a ſerious deſire will expect this Duty from us; but even profane ones in policy will demand it, as a decent teſtimony of reſpect to them, and a proper means of upholding their State: that they may ſeem to have place in the moſt ſerious regards and ſolemn performances of their Subjects. So that to neglect this Duty, is ever a violation of our due obedience, and a kind of diſloyalty to them. Again,

7. The Praying for Princes is a ſervice peculiarly honourable, and very acceptable to God; which he will interpret as a great reſpect done to himſelf; for that thereby we honour his image and character in them, yielding in his preſence this ſpecial reſpect to them as his Repreſentatives; for that thereby we avow his Government of the world by them as his Miniſters and Deputies; for that thereby we acknowledge all Power derived from him, and depending on his pleaſure; we aſcribe to him an Authority paramount above all earthly Potentates; we imply our perſuaſion, that he alone is abſolute Sovereign of the world, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, ſo that Princes are nothing otherwiſe than in ſubordination to him, can doe nothing without his ſuccour, doe owe to him all their power, their ſafety, their proſperity and welfare; for that, in fine, thereby, diſclaiming all other confidences in any ſon of man, we ſignifie our entire ſubmiſſion to God's will, and ſole confidence in his Providence. This ſervice therefore is a very gratefull kind of adoring our Almighty Lord; and as ſuch S. Paul recommendeth it in the words immediately ſubjoyned to our Text, For this (ſaith he) is good, and acceptable in the ſight of God, our Saviour.

Deo vel privatus, vel militans ſervit, cùm fideliter eum diligit, qui Deo regnat autore. Veget. 2. 5.

1 Tim. 6. 15.

Temperans Majeſtatem Cæſaris infra Deum, magis illum commendo Deo. Tert. Apol. c. 33.

Pſal. 146. 3. & 118. 8, 9.

1 Tim. 2. 3.

8. Let us conſider, that whereas wiſdom guiding our Piety and Charity, will eſpecially incline us to place our Devotion there where it will be moſt needfull and uſefull, we therefore chiefly muſt pray for Kings, becauſe they doe moſt need our Prayers.

Their Office is moſt high, and hard to diſcharge well or happily: wherefore they need extraordinary ſupplies of Gifts and Graces from the Divine bounty.

Their Affairs are of greateſt weight and importance, requiring anſwerable skill, and ſtrength to ſteer and weild them: wherefore they need from the Fountain of wiſdom and power ſpecial communications of light, of courage, of ability to conduct, to ſupport, to fortifie them in their managements; they need that God ſhould uphold them πνεύματι ἡγεμονικῷ, with that Princely Spirit, for which King David prayed.

Pſal. 51. 12.

Iſa. 11 2. & 28. 6.
9 6.
Pſal. 7. 11.
1 King 3. 9.
Sap. 9. 4. —
(Pſal. 72 1)
Prov. 16 10.
2 Sam. 14. 17.

They often are to deliberate about matters of dark and uncertain conſequence; they are to judge in caſes of dubious and intricate nature; the which to reſolve prudently, or to determine uprightly, no humane wiſdom ſufficiently can enable; wherefore they need the ſpirit of counſel, and the ſpirit of judgment, from the ſole diſpenſer of them, the great Counſellour and moſt righteous Judge. The wiſeſt and ableſt of them hath reaſon to pray with Solomon, Give thy ſervant an underſtanding heart, to judge thy people, that I may diſcern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy ſo great a people? That ſo what the Wiſe man ſaith may be verified, A divine ſentence is in the lips of the King, his mouth tranſgreſſeth not in judgment: and that of the wiſe woman, As an Angel of God, ſo is my Lord the King to diſcern good and bad.

1 Sam. 2. 9.
Eccles 9 11.
Pſal. 33 16.

They commonly are engaged in enterpriſes of greateſt difficulty, inſuperable by the might or induſtry of man; in regard to which we may ſay with Hannah, By ſtrength ſhall no man prevail; with the Preacher, the race is not to the ſwift, nor the battle to the ſtrong; with the Pſalmiſt, There is no King ſaved by the multitude of an hoaſt: wherefore they need aid and ſuccour from the Almighty, to carry them through, and bleſs their deſigns with ſucceſs.

Pſal. 21 4.
& 91. 1. —
& 127. 1.
Pſal. 33. 16.

They are moſt expoſed to Dangers and Diſaſters; (ſtanding like high towers, moſt obnoxious to the winds and tempeſts of fortune;) having uſually many envious ill-willers, many diſaffected malecontents, many both open enemies and cloſe inſidiatours; from whoſe force or treachery no humane providence can ſufficiently guard them: they doe therefore need the protection of the ever-vigilant Keeper of Iſrael, to ſecure them: for, Except the Lord keepeth the city, the watchman waketh but in vain; Except the Lord preſerve the King, his guards, his armies ſurround him to no purpoſe.

Zech. 3. 1.
Eccles 8. 4.

They have the natural Infirmities of other men, and far beyond other men are ſubject to external Temptations. The malicious Spirit (as in the caſe of Job, of David, of Ahab, of Joſhua the High Prieſt is expreſſed) is ever waiting for occaſion, ever craving permiſſion of God to ſeduce and pervert them; ſucceſs therein being extremely conducible to his villainous deſigns. The World continually doth aſſault them with all its advantages; with all its baits of pleaſure, with all its enticements to pride and vanity, to oppreſſion and injuſtice, to ſloth, to luxury, to exorbitant ſelf-will and ſelf-conceit, to every ſort of vicious practice. Their eminency of ſtate, their affluence of wealth, their uncontrollable power, their exemption from common reſtraints, their continual diſtractions and encumbrances by varieties of care and buſineſs, their multitude of obſequious followers, and ſcarcity of faithfull friends, to adviſe, or reprove them, their having no obſtacles before them to check their wills, to croſs their humours, to curb their luſts and paſſions, are ſo many dangerous ſnares unto them: wherefore they doe need plentifull meaſures of Grace, and mighty aſſiſtences from God, to preſerve them from the worſt errours and ſins; into which otherwiſe 'tis almoſt a miracle if they are not plunged.

Ὁ πλεῖστα πράττων, πλεῖστ' ἁμαρτάνει βροτῶν.

And being they are ſo liable to ſin, they muſt conſequently ſtand often in need of God's mercy to bear with them, and to pardon them.

They therefore upon ſo many accounts needing ſpecial help and grace from Heaven, doe moſt need Prayers to derive it thence for them.

All Princes indeed doe need them. Good Princes need many Prayers for God's help, to uphold and confirm them in their Vertue: Bad Princes ces need deprecations of God's wrath and judgment toward them, for offending his Majeſty; together with ſupplications for God's grace to convert and reform them: the moſt deſperate and incorrigible need Prayers, that God would over-rule and reſtrain them from doing miſchief to themſeles and others. All Princes having many avocations, and temptations; hindring them to pray enough for themſelves, doe need ſupplemental aids from the Devotions of others.

Wherefore if we love Them, if we love our Country, if we love our Selves, if we tender the intereſts of Truth, of Piety, of common Good, we, conſidering their caſe, and manifold need of Prayers, will not fail earneſtly to ſue for them; that God would afford needfull aſſiſtence to them in the adminiſtration of their high Office, in the improvement of their great talents, in the conduct and management of their arduous Affairs; that he graciouſly would direct them in their perplexed Counſels, would back them in their difficult Undertakings, would protect their Perſons from dangers, would keep their Hearts from the prevalency of temptations, would pardon their Failings and Treſpaſſes. Again,

9. Whereas God hath declared, that he hath ſpecial regard to Princes, and a more than ordinary care over them, becauſe they have a peculiar relation to him, as his Repreſentatives, the Miniſters of his Kingdom, the main inſtruments of his Providence, whereby he conveyeth his favours, and diſpenſeth his juſtice to men; becauſe alſo the good of mankind, which he eſpecially tendereth, is mainly concerned in their welfare; whereas, I ſay, it is he that giveth ſalvation unto Kings; that giveth great deliverance to his King, and ſheweth mercy to his anointed; that hath the King's heart and his breath, and all his ways in his hand: even upon this account our Prayers for them are the more required. For it is a method of God, and an eſtabliſhed rule of Divine Providence, not to diſpenſe ſpecial Bleſſings without particular Conditions, and the concurrence of our Duty in obſervance of what he preſcribeth in reſpect to them. Seeing then He hath enjoyned, that in order to our obtaining thoſe great benefits, which iſſue from his ſpecial care over Princes, we ſhould pray for it, and ſeek it from his hands; the omiſſion of this duty will intercept it, or bereave us of its advantages; nor in that caſe may we expect any bleſſings of that kind. As without praying for our ſelves, we muſt not expect private favours from Heaven; ſo without praying for our Prince, we cannot well hope for publick bleſſings. For, as a profane perſon (who in effect diſavoweth God, by not regarding to ſeek his favour and aid) is not qualified to receive any good from him: ſo a profane Nation (which diſclaimeth God's Government of the world, by not invoking his Benediction on thoſe who moderate it under him) is not well capable of common benefits. It is upon all accounts true which Ezra ſaid, The hand of our God is upon all them for good that ſeek him: but his power and his wrath is againſt all them that forſake him. If therefore we deſire that our Prince ſhould not loſe God's ſpecial regard, if we would not forfeit the benefitst hereof to our ſelves, we muſt conſpire in hearty Prayers for him.

Sap. 6. 4.
Pſal. 144. 10. & 21. 1.
Pſal. 18. 50. (63. 11.)
2 Sam. 22. 51.
Prov. 21. 1.
Dan. 5. 23.
Ezr. 8. 22.
Liv. 5. 51.
Hor. Od. 3. 6.

10. To engage and encourage us in which practice, we may farther conſider, that ſuch Prayers, offered duly, (with frequency and conſtancy, with ſincerity and zeal,) doe always turn to good account, and never want good effect: the which if it be not always eaſily diſcernible, yet it is certainly real; if it be not perfect as we may deſire, yet it is competent, as expediency requireth, or as the condition of things will bear.

There may be impediments to a full ſucceſs of the beſt Prayers; they may not ever prevail to render Princes compleatly good, or extremely proſperous: for ſome concurrence of their own will is requiſite to produce their Vertue, God rarely working with irreſiſtible power, or fatal efficacy; and the ſtate of things, or capacities of perſons, are not always fitly ſuted for proſperity. Yet are not ſuch Prayers ever wholly vain or fruitleſs: for God never preſcribeth means unavailable to the end; he never would have commanded us particularly to pray for Kings, if he did not mean to beſtow a good iſſue to that practice.

1 Joh. 5. 14.

And, ſurely, he that hath promiſed to hear all requeſts with faith and ſincerity, and inceſſant earneſtneſs preſented to him, cannot fail to hear thoſe which are of ſuch conſequence, which are ſo agreeable to his will, which doe include ſo much honeſty and charity. In this caſe, ſurely, we may have ſome confidence, according to that of S. John, This is the confidence we have in him, that if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us.

Fieri non poteſt, ut filius iſtarum lacrymarum pereat. Aug, Conf. 4. 12.

As the good Biſhop, obſerving S. Auſtin's Mother, with what conſtancy and paſſionateneſs ſhe did pray for her Son, being then ingaged in ways of errour and vanity, did encourage her, ſaying, It is impoſſible that a Son of thoſe devotions ſhould periſh: ſo may we hopefully preſume, and encourage our ſelves, that a Prince will not miſcarry, for whoſe welfare many good people doe earneſtly ſolicit; Fieri non poteſt, ut Princeps iſtarum lacrymarum pereat.

Jam. 5. 16.
Matt. 21. 22.
Matt. 7. 8.
Gen. 20. 17.
Num. 11. 2. & 21. 7. —
(Pſ. 105. 30. O T)
Joſh. 10. 12.
1 Sam. 1. 30. —
Luk. 4. 25.
Jam. 5. 17, 18
1 King 17. 21, 22
2 Kin. 4. 33 --
1 King. 13 6.
Deut. 4 29 --
Neh. 9. 27.
Pſal. 106. 44. & 107. 6, 13, 19, 28
Jud. 3. 15 & 4 3. & 6. 7 & 10 12.
* 2 Chr. 14. 11. —
2 Chr 20. 3, — 12, 23.
2 Chr 32. 20, 21.
2 Chron. 33. 12, 13. Eſth. 4. 16 Neh. 1. 11. & 2. 4. Dan. chap. 2. 4. 5. 7. 8 9. 10. 11. 12. † Ezek. 14. 14.
Jer. 15. 1.

You know in general the mighty efficacy of Prayer, what pregnant aſſurances there are, and how wonderfull inſtances thereof occurre in Holy Scripture, both in relation to publick and private bleſſings: How it is often promiſed, that All things, whatſoever we ſhall ask in prayer, believing, we ſhall receive; and that whoever asketh receiveth, and he that ſeeketh findeth, and to him that knocketh it ſhall be opened How the prayer of Abraham did heal Abimelech, and his family of barrenneſs; how the prayers of Moſes did quench the fire, and cure the bitings of the fiery Serpents; how the prayer of Joſhua did arreſt the Sun; how the prayer of Hannah did procure Samuel to her, as his name doth import; how Elias his prayers did open and ſhut the heavens; how the ſame Holy Prophet's prayer did reduce a departed Soul, and that of Eliſha did effect the ſame, and that of another Prophet did reſtore Jeroboam's withered hand; how the prayers of God's people frequently did raiſe them up Saviours, and when they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, he delivered them out of their diſtreſſes; how the prayers of * Aſa diſcomfited a million of Arabians, and thoſe of Jehoſhaphat deſtroyed a numerous army of his enemies by their own hands, and thoſe of Hezekiah brought down an Angel from heaven to cut off the Aſſyrians, and thoſe of Manaſſes reſtored him to his Kingdom, and thoſe of Eſther ſaved her people from the brink of ruine, and thoſe of Nehemiah inclined a Pagan King's heart to favour his pious deſign for re-edifying Jeruſalem, and thoſe of Daniel obtainined ſtrange viſions and diſcoveries; how † Noah, Job, Daniel, Moſes and Samuel are repreſented as powerfull interceſſours with God, and conſequently it is intimated, that the great things atchieved by them were chiefly done by the force of their prayers.

And ſeeing Prayers in ſo many caſes are ſo effectual, and work ſuch miracles; what may we hope from them in this, wherein God ſo expreſly and particularly directeth us to uſe them? If our Prayers can ſo much avail to our perſonal and private advantage, if they may be very helpfull to our friends; how much ſhall the Devotions of many good men, all levelled at one mark, and aiming at a publick moſt conſiderable good, be prevalent with the Divine goodneſs? However, if God be not moved by Prayers to convert a Prince from all ſin, to make him doe all the good he might, to bleſs him in all matters; yet he may thence be induced to reſtrain him from much evil, to keep him from being worſe, or from doing worſe than otherwiſe would be; he may diſpoſe him to doe many things well, or better than of himſelf he would doe; he may preſerve him from many diſaſters otherwiſe incident to him: which will be conſiderable effects of Prayer.

11. I ſhall adde but one general Conſideration more, which is this, That Prayer is the onely allowable way of redreſſing our caſe, if we doe ſuffer by, or for Princes.

Are they bad, or doe they miſdemean themſelves in their adminiſtration of government and juſtice? we may not by any violent or rough way attempt to reclaim them; for they are not accountable to us, or liable to our correction. Where the word of a King is, there is power: and who ſhall ſay to him, What doeſt thou? was the Preacher's doctrine.

Eccles 8. 4.

Doe they oppreſs us, or abuſe us? doe they treat us harſhy, or cruelly perſecute us? we muſt not kick againſt them, or ſtrive to right our ſelves by reſiſtence. For, Againſt a King (ſaith the Wiſe man) there is no riſing up: and Who (ſaid David) can ſtretch out his hand againſt the Lord's anointed, and be guiltleſs? and, They (ſaith S. Paul) that reſiſt, ſhall receive to themſelves damnation.

Prov. 30 31.
1 Sam. 26. 9.
Rom. 13. 2.

We muſt not ſo much as eaſe our ſtomach, or diſcharge our paſſion, by railing or inveighing againſt them. For, Thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the ruler of thy people, is a Divine law; and, to * blaſpheme, or revile dignities, is by S. Peter and S. Jude reprehended as a notable crime.

Exod. 22. 28.
Act. 23. 5.
* 2 Pet. 2. 10.
Jude 8.

We muſt not be bold or free in taxing their actions. For Is it fit, ſaith Elihu, to ſay to a King, Thou are wicked, and to Princes, Ye are ungodly? and, to reproach the footſteps of God's Anointed, is implied to be an impious practice.

Job 34. 18.
Pſal. 89 51.

We muſt forbear even complaining and murmuring againſt them. For, Murmurers are condemned as no mean ſort of offenders; and the Jews in the wilderneſs were ſorely puniſhed for ſuch behaviour.

Jude 16.

We muſt not (according to the Preacher's advice) ſo much as curſe them in our thoughts; or not entertain ill conceits, and ill wiſhes in our minds toward them.

Eccles 10. 20.
(Iſa. 8 21.)

To doe theſe things is not onely high preſumption in regard to them, (inconſiſtent with the dutifull affection and reſpect which we owe to them,) but it is flat impiety toward God, and an invaſion of his Authority; who alone is King of Kings, and hath reſerved to himſelf the prerogative of judging, of rebuking, of puniſhing Kings, when he findeth cauſe.

Theſe were the miſdemeanours of thoſe in the Late Times, who in ſtead of Praying for their Sovereign, did clamour and rail at him, did aſperſe him with foul Imputations, did accuſe his proceedings, did raiſe Tumults, and levy War againſt him, pretending by rude force to reduce him unto his Duty; ſo uſurping on their Prince, or rather on God himſelf, aſſuming his right, and taking his work out of his hands; diſcovering alſo therein great profaneneſs of mind, and diſtruſt of God's Providence, as if God, being implored by Prayer, could not, or would not, had it been needfull, without ſuch irregular courſes, have redreſſed thoſe evils in Church or State, which they pretended to feel, or fear.

Nothing therefore in ſuch caſes is left to us for our remedy or eaſe, but having recourſe to God himſelf, and ſeeking relief from his hand in his good time, by converting our Prince, or directing him into a good courſe; however comforting our ſelves in the conſcience of ſubmitting to God's will.

Abſit enim ut indignè feramus ea nos pati quæ optamus, aut ultionem à nobis aliquam machinemur, quam à Deo exſpectamus. Tert. ad Scap. 2.

This is the onely method S. Paul did preſcribe, even when Nero, a moſt vile, flagitious man, a ſorry and naughty Governour as could be, a monſtrous Tyrant, and moſt bloudy Perſecutour, (the very inventer of Perſecution,) did ſway the Empire. He did not adviſe Chriſtians to ſtand upon their guard, to contrive plots, to provide arms, to raiſe mutinies and inſurrections againſt him; but to offer ſuplications, prayers and interceſſions for him, as the beſt means of their ſecurity and comfort. And this was the courſe of the Primitive Chriſtians, during their hard condition under the domination of Heathen Princes, impugners of their Religion: Prayers and Tears were then the onely Arms of the Church; whereby they long defended it from ruine, and at laſt advanced it to moſt glorious proſperity.

Qui non dicam Regum, ſed omnium hominum, & vel beſtiarum ſordidiſſimus, dignus exſtitit qui perſecutionem in Chriſtianos primus inciperet. Sulp Sev. 2. 40.

Ità nos magìs oramus pro ſalute Imperatoris, ab eo eam poſtulantes qui præſtare poteſt. Et utique ex diſciplina patientiæ Divinæ agere nos, ſatìs manifeſtum eſſe vobis poteſt, cùm tanta hominum multitudo, pars penè major civitatis cujuſque, in ſilentio & modeſtia agimus. Tert. ad Scap. 2.

Fundendo ſanguinem, & patiendo magìs quàm faciendo contumelias, Chriſti fundata eſt Eccleſia; perſecutionibus crevit, &c. Hier. Ep. 62.

Indeed, if, not aſſuming the liberty to find fault with Princes, we would practiſe the duty of ſeeking God for his bleſſing on their proceedings; if, forbearing to ſcan and cenſure Acts of State, we would earneſtly implore God's direction of them; if, leaving to conceive diſguſts, and vent complaints about the ſtate of things, we would aſſiduouſly petition God for the ſettlement of them in good order; if, inſtead of being ſhrewd Politicians, or ſmart Judges in ſuch matters, we would be devout Oratours and humble Solicitours at the Throne of grace; our endeavours ſurely would find much better effect toward publick advantage: we certainly might doe more good in our cloſets by a few hearty wiſhes uttered there, than by all our tattling or jangling Politicks in corners.

There are great contrivances to ſettle things; every one hath his model of State, or method of Policy, to communicate for ordering the State; each is zealous for his own conceit, and apt to be diſpleaſed with thoſe who diſſent from him: but it is, as the faireſt and juſteſt, ſo the ſureſt and likelieſt way of reducing things to a firm compoſure, (without more a-doe, letting the world alone to move on its own hinges, and not impertinently troubling our ſelves or others with the conduct of it,) ſimply to requeſt of Almighty God, the Sovereign Governour and ſole diſpoſer of things, that he would lead his own Vicegerents in the management of the charge by himſelf committed to them. Be carefull for nothing; but in every thing, by prayer and ſupplication with thankſgiving, let your requeſts be made known to God, is a rule very applicable to this caſe.

Phil. 4. 6.

As God's Providence is the onely ſure ground of our confidence, or hope for the preſervation of Church and State, or for the reſtitution of things into a ſtable quiet: ſo it is onely our hearty Prayers, joyned with a conſcientious obſervance of God's Laws, whereby we can incline Providence to favour us. By them alone we may hope to ſave things from ſinking into diſorder, we may aſſwage the factions, we may defeat the machinations againſt the publick welfare.

12. Seeing then we have ſo many good arguments and motives inducing to pray for Kings, it is no wonder, that to back them, we may alſo alledge the practice of the Church, continually in all times performing this duty in its moſt Sacred Offices, eſpecially in the celebration of the Holy Communion.

Conſt. Apoſt. 8, 13. 2. 57.

S. Paul indeed, when he ſaith, I exhort firſt of all, that prayers be made, doth chiefly impoſe this Duty on Timothy, or ſuppoſeth it incumbent on the Paſtours of the Church, to take ſpecial care, that Prayers be made for this purpoſe, and offered up in the Church joyntly by all Chriſtians: and accordingly, the ancient Chriſtians, as Tertullian doth aſſure us, did always pray for all the Emperours, that God would grant them a long life, a ſecure reign, a ſafe family, valiant armies, a faithfull ſenate, a loyal people, a quiet world, and what-ever they as Men, or as Emperours, could wiſh. Thus (addeth he) even for their Perſecutours, and in the very pangs of their ſufferings, they did not fail to practiſe. Likewiſe of the Church in his time S. Chryſoſtome telleth us, that all Communicants did know how every day, both at even and morning, they did make ſupplication for all the world, and for the Emperour, and for all that are in authority.

1 Tim. 2. 8.

Polycarp. ad Philip. c. 12.

Precantes ſumus ſemper pro omnibus Imperatoribus vitam illis prolixam, imperium ſecurum, domum tutam, exercitus fortes, ſenatum fidelem, populum probum, orbem quietum, quæcunque hominis & Cæſaris vota ſunt. Tert. Apol. cap. 30.

Hoc agite, boni Præſules, extorquete animam Deo ſupplicantem pro Imperatore. Ibid.

Καὶ τοῦτο ἴσασιν οἱ μύσται, πῶς καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν γίνεται καὶ ἐν ἑσπέρᾳ καὶ ἐν πρωΐᾳ· πῶς ὑπὲρ παντὸς τοῦ κόσμου, καὶ βασιλέων, καὶ πάντων τῶν ἐν ὑπεροχῇ ὄντων, ποιούμεθα τὴν δέησιν. Chryſ. in 1 Tim. 2. 1.

And in the Greek Liturgies, (the compoſure whereof is fathered on S. Chryſoſtome,) there are divers Prayers interſperſed for the Emperours, couched in terms very pregnant and reſpectfull.

If the Offices of the Roman Church, and of the Churches truckling under it, in latter times, ſhall ſeem more defective or ſparing in this point of ſervice; the reaſon may be, for that a ſuperlative regard to the Solar or Pontifical Authority (as Pope Innocent III. diſtinguiſhed) did obſcure their devotion for the Lunar or Regal Majeſty. But our Church hath been abundantly carefull, that we ſhould in moſt ample manner diſcharge this Duty; having in each of her Holy Offices directed us to pray for our King in expreſſions moſt full, hearty and lively.

She hath indeed been charged as ſomewhat laviſh or over liberal of her Devotions in this caſe. But it is a good fault, and we little need fear over-doing in obſervance of a Precept ſo very reaſonable, and ſo important; ſuppoſing that we have a due care to joyn our heart with the Church's words, and to the frequency of Prayers for our Prince doe confer a ſutable fervency. If we be not dead, or merely formal, we can hardly be too copious in this kind of Devotion; reiteration of words can doe no harm, being accompanied with renovation of our deſires. Our Text it ſelf will bear us out in ſuch a practice; the Apoſtle therein by variety of expreſſion appearing ſolicitous, that abundance of Prayers for Kings ſhould be offered in Church, and no ſort of them omitted.

There are ſo many General Inducements to this Duty at all times; and there are beſide divers Particular Reaſons enforcing it now, in the preſent ſtate and poſture of things.

Times of trouble, of danger, of fear, of darkneſs and perplexity, of diſtraction and diſtreſs, of guilt, and deſerved wrath, are moſt ſeaſonable for recourſe to the Divine help and mercy in Prayer.

Pſal. 145. 18 —— & 18. 6. & 77. 2. & 86. 7. & 118. 5. & 142. 1. — & 107. 6. —Jam. 5. 13. 2 Chr. 6. 36.-- Inops Senatus auxilii humani ad deos populum ac vota vertit.- Liv. 3. 7. & 5. 16.

Pſal 82. 5. And are not ours ſuch? are they not much like to thoſe of which the Pſalmiſt ſaith, They know not, neither will they underſtand; they walk on in darkneſs: all the foundations of the earth are out of courſe? or like thoſe Luk. 21. 25, 26. (2 King. 19. 3.) of which our Lord ſpake, when there was upon the earth diſtreſs of nations, with perplexity; mens hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after thoſe things which were coming on the earth?

Are not the days gloomy, ſo that no humane providence can ſee far, no wiſdom can deſcry the iſſue of things?

Pſal 107. 27. Is it not a very unſettled world, wherein all the publick frames are ſhaken almoſt off the hinges, and the minds of men extremely diſcompoſed with various paſſions; with fear, ſuſpicion, anger, diſcontent and impatience? How from diſſentions in Opinion doe violent factions and feuds rage; the hearts of men boiling with fierce animoſities, and being exaſperated againſt one another, beyond any hopes or viſible means of reconcilement?

Are not the fences of Diſcipline caſt down? is there any conſcience made of violating Laws? is not the dread of Authority exceedingly abated, and all Government overborn by unbridled licentiouſneſs?

Pſal. 129 5. & 83. 5 — How many Adverſaries are there, bearing ill will to our Sion? how many turbulent, malicious, crafty ſpirits, eagerly bent, and watching for occaſion to ſubvert the Church, to diſturb the State, to introduce confuſion in all things? how many Edomites, who ſay of Jeruſalem, Pſal. 137. 7. (both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil,) Down with it, down with it even to the ground?

Have we not great reaſon to be fearfull of God's juſt diſpleaſure, and that heavy judgments will be poured on us for our manifold hainous provocations, and crying ſins; for the prodigious growth of Atheiſm, Infidelity and Profaneneſs; for the riſe practice of all Impieties, Iniquities and Impurities, with moſt impudent boldneſs, or rather with outrageous inſolence; for the extreme Diſſoluteneſs in manners, the groſs Neglect or contempt of all Duties, the great Stupidity and coldneſs of people generally as to all concerns of Religion; for the want of Religious Awe toward God, of Charity toward our neighbour, of Reſpect to our Superiours, of Sobriety in our converſation; for our Ingratitude for many great Mercies, and Incorrigibleneſs under many ſore Chaſtiſements, our Inſenſibleneſs of many plain Warnings, loudly calling us to repentance?

Is not all the world about us in combuſtion, cruel Wars raging every-where, and Chriſtendom weltring in bloud? and although at preſent, by God's mercy, we are free, who knows but that ſoon, by God's juſtice, the neighbouring flames may catch our houſes?

In fine, is not our caſe palpably ſuch, that for any good compoſure or re-inſtatement of things in good order, for upholding Truth and ſound Doctrine, for reducing Charity and Peace, for reviving the ſpirit of Piety, and bringing Vertue again into requeſt, for preſerving State and Church from ruine, we can have no confidence or reaſonable hope, Iſa 43. 11. Hoſ 13 4. Jer. 14 8. but in the good Providence and mercifull ſuccour of Almighty God; beſide whom there is no Saviour; who alone is the hope of Iſrael, and Saviour thereof in time of trouble? we now having great cauſe to pray Matt 8. 25. with our Lord's Diſciples in the ſtorm, Lord, ſave us, we periſh.

Upon ſuch Conſiderations, and others whereof I ſuppoſe you are ſufficiently apprehenſive, we now eſpecially are obliged earneſtly to pray for our King, that God in mercy would preſerve his Royal Perſon, and inſpire his Mind with Light, and endue his Heart with Grace, and in all things bleſs him to us, to be a repairer of our breaches, and a reſtorer of paths to dwell in; ſo that under him we may lead a quiet life in all godlineſs and honeſty. Iſa. 58. 12.

I have done with the Firſt Duty, (Prayer for Kings,) upon which I have the rather ſo largely inſiſted, becauſe it is very ſeaſonable to our preſent condition.

II. The Other (Thanksgiving) I ſhall but touch, and need not perhaps to doe more. For,

1. As to general Inducements, they are the ſame, or very like to thoſe which are for Prayer; it being plain, that what-ever we are concerned to pray for, when we want it, that we are bound to thank God for, when he vouchſafeth to beſtow it. And if common Charity ſhould diſpoſe us to reſent the Good of Princes with complacence; if their welfare be a publick benefit; if our ſelves are intereſted in it, and partake great advantages thereby; if in equity and ingenuity we are bound to ſeek it; then, ſurely, we are much engaged to thank God, the bountifull donour of it, for his goodneſs in conferring it.

2. As for particular Motives, ſuting the preſent Occaſion, I need not by information or impreſſion of them farther to ſtretch your patience; ſeeing you cannot be ignorant or inſenſible of the grand Benefits by the Divine Goodneſs beſtowed on our King, and on our ſelves, which this day we are bound with all gratefull acknowledgment to commemorate. Wherefore inſtead of reciting trite ſtories, and urging obvious reaſons, (which a ſmall recollection will ſuggeſt to you,) I ſhall onely requeſt you to joyn with me in the practice of the Duty, and in acclamation of praiſe to God. Even ſo Bleſſed be God, who hath given to us ſo Gracious and Benign a Prince, (the experiments of whoſe Clemency and Goodneſs no hiſtory can parallel,) to ſit on the throne of his Bleſſed Father, and renowned Anceſtours. 1 King. 1. 48.

Bleſſed be God, who hath protected him in ſo many encounters, hath ſaved him from ſo many dangers and ſnares, hath delivered him from ſo great troubles. Pſal. 18. 46.— 89. 22, 23.

Bleſſed be God, who in ſo wonderfull a manner, by ſuch miraculous trains of Providence, did reduce him to his Country, and re-inſtate him in the poſſeſſion of his Rights; thereby vindicating his own juſt Providence, declaring his ſalvation, and openly ſhewing his righteouſneſs in the ſight of all people. Pſal 98. 2.

Bleſſed be God, who in Him, and with Him did reſtore to us our ancient good conſtitution of Government, our Laws and Liberties, our Peace and Quiet; reſcuing us from lawleſs Uſurpations and tyrannical Yoaks, from the inſultings of Errour and Iniquity, from horrible Diſtractions and Confuſions.

Ever bleſſed be God, who hath turned the captivity of Sion; hath raiſed our Church from the duſt, and re-eſtabliſhed the ſound Doctrine, the decent Order, the wholeſome Diſcipline thereof; hath reſtored true Religion with its ſupports, advantages and encouragements. Pſal. 126. 1. (Iſ. 30. 20 —)

Bleſſed be the Lord, who hath granted us to continue theſe fixteen years in the peaceable fruition of thoſe Bleſſings.

Praiſed be God, who hath not caſt out our prayer, nor turned his mercy from us. Pſal. 66. 20.

Praiſed be God, who hath turned our heavineſs into joy, hath put off our ſackcloath, and girded us with gladneſs. 30. 11.

Let

145. 21. Let our mouth ſpeak the praiſe of the Lord; and let all fleſh bleſs his holy Name for ever and ever.

18. 46. The Lord liveth, and bleſſed be our Rock; and let the God of our ſalvation be exalted.

Pſ. 72 18, 19. Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, who onely doeth wondrous things; and bleſſed be his glorious Name for ever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and Amen.

Pſal. 106. 48. & 41. 13. & 89. 52. & 68. 34. —— 1 Chron. 16. 8 —— 36. Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael from everlaſting to everlaſting: and let all the people ſay, Amen. Praiſe ye the Lord.

SERMON XI.

A Sermon on the Gunpowder-Treaſon

On Novemb. 5. 1673.

PSAL. LXIV. 9, 10.

And all men ſhall fear, and ſhall declare the work of God; for they ſhall wiſely conſider of his doing.

The righteous ſhall be glad in the Lord, and ſhall truſt in him; and all the upright in heart ſhall glory.

IF we ſhould ſearch about for a Caſe parallel to that which we doe now commemorate, we ſhould, perhaps, hardly find one more patly ſuch, than is that which is implied in this Pſalm: and if we would know the Duties incumbent on us in reference to ſuch an Occaſion, we could ſcarce better learn them other-where than in our Text.

With attention peruſing the Pſalm, we may therein obſerve, That its great Author was apprehenſive of a deſperate Plot by a confederacy of wicked and ſpitefull enemies, with great craft and ſecrecy, contrived againſt his ſafety. Pſal. 64. 5. They, ſaith he, encourage themſelves in an evil matter; they commune of laying ſnares privily; they ſay, Who ſhall ſee them? That for preventing the blow threatned by this deſign, (whereof he had ſome glimpſe, or ſome preſumption, grounded upon the knowledge of their implacable and active malice,) he doth implore Pſal. 64. 2. Divine protection: Hide me, ſaith he, from the ſecret counſell of the wicked, from the inſurrection of the workers of iniquity. That he did confide in God's mercy and juſtice for the ſeaſonable defeating, for the fit Verſ 7. avenging their machination: God, ſaith he, ſhall ſhoot at them with an arrow; ſuddenly ſhall they be wounded. That they ſhould themſelves become the detectours of their crime, and the inſtruments of the exempla- Verſ. 8 ry puniſhment due thereto: They, addeth he, ſhall make their own tongue to fall upon themſelves: all that ſee them ſhall flee away.

Such was the Caſe; the which unto what paſſage in the hiſtory it doth relate, or whether it belongeth to any we have recorded, it may not be eaſie to determine. Expoſitours commonly doe refer it to the deſigns of Saul upon David's life. But this ſeeming purely conjecture, cture, not founded upon any expreſs words, or pregnant intimations in the Text, I ſhall leave that inquiry in its own uncertainty. It ſufficeth to make good its pertinency, that there was ſuch a miſchievous conſpiracy, deeply projected againſt David; (a very great perſonage, in whoſe ſafety the publick ſtate of God's people was principally concerned; he being then King of Iſrael, at leaſt in deſignation, and therefore in the precedent Pſalm, endited in Saul's time, is ſo ſtyled;) from the peril whereof he by the ſpecial Providence of God was reſcued, with the notable diſappointment and grievous confuſion of thoſe who managed it. The which Caſe (at leaſt in kind, if not in degree) beareth a plain reſemblance to that which lieth before us. Pſal. 63. 11.

And the Duties which upon that occaſion are ſignified to concern people then, doe no leſs now ſort to us; the which, as they lie couched in our Text, are theſe: 1. wiſely to conſider God's doing; 2. to fear; 3. to declare God's work; 4. to be glad in the Lord; 5. to truſt in God; 6. to glory. Of which the Firſt Three are repreſented as more generally concerning men; the others as appertaining more peculiarly to righteous and upright perſons.

Theſe Duties it ſhall be my endeavour ſomewhat to explain and preſs, in a manner applicable to the preſent caſe. I call them Duties; and to warrant the doing ſo, it is requiſite to conſider, that all theſe particulars may be underſtood in a double manner, either as declarative of event, or as directive of practice upon ſuch emergences.

When God doth ſo interpoſe his hand, as ſignally to check and confound miſchievous enterpriſes; it will be apt to ſtir up in the minds of men an apprehenſion of God's ſpecial Providence, to ſtrike into their hearts a dread of his Power and Juſtice, to wring from their mouths ſutable declarations and acknowledgments; and particularly then good men will be affected with pious joy, they will be encouraged to confide in God, they will be moved to glory, or to expreſs a triumphant ſatisfaction in God's proceedings. Theſe events naturally doe reſult from ſuch providential occurrences; for production of theſe events ſuch occurrences are purpoſely deſigned; and accordingly (where men are not by prophane opinions or affections much indiſpoſed) they doe commonly follow.

But yet they are not propoſed ſimply as Events, but alſo as matters of Duty: for men are obliged readily to admit ſuch impreſſions upon their minds, hearts and lives, from the ſpecial works of Providence; they are bound not to croſs thoſe natural tendencies, not to fruſtrate thoſe wiſe intents of God, aiming at the production of ſuch good diſpoſitions and good practices: whence if thoſe effects doe not ariſe, as often notoriouſly they doe not in ſome perſons, men thereby doe incurre much guilt and blame.

It is indeed ordinary to repreſent matter of duty in this way, expreſſing thoſe practices conſequent in effect, which in obligation ſhould follow, according to God's purpoſe, and the nature of cauſes ordered by him. As when, for inſtance, God in the Law had preſcribed Duty, and threatned ſore puniſhment on the diſobedient, it is ſubjoyned, And all the people ſhall hear, and fear, and doe no more preſumptuouſly: the meaning is, that ſuch exemplary puniſhment is in its nature apt, and its deſign tendeth to produce ſuch effects, although not ever, queſtionleſs, with due ſucceſs, ſo as to prevent all tranſgreſſion of thoſe laws. So alſo, when (ſaith the Prophet) thy judgments are in the land, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteouſneſs: the ſenſe is, that Divine Deut. 17. 13. & 13. 11. & 19. 20. Iſa. 26. 9.

S judg-

judgments in themſelves are inſtructive of Duty, it is their drift to inform men therein, and men ought to learn that leſſon from them; although in effect divers there be, whom no judgments can make wiſer or better; ſuch as thoſe of whom in the ſame Prophet it is ſaid, The people turneth not unto him that ſmiteth them; and in another, In vain have I ſmitten your children, they received no correction. As therefore frequently otherwhere, ſo alſo here this kind of expreſſion may be taken chiefly to import Duty. To begin then with the Firſt of theſe Duties.

Iſa. 9. 13. Jer. 2. 30. & 5. 3. Neh. 9. 29.

ומעשהו השכילו συνῆκαν τὰ ποιήματα.

I. We are upon ſuch occaſions obliged wiſely to conſider (or, as the Greek rendreth it, συνιέναι, to underſtand, or to perceive, as our Old Tranſlation hath it) God's doing. This I put in the firſt place, as previous in nature, and influential upon the reſt: whence (although in the Hebrew it be knit to the reſt, as they all are to one another, by the conjunctive particle, ve, and, yet) we doe tranſlate it cauſally, for they ſhall wiſely conſider, for they ſhall perceive; becauſe indeed without duly conſidering and rightly underſtanding ſuch occurrences to proceed from God, none of the other acts can, or will be performed: attentive conſideration is needfull to beget knowledge and perſuaſion, theſe to breed affection and practice.

There are many who, in ſuch caſes, are no-wiſe apprehenſive of God's ſpecial Providence, or affected with it; becauſe they doe not conſider, or doe not conſider wiſely and intelligently.

Some are very inobſervant and careleſs in regard to things of this nature; ſo drowzy and heedleſs, as not to attend to what-ever paſſeth, or to mind what God acteth in the world: ſuch as thoſe of whom the Prophet ſaith, The harp and the viol, the tabret and pipe, and wine are in their feaſts; but they regard not the work of the Lord, nor the operation of his hands: that is, their minds are ſo amuſed by wanton divertiſements, their hearts are ſo immerſed in ſenſual enjoyments, as no-wiſe to obſerve the moſt notable occurrences of Providence.

Iſa. 5. 12. Pſal. 28. 5. & 10. 4.

Others, (although they doe ken and regard what is done, as matter of news, or ſtory, entertaining curioſity and talk; yet) out of ſloth or ſtupidity, doe little conſider it, or ſtudy whence it ſpringeth; contenting themſelves with none, or with any ſuperficial account, which ſancy or appearance ſuggeſteth: like beaſts, they doe take in things obvious to their ſenſe, and perhaps ſtand gazing on them; but doe not make any carefull reflection, or inquiry into their original cauſes and reaſons; taking (as a dog, when he biteth the ſtone flung at him, or as a child that is angry with the log he falleth on) what-ever appeareth next, to be the principal cauſe: ſuch as the Pſalmiſt again toucheth, when he ſaith, A brutiſh man knoweth not, neither doth a fool underſtand this: and as he doth acknowledge himſelf on one occaſion to have been; So fooliſh was I, and ignorant; I was as a beaſt before thee.

Pſal. 92. 6. & 73. 22.

Others pretend to conſider much, and ſeem very inquiſitive; yet (being miſguided by vain prejudices or foul affections) doe not conſider wiſely, or well underſtand theſe matters; the reſult of their care and ſtudy about them being to father them on wrong cauſes, aſcribing them to the mere conduct and agency of viſible cauſes, hurried by a neceſſary ſwinge, or rolling on by a caſual fluctuation of things; not deſcrying God's hand in them, but profanely diſcharging and diſclaiming it: ſuch as thoſe in the Pſalms, who ſo reflected on Providence, as to ſay; How doth God know? and is there knowledge in the Moſt high? The Lord doth not ſee, neither doth the God of Jacob regard it: ſuch as hath been the brood of Epicurean and profane conſiderations in all times, who have have earneſtly plodded, and ſtrained their wits to exclude God from any inſpection or influence upon our affairs.

Pſal. 73. 11. & 94. 7. & 10. 11.

Some indeed there have been ſo very dull and ſtupid, or ſo perverſe and profane, as not to diſcern God's Hand, when it was made bare, raiſed up, and ſtretched out in the atchievement of moſt prodigious works; not to read Providence, when ſet forth in the largeſt and faireſt print: ſuch as thoſe of whom 'tis ſaid in the Pſalm, * Our fathers underſtood not: thy wonders in Egypt; and thoſe of whom 'tis obſerved in the Goſpel, || Though he had done ſo many miracles before them, yet they believed not ſuch as the mutinous people, who, although they beheld † the earth ſwallowing up Corah with his complices, and a fire from the Lord conſuming the men that offered incenſe; yet preſently did fall a-charging Moſes and Aaron, ſaying, Ye have killed the people of the Lord. No wonder then, if many doe not perceive the ſame Hand, when it is wrapp'd up in a complication with inferiour cauſes; when it is not lifted up ſo high, or ſo far extended in miraculous performances.

Iſa. 52. 10.
Exod. 14. 8.
Deut. 26 8.
Iſa. 26. 11.
Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not ſee, &c.
* Pſal. 106. 7.
|| Joh. 12. 37.
† Num. 16. 32, 35, 41.

The ſpecial Providence of God in events here effected or ordered by him, is indeed commonly not diſcernible without good judgment and great care; it is not commonly impreſſed upon events in characters ſo big and clear, as to be legible to every eye, or to any eye not endued with a ſharp perſpicacy, not applying an induſtrious heedfulneſs: the tracts thereof are too fine and ſubtile to be deſcribed by a dimme ſight, with a tranſient glance, or upon a groſs view: it is ſeldome ſo very conſpicuous, that perſons incredulous, or any-wiſe indiſpoſed to admit it, can eaſily be convinced thereof, or conſtrained to acknowledge it: it is often (upon many accounts, from many cauſes) very obſcure, and not eaſily diſcernible to the moſt ſagacious, moſt watchfull, moſt willing obſervers. For, the inſtruments of Providence being free agents, acting with unaccountable variety, nothing can happen which may not be imputed to them, with ſome colourable pretence. Divine and humane influences are ſo twiſted and knit together, that it is hard to ſever them. The manner of Divine efficacy is ſo very ſoft and gentle, that we cannot eaſily trace its footſteps. God deſigneth not commonly to exert his hand in a notorious way, but often purpoſely doth conceal it. Whereas alſo it is not fit to charge upon God's ſpecial hand of Providence any event, wherein ſpecial ends of wiſdom or goodneſs doe not ſhine; it is often hard to diſcover ſuch ends, which uſually are wrapp'd in perplexities; becauſe God acteth variouſly, (according to the circumſtances of things, and the diſpoſition, capacity or ſtate of objects,) ſo as to doe the ſame thing for different ends, and different things for the ſame end: becauſe there are different ends, unto which Providence in various order and meaſure hath regard, which our ſhort and narrow proſpect cannot reach: becauſe God, in proſecution of his ends, is not wont to proceed in the moſt direct and compendious way; but windeth about in a large circuit, enfolding many concurrent and ſubordinate deſigns: becauſe the expediency of things to be permitted or performed doth not conſiſt in ſingle acts or events, but in many conſpiring to one common end: becauſe we cannot apprehend the conſequences, nor balance the conveniences of things in order to good ends: becauſe we are apt to meaſure things by their congruity to our opinions, expectations and affections: becauſe many proceedings of God depend upon grounds inacceſſible to our apprehenſion; ſuch as his own ſecret Decrees, the knowledge of mens thoughts, cloſe purpoſes, clandeſtine deſigns, true qualifications and merits; his preſcience of contingent events, and what the reſult will be from the combination of numberleſs cauſes: becauſe ſometimes he doth act in methods of wiſdom, and by rules of juſtice, ſurpaſſing our capacity to know, either from the meanneſs of our nature, or the feebleneſs of our reaſon, or the fitneſs of our ſtate and circumſtances here: becauſe alſo the Divine adminiſtration of affairs hath no compleat determination or final iſſue here; that being reſerved to the great day of reckoning and judgment. It is farther alſo expedient that many occurrences ſhould be puzzling to us, to quaſh our preſumption, to exerciſe our faith, to quicken our induſtry, to engage us upon adoring that wiſdom which we cannot comprehend. Upon ſuch accounts, for ſuch cauſes, (which time will not give me leave to explain and exemplifie) the ſpecial Providence of God is often cloudy, is ſeldome ſo clear, that without great heed and conſideration we can perceive it. But however to doe ſo is plainly our duty; and therefore poſſible.

For our Reaſon was not given us to be idle upon ſo important occaſions; or that we ſhould be as brute Spectatours of what God doeth. He, ſurely, in the Governance of his nobleſt creature here diſcovereth his Being, and diſplayeth his Attributes: we therefore carefully ſhould obſerve it. He thereby (and no otherwiſe in a publick way) doth continually ſpeak, and ſignifie to us his mind: Pſal. 50. 1. & 60. 6. & 62. 11. and fit it is, that we his ſubjects ſhould hear, ſhould attend to the leaſt intimations of his pleaſure. To him thence glory ſhould accrue, the which who but we can render? and that we may render it, we muſt know the grounds of it. In fine, for the ſupport of God's Kingdom, for upholding the reverence due to his adminiſtration of juſtice among us, it is requiſite, that by apparent diſpenſation of recompences Duty ſhould be encouraged, and diſobedience checked: very fooliſh therefore we muſt be, if we regard not ſuch diſpenſations.

So Reaſon dictateth, and Holy Scripture more plainly declareth our obligation to conſider and perceive God's doings. To doe ſo is recommended to us as a ſingular point of wiſdom: Pſal. 107. 43. Whoſo is wiſe, and will obſerve theſe things, they ſhall underſtand the loving-kindneſs of the Lord. Jer 9 24. Let him that glorieth glory in this, that he underſtandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord, which exerciſe loving-kindneſs, judgment and righteouſneſs in the earth. Hoſ. 14. 9. Who is wiſe? and he ſhall underſtand theſe things; prudent? and he ſhall know them. For the ways of the Lord are right, &c. Pſal. 94 8. We are vehemently provoked thereto: Underſtand, ye brutiſh among the people; and, ye fools, when will ye be wiſe? They are reproved for Pſal. 28. 5. & 10. 4. Iſa 5. 12. neglect and defailance, who doe not regard the work of the Lord, nor the operation of his hand. The not diſcerning Providence is reproached as Pſal. 92. 6. (Iſa. 26. 11.) Lord, when thy hand is lifted up they will not ſee. a piece of ſhamefull folly; A brutiſh man knoweth not, neither doth a fool underſtand: and of wofull pravity; * O ye hypocrites, ye can diſcern the face of the skie; but how is it that ye cannot diſcern this time? * Luk. 12. 56. Matt 16. 3. To contemplate and ſtudy Providence is the practice of Good men. Pſal 77 12. & 143. 5. I will meditate on all thy works, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, chiefly reſpecting works of this kind: and, Pſal 111 2 The works of the Lord are great, ſought out of all them that have pleaſure therein. It is a fit matter of Devotion, warranted by the practice of good men, to implore God's manifeſtation of his Juſtice and Power this way. 94. 1, 2 O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth, ſhew thy ſelf; lift up thy ſelf, thou Judge of the earth. It is God's manner hereby to notifie himſelf. Pſal 9. 16. The Lord is known by the judgment that he executeth. He for this very purpoſe doth interpoſe his Pſal. 109. 27. Hand, that men may know that it is his Hand, and that the Lord hath done it; that (as it is in Eſay) they may ſee, and know, and conſide nd underſtand together, that the hand of the Lord hath done this, and the Holy one of Iſrael hath created it. He manageth things ſo, that men may be brought to know, may be induced to acknowledge his authority, and his equity in the management thereof; that they may know that he whoſe Name is Jehovah, is the moſt High over all the earth; that they may ſay, Verily there is a reward for the righteous, verily there is a God that judgeth the earth. In fine, the knowledge of God's ſpecial Providence is frequently repreſented as a mean of nouriſhing our faith and hope in him, as a ground of thankfulneſs and praiſe to him, as an incentive of the beſt affections (of holy joy, and humble fear, and hearty love) toward him: wherefore we ought to ſeek it, and we may attain it.

Iſa. 41. 20. (Ezek. 7. 27.)

God thereby doth ſupport and encourage good men.

He doth thereby convince and confound ill men. Pſal. 9. 19, 20.

He thereby doth inſtruct all men. Iſa 26. 9.

Pſal. 59. 13. & 83. 18. & 67. 2.
Pſal. 58. 11.

There are conſequently ſome diſtinctive marks or characters, by which we may perceive God's Hand: and ſuch may theſe be which follow, (drawn from the ſpecial nature, manner, adjuncts and conſequences of events:) upon which may be grounded Rules declarative of ſpecial Providence, ſuch as commonly will hold: although ſometimes they may admit exceptions, and ſhould be warily applied.

1. The wonderfull Strangeneſs of Events, compared with the ordinary courſe of things, or the natural influence of cauſes: when effects are performed by no viſible means; or by means diſproportionate, unſutable, repugnant to the effect. Sometimes great exploits are atchieved, mighty forces are diſcomfited, huge ſtructures are demoliſhed, deſigns backed with all advantages of wit and ſtrength are confounded none knows how, by no conſiderable means that appear; Nature riſing up in arms againſt them; panick fears ſeiſing on the abetters of them; diſſentions and treacheries ſpringing up among the actours; ſudden deaths ſnatching away the principal inſtruments of them. As, when the ſtars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera: when the winds and skies became auxiliaries to Theodoſius: when, the Lord thundred with a great thunder upon the Philiſtines, and diſcomfited them, and they were ſmitten before Iſrael: when the Lord made the hoaſt of Syrians to hear a noiſe of chariots, of horſes of a great hoaſt; —— whence they aroſe and fled: when the children of Ammon and Moab ſtood up againſt the inhabitants of mount Seir, utterly to ſlay and deſtroy them; and when they had made an end of the inhabitans of Seir, every one helped to deſtroy another: when the Angel of the Lord went out, and ſmote in the camp of the Aſſyrians 185000 men; and when they aroſe early in the morning, behold they were all dead corpſes: when the mighty power of Antiochus was, as it is ſaid, to be broken without hands: and when, as it is foretold, a ſtone cut out of the mountain without hands, ſhould break in pieces the iron, the braſs, the clay, the ſilver, and the gold. Such Events doe ſpeak God to be their cauſe, by his inviſible efficacy ſupplying the defect of apparent means.

Judg. 5. 20.
Aug de Civ. D. 5. 26.
1 Sam 7. 10.
2 Sam. 22 14, 15.
2 King. 7. 6.
Pſal. 53. 5. & 48. 6.
2 Chr. 20. 23.
2 King. 19. 35.
Dan. 8. 25. & 2. 45.

So likewiſe, when by weak forces great feats are accompliſhed, and impotency triumpheth over might: when (as the Prophet ſaith) * the captives of the mighty are taken away, and the prey of the terrible is delivered: when One man (as is promiſed) doth chaſe a thouſand, and two put ten thouſand to flight: when || a ſtripling, furniſhed onely with faith and a pebble, ſhall knock down a monſtrous Giant, armed with a helmet of braſs and a coat of mail, with a huge target, ſword and ſpear: when ſucceſſes arrive like thoſe recorded in Scripture under the conduct

Vid. Artabani Orat. apud Herod. Polymn. pag. 246.
Hom. Il. π′ 688.
* Iſa. 49. 25.
Joſh. 23. 10.
Lev. 26. 8.
Deut 32. 30.
|| 1 Sam. 17. 5, 40.

Judg. 7. 7. 1 Sam 14. 6 — 2 Chron. 14. 11 — & 20, 12. 17. † 2 Chron. 14. 11. 1 Sam. 14 6. 2 Cor. 12 9. Job 12. 21. & 38. 15. Pſal 10 15. & 37 17. & 35. 10. (Pſal 76. 5.)

conduct of Joſhua, Gideon, Jonathan, Aſa, Jehoſaphat; wherein very ſmall forces, by uncouth means, did ſubdue formidable powers: This doth argue that God doth interpoſe, † with whom (as it is ſaid) it is all one to ſave by many, or by few, and thoſe that have no power; whoſe power is perfected in weakneſs; who breaketh the arm of the wicked, and weakneth the ſtrength of the mighty, and delivereth the poor from him that is too ſtrong from him.

Hom. Od. Ψ'. verſ. 11.

2 Sam. 15. 31.

Ruffinus, S Paul, d' Ancre, de Luna, &c.

Alſo when great policy and craſt doe effect nothing, but are blaſted of themſelves, or baffled by ſimplicity: when cunningly-laid deſigns are ſoon thwarted and overturned: when moſt perſpicacious and profound counſellours are ſo blinded, or ſo infatuated, as to miſtake in plain caſes, to overſee things moſt obvious and palpable: when profane, malicious, ſubtle, treacherous Politicians (ſuch as Abimelech, Achitophel, Aman, Sejanus, Stilico, Borgia, with many like occurring in ſtory) are not onely ſupplanted in their wicked contrivances, but diſmally chaſtiſed for them: Theſe occurrences doe more than inſinuate Divine wiſdome to intervene, countermining and confounding ſuch devices.

Iſa. 44. 25.

Job 5. 12, 13. (Pſ. 33. 10) βουλὰς πολυπλόκων ἐξέστησεν.

For he it is who (as the Scripture telleth us) maketh the Diviners mad; turneth wiſe men backward, and maketh their knowledge fooliſh; diſappointeth the devices of the crafty; ſo that their hands cannot perform their enterprize; taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs, and turneth down the counſell of the froward headlong.

1 Cor. 1. 27, 28.

When-ever a juſt cauſe, or honeſt deſign, without any ſupport or ſuccour of worldly means, (without authority, power, wit, learning, eloquence,) doth againſt all oppoſition of violence and art prevail: this ſignifieth him to yield a ſpecial countenance and aid thereto, who (to depreſs humane pride, and advance his own glory) hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world, to confound the wiſe; and the weak things of the world, to confound the things that are mighty; and baſe things of the world, and things which are deſpiſed, and things that are not: to bring to nought things that are: (that are with us in moſt requeſt and eſteem.)

Eccles 10. 20 Hab. 2. 11.

Again, when plots, with extreme caution and ſecrecy contrived in darkneſs, are by improbable means, by unaccountable accidents diſcloſed and brought to light: a bird of the air (as the Wiſeman ſpeaketh) telling the matter; the ſtones in the wall (as it is in the Prophet) crying out Treaſon. The King cannot ſleep; to divert him the Chronicle is called for; Mordecai's ſervice is there pitched on; and inquiry is made concerning his recompence; honour is decreed him: ſo doth Aman's cruel device come out. Pity ſeiſeth on a pitileſs heart toward one among a huge number of innocents devoted to ſlaughter; that he may be ſaved, a Letter muſt be ſent: in that, words inſerted ſuggeſting the manner of execution; that carried to the wiſe King, who preſently ſmelleth it out: ſo This day's Plot was diſcovered. Such events, whence can they well proceed, but from the all-piercing and ever-watchfull care of him, whoſe eyes (as Elihu ſaid) are upon the ways of man, and he ſeeth all his goings? There is no darkneſs, nor ſhadow of death, where the workers of iniquity ſhall hide themſelves: For Hell is naked before him, and deſtruction hath no covering.

(Pſ 121. 4) Job 34 21. Job 34 22. Job 26. 6. Pſal. 132 2, &c. Heb. 4. 13. Am. 9 2.

1 Sam. 18 25.

Alſo, when ill men by their perverſe wilineſs doe notably beſool and enſnare themſelves, laying trains to blow up their own deſigns, involving themſelves in that ruine and miſchief into which they ſtudied to draw others; as when Saul, expoſing David's life to hazzard, encreaſeth ſeth his honour; when the Perſian Nobles, incenſing the King againſt Daniel, doe occaſion his growth in favour, with their own deſtruction; when Aman, by contriving to deſtroy God's people, doth advance them, and rearing a gallows for Mordecai, doth prepare it for himſelf: when it happeneth according to thoſe paſſages in the Pſalms, the wicked are taken in the devices that they imagined; In the net which they hid is their own foot taken; He made a pit and digged it, and is fallen into the ditch which he made; His miſchief ſhall return upon his own head, and his violent dealings ſhall come upon his own pate: Theſe are pregnant evidences of God's juſt and wiſe Providence: for, The Lord is known by the judgment that he executeth; the wicked is ſnared in the work of his own hand.

Dan. 6. 24.
Pſal. 10. 2. & 9. 15. & 35. 8. & 140. 5.
Pſal. 7. 15. & 57. 6.
Pſal. 7. 16. 5. 10.
Pſal. 9. 2.

All ſuch occurrences, containing in them ſomewhat, if not downrightly miraculous, yet very admirable, in like manner deflecting from the ſtream of humane affairs, as miracles doe ſurmount the courſe of nature, moſt reaſonably may, moſt juſtly ſhould be aſcribed to the ſpecial operation of him, who onely doeth wonderfull things.

Pſal. 72. 18. & 86. 10.

2. Another character of ſpecial Providence is, the Seaſonableneſs, and Suddenneſs of Events. When that which in it ſelf is not ordinary, nor could well be expected, doth fall out happily, in the nick of an exigency, for the relief of innocence, the encouragement of goodneſs, the ſupport of a good cauſe, the furtherance of any good purpoſe; (ſo that there is occaſion to acknowledge with the Prophet, Thou didſt terrible things, that we looked not for: This is a ſhrewd indication, that God's Hand is then concerned; not onely the event being notable, but the connexion thereof with circumſtances of need being more admirable.

Iſa. 64. 3.

Thus in time of diſtreſs and deſpondency, when a man is utterly forlorn, and deſtitute of all viſible relief, when (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh) refuge faileth him, and no man careth for his ſoul; if then * εὔκαιρος βοήθεια, an opportune ſuccour doth arrive; he is then unreaſonable, and ingratefull if he doth not avow a ſpecial Providence, and thankfully aſcribe that event unto him who is our refuge and ſtrength, a very preſent help in trouble; || a ſtrength to the poor, a ſtrength to the needy in his diſtreſs, a refuge from the ſtorm, a ſhadow from the heat; † the hope of Iſrael, and the Saviour thereof in time of trouble. This is that, for which in the * 107. Pſalm the Divine Goodneſs is ſo magnificently celebrated; this is the burthen of that pathetical rapture, wherein we by repeated wiſhes and exhortations are inſtigated to bleſs God; his wonderfully relieving the children of men in their need and diſtreſs: this is that, which God himſelf in the Prophet repreſenteth as a moſt ſatisfactory demonſtration of his Providence. When the poor and needy ſeek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirſt; I the Lord will hear them, I the God of Jacob will not forſake them: I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midſt of the valleys, &c. That they may ſee, and know, and conſider, and underſtand together, that the Hand of the Lord hath done this, and the Holy one of Iſrael hath created it.

Pſal. 142. 4.
(Pſal. 44. 25. & 108. 12.)
* Heb. 4. 16.
Pſal. 46. 1. & 9. 9. & 44. 24 —— & 37. 39. & 27. 5. & 69. 14. —— & 18. 6.
|| Iſa. 25. 4. & 33. 2.
† Jer. 14. 8.
Job 33. 18.
* Pſal. 107. 8, 15, 21, 31.
Iſa. 41. 17, &c.

So alſo, when peſtilent enterpriſes (managed by cloſe fraud, or by impetuous violence) are brought to a head, and come near to the point of being executed; the ſudden detection, or ſeaſonable obſtruction of them, doe argue the ever vigilant Eye, and the all-powerfull Hand to be engaged. God ever doth ſee thoſe deceitfull workers of iniquity, laying their miſchief in the dark; he is always preſent at their cabals, and clandeſtine meetings, wherein they brood upon it. He often doth ſuffer it to grow on to a pitch of maturity, till it be throughly formed, till it be ready to be hatched, and break forth in its miſchievous effects; then in a trice he ſnappeth and cruſheth it to nothing. God beholdeth violent men ſitting out in their unjuſt attempts, he letteth them proceed on in a full career, untill they reach the edge of their deſign; then inſtantly he checketh, putteth in a ſpoak, he ſtoppeth, he tumbleth them down, or turneth them backward. Thus was Amon's plot daſhed, when he had procured a Royal Decree, when he had fixed a time, when he had iſſued forth letters to deſtroy God's people. Thus was Pharoah overwhelmed, when he had juſt overtaken the children of Iſrael. Thus were the deſigns of Abimilech, of Abſalom, of Adonijah, of Sanballat nipped. Thus when Sennacherib with an unmatchable hoaſt had encamped againſt Jeruſalem, and had to appearance ſwallowed it; God did put a hook into his noſe, and turned him back into his own land. Thus when Antiochus was marching on furiouſly, to accompliſh his threat of turning Jeruſalem into a charnel, a noiſome diſeaſe did intercept his progreſs. Thus when the profane Caligula did mean to diſcharge his bloudy rage on the Jews, for refuſing to worſhip him, a domeſtick ſword did preſently give vent to his revengefull breath. Thus alſo, when Julian had by his policy and his authority projected to overthrow our Religion, his plot ſoon was quaſhed, and his life ſnapped away by an unknown hand. Thus, when-ever the enemy doth come in like a floud, (threatning immediately to overflow, and overturn all things,) the Spirit of the Lord doth lift up a ſtandard againſt him; that is, God's ſecret efficacy doth ſuddenly reſtrain and repreſs his outrage. This uſually is the method of Divine Providence. God could prevent the * beginnings of wicked deſigns; he could ſupplant them in their firſt onſets; he could any-where ſufflaminate and ſubvert them: but he rather winketh for a time, and ſuffereth the deſigners to go on, till they are || mounted to the top of confidence, and good people are caſt on the brink of ruine; then † ἀπὸ μηχανῆς, ſurpriſingly, unexpectedly he ſtriketh in with effectual ſuccour: ſo declaring how vain the preſumption is of impious undertakers; how needfull and ſure his protection is over innocent people; how much reaſon the one hath to dread him, and the other to confide in him. Then is God ſeen, then his care and power will be acknowledged, when he ſnatcheth us from the jaws of danger, when our Soul doth ſcape as a bird out of the ſnare of the fowler.

Eſth. 3.
Exod. 14.
2 King. 19. 28.
2 Mac. 9. 4.
Joſep. 18. 12.
Chryſoſt. in Babylam, Orat. 2.
Naz Orat. 4.
Iſa. 59. 19.
(Job 38. 11.)
* Εἰ δὲ μὴ ἐκ προοιμίων, μηδὲ εὐθέως, ἔθος αὐτῷ τοῦτον, &c. Vi. Chryſ. ad Olymp.
|| ὅταν κορυφωθῇ, ὅταν αὐξηθῇ, &c Ibid.
† Nec Deus interſit, niſi dignus vindice nodus Inciderit.
Pſal. 12. 7.

3. Another character of ſpecial Providence is, the great Utility and Beneficialneſs of Occurrences, eſpecially in regard to the publick ſtate of things, and to great perſonages, in whoſe welfare the publick is much concerned. To entitle every petty chance that arriveth to ſpecial Providence, may ſignifie lightneſs; to father on God the miſchiefs iſſuing from our ſin and folly, may ſavour of profaneneſs: but to aſcribe every || grand and beneficial event unto his good Hand, hath ever been reputed wiſdom and juſtice. * It hath been (ſaith Balbus in Cicero) a common opinion among the ancients, that what-ever did bring great benefit to mankind, was never done without Divine goodneſs toward men. And well might they deem ſo, ſeeing to doe ſo is moſt agreeable to his nature, and appertaining to his charge; and may appear to be ſo by good argumentation à priori. For, that God doth govern our affairs, may be deduced from his eſſential Attributes; and, conſequently, that he doth in eſpecial manner order theſe things, which are the moſt proper and worthy objects of his governance. God indeed doth not diſregard any thing; he watcheth over the leaſt things by his general and ordinary Providence; ſo that nothing in

|| Magna dii curant, parva negligunt. Cic. 2. de N. D

* Quicquid magnam utilitatem generi adferret humano, id non ſine Divina bonitate erga homines fieri arbitrabantur. Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. 2.

in nature may deviate from its courſe, or tranſgreſs the bounds preſcribed to it. He thereby cloatheth the graſs of the field: He provideth for the raven his food, and the young lions ſeek their meat from him; without his care * a ſparrow doth not fall to the ground; by it all the hairs of our head are numbred. But his more ſpecial hand of Providence is chiefly employed in managing affairs of great moment and benefit to mankind; and peculiarly thoſe which concern his people, who doe profeſs to worſhip and ſerve him; whoſe welfare he tendreth with more than ordinary care and affection. He therefore hath a main ſtroke in all revolutions and changes of State: he preſideth in all great counſels and undertakings; in the waging of war, in the ſettlement of peace; in the diſpenſation of victory and good ſucceſs. He is peculiarly intereſted in the protection of Princes, the chief Miniſters of his Kingdom; and in preſervation of his people, the choice object of his care, from violent invaſions, and treacherous ſurpriſes; ſo as to prevent diſaſters incident, or to deliver from them. It is he that (as the Pſalmiſt ſaith) doth give ſalvation unto Kings; who delivereth David his ſervant from the hurtfull ſword. It is he that continually * keepeth Iſrael without ever ſleeping, or ſlumbring; who is the hope of Iſrael, and the Saviour thereof; who is in the midſt of her, that ſhe ſhall not be moved; who hath declared, that he will help her, and that right early; that he will not caſt off his people, nor forſake his inheritance; that no weapon formed againſt his Church ſhall proſper; that ſalvation belongeth to the Lord, and his bleſſing is upon his people. When therefore any remarkable event, highly conducing to the publick good of Church or State, (ſupporting them in a good condition, or reſcuing them from imminent danger,) doth appear, it is moſt reaſonable and moſt juſt, to aſcribe the accompliſhment thereof to God's Hand. When any pernicious enterprize, levelled againſt the ſafety of Prince and people, is diſappointed, it is fit we ſhould profeſs and ſay, The righteous Lord hath hewen the ſnares of the ungodly in pieces.

Matt. 6. 30.
Pſal. 104 14.
& 147. 9.
Job 38. 39.
Pſal. 104. 21.
* Matt. 10.
29, 30.
Dan. 4. 25.
Pſal. 75. 7.
Pſal. 46. 9
Prov. 21. 31.
1 Chron. 29.
11.
Sap. 6. 4.
Pſal. 144. 10.
Ecclus 10. 20.
Pſal. 18. 50.
& 21. 1. &
33. 16.
*Pſal. 121. 4.
Jer. 14. 8.
Pſal. 46. 5.
Pſal. 94. 14.
Iſa. 54. 17.
Pſal. 3. 8.
Pſal. 129 4.
(O. T.)

4. Another like mark of ſpecial Providence is, the Righteouſneſs of the caſe, or the Advantage ſpringing from Events unto the maintenance of Right, the vindication of Innocence, the defence of Truth, the encouragement of Piety and Vertue. God naturally is the Judge of right, the Guardian of innocence, the Patron of truth, and Promoter of goodneſs. The Lord is a refuge to the oppreſſed: He is a Father of the fatherleſs, and a Judge of the widow: He will maintain the cauſe of the afflicted, and the right of the poor: * He executeth righteouſneſs, and judgment for all that are oppreſſed: He bleſſeth the righteous, and compaſſeth him with favour as with a ſhield: He preſerveth the ſouls of the righteous, and delivereth them out of the hand of the ungodly: All his paths are mercy and truth, unto ſuch as keep his covenant and his teſtimonies. When-ever therefore Right is oppreſſed, or perillouſly invaded; when Innocence is groſsly abuſed, or ſorely beſet; when Piety is fiercely oppoſed, or cunningly undermined; when good men for the profeſſion of Truth, or the practice of Vertue, are perſecuted: or grievouſly threatned with miſchief: then may we preſume that God is not unconcerned, nor will prove backward to reach forth his ſuccour. And when accordingly we find that ſignal aid or deliverance doe then arrive; it is moſt reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that God particularly hath ingaged himſelf, and exerted his power in their behalf. For, ſeeing it is his proper and peculiar work, ſeeing it moſt becometh and behoveth him to appear in ſuch caſes, affording his helpfull countenance; when he doth it, we Pſal. 9. 9.

& 68. 5.
& 10. 14.
Job 36. 15.
Pſal. 140. 12.
* Pſal 103. 6.
& 9. 8.
Pſal. 5. 12.
Pſal. 97. 10.
& 37. 12.—
Pſal. 25. 10.
146. 6.

Iſa. 66. 14.

ſhould be ready to acknowledge it. In ſuch a caſe, The hand of the Lord ſhall be known toward his ſervants, and his indignation toward his enemies, ſaith the Prophet.

Pſ. 69. 13 — & 102. 1, 2. & 140 6. & 60. 10. & 56. 1. —
Jam. 5. 16.
Pſal. 56. 9.
Pſal. 34. 15. & 91. 15 & 145. 18.

2 Chron. 14. 11. & 20. 9. & 32. 20. 2 King. 19 15 1 King. 17. 1, &c.

Πόσαι μυριάδες ἀνδρῶν καὶ φάλαγγες, ὅσας ἱκετεύοντες μόνον ἡμεῖς, καὶ Θεὸς βουληθεὶς κατειργάσατο; Naz. Or. 4. How many myriads and ſquadrons of men were there, whom we onely praying, and God willing, diſcomfited? ſaith Nazianzene in reference to the defeating of Julian's deſign.

Pſal. 20. 6.

Pſal. 21. 1, 2.
Pſal. 30. 2 & 66. 17 — & 118. 5.

5. Another character is, the Correſpondence of Events to the Prayers and Deſires of good men. For ſeeing it is the duty, and conſtant practice of good men, in all exigencies to implore God's help; ſeeing ſuch Prayers have, as S. James telleth us, a mighty energy, it being God's property, by them to be moved to impart his powerfull aſſiſtence; ſeeing God moſt plainly and frequently hath declared, and obliged himſelf by promiſe, that he will hear them, ſo as to perform what-ever is expedient in their behalf; ſeeing we have many notable experiments recorded in Scripture (as thoſe of Aſa, Jehoſaphat, Hezekiah, Elias, Daniel, and the like) of Prayers bringing down wonderfull effects from Heaven, with which the teſtimonies of all times, and the daily experience of good men doe conſpire; ſeeing the preſumption of ſuch efficacy is the main ground and encouragement of Devotion: we have great reaſon, when-ever Events are anſwerable to ſuch Prayers, to aſcribe the performance of them to God's Hand: great reaſon we have in ſuch caſes to cry out with David, Now know I that the Lord ſaveth his anointed; he will hear him from his Holy heaven, with the ſaving ſtrength of his right hand: juſt cauſe have we, according to his pattern, thankfully to acknowledge God's favour in anſwering our petitions; The King (ſaith he) ſhall joy in thy ſtrength, O Lord, and in thy ſalvation how greatly ſhall he rejoyce? For thou haſt given him his heart's deſire, and haſt not withholden the requeſts of his lips.

Ἑκουσίων κακῶν ἀκούσια ἔκγονα. Damaſc.

Τῆς κολάσεως ὁ τρόπος τῆς ἁμαρτίας τὸν τρόπον μιμεῖται. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. 19.

Pſal. 12. 3.
Rev. 16. 6.
Judg 1. 7.
1 Sam 15. 33.

6. Again, The proceedings of God (eſpecially in way of judgment, or of diſpenſing rewards and puniſhments) diſcover their original by their Kind and countenance, which uſually doe bear a near reſemblance, or ſome ſignificant correſpondence to the actions upon which they are grounded. Puniſhments (ſaith a Father) are the forced offſprings of willing faults: and anſwerably, Rewards are the children of good deeds: and God, who formeth both, doth commonly order it ſo, that the children in their complexion and features ſhall reſemble their parents. So that the deſerts of men ſhall often be legible in the recompences conferred, or inflicted on them: not according to the natural reſult of their practice, but with a comely reference thereto; apt to raiſe in them a ſenſe of God's Hand, and to wring from them an acknowledgment of his Equity in ſo dealing with them. So when humble Modeſty is advanced to honour, and ambitious Confidence is thrown into diſgrace; when Liberality is bleſſed with encreaſe, and Avarice is curſed with decay of eſtate; when Craft incurreth diſappointment, and Simplicity findeth good ſucceſs; when haughty Might is ſhattered, and helpleſs Innocence is preſerved; when the Calumnious tongue is bliſtered, the Flattering lips are cut off, the Blaſphemous throat is torn out; when bloudy Oppreſſours have bloud given them to drink, and come to welter in their own gore; an accident which almoſt continually doth happen;) when Treacherous men by their own confidents, or by themſelves are betrayed; when Retaliations of vengeance are miniſtred, extorting confeſſions like to that of Adoni-bezek, As I have done, ſo God hath requited me; deſerving ſuch exprobrations, as that of Samuel to Agag, as thy ſword hath made women childleſs, ſo ſhall thy mother be childleſs childleſs among women; grounding ſuch reflections as that concerning Antiochus, Thus the murtherer and blaſphemer having ſuffered moſt grievouſly, as he entreated other men, ſo died he a miſerable death: By ſuch Occurrences the finger of God doth point out and indicate it ſelf; they ſpeak themſelves immediately to come from that juſt God, who doth ἀνταποδιδόναι, render to men aſwerably to their doings; who payeth men their due, ſometimes in value, often in ſpecie, according to the ſtricteſt way of reckoning. He (as the Prophet ſaith) is great in counſel, and mighty in work: for his eyes are open to all the ways of the ſons of men, to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruits of his doings. This indeed is a ſort of adminiſtration moſt conformable to God's exact juſtice, and moſt conducible to his holy deſigns of inſtructing and correcting offenders. He therefore hath declared it to be his way. It is (ſaith the Prophet, directing his ſpeech to the inſtruments of Divine vengeance upon Babylon) the vengeance of the Lord: take vengeance upon her; as ſhe hath done, doe unto her. And, The day of the Lord (ſaith another Prophet concerning the like judgment upon Edom) is near upon all the heathen: (as thou haſt done, it ſhall be done unto thee; (thy reward ſhall return upon thine own head. Thereby doth God mean to declare himſelf the Judge, and Governour of men: For, I will, ſaith he in Ezekiel, doe unto them after their way, and according to their deſerts will I judge them; and they ſhall know that I am the Lord. Farther,

2 Macc. 9. 28.
Luk 14. 11.
Rom. 12 19.
Jer. 32. 19.
Pſal. 62. 12.
Jer 50 15.
51. 49.
Obad. 15.
Ezek. 35. 15.
Ezek. 7. 27.
Job 34 11.

7. Another argument of ſpecial Providence is, the Harmonious conſpiracy of various Accidents to one end or effect. If that one thing ſhould hit advantageouſly to the production of ſome conſiderable Event, it may with ſome plauſibility be attributed to Fortune, or common Providence: yet that divers things, having no dependence, or coherence one with the other, in divers places, through ſeveral times, ſhould all joyn their forces to compaſs it, cannot well otherwiſe than be aſcribed to God's ſpecial Care wiſely directing, to his own Hand powerfully wielding thoſe concurrent inſtruments to one good purpoſe. For it is beſide the nature, it is beyond the reach of Fortune, to range various cauſes in ſuch order. Blind Fortune cannot apprehend or catch the ſeaſons and junctures of things, which ariſe from the motions of cauſes in their nature indifferent and arbitrary: to it therefore no ſuch event can reaſonably be imputed. So to the bringing about our Lord's Paſſion, (that great Event, which is ſo particularly aſſigned to God's Hand,) we may obſerve the monſtrous Treachery of Judas, the ſtrange Malignity of the Jewiſh Rulers, the prodigious Levity of the people, the wonderfull Eaſineſs of Pilate, with other notable accidents, to have jumped in order thereto. So alſo that a malicious Traitour ſhould conceive kindneſs toward any, that he ſhould be miſtaken in the object of his favour, that he ſhould expreſs his mind in a way ſubject to deliberate examination, in terms apt to breed ſuſpicion where the Plot was laid; that the Counſellours ſhould deſpiſe it, and yet not ſmother it; that the King inſtantly, by a light darted into his mind, ſhould deſcry it: theſe things ſo happily meeting, may argue God (who mouldeth the hearts, who guideth the hands, who enlightneth the minds of men) to have been engaged in the detection of This day's black Conſpiracy.

— ἃ κατὰ τῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ μαρτύρων πρῶτος ἐξεῦρε κολαστήρια, ταῦθ' ὑπομείναντα δικαιοτάτῃ ψήφῳ Euſeb. lib. I. de Vit. Conſt. de Maximino (ſub finem.) Is oculos qui eruerat Chriſtianis, ipſe viſu orbatus.

Such are ſome characters of ſpecial Providence: each of which ſingly appearing in any occurrence, would in a conſiderate man breed an opinion thereof; each of them being very congruous to the ſuppoſition of it; no ſuch appearances being otherwiſe ſo clearly and cleverly explicable, as by aſſigning the Divine Hand for their principal cauſe. But the connexion of them all in one Event (when divers odde accidents doe befall at a ſeaſonable time, according to exigency for the publick benefit, the preſervation of Princes, the ſecurity of God's people, the protection of right, the maintenance of truth and piety, according to the wiſhes and prayers of good men, with proper retribution and vengeance upon the wretched deſigners of miſchief; ſuch a complication, I ſay, of theſe marks in one Event) may throughly ſuffice to raiſe a firm perſuaſion, to force a confident acknowledgment concerning God's Providence, in any conſiderate and ingenuous perſon: it readily will diſpoſe ſuch perſons upon any ſuch occaſion to ſay, This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

Vid Diod. Sic. lib. 15. p 482.

Pſal. 118. 23.

Notwithſtanding therefore any obſcurity or intricacy that ſometime may appear in the courſe of Providence, notwithſtanding any general exceptions that may by perverſe incredulity be alledged againſt the conduct of things, there are good marks obſervable, whereby (if we are not very blockiſh, drowzy, ſupine, lazy, or froward; if we will conſider wiſely, with induſtrious attention and care, with minds pure from vain prejudices, and corrupt affections) we may diſcern and underſtand God's doing. Which to doe is the Firſt Duty ſpecified in my Text: upon which having inſiſted ſo largely, I ſhall (hoping you will favour me with a little patience) briefly touch the reſt.

Εἰ μὴ σημεῖα ϗ θαύματα, ἀλλ' ἐοικότα σημείοις πράγματα, δείγματα τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ προνοίας, ϗ ἀντιλήψεως ἀφάτου. Chryſ. ad Olymp. Ep. 1.

II. It is the Duty of us all, upon ſuch remarkable occurrences of Providence, to fear God: All men, 'tis ſaid, ſhall fear. It is our Duty in ſuch caſes to be affected with all ſorts of fear; with a fear of awfull dread, with a fear of hearty reverence, with a fear of ſober caution; yea, ſometimes with a fear of dejecting conſternation. When God doth appear clad with his robes of vengeance and zeal, denouncing and diſcharging judgment; when he repreſenteth himſelf fearfull in praiſes, terrible in his doings toward the children of men, working terrible things in righteouſneſs; it ſhould ſtrike into our hearts a dread of his glorious Majeſty, of his mighty Power, of his ſevere Juſtice, of his glorious and fearfull Name: it ſhould inſtill into our minds a reverence of his excellent Wiſdom, his exceeding Goodneſs, his perfect Holineſs: it ſhould breed in our Souls a ſolicitous care of diſpleaſing and provoking him: it ſhould cauſe us in our hearts to ſhake and tremble before him. Then is that of the Pſalmiſt to be put in practice, Let all the earth fear the Lord, let all inhabitants of the world ſtand in awe of him. Tremble thou earth at the preſence of the Lord, at the preſence of the God of Jacob. Such diſpenſations are in their nature declarative of thoſe Divine Attributes which doe require ſuch affections: they are ſet before our eyes to caſt us into a very ſerious and ſolemn frame; to abaſh, and deterr us from offending, by obſerving the danger of incurring puniſhments like to thoſe which we behold inflicted upon preſumptuous tranſgreſſours; upon thoſe who doe hainouſly violate Right, or furiouſly impugn Truth, or profanely deſpiſe Piety; who earneſtly proſecute wicked enterpriſes; who perſecute the friends of God with outrageous violence, or treacherous ſubtlety. Upon infliction of ſuch puniſhments, All the people ſhall hear, and fear, and doe no more preſumptuouſly, ſaith God himſelf, declaring the nature and drift of them. They doe plainly demonſtrate, that there is no preſuming to eſcape being detected in our cloſe machinations by God's All-ſeeing Eye; being defeated in our bold attempts by God's All-mighty Hand; being ſorely chaſtiſed for our iniquity & 13. 11.

Job 37. 22.
Pſal. 52. 6.
& 68. 35.
Dan. 6. 26.
Iſa. 59. 17.
Exod 15. 11.
Pſal. 66. 3. 5.
& 65. 5.
(130. 3.)
Deut. 28. 58.
& 10. 17.

Iſa. 66. 2.
Pſal. 33. 8.
114. 7.

Deut. 17. 13.
& 13. 11.
& 19. 20.

quity by God's impartial Judgment. Extremely blind and ſtupid therefore muſt we be, or monſtrouſly ſturdy and profane, if ſuch experiments of Divine Power and Juſtice doe not awe us, and fright us from ſin. When the Lion roareth, who will not fear? when the trumpet is blown in the city, ſhall not the people be afraid? Shall he at whom the mountains quake, and the hills melt; whoſe indignation the nations are not able to abide; at whoſe wrath the earth doth ſhake and tremble; at whoſe reproof the pillars of heaven are aſtoniſhed; ſhall he viſibly frown, ſhall his wrath flame out, ſhall he ſhake his rod of exemplary vengeance over us, and we ſtand void of ſenſe or fear? If ſo, then ſurely a brutiſh dotage, or a Gigantick ſtoutneſs doth poſſeſs us.

Hoſ. 11. 10.
Amos 3. 6, 8.
Nah 1. 5.
Jer 10. 10.
Pſal. 104. 32.
& 18. 7 & 76.
8 & 143. 2.
Job 26. 11.
(Iſa 64. 3.
Ezek. 21 10.
Iſa. 25. 3.
& 59. 18, 19)

III. We are in ſuch caſes obliged to declare God's work: that is, openly to acknowledge and avow, to applaud and celebrate the ſpecial Providence of God, with his adorable perfections diſplayed in ſuch Events; to the glory of God's Name, in expreſſion of our reverence and gratitude toward him, for the common edification of men; for which uſes they greatly ſerve, to which purpoſes they are deſigned. We ſhould not view ſuch providential occurrences, like dumb beaſts, with a dull or careleſs ſilence, as if we did not mind them, or were not concerned in them: we ſhould not ſuppreſs or ſtifle the knowledge of them in our breaſts, as if they were barely matters of private conſideration and uſe: we ſhould not let our obſervation and reſentment of them be fruitleſs, ſo as to yield no honour to God, no benefit to man. But we ſhould propagate and convey them into others: in ſo loud a tone, in ſo lively a ſtrain we ſhould vent them, as thereby to excite the notice, to enflame the affections of all men within the reach of our voice; provoking them to conſpire with us in acknowledgment of Gods Power and Wiſdom, in acclamation to his Juſtice and Goodneſs. This is the due improvement of our Glory; that peculiar excellency, wherein chiefly (except in our Reaſon) we doe ſurpaſs all creatures; that without which our Reaſon it ſelf is more than half unprofitable; that whereby we put our beſt Member to its beſt uſe. For this we have the devout Pſalmiſt his pious Reſolutions, his exemplary Performances, his zealous Wiſhes, his earneſt Exhortations to guide and move us. I will ſpeak of the glorious honour of thy Majeſty, and of thy wondrous works. Men ſhall ſpeak of the might of thy terrible acts; and I will declare thy greatneſs. They ſhall ſpeak of the glory of thy Kingdom, and talk of thy power. So did he ſignifie his Reſolution. I have not hid thy righteouſneſs within my heart; I have declared thy faithfulneſs and thy ſalvation: I have not concealed thy loving-kindneſs and thy truth from the great congregation. So his conſcience teſtified of his Practice. O that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſs, and for his wonderfull works to the children of men: that they would offer the ſacrifice of thankſgiving and declare his works with gladneſs. So doth he pour forth his Deſire. O clap your hands all ye people, ſhout unto God with the voice of triumph. Sing unto the Lord, bleſs his Name: ſhew forth his ſalvation from day to day. Declare his glory among the heathen, his wonders among all people. Come and ſee the works of God —— Sing forth the honour of his Name, make his praiſe glorious. O give thanks unto the Lord, call upon his Name; make known his deeds among the people. So doth he ſummon, ſo doth he urge us to this practice; and in his deportment we may ſee our Duty.

Pſal. 57. 8.

Pſal 145. 5, 6. 11.
(& 77. 12.
& 9. 14.)

Pſal 40 10.

Pſal 107. 8, 15, 21, 22, 31.

Pſal. 47. 1.
95. 2, 3.
96. 3.
105. 2.
66. 5, 2.
(Pſal. 66. 16.)
Pſal. 105. 1.

IV. It is peculiarly the Duty and practice of good men upon ſuch occaſions to feel, and to expreſs religious Joy. The righteous ſhall be glad in the Lord. Good men indeed then have great matter, and much cauſe, on many accounts, to be glad.

It becometh them to rejoyce, as having an univerſal complacence in God's proceedings, as gratefully reliſhing all diſpenſations of Providence. They, as pious, are diſpoſed to bleſs and praiſe God for all things incident, and cannot therefore but rejoyce; Joy being an inſeparable companion of Gratitude and Praiſe. Hence, Light is ſown for Pſal. 97. 11. the righteous, and gladneſs for the upright in heart. Hence The voice of 118. 15. ſalvation and rejoycing is in the tabernacles of the righteous. Hence, Pſal. 33. 1. Rejoyce in the Lord, O ye righteous: for praiſe is comely for the upright; is an exhortation backed with a very good reaſon,

They cannot but find ſatisfaction in obſerving God's Providence notably diſcovered, to the confirmation of their faith, and cheriſhing their hopes; together with the conviction of infidelity, and confuſion of Pſal. 33. 21. profaneneſs. Our heart (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) ſhall rejoyce in him; be- Pſal. 13. 5. cauſe we have truſted in his Holy Name. I have truſted in thy mercy, & 107. 42. my heart ſhall rejoyce in thy ſalvation. The righteous ſhall ſee it, and re- joyce; and all iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth.

It is to them no ſmall pleaſure, to behold God's holy Perfections illuſtriouſly ſhining forth; and the Glory of him (who is the principal object of their love, their reverence, their hope and confidence) to be Pſal 97. 12. conſpicuouſly advanced. (Rejoyce, ſaith the Pſalmiſt) O ye righteous, & 30. 4. and give thanks at the remembrance of his holineſs. Zion heard, and was Pſal 97. 8, 9 glad, and the daughters of Judah rejoyced, becauſe of thy judgments, O & 48. 11. Lord. For thou, Lord, art high above all the earth.

It is to them ground of exceeding comfort, to receive ſo clear pledges of God's Love and Favour, his Truth and Fidelity, his Bounty and Munificence toward them, expreſſed in ſuch watchfull care over them, ſuch protection in dangers, ſuch aid in needs, ſuch deliverance from miſ-chiefs vouchſafed to them. Such benefits they cannot receive from God's hand, without that chear-fulneſs which always doth adhere to gratitude. I Pſal. 13 6. will (ſaith David) ſing unto the Lord, becauſe he Pſal. 63. 7. hath dealt bountifully with me. Becauſe thou haſt been my helper, there- Pſal. 71. 23. fore in the ſhadow of thy wings I will rejoyce. My lips ſhall greatly re-
31. 7 joyce in thee, and my Soul, which thou haſt redeemed. I will be glad, and rejoyce in thy mercy: for thou haſt conſidered my trouble, and haſt 126. 3. known my Soul in adverſities. The Lord hath done great things for us,
5. 11 wherefore we are glad. Let all thoſe that put their truſt in thee rejoyce:
let them ever ſhout for joy, becauſe thou defendeſt them ———

Sen. de Benef. 2. 22. Cùm accipiendum judicaverimus, hilares accipiamus, profitentes gaudium, &c. Vid. ib. 30.

They are alſo greatly refreſhed with apprehenſion of the happy fruits ſprouting from ſuch diſpenſations of Providence: ſuch as are the Benefit of mankind, the Peace and Proſperity of the Civil State, the Pre-ſervation, ſettlement, enlargement, advancement of God's Church, the ſupport of Right, the ſuccour of Innocence, the maintenance of Truth, the encouragement and furtherance of Piety; the reſtraint of Violence, the diſcountenance of Errour, the correction of Vice and Impiety. In theſe things they, as faithfull ſervants of God, and real friends of goodneſs, as bearing hearty good will and compaſſion to mankind, as true lovers of their Country, as living and ſenſible members of the Church, cannot but rejoyce. Seeing by theſe things their own beſt intereſt, (which is no other than the advantage of Goodneſs,) their chief honour, (which conſiſts in the promotion of Divine Glory,) Pſal. 122. 6. their trueſt content, (which is placed in the proſperity of Sion,) are (1 Cor. 12. 26) highly furthered: how can they look on them ſpringing up without Pſal. 98. 1, 3. great delight and complacence? O ſaith the Pſalmiſt) ſing unto the Lord

Lord — for he hath done marvellous things — He hath remembred his mercy and truth toward the houſe of Iſrael: all the ends of the earth have ſeen the ſalvation of our God. And, Sing, O heavens, (crieth the Prophet) Iſa 49. 13. and be joyful, O earth, and break forth into ſinging, O ye mountains: for the Lord hath comforted his people, and will have mercy on his Pſ 96 11, 13. afflicted. And, When (ſaith he) ye ſhall ſee this, (the comfort of Iſa. 66 14. God's people,) your heart ſhall rejoyce, and your bones ſhall flouriſh like an herb: and the hand of the Lord ſhall be known toward his ſervants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

Even in the fruſtration of wicked deſigns, attended with ſevere execution of vengeance on the contrivers and abettours of them, they may have a pleaſant ſatisfaction; they muſt then yield a chearfull applauſe to Divine Juſtice. The righteous (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) ſhall rejoyce when Pſal 58 10. he ſeeth the vengeance: and, Let the wicked (ſaith he) periſh at the Job 22 19. preſence of God; but let the righteous be glad, let them rejoyce before Pſal. 68. 2, 3. God, yea let them exceedingly rejoyce. Whence at God's infliction of judgment upon Babylon, it is ſaid in Jeremy, then the heaven, and the Jer. 51. 48. earth, and all that is therein, ſhall ſing for Babylon: and at the fall of myſtical Babylon in the Apocalyps 'tis likewiſe ſaid, Rejoyce over her, Apoc. 18. 20. thou heaven, and ye holy Apoſtles and Prophets; for God hath avenged you on her. Farther,

V. The next Duty preſcribed to good men in ſuch caſe is, to truſt in God, that is, to have their affiance in God (upon all ſuch like occaſions, in all urgencies of need) ſettled, improved and corroborated thereby. This indeed is the proper end, immediately regarding us, of God's ſpecial Providence, diſcloſing it ſelf in any miraculous, or in any remarkable way; to nouriſh in well diſpoſed minds that Faith in God, (Pſal. 78. 7.) which is the root of all Piety, and ground of Devotion. Such experiments are ſound arguments to perſuade good men, that God doth govern and order things for their beſt advantage; they are powerfull incentives, driving them in all exigencies to ſeek God's help; they are moſt convincing evidences, that God is abundantly able, very willing, and ever ready to ſuccour them. They, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, that know thy Pſal. 9. 10. Name, will put their truſt in thee: for thou, Lord, haſt not forſaken them that ſeek thee. And, I (ſaith he) will abide in thy tabernacle for ever; Pſ. 61. 3, 4, 5. I will truſt in the covert of thy wings: For thou, O God, haſt heard my & 115. 9, &c. vows; thou haſt been a ſhelter for me, and a ſtrong tower from the enemy. & 130. 7. It is, indeed, a great aggravation of diffidence in God, that having taſted and ſeen that the Lord is good; having felt ſo manifeſt experience & 34. 8. of Divine goodneſs; having received ſo notable pledges of God's favourable inclination to help us; we yet will not rely upon him. As a friend, who by ſignal inſtances of kindneſs hath aſſured his good will, hath great cauſe of offence, if he be ſuſpected of unwillingneſs in a needfull ſeaſon to afford his relief: ſo may God moſt juſtly be diſpleaſed, when we, (notwithſtanding ſo palpable demonſtrations of his kindneſs) by diſtruſting him, doe in effect queſtion the ſincerity of his friendſhip, or Ecclus 2. 10. the conſtancy of his goodneſs toward us.

VI. Good men upon ſuch occaſions ſhould glory: All the upright in heart ſhall glory. Should glory, that is, in contemplation of ſuch Providences feeling ſprightly elevations of mind and tranſports of affection, they ſhould exhibit triumphant demonſtrations of ſatisfaction and alacrity. It becometh them not in ſuch caſes to be dumpiſh or demure; but jocund and crank in their humour, brisk and gay in their looks, pleaſantly flippant and free in their ſpeech; jolly and debonair in their behaviour;

haviour; every way ſignifying the extreme complacency they take in Pſ. 126. 1, &c. God's doing, and the full content they taſte in their ſtate. They with ſolemn exultation ſhould triumph in ſuch events, as in victories atchieved by the glorious Hand of god in their behalf, in approbation of their cauſe, in favour toward their perſons, for their great benefit and comfort. They may (not as proudly aſſuming to themſelves the glory due to God, but as gratefully ſenſible of their felicity ſpringing from God's favour) ſe jactare, ſe laudibus efferre, (as the Hebrew word doth ſignifie;) that is, in a ſort boaſt, and commend themſelves as very happy in their relation to God, by virtue of his protection and aid. They may (not with a haughty inſolence, or wanton arrogance, but with a ſober confidence and chearfulneſs) inſult upon baffled impiety, by their expreſſions and demeanour upbraiding the folly, the baſeneſs, the impotency and wretchedneſs thereof, in competition with the wiſdom, in oppoſition to the power of God, their friend and patron.

Pſal. 52. 6, 7. The righteous ſhall—laugh at him, or, deride him, in this manner; Loe, this is the man that made not God his ſtrength——

For ſuch carriage in ſuch caſes we have the practice and the advice of the Pſal. 44. 8. Pſalmiſt, to warrant and direct us. In God, ſaith he, we boaſt all the 92. 4. day long, and praiſe thy Name for ever. Thou, Lord, haſt made me 20. 5. glad through thy work; and I will triumph in the works of thy hands. We will rejoyce in thy ſalvation; and in the Name of our God we will ſet up our 105. 3, 2. banners. Glory ye in his holy Name: let the heart of them rejoyce that 106. 47. ſeek the Lord. Sing unto him, ſing Pſalms unto him; talk ye of all his wondrous works. Save us, O Lord our God, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy Name, and to triumph in thy praiſe. Such ſhould be the reſult (upon us) of God's mercifull Diſpenſations toward his people.

I ſhall onely farthre remark, that the word here uſed is by the Greek rendred ἐπαινεθήσονται, they ſhall be praiſed: which ſenſe the Original will bear, and the reaſon of the caſe may admit. For ſuch Diſpenſations ever doe adorn integrity, and yield commendation to good men. They declare the wiſdom of ſuch perſons, in adhering to God, in repoſing upon God's help, in embracing ſuch courſes which God doth approve and bleſs: they plainly tell how dear ſuch perſons are to God; Pſal. 126. 3. how incomparably happy in his favour, how impregnably ſafe under & 125. 1, &c. his protection: as having his infallible wiſdom, and his invincible pow- & 138. 1, &c. er engaged on their ſide. This cannot but render them admirable, and their ſtate glorious in the eyes of all men; inducing them to profeſs Pſal. 144. 15. with the Pſalmiſt, Happy is the people which is in ſuch a caſe; yea, happy & 33. 12. is that people, whoſe God is the Lord. And of ſuch a people, that decla- Pſal. 89. 16, ration from the ſame mouth is verified, In thy Name ſhall they rejoyce 17. all the day long, and in thy righteouſneſs ſhall they be exalted: For thou art the glory of their ſtrength, and in thy favour their horn ſhall be exalted.

Such are the Duties ſuggeſted in our Text, as ſuting theſe occaſions, when God in eſpecial manner hath vouchſafed to protect his people, or to reſcue them from imminent miſchiefs, by violent aſſault or by fraudulent contrivance levelled againſt them. I ſhould apply theſe particulars to the preſent caſe ſolemnized by us: But I ſhall rather recommend the application to your ſagacity, than farther infringe your patience, by ſpending thereon ſo many words as it would exact. You doe well know the Story, which by ſo many years repetition hath been impreſſed on your minds: and by reflecting thereon.

You will eaſily diſcern, how God, in the ſeaſonable diſcovery of this execrable Plot, (the maſter-piece of wicked machinations ever conceived in humane brain, or deviſed on this ſide Hell, ſince the foundation of things,) in the happy deliverance of our Nation and Church from the deſperate miſchiefs intended toward them, in the remarkable protection of Right and Truth, did ſignalize his Providence.

You will be affected with hearty reverence toward the gracious Authour of our Salvation, and with humble dread toward the juſt awarder of vengeance upon thoſe miſcreant wretches, who digged this pit, and fell into it themſelves.

You will be ready with pious acknowledgment and admiration of God's Mercy, his Juſtice, his Wiſdom, to declare and magnifie this notable Work done by him among us.

You muſt needs feel devout reſentments of Joy for the Glory ariſing to God, and the Benefits accruing to us, in the preſervation of God's Anointed, our juſt Sovereign, with his Royal poſterity: in the freeing our Country from civil Broils, Diſorders and Confuſions; from the yoaks of Uſurpation and Slavery; from grievous Extorſions and Rapines; from bloudy Perſecutions and Trials, with the like ſpawn of diſaſtrous and tragical conſequences, by this Deſign threatned upon it: in upholding our Church (which was ſo happily ſettled, and had ſo long glorioſly flouriſhed) from utter ruine: in ſecuring our profeſſion of God's Holy Truth, the truly Catholick Faith of Chriſt, (refined from thoſe droſſy alloys, wherewith the rudeneſs and ſloth of blind Times, the fraud of ambitious and covetous deſigners, the pravity of ſenſual and profane men had embaſed and corrupted it,) together with a pure Worſhip of God, an edifying adminiſtration of God's Word and Sacraments, a comely, wholeſome and moderate Diſcipline, conformable to Divine preſcription and Primitive example; in reſcuing us from having impious Errours, ſcandalous Practices and ſuperſtitious Rites, with mercileſs violence obtruded upon us: in continuing therefore to us the moſt deſirable comforts and conveniences of our lives.

You farther conſidering this ſignal teſtimony of Divine Goodneſs, will thereby be moved to hope and confide in God for his gracious preſervation from the like pernicious attempts, againſt the ſafety of our Prince and welfare of our Country, againſt our Peace, our Laws, our Religion; eſpecially from Romiſh Zeal and Bigottry, (that mint of wofull factions and combuſtions, of treaſonable conſpiracies, of barbarous maſſacres, of horrid aſſaſſinations, of inteſtine rebellions, of foreign invaſions, of ſavage tortures and butcheries, of holy Leagues and pious Frauds, through Chriſtendom, and particularly among us,) which as it without reaſon damneth, ſo it would by any means deſtroy all that will not crouch thereto.

You will, in fine, with joyous feſtivity glory and triumph in this illuſtrious demonſtration of God's Favour toward us; ſo as heartily to joyn in thoſe due acclamations of bleſſing and praiſe.

Bleſſed be the Lord, who hath not given us a prey to their teeth. Our ſoul is eſcaped as a bird out of the ſnare of the fowlers: the ſnare is broken, and we are eſcaped. Pſal. 124. 6. (68. 32.)

Allelujah; Salvation, and glory, and power unto the Lord our God: For true and righteous are his judgments. Apoc. 19. 1, 2.

Great and marvellous are thy works, O Lord God Almighty; juſt and true are thy ways, O thou King of Saints. Apoc. 15. 3.

Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, who onely doth wondrous things: And bleſſed be his glorious Name for ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen, and Amen. Pſ. 72. 18, 19.

Henry the 7ths. Chapel, July 4. 1663. at the Biſhop of Man his Conſecration.

SERMON XII.

A Conſecration Sermon.

PSAL. CXXXII. 16.

I will alſo cloath her Prieſts with ſalvation.

THE context runs thus: The Lord hath ſworn in truth unto David, he will not turn from it, Of the fruit of thy body I will ſet upon thy throne. If thy children will keep my covenant, and the teſtimony that I ſhall teach them; their children alſo ſhall ſit upon thy throne for evermore. For the Lord hath choſen Sion; he hath deſired it for his habitation. This is my reſt for ever: here will I dwell, for I have deſired it. I will abundantly bleſs her proviſion; I will ſatisfie her poor with bread. I WILL ALSO CLOATH HER PRIESTS WITH SALVATION, and her Saints ſhall ſhout aloud for joy. There will I make the horn of David to bud, &c.

If all, not onely Inaugurations of perſons, but Dedications even of inanimate things to ſome extraordinary uſe, hath been uſually attended with eſpecial ſignifications of joy and feſtival ſolemnity; with great reaſon the Conſecration of a perſon to ſo high and ſacred a Function, as that of a Chriſtian Biſhop, (that is, of a Prince, or Principal Paſtour in God's Church,) requires moſt peculiar teſtimonies of our gratulation and content: the face of things ought then to be ſerene and chearfull; the thoughts of men benign and favourable; the words comfortable and auſpicious, that are uttered upon ſuch occaſion. And that ours at preſent ſhould be ſuch, the ſubject as well as the ſeaſon of our Diſcourſe doth require. Words few, but pregnant, and affording ample matter for our beſt affections to work upon: and which more particularly will engage us, both to a hearty thankfulneſs for paſt Benefits, and to a confident expectation of future Bleſſings; while they acquaint us with the ancient exhibition of a gracious Promiſe, re-mind us of the faithfull performance thereof hitherto, and aſſure us of its certain accompliſhment for the future. The occaſion whereof was this.

King David, moved by a devout inclination to promote God's Honour, and benefit the Church, had vowed to build a magnificent Temple, imploring God's propitious concurrence with, and approbation of his deſign. Whereupon Almighty God not onely declares his acceptance of that pious reſolution, but rewards it with a bountifull Promiſe, conſiſting of two parts; one conditional, relating to David's Children and poſterity, that they in an uninterrupted ſucceſſion ſhould for ever enjoy the Royal dignity, in caſe they did conſtantly perſiſt in obſerving his Covenant, and the Teſtimonies that he ſhould teach them; the other more abſolute, that however, what he chiefly intended concerning God's eſtabliſhed Worſhip and the perpetual welfare of the Church, God would have an eſpecial care that it ſhould fully and certainly be accompliſhed: that he would for ever fix his reſidence in Sion; that he would protect and proſper it, and all that did belong thereto; eſpecially thoſe that did moſt need his favour and aſſiſtence, the Poor, the Prieſts and the Saints, (or gentle ones.) חסידי This is briefly the importance of the general Promiſe wherein is comprehended that particular one whereon we are to treat: and in which we may obſerve,

1. The Promiſer, I.
2. The Perſons who are eſpecially concerned in the promiſe, her Prieſts.
3. The Thing promiſed, cloathing with ſalvation.

I. I ſay, the Promiſer, I: that is, the Lord; the moſt true, the moſt conſtant, the moſt powerfull God; moſt true and ſincere in the declaration of his purpoſe, moſt conſtant and immutable in the proſecution, moſt powerfull and uncontrollable in the perfect execution thereof: whoſe words are right, and all whoſe works are done in truth: who will Pſal. 33. 4. not break his covenant, nor alter the thing that is gone out of his lips: Pſal. 89. 34. whoſe counſel ſhall ſtand, and who will doe all his pleaſure. Iſa. 46. 10. Theſe glorious Attributes and Perfections of his (ſo often celebrated in Holy Writ) doe ground our reliance upon all God's promiſes, and doe oblige us (notwithſtanding the greateſt improbabilities or difficulties objected) to believe the infallible performance of this.

II. The Perſons whom the Promiſe mainly regards, her Prieſts. Prieſts, that is, perſons peculiarly devoted to, and employed in Sacred matters; diſtinguiſhed expreſsly from the Poor, (that is, other meek and humble perſons;) and from the Saints, (that is, all other good and religious men.) And, her Prieſts; that is, the Prieſts of Sion: of that Sion which the Lord hath choſen; which he hath deſired for his permanent habitation; which he hath reſolved to reſt, and reſide in for ever. Contrà, 2 Chro. 7. 21. Whence it plainly enough follows, that the Prieſts and Paſtours of the Chriſtian Church are hereby, if not ſolely, yet principally deſigned. Which interpretation, becauſe it is in a manner the foundation of our ſubſequent Diſcourſe, and by ſome it may perhaps not be readily admitted, I ſhall endeavour farther to confirm by theſe few Arguments.

1. Becauſe the Covenant here mentioned is not (as to the main pa thereof) of a conditional or temporary nature, but abſolute and perpetual; and muſt therefore be underſtood to reſpect the Chriſtian Church; Vide 2 Chron. 7. 16. (that of the Jews being long ſince rejected, their Temple demoliſhed, their Sion utterly forſaken.) For although one particular contained therein, concerning the continual ſucceſſion of David's poſterity in the Regal authority over Iſrael, hath a condition explicitly annexed; (and, conſequently, the effects depending upon the performance of that condition were contingent and mutable;) yet all the reſt of this Covenant (or Promiſe) is conceived in terms peremptory, and expreſsly imimporting perpetuity. This is my reſt for ever, עדי עד that is, (as the Greek Tranſlatours render it,) εἰς αἰῶνα τοῦ αἰῶνος, (in ſeculum ſeculi,) that is, to the end of this world; as εἰς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων denotes the end of all worlds, or the moſt perfect ſempiternity. And that it doth really in this caſe denote a proper and unlimited perpetuity, is alſo evident by thoſe explications thereof in the 89th. Pſalm, (where the very ſame Covenant is, as to ſome parts thereof, more largely recorded.) Once Verſe 35, 36, 37. have I ſworn by my Holineſs, that I will not lie unto David: His ſeed ſhall endure for ever, and his throne as the Sun before me: It ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever as the Moon, and as a faithfull witneſs in heaven. No words can expreſs more fully a perpetual duration, or at leaſt one co-extended with the duration of the world, than thoſe doe. And the Prophet Jeremy, referring alſo to this very Covenant, and particularly to this very clauſe thereof, thus expreſſes the matter: Thus ſaith the Lord; If you can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night; and that there ſhould not be day and night in their ſeaſon: Then may alſo my Covenant be broken with David my ſervant, that he ſhould not have a ſon to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the Prieſts, my Miniſters. But farther,

Jer. 33. 20, 21
Vid. 2 Chro. 7. 16.

2. The completion of the individual Promiſe is both by the Prophets foretold, and expreſſed by the Evangeliſts, to appertain to the times of the Goſpel. Ye heard even now the words of Jeremy, which are by him applied to thoſe times, when God would cauſe the Branch of righteouſneſs (that is, Jeſus of Nazareth, our bleſſed Saviour) to grow up unto David; who ſhould execute judgment and righteouſneſs in the land. In thoſe days (ſaith he farther) ſhall Judah be ſaved, and Jeruſalem ſhall dwell ſafely: and this is the Name wherewith ſhe ſhall be called, (or rather, which he ſhall be called, as not onely the Vulgar Latine and the Greek Interpreters, but the Chaldee alſo reade it,) THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. Likewiſe in the 55. of Iſaiah God thus invites the Gentiles; Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your ſoul ſhall live: and I will make an everlaſting covenant with you, even the ſure mercies of David: that is, I will ratifie that everlaſting Covenant, which, in your behalf, I once made with David, and will conferr on you thoſe favours which I faithfully promiſed him; relating to this very Promiſe alſo. For both in Solomon's Prayer, (2 Chron. 6.) which in all probability was indited about the ſame time, and upon the ſame occaſion with this Pſalm, and in the 89. Pſalm, the benefits of this ſame covenant are called the mercies of David. O Lord God, turn not away the face of thine anointed, remember the mercies of David thy ſervant, ſaith Solomon: and My mercy (ſaith God) will I keep with him for evermore, and my covenant ſhall ſtand faſt with him: and, My faithfulneſs and my mercy ſhall be with him; that is, my faithfull (or ſure) mercy; τὰ ὅσια πιστὰ as the LXX and S. Paul with them in the Acts, render this place of Iſaiah. And in the Song of Zachary we have one paſſage of this Promiſe cited, and applied to the times of the Goſpel: Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, who hath viſited and redeemed his people; and hath raiſed up a horn of ſalvation in the houſe of his ſervant David; as he ſpake by the mouth of his holy prophets: viz. by the mouth of this prophetical Pſalmiſt here, where 'tis ſaid, There will I make the horn of David to bud; and in the parallel Pſ. 89. In my Name ſhall his horn be exalted. To omit thoſe many places where our Saviour, in correſpondence to this promiſe, is affirmed to poſſeſs the throne of his father David, and to rule over the houſe of Jacob for ever. Moreover,

Jer. 33. 15.
Ver. 16.
Iſa. 55. 3.
2 Chro. 6. 42.
Pſal. 89. 28.
Verſe 24.
Acts 13. 34.
Luke 1. 68, 69, 70.
Verſe 24.
Vid. Luc. 1. 32. edit. Curcel.

3. That by the Sion here mentioned is not chiefly meant that material Mountain in Judea, but rather that myſtical Rock of Divine Grace and Evangelical Truth, upon which the Chriſtian Church, the onely everlaſting Temple of God, is unmovably ſeated, is very probable, (or rather manifeſtly certain,) by the Prophets conſtant acception thereof in this ſenſe, when they aſſign the character of perpetual durability thereto. As in Iſa. 60. where he thus propheſies of the Chriſtian Church; The ſons alſo of them that afflicted thee ſhall come bending unto thee, and all they that deſpiſe thee ſhall bow themſelves down at the ſoles of thy feet; and they ſhall call thee The City of the Lord, the Sion of the Holy one of Iſrael. Whereas thou haſt been forſaken, and hated, ſo that no man went through through thee ; I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations. Thou ſhalt alſo ſuck the milk of the Gentiles, and ſhalt ſuck the breaſts of Kings, &c. And the Prophet Micah, ſpeaking of the laſt days, Mic 4. 1. (that is, of the Evangelical times, when the mountain of the Houſe of the Lord ſhould be eſtabliſhed in the top of the mountains,) ſaith thus ; And Verſe 7. I will make her that halted, a remnant, and her that was caſt far off, a ſtrong nation: and the Lord ſhall reign over them in mount Sion from henceforth even for ever. And the Prophet Joel, ſpeaking of the ſame times, (when God would pour out his ſpirit upon all fleſh,) hath theſe Joel 2. 28. words*: So ſhall ye know, that I am the Lord your God, dwelling in Sion, my holy mountain: then ſhall Jeruſalem be holy, and there ſhall no* 3. 16. ſtrangers paſs through her any more. All which places no man can reaſonably doubt, and all Chriſtians doe firmly conſent to reſpect the Chriſtian Church. To which we may adde that paſſage of the Author to the Hebrews, ch. 12. v. 22. But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jeruſalem; that is, to the Chriſtian Church.

Iſa. 60. 14, 15, 16.

4. The manner of this Covenant's delivery, and confirmation by the Divine Oath, argues the inconditionate, irreverſible and perpetual conſtitution thereof: for to God's moſt abſolute and immutable Decrees this moſt auguſt and ſolemn confirmation doth peculiarly agree. So the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſeems to intimate: Wherein (ſaith he) Heb. 6. 17. God willing more abundantly to demonſtrate the immutability of his counſel, (ἐπιδεῖξαι τὸ ἀμετάθετον τῆς βουλῆς) interpoſed an oath.

We may therefore (I ſuppoſe) upon theſe grounds ſolidly and ſafely conclude, that this Promiſe doth principally belong, and ſhall therefore infallibly be made good to the Chriſtian Prieſthood to thoſe who in the Chriſtian Church, by offering ſpiritual Sacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving, by directing and inſtructing the people in the knowledge of the Evangelical Law, by imploring for and pronouncing upon them the Divine benedictions, doe bear analogy with, and ſupply the room of the Jewiſh Prieſthood.

From which diſcourſe we may by the way deduce this Corollary; That the title of Prieſt, although it did (as moſt certainly it doth not) properly and primarily ſignifie a Jewiſh Sacrificer, (or Slaughterer of beaſts,) doth yet no-wiſe deſerve that reproach which is by ſome inconſiderately, (not to ſay, prophanely,) upon that miſtaken ground, commonly, caſt upon it: ſince the Holy Scripture it ſelf, we ſee, doth here, even in that ſenſe (moſt obnoxious to exception) aſcribe it to the Chriſtian Paſtours. And ſo likewiſe doth the Prophet Iſaiah; and Iſa 66. 21. I will alſo take of them for Prieſts and for Levites, ſaith the Lord: ſpeaking (as the context plainly declares) of the Gentiles, which ſhould be converted and aggregated to God's Church. And the Prophet Jeremiah; Neither ſhall the Prieſts the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt- Jer. 33 18 offerings, and to doe ſacrifice continually. Which prophecy alſo evidently concerns the ſame time and ſtate of things; of which the Prophet Malachi thus foretells*: For from the riſing of the Sun to the going down of the* Mal. 1. 11. ſame, my Name ſhall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incenſe ſhall be offered to my Name , and a pure offering. It were deſireable therefore, that men would better conſider, before they entertain ſuch groundleſs offences, or paſs ſo uncharitable cenſures upon either words, or perſons, or things. But I proceed to the

III. Particular, which is the Matter of the Promiſe, Cloathing with ſalvation. Where we may obſerve, Firſt, That the uſual metaphor of being cloathed doth in the Sacred dialect denote a compleat endowment with, a plentifull enjoyment of, or an entire application to, that thing, or quality, with which a per-Pſal. 93. 1. ſon is ſaid to be cloathed. So is God himſelf ſaid to be cloathed with Pſal. 35. 26. majeſty and ſtrength. And David prays, that they might be cloathed & 109. 29. with ſhame and diſhonour, that did magnifie themſelves againſt him. And Ezek 26. 16. in Ezekiel, The Princes of the Iſles, being amazed by the ruine of Tyre, are ſaid to cloath themſelves with trembling. And that bitter adverſary Verſ 18. of David (in Pſalm 109.) did cloath himſelf with curſing, as with a Job 29. 14. garment. And Job avoucheth of himſelf, I put on righteouſneſs, and it cloathed me; my judgment was a robe, and a diadem. And St. Peter adviſes us to put on, or to be cloathed with, humility. Finally, Iſaiah

1 Pet. 5. 5. introduces our Saviour ſpeaking thus: I will greatly rejoyce in the Lord, Iſa. 61. 10. my ſoul ſhall be joyfull in my God: for he hath cloathed me with the gar- ments of ſalvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteouſneſs; as Iſa. 59. 17. a bridegroom decketh himſelf with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth her ſelf with her jewels. So that, (as by theſe inſtances we may diſcern) to be cloathed with ſalvation, is, to be perfectly endowed therewith; to be inveſted with it as with a garment, which wholly encloſeth and covereth the body, ſo that no part is left ungarded and unadorned thereby.

Secondly, but now what is that Salvation, with which the Prieſts of Sion ſhall be thus cloathed? I anſwer: Salvation, when it is put abſolutely, and not conjoyned with any particular object, (or term from which,) doth in the Hebrew language properly ſignifie a Deliverance from, or remotion of all ſorts of inconvenience; and, conſequently, an Affluence of all good things; and, in effect, the ſame which other languages call Felicity and Proſperity, or deſign by terms equivalent to thoſe: the Hebrews having hardly any other word ſo properly correſpondent to thoſe, as this word, Salvation. Whence that title of Saviour, and the God of Salvation, ſo often attributed to Almighty God, imports as much as, the Diſpenſer of all good gifts: the great Benefactour, Aſſiſter and Protectour of men: And to Save is promiſcuouſly uſed for, to relieve the needy, to comfort the ſorrowfull; to reſtore the ſick to his health, the priſoner to his liberty, the captive to his country; to defend the weak from injury, and the humble from contempt; to deliver the diſtreſſed from imminent danger, the innocent from unjuſt condemnation, the ſlandered from undeſerved reproach: in a word, all the effects of God's Goodneſs and Power, the whole work of the Divine Providence and Beneficence, are hereby expreſſed.

Deus Σωτὴρ, ſæpe Platoni.

We will recite one or two of thoſe many places which confirm this notion. Pſalm 85. 9. Surely his Salvation is nigh them that fear him, that glory may dwell in our land: his Salvation is nigh, that is, his loving care attends upon them, to aſſiſt and preſerve them: which in Pſal. 145. v. 19. is thus otherwiſe expreſſed; He will fulfill the deſire of them that fear him; he will hear their cry, and will ſave them. And again Pſalm 149. 4. The Lord taketh pleaſure in his people; he will beautifie the meek with Salvation: that is, he will by his good Providence diſpoſe them into a convenient and decent condition of life. And again, Pſalm 144. v. 10. It is he that giveth Salvation unto Kings; that is, by whoſe gracious diſpoſal they proſper, and are preſerved in dignity, plenty and ſafety.

I will not, by citation of places, labour to confirm ſo obvious a Notion: it may ſuffice for that purpoſe, that the ſupreme accompliſhment of all Happineſs, the enjoyment of perfect Bliſs in Heaven, is, in agreement with this Jewiſh acception of the word, moſt commonly ſtyled Salvation. But I muſt adde, that whereas Salvation may relate either to the outward eſtate of a man's body, life and fortunes , or to the internal diſpoſitions of the mind; to our preſent condition in this world, or to our future and eternal eſtate: it doth ſeem here (I ſay not, to exclude the latter altogether, yet) more directly and principally to reſpect the former, viz. that external and temporal welfare, which is conſpicuous and viſible in this world. My reaſon is, Becauſe the other parts of this Prophetical Promiſe doe, in their moſt natural acception, ſignifie that outward proſperity wherewith God would vouchſafe to bleſs his Church: that abundant benediction of her ſtore; that ſatisfying her poor with bread, that joyfull exultation of her Saints, that cloathing her enemies with ſhame, being expreſſions properly denoting a ſtate of external good weal and comfort; and in conſonance to them require, that we thus likewiſe underſtand this phraſe; the Prieſts being alſo queſtionleſs deſigned to partake in this glorious Felicity of the Church. Which is alſo confirmed by other Propheſies of the ſame tenour and intention: as particularly that in Jer. 31. concerning the recollection of Iſrael, and redemption of the Spiritual Sion, 'tis ſaid , I will ſatiate the ſoul of the Prieſts with fatneſs, and my people ſhall be ſatisfied with my goodneſs, &c. Verſ. 14.

Now, although we may adventure ſafely to interpret the declarations of Divine favour according to the moſt comprehenſive ſenſe of which the words are capable, where they are conceived: (it being the manner of the immenſely-good God to exceed rather, than to be deficient, in the performance of his word; and to ſurpaſs the expectations he hath raiſed in us, than any-wiſe to diſappoint them:) yet however, the leaſt we can imagine here promiſed to the Prieſts of Sion, will comprehend theſe three things.

1. A Free and Safe condition of life: that they be not expoſed to continual dangers of ruine; of miſerable ſufferance, or remedileſs injury: that the benefits of peace, and law, and publick protection, ſhall particularly appertain to them; ſo that their adverſaries (if any they happen to have) ſhall not be incited, by hope of reward or impunity, to hurt their perſons, rifle their goods, diſturb their quiet; but that they ſhall enjoy good degrees of ſecurity, liberty and tranquillity in this world.

2. A Proviſion of competent ſubſiſtence for them: that their condition of life be not wholly neceſſitous, or very penurious, deſtitute of convenient accommodations, or depending altogether for them upon the arbitrary benevolences of men, which is, at beſt, but a more plauſible kind of beggery; but that they ſhall be furniſhed with ſuch reaſonable ſupplies, as are requiſite to encourage them in the chearfull performance of their duty.

3. A Sutable degree of reſpect, and ſo high a ſtation among men, as may commend them to general eſteem, and vindicate them from contempt: that they be not reputed among the dregs and refuſe of the people; that their perſons be not baſe and deſpicable, their names made the objects of vulgar obloquy, their functions become proſtitute to profane irriſion; but that ſome conſiderable authority, ſome more than ordinary regard and veneration accrue unto them from the high relations which they bear, and from the ſacred buſineſs which they manage.

All this at leaſt (according to the moſt moderate interpretation of the phraſe) that abundant Salvation doth imply, wherewith God hath promiſed to inveſt the Prieſts of Sion.

We may therefore preſume, or rather not preſume, but confidently rely upon, and comfort our ſelves in the expectation of God's faithfull continuance to fulfill this Promiſe. We may aſſure our ſelves, that neither the ſecret envy of them who repine at thoſe encouragements which God's Providence hath conferred on his Prieſts, nor the open malice of thoſe that furiouſly oppugn their welfare, ſhall ever prevail to overwhelm them with extreme miſery, penury, or diſgrace; ſince no endeavour of earth or hell can ever be able to reverſe this everlaſting decree of Heaven, or to defeat that irreſiſtible power which is engaged to its execution. No inferiour force can ſtrip them naked of that Salvation, wherewith the Supreme Truth hath promiſed to cloath them.

Which confidence of ours may be improved, by conſidering the Reaſons that might induce Almighty God to reſolve, and promiſe thus favourably in behalf of his Prieſts. (For though we cannot penetrate the incomprehenſible depths of the Divine Counſel, nor ſhould ever peremptorily conclude concerning the determinate Reaſons of his Actions: yet when the wiſdom of his proceedings doth clearly approve it ſelf to our underſtandings, we ought readily to acknowledg it, and humbly to praiſe him for it.) Now the Reaſons why Divine Providence ſhould undertake to preſerve the Prieſthood in ſafety, to procure for them liberal maintenance, and to raiſe them above a ſtate of ſcorn and infamy, may be eſpecially theſe three.

1. It concerns God's Honour.
2. The Good of the Church requires ſo.
3. Equity and the reaſon of the caſe exacts it.

In proſecuting which Heads of diſcourſe, I ſhall not ſeem to you (I hope) to tranſgreſs the rules of modeſty, or decency. There be certain ſeaſons, wherein confeſſedly it is not onely excuſable, but expedient alſo, to commend one's Self; as when a man is falſly accuſed, or unjuſtly afflicted. And with greater reaſon ſometime men are allowed to praiſe the Country where they were born and bread, the Family to which they are allied, the Society to which they are more eſpecially related. And if at this time I aſſume the like liberty, the occaſion (I hope) will apologize for me. It becomes not me to be an adviſer, much leſs a reprover, in this Audience: May I therefore, with your favourable permiſſion, preſume to be a commender, or (if you pleaſe) a pleader for the welfare of this Sacred Order, although my ſelf an unworthy and inconſiderable Member thereof. I ſay therefore,

I. God's Honour is concerned in the ſafe, comfortable and honourable eſtate of his Prieſts: and that upon account of thoſe manifold relations, whereby they ſtand allied, appropriated and devoted to himſelf.

Joel 2. 17. They are in a peculiar manner his Servants. The ſervant of the Lord 2 Tim. 2. 24. (ſaith S. Paul) muſt not ſtrive, but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach. The ſervant of the Lord, who's that? are not all men God's ſervants? is not he Lord of all? Yes; but a Chriſtian Prieſt, ſuch as Timothy was, is by way of excellency ſo ſtyled. All men owe ſubjection, obedience 1 Cor. 4. 1. and homage to God: but the Prieſts are (his Ὑπηρέται, his Λειτουργοὶ) Rom. 15. 16. his Miniſters, his Officers, his immediate Attendents, his Domeſticks as it were, and menial Servants; that approach his perſon, that tread the courts of his houſe, that wear his proper badges, that are employed in his particular buſineſs. And is it then for God's honour, to ſuffer them to be abuſed, to want convenient ſuſtenance, to live in a mean and diſgracefull dondition? Would it not redound to the diſcredit of an earthly Prince, to permit, that the attendants on his Perſon, the officers of his Court, the executers of his Edicts ſhould have the leaſt injury offered them, ſhould fare ſcantly or courſely, ſhould appear in a ſordid garb? are they not therefore by eſpecial priviledges guarded from ſuch inconveniences? And ſhall the Great King and Lord of all the world be deemed leſs provident for, leſs indulgent (not to ſay leſs juſt) unto his Servants? Servants, I ſay, and thoſe not of the loweſt rank, nor appointed to the vileſt drudgeries; but ſuch as are employed in the moſt honourable charges, and are intruſted with his moſt eſpecial concernments.

They are his Stewards. (A Biſhop, ſaith S. Paul, muſt be blameleſs, as the Steward of God.) Tit. 1. 7. If the Church be Οἶκος Θεοῦ, God's houſe, or family, * as 'tis called, and the Prieſts the Οἰκονόμοι, the Stewards of * 1 Tim. 3. 15. that houſe, the Comptrollers of that family; 'tis ſurely no mean ſtation they obtain therein. The diſtribution of his bread, (the Bread of Vid. Matt. 24. 45. life, his holy Word,) and the diſpenſation of his moſt pretious Goods, 1 Cor. 4. 1. (the holy Myſteries,) are committed to their care and prudence. Who Luk. 12. 42. then (ſaith our Saviour) is that faithfull and wiſe ſteward, whom his Lord ſhall make ruler over his houſhold, to give them their portion of meat in due ſeaſon? Who but the Prieſts, who are therefore ſtyled both Προεστῶτες, Ἡγούμενοι, Κυβερνήτεις, (Preſidents, Guids, Rulers,) and Ποιμένες (Feeders or Paſtours) of the Church?

Yea they are Οἰκοδόμοι alſo, the Builders of that houſe, founding it by initial converſion, rearing it by continued inſtruction, covering and finiſhing it by ſacramental obſignation of Divine grace. As a wiſe ar- 1 Cor. 3. 10. chitect, (ſaith S. Paul) I have laid the foundation, and another builds upon it.

They are Συνεργοὶ Θεοῦ, Co-operatours with God; that manage his bu- 1 Cor. 3. 9. ſineſs, and drive on his deſigns: the Solicitours of his affairs; the Maſters of his requeſts: * his Heralds, that publiſh his Decrees, denounce * Κήρυκες. his Judgment, proclaim his Pardons, and acts of grace unto his ſubjects; that blazon his titles, and defend his rightfull authority in the world: yea, his Miniſters of State; the Miniſters (I ſay, abſit invidia,) of his moſt glorious Spiritual Kingdom; (which is peculiarly denominated the Kingdom of God;) the orderly adminiſtration of which, its advancement, its preſervation, and its enlargement, are eſpecially commended to their diligence and fidelity.

They are, laſtly, God's * Embaſſadours, delegated by him to treat of peace, and ſolicit a fair correſpondence between heaven and earth. Now then (ſaith S. Paul) we are Embaſſadours for Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you by us: we pray you in Chriſt's ſtead, be reconciled to God. 2 Cor. 5. 20. As though God did beſeech you by us; ſee, they manage God's concernments, and in a manner repreſent his perſon. At leaſt, if the Apoſtles were more properly God's Embaſſadours, the preſent Miniſters of Religion are his Agents, and Reſidents here among men, deſigned to purſue the ſame negotiations commenced by them. Now you know by the law of Nations, and common conſent of all men, all manner of ſecurity, good entertainment, and civil reſpect hath been ever acknowledged due to Embaſſadours, (and publick Miniſters:) their employment hath been eſteemed honourable, their perſons held ſacred and inviolable; and whatſoever diſcourteſie hath been ſhewed unto, or outrage committed upon them, hath been interpreted done to him from whom they derive their commiſſion, whoſe

* Vide Mal. 2. 7. For the Prieſt's lips ſhould keep knowledge, and they ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth: for he is the Meſſenger of the Lord of hoaſts.

Joh. 13. 20. What you have done to theſe, &c. Matt. 10. 40. & 25. 40. He that receiveth you receiveth him that ſent you.

perſon they repreſent. And ſo truly the bad uſage of God's Prieſts, if not directly and immediately, does yet really and truly, according to moral eſtimation, terminate on God himſelf, and reflect on his Honour, and prejudice his Religion; a due regard to which cannot be maintained, without proportionable reſpect to the Miniſters thereof. The baſeſt of the people may ſerve to be Prieſts to Jeroboam's Calves, but not become the Miniſtery of the God of Iſrael.

Doe we not ſee the reverence of Civil Government upheld more by the ſpecious circumſtances, than by the real neceſſity thereof; by the magnificent retinue, and ſplendid ornaments of Princely dignity, than by the eminent benefits of peace and juſtice ſpringing thence? Shall not (not onely the greateſt inward worth, but) the higheſt Nobility, if baſely attired, badly attended, ſlenderly accommodated, paſs unregarded, yea diſregarded by us? men being generally either unable to diſcern, or unwilling to acknowledge excellency deveſted of ſenſible luſtre. Religion therefore muſt be well habited, or it will be ill reſpected: the Prieſts muſt wear a comely (if not a coſtly) livery, or God their Maſter's reputation will be impaired in popular fancy.

1 Chron. 17. 1.

Conſider David's reaſoning; Loe, I dwell in a houſe of Cedars, but the Ark of the covenant of the Lord remaineth under Curtains; and compare ſuch diſcourſe therewith as this; and judge candidly, whether they have not ſome parity: Loe, my Attendants are clad with the fineſt purple, God's Miniſters are covered with the courſeſt ſackcloath; my People ſurfeit with dainties, his Servants pine away for ſcarcity; my Courtiers are reſpectfully ſaluted, his Prieſts ſcornfully derided; no man dare offend mine, every one may trample on his Officers.

Mal. 1. 8.

And leſt we ſhould imagine God himſelf altogether void of ſuch reſentments, or ſuch compariſons impertinent, conſider that diſdainfull expreſſion of his; If ye offer the blind for ſacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and ſick, is it not evil? Offer it now to thy governour; will he be pleaſed with thee, or accept thy perſon? ſaith the Lord of hoaſts. The ſame teſtimonies of reſpect that we ſhew our Governours, God, it ſeems, expects from us in all kinds, and may reaſonably much greater.

Deut 18. 1. 2.

Deut. 17. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12.

Nor is it a matter of ſlight conſideration, how plentifull proviſion, in the policy deviſed and conſtituted by God himſelf, was made for the Prieſts; how God aſſumes the immediate patronage of them, and appropriates the matter of their ſuſtenance unto himſelf. The Prieſts (ſaith the Law) the Levites, and all the tribe of Levi ſhall have no part nor inheritance with Iſrael; they ſhall eat the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and his inheritance. Therefore they ſhall have no inheritance among their brethren: the Lord is their inheritance. So that then (it ſeems) no man could withhold any part of the Prieſts maintenance, without ſacrilegious encroachment on God's own right, and robbing him of his due: (which is the greateſt ſecurity of an eſtate imaginable.) How likewiſe (next to the Prince) the higheſt dignity and authority was then conferr'd on the Prieſts: to them the interpretation of law, to them the deciſion of doubtfull caſes did appertain; with ſevere injunctions to comply with their determinations. See how the buſineſs is inculcated. If there ariſe a matter too hard for thee, between bloud and bloud, between plea and plea, between ſtroke and ſtroke, being matters of controverſie within thy gates; then ſhalt thou ariſe, and get thee up unto the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe: And thou ſhalt come unto the Prieſts the Levites, and unto the Judge that ſhall be in thoſe days, days, and enquire; and they ſhall ſhew thee the ſentence of judgment. And thou ſhalt doe according to the ſentence which they of that place, which the Lord ſhall chuſe, ſhall ſhew thee; and thou ſhalt obſerve to doe according to all that they inform thee. According to the ſentence of the Law which they ſhall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they ſhall tell thee, thou ſhalt doe: thou ſhalt not decline from the ſentence, which they ſhall ſhew thee, to the right hand, nor to the left. And the man that will doe preſumptuouſly, and will not hearken to the Prieſt, that ſtandeth to miniſter there before the Lord thy God, even that man ſhall die and thou ſhalt put away evil from Iſrael. Obſerve with how eminent a power God then thought fit to endow his Prieſts *.

* Καὶ γὰρ ἐπιστάται πάντων, καὶ δικασταὶ τῶν ἀμφισβητουμένων, καὶ κολασταὶ τῶν κατεγνωσμένων οἱ ἱερεῖς ἐτάχθησαν, ſaith Joſephus: The Prieſts were conſtituted ſupraviſours of all things, and Judges of controverſies, and Puniſhers of offences. 2 in Apionem

And though we are not in all caſes obliged punctually to follow thoſe political preſcriptions; yet is the reaſon of them perpetual, and the example venerable: eſpecially ſince the cuſtom of all Times, and the reaſon of all the World doth in a ſort conſpire to back it.

The firſt Prieſt we meet with in Scripture is Melchizedek; a King alſo; and ſuch a one, as the Patriarch Abraham, (a Prince alſo himſelf, and, what is ſomewhat more, juſt then a Conquerour,) in the midſt of his triumphal heights, was not aſhamed to acknowledge his ſuperiour, to honour him with a tribute of his ſpoils, and to receive a benediction from him. The next (If I miſtake not) is Potipherah, Prieſt of On, whoſe daughter was not thought by the King of Egypt an unequal match for Joſeph, his chief Favourite, and the next in dignity to himſelf in that flouriſhing Kingdom. (Though ſuch an alliance would perhaps be thought derogatory to the Worſhips of our days.) The third is Revel, or Jethro, Prieſt of Midian, the Father-in-law likewiſe of the illuſtrious Moſes; a man as of approved wiſdom, ſo doubtleſs of conſiderable dignity too. And the next to him (in order of ſtory) is the venerable Aaron, no meaner a man, than the Brother of him who was King in Jeſurun. Thus all Nations, wiſe and ignorant, civil and barbarous, were by one common inſtinct (as it were) of natural reaſon promoted, by conferring extraordinary priviledges of honour and convenience on their Prieſts, to expreſs their reverence of the Deity, and their affection to Religion.

Gen. 14.

Gen. 41. 45.

Deut. 33. 5.

Vid. Ariſtot. Pol. VII. 9. Οὔτε γὰρ γεωργὸν, οὔτε βάναυσον ἱερέα καταστατέον· ὑπὸ γὰρ τῶν πολιτῶν πρέπει τιμᾶσθαι τοὺς θεούς.

I will not ranſack the cloſets of Antiquity, nor with needleſs oſtentation produce the Egyptian Hierophantæ, the Perſian Magi, the Gauliſh Druids, the Caliphs and Mufti's of other Nations, to ſhew what preeminences of reſpect they enjoyed, what powerfull ſway they bore in their reſpective Countries; how the moſt weighty affairs, both of peace and war, were commonly directed by their oracular dictates. It ſhall ſuffice to obſerve, that the gallant Romans, (whoſe devout zeal to religion Polybius himſelf, no eſpecial friend of theirs, could not forbear to admire and applaud,) I ſay, that the moſt wiſe and valiant Romans did ſet ſo high a value upon the Prieſtly order, that if their principal Magiſtrates (the Prætors, and Conſuls themſelves,) did caſually meet with one of Veſta's Prieſts, they cauſed immediately thoſe dreadfull Rods, the enſigns of their Authority, to ſubmit; and they themſelves reſpectfully gave place, as if they meant to confeſs thoſe Prieſts in a manner their betters. Nor did they among them of the moſt noble extraction, and of the Higheſt dignity in the Commonwealth,

* Porph. περὶ ἀποχ. lib. IV. §. 16.
Cæſ. de bell. Gall. L. VI.

Lib. 6.

Πάντα τὰ πράγματα Ῥωμαίοις εἰς τὸν θεὸν ἀνήγετο. Plut. in Marcello.

Sen. in Controv.

(even after many glorious exploits atchieved by them,) ſcornfully diſdain, but did rather ambitiouſly affect to be admitted into the College of Prieſts: inſomuch that, after the diſſolution of the Republick, the Emperours thought good to aſſume the Pontifical dignity to themſelves, ſuppoſing the Office too honourable, the title too magnificent for a Subject. For they wiſely, it ſeems, and honeſtly adjudged it no debaſement of their quality, no diminution to their perſonal excellency, to be employed in the ſervice of the immortal Gods; whom they acknowledged the Patrons of their Country, the Protectours of their ſafety: Nor that they leſs deſerved of the publick, who rightly ordered their religious Devotions, than they who prudently adviſed in the Senate, or fought valiantly in the Field: for that the good ſucceſs of publick undertakings did as much, or more, depend upon the favourable diſpoſition of Divine Providence, as upon the carefull endeavour of humane induſtry.

I cannot forbear to alledge that ſo grave and pertinent ſpeech of Cicero, which is the Exordium of his Oration ad Pontifices: " Cùm multa " divinitùs, Pontifices, à majoribus noſtris inventa atque inſtituta ſunt; " tum nihil præclariùs, quàm quod vos eoſdem & Religionibus Deorum im- " mortalium, & ſummæ Reip. præeſſe voluerunt: ut ampliſſimi & clariſſi- " mi Cives Rempubl. bene gerendo, Religiones ſapienter interpretando, " Remp. conſervarent. A wholeſome and politick inſtitution he thought it, conducing to the publick good and ſafety, that the Civil and Sacred Authority ſhould be united in the ſame perſons; that it was as well for the intereſt of the State, as for the credit of Religion, that the Prieſts ſhould be men of honour, or (which is all one) honourable men Prieſts.

All which evinces plainly, that it is in no wiſe the reſult of a generous heart, (for what Nation ever produced ſo many brave ſpirits as that?) but rather proceeds from an inconſiderate delicacy of humour, (or from a profane haughtineſs of mind,) to loath, as now men doe, and deſpiſe that employment, which in its own nature is of all moſt noble and moſt beneficial to mankind. For if to be a Courtier in a particular Country, is of all others the moſt honourable relation; and to wait upon a mortal King, is accounted a moſt worthy function: to be peculiarly God's Servant, and in Religious addreſſes immediately to attend on him, muſt conſequently be the moſt excellent preferment in the World, which is God's Kingdom. And if to ſupply a man's bodily needs, to reſtore his liberty, to ſave his life, be works of generous beneficence: how much more is it ſo, by good conduct and inſtruction of men, to adorn their Souls with Vertue, to free them from the bondage of Sin, to reſcue them from eternal ruine?

Itáne plùs decet hominis, quàm Dei famulum nominari? ac terreni quàm cæleſtis Regis officialem, altioris ducitur dignitatis? Qui Clero militiam, forum anteponit Eccleſiæ, divinis profectò humana, cæleſtibus præferre terrena convincitur. Bern. Epiſt. 78.

Our magnanimous Anceſtours, who erected as well trophees of their invincible courage abroad, as monuments of their incomparable piety at home, and equally by both did purchaſe immortal renown to their ingratefull poſterity, (for not to imitate good example, is the greateſt ingratitude,) they, I ſay, were otherwiſe diſpoſed; to whoſe honeſt Devotion we owe thoſe handſome priviledges, and thoſe competent revenues which the Prieſthood ſtill enjoys; and which are ſo maligned by this untoward age, not leſs degenerate in ſpirit, than corrupt in manners: when all Wiſdom, and Vertue, and Religion, are almoſt in moſt places grown ridiculous: when the ſerious uſe of Reaſon is become (in vulgar opinion) the moſt impertinent and inſignificant thing in the world: when Innocence is reputed a mere defect of Wit and weakneſs of Judgment; Integrity a fond pertinacity of humour; Conſtancy of mind and Gravity of demeanour, a kind of ſullen moroſity or uncouth affectation of ſingularity; and all ſtrict practice of Chriſtian Duty incurrs the imputation of ſome new-found opprobrious name, one or other. No wonder then, when Religion it ſelf hath ſo much decayed in its love and eſteem, if the Prieſts, its profeſſed Guardians, doe partake in its Fortune. Nor is it to be feared, but that, when the predominant vanities of the Age are ſomewhat decocted, and men grow weary of their own inconvenient follies; when-ever (not a fierce zeal for ſome whimſical Model, or ſome paradoxical Opinion, but) a ſober eſteem of, and a cordial affection to Vertue and genuine Piety doe begin to revive in the breaſts of men; the love and reverence of the Clergy will return. For it will be ever true, what was once ſaid, (though dictated onely from the reaſon and experience of a Heathen) Qui bonâ fide colit Deos, amat & Sacerdotes; He that ſincerely worſhips God, will heartily love his Prieſts. But not to inſiſt longer on this Reaſon.

Statius, Epiſt. Dedic. in V. lib. Sylvarum.

II. The Good of the Church requires, that the Prieſthood be well protected, well provided for, and well regarded. That men be converted from iniquity, and induced to the ſincere practice of Vertue, is the chief Good of the Church, that to which the Favour of God is annexed, and upon which the Salvation of Souls doth rely. And this Good mainly depends, partly upon the due execution of the Prieſtly office, partly upon the fit diſpoſition of the people to comply therewith: and to both thoſe effects the comfortable eſtate of the Prieſthood is conducible and requiſite. The Prieſt muſt be capable to inſtruct with advantage; and the people diſpoſed to learn with readineſs: He muſt lead, and they follow chearfully in the paths of righteouſneſs. Which alacrity how can he be Maſter of, whoſe mind care and grief, the inſeparable companions of a needy eſtate, doe continually diſtract and diſcompoſe? whoſe ſpirit is dejected with conſtant regret and frequent diſappointments? Can he be free and expedient in the diſcharge of his duty, who is perplexed with the difficulties, and encumbred with the varieties of ſecular buſineſs, (ſuch as the exigencies of a narrow condition doe neceſſarily induce?) No: few there be, that, with Epictetus, can philoſophate in ſlavery; or, like Cleanthes, can draw water all the day, and ſtudy moſt of the night.

The Prieſts are bound, (for the propagation of truth and right, and for the reclaiming of men from errour and ſin, that is, for the moſt important good of the Church,) as the Apoſtles are often related to have done, παῤῥησιάζεσθαι, to ſpeak all out; (or to uſe an unconfined liberty of ſpeech;) to exhort to the practice of Vertue, as our Saviour did, μετ' ἐξουσίας, with licence and authority; to deterr from Vice, as S. Paul injoyns Titus, μετὰ πάσης ἐπιταγῆς, with an all-commanding and imperious ſtrain; and, (as thoſe faithfull brethren did, encouraged by S. Paul's example) τολμᾶν ἀφόβως λαλεῖν τὸν λόγον, to dare undauntedly to utter the word of truth: they are obliged to deal impartially with all, to flatter no man; to admoniſh, yea and (with prudence ſeaſonably) to reprove the greateſt of men; not to reſpect the perſons of the rich, nor to dread the faces of the moſt terrible among men. And how ſhall this neceſſary courage be engendred, be cheriſhed, be preſerved in the breaſt of him who grovels upon the ground, and crouches under the depreſſing loads of want and diſgrace? What engines are able to raiſe the ſpirits of men above the ordinary fountains from which they ſpring,

Acts 9. 27. & 14 3. & 19. 8.
Epheſ. 6. 19. &c.
Luk. 4. 32.
Tit. 2. 15.
Phil. 1. 14.

——plurima ſunt quæ
Non audent homines pertuſâ dicere lænâ.
Juven. Sat. 5.

Αἰδώς τοι πρὸς ἀνολβίῃ, θάρσος δὲ πρὸς ὄλβῳ. Heſ. 1. 317.

Πρὸς ἅπαντα δειλὸς ὁ πένης ἐστὶ πράγματα, Καὶ πάντας αὑτοῦ καταφρονεῖν ὑπολαμβάνει. Menand.

their fortunes? what props can ſuſtain them at that due pitch, deſtitute of ſolid ſtrength, wealth and reſpect? With what face ſhall a pittiful underling encounter the ſolemn looks of an oppreſſing Grandee? with what hope of ſucceſs in his forlorn habit ſhall he adventure to check the vicious extravagancies of a ruffling gallant? Will he dare to contradict the opinion, or to diſallow the practice of that wealthy, or this powerfull neighbour, by whoſe alms, it may be, he is relieved, and ſupported by his favour?

But admit it poſſible a man may be both extreamly indigent, and ſufficiently reſolute: (that is, ſtrong without food, and fat by digeſting the thin air:) with what regard then ſhall his free and faithfull advice be entertained? Shall not his moderate confidence be accounted impudence; his open ſincerity of ſpeech be ſtyled unmannerly preſumption; his minding others of their duty adjudged a forgetfulneſs of his own condition, or a diſorderly tranſgreſſing the due limits thereof? If he be not aſhamed of the truth, will not the truth be aſhamed of him? Shall he not prejudice more by the meanneſs of his garb, than further by the force of his reaſon, that good cauſe which he maintains? Will men reſpect his words, whoſe perſon they deſpiſe? will they be willingly counſelled, or patiently reproved by him, whom they eſteem, yea, whom they plainly ſee, ſo much their inferiour? No: the ſame words, which proceed from the mouths of men in eminent dignity, are not the ſame whem they are uttered by thoſe of baſe degree. Weak and ineffectual are the moſt eloquent harangues of beggarly Oratours; obſcure like themſelves and unobſerved the moſt notable dictates of poor mercenary pedants. The authority of the ſpeaker doth uſually more incline, than the weight of the matter. It was the obſervation of the wiſe Son of Sirach: When a rich man ſlips, he hath many helpers; he ſpeaketh things not to be ſpoken, and yet men juſtifie him: the poor man miſcarried, and they farther rebuked him; he ſpake diſcretely, and yet could have no place. When a rich man ſpeaketh, every man holdeth his tongue; and his words they extoll to the clouds: but if the poor man ſpeak, they ſay, Who is this? and if he ſtumble, they will help to overthrow him. And Solomon himſelf notes the ſame: The poor man's wiſedom is deſpiſed, and his words are not heard. Not onely thoſe that ſwell with pride, and ſwim in plenty, but even the meaneſt of the people will be apt to contemn his inſtructions, whom they perceive in few or no circumſtances of life to excell them. If the Preacher's condition be not, as well as his pulpit, ſomewhat elevated above the loweſt ſtation, few will hear him, fewer mind his words, very few obey him. Job's caſe deſerves well to be conſidered. While he flouriſhed in wealth and reputation, all men attended to his counſell, and admired his diſcourſe. The Princes (ſaith he) refrained talking, and laid their hand on their mouth: The Nobles held their peace, and their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth. When the ear heard me, then it bleſſed me; and when the eye ſaw me, it gave witneſs to me. Unto me men gave ear, and waited, and kept ſilence at my counſell. After my words they ſpake not again, and my ſpeech dropped upon them. So officiouſly attentive were all men to Job in his proſperity. But when the ſcale was turn'd, and he became depreſſed in eſtate, no man minded either him or his diſcourſe; except it were to deſpiſe and ſcorn both. But now (ſaith he) they that are younger than I have me in deriſion, whoſe fathers I would have diſdained to

Τὸ δ' ἀξίωμα, κἂν κακῶς λέγῃ, τὸ σὸν πείσει; λόγος γὰρ ἔκ τ' ἀδοξούντων ἰὼν, κἀκ τῶν δοξούντων, αὐτὸς, οὐ ταυτὸν σθένει. Eurip. in Hecuba.

Ecclus 13. 22, 23.

Κάλλιστα Μουσῶν φθέγγεται πλουτῶν ἀνήρ. Eccles 9. 16.

Job 29 9, 10. 11, 21, 22.

Job 30. 1, 9. 10. 11.

to have ſet with the dogs of my flock. I am their ſong, yea, I am their by-word. They abhor me, they fly far from me, and ſpare not to ſpit in my face: Becauſe he hath looſed my cord, and afflicted me. If Job, a perſon who ſo equally and moderately, yea, * ſo humbly and courteouſly and bountifully uſed his proſperity, as we find he did, was notwithſtanding in his adverſity ſo generally ſlighted and abhorred; what ſhall their lot be who never enjoyed thoſe advantages? what regard ſhall their wholeſome advice find? what efficacy their moſt pathetical exhortations obtain? what paſſion their faint breath raiſe in mens benummed hearts? No more, certainly, than their mean condition ſhall procure among men either of friendſhip or eſteem.

Prov. 14. 20. The poor is hated even of his own neighbour: but the rich hath many friends.

* c. 30. 25.

We ſee therefore how Almighty God, that he might conciliate credit unto, and infuſe a perſuaſive energy into the words of his Prophets and Apoſtles, was pleaſed to dignifie them with extraordinary gifts of foretelling future events, and doing miraculous works: their Doctrine, it ſeems, (though of it ſelf moſt reaſonable and plauſible,) being not ſufficient to convince the hearers, without ſome remarkable excellency in the Teachers, challenging the people's awfull regard, and exciting their attention. Otherwiſe how pittifully-ſcant a draught thoſe poor fiſhers of men had caught by the common allurements onely of innocent life and rational diſcourſe, I leave you to imagine. And where ſuch extraordinary commendations are wanting, is it not reaſonable that the need of them ſhould be ſupplied by ordinary and probable expedients?

I might farther adde, how a neceſſitous and deſpicable eſtate doth commonly not onely diſturb the minds and deject the ſpirits of men; but diſtempereth alſo their Souls and vitiateth their manners; rendring them not onely ſad and anxious, ſlaviſh and timorous, but greedy alſo and covetous, peeviſh and mutinous, rude and ignorant: engages them in ſordid company, and tempts them to unworthy courſes. From which one cauſe how ſcandalous effects, and how prejudicial to the Church's both honour and ſafety, have proceeded, I need not for to ſay, ſince wofull experience too loudly proclaims it.

I might adde moreover, that the Prieſts doe confer to the good of the State; which is ſecured and advanced by the ſincere inſtruction of men in duties of Obedience, Juſtice and Fidelity; and by maintenance of good Conſcience among men. So that if things be rightly conſidered, it will be hard to find a better Commonwealths-man, than a good Miniſter.

Seeing therefore the good of the Church, upon various accounts, is ſo much concerned in the Prieſts encouragement, welfare and reſpect; 'tis very fitting they ſhould have them. Which conſideration I conclude with that ſerious admonition of the Apoſtle to the Hebrews; wherein the ſubſtance of what hath been ſpoken on this point is contained: Obey your rulers, (or guides,) and ſubmit to them; for they watch for your ſouls, as they that are to give an account: that they may doe it with joy, and not with complaint; for this is unprofitable for you. Ἀλυσιτελὲς γὰρ τοῦτο· that is, for this pays no taxes, quits no ſcores; turns to no account, is nowiſe advantageous for you; but rather (for there is a μείωσις in thoſe words) is hurtfull and detrimental to you. But farther, μὴ στενάζοντες.

Heb. 13. 17.

III. Common Equity, and the Reaſon of the caſe exacts, that ſafety, competent ſubſiſtence, and fitting reſpect be allowed to the Prieſts. If you conſider their Perſonal qualities; who, I pray, doe [commonly] better deſerve thoſe advantages than they? Thoſe qualities, I ſay which reſult from a liberal, a ſober, a modeſt education, in the Schools of Wiſdom, dom, and under the influences of good diſcipline. If Birth (that is, at beſt, an imaginary relation to the gallantry of an Anceſtour) entitle men to honour; if the cheap favours of Fortune be ſo highly prized and admired; if Riches (that is, the happy reſults of induſtry in trivial matters) doe eaſily purchaſe reſpect: what may not they pretend to, whoſe conſtant (and not always unſucceſsfull) endeavour it hath been to deſerve well, to cultivate their minds, and regulate their manners?

Vide Orig. contra Celſ. l. 3. pag. 129.
Mal. 2. 7.

True worth indeed is not confined to any particular order of men; yet I ſhould wrong none, by ſaying it is no where more plentifully to be found than in this. What is it that doth advance men's nature, that adorns their minds, that commends their perſons to eſpecial regard? Is it Knowledge? The Prieſts lips preſerve it; their diſcourſe doth diffuſe it. Is it Vertue? Whence have more or greater examples thereof proceeded than from them? Is it Piety? It is their proper buſineſs, it hath been always (in ſome meaſure) their care to promote it: That ignorance and barbarity, diſſoluteneſs and irreligion have not long ſince, like a deluge, overſpread the face of the world, none, I ſuppoſe, will be ſo unjuſt, as to deny in greateſt part due to their vigilant endeavours. Even thoſe improvements of Wit and Eloquence, which are employed to their diſgrace and diſadvantage, muſt be acknowledged originally derived from them.

Epiſt. 82.

Faults they have had, and will always have; for they are Men, and ſubject to the common imperfections of mortal nature: but that, perhaps, leſs and fewer than any other diſtinct ſort of men; that as it is their duty, ſo it hath been their practice, to excell in Vertue; and that they have commonly in effect made good S. Ambroſe his words, Debet præponderare vita ſacerdotis, ſicut præponderat gratia; were not difficult to demonſtrate, if ſeemly to make compariſons, or to inſiſt upon ſo invidious a ſubject, Nor, were they greater than ever really they have been, or than ever malice could miſrepreſent them, ſhould it be therefore equal, that the miſcarriages of ſome ſhould derogate from the reputation, or prejudice the welfare of the whold Order.

Heb. 13 17.

But to wave this plea; conſider their Employment. Is there any office more laborious, more vexatious than theirs; accompanied with more weariſome toil, more ſolicitous care, more tedious attendence? They are deſervedly called Watchmen, being conſtrained to ſtand always on the gard, to be always wakefull, attentive, and ready to warn the people of approaching dangers: and Shepherds likewiſe, being forced to endure the various hardſhips of that uneaſie life, the inconveniences of all weathers, the nipping froſts, and ſweltry heats, and all diverſities of irkſome travels; they muſt feed, they muſt guide, they muſt defend; they muſt ſeek the loſt, and reduce the ſtraying ſheep. What aſſiduity of ſtudy, what earneſt contention of Soul are they obliged to uſe, in the continual inſtruction, exhortation and reprehenſion of the people; in rectifying their judgments, ſatisfying their ſcruples, removing the prejudices, bearing their infirmities, and ſympathizing with their afflictions? 'Tis they that are engaged with all their might to withſtand the prevailing encroachments of Iniquity, to ſtop the progreſs of pernicious Errours, to detect the falſe pretences of Impoſtours, to confute the falacies of Sophiſters, to repell the aſſaults of all Adverſaries to the truth; yea, if need be, to expoſe, not onely their deareſt contents of life, but even their lives themſelves, in the defence thereof.

Lib. VI.

Euſebius reports thus of Maximinus, Τοὺς τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν ἄρχοντας μόνους, ὡς αἰτίους τῆς κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον διδασκαλίας, ἀναιρεῖσθαι προστάττει. He commanded manded that only the Governours of the Church (that is, the Biſhops) ſhould be ſlaughtered, as the Authors of the growth and prevalence of Evangelical Doctrine. Neither was it a ſingular practice of that bloody Tyrant, but as a thing of courſe it conſtantly follows, that where-ever Righteouſneſs and Truth are violently impugned, the Prieſts are ſure to taſte deepeſt of that bitter cup; that their Goods be in the firſt place ſequeſtred and ſpoiled, their Reputation ſtained, their Perſons miſuſed, their Lives ſacrificed to the Perſecutors outrageous malice.

Is it not reaſonable then, and equal, that they who, for the ſervice of God, and benefit of the Church, undergo ſuch difficulties, and are objected to ſo great hazards, ſhould be ſuſtained, ſhould be refreſhed by proportionable encouragements? Is it not barbarous uſage, to expect ſo hard duties from them, to impoſe ſuch heavy burthens on them, and yet to grudge any ſutable comforts, any ſatisfactory rewards to them? Good King Hezekiah ſurely was not ſo minded, of whom 'tis ſaid, He commanded the people that dwelt in Hieruſalem, to give the portion of the 2 Chr. 31. 4.
Prieſts and Levites, that they might be encouraged in the Law of the Lord: that is, that they might be heartned to ſtudy, to teach, to perform the duties required of them by the Divine Law. And St. Paul thus rationally expoſtulates in the Prieſts behalf: Whoever goeth to war at 1 Cor. 9. 7, 11.
his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof; or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? If we Vid. Rom. 15. 27.
have ſown unto you ſpiritual things; is it a great thing, if we ſhall reap your carnal things? Is it a great thing? do you think much of it? If you do, you are unreaſonable, you are unjuſt, you are ingrateful. And otherwhere he thus very Emphatically admoniſhes; We beſeech you, 1 Theſ. 5. 12, 13.
*Brethren, to * mind them which labour among you, and || preſide over you in* * Εἰδέναι.
the Lord, and that admoniſh you; and to eſteem them more than exceeding- || καὶ προϊσταμένους.
ly (ὑπερεκπερισσοῦ) in love, for their work (or, for their office) ſake: (ſo ἔργον frequently ſignifies in ſuch caſes.) And again, Let the Elders (or Prieſts, οἱ πρεσβύτεροι,) which rule well be counted worthy of double ho- 1 Tim. 5. 17.
nour: (or of double recompence: ſo τιμὴ alſo imports.) Prieſts as ſo, for their office ſake, have honour and reward due to them; which, according to the good management of that office, are proportionably to be augmented and multiplied.

But farther yet, abſtracting from both their Perſonal worth, and the merit of their ſervice, conſider their Condition in this world, and ſee whether it doth not in equity challenge ſome reaſonable proviſion to be made for them. Are they not, by the nature of their profeſſion, ſecluded from all ordinary means of temporal advancement? Be not thoſe uſual inlets of Wealth, the Court, the Camp, and the Exchange, ſhut upon them, yea barr'd againſt them, by thoſe inſuperable obſtacles of Law and Cuſtom? Can they grow rich by trade, or famous by feats of arms? May they plead for others? 'tis well if they be allowed to do it for themſelves before equal Judges. Yet are they not Men, endued with humane paſſions and reſentments? Are they not Citizens, partaking in the common intereſts of the weal publick? Are they not ſenſible of the inconveniences, and capable of enjoying the benefits of this life? Are they not equally obliged, and would they not be glad, as well as others, to be in a capacity to requite courteſies, to help relations, to gratifie friends, to relieve the poor, to expreſs reſpectively their humanity, and their gratitude? Skill they not to uſe the goods of Fortune (or rather the gifts of Providence) with as much diſcretion, as much ſobriety, as much honour, as others? Compare things righteouſly, ouſly, and let Reaſon judge; let Experience be examined; let thoſe eternal monuments of their Piety, their Charity, their Hoſpitality, declare and teſtifie. Shall, laſtly, the fruits of painful ſtudy, the improvement of hopeful parts, the flower of vigorous age and ſtrength ſpent in the publick ſervice, tend only hither, to put a man into a ſtate of ſtruggling with extreme contempt and penury? If this be not, what, I pray you, is monſtrous iniquity?

Since therefore it appears (upon ſo many ſeveral ſcores) reaſonable, that Almighty God ſhould undertake the protection, and aſſert the honour of his Prieſts; we may not only praiſe the goodneſs, but approve alſo the wiſdom of this promiſe; and by the contemplation thereof ſtrengthen our faith in reliance thereon. To which purpoſe one Conſideration more may very much conduce, and withall may provoke our gratitude to celebrate his truth and faithfulneſs, in making good, as well as his goodneſs and wiſdom, in making this Promiſe; viz. the conſidering how continually hitherto God hath been pleaſed effectually to cloath his Prieſts with Salvation, to provide abundantly for their ſafety, their accommodation, their reſpect in this world; and to deliver them from the oppoſite inconveniences.

If we reflect our thoughts on the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity, (not more diſmal for Suffering, than glorious for Piety,) 'tis admirable to ſee how ſincerely and paſſionately the Chriſtian people did then love their Prieſts and Paſtors; how liberally, out of their ſlender ſtock, and the ſhipwrecks of their ſpoiled fortunes, they contributed to their maintenance; what exceeding veneration they bore them; with what incredible alacrity they ſubmitted to the moſt ſevere Diſciplines injoyned by them; how willingly they followed them, though leading into the jaws of death and cruel torture: ſo that, although it was then neceſſary for the Chriſtian Prieſts to undergo the greateſt hardſhips; according to the deſign of Chriſtian Religion; (which was to be propagated, not by terror of Power, nor by politick Artifice, but by the invincible Faith, Reſolution and Patience of the Profeſſors and Teachers thereof;) yet never more may they have ſeemed to thrive and proſper, than in that juncture of time, when they enjoyed the univerſal good will and applauſe of good people, when they unconſtrainedly embraced affliction for righteouſneſs ſake, and acquired thereby the certain fruition of a more excellent Salvation.

But in the ſucceeding Times, when Chriſtianity, breaking out of the clouds of Perſecution, began to ſhine over all with brighteſt luſtre; of the glories and happy fruits of that illuſtrious triumph none did partake more fully, than they, who had ſuſtained the hardeſt brunts of the foregoing conflict, and had been the principal cauſes of the ſucceſs. Then the joyful acclamations of the faithful people reſounded in the praiſe of their victorious Champions: then did the Emperours themſelves, with arms out-ſtretched, and hearts enlarged, with affection embrace the Authors of their happy Converſion; then all Laws prejudicial to their welfare were reſcinded, and new ones were ſubſtituted, abundantly providing for their ſecurity, honeſt livelihood and due reverence; which in progreſs of time, not in the Roman Empire only, but in all other Nations (that afterwards did entertain Chriſtianity) were no wiſe impaired, but were rather ampliated and fortified by the pious favour of Princes: The barbarous Goths, and Vandals, and Lombards, being no ſooner endued with any degree of Civility, or any ſenſe of Religion, than poſſeſſed with a hearty reverence of their Biſhops and Prieſts.

And ever ſince, (which is not to be imputed, as ſome raſhly, if not impiouſly, averr, to the prevalence of Antichriſtian iniquity,but rather to the Providence of Divine Benignity; ever ſince, I ſay) till the late Commotions and Alterations in Chriſtendom, they have been the Guardians of others ſafety, not themſelves deprived of protection; have abounded with wealth, rather than wanted ſuſtenance; have been the objects of envy, more than of contempt. Princes have loved and cheriſhed them, have relied upon their advice, and intruſted them with their higheſt concernments. Nobles have not been aſhamed to yield them place. The Sacerdotal Robe hath been often dyed with purple; and the Sons of mighty Monarchs have not thought themſelves degraded by entring into their Order. And if in ſome particular places (before or ſince thoſe Changes) their condition hath not been ſo high and plentiful; yet hath it been (almoſt ever) tolerable; the countenance of Authority, and the reſpect of the people being in good degree vouchſafed them. Even in thoſe Churches which till this day groan under the oppreſſion of Infidel Princes, the Prieſts (by the free permiſſion of thoſe Princes) retain their Juriſdiction in a manner as great as ever; and withal enjoy a maintenance not altogether inconſiderable.

So favourable hitherto hath God been unto his Prieſts, ſo faithful to his Promiſe: which doth oblige us to thank him; which may encourage us to hope in him; which may arm us with confidence againſt the preſent ill will of thoſe that wiſh,and againſt the practices of thoſe that deſign our ruin.

'Tis true, This Promiſe is not affixed to all parts of time, to all particularities of place, to all determinate circumſtances of things. The Prieſts may now and then, here and there,in this or that ſuffer highly; they may be ejected, be plundered, be degraded, as experience hath ſhewed us. But they may be alſo ſoon reſtored, repoſſeſſed, readvanced, and (I had almoſt ſaid) revenged too; as the like experience doth aſſure us. 'Tis not impoſſible, I confeſs, we may relapſe into the ſame, or into a more calamitous eſtate; the obſtinate diſaffections of men threaten it,and our own miſcarriages more dangerouſly; yet the moſt offenſive of theſe (which many honeſt men diſlike, and moſt men exclaim againſt) have been in as bitter terms complained of in almoſt the firſt Ages. “Inhiant poſſeſſionibus, prædia excolunt, auro incubant, quæſtui per omnia ſtudent, ſaid a devout Writer of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory about 1300 years ago. And ſo much no man (without extreme uncharitableneſs and falſhood) can in ſo general terms impute to the preſent Clergy: notwithſtanding which, God did continue to vouchſafe his protection to them. They were ſometimes, (by the Inundations of barbarous people,) and we may again (by national concuſſions) be ſeverely chaſtiſed for our faults: Yet were not they, nor ſhall we be (at leaſt every where, and for ever) utterly rejected. God may *viſit our tranſgreſſions with the rod, and our iniquity with ſtripes: Neverthele*ſ*s his loving kindneſs will he not utterly take from us, nor ſuffer his faithfulneſs to fail. His Covenant he will not break,nor alter the thing that is gone out of his lips.* God may for a time hide his face from us; but he will not for ever turn his back upon us: the honour of the Prieſthood may for a while be overclouded in ſome part of the world; but ſhall never totally be eclipſed, nor ſwallowed up in a perpetual night. While God continues his reſidence in Sion, and defends his Church againſt the gates of Hell, and powers of darkneſs; while Religion retains any ſway in the hearts of men, and Truth poſſeſſes any room upon earth; the Prieſts ſhall not be left deſtitute and naked, but everlaſtingly be cloathed with ſalvation. Which that it may (to the Glory of God, and good of his Church) more ſurely come to 2 Chron. 6. 41. paſs, let us convert this Promiſe into a Prayer, and ſay with Solomon, Now therefore ariſe, O Lord God, thou and the ark of thy ſtrength: Let thy Prieſts, O Lord God, be cloathed with Salvation, and let thy Saints rejoyce in goodneſs. Amen.

Sulp. Sev. Lib. 1. *c.*43.

Pſal. 89. 32, 33, 34.

SERMON XIII.

Not to Offend in Word, an Evidence of a High Pitch of Vertue.

St. JAM. III. 2.

If any man offend not in word, he is a perfect man.

THIS Sentence ſtands in the head of a Diſcourſe concerning the Tongue, (that doubtful Engin of good and evil,) wherein how excellent benefits, and how grievous miſchiefs, it, as rightly or perverſly wielded, is apt to produce, how it is both a ſweet inſtrument of all goodneſs, and a ſharp weapon of all iniquity, is poſitively laid down, and by fit compariſons illuſtrated. But ſecluding all relation to the Context, the words may well be conſidered ſingly by themſelves; and as ſuch they inſtruct us, aſſerting a certain Truth; they direct us, implying a good Duty. They aſſert that man to be perfect, who offends not in Speech; and they conſequently imply, that we Deut. 18. 13. ſhould ſtrive to avoid offending therein: for to be perfect, and to go on Luk. 6. 40. to perfection, are precepts, the obſervance whereof is incumbent on us. Mat. 5. 48. & 19. 21. We ſhall firſt briefly explain the Aſſertion, and then declare its truth; 2 Cor. 13. 11. afterwards we ſhall preſs ſomewhat couched in the Duty. Heb. 6. 1.

To OFFEND originally ſignifies to impinge, that is, to ſtumble, or Εἴ τις ἐν λόγῳ ȣ̓ πταίει. hit dangerouſly upon ſomewhat lying croſs our way, ſo as thereby to be caſt down, or at leaſt to be diſordered in our poſture, and ſtopt in our progreſs: whence it is well transferr'd to denote our being through any incident temptation brought into ſin, whereby a man is thrown down, or bowed from his upright ſtate, and interrupted from proſecuting a ſteddy courſe of Piety and Vertue. By an uſual and appoſite Pſal. 37. 23, 24. manner of ſpeaking, our tenour of life is called a Way, our converſation Walking, our actions Steps, our obſerving good Laws, Uprightneſs, our tranſgreſſion of them Tripping, Faultring, Falling.

By NOT OFFENDING IN WORD, we may eaſily then conceive to be underſtood ſuch a conſtant reſtraint, and ſuch a careful guidance of our Tongue, that it doth not tranſgreſs the rules preſcribed unto it by Divine Law, or by good Reaſon; that it thwarteth not the natural ends and proper uſes for which it was framed, to which it is fitted; ſuch as chiefly are promoting God's glory, our Neighbours benefit, and our own true welfare.

By A PERFECT MAN is meant a Perſon accompliſhed and compleat in goodneſs, one of ſingular worth and integrity, a brave and excellent man, who, as to the continual tenour of his life, is free from all notorious defects, and heinous faults; like David, fulfilling all God's will, and having reſpect to all God's commandments; like Zachary and Elizabeth, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameleſs. Thus was Noah, thus was Abraham, thus was Job perfect. This is the notion of Perfection in Holy Scripture: Not an abſolute exemption from all blemiſh of Soul, or blame in life; for ſuch a Perfection is inconſiſtent with the nature and ſtate of Man here, where none with modeſty or with truth can ſay, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my ſin; where every man muſt confeſs with Job, If I juſtifie my ſelf, mine own mouth ſhall condemn me; if I ſay, I am perfect, it ſhall prove me perverſe. For, There is not (as the Preacher aſſures) a juſt man upon earth, that doth good, and ſinneth not; and, In many things we offend all, is our Apoſtle's aſſertion, immediately preceding my Text; which words may ſerve to expound theſe. In many things, ſaith he, we offend all, that is, there is no man abſolutely perfect: but if any man offend not in word, (that is, if a man conſtantly govern his Tongue well,) that man is perfect; perfect in ſuch a kind and degree as humane frailty doth admit; he is eminently good; he may be reaſonably preſumed upright and blameleſs in all the courſe of his practice; able (as it follows) to bridle the whole body, that is, qualified to order all his actions juſtly and wiſely. So that in effect the words import this, That a conſtant governance of our Speech according to duty and reaſon is a high inſtance, and a ſpecial argument of a throughly ſincere and ſolid goodneſs.

Jam. 1. 4.
Act. 13. 22.
Pſal. 119. 6.
Luk. 1. 6.
Gen. 6. 9. & 17. 1.
Job 1. 1.
Prov. 20. 9.
Job 9. 20.
Eccleſ. 7. 20.

The truth of which Aphoriſm may from ſeveral Conſiderations appear.

1. A good Governance of Speech is a ſtrong evidence of a good Mind; of a mind pure from vicious deſires, calm from diſorderly paſſions, void of diſhoneſt intentions. For ſince Speech is a child of Thought, which the mind always travaileth and teemeth with, and which after its birth is wont in features to reſemble its parent; ſince every man naturally is ambitious to propagate his conceits, and without a painful force cannot ſmother his reſentments; ſince eſpecially bad affections (like ſtumme or poiſon) are impetuous and turgid, ſo agitating all the ſpirits, and ſo ſwelling the heart, that it cannot eaſily compoſe, or contain them; ſince a diſtempered conſtitution of mind, as of body, is wont to weaken the retentive faculty, and to force an evacuation of bad humours; ſince he that wanteth the principal wiſdom of well ordering his Thoughts, and maſtering his Paſſions, can hardly be conceived ſo prudent, as long to refrain, or to regulate their dependence, Speech; conſidering theſe things, I ſay, it is ſcarce poſſible, that he which commonly thinks ill, ſhould conſtantly either be well ſilent, or ſpeak well. To conceal fire, to check lightning, to confine a whirlwind, may perhaps be no leſs fecible, than to keep within due compaſs the exorbitant motions of a Soul, wherein Reaſon hath loſt its command, ſo that quà data porta, where the next paſſage occurs, they ſhould not ruſh forth, and vent themſelves. A vain Mind naturally will bubble forth or fly out in frothy expreſſions; Wrath burning in the breaſt will flame out, or at leaſt ſmoak through the mouth; rancorous Impoſtumes of Spite and Malice will at length diſcharge purulent matter; Luſt boiling within will ſoon foam out in lewd diſcourſe. If the fountain it ſelf is polluted, or infected, how can Mat. 12. 34. the ſtreams be clear, or wholſome; How can ye, being evil, ſpeak good things? (ſaith our Lord) for from the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. A good man (addeth he) out of the good treaſure of the heart bringeth forth good things; and an evil man out of the evil treaſure bringeth forth evil things: ἐκβάλλει πονηρά, he caſteth forth ill things, as a fountain doth its waters by a natural and neceſſary ebullition. It is true, that in ſome particular caſes, or at ſome times, a foul heart may be diſguiſed by fair words, or covered by demure reſervedneſs: Shame, or Fear, or crafty Deſign, may often repreſs the declaration of ill thoughts and purpoſes. But ſuch fits of diſſimulation cannot hold; men cannot abide quiet under ſo violent conſtraints; the inteſtine jars, or unkindly truces, between Heart and Tongue (thoſe natural friends) cannot be perpetual, or very durable: No man can hold his breath long, or live without evaporating through his mouth thoſe ſteams of paſſion which Pſal. 39. 3. ariſe from fleſh and blood. My heart was hot within me, while I was muſing, the fire burned; then ſpake I with my tongue, ſaith David, expreſſing the difficulty of obſtructing the eruption of our Affections into Ἀνδρὸς χαρακτὴρ ἐκ λόγου γνωρίζεται Language. Hence it is, that Speech is commonly judged the trueſt character of the mind, and the ſureſt teſt of inward worth; as that which diſcloſeth the hidden man of the heart, which unlocketh the cloſets of 1 Pet. 3. 4. the breaſt, which draws the Soul out of her dark receſſes into open light and view, which rendreth our thoughts viſible, and our intentions palpable. Hence, Loquere, ut te videam, Speak, that I may ſee you, or know what kind of man you are, is a ſaying which all men, at firſt meeting, do in their hearts direct one to another: neither commonly doth any man require more to ground a judgment upon concerning the worth or ability of another, than opportunity of hearing him to diſcourſe for a competent time: yea often, before a man hath ſpoken ten words, his mind is caught, and a formal ſentence is paſſed upon it. Such a ſtrict affinity and connexion do all men ſuppoſe between Thoughts and Words.

Eccluſ. 19. 11. A fool travaileth with a word, as a woman in labour of a child.

2. From hence, that the uſe of Speech is it ſelf a great ingredient into our Practice, and hath a very general influence upon whatever we do, may be inferred, that whoever governeth it well, cannot alſo but well order his whole life. The extent of Speech muſt needs be vaſt, ſince it is nearly commenſurate to Thought it ſelf, which it ever cloſely traceth, widely ranging through all the immenſe variety of objects; ſo that men almoſt as often ſpeak incogitantly, as they think ſilently. Speech is indeed the Rudder that ſteereth humane affairs, the Spring that ſetteth the wheels of action on going; the Hands work, the Feet walk, all the Members and all the Senſes act by its direction and impulſe; yea, moſt Thoughts are begotten, and moſt Affections ſtirred up thereby: it is it ſelf moſt of our employment, and what we do beſide it, is however guided and moved by it. It is the profeſſion and trade of many, it is the practice of all men, to be in a manner continually talking. The chief and moſt conſiderable ſort of men manage all their concernments merely by Words; by them Princes rule their Subjects, Generals command their Armies, Senators deliberate and debate about the great matters of State: by them Advocates plead cauſes, and Judges decide them; Divines perform their offices, and miniſter their inſtructions; Merchants ſtrike up their bargains, and drive on all their Traffick. Whatever almoſt great or ſmall is done in the Court or in the Hall, in the Church, or at the Exchange, in the School, or in the Shop, it is the Tongue alone that doth it: 'tis the force of this little Machine, that turneth all the human World about. It is indeed the uſe of this ſtrange organ which rendreth human life, beyond the ſimple life of other creatures, ſo exceedingly various and compounded; which creates ſuch a multiplicity of buſineſs,and which tranſacts it; while by it we communicate our ſecret conceptions, transfuſing them into others; while therewith we inſtruct and adviſe one another; while we conſult about what is to be done, conteſt about right, diſpute about truth; while the whole buſineſs of Converſation,of Commerce,of Government,and adminiſtration of Juſtice, of Learning, and of Religion, is managed thereby; yea, while it ſtoppeth the gaps of time, and filleth up the wide intervals of Buſineſs, our recreations and divertiſements (the which do conſtitute a great portion of our life) mainly conſiſting therein: ſo that, in compariſon thereof,the execution of what we determine and all other action do take up ſmall room; and even all that uſually dependeth upon foregoing Speech, which perſuadeth, or counſelleth, or commandeth it. Whence the Province of Speech being ſo very large, it being ſo univerſally concerned, either immediately as the matter, or by conſequence as the ſource of our actions, he that conſtantly governeth it well, may juſtly be eſteemed to live very excellently.

3. To govern the Tongue well is a matter of exceeding difficulty, requiring not only hearty goodneſs, but great judgment and art, together with much vigilance and circumſpection; whence the doing it argues a high pitch of Vertue. For ſince the Tongue is a very looſe and verſatile engine, which the leaſt breath of thought doth ſtir, and ſet on going any way,it cannot but need much attention to keep it either in a ſteddy reſt, or in a right motion. Since numberleſs ſwarms of things roving in the fancy do thence inceſſantly obtrude themſelves upon the Tongue,very much application of mind and great judgment are requiſite to ſelect out of them thoſe few which are good and fit,rejecting all that is bad, and improper to be ſpoken. Since continually temptations occur provoking or alluring to miſcarriage in this kind, (for beſide internal propenſions and commotions of Soul, every object we behold, every company we are engaged in, every accident befalling us doth ſuggeſt ſomewhat inviting thereto; the condition of our neighbour moving us,if high,to flatter; if low,to inſult; our own fortune prompting, if proſperous, to boaſt, if croſs, to murmur; any action drawing from us, if it pleaſeth us,fond admiration,if it diſliketh, harſh cenſure: ſince, I ſay, we are thus at every turn obnoxious to ſpeak amiſs,) it muſt be a matter of huge skill and caution, of mighty induſtry and reſolution, to decline it. We for that purpoſe need to imitate that earneſt and watchful care of the Holy Pſalmiſt, which he thus expreſſeth; I have (ſaith he) purpoſed that my mouth ſhall not offend: and, I ſaid (ſaith he again) I will take heed to my ways, that I ſin not with my tongue; I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me. And thus to maintain a conſtant guard over his heart and ways, thus in conſequence thereof to curb and rule his Speech well,muſt aſſuredly be the mark of a very good perſon. Eſpecially conſidering, that, Pſal. 17. 3. Pſal. 39. 1.

4. Irregular Speech hath commonly divers more advantages for it, and fewer checks upon it, than other bad Practice hath. A man is apt (I mean) to ſpeak ill with leſs diſſatisfaction and regret from within; he may do it with leſs controll and leſs hazard from without, than he can act ill. Bad Actions are groſs and bulky, taking up much time, and having much force ſpent on them,whence men eaſily obſerve and con-ſider them in themſelves and others: but ill Words are ſubtile and tranſient, ſoon born, and as ſoon deceaſed; whence men raſhly utter them without much heed before them, or much reflexion after them. Bad actions have alſo uſually viſible effects, immediately conſequent on them: but Words operate inſenſibly and at diſtance; ſo that men hardly diſcern what will follow them, or what they have effected. There are alſo frequent occaſions of ſpeaking ill upon preſumption of ſecrecy, and thence of indiſturbance and impunity; yea, doing ſo is often entertained with complacence, and encouraged with applauſe: the vileſt abuſes of ſpeech (even Blaſphemy, Treaſon and Slander themſelves) may be ſafely whiſpered into ears, which will receive them with pleaſure and commendation. Bad Language alſo in moſt caſes is neither ſtrictly prohibited, nor ſeverely chaſtiſed by humane Laws, as bad Action is. Whence ordinarily the guilt of this miſbehaviour ſeems little or none; and perſons much practiſing it, both in their own conceit, & in the opinion of others, do often paſs for innocent. Men indeed here will hardly diſcern any rule, or acknowledg any obligation: the Tongue they deem is free, and any words may be diſpenſed with: it is ſufficient if they abſtain from doing groſs wrong or miſchief, they have a right and liberty to ſay any thing.

Pſal. 12. 4. Our Lips are our own; who is Lord over us? ſo are men commonly prone to ſay, with thoſe in the Pſalm. Hence whoſoever, notwithſtanding ſuch encouragements to offend herein, and ſo few reſtraints from it, doth yet carefully forbear it, governing his Tongue according to rules of duty and reaſon, may juſtly be reputed a very good man. Furthermore,

5. Whereas moſt of the enormities, the miſchiefs and the troubles whereby the Souls of men are defiled, their minds diſcompoſed, and their lives diſquieted, are the fruits of ill-governed Speech; it being that chiefly which perverteth juſtice, which ſoweth diſſentions, which raiſeth all bad paſſions and animoſities, which embroileth the world in ſeditions and factions, by which men wrong and abuſe, deceive and ſeduce, defame and diſgrace one another, whereby conſequently innumerable vexations and diſturbances are created among men; he that by well-governing his Speech preſerveth himſelf from the guilt, diſengageth his mind and life from the inconveniences of all ſuch evils, (from the diſcreet and honeſt management thereof enjoying both innocence and peace,) muſt neceſſarily be as a very wiſe and happy, ſo a very good and worthy perſon.

6. His Tongue alſo ſo ruled cannot but produce very good fruits of honour to God, of benefit to his Neighbour, of comfort to himſelf: it will be ſweet and pleaſant, it will be wholſome and uſeful; endearing converſation, cementing peaceful ſociety, breeding and nouriſhing love, inſtructing and edifying, or chearing and comforting the hearers.
Prov. 12. 18. His tongue is health; His mouth is a well and tree of life; His lips diſ-
10. 11. perſe knowledge; He ſhall be ſatisfied with good by the fruit of his mouth; & 15. 4. Every man ſhall kiſs his lips: Such (as the Wiſe-man telleth us) are the Prov. 15. 7. effects of innocent, ſober and well-ordered diſcourſe; the which do Prov. 12. 14. & 13.2,3. & 15.23. much commend their author, and declare the excellent virtue of that Prov. 24.26. Tree from which ſuch fruits do grow.

7. Laſtly, The obſervation how unuſual this practice is, (in any good degree) may ſtrongly aſſure the excellency thereof. For the rarer (eſpecially in omrals) any good thing is, the more noble and worthy it is; that rarity arguing ſomewhat of peculiar difficulty in the attainment or the atchievement thereof. Nothing is more obvious to common experience, than that perſons, who in the reſt of their demeanour nour and dealings appear blameleſs, yea who in regard to other points of duty would ſeem nice and preciſe, are extremely peccant in this kind. We may ſee divers, otherwiſe much reſtraining and much denying themſelves, who yet indulge themſelves a ſtrange licentiouſneſs in ſpeaking whatever their humour or their paſſion dictates. Many, in other reſpects harmleſs, (who would not for any thing ſmite or ſlay folks,) we may obſerve with their Tongue to commit horrible outrages upon any man that comes in their way. Frequently perſons very punctual in their dealings, are very unjuſt in their language, cheating and robbing their neighbour of his reputation by envious detraction and hard cenſure. They who abhor ſhedding a man's blood, will yet without any ſcruple or remorſe, by calumnious tales and virulent reproaches, aſſaſſinate his credit, and murther his good name, although to him perhaps far more dear and pretious than his life. Commonly ſuch as are greatly ſtaunch in other enjoyments of pleaſure, are enormouſly intemperate in ſpeaking, and very incontinent of their Tongue: men in all other parts of morality rigorouſly ſober, are often in this very wild and diſſolute. Yea, not ſeldom we may obſerve, that even mighty pretenders to godlineſs, and zealous practiſers of devotion, cannot forbear ſpeaking things plainly repugnant to God's Law, and very prejudicial to his honour. Thus it is obſervable to be now; and thus we may ſuppoſe that it always hath been. So of his time S. Hierome (or rather S. Paulinus, in his excellent Epiſtle to Celantia) teſtifies: * Such a luſt (ſaith he, concerning the ill-governance of Speech) of this evil hath invaded the minds of men, that even thoſe who have far receded from other vices, do yet fall into this, as into the laſt ſnare of the Devil. So it appears, that among all ſorts of good Practice, the ſtrict Governance of the Tongue is leaſt ordinary, and conſequently, that it is moſt admirable, and excellent. And this is all I ſhall ſay for Confirmation of the Point aſſerted.

* Tanta hujus mali libido mentes hominum invaſit, ut etiam qui procul ab aliis vitiis receſſerunt, in iſtud tamen, quaſi in extremum Diaboli laqueum, incidant. Ad Celant.

NOW then, as it is our duty to aim at perfection, or to endeavour the attainment of integrity in Heart and Life, ſo we ſhould eſpecially labour to govern our Tongue, and guard it from offence. To which purpoſe it is requiſite, that we ſhould well underſtand and conſider the nature of thoſe ſeveral Offences to which Speech is liable, together with the ſpecial pravity, deformity and inconvenience of each: for did we know and weigh them, we ſhould not ſurely either like, or dare to incurr them.

The Offences of Speech are many and various in kind; ſo many as there be of Thought and of Action, unto which they do run parallel: accordingly they well may be diſtinguiſhed from the difference of objects which they do ſpecially reſpect. Whence, 1. ſome of them are committed againſt God, and confront Piety; 2. others againſt our Neighbour, and violate Juſtice, or Charity, or Peace; 3. others againſt our Selves, infringing Sobriety, Diſcretion, or Modeſty; or, 4. ſome are of a more general and abſtracted nature, rambling through all matters, and croſſing all the heads of Duty. It is true, that in moſt, or in all Offences of Speech, there is a complication of Impiety, Iniquity and Imprudence; for that by all ſorts of ill Speaking we ſin againſt God, and break his Commandment; we injure our Neighbour, at leaſt by contagion and bad example: we abuſe our Selves, contracting guilt, and expoſing our ſelves to puniſhment: alſo the general vices of Speech (unadviſedneſs and vanity) do conſtantly adhere to every bad word: Yet commonly each evil Speech hath a more direct and immediate aſpect upon ſome one of thoſe objects, (God, our Neighbour, or our Selves,) and is peculiarly repugnant to one of thoſe capital Vertues (Piety, Charity and Sobriety) unto which all our Duty is reduced. Now according to this diſtinction, I ſhould, If time would give leave, deſcribe, and diſſuade particularly all theſe ſorts of Offence: but (ſince I muſt be reſpectful to patience, and careful my ſelf not to offend in Speech) I ſhall confine the reſt of my preſent Diſcourſe to the firſt ſort, the Offences againſt Piety; and even of them I ſhall (waving the reſt) only touch two or three, inſinuating ſome reaſons why we ſhould eſchew them. Theſe are,

(Pſal. 78. 19. Num. 21. 5. Job 34. 37.)

Pſal. 73. 8, 9.

Iſa. 37. 23. 2 Chron. 32. 19.

Dan. 11. 36.

Iſa. 54. 17.

I. Speaking blaſphemouſly againſt God, or reproachfully concerning Religion, or to the diſgrace of Piety, with intent to ſubvert mens faith in God, or to impair their reverence of him. There hath been a race of men (and would to God that race were not even till now continued) concerning whom the Pſalmiſt ſaid, They ſpeak loftily, they ſet their mouth againſt the heavens; who, like the proud Senacherib, lift up their eyes, and exalt their voice againſt the Holy One of Iſrael; who, with the profane Antiochus, ſpeak marvellous things againſt the God of Gods. This of all impieties is the moſt prodigiouſly Gigantick, the moſt ſignal practice of enmity towards God, and down-right waging of war againſt Heaven. Of all weapons formed againſt God, the Tongue moſt notoriouſly doth impugn him: for we cannot reach Heaven with our hands, or immediately aſſault God by our actions: other ill practice indeed obliquely, or by conſequence diſhonoureth God, and defameth goodneſs; but profane Diſcourſe is directly levelled at them, and doth immediately touch them, as its formal objects. Now doing thus argueth an extremity both of folly and naughtineſs: for he that doth it, either believeth the exiſtence of God, and the truth of Religion; or he diſtruſts them. If he doth believe them, what a deſperate madneſs is it in him, adviſedly to invite certain miſchief to his home, and pull down heavieſt vengeance on his own head, by oppoſing the irreſiſtible power, and provoking the inflexible Juſtice of God? What an abominable villany and baſeneſs is it, thus to abuſe God's immenſe goodneſs and mercy, offering ſuch deſpight to the Author of his being, and free Donour of all the good he enjoys? What a monſtrous conſpiracy is it of ſtupidity and perverſeneſs in him, thus wilfully to defie his own welfare, to forfeit all capacity of happineſs; to precipitate and plunge himſelf into a double Hell, that of bitter remorſe here, that of endleſs pain hereafter? But if he that reproacheth God and Religion be ſuppoſed diſtruſtful of their being and reality, neither ſo is he excuſable from like degrees of folly and pravity: for, beſide the wild extravagance of ſuch disbelief, againſt legions of cogent arguments and pregnant teſtimonies, againſt all the voice of nature and faith of hiſtory, againſt the ſettled judgment of wiſe and ſober perſons, who have ſtudied and conſidered the point, againſt the current tradition of all Ages, and general conſent of mankind; all which to withſtand, no leſs demonſtrateth high indiſcretion than arrogance; beſide alſo the palpable ſillineſs which he diſplays, in cauſeleſly (or for no other cauſe than ſoothing a phantaſtick humour) drawing upon himſelf the anger and hatred of all men, who are concerned for the intereſts of their Religion, thruſting himſelf into great dangers and miſchiefs thence imminent to him both from private zeal, and publick law; beſide (I ſay) theſe evident follies, there is an unſufferable inſolence and horrible malice apparent in this practice; for 'tis no leſs than the height of inſolence, thus to affront mankind in matters of higheſt conſideration, and deepeſt reſentment with it; not only thwarting its common notions, but vilifying the chief objects of its higheſt reſpect and affection, of its main care and concernment; ſo making the fierceſt invaſion that can be on its credit, and charging it with greateſt fondneſs. Who can endure,that He,whom he apprehends to be his grand Parent,his beſt Friend and Benefactour, his great Patron and Sovereign,ſhould in down-right terms be defamed or diſparaged? Who can patiently bear, that wherein he placeth his utmoſt hopes, and ſupreme felicity, to be expreſly ſlighted or ſcorned? Who can take the offering to do this, otherwiſe than for a moſt injurious reflexion upon his judgment and his practice?If he cannot believe in God, he may let them alone who do: if he will not practiſe Religion, he may forbear to perſecute it. He cannot pretend any zeal; 'tis therefore only pride that moves him to diſturb us. So may every man with all the reaſon in the world complain againſt the profane Talker. Seeing alſo it is moſt evident, that hearty reverence of God, and a conſcientious regard to Religion, do produce great benefits to mankind, being indeed the main ſupports of common honeſty and ſobriety, the ſole curbs, effectually reſtraining men from unjuſt fraud and violence, from brutiſh luſts and paſſions; ſince apparently Religion preſcribeth the beſt rules, and impoſeth the ſtrongeſt engagements to the performance of thoſe actions, whereby not only mens private welfare is promoted,and ordinary converſation is ſweetned,and common life is adorned, but alſo whereby publick order and peace are maintained; ſince (as Cicero with good reaſon judged) Piety being removed, 'tis probable that Juſtice it ſelf (of all Vertues the beſt guarded and fortified by humane power) could not ſubſiſt, no faith could be ſecured, no ſociety could be preſerved among men; it being manifeſtly vain to fancy, that aſſuredly without Religious conſcience any one will be a good Subject, a true Friend,or an Honeſt man; or that any other conſideration can induce men to prefer duty to their Prince, the proſperity of their Country, fidelity toward their Friends or Neighbours, before their own preſent intereſts and pleaſure: Since, I ſay, the credit of Religion is ſo very beneficial and uſeful to mankind, 'tis plain, that he muſt be exceedingly ſpiteful and malicious, who ſhall by profane Diſcourſe endeavour to ſupplant or ſhake it. He that ſpeaketh againſt God or Providence,hath aſſuredly a pique at Goodneſs, and would not have it predominant in the hearts of men. He that diſparages Religion, doth certainly take his aim againſt Vertue, and would not have it practiſed in the world: his meaning plainly is, to effect, if he can, that Men ſhould live like Beaſts in foul impurities, or like Fiends in miſchievous iniquities. Such an one therefore is not to be taken as a ſimple embracer of Errour, but as a ſpiteful deſigner againſt common Good. For indeed, were any man aſſured (as none can upon ſo much as probable grounds think it) that Religion had been only deviſed by men, as a ſupplemental aid to Reaſon and Force, (drawing them, whom the one could not perſuade, nor the other compell, to the practice of things conducible to the publick weal;) that it were merely an implement of policy,or a knack to make people loyal to their Prince, upright in their dealings, ſober in their converſations, moderate in their paſſions, vertuous in all their doings; it were yet a moſt barbarous naughtineſs and inhumanity in him to aſſay the overthrow thereof, with the defeating ſo excellent purpoſes: he that ſhould attempt it, juſtly would deſerve to be reputed an enemy to the welfare of mankind, to be treated as a peſtilent diſturber of the world.

Haud ſcio an, pietate adverſus Deos ſublatâ, fides etiam, & ſocietas humani generis, & unà excellentiſſima virtus juſtitia tollatur. Cic.

Ut quos ratio non poſſet, eos ad officium religio duceret. Cic.

II. Another like Offence againſt Piety is, to ſpeak looſely and wantonly about Holy things, (things nearly related to God or to Religion,) to make ſuch things the matter of ſport and mockery, to play and trifle with them. But of this I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak in another Diſcourſe.

III. Another grand Offence againſt Piety is, raſh and vain Swearing in common diſcourſe; an Offence which now ſtrangely reigns and rages in the world, paſſing about in a ſpecious garb, and under glorious titles, as a gentile and graceful quality, a mark of fine breeding, and a point of high gallantry. Who, forſooth, now is the brave Spark, and complete Gentleman, but he that hath the skill and confidence (O Heavens! how mean a skill! how mad a confidence!) to lard every ſentence with an Oath or a Curſe; making bold at every turn to ſalute God, fetching him down from Heaven to avouch any idle prattle, to ſecond any giddy paſſion, to concern himſelf in any trivial affair of his; yea, calling and challenging the Almighty to damn and deſtroy him? But ſomewhat to repreſs theſe fond conceits and vile practices, let us, I pray, conſider,

1. That Swearing thus is moſt expreſsly and ſtrictly prohibited to us. I ſay unto you, Swear not at all: But let your converſation be Yea, yea, Nay, nay; for whatſoever is more than theſe, cometh of evil: ſo our Lord forbids it. But above all things, my brethren, ſwear not---leſt you enter into condemnation: ſo doth Saint James warn againſt it. And is it not then prodigious, that in Chriſtendom any man ſhould affect to break laws ſo plain and ſo ſevere; that it ſhould paſs here not only for a tolerable, but even for a commendable practice, to violate ſo manifeſt and ſo important a Duty; that ſo directly to thwart our Lord himſelf ſhould be a thing not in uſe only, but in credit and requeſt among Chriſtians? What more palpable affront could be offered to our Religion, and to all that is Sacred among us? For, what reſpect or force can we imagin reſerved to Religion, while a practice ſo indiſputably oppoſite thereto, in a high degree, is ſo current and prevalent?

Mat. 5. 34, 37.
Jam. 5. 12.

2. Again, according to the very nature and reaſon of things, it is evidently an intolerable Profaneneſs, thus unadviſedly to make addreſſes and appeals to God, invoking his teſtimony, and demanding his judgment about trifles; far more ſuch, than it were a high preſumption and encroachment upon the Majeſty of a Prince, on every petty occaſion to break into his preſence, and to aſſail his ears, dragging him to hear and determin concerning it. Whence the very light of Nature condemns this practice, and even Heathens have loudly declared againſt it, as derogatory to the reverence of the Duty, and unſutable to the gravity of a worthy man.

3. Swearing indeed is by our Holy Oracles worthily repreſented to us, as an eſpecial piece of Worſhip and Devotion toward God; wherein, duly performed, we piouſly acknowledge his chief Attributes, and ſingular Prerogatives: (his being every-where preſent, and conſcious of all we ſay or do; his Goodneſs, and Fidelity, in favouring truth, and protecting right; his Juſtice, in rewarding veracity and equity, in avenging falſhood and iniquity; his being the Supreme Lord of all perſons, and laſt Judge in all cauſes: to ſignifie and avow theſe things to God's glory, Swearing was inſtituted, and naturally ſerveth:) wherefore, as all other acts of Devotion, ſo this grand one eſpecially ſhould never be performed without all ſerious conſideration and humble reverence; the cauſe ſhould be certainly juſt and true, the matter worthy and weighty, the manner grave and ſolemn, the mind framed to earneſt attention, and furniſhed with devout affections. Thoſe conditions are always carefully to be obſerved, which the Prophet intimates, when he chargeth thus; Thou ſhalt ſwear, The Lord liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteouſneſs. It is therefore horrible mockery and profanation of a moſt ſacred ordinance, when men preſume to uſe it without any care or conſideration, without any reſpect or awe, upon any ſlight or vain occaſion.

Jer. 4. 2.

4. The doing ſo is alſo very prejudicial to humane Society; for the deciſion of Right, the ſecurity of Government, and the preſervation of Peace, do much depend upon an awful regard to Oaths; and therefore upon their being only uſed in due manner, and ſeaſon; the ſame do greatly ſuffer by the contempt or diſregard of them, and conſequently by their common and careleſs uſe. They are the ſureſt bonds by which the Conſciences of men are tied to the atteſtation of truth, and obſervance of faith; the which as by rare and reverent uſe they are kept firm and faſt, ſo by frequent and negligent application of them (by their proſtitution to every light and toyiſh matter) they are quite diſſolved, or much ſlackned. Whence the publick ſeems much concerned, that this enormity ſhould be retrenched. For if Oaths generally become cheap and vile, what will that of Allegeance ſignifie? if men are wont to dally with Swearing every-where, can they be expected to be ſtrict and ſerious therein at the Bar, or in the Church? Will they regard the teſtimony of God, or dread his judgment, in one place, or at one time, when as every-where continually (upon any, upon no occaſion) they dare to confront and contemn them?

5. This way of Swearing is alſo a very uncivil and unmannerly practice. It is not only a groſs rudeneſs toward the main body of men, who juſtly reverence the Name of God, and loath ſuch abuſes thereof; not only an inſolent defiance to the common Profeſſion and Law of our Country, which diſallows and condemns it; but it is very odious and offenſive to any particular Society, if at leaſt there be one ſober perſon therein; for to any ſuch perſon (who retains a ſenſe of goodneſs, or is any wiſe concerned for God's honour) no language or behaviour can be more diſguſtful; nothing can more grate the ears, or fret the heart of ſuch an one, than this kind of talk: to give him the Lie were a complement, to ſpit in his face were an obligation, in compariſon thereto. Wherefore 'tis a wonder, that any perſon, having in him a ſpark of ingenuity, or at all pretending to good manners, ſhould find in his heart or deign to uſe it.

6. This practice alſo much derogateth from the credit of him that uſeth it, rendring the truth of whatever he ſays in reaſon and juſtice ſuſpected. For he that is ſo void of Conſcience, as to ſwear vainly, what can engage him to ſpeak truly? He that is ſo looſe in one ſuch point of obedience to God and Reaſon, why ſhould we conceive him ſtrict in regard to another?

7. It can be ſurely no wrong to diſtruſt him, ſince he implies himſelf not to be, even in his own opinion, a credible perſon; ſince he judges not his own bare affirmation to deſerve belief. For why, if he takes his word to be competently good, doth he back it with ſuch Aſſeverations? why unprovoked calls he God to witneſs, if he thinks his own honeſty ſufficient to aſſure the truth of what he ſays? An honeſt man, methinks, ſhould ſcorn thus to invalidate his own credit, or to detract from the authority of his word, which ſhould ſtand firm upon it ſelf, and not want an Oath ſupport it.

Tantus in te ſit veri amor, ut quicquid dixeris, juratum putes. Hier.

8. To excuſe this, the Swearer muſt be forced to confeſs another ugly fault in ſpeaking, that is, impertinence, or uſing of waſte and inſignificant words; to be charged wherewith he is indeed however unavoidably liable. For Oaths, as they paſs commonly, are mere excreſcences of Speech, which do nothing elſe but encumber and deform it: they embelliſh diſcourſe, juſt as a wen or a ſcab does beautifie a face; as a ſpot or a patch does adorn a garment. For to what purpoſe (I pray) is God's Name haled into our idle talk? why ſhould we ſo often mention him, when we never mean any thing about him? Into every ſentence to foiſt a dog, or a horſe, would altogether be as proper and pertinent. Theſe ſuperfluous words ſignify nothing, but that the ſpeaker little ſkilleth the uſe of ſpeech, or the rule of converſation, but meaneth to prate any thing without wit or judgment; that his fancy is very beggarly, and craves the aid of any impertinency to relieve it. One would think, that a man of ſenſe ſhould grutch to lend his ears, or incline his attention to ſuch putid ſtuff; that without nauſeating he ſhould not endure to ſee men laviſh time, and ſquander breath ſo frivolouſly.

Πρὸς ἀναπλήρωσιν λόγου. Hier.

9. In fine, this Offence is particularly moſt inexcuſable, in that it ſcarce hath any temptation to it, or bringeth with it any advantage; ſo that it is unaccountable what (beſide mere vanity or perverſeneſs) ſhould diſpoſe men thereto. It gratifieth no ſenſe, it yieldeth no profit, it procureth no honour: for the ſound of it is not very melodious, nor ſurely was any man ever preferred for it, or got an eſtate thereby; it rather to any good ear maketh a horrid and jarring noiſe, it rather produceth diſpleaſure, damage and diſgrace. Wherefore of all dealers in ſin the Swearer is apparently the ſillieſt, and maketh the worſt bargains for himſelf; for he ſinneth gratis, and (like thoſe in the Prophet) ſelleth his Soul for nothing. An Epicure hath ſome reaſon, and an Extortioner is a man of wiſdom, if compared to him; for they enjoy ſome pleaſure, or acquire ſome gain here, in lieu of their Salvation hereafter. But he offends Heaven, and abandons happineſs, he knows not why, nor for what; a fond humour poſſeſſes him, he inconſiderately follows a herd of fopps, he affects to play the Ape; that is all he can ſay for himſelf. Let me be pardoned, if juſt indignation againſt a wickedneſs ſo contemptible, ſo hainous, and ſo ſenſeleſs, and withall ſo notorious, and ſo riſe among us, doth extort from me language ſomewhat tart and vehement.

Iſa. 52. 3.

If men would then but a little conſider things, ſurely this ſcurvy faſhion would be ſoon diſcarded, much fitter for the ſcum of the people, than for the flower of the Gentry; yea rather, much below any man endued with a ſcrap of Reaſon, not to ſay with a grain of Religion. Could we bethink our ſelves, certainly modeſt, ſober and pertinent Diſcourſe would appear far more generous and manly, than ſuch wild Hectoring God Almighty, ſuch rude inſulting over the received Laws, ſuch ruffianly ſwaggering againſt ſobriety and goodneſs. If Gentlemen would regard the Vertues of their Anceſtours, (that gallant Courage, that ſolid Wiſdom, that noble Courteſie, which firſt advanced their Families, and ſevered them from the vulgar,) this degenerate wantonneſs and dirtineſs of Speech would return to the dunghill, or rather (which God grant) would be quite baniſhed from the world

Finally, as to this whole Point, about not offending in our Speech againſt Piety, we ſhould conſider, that as we our ſelves, with all our members and powers, were chiefly deſigned and framed to ſerve and glorify our Maker; (it being withall the greateſt perfection of our nature, and the nobleſt privilege thereof ſo to do;) ſo eſpecially our Tongue and Speaking faculty were given us to declare our admiration and reverence of him, to expreſs our love and gratitude toward him, to celebrate his praiſes, to acknowledge his benefits, to promote his honour and ſervice. This conſequently is the moſt proper and worthy uſe thereof; from this it becomes in effect what the Pſalmiſt ſo often terms it, our glory, and the beſt member we have; as that whereby we far excell all creatures here below; that whereby we conſort with the bleſſed Angels above, in diſtinct utterance of praiſe to our Creatour. Wherefore applying it to any impious diſcourſe, (tending any-wiſe to the diſhonour of God, or diſparagement of Religion,) is a moſt unnatural abuſe thereof, and a vile ingratitude toward him that gave it to us. From which, and from all other offences, God in his mercy preſerve us all, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, unto whom for ever with heart and tongue let us ſtrive to render all glory and praiſe. Amen.

Pſal. 16. 9. & 30. 12. & 57. 8. & 108. 1.

SERMON XIV.

Againſt Fooliſh Talking and Jeſting.

EPHES. V. 4.

----Nor fooliſh talking, nor jeſting, which are not convenient.

MOral and political Aphoriſms are ſeldom couched in ſuch terms, that they ſhould be taken as they ſound preciſely, or according to the wideſt extent of ſignification; but do commonly need expoſition, and admit exception: otherwiſe frequently they would not only claſh with reaſon and experience, but interfere, thwart and ſupplant one another. The beſt Maſters of ſuch wiſdom are wont to interdict things, apt by unſeaſonable or exceſſive uſe to be perverted, in general forms of ſpeech, leaving the reſtrictions, which the caſe may require or bear, to be made by the hearers or interpreters diſcretion: whence many ſeemingly-formal prohibitions are to be received only as ſober cautions. This obſervation may be particularly ſuppoſed applicable to this precept of S. Paul, which ſeemeth univerſally to forbid a practice commended (in ſome caſes and degrees) by Philoſophers as vertuous, not diſallowed by Reaſon, commonly affected by men, often uſed by wiſe and good perſons; from which conſequently if our Religion did wholly debar us, it would ſeem chargeable with ſomewhat too uncouth auſterity and ſourneſs: from imputations of which kind as in its temper and frame it is really moſt free, (it never quenching natural light, or cancelling the dictates of ſound Reaſon, but confirming and improving them ;) ſo it carefully declineth them, injoyning us, that * if there be any things προσφιλῆ, (lovely, or grateful to men,) any things εὔφημα, (of good report and repute,) if there be any vertue and any praiſe, (any thing in the common apprehenſions of men held worthy and laudable,) we ſhould mind thoſe things, that is, ſhould yield them a regard anſwerable to the eſteem they carry among rational and ſober perſons.

Οἱ μήτ' εἰπόντες μηδὲν γελοῖον, τοῖς τε λέγουσι δυσχεραίνοντες, ἄγροικοι καὶ σκληροὶ δοκοῦσιν εἶναι. Ariſt. Eth. 4. 8.

* Phil. 4. 8.

Whence it may ſeem requiſite ſo to interpret and determine S. Paul's meaning here concerning Eutrapelia, (that is, facetious ſpeech, or raillery, by our Tranſlatours rendred Jeſting,) that he may conſiſt with himſelf, and be reconciled to Ariſtotle, who placeth this practice in the rank of Vertues; or that Religion and Reaſon may well accord in the caſe; ſuppoſing, that if there be any kind of Facetiouſneſs innocent and reaſonable, conformable to good manners, (regulated by common ſenſe, and conſiſtent with the tenour of Chriſtian Duty, that is, not tranſgreſſing the bounds of Piety, Charity and Sobriety,) Saint Paul did not intend to diſcountenance or prohibit that kind.

For thus expounding and limiting his intent, we have ſome warrant from himſelf, ſome fair intimations in the words here. For firſt, what ſort of facetious ſpeech he aimeth at, he doth imply by the fellow he coupleth therewith; μωρολογία, (ſaith he) ἢ εὐτραπελία, fooliſh talking, or facetiouſneſs: ſuch Facetiouſneſs therefore he toucheth as doth include Folly, in the matter or manner thereof. Then he farther determineth it by adjoyning a peculiar quality thereof, unprofitableneſs, or impertinency; τὰ μὴ ἀνήκοντα, which are not pertinent, or conducible to any good purpoſe: whence may be collected, that it is a frivolous and idle ſort of Facetiouſneſs which he condemneth.

But however manifeſt it is, that ſome kind thereof he doth earneſtly forbid: whence, in order to the guidance of our practice, it is needful to diſtinguiſh the kinds, ſevering that which is allowable from that which is unlawful; that ſo we may be ſatisfied in the caſe, and not on the one hand ignorantly tranſgreſs our duty, nor on the other trouble our ſelves with ſcruples, others with cenſures, upon the uſe of warrantable liberty therein.

And ſuch a reſolution ſeemeth indeed eſpecially needful in this our Age, (this pleaſant and jocular Age,) which is ſo infinitely addicted to this ſort of ſpeaking, that it ſcarce doth affect or prize any thing near ſo much; all reputation appearing now to vail and ſtoop to that of being a Wit: to be learned, to be wiſe, to be good, are nothing in compariſon thereto; even to be noble and rich are inferiour things, and afford no ſuch glory. Many at leaſt, (to purchaſe this glory, to be deemed conſiderable in this faculty, and enrolled among the Wits,) do not only make ſhipwreck of conſcience, abandon Vertue, and forfeit all pretences to wiſdom; but neglect their eſtates, and proſtitute their honour: ſo to the private damage of many particular perſons, and with no ſmall prejudice to the publick, are our times poſſeſſed and tranſported with this humour. To repreſs the exceſs and extravagance whereof, nothing in way of diſcourſe can ſerve better, than a plain declaration when and how ſuch a practice is allowable or tolerable; when it is wicked and vain, unworthy of a man endued with Reaſon, and pretended to honeſty or honour.

This I ſhall in ſome meaſure endeavour to perform.

But firſt it may be demanded what the thing we ſpeak of is, or what this Facetiouſneſs doth import? To which queſtion I might reply as Democritus did to him that asked the definition of a Man, 'Tis that which we all ſee and know: any one better apprehends what it is by acquaintance, than I can inform him by deſcription. It is indeed a thing ſo verſatile and multiform, appearing in ſo many ſhapes, ſo many poſtures, ſo many garbs, ſo variouſly apprehended by ſeveral eyes and judgments, that it ſeemeth no leſs hard to ſettle a clear and certain notion thereof, than to make a pourtraict of Proteus, or to define the figure of the fleeting Air. Sometimes it lieth in pat alluſion to a known ſtory, or in ſeaſonable application of a trivial ſaying, or in forging an appoſite tale: ſometimes it playeth in words and phraſes, taking advantage from the ambiguity of their ſenſe, or the affinity of their ſound: ſometimes it is wrapped in a dreſs of humorous expreſſion; ſometimes it lurketh under an odd ſimilitude; ſometimes it is lodged in a ſly queſtion, in a ſmart anſwer, in a quirkiſh reaſon, in a ſhrewd intimation, in cunningly diverting, or cleverly retorting an objection: ſometimes it is couched in a bold ſcheme of ſpeech, in a tart Irony, in a luſty Hyperbole, in a ſtartling Metaphor, in a plauſible reconciling of contradictions, or in acute Nonſenſe: ſometimes a ſcenical repreſentation of perſons or things, a counterfeit ſpeech, a mimical look or geſture paſſeth for it: ſometimes an affected ſimplicity, ſometimes a preſumptuous bluntneſs giveth it being: ſometimes it riſeth only from a lucky hitting upon what is ſtrange, ſometimes from a crafty wreſting obvious matter to the purpoſe: often it conſiſteth in one knows not what, and ſpringeth up one can hardly tell how. Its ways are unaccountable and inexplicable; being anſwerable to the numberleſs rovings of fancy and windings of language. It is, in ſhort, a manner of ſpeaking out of the ſimple and plain way, (ſuch as Reaſon teacheth and proveth things by,) which by a pretty ſurprizing uncouthneſs in conceit or expreſſion doth affect and amuſe the fancy, ſtirring in it ſome wonder, and breeding ſome delight thereto. It raiſeth Admiration, as ſignifying a nimble ſagacity of apprehenſion, a ſpecial felicity of invention, a vivacity of ſpirit, and reach of wit more than vulgar: it ſeeming to argue a rare quickneſs of parts, that one can fetch in remote conceits applicable; a notable skill, that he can dexterouſly accommodate them to the purpoſe before him, together with a lively briskneſs of humour, not apt to damp thoſe ſportful flaſhes of imagination. (Whence in Ariſtotle ſuch perſons are termed ἐπιδέξιοι, dexterous men; and εὐτράπελοι, men of facil or verſatile manners, who can eaſily turn themſelves to all things, or turn all things to themſelves.) It alſo procureth Delight, by gratifying curioſity with its rareneſs, or ſemblance of difficulty; (as monſters, not for their beauty, but their rarity; as jugling tricks, not for their uſe, but their abſtruſeneſs, are beheld with pleaſure;) by diverting the mind from its road of ſerious thoughts; by inſtilling gayety and airineſs of ſpirit; by provoking to ſuch diſpoſitions of ſpirit in way of emulation or complaiſance; and by ſeaſoning matters, otherwiſe diſtaſtful or inſipid, with an unuſual, and thence grateful tang.

Eadem quæ, ſi imprudentibus excidunt, ſtulta ſunt, ſi ſimulamus, venuſta creduntur. Quint. 6. 3.

Et hercle omnis falſè dicendi ratio in eo eſt, ut aliter quàm eſt rectum verúmque dicatur. Quint.

Eth. 4. 8.

Εὐτράπελος λέγεται ὁ ποικίλος, ὁ παντοδαπὸς, ὁ ἄστατος, ὁ εὔκολος, ὁ πάντα γινόμενος. Chryſ. in Eph. Or. 17.

But ſaying no more concerning what it is, and leaving it to your imagination and experience to ſupply the defect of ſuch explication, I ſhall addreſs my ſelf to ſhew, firſt, when and how ſuch a manner of ſpeaking may be allowed; then, in what matters and ways it ſhould be condemned.

I. Such Facetiouſneſs is not abſolutely unreaſonable or unlawful, which miniſtreth harmleſs divertiſement, and delight to converſation: (harmleſs, I ſay, that is, not intrenching upon Piety, not infringing Δοκεῖ δὲ ἡ ἀνάπαυσις καὶ ἡ παιδιὰ ἐν τῷ βίῳ εἶναι ἀναγκαῖον. Ariſt. Eth. 4. 8.

Charity or Juſtice, not diſturbing Peace.) For Chriſtianity is not ſo tetrical, ſo harſh, ſo envious, as to bar us continually from innocent, much leſs from wholſome and uſeful pleaſure, ſuch as humane life doth need or require. And if jocular diſcourſe may ſerve to good purpoſes of this kind; if it may be apt to raiſe our drooping ſpirits, to allay our irkſome cares, to whet our blunted induſtry, to recreate our minds being tired and cloyed with graver occupations; if it may breed alacrity, or maintain good humour among us; if it may conduce to ſweeten converſation and endear ſociety; then is it not inconvenient, or unprofitable. If for thoſe ends we may uſe other recreations, employing on them our ears and eyes, our hands and feet, our other inſtruments of ſenſe and motion; why may we not as well to them accommodate our organs of ſpeech, and interiour ſenſe? Why ſhould thoſe games which excite our wits and fancies be leſs reaſonable, than thoſe whereby our groſſer parts and faculties are exerciſed? Yea, why are not thoſe more reaſonable, ſince they are performed in a manly way, and have in them a ſmack of Reaſon; ſeeing alſo they may be ſo managed, as not only to divert and pleaſe, but to improve and profit the mind, rouzing and quickning it, yea ſometimes enlightning and inſtructing it, by good ſenſe conveyed in jocular expreſſion?

Danda eſt remiſſio animis; meliores acriórésque requieti ſurgent, &c. Sen. de Tranq. 15.

---ridentem dicere verum Quid vetat?

It would ſurely be hard, that we ſhould be tied ever to knit the brow, and ſqueeze the brain, (to be always ſadly dumpiſh; or ſeriouſly penſive,) that all divertiſement of mirth and pleaſantneſs ſhould be ſhut out of converſation: and how can we better relieve our minds, or relax our thoughts, how can we be more ingenuouſly chearful, in what more kindly way can we exhilarate our ſelves and others, than by thus ſacrificing to the Graces, as the Ancients call'd it? Are not ſome perſons always, and all perſons ſometimes, uncapable otherwiſe to divert themſelves, than by ſuch diſcourſe? Shall we, I ſay, have no recreation: or muſt our recreations be ever clowniſh, or childiſh, conſiſting merely in ruſtical efforts, or in petty ſleights of bodily ſtrength and activity? Were we in fine obliged ever to talk like Philoſophers, aſſigning dry reaſons for every thing, and dropping grave ſentences upon all occaſions, would it not much deaden humane life, and make ordinary converſation exceedingly to languiſh? Facetiouſneſs therefore in ſuch caſes, and to ſuch purpoſes, may be allowable.

Θῦε ταῖς χάρισι· ità Plato Xenocratem moroſiorem monuit.

2. Facetiouſneſs is allowable, when it is the moſt proper inſtrument of expoſing things apparently baſe and vile to due contempt. It is many times expedient, that things really ridiculous ſhould appear ſuch, that they may be ſufficiently loathed and ſhunned; and to render them ſuch is the part of a facetious wit, and uſually can only be compaſſed thereby. When to impugn them with down-right reaſon, or to check them by ſerious diſcourſe, would ſignify nothing; then repreſenting them in a ſhape ſtrangely-ugly to the fancy, and thereby raiſing deriſion at them, may effectually diſcountenance them. Thus did the Prophet Elias expoſe the wicked ſuperſtition of thoſe who worſhipped Baal: Elias (ſaith the Text) mocked them, and ſaid, Cry aloud; for he is a God, either he is talking, or he is purſuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he ſleeps, and muſt be awaked. By which one pregnant inſtance, it appeareth, that reaſoning pleaſantly-abuſive in ſome caſes may be uſeful. The Holy Scripture doth not indeed uſe it frequently; (it not ſuting the Divine ſimplicity and ſtately gravity thereof to do ſo;) yet its condeſcenſion thereto at any time ſufficiently doth authorize a cautious uſe thereof. When ſarcaſtical twitches are needful to pierce the thick skins of men, men to correct their lethargick ſtupidity, to rouze them out of their drouzy negligence; then may they well be applied: when plain declarations will not enlighten people, to diſcern the truth and weight of things, and blunt arguments will not penetrate,to convince or perſuade them to their duty; then doth Reaſon freely reſign its place to Wit, allowing it to undertake its work of inſtruction and reproof.

1 King. 18. 27.

3. Facetious diſcourſe particularly may be commodious for reproving ſome vices, and reclaiming ſome perſons; (as Salt for cleanſing and curing ſome ſores.) It commonly procureth a more eaſie acceſs to the ears of men, and worketh a ſtronger impreſſion on their hearts, than other diſcourſe could do. Many who will not ſtand a direct reproof, and cannot abide to be plainly admoniſhed of their fault, will yet endure to be pleaſantly rubb'd, and will patiently bear a jocund wipe; though they abominate all language purely bitter or ſour, yet they can reliſh diſcourſe having in it a pleaſant tartneſs: you muſt not chide them as their maſter, but you may gibe with them as their companion: if you do that, they will take you for pragmatical and haughty; this they may interpret friendſhip and freedom. Moſt men are of that temper; and particularly the Genius of divers perſons, whoſe opinions and practices we ſhould ſtrive to correct, doth require not a grave and ſevere, but a free and merry way of treating them. For what can be more unſutable and unpromiſing, than to ſeem ſerious with thoſe who are not ſo themſelves, or demure with the ſcornful? If we deſign either to pleaſe or vex them into better manners, we muſt be as ſportful in a manner, or as contemptuous as themſelves. If we mean to be heard by them, we muſt talk in their own faſhion, with humour and jollity: if we will inſtruct them, we muſt withal ſomewhat divert them: we muſt ſeem to play with them, if we think to convey any ſober thoughts into them. They ſcorn to be formally adviſed or taught; but they may perhaps be ſlily laughed and lured into a better mind. If by ſuch complaiſance we can inveigle thoſe Dottrels to hearken to us, we may induce them to conſider farther, and give Reaſon ſome competent ſcope, ſome fair play with them. Good Reaſon may be apparelled in the garb of Wit, and therein will ſecurely paſs, whither in its native homelineſs it could never arrive: and being come thither, it with eſpecial advantage may impreſs good advice; making an offender more clearly to ſee, and more deeply to feel his miſcarriage; being repreſented to his fancy in a ſtrain ſomewhat rare and remarkable, yet not ſo fierce and frightful. The ſeverity of reproof is tempered,and the reprover's anger diſguiſed thereby. The guilty perſon cannot but obſerve, that he who thus reprehends him is not diſturb'd or out of humour,and that he rather pitieth than hateth him;which breedeth a veneration to him,and imparteth no ſmall efficacy to his wholſome ſuggeſtions.Such a Reprehenſion,while it forceth a ſmile without,doth work remorſe within; while it ſeemeth to tickle the ear,doth ſting the heart. In fine, many whoſe foreheads are brazed and hearts ſteeled againſt all blame,are yet not of proof againſt deriſion;divers who never will be reaſoned,may be raillied into better order: in which caſes Raillery,as an inſtrument of ſo important good, as a ſervant of the beſt Charity may be allowed.

4. Some Errours likewiſe in this way may be moſt properly and moſt ſucceſsfully confuted; ſuch as deſerve not,and hardly can bear a ſerious and ſolid confutation. He that will conteſt things apparently decided by ſenſe and experience, or who diſavows clear Principles of reaſon,approved by general conſent, and the common ſenſe of men, what other hopeful way is there of proceeding with him, than pleaſantly to explode his conceits? To diſpute ſeriouſly with him, were trifling; to trifle with him is the proper courſe: ſince he rejecteth the grounds of Reaſoning, 'tis vain to be in earneſt; what then remains, but to jeſt with him? To deal ſeriouſly, were to yield too much reſpect to ſuch a baffler, and too much weight to his fancies; to raiſe the man too high in his courage and conceit; to make his pretences ſeem worthy the conſidering and canvaſing. Briefly, perverſe obſtinacy is more eaſily quelled, petulant impudence is ſooner daſhed, Sophiſtical captiouſneſs is more ſafely eluded, Sceptical wantonneſs is more ſurely confounded in this, than in the ſimple way of diſcourſe.

5. This way is alſo commonly the beſt way of defence againſt unjuſt reproach and obloquy. To yield to a ſlandrous reviler a ſerious reply, or to make a formal plea againſt his charge, doth ſeem to imply, that we much conſider, or deeply reſent it; whereas by pleaſant reflexion on it we ſignify, the matter only deſerves contempt, and that we take our ſelves unconcerned therein. So eaſily without care or trouble may the brunts of malice be declined or repelled.

6. This way may be allowed in way of counterbalancing, and in compliance to the faſhion of others. It would be a diſadvantage unto Truth and Vertue, if their defenders were barred from the uſe of this weapon; ſince it is that eſpecially whereby the patrons of Errour and Vice do maintain and propagate them. They being deſtitute of good reaſon, do uſually recommend their abſurd and peſtilent notions by a pleaſantneſs of conceit and expreſſion, bewitching the fancies of ſhallow hearers, and inveagling heedleſs perſons to a liking of them: and if, for reclaiming ſuch people, the folly of thoſe Seducers may in the like manner be diſplayed as ridiculous and odious, why ſhould that advantage be refuſed? It is Wit that wageth the war againſt Reaſon, againſt Vertue, againſt Religion; Wit alone it is that perverteth ſo many, and ſo greatly corrupteth the world: It may therefore be needful, in our warfare for thoſe deareſt concerns, to ſort the manner of our fighting with that of our adverſaries, and with the ſame kind of arms to protect Goodneſs, whereby they do aſſail it. If Wit may happily ſerve under the banner of Truth and Vertue, we may impreſt it for that ſervice; and good it were to reſcue ſo worthy a faculty from ſo vile abuſe. It is the right of Reaſon and Piety, to command that and all other endowments; Folly and Impiety do only uſurp them: juſt and fit therefore it is, to wreſt them out of ſo bad hands, to revoke them to their right uſe and duty.

It doth eſpecially ſeem requiſite to do it in this Age, wherein plain Reaſon is deemed a dull and heavy thing. When the mental appetite of men is become like the corporeal, and cannot reliſh any food without ſome piquant ſawce, ſo that people will rather ſtarve, than live on ſolid fare; when ſubſtantial and ſound diſcourſe findeth ſmall attention, or acceptance; in ſuch a time, he that can, may in complaiſance, and for faſhion's ſake, vouchſafe to be facetious; an ingenious vein coupled with an honeſt mind may be a good talent; he ſhall employ Wit commendably, who by it can further the intereſts of Goodneſs, alluring men firſt to liſten, then inducing them to conſent unto its wholſome dictates and precepts.

Since men are ſo irreclaimably diſpoſed to mirth and laughter, it may be well to ſet them in the right pin, to divert their humour into the proper chanel, that they may pleaſe themſelves in deriding things which deſerve it, ceaſing to laugh at that which requireth reverence or horrour.

It may alſo be expedient to put the world out of conceit, that all ſober and good men are a ſort of ſuch lumpiſh or ſour people, that they can utter nothing but flat and drowzy ſtuff; by ſhewing them, that ſuch perſons, when they ſee cauſe, in condeſcenſion, can be as brisk and ſmart as themſelves; when they pleaſe, can ſpeak pleaſantly and wittily as well as gravely and judiciouſly. This way at leaſt, in reſpect to the various palates of men, may for variety ſake be ſometimes attempted, when other means do fail: when many ſtrict and ſubtle arguings, many zealous declamations, many wholſome ſerious diſcourſes have been ſpent, without effecting the extirpation of bad principles, or converſion of thoſe who abett them; this courſe may be tried, and ſome perhaps may be reclaimed thereby.

7. Furthermore, the warrantableneſs of this practice in ſome caſes may be inferr'd from a parity of reaſon, in this manner: If it be lawful, (as by the beſt authorities it plainly doth appear to be,) in uſing Rhetorical ſchemes, Poetical ſtrains, involutions of ſenſe in Allegories, Fables, Parables and Riddles, to diſcoaſt from the plain and ſimple way of ſpeech; why may not Facetiouſneſs, iſſuing from the ſame principles, directed to the ſame ends, ſerving to like purpoſes, be likewiſe uſed blameleſly? If thoſe exorbitancies of ſpeech may be accommodated to inſtil good Doctrine into the head, to excite good Paſſions in the heart, to illuſtrate and adorn the Truth, in a delightful and taking way; and facetious diſcourſe be ſometime notoriouſly conducible to the ſame ends; why, they being retained, ſhould it be rejected? eſpecially conſidering how difficult often it may be, to diſtinguiſh thoſe forms of diſcourſe from this, or exactly to define the limits which ſever Rhetorick and Raillery. Some elegant figures and tropes of Rhetorick (biting Sarcaſms, ſly Ironies, ſtrong Metaphors, lofty Hyperbole's, Paronomaſies, Oxymorons, and the like, frequently uſed by the beſt ſpeakers, and not ſeldom even by Sacred Writers) do lie very near upon the confines of Jocularity, and are not eaſily differenced from thoſe ſallies of wit, wherein the lepid way doth conſiſt: ſo that were this wholly culpable, it would be matter of ſcruple, whether one hath committed a fault or no, when he meant only to play the Oratour, or the Poet; and hard ſurely it would be to find a judge, who could preciſely ſet out the difference between a Jeſt and a Flouriſh.

8. I ſhall only add, that of old even the ſageſt and graveſt perſons (perſons of moſt rigid and ſevere Vertue) did much affect this kind of diſcourſe, and did apply it to noble purpoſes. The great introducer of moral wiſdom among the Pagans did practiſe it ſo much, (by it repreſſing the windy pride and fallacious vanity of Sophiſters in his time,) that he thereby got the name of ὁ εἴρων, the Droll: and the reſt of thoſe who purſued his deſign, do by numberleſs ſtories and Apophthegms recorded of them appear well skilled, and much delighted in this way. Many great Princes, (as Auguſtus Cæſar for one, many of whoſe Jeſts are extant in Macrobius,) many grave Stateſmen, (as Cicero particularly, who compoſed ſeveral books of Jeſts,) many famous Captains, (as Fabius M. Cato the Cenſor, Scipio Africanus, Epaminondas, Themiſtocles, Phocion, and many others, whoſe witty Sayings together with their Martial exploits are reported by Hiſtorians,) have pleaſed themſelves herein, and made it a condiment of their weighty buſineſſes. * So that practiſing thus, (within certain rule and compaſs) we cannot err without great patterns, and mighty patrons.

Cic. de Orat. 2.

* The two greateſt men and graveſt Divines of their time, (S. Greg.Naz. and S. Baſil) could entertain one another with facetious Epiſtles. (Greg. Naz. Ep. 7. ad Baſil. Σὺ σκῶπτε ϗ διάσυρε, &c. Et Ep. 8.)

9. In fine, ſince it cannot be ſhewn, that ſuch a ſportfulneſs of wit and fancy doth contain an intrinſick and inſeparable turpitude; ſince it may be ſo cleanly, handſomely and innocently uſed, as not to defile or diſcompoſe the mind of the ſpeaker, not to wrong or harm the hearer, not to derogate from any worthy ſubject of diſcourſe, not to infringe decency, to diſturb peace, to violate any of the grand duties incumbent on us, (Piety, Charity, Juſtice, Sobriety,) but rather ſometimes may yield advantage in thoſe reſpects; it cannot well abſolutely and univerſally be condemned: and when not uſed upon improper matter, in an unfit manner, with exceſſive meaſure, at undue ſeaſon, to evil purpoſe, it may be allowed. It is bad objects, or bad adjuncts, which do ſpoil its indifference and innocence: it is the abuſe thereof, to which (as all pleaſant things are dangerous, and apt to degenerate into baits of intemperance and exceſs) it is very liable, that corrupteth it; and ſeemeth to be the ground, why in ſo general terms it is prohibited by the Apoſtle. Which prohibition to what caſes, or what ſorts of Jeſting it extendeth, we come now to declare.

Τὸ γελᾶν, καὶ ἀστεῖα λέγειν, οὐ δοκεῖ μὲν ὡμολογημένον ἁμάρτημα εἶναι· ἄγει δὲ, &c. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ιε΄.

Ὁ εὐτραπελόμενος κατήγορος ἔσται ταχέως. Chryſ.

II. 1. All profane Jeſting, all ſpeaking looſely and wantonly about Holy things, (things nearly related to God and Religion,) making ſuch things the matters of ſport and mockery, playing and trifling with them, is certainly prohibited, as an intolerably-vain and wicked practice. It is an infallible ſign of a vain and light ſpirit, which conſidereth little, and cannot diſtinguiſh things, to talk ſlightly concerning perſons of high dignity, to whom eſpecial reſpect is due; or about matters of great importance, which deſerve very ſerious conſideration. No man ſpeaketh, or ſhould ſpeak, of his Prince that which he hath not weighed, whether it will conſiſt with that veneration which ſhould be preſerved inviolate to him: And is not the ſame, is not much greater care to be uſed in regard to the incomparably-great and glorious Majeſty of Heaven? Yes ſurely: as we ſhould not without great awe think of him; ſo we ſhould not preſume to mention his Name, his Word, his Inſtitutions, any thing immediately belonging to him, without profoundeſt reverence and dread. It is the moſt enormous ſaucineſs that can be imagined, to ſpeak petulantly or pertly concerning Him; eſpecially conſidering, that what-ever we do ſay about him, we do utter it in his preſence, and to his very face. For there is not (as the Holy Pſalmiſt conſidered) a word in my tongue, but lo, O Lord, thou knoweſt it altogether. No man alſo hath the heart to droll, or thinks raillery convenient in caſes nearly touching his life, his health, his eſtate, or his fame: and are the true life and health of our Soul, are intereſt in God's favour and mercy, are everlaſting glory and bliſs affairs of leſs moment? are the treaſures and joys of Paradiſe, are the damages and torments in Hell more jeſting matters? No certainly, no: in all reaſon therefore it becometh us, and it infinitely concerneth us, when-ever we think of theſe things, to be in beſt earneſt, always to ſpeak of them in moſt ſober ſadneſs.

Pſal. 139. 4.

The proper objects of common mirth and ſportful divertiſement are mean and petty matters; any thing at leaſt is by playing therewith made ſuch: great things are thereby diminiſhed and debaſed; eſpecially Sacred things do grievouſly ſuffer thence, being with extreme indecency and indignity depreſſed beneath themſelves, when they become the ſubjects of flaſhy wit, or the entertainments of frothy merriment: to ſacrifice their honour to our vain pleaſure, being like the ridiculous fondneſs of that people, which (as Ælian reporteth) worſhipping a Fly, did offer up an Oxe thereto. Theſe things were by God inſtituted, and propoſed to us for purpoſes quite different; to compoſe our hearts, and ſettle our fancies in a moſt ſerious frame; to breed inward ſatisfaction, and joy purely ſpiritual; to exerciſe our moſt ſolemn thoughts, and employ our graveſt diſcourſes: All our ſpeech therefore about them ſhould be wholſome, apt to afford good inſtruction, or to excite good affections; good, (as S. Paul ſpeaketh) for the uſe of edifying, that it may miniſter grace unto the hearers.

Tit. 2. 8.
Eph. 4. 29.

If we muſt be facetious and merry, the field is wide and ſpacious; there are matters enough in the world beſide theſe moſt auguſt and dreadful things, to try our faculties, and pleaſe our humour with; every-where light and ludicrous things occurr: it therefore doth argue a marvellous poverty of wit, and barrenneſs of invention, (no leſs than a ſtrange defect of goodneſs, and want of diſcretion,) in thoſe who can deviſe no other ſubjects to frollick upon beſide theſe, of all moſt improper and perillous; who cannot ſeem ingenious under the charge of ſo highly treſpaſſing upon decency, diſclaiming wiſdom, wounding the ears of others, and their own conſciences. Seem ingenious, I ſay; for ſeldom thoſe perſons really are ſuch, or are capable to diſcover any wit in a wiſe and manly way. 'Tis not the excellency of their fancies, which in themſelves uſually are ſorry and inſipid enough, but the uncouthneſs of their preſumption; not their extraordinary wit, but their prodigious raſhneſs, which is to be admired. They are gazed on, as the doers of bold tricks, who dare perform that which no ſober man will attempt: they do indeed rather deſerve themſelves to be laughed at, than their conceits. For what can be more ridiculous, than we do make our ſelves, when we thus fiddle and fool with our own Souls; when, to make vain people merry, we incenſe God's earneſt diſpleaſure; when, to raiſe a fit of preſent laughter, we expoſe our ſelves to endleſs wailing and woe; when, to be reckoned Wits, we prove our ſelves ſtark wild? Surely to this caſe we may accommodate that of a truly-great Wit, King Solomon; I ſaid of laughter, It is mad; and of mirth, What doeth it?

Eccles 2. 2.

2. All injurious, abuſive, ſcurrilous Jeſting, which cauſeleſly or needleſly tendeth to the diſgrace, damage, vexation, or prejudice in any kind of our Neighbour, (provoking his diſpleaſure, grating on his modeſty, ſtirring paſſion in him,) is alſo prohibited. When men, to raiſe an admiration of their wit, to pleaſe themſelves, or gratify the humour of other men, do expoſe their Neighbour to ſcorn and contempt, making ignominious reflexions upon his perſon or his actions, taunting his real imperfections, or faſtning imaginary ones upon him, they tranſgreſs their duty, and abuſe their wits; 'tis not urbanity, or genuine facetiouſneſs, but uncivil rudeneſs, or vile malignity. To do thus, as it is the office of mean and baſe ſpirits, (unfit for any worthy or weighty employments,) ſo it is full of inhumanity, of iniquity, of indecency and folly. For the weakneſſes of men, of what kind ſoever, (natural, or moral, in quality, or in act,) conſidering whence they ſpring, and how much we are all ſubject to them, and do need excuſe for them, do in equity challenge compaſſion to be had of them; not complacency to be taken in them, or mirth drawn from them; they, in reſpect to common humanity, ſhould rather be ſtudiouſly connived at and concealed, or mildly excuſed, than wilfully laid open, and wantonly deſcanted upon; they rather are to be deplored ſecretly, than openly derided.

——ſolutos Qui captat riſus hominum, famámque dicacis, Hic niger eſt. Hor. S. 1. 4.

Ὁ δὲ βωμολόχος ἥττων ἐστὶ τοῦ γελοίου, καὶ οὔτε ἑαυτοῦ οὔτε τῶν ἄλλων ἀπεχόμενος, εἰ γέλωτα ποιήσει. Ariſt. Eth. 4. 8.

The Reputation of men is too noble a ſacrifice to be offered up to vain-glory, fond pleaſure, or ill humour; it is a good far more dear and pretious, than to be proſtituted for idle ſport and divertiſement. It becometh us not to trifle with that, which in common eſtimation is of ſo great moment; to play rudely with a thing ſo very brittle, yet of ſo vaſt price; which being once broken or crackt, it is very hard, and ſcarce poſſible, to repair. A ſmall tranſient pleaſure, a tickling the ears, wagging the lungs, forming the face into a ſmile, a giggle, or a humme, are not to be purchaſed with the grievous diſtaſt and ſmart, perhaps with the real damage and miſchief of our Neighbour, which attend upon contempt. This is not Jeſting ſurely, but bad earneſt: 'tis wild mirth, which is the mother of grief to thoſe whom we ſhould tenderly love; 'tis unnatural ſport, which breedeth diſpleaſure in them whoſe delight it ſhould promote, whoſe liking it ſhould procure: it croſſeth the nature and deſign of this way of ſpeaking; which is, to cement and ingratiate ſociety, to render converſation pleaſant and ſprightly, for mutual ſatisfaction and comfort.

Vitrea fama. Hor.

Prov. 26. 18, 19. As a mad man who caſteth fire brands, arrows, and death; ſo is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and ſaith, Am I not in ſport? οἱ ἐνεδρεύοντες τοὺς φίλους---LXX.

True Feſtivity is called Salt, and ſuch it ſhould be, giving a ſmart, but ſavoury reliſh to diſcourſe; exciting an appetite, not irritating diſguſt; cleanſing ſometime, but never creating a ſore: and, ἐὰν μωρανθῇ, if it become thus inſipid, or unſavoury, it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be caſt out, and to be troden under foot of men. Such Jeſting which doth not ſeaſon wholſome or harmleſs diſcourſe, but giveth a haut-gouſt to putid and poiſonous ſtuff, gratifying diſtempered palates and corrupt ſtomachs, is indeed odious and deſpicable folly, to be caſt out with loathing, to be troden under foot with contempt. If a man offends in this ſort to pleaſe himſelf, 'tis ſcurvy malignity; if to delight others, 'tis baſe ſervility and flattery: upon the firſt ſcore he is a buffoon to himſelf; upon the laſt, a fool to others. And well in common ſpeech are ſuch practiſers ſo termed, the grounds of that practice being ſo vain, and the effects ſo unhappy. The heart of fools (ſaith the Wiſe man) is in the houſe of mirth; meaning, it ſeems, eſpecially ſuch hurtfully-wanton mirth: for it is (as he farther telleth us) the property of fools, to delight in doing harm; (It is a ſport to a fool to do miſchief.) Is it not in earneſt moſt palpable folly, for ſo mean ends to do ſo great harm; to diſoblige men in ſport; to loſe friends, and get enemies, for a conceit; out of a light humour to provoke fierce wrath, and breed tough hatred; to engage one's ſelf conſequently very far in ſtrife, danger and trouble? No way certainly is more apt to produce ſuch effects than this; nothing more ſpeedily enflameth, or more thoroughly engageth men, or ſticketh longer in mens hearts and memories, than bitter taunts and ſcoffs: whence this hony ſoon turns into gall; theſe jolly Comedies do commonly terminate in woful Tragedies.

Matt. 5. 13. Nimium riſus pretium eſt, ſi probitatis impendio conſtat. Quintil.

Εἰ καλὸν τὸ πρᾶγμα, τί τοῖς μίμοις ἀφίεται; μῖμος γίνῃ, καὶ οὐκ αἰσχύνῃ; Chryſ.

Eccles 7. 4.

Prov. 10. 23. Fools make a mock of ſin. Prov. 14. 9.

Potiùs amicum quàm dictum perdidi.

———dummodo riſum
Excutiat ſibi, non hic cuiquam parcet amico. Hor. S. 1. 4.

———dicax idem, & Tiberium acerbis facetiis irridere ſolitus, quarum apud præpotentes in longum memoria eſt. Tac. V. Ann. p. 184.

Eſpecially this ſcurrilous and ſcoffing way is then moſt deteſtable, when it not only expoſeth the blemiſhes and infirmities of men, but abuſeth Piety and Vertue themſelves; flouting perſons for their conſtancy in Devotion, or their ſtrict adherence to a conſcientious practice of Duty; aiming to effect that which Job complaineth of, The juſt upright man is laughed to ſcorn; reſembling thoſe whom the Pſalmiſt thus deſcribeth, Who whet their tongue like a ſword, and bend their arrows, Pſal. 64. 3, 4.

even bitter words, That they may ſhoot in ſecret at the perfect ; ſerving good men as Jeremy was ſerved, The word of the Lord (ſaith he) was Jer. 20. 8. made a reproach unto me, and a deriſion daily.

This practice doth evidently in the higheſt degree tend to the diſparagement and diſcouragement of Goodneſs; (aiming to expoſe it, and to render men aſhamed thereof;) and it manifeſtly proceedeth from a deſperate corruption of mind, (from a mind hardned and emboldned, ſold and enſlaved to wickedneſs:) whence they who deal therein are in Holy Scripture repreſented as egregious ſinners, or perſons ſuperlatively wicked, under the name of Scorners; (λοιμοὺς, Peſts, or peſtilent men, the Greek Tranſlatours call them, properly enough in regard to the effects of their practice;) concerning whom the Wiſe man (ſignifying how God will meet with them in their own way) ſaith, Surely Prov. 3. 34.
the Lord ſcorneth the ſcorners. Ἐμπαίκτας, Scoffers, (or Mockers,) Saint 2 Pet. 3. 3.
Peter termeth them, who walk according to their own luſts; who not being willing to practiſe, are ready to deride Vertue; thereby ſtriving to ſeduce others into their pernicious courſes.

This offence alſo proportionably groweth more criminal, as it preſumeth to reach perſons eminent in dignity or worth, unto whom ſpecial veneration is appropriate. This adjoyneth ſaucineſs to ſcurrility, and advanceth the wrong thereof into a kind of ſacrilege. 'Tis not only injuſtice, but profaneneſs, to abuſe the Gods. Their ſtation is a ſanctu- Exod. 22. 28.
ary from all irreverence and reproach; they are ſeated on high, that we may only look up to them with reſpect; their defects are not to be ſeen, or not to be touched by malicious or wanton wits, by ſpightful or ſcornful tongues: the diminution of their credit is a publick miſchief, and the State it ſelf doth ſuffer in their becoming objects of ſcorn; not only themſelves are vilified and degraded, but the great affairs they manage are obſtructed, the juſtice they adminiſter is diſparaged thereby.

In fine, no Jeſting is allowable, which is not throughly innocent: it is an unworthy perverting of wit, to employ it in biting and ſcratching; in working prejudice to any man's reputation, or intereſt; in needleſly incenſing any man's anger, or ſorrow; in raiſing animoſities, diſſenſions and feuds among any.

Πόῤῥω δὲ τοῦτο Χριστιανοῦ, τὸ κωμῳδεῖν. Chryſ. in Eph. Or. 17.
Γλῶσσαν ἔχεις, οὐχ ἵνα ἕτερον κωμῳδήσῃς, ἀλλ' ἵνα εὐχαριστήσῃς τῷ Θεῷ. Idem.

Whence it is ſomewhat ſtrange, that any men from ſo mean and ſilly a practice ſhould expect commendation, or that any ſhould afford regard thereto; the which it is ſo far from meriting, that indeed contempt and abhorrence are due to it. Men do truly more render themſelves deſpicable than others, when, without juſt ground, or reaſonable occaſion, they do attaque others in this way. That ſuch a practice doth ever find any encouragement or acceptance, whence can it proceed, but from the bad nature and ſmall judgment of ſome perſons? For to any man who is endued with any ſenſe of goodneſs, and hath a competence of true wit, or a right knowledge of good manners, (who knows Hor.
—inurbanum lepido ſeponere dicto,) it cannot but be unſavoury and loathſome. The repute it obtaineth is in all reſpects unjuſt. So would it appear, not only were the cauſe to be decided in the court of morality, becauſe it conſiſts not with Vertue and Wiſdom; but even before any competent judges of wit it ſelf. For he overthrows his own pretence, and cannot reaſonably claim any intereſt in wit, who doth thus behave himſelf:

himſelf: he prejudgeth himſelf to want wit, who cannot deſcry fit matter to divert himſelf or others: he diſcovereth a great ſtraitneſs and ſterility of good invention, who cannot in all the wide field of things find better ſubjects of diſcourſe; who knows not how to be ingenious within reaſonable compaſs, but to pick up a ſorry conceit is forced to make excurſions beyond the bounds of honeſty and decency.

Neither is it any argument of conſiderable ability in him that haps to pleaſe this way: a ſlender faculty will ſerve the turn. The ſharpneſs of his ſpeech cometh not from wit ſo much as from choler, which furniſheth the loweſt inventions with a kind of pungent expreſſion, and giveth an edge to every ſpightful word: ſo that any dull wretch doth ſeem to ſcold eloquently and ingeniouſly. Commonly alſo Satyrical taunts do owe their ſeeming piquancy, not to the ſpeaker, or his words, but to the ſubject, and the hearers; the matter conſpiring with the bad nature, or the vanity of men, who love to laugh at any rate, and to be pleaſed at the expence of other mens repute; conceiting themſelves extolled by the depreſſion of their neighbour, and hoping to gain by his loſs. Such cuſtomers they are that maintain the bitter Wits, who otherwiſe would want trade, and might go a begging. For commonly they who ſeem to excell this way, are miſerably flat in other diſcourſe, and moſt dully ſerious: they have a particular unaptneſs to deſcribe any good thing, or commend any worthy perſon; being deſtitute of right Idea's, and proper terms anſwerable to ſuch purpoſes: their repreſentations of that kind are abſurd and unhandſome; their Elogies (to uſe their own way of ſpeaking) are in effect Satyrs, and they can hardly more abuſe a man than by attempting to commend him; like thoſe in the Prophet, who were wiſe to do ill, but to do well had no knowledge.

Obtrectatio & livor pronis auribus accipiuntur: quippe adulationi fœdum crimen ſervitutis, malignitati falſa ſpecies libertatis ineſt. Tac. Hiſt. 1. init.

Jer. 4. 22.

3. I paſs by, that it is very culpable to be facetious in obſcene and ſmutty matters. Such things are not to be diſcourſed on either in jeſt, or in earneſt; they muſt not, as S. Paul ſaith, be ſo much as named among Chriſtians: to meddle with them is not to diſport, but to defile one's ſelf, and others. There is indeed no more certain ſign of a mind utterly debauched from Piety and Vertue, than affecting ſuch talk. But farther,

Eph. 5. 3.

4. All unſeaſonable Jeſting is blameable. As there are ſome proper ſeaſons of relaxation, when we may deſipere in loco; ſo are there ſome times, and circumſtances of things, wherein it concerneth and becometh men to be ſerious in mind, grave in demeanour, and plain in diſcourſe; when to ſport in this way is to do indecently, or uncivilly, to be impertinent, or troubleſome.

Vitandum nè petulans, nè ſuperbum, nè loco, nè tempori alienum, nè præparatum & domo allatum videatur. Quint.

It comporteth not well with the preſence of Superiours, before whom it becometh us to be compoſed and modeſt: much leſs with the performance of Sacred offices, which require an earneſt attention, and moſt ſerious frame of mind.

In deliberations and debates about affairs of great importance, the ſimple manner of ſpeaking to the point is the proper, eaſie, clear and compendious way: facetious ſpeech there ſerves only to obſtruct and entangle buſineſs, to loſe time, and protract the reſult. The Shop and Exchange will ſcarce endure Jeſting in their lower tranſactions: the Senate, the Court of juſtice, the Church do much more exclude it from their more weighty Conſultations. Whenever it juſtleth out, or hindereth the diſpatch of other ſerious buſineſs, taking up the room, or ſwallowing the time due to it, or indiſpoſing the minds of the audience to attend it, then it is unſeaſonable and peſtilent. Παίζειν, ἵνα σπουδάζῃς.

Μή μοι τὰ κομψ', ἀλλ' ὧν πόλει δεῖ. Eurip. Ariſt. Pol. 2. 4.

Ariſt. Eth. 10. 6.

To play, that we may be ſeriouſly buſy, is the good rule (of Anacharſis,) implying the ſubordination of ſport to buſineſs, as a condiment, and furtherance, not an impediment or clog thereto. He that for his ſport neglects his buſineſs, deſerves indeed to be reckoned among children; and childrens fortune will attend him, to be pleaſed with toys, and to fail of ſubſtantial profit.

'Tis, again, improper (becauſe indeed uncivil, and inhumane) to jeſt with perſons that are in a ſad or afflicted condition; as arguing want of due conſidering, or due commiſerating their caſe: it appears a kind of inſulting upon their misfortune, and is apt to foment their grief. Even in our own caſe (upon any diſaſtrous occurrence to our ſelves) it would not be ſeemly to frollick it thus; it would ſignify want of due regard to the frowns of God, and the ſtrokes of his hand; it would croſs the Wiſe man's advice, In the day of proſperity be joyful, but in the day of adverſity conſider.

Adverſus miſeros inhumanus eſt jocus. Quint.

Eccleſ. 7. 14.

It is alſo not ſeaſonable, or civil, to be jocund in this way with thoſe who deſire to be ſerious, and like not the humour. Jocularity ſhould not be forcibly obtruded, but by a kindly conſpiracy (or tacit compact) ſlip into converſation: conſent and complaiſance give all the life thereto. Its deſign is to ſweeten and eaſe ſociety: when to the contrary it breedeth offence or encumbrance, it is worſe than vain and unprofitable. From theſe inſtances we may collect when in other like caſes it is unſeaſonable, and therefore culpable. Farther,

5. To affect, admire, or highly to value this way of ſpeaking, (either abſolutely in it ſelf, or in compariſon to the ſerious and plain way of ſpeech,) and thence to be drawn into an immoderate uſe thereof, is blameable. A man of ripe age, and ſound judgment, for refreſhment to himſelf, or in complaiſance to others, may ſometimes condeſcend to play in this, or in any other harmleſs way: but to be fond of it, to proſecute it with a careful or painful eagerneſs, to dote and dwell upon it, to reckon it a brave or fine thing, a ſingular matter of commendation, a tranſcendent accompliſhment, any-wiſe preferrable to rational endowments, or comparable to the moral excellencies of our mind, (to ſolid Knowledge, or ſound Wiſdom, or true Vertue and Goodneſs,) this is extremely childiſh, or brutiſh, and far below a man. What can be more abſurd, than to make a buſineſs of play, to be ſtudious and laborious in toys, to make a profeſſion or drive a trade of impertinency? what more plain non-ſenſe can there be, than to be earneſt in jeſt, to be continual in divertiſement, or conſtant in paſtime; to make extravagance all our way, and ſauce all our diet? Is not this plainly the life of a child, that is ever buſie, yet never hath any thing to do? or the life of that mimical brute, which is always active in playing uncouth and unlucky tricks; which, could it ſpeak, might ſurely paſs well for a profeſſed Wit?

Σπȣδάζειν ϗ πονεῖν παιδιᾶς χάειν, ἠλίθιον φαίνεται, ϗ λίαν παιδικόν. Ariſt. Eth. x. 6.

The proper work of Man, the grand drift of humane life, is to follow Reaſon, (that noble ſpark kindled in us from Heaven; that Princely and powerful faculty, which is able to reach ſo lofty objects, and to atchieve ſo mighty works;) not to ſooth fancy, that brutiſh, ſhallow and giddy power, able to perform nothing worthy much regard. We are not (even Cicero could tell us) born for play and jeſting; but for ſeverity, and the ſtudy of graver and greater affairs. Yes, we were purpoſely deſigned, and fitly framed, to underſtand and contemplate, to affect and delight in, to undertake and purſue moſt noble and worthy things; to be employed in buſineſs conſiderably profitable to our ſelves, and and beneficial to others: We do therefore ſtrangely debaſe our ſelves, when we do ſtrongly bend our minds to, or ſet our affections upon ſuch toys.

Neque enim ità generati à natura ſumus, ut ad ludum jocùmque facti videamur; ſed ad ſeveritatem potiùs, & ad quædam ſtudia graviora, atque majora. Cic. Off. 1.

Eſpecially to do ſo is unworthy of a Chriſtian; that is of a perſon who is advanced to ſo high a rank, and ſo glorious relations; who hath ſo excellent objects of his mind and affections preſented before him, and ſo excellent rewards for his care and pains propoſed to him; who is engaged in affairs of ſo worthy nature, and ſo immenſe conſequence: for him to be zealous about quibbles, for him to be raviſhed with puny conceits and expreſſions, 'tis a wondrous overſight, and an enormous indecency.

He indeed that prefers any faculty to Reaſon, diſclaims the privilege of being a Man, and underſtands not the worth of his own Nature; he that prizes any quality beyond Vertue and Goodneſs, renounces the title of a Chriſtian, and knows not how to value the dignity of his profeſſion. It is theſe two (Reaſon and Vertue) in conjunction, which produce all that is conſiderably good and great in the world. Fancy can do little; doeth never any thing well, except as directed and wielded by them. Do pretty conceits or humourous talk carry on any buſineſs, or perform any work? No; they are ineffectual and fruitleſs: often they diſturb, but they never diſpatch any thing with good ſucceſs. It is ſimple Reaſon (as dull and dry as it ſeemeth) which expediteth all the grand affairs, which accompliſheth all the mighty works that we ſee done in the world. In truth therefore, as one Diamond is worth numberleſs bits of Glaſs; ſo one ſolid Reaſon is worth innumerable Fancies: one grain of true Science and ſound Wiſdom in real worth and uſe doth outweigh loads (if any loads can be) of freakiſh Wit. To rate things otherwiſe, doth argue great weakneſs of judgment, and fondneſs of mind. So to conceit of this way, ſignifieth a weak mind; and much to delight therein, rendreth it ſo: nothing more debaſeth the ſpirit of a man, or more rendreth it light and trifling.

ὡς μὴ συμβαίνειν κατὰ ταύτην ψυχῆς νῆψιν, καὶ εὐτραπελίας διάχυσιν. Baſ. Conſt. Mon. 12. Πολλοὺς συμβαίνει περὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα ἀσχολουμένους τοῦ ὀρθοῦ λόγου διαμαρτάνειν, τῆς ψυχῆς πρὸς γελοῖα μὲν διαχεομένης, καὶ τὸ τῆς φρονήσεως σύννουν καὶ πεπυκνωμένον καταλυούσης. Ibid. Jocorum frequens uſus omne animis pondus, omnemque vim eripiet. Sen. de Tranq. c. 15. Ἡ εὐτραπελία μαλακὴν ποιεῖ τὴν ψυχήν, ῥᾴθυμον, ἀναπεπτωκυῖαν. Chryſ. in Eph. 17.

Hence if we muſt be venting pleaſant conceits, we ſhould do it as if we did it not, careleſly and unconcernedly; not ſtanding upon it, or valuing our ſelves for it: we ſhould do it with meaſure and moderation; not giving up our ſelves thereto, ſo as to mind it, or delight in it more than in any other thing: we ſhould not be ſo intent upon it, as to become remiſs in affairs more proper or needful for us; ſo as to nauſeate ſerious buſineſs, or diſreliſh the more worthy entertainments of our minds. This is the great danger of it, which we daily ſee men to incurr; they are ſo bewitched with a humour of being witty themſelves, or of hearkning to the fancies of others, that it is this only which they can like or ſavour, which they can endure to think or talk of. 'Tis a great pity, that men who would ſeem to have ſo much wit, ſhould ſo little underſtand themſelves. But farther,

6. Vain-glorious oſtentation this way is very blameable. All ambition, all vanity, all conceitedneſs, upon what-ever ground they are founded, are abſolutely unreaſonable and ſilly: but yet thoſe, being grounded on ſome real ability, or ſome uſeful skill, are wiſe and manly in compariſon to this, which ſtandeth on a foundation ſo manifeſtly ſlight and weak. The old Philoſophers by a ſevere Father were called animalia

Tertull.

lia gloriæ, animals of glory; and by a Satyrical Poet they were termed bladders of vanity: but they at leaſt did catch at praiſe from praiſeworthy knowledge; they were puff'd up with a wind which blowed ſome good to mankind; they ſought glory from that which deſerved glory if they had not ſought it; it was a ſubſtantial and ſolid credit which they did affect, reſulting from ſucceſsful enterpriſes of ſtrong reaſon, and ſtout induſtry: but theſe animalcula gloriæ, theſe flies, theſe inſects of glory, theſe, not bladders, but bubbles of vanity, would be admired and praiſed for that which is no wiſe admirable or laudable; for the caſual hits and emergencies of roving fancy; for ſtumbling on an odd conceit or phraſe, which ſignifieth nothing, and is as ſuperficial as the ſmile, as hollow as the noiſe it cauſeth. Nothing certainly in nature is more ridiculous than a ſelf-conceited Wit, who deemeth himſelf ſome-body, and greatly pretendeth to commendation from ſo pitiful and worthleſs a thing as a knack of trifling.

κενεῆς οἰήσιος ἔμπλεοι ἀσκοί. Timoñ.

Riſus----tenuiſſimus ingenii fructus. Cic. de Orat. 2.

7. Laſtly, it is our duty never ſo far to engage our ſelves in this way, as thereby to loſe or to impair that habitual ſeriouſneſs, modeſty and ſobriety of mind, that ſteddy compoſedneſs, gravity and conſtancy of demeanour, which become Chriſtians. We ſhould continually keep our minds intent upon our high calling, and grand intereſts; ever well tuned, and ready for the performance of holy Devotions, and the practice of moſt ſerious duties with earneſt attention and fervent affection: Wherefore we ſhould never ſuffer them to be diſſolved into levity, or diſordered into a wanton frame, indiſpoſing us for religious thoughts and actions. We ought always in our behaviour to maintain, not only τὸ πρέπον, a fitting decency, but alſo τὸ σεμνὸν, a ſtately gravity, a kind of venerable majeſty, ſutable to that high rank which we bear of God's Friends, and Children; adorning our holy profeſſion, and guarding us from all impreſſions of ſinful vanity. Wherefore we ſhould not let our ſelves be tranſported into any exceſſive pitch of lightneſs, inconſiſtent with or prejudicial to our Chriſtian ſtate and buſineſs. Gravity and Modeſty are the fences of Piety, which being once ſlighted, ſin will eaſily attempt and encroach upon us. So the old Spaniſh Gentleman may be interpreted to have been wiſe, who, when his Son upon a voyage to the Indies took his leave of him, gave him this odd advice, My ſon, in the firſt place keep thy Gravity, in the next place fear God: intimating, that a man muſt firſt be ſerious, before he can be pious.

Phil. 4. 8.
1 Tim. 3. 8.
Tit. 2. 10.

Dictum potius aliquando perdet, quàm minuet autoritatem. Quint. 6. 3.

Strad. Infam. Famiani.

To conclude, as we need not be demure, ſo muſt we not be impudent; as we ſhould not be ſour, ſo ought we not to be fond; as we may be free, ſo we ſhould not be vain; as we may well ſtoop to friendly complaiſance, ſo we ſhould take heed of falling into contemptible levity. If without wronging others, or derogating from our ſelves, we can be facetious; if we can uſe our wits in jeſting innocently, and conveniently; we may ſometimes do it: but let us, in compliance with S. Paul's direction, beware of fooliſh talking and jeſting, which are not convenient.

Now the God of grace and peace----make us perfect in every good work to do his will, working in us that which is well pleaſing in his ſight, through Jeſus Chriſt, to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Heb. 13. 20, 21.

SER-

SERMON XV.

Againſt Raſh and Vain Swearing.

S. JAMES. 5. 12.

But above all things, my brethren, Swear not.

AMong other Precepts of Good life (directing the practice of Vertue and Abſtinence from Sin) S. James doth inſert this about Swearing, couched in expreſſion denoting his great earneſtneſs, and apt to excite our ſpecial attention. Therein he doth not mean univerſally to interdict the uſe of Oaths; (for that in ſome caſes is not only lawful, but very expedient, yea needful, and required from us as a Duty;) but that Swearing which our Lord had expreſly prohibited to his Diſciples, and which thence, queſtionleſs, the brethren to whom S. James did write did well underſtand themſelves obliged to forbear having learnt ſo in the firſt Catechiſms of Chriſtian inſtitution; that is, needleſs and heedleſs Swearing in ordinary converſation: a practice then frequented in the world, both among Jews and Gentiles; the which alſo, to the ſhame of our Age, is now ſo much in faſhion, and with ſome men in vogue; the invoking God's Name, appealing to his teſtimony, and provoking his judgment, upon any ſlight occaſion, in common talk, with vain incogitancy, or profane boldneſs. From ſuch practice the Holy Apoſtle dehorteth in terms importing his great concernedneſs, and implying the matter to be of higheſt importance: for, Πρὸ πάντων, ſaith he, Before all things, my brethren, do not ſwear; as if he did apprehend this ſin of all other to be one of the moſt hainous and pernicious. Could he have ſaid more? would he have ſaid ſo much, if he had not conceived the matter to be of exceeding weight and conſequence? And that it is ſo, I mean now, by God's help, to ſhew you, by propoſing ſome Conſiderations, whereby the hainous wickedneſs, together with the monſtrous folly, of ſuch raſh and vain Swearing will appear; the which being laid to heart will, I hope, effectually diſſuade and deterr from it.

I. Let us conſider the nature of an Oath, and what we do when we adventure to ſwear.

Exod. 20. 7.
Prov. 30. 9.
Gen. 31. 50.
Jud. 11. 10.
1 Sam. 12. 5.
Jer. 42. 5.

It is (as it is phraſed in the Decalogue, and other-where in Holy Scripture) an aſſuming the Name of our God, and applying it to our purpoſe, to countenance and confirm what we ſay.

It is an invocation of God as a moſt faithful Witneſs, concerning the truth of our words, or the ſincerity of our meaning.

Job. 16. 19. Mal. 3. 5. 1 Joh. 5. 9. Plurima firmantur jurejurando—diis immortalibus interpoſitis tum judicibus, tum teſtibus. Cic. de Leg. 2. p. 326.

It is an appeal to God as a moſt upright Judge, whether we do prevaricate in aſſerting what we do not believe true, or in promiſing what we are not firmly reſolved to perform.

Gen. 31. 53. 1 Sam. 24. 15.

It is a formal engagement of God to be the Avenger of our treſpaſſing in violation of truth or faith.

1 King. 8. 31, 32. & 2. 23. & 19. 2. & 20. 10. Neh. 5. 12, 13. Ruth. 1. 17. 2 King. 6. 31. 2 Sam. 3. 9, 35. & 19. 13. 1 Sam. 14. 44. & 3. 17. & 20. 13.

It is a binding our ſouls with a moſt ſtrict and ſolemn obligation, to anſwer before God, and to undergo the iſſue of his judgment about what we affirm, or undertake.

Num. 30. 2.

Such an Oath is repreſented to us in Holy Scripture.

Whence we may collect, that Swearing doth require great modeſty and compoſedneſs of ſpirit, very ſerious conſideration and ſolicitous care, that we be not rude and ſaucy with God, in taking up his Name, and proſtituting it to vile or mean uſes; that we do not abuſe or debaſe his Authority, by citing it to averr falſhoods, or impertinencies; that we do not ſlight his venerable Juſtice, by raſhly provoking it againſt us; that we do not precipitantly throw our Souls into moſt dangerous ſnares and intricacies.

Πᾶς ὅρκος εἰς κατάραν τελευτᾷ τῆς ἐπιορκίας. Plut. in Capit. Rom. (p. 491.)

For, let us reflect and conſider: What a preſumption is it without due regard and reverence to lay hold on God's Name; with unhallowed breath to vent and toſs that great and glorious, that moſt holy, that reverend, that fearful and terrible Name of the Lord our God, the great Creatour, the mighty Sovereign, the dreadful Judge of all the world; that Name which all Heaven with profoundeſt ſubmiſſion doth adore, which the Angelical powers, the brighteſt and pureſt Seraphim, without hiding their faces, and reverential horrour, cannot utter or hear; the very thought whereof ſhould ſtrike awe through our hearts, the mention whereof would make any ſober man to tremble? Πῶς γὰρ οὐκ ἄτοπον, For how (ſaith S.Chryſoſtome) is it not abſurd, that a ſervant ſhould not dare to call his Maſter by name, or bluntly and ordinarily to mention him; yet that we ſlightly and contemptuouſly ſhould in our mouth toſs about the Lord of Angels?

Pſal. 99. 3. & 111. 9. & 148. 13. Deut. 28. 58.

Iſa. 6. 2.

Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ζ'.

Id. Ἀνδρ. ζ'. p. 514.

How is it not abſurd, if we have a garment better than the reſt, that we forbear to uſe it continually; but in the moſt ſlight and common way do wear the Name of God?

Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. θ'. p. 525.

How grievous indecency is it, at every turn to ſummon our Maker, and call down Almighty God from Heaven, to attend our leiſure, to vouch our idle prattle, to ſecond our giddy paſſions, to concern his Truth, his Juſtice, his Power in our trivial affairs?

What a wildneſs is it, to dally with that Judgment upon which the eternal doom of all creatures dependeth, at which the pillars of heaven are aſtoniſhed, which hurled down legions of Angels from the top of Heaven and happineſs into the bottomleſs dungeon; the which, as grievous ſinners, of all things we have moſt reaſon to dread; and about which no ſober man can otherwiſe think, than did that great King, the Holy Pſalmiſt, who ſaid, My fleſh trembleth for thee, and I am afraid of thy judgments.

Job. 26. 11.

Pſ. 119. 120.

How prodigious a madneſs is it, without any conſtraint or needful cauſe to incurr ſo horrible danger, to ruſh upon a curſe; to defie that vengeance, the leaſt touch or breath whereof can daſh us to nothing, or thruſt us down into extreme and endleſs woe?

Who can expreſs the wretchedneſs of that folly, which ſo entangleth us with inextricable knots, and enchaineth our Souls ſo raſhly with deſperate obligations?

Wherefore he that would but a little mind what he doth when he dareth to ſwear, what it is to meddle with the adorable Name, the venerable Teſtimony, the formidable Judgment, the terrible Vengeance of the Divine Majeſty, into what a caſe he putteth himſelf, how extreme hazard he runneth thereby, would aſſuredly have little heart to ſwear, without greateſt reaſon, and moſt urgent need; hardly without trembling would he undertake the moſt neceſſary and ſolemn Oath; much cauſe would he ſee σέβεσθαι ὅρκον, to adore, to ſear an Oath: which to do the Divine Preacher maketh the character of a Good man; As (ſaith he) is the good, ſo is the ſinner, and he that ſweareth, as he that feareth an oath.

Eccleſ. 9. 2.

In fine, even a Heathen Philoſopher, conſidering the nature of an Oath, did conclude the unlawfulneſs thereof in ſuch caſes. For, Seeing (ſaith he) an Oath doth call God for Witneſs, and propoſeth him for Umpire and Voucher of the things it ſaith; therefore to induce God ſo upon occaſion of humane affairs, or, which is all one, upon ſmall and ſlight accounts, doth imply contempt of him: wherefore we ought wholly to ſhun Swearing, except upon occaſions of higheſt neceſſity.

Ὁ γὰρ ὅρκος μάρτυρα τὸν Θεὸν καλεῖ, καὶ μεσίτην αὐτὸν καὶ ἐγγυητὴν ἐφ' οἷς λέγει προΐσχεται· τὸ γοῦν ἐπὶ ἀνθρωπίνοις πράγμασι (πάντων δὲ εἰπεῖν μικροῖς καὶ εὐτελέσι) τὸν Θεὸν παράγειν, καταφρόνησίν τινα πρὸς αὐτὸν ὑπογράφει· διὸ χρὴ παραιτεῖσθαι τὸν ὅρκον, &c. Simpl. in Epict. cap. 44.

II. We may conſider, that Swearing (agreeably to its nature, or natural aptitude and tendency) is repreſented in Holy Scripture as a ſpecial part of religious Worſhip, or Devotion toward God; in the due performance whereof we do avow him for the true God and Governour of the world; we piouſly do acknowledge his principal Attributes and ſpecial Prerogatives; (his Omnipreſence and Omniſcience, extending it ſelf to our moſt inward thoughts, our ſecreteſt purpoſes, our cloſeſt retirements; his watchful Providence over all our actions, affairs and concerns; his faithful Goodneſs, in favouring truth and protecting right; his exact Juſtice, in patronizing ſincerity, and chaſtizing perfidiouſneſs;) his being Supreme Lord over all perſons, and Judge paramount in all cauſes; his readineſs in our need, upon our humble imploration and reference, to undertake the arbitration of matters controverted, and the care of adminiſtring Juſtice, for the maintenance of truth and right, of loyalty and fidelity, of order and peace among men. Swearing doth alſo intimate a pious truſt and confidence in God; as Ariſtotle obſerveth.

Εὐσεβὲς τὸ θέλειν τοῖς θεοῖς ἐπιτρέπειν. It is a pious thing willingly to commend our caſe or controverſie to God. Ariſt. Rhet. 1. 48.

Such things a ſerious Oath doth imply, to ſuch purpoſes Swearing naturally ſerveth; and therefore to ſignifie or effectuate them, Divine inſtitution hath devoted it.

God in goodneſs to ſuch ends hath pleaſed to lend us his great Name; allowing us to cite him for a Witneſs, to have recourſe to his Bar, to engage his Juſtice and Power, when-ever the caſe deſerveth and requireth it, or when we cannot by other means well aſſure the ſincerity of our meaning, or ſecure the conſtancy of our reſolutions.

Yea in ſuch exigencies he doth exact this practice from us, as an inſtance of our religious confidence in him, and as a ſervice conducible to his glory: For it is a Precept in his Law, of moral nature, and eternal obligation, Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God; him ſhalt thou ſerve, and to him ſhalt thou cleave, and ſhalt ſwear by his Name. It is the character of a religious man to ſwear with due reverence and upright conſcience. For, The King (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) ſhall rejoice in God; every one that ſweareth ſweareth by him ſhall glory : but the mouth of them that ſpeak lies ſhall be ſtopped. It is a diſtinctive mark of God's people, according to that of the Prophet Jeremy, And it ſhall come to paſs, if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to ſwear by Name-----then ſhall they be built in the midſt of my people. It is predicted concerning the Evangelical times, Unto me every knee ſhall bow, every tongue ſhall ſwear : and, That he who bleſſeth himſelf in the earth, ſhall bleſs himſelf by the God of truth ; and he that ſweareth in the earth, ſhall ſwear by the God of truth.

Deut. 10. 20. & 6. 13.

Pſal. 63. 11.

Jer. 12. 16.
Iſa. 45. 23.
65. 16.

As therefore all other Acts of Devotion, wherein immediate application is made to the Divine Majeſty, ſhould never be performed without moſt hearty intention, moſt ſerious conſideration, moſt lowly reverence ; ſo neither ſhould this grand one, wherein God is ſo nearly touched, and his chief Attributes ſo much concerned : the which indeed doth involve both Prayer and Praiſe, doth require the moſt devotional acts of Faith and Fear.

We therefore ſhould ſo perform it, as not to incurr that reproof ; This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.

Mat. 15. 8.
Iſa. 29. 13.

When we ſeem moſt formally to avow God, to confeſs his Omniſcience, to confide in his Juſtice ; we ſhould not really diſregard him, and in effect ſignifie, that we do not think he doth know what we ſay, or mind what we do.

If we do preſume to offer this ſervice, we ſhould do it in the manner appointed by himſelf, according to the conditions preſcribed in the Prophet, Thou ſhalt ſwear, The Lord liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteouſneſs : in truth, taking heed, that our meaning be conformable to the ſenſe of our words, and our words to the verity of things ; in judgment, having with careful deliberation examined and weighed that which we aſſert or promiſe ; in righteouſneſs, being ſatisfied in conſcience, that we do not therein infringe any rule of Piety toward God, of Equity toward men, of Sobriety and diſcretion in regard to our ſelves.

Jer. 4. 2.

The cauſe of our Swearing muſt be needful, or very expedient ; the deſign of it muſt be honeſt and uſeful to conſiderable purpoſes ; (tending to God's honour, our Neighbour's benefit, our own welfare ;) the matter of it ſhould be not only juſt and lawful, but worthy and weighty ; the manner ought to be grave and ſolemn, our mind being framed to earneſt attention, and endued with pious affections ſutable to the occaſion.

Otherwiſe, if we do venture to ſwear, without due advice and care, without much reſpect and awe, upon any ſlight or vain (not to ſay, bad or unlawful) occaſion ; we then deſecrate Swearing, and are guilty of profaning a moſt ſacred Ordinance : the doing ſo doth imply baſe hypocriſie, or leud mockery, or abominable wantonneſs and folly ; in boldly invading, and vainly trifling with the moſt auguſt Duties of Religion. Such Swearing therefore is very diſhonourable and injurious to God, very prejudicial to Religion, very repugnant to Piety.

Matt. 15. 7, 8.

III. We may conſider that the Swearing prohibited is very noxious to humane Society.

The great prop of Society (which upholdeth the ſafety, peace and welfare thereof, in obſerving laws, diſpenſing juſtice, diſcharging truſts, keeping contracts, and holding good correſpondence mutually) is Conſcience, or a ſenſe of Duty toward God, obliging to perform what is right and equal ; quickned by hope of rewards, and fear of puniſhments from him : ſecluding which principle, no worldly conſideration is ſtrong enough to hold men faſt; or can farther diſpoſe many to do right, or obſerve faith, or hold peace, than appetite, or intereſt, or humour (things very ſlippery and uncertain) do ſway them.

That men ſhould live honeſtly, quietly and comfortably together, it is needful that they ſhould live under a ſenſe of God's will, and in awe of the Divine power, hoping to pleaſe God, and fearing to offend him, by their behaviour reſpectively.

That Juſtice ſhould be adminiſtred between men, it is neceſſary that teſtimonies of fact be alledged; and that witneſſes ſhould apprehend themſelves greatly obliged to diſcover the truth, according to their conſcience, in dark and doubtful caſes.

That men ſhould uprightly diſcharge offices ſerviceable to publick good, it doth behove that they be firmly engaged to perform the truſts repoſed in them.

That in affairs of very conſiderable importance, men ſhould deal with one another with ſatisfaction of mind, and mutual confidence, they muſt receive competent aſſurances concerning the integrity, fidelity and conſtancy each of other.

That the ſafety of Governours may be preſerved, and the obedience due to them maintained ſecure from attempts to which they are liable, (by the treachery, levity, perverſneſs, timorouſneſs, ambition, all ſuch luſts and ill humours of men,) it is expedient that men ſhould be tied with the ſtricteſt bands of allegeance.

That controverſies emergent about the intereſts of men ſhould be determined, and an end put to ſtrife by peremptory and ſatisfactory means, is plainly neceſſary for common quiet.

Wherefore for the publick intereſt and benefit of humane Society, it is requiſite that the higheſt obligations poſſible ſhould be laid upon the Conſciences of men.

And ſuch are thoſe of Oaths, engaging them to fidelity and conſtancy in all ſuch caſes, out of regard to Almighty God, as the infallible Patron of truth and right, the unavoidable Chaſtiſer of perfidiouſneſs and improbity.

To ſuch purpoſes therefore Oaths have ever been applied, as the moſt effectual inſtruments of working them; not only among the followers of true and perfect Religion, but even among all thoſe who had any glimmering notions concerning a Divine Power and Providence; who have deemed an Oath the faſteſt tie of Conſcience, and held the violation of it for the moſt deteſtable impiety and iniquity. So that what Cicero ſaith of the Romans, that their Anceſtours had no band to conſtrain faith more ſtrait than an Oath, is true of all other Nations; common Reaſon not being able to deviſe any engagement more obliging than it; it being in the nature of things τελευταία πίστις, and ἰσχυρότατον ἀληθείας ἔλεγχον, the utmoſt aſſurance, the laſt reſort of humane faith, the ſureſt pledge that any man can yield of his truſtineſs. Hence ever in tranſactions of higheſt moment this hath been uſed to bind the faith of men.

Nullum enim vinculum ad aſtringendam fidem jurejurando majores arctius eſſe voluerunt. Cic. de Off. 3.

Dion. Halic. Procop. Diod. Sic.

Hereby Nations have been wont to ratifie Leagues of peace and amity between each other: (which therefore the Greeks called ὅρκια.)

Πρὸς ὃς εἰσὶν ἡμῖν ὅρκοι, καὶ φιλίαι. Polyb.

Hereby Princes have obliged their Subjects to loyalty: and it hath ever been the ſtrongeſt argument to preſs that duty, which the Preacher uſeth; I counſel thee to keep the King's commandment, and that in regard of the Oath of God.

Eccles. 8. 2.

Hereby Generals have engaged their Souldiers to ſtick cloſe to them, in bearing hardſhips, and encountring dangers.

Veget. 2.

Hereby the Nuptial league hath been confirmed; the ſolemnization whereof in temples before God is in effect a moſt ſacred Oath.

Hereon the deciſion of the greateſt cauſes concerning the lives, eſtates and reputations of men have depended; ſo that (as the Apoſtle ſaith) an Oath for confirmation is to them an end of all ſtrife.

Heb. 6. 16.

Indeed ſuch hath the need hereof been ever apprehended, that we may obſerve, in caſes of great importance, no other obligation hath been admitted for ſufficient to bind the fidelity and conſtancy of the moſt credible perſons; ſo that even the beſt men hardly could truſt the beſt men without it. For inſtance,

When Abimelech would aſſure to himſelf the friendſhip of Abraham, although he knew him to be a very pious and righteous perſon, whoſe word might be as well taken as any man's, yet, for entire ſatisfaction, he thus ſpake to him; God is with thee in all that thou doeſt: Now therefore ſwear unto me here by God, that thou wilt not deal falſly with me.

Gen. 21. 22, 23.

Abraham, though he did much confide in the honeſty of his ſervant Eliezer, having entruſted him with all his eſtate, yet in the affair concerning the marriage of his ſon, he could not but thus oblige him: Put, (ſaith he) I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh, and I will make thee ſwear by the Lord, the God of heaven and the God of the earth, that thou wilt not take a wife unto my ſon of the daughters of the Canaanites.

Gen. 15. 3. & 24. 2.
Gen. 24. 2, 3.

Laban had good experience of Jacob's fidelity; yet that would not ſatisfie, but, The Lord (ſaid he) watch between me and thee, when we are abſent one from another. If thou ſhalt afflict my daughters, or if thou ſhalt take other wives beſide my daughters; no man is with us; ſee, God is witneſs between thee and me. The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, the God of their father judge betwixt us.

Gen. 31. 49, 50, 53.

So did Jacob make Joſeph ſwear, that he would bury him in Canaan: and Joſeph cauſed the children of Iſrael to ſwear, that they would tranſlate his bones. So did Jonathan cauſe his beloved friend David to ſwear, that he would ſhew kindneſs to him, and to his houſe for ever. The prudence of which courſe the event ſheweth, the total exciſion of Jonathan's family being thereby prevented; for, The King ('tis ſaid) ſpared Mephiboſheth the ſon of Jonathan, becauſe of the Lord's Oath that was between them.

Gen. 50. 5.
Gen. 50. 25.
1 Sam. 20. 14, 15, 17.
2 Sam. 21. 7.

Theſe inſtances declare, that there is no ſecurity which men can yield comparable to that of an Oath; the obligation whereof no man wilfully can infringe, without renouncing the fear of God, and any pretence to his favour.

(1 King. 1. 51. Ezr. 10. 5. Neh 5. 12. & 13. 25.)

Wherefore humane Society will be extremely wronged and damnified by the diſſolving or ſlackning theſe moſt ſacred bands of Conſcience; and conſequently by their common and careleſs uſe, which ſoon will breed a contempt of them, and render them inſignificant, either to bind the Swearers, or to ground a truſt on their Oaths.

As by the rare and reverent uſe of Oaths their dignity is upheld, and their obligation kept faſt: ſo by the frequent and negligent application of them, by the proſtituting them to every mean and toyiſh purpoſe, their reſpect will be quite loſt, their ſtrength will be looſed, they will prove unſerviceable to publick uſe.

If Oaths generally become cheap and vile, what will that of Allegeance ſignifie? If men are wont to play with Swearing any-where, can we expect they ſhould be ſerious and ſtrict therein at the Bar, or in the Church? Will they regard God's teſtimony, or dread his judgment, in one place, or at one time, when every-where upon any, upon no occaſion they dare to confront and contemn them? Who then will be the more truſted for Swearing? what ſatisfaction will any man have from it? The rifeneſs of this practice, as it is the ſign, ſo it will be the cauſe of a general diffidence among men.

Incredible therefore is the miſchief which this vain practice will bring in to the publick; depriving Princes of their beſt ſecurity, expoſing the eſtates of private men to uncertainty, ſhaking all the confidence men can have in the faith of one another.

For which detriments accruing from this abuſe to the publick every vain Swearer is reſponſible; and he would do well to conſider, that he will never be able to make reparation for them. And the publick is much concerned that this enormity be retrenched.

IV. Let us conſider, that raſh and vain Swearing is very apt often to bring the practiſer of it into that moſt horrible ſin of Perjury. For * falſe ſwearing (as the Hebrew Wiſe-man ſaith) naturally ſpringeth out of much ſwearing: and, He (ſaith Saint Chryſtſoſtome) that ſweareth continually, both willingly and unwillingly, both ignorantly and knowingly, both in earneſt and in ſport, being often tranſported by anger and many other things, will frequently forſwear. It is confeſſed and manifeſt, that it is neceſſary for him that ſweareth much, to be perjurious. Ἀμήχανον γὰρ, ἀμήχανον, For (ſaith he again,) it is impoſſible, it is impoſſible for a mouth addicted to ſwearing, not frequently to forſwear. He that ſweareth at random, as blind paſſion moveth, or wanton fancy prompteth, or the Tempter ſuggeſteth, often will hit upon aſſerting that which is falſe, or promiſing that which is impoſſible: that want of Conſcience and of conſideration which do ſuffer him to violate God's Law in Swearing, will betray him to the venting of Lies, which backed with Oaths become Perjuries. If ſometime what he ſweareth doth happen to be true and performable, it doth not free him of guilt; it being his fortune, rather than his care or conſcience, which keepeth him from Perjury.

* Φύεται πολυορκίας ψευδορκία. Philo in Decal. Nè quiſquam facili juratione etiam ad perjurium decidiſſet, & in Eccleſia populo prædicabat, & ſuos inſtituerat, nè quis juraret nec ad modicum quidem. Poſid. in Vit. S. Aug. c. 25.

Ὁ διηνεκῶς ὀμνὺς, &c. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ιδ'. p. 553.

Μὴ εἰς ὑπόκρισιν πέσητε, quidam legunt, Jac. 5. 12. Vid. Grot.

Οὕτως ἐστὶν ὡμολογημένον καὶ δῆλον, ὅτι τὸν πολύορκον ἀνάγκη καὶ ἐπίορκον εἶναι. Ibid.

Ἀμήχανον γὰρ, ἀμήχανον, στόμα μεμελετηκὸς ὀμνύναι, μὴ συνεχῶς ἐπιορκεῖν. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ιδ'. p. 559.

V. Such Swearing commonly will induce a man to bind himſelf by Oath to unlawful practices; and conſequently will entangle him in a woful neceſſity, either of breaking his Oath, or of doing worſe, and committing wickedneſs: ſo that Swearing (as S. Chryſoſtome ſaith) hath this miſery attending it, that both tranſgreſſed and obſerved it plagueth thoſe who are guilty of it.

Τοῦτο τὸ δεινὸν ἔχει ὁ ὅρκος, ὅτι καὶ παραβαινόμενος καὶ φυλαττόμενος κολάζει τοὺς ἁλισκομένους. Chryſ. ibid. p. 553.

Of this perplexity the Holy Scripture affordeth two notable inſtances: the one of Saul, forced to break his raſh Oaths; the other of Herod, being engaged thereby to commit a moſt horrid murther.

(1 Sam. 25. 22. David.) διὰ τοὺς ὅρκους. Mat. 14. 9.

Had Saul obſerved his Oaths, what injury had he done, what miſchief had he produced, in ſlaughtering his moſt worthy and moſt innocent Son, the prop and glory of his family, the bulwark of his country, and the grand inſtrument of ſalvation to it; in forcing the people to violate their croſs Oath, and for prevention of one, cauſing many Perjuries? He was therefore fain to deſiſt, and lie under the guilt of breaking his Oaths.

Vid. Chryſ. ιδ'. Ἀνδρ. 1 Sam. 14. 45.

And for Herod, the excellent Father thus preſſeth the conſideration of his caſe: Take, (ſaith he) I beſeech you, the chopp'd-off head of S. John, and his warm bloud yet trickling down; each of you bear it home with you, and conceive that before your eyes you hear it uttering ſpeech, and ſaying, Embrace the murtherer of me, an Oath. That which reproof did not, this an Oath did do; that which the Tyrant's wrath could not, this the neceſſity of keeping an Oath did effect. For when the Tyrant was reprehended publickly in the audience of all men, he bravely did bear the rebuke; but when he had caſt himſelf into the neceſſity of Oaths, then did he cut off that bleſſed head.

Παρακαλῶ ὑμᾶς τὴν κεφαλὴν Ἰωάννου λαβόντος-- Ἀνδρ. ιδʹ. p. 552.

VI. Likewiſe the uſe of raſh Swearing will often engage a man in undertakings very inconvenient and detrimental to himſelf. A man is bound to perform his vows to the Lord, what-ever they be, what-ever damage or trouble thence may accrue to him, if they be not unlawful. It is the Law, That which is gone out of thy lips, thou ſhalt keep and perform. It is the property of a Good man, that he ſweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. Wherefore 'tis the part of a ſober man, to be well adviſed what he doth ſwear or vow religiouſly; that he do not put himſelf into the inextricable ſtrait of committing great ſin, or underdoing great inconvenience; that he do not ruſh into that ſnare of which the Wiſe-man ſpeaketh, It is a ſnare to a man to devour that which is holy, (or, to ſwallow a ſacred obligation,) and after vows to make enquiry, ſeeking how he may diſ-engage himſelf: the doing which is a folly offenſive to God, as the Preacher telleth us; When (ſaith he) thou voweſt a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleaſure in fools; pay that which thou haſt vowed. God will not admit our folly in vowing, as a plea or an excuſe for non-performance; he will exact it from us both as a due debt, and as a proper puniſhment of our impious folly.

Deut. 23. 21.
Mat. 5. 33.
Pſ. 66. 13, 14.
Deut. 23. 23.
Pſal. 15. 4.
Prov. 20. 25.
Ὥσπερ τινὶ παγίδι κατεχόμενοι, καὶ δεσμοῖς ἀλύτοις συνδεδεμένοι, &c. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ζʹ.
Eccles. 5. 4.

For inſtance, into what loſs and miſchief, what ſorrow, what regret and repentance, did the unadviſed vow of Jephtha throw him? the performance whereof (as S. Chryſoſtome remarketh) God did permit, and order to be commemorated with ſolemn lamentation, that all poſterity might be admoniſhed thereby, and deterred from ſuch precipitant Swearing.

Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ιδʹ.

VII. Let us conſider, that Swearing is a ſin of all others peculiarly clamorous, and provocative of Divine judgment. God is hardly ſo much concerned, or in a manner conſtrained, to puniſh any other ſin as this. He is bound in honour and intereſt to vindicate his Name from the abuſe, his Authority from the contempt, his holy Ordinance from the profanation, which it doth infer. He is concerned to take care that his providence be not queſtioned, that the dread of his Majeſty be not voided, that all Religion be not overthrown by the outragious commiſſion thereof with impunity.

It immediately toucheth his Name, it expreſly calleth upon him to mind it, to judge it, to ſhew himſelf in avenging it. He may ſeem deaf, or unconcerned, if, being ſo called and provoked, he doth not declare himſelf.

There is underſtood to be a kind of formal compact between him and mankind, obliging him to interpoſe, to take the matter into his cognizance, being ſpecially addreſſed to him.

The bold Swearer doth importune him to hear, doth rouze him to mark, doth brave him to judge and puniſh his wickedneſs.

Hence no wonder that the flying roll, a quick and inevitable curſe, doth ſurprize the Swearer, and cut him off, as it is in the Prophet. No wonder that ſo many remarkable inſtances do occurr in hiſtory, of ſignal vengeance inflicted on perſons notably guilty of this crime. No wonder that a common practice thereof doth fetch down publick judgments; and that, as the Prophets of old did proclaim, becauſe of Swearing the land mourneth.

Zech. 5. 2, &c.
Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. 9. p. 525. 15. p. 565. 19. p. 591.
Jer. 23. 10.
Hoſ. 4. 3.

VIII. Farther, (paſſing over the ſpecial laws againſt it, the miſchievous conſequences of it, the ſore puniſhments appointed to it,) we may conſider, that to common ſenſe vain Swearing is a very unreaſonable and ill-favoured practice, greatly miſbecoming any ſober, worthy or honeſt perſon; but eſpecially moſt abſurd and incongruous to a Chriſtian.

For in ordinary converſation what needful or reaſonable occaſion can intervene of violating this command? If there come under diſcourſe a matter of reaſon, which is evidently true and certain, then what need can there be of an Oath to affirm it, it ſufficing to expoſe it to light, or to propoſe the evidences for it? If an obſcure or doubtful point come to be debated, it will not bear an Oath; it will be a ſtrange madneſs to dare, a great folly to hope the perſuading it thereby. What were more ridiculous, than to ſwear the truth of a demonſtrable Theorem? what more vain, than ſo to aſſert a diſputable Problem? Oaths (like wagers) are in ſuch caſes no arguments, except of ſillineſs in the uſers of them.

If a matter of hiſtory be ſtarted, then if a man be taken for honeſt, his word will paſs for atteſtation, without farther aſſurance: but if his veracity or probity be doubted, his Oath will not be relied on, eſpecially when he doth obtrude it. For it was no leſs truly than acutely ſaid by the old Poet, Οὐκ ἀνδρὸς ὅρκοι πίστις, ἀλλ᾽ ὅρκων ἀνήρ, The man doth not get credit from an Oath, but an Oath from the man: and a greater Authour, An Oath (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) doth not make a man credible; but the teſtimony of his life, and the exactneſs of his converſation, and a good repute. Many often have burſt with ſwearing, and perſuaded no man: others only nodding have deſerved more belief, than thoſe who have ſwore ſo mightily. Wherefore Oaths, as they are frivolous coming from a perſon of little worth or conſcience, ſo they are ſuperfluous in the mouth of an honeſt and worthy perſon; yea, as they do not encreaſe the credit of the former, ſo they may impair that of the latter.

Æſchyl.

Οὐκ ὅρκος ἀξιόπιστον ποιεῖ, ἀλλὰ βίου μαρτυρία, καὶ πολιτείας ἀκρίβεια, καὶ ὑπόληψις ἀγαθή. πολλοὶ πολλάκις διεῤῥάγησαν ὀμνύοντες, καὶ οὐδένα ἔπεισαν· ἕτεροι δὲ, ἐπινεύσαντες μόνον, ἀξιοπιστότεροι τῶν τοσαῦτα ὀμωμοκότων ἐφάνησαν. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ζ'. p. 514.

A good man (as Socrates did ſay) ſhould apparently ſo demean himſelf, that his word may be deemed more credible than an Oath; the conſtant tenour of his practice vouching for it, and giving it ſuch weight, that no aſſeveration can farther corroborate it.

Δεῖ τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς ἄνδρας τρόπον ὅρκου πιστότερον φαίνεσθαι παρεχομένους. Socr. apud Max. Serm. 85.

Ὁ τοῦ σπουδαίου λόγος ὅρκος ἔστω βέβαιος, ἀκλινής, ἀψευδέστατος. Philo.

Colendo fidem jurant (Scythæ; apud Curt. 7. 8.)

He ſhould τοῖς ἔργοις εὐορκεῖν, ſwear by his good deeds, and exhibit βίον ἀξιόπιστον, a life deſerving belief, (as Clemens Alex. ſaith:) ſo that no man ſhould deſire more from him than his bare aſſertion; but willingly ſhould yield him the privilege which the Athenians granted to Xenocrates, that he ſhould teſtify without Swearing.

Clem. Alex. Strom. 7. p. 524.

Ἦν δὲ καὶ ἀξιόπιστος σφόδρα· ὥστε μὴ ἐξὸν ἀνώμοτον μαρτυρεῖν, τούτῳ μόνῳ συνεχώρουν Ἀθηναῖοι. Diog. Laert. in Xenocr.

He ſhould be like the Eſſenes, of whom Joſephus ſaith, that every thing ſpoken by them was more valid than an Oath; whence they declined Swearing.

Πᾶν τὸ ῥηθὲν ὑπ᾽ αὐτῶν ἰσχυρότερον ὅρκου, τὸ δὲ ὀμνύειν αὐτοῖς περιΐσταται. Joſeph.

He ſhould ſo much confide in his own veracity and fidelity, and ſo much ſtand upon them, that he ſhould not deign to offer any pledge for them, implying them to want confirmation.

He ſhould (as S. Hierome ſaith) ſo love truth, that he ſhould ſuppoſe himſelf to have ſworn whatſoever he hath ſaid; and therefore ſhould not be apt to heap another Oath on his words.

Tantus in te ſit veri amor, ut quicquid dixeris, juratum putes. Hier. Ep. 14.

Upon ſuch accounts common reaſon directed even Pagan wiſe-men wholly to interdict Swearing in ordinary converſation, or about petty matters, as an irrational and immoral practice, unworthy of ſober and diſcreet perſons. Forbear Swearing about any matter, (ſaid Plato, cited by Clem. Alex.) Avoid Swearing, if you can, wholly, (ſaid Epictetus.) For mony ſwear by no God, though you ſwear truly, ſaid Iſocrates. And divers the like precepts occurr in other Heathens; the mention whereof may well ſerve to ſtrike ſhame into many looſe and vain people, bearing the name of Chriſtians.

Ὅρκος περὶ παντὸς ἀπέστω. Plato apud Clem. Alex. Str. 5. p. 433.
Ὅρκον παραίτησον, εἰ μὲν οἷόν τε, εἰς ἅπαν. Epict. Ench. cap. 44. Ἕνεκα χρημάτων μηδένα θεὸν ὀμόσῃς, μηδ' ἂν εὐορκεῖν μέλλῃς. Iſocr. ad Demon.

Indeed, for a true and real Chriſtian, this practice doth eſpecially in a far higher degree misbecome him, upon conſiderations peculiar to his high calling and holy profeſſion.

Plutarch telleth us, that among the Romans the Flamen of Jupiter was not permitted to ſwear: of which Law among other reaſons he aſſigneth this; Becauſe it is not handſome, that he to whom divine and greateſt things are intruſted, ſhould be diſtruſted about ſmall matters. The which reaſon may well be applied to excuſe every Chriſtian from it, who is a Prieſt to the moſt High God, and hath the moſt celeſtial and important matters concredited to him; in compariſon to which all other matters are very mean and inconſiderable. The dignity of his rank ſhould render his word verbum honoris, paſſable without any farther engagement. He hath opinions of things, he hath undertaken practices inconſiſtent with Swearing. For he that firmly doth believe that God is ever preſent with him, an auditour and witneſs of all his diſcourſe; he that is perſuaded that a ſevere judgment ſhall paſs on him, wherein he muſt give an account for every idle word which ſlippeth from him, and wherein, among other offenders, aſſuredly Liars will be condemned to the burning lake; he that in a great Sacrament (once moſt ſolemnly taken, and frequently renewed) hath engaged and ſworn together with all other Divine Commandments, to obſerve thoſe which moſt expreſly do charge him to be exactly juſt, faithful and veracious in all his words and deeds; who therefore ſhould be ready to ſay with David, I have ſworn, and am ſtedfaſtly purpoſed to keep thy righteous judgments; to him * every word hath the force of an Oath; every Lie, every breach of promiſe, every violation of faith doth involve Perjury: for him to ſwear, is falſe heraldry, an impertinent accumulation of one Oath upon another: he of all men ſhould diſdain to allow that his words are not perfectly credible, that his promiſe is not ſecure, without being aſſured by an Oath.

Διὰ τί τῷ ἱερεῖ τοῦ Διὸς, οὐκ ἔξεστιν ὀμόσαι; ἢ ὅτι περὶ μικρῶν ἀπιστεῖσθαι τὸν τὰ θεῖα καὶ μέγιστα πεπιστευμένον οὐκ εἰκός ἐστιν; Plut. in Qu. Rom. p. 491.

Mat. 12. 36.
Revel. 21. 8. & 22. 15.
Col. 3. 9.
Eph. 4. 25.
1 Pet. 2. 1.
Pſ. 119. 106.
* Omnis ſermo fidelis pro jure jurando eſt. Hier. in Matt. 5.

IX. Indeed the practice of Swearing greatly diſparageth him that uſeth it, and derogateth from his credit upon divers accounts.

It ſignifieth, (if it ſignifieth any thing,) that he doth not confide in his own reputation, and judgeth his own bare word not to deſerve credit: for why, if he taketh his word to be good, doth he back it with aſſeverations ? why, if he deemeth his own honeſty to bear proof, doth he cite Heaven to warrant it ?

It is (ſaith S. Baſil) a very foul and ſilly thing, for a man to accuſe himſelf as unworthy of belief, and to profer an Oath for ſecurity.

Αἰσχρὸν παντελῶς καὶ ἀνόητον, ἑαυτοῦ κατηγορεῖν ὡς ἀναξίου πίστεως, καὶ τὴν τῶν ὅρκων ἀσφάλειαν ἐπιφέρεσθαι. Baſ. in Pſ. 14.

By ſo doing a man doth authorize others to diſtruſt him: for it can be no wrong to diſtruſt him, who doth not pretend to be a credible perſon, or that his ſaying alone may ſafely be taken; who, by ſuſpecting that others are not ſatisfied with his ſimple aſſertion, implieth a reaſon known to himſelf for it.

Ἤδη γὰρ ὅ γε ὀμνὺς εἰς ἀπιστίαν ὑπονοεῖται. Philo.

It rendreth what-ever he ſaith to be in reaſon ſuſpicious, as diſcovering him void of conſcience and diſcretion: for he that flatly againſt the rules of duty and reaſon will ſwear vainly, what can engage him to ſpeak truly ? he that is ſo looſe in ſo clear and ſo conſiderable a point of obedience to God, how can he be ſuppoſed ſtaunch in regard to any other ? It being (as Ariſtotle hath it) the part of the ſame men to do ill things, and not to regard forſwearing. It will at leaſt conſtrain any man to ſuſpect all his diſcourſe of vanity and unadviſedneſs, ſeeing he plainly hath no care to bridle his tongue from ſo groſs an offence.

Τῶν αὐτῶν ἐστιν ἀνθρώπων τὰ πονηρὰ πράττειν, καὶ μὴ φροντίζειν ἐπιορκοῦντας. Ariſt. Rhet. ad Alex. c. 18.

It is ſtrange therefore, that any man of honour or honeſty ſhould not ſcorn, by ſuch a practice, to ſhake his own credit, or to detract from the validity of his word; which ſhould ſtand firm on it ſelf, and not want any atteſtation to ſupport it. It is a privilege of honourable perſons, that they are excuſed from ſwearing, and that their verbum honoris paſſeth in lieu of an Oath: is it not then ſtrange, that when others diſpenſe with them, they ſhould not diſpenſe with themſelves; but voluntarily degrade themſelves, and with ſin forfeit ſo noble a privilege ?

X. To excuſe theſe faults, the Swearer will be forced to confeſs, that his Oaths are no more than waſte and inſignificant words; deprecating being taken for ſerious, or to be underſtood that he meaneth any thing by them; but only that he uſeth them as expletive phraſes, πρὸς ἀναπλήρωσιν λόγου, to plump his ſpeech, and fill up ſentences. But ſuch pleas do no more than ſuggeſt other faults of Swearing, and good arguments againſt it; its impertinence, its abuſe of ſpeech, its diſgracing the practiſer of it in point of judgment and capacity. For ſo it is, Oaths as they commonly paſs are mere excreſcencies of Speech, which do nothing but encumber and deform it; they ſo embelliſh diſcourſe, as a Wen or a Scab do beautify a face, as a Patch or a Spot do adorn a garment.

Hierocl.
Philo.

To what purpoſe, I pray, is God's Name hooked and haled into our idle talk ? why ſhould we ſo often mention him, when we do not mean any thing about him ? would it not, into every ſentence to foiſt a dog or a horſe, (to intrude Turkiſh, or any barbarous gibberiſh,) be altogether as proper and pertinent ?

What do theſe ſuperfluities ſignifie, but that the venter of them doth little skill the uſe of ſpeech, or the rule of converſation, but meaneth to ſputter and prate any thing without judgment or wit; that his invention is very barren, his fancy beggarly, craving the aid of any ſtuff to relieve it ? One would think a man of ſenſe ſhould grutch to lend his ear, or incline his attention to ſuch motly ragged diſcourſe; that without out nauſeating he ſcarce ſhould endure to obſerve men laviſhing time, and ſquandring their breath ſo frivolouſly. 'Tis an affront to good company, to peſter it with ſuch talk.

XI. But farther, upon higher accounts this is a very uncivil and unmannerly practice.

Some vain perſons take it for a gentile and graceful thing, a ſpecial accompliſhment, a mark of fine breeding, a point of high gallantry: for who, forſooth, is the brave Spark, the compleat Gentleman, the man of converſation and addreſs, but he that hath the skill and confidence (O heavens! how mean a skill! how mad a confidence!) to lard every ſentence with an Oath or a Curſe; making bold at every turn to ſalute his Maker, or to ſummon him in atteſtation of his tattle; not to ſay, calling and challenging the Almighty to damn and deſtroy him? Such a conceit, I ſay, too many have of Swearing, becauſe a cuſtom thereof, together with divers other fond and baſe qualities, hath prevailed among ſome people, bearing the name and garb of Gentlemen.

But in truth there is no practice more croſſing the genuine nature of Gentileneſs, or misbecoming perſons well born and well bred; who ſhould excell the rude vulgar in goodneſs, in courteſie, in nobleneſs of heart, in unwillingneſs to offend, and readineſs to oblige thoſe with whom they converſe, in ſteddy compoſedneſs of mind and manners, in diſdaining to ſay or do any unworthy, any unhandſome things.

For this practice is not only a groſs rudeneſs toward the main body of men, who juſtly reverence the Name of God, and deteſt ſuch an abuſe thereof; not only (farther) an inſolent defiance of the common Profeſſion, the Religion, the Law of our Country, which diſalloweth and condemneth it; but it is very odious and offenſive to any particular Society or company, at leaſt wherein there is any ſober perſon, any who retaineth a ſenſe of goodneſs, or is any-wiſe concerned for God's honour: for to any ſuch perſon no language can be more diſguſtful; nothing can more grate his ears, or fret his heart, than to hear the ſovereign object of his love and eſteem ſo mocked and ſlighted; to ſee the Law of his Prince ſo diſloyally infringed, ſo contemptuouſly trampled on; to find his beſt Friend and Benefactour ſo outrageouſly abuſed. To give him the lie were a complement, to ſpit in his face were an obligation, in compariſon to this uſage.

Wherefore 'tis a wonder, that any perſon of rank, any that hath in him a ſpark of ingenuity, or doth at all pretend to good manners, ſhould find in his heart or deign to comply with ſo ſcurvy a faſhion; a faſhion much more befitting the ſcumme of the people, than the flower of the Gentry; yea rather much below any man endued with a ſcrap of reaſon, or a grain of goodneſs. Would we bethink our ſelves, modeſt, ſober and pertinent diſcourſe would appear far more generous and maſculine, than ſuch mad Hectoring the Almighty, ſuch boiſterous inſulting over the received Laws and general notions of mankind, ſuch ruffianly ſwaggering againſt ſobriety and goodneſs. If Gentlemen would regard the Vertues of their Anceſtours, the founders of their quality; that gallant courage, that ſolid wiſdom, that noble courteſie, which advanced their families, and ſevered them from the vulgar; this degenerate wantonneſs and ſordidneſs of language would return to the dunghil, or rather (which God grant) be quite baniſhed from the world; the vulgar following their example.

XII. Farther, the words of our Lord, when he forbad this practice, do ſuggeſt another conſideration againſt it, deducible from the cauſes

Mat. 5. 37. and ſources of it; from whence it cometh, that men are ſo inclined or addicted thereto: Let (ſaith he) your communication be Yea, yea, Nay, nay; for whatſoever is more than theſe cometh of evil. The roots of it he aſſureth us are evil, and therefore the fruit cannot be good: it is no grape which groweth from thorns, or fig from thiſtles. Conſult experience, and obſerve whence it doth proceed.

Sometimes it ariſeth from exorbitant heats of ſpirit, or tranſports of unbridled paſſion. When a man is keenly peeviſh, or fiercely angry, or eagerly contentious, then he bluſtereth, and diſchargeth his choler in moſt tragical ſtrains; then he would fright the objects of his diſpleaſure by the moſt violent expreſſions thereof. This is ſometime alledged in excuſe of raſh Swearing; (I was provoked, the Swearer will ſay, I was in paſſion:) but it is ſtrange, that a bad cauſe ſhould juſtify a bad effect; that one crime ſhould warrant another; that what would ſpoil a good action, ſhould excuſe a bad one.

Sometimes it proceedeth from arrogant conceit, and a tyrannical humour; when a man fondly admireth his own opinion, and affecting to impoſe it on others, is thence moved to thwack it on with luſty Aſſeverations.

ἐλαφρία. 2 Cor. 1. 17. Sometimes it iſſueth from wantonneſs and levity of mind, diſpoſing a man to ſport with any thing, how ſerious, how grave, how ſacred and venerable ſoever.

Sometimes its riſe is from ſtupid inadvertency, or heady precipitancy; when the man doth not heed what he ſaith, or conſider the nature and conſequence of his words, but ſnatcheth any expreſſion which cometh next, or which his roving fancy doth offer; for want of that caution of the Pſalmiſt, I ſaid, I will take heed to my ways, that I ſin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me. Pſal. 39. 1. & 141. 3.

Sometimes (alas! how often in this miſerable Age?) it doth ſpring from profane boldneſs; when men deſign to put affronts on Religion, and to diſplay their ſcorn and ſpite againſt Conſcience; affecting the reputation of ſtout Blades, of gallant Hectors, of reſolute Giants, who dare do any thing, who are not afraid to defy Heaven, and brave God Almighty himſelf.

(Pſal. 26. 4.) Sometimes it is derived from apiſh imitation, or a humour to comply with a faſhion current among vain and diſſolute perſons.

It always doth come from a great defect of Conſcience, of reverence to God, of love to goodneſs, of diſcretion and ſober regard to the welfare of a man's Soul.

From ſuch evidently-vicious and unworthy ſources it proceedeth, and therefore muſt needs be very culpable. No good, no wiſe man can like actions drawn from ſuch principles. Farther, Mat. 7. 16.

XIII. This offence may be particularly aggravated by conſidering, that it hath no ſtrong temptation alluring to it; that it yieldeth no ſenſible advantage; that it moſt eaſily may be avoided or corrected.

Οὐ γὰρ ἐστι πᾶν ἁμάρτημα τὴν αὐτὴν φέρον κόλασιν· ἀλλὰ τὰ εὐκατόρθωτα μείζονα ἡμῖν ἐπάγει τὴν τιμωρίαν. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ι'. p. 489.

Εἰπέ μοι, ποίαν δυσκολίαν, &c. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ιθ'. p. 594. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. έ. p. 499. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. δ'. p. 489.

Every ſin (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) hath not the ſame puniſhment; but thoſe things which may eaſily be reformed do bring on us greater puniſhment: and what can be more eaſie, than to reform this fault? Tell me, (ſaith he) what difficulty, what ſweat, what art, what hazard, what more doth it require beſide a little care to abſtain wholly from it? It is but willing, or reſolving on it, and it is inſtantly done: for there is not any natural inclination diſpoſing to it, any ſtrong appetite to detain us under its power.

It gratifieth no ſenſe, it yieldeth no profit, it procureth no honour; for the ſound of it is not very melodious, and no man ſurely did ever get an eſtate by it, or was preferred to dignity for it. It rather to any good ear maketh a horrid and jarring noiſe; it rather with the beſt part of the world produceth diſpleaſure, damage and diſgrace. What therefore beſide monſtrous vanity, and unaccountable perverſeneſs, ſhould hold men ſo devoted thereto?

Surely of all dealers in ſin the Swearer is palpably the ſillieſt, and maketh the worſt bargains for himſelf; for he ſinneth gratis, and (like thoſe in the Prophet) ſelleth his ſoul for nothing. An Epicure hath ſome reaſon to alledge, an Extortioner is a man of wiſdom, and acteth prudently in compariſon to him; for they enjoy ſome pleaſure, or acquire ſome gain here, in lieu of their Salvation hereafter: but this fondling offendeth Heaven, and abandoneth Happineſs, he knoweth not why or for what. He hath not ſo much as the common plea of humane infirmity to excuſe him; he can hardly ſay that he was tempted thereto by any bait.

Iſa. 52. 3.

Οὗτος δὲ, οὐδεμιᾶς ἀνάγκης αὐτὸν βιαζομένης, ὑπὸ ἀνοίας μόνης εἰς τὸ βάραθρον καταπίπτει τῆς ἁμαρτίας. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ί. p. 531. Οὐδὲ γὰρ ἔνι τινα πρόφασιν ἔχειν προβαλέσθαι, ἀλλὰ καταφρόνησιν μόνον. Ibid.

A phantaſtick humour poſſeſſeth him of ſpurning at Piety and Soberneſs; he inconſiderately followeth a herd of wild fops; he affecteth to play the Ape. What more than this can he ſay for himſelf?

XIV. Finally, let us conſider, that as we our ſelves, with all our members and powers, were chiefly deſigned and framed to glorify our Maker; (the which to do is indeed the greateſt perfection and nobleſt privilege of our nature;) ſo our Tongue and ſpeaking faculty were given to us to declare our admiration and reverence of him, to exhibit our due love and gratitude toward him, to profeſs our truſt and confidence in him, to celebrate his praiſes, to avow his benefits, to addreſs our ſupplications to him, to maintain all kinds of devotional intercourſe with him, to propagate our knowledge, fear, love and obedience to him, in all ſuch ways to promote his honour and ſervice. This is the moſt proper, worthy and due uſe of our Tongue, for which it was created, to which it is dedicated, from whence it becometh, as it is ſo often ſtyled, our glory, and the beſt member that we have; that whereby we excell all creatures here below, and whereby we are no leſs diſcriminated from them, than by our Reaſon; that whereby we conſort with the Bleſſed Angels above in the diſtinct utterance of praiſe, and communication of glory to our Creatour. Wherefore applying this to any impious diſcourſe, with this to profane God's Bleſſed Name, with this to violate his Holy Commands, with this to unhallow his Sacred Ordinance, with this to offer diſhonour and indignity to him, is a moſt unnatural abuſe, an horrid ingratitude toward him.

Pſal. 16. 9.
& 30. 12.
& 57. 8.
& 108. 1.

Hoc enim uno præſtamus vel maximè feris, quòd colloquimur inter nos, & quòd exprimere dicendo ſenſa poſſumus. Cic. de Orat. 1.

It is that indeed whereby we render this noble Organ incapable of any good uſe. For * how (as the excellent Father doth often urge) can we pray to God for mercies, or praiſe God for his benefits, or heartily confeſs our ſins, or chearfully partake of the Holy myſteries, with a mouth defiled by impious Oaths, with a heart guilty of ſo hainous diſobedience?

* Πῶς εὐξόμεθα—; Chr. Ἀνδρ. ιδ. p. 559. Ἀνδρ. ια. p. 538.

Likewiſe, whereas a ſecondary, very worthy uſe of our Speech is, to promote the good of our Neighbour, and eſpecially to edifie him in Piety, according to that wholſome precept of the Apoſtle, Let no corrupt

Eph. 4. 29.

rupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the uſe of edifying, that it may miniſter grace unto the hearers; the practice of Swearing is an abuſe very contrary to that good purpoſe, ſerving to corrupt our Neighbour, and to inſtill into him a contempt of Religion; or however grievouſly to ſcandalize him.

John 14. 15.
Matt. 5. 34.

XV. I ſhall add but two words more. One is, that we would ſeriouſly conſider, that our Bleſſed Saviour, who loved us ſo dearly, who did and ſuffered ſo much for us, who redeemed us by his bloud, who ſaid unto us, If ye love me, keep my commandments, he thus poſitively hath injoyned, But I ſay unto you, Swear not at all: and how then can we find in our heart directly to thwart his word?

* μὴ ὑπὸ κρίσιν πέσητε.

The other is, that we would lay to heart the reaſon whereby S. James doth enforce the point, and the ſting in the cloſe of our Text, wherewith I conclude; But above all things, my brethren, ſwear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your Yea be yea, and your Nay nay, leſt you fall into condemnation, or, * leſt you fall under damnation. From the which infinite miſchief, and from all ſin that may cauſe it, God in mercy deliver us through our Bleſſed Redeemer Jeſus, to whom for ever be all glory and praiſe.

SERMON XVI.

Of Evil-ſpeaking in General.

TITUS. 3. 2.

----To ſpeak evil of no man.

THESE words do imply a double Duty; one incumbent on Teachers, another on the People who are to be inſtructed by them.

* Ὑπομίμνησκε αὐτούς.

The Teachers Duty appeareth from reflecting on the words of the Context, which govern theſe, and make them up an entire ſentence; * Put them in mind, or, Rub up their memory to do thus. It is S. Paul's injunction to Titus, a Biſhop and Paſtour of the Church, that he ſhould admoniſh the People committed to his care and inſtruction, as of other great Duties, (of yielding obedience to Magiſtrates, of behaving themſelves peaceably, of practiſing meekneſs and equity toward all men, of being readily diſpoſed to every good work,) ſo particularly of this μηδένα βλασφημεῖν, to revile, or ſpeak evil of no man.

Whence it is apparent, that this is one of the principal Duties that Preachers are obliged to mind people of, and to preſs upon them. And if this were needful then, when Charity, kindled by ſuch inſtructions and examples, was ſo lively; when Chriſtians, by their Sufferings, rings, were ſo inured to meekneſs and patience; even every one, for the honour of his Religion, and the ſafety of his perſon, was concerned in all reſpects to demean himſelf innocently and inoffenſively; then is it now eſpecially requiſite, when (ſuch engagements and reſtraints being taken off, Love being cooled, Perſecution being extinct, the tongue being ſet looſe from all extraordinary curbs) the tranſgreſſion of this Duty is grown ſo prevalent and riſe, that Evil-ſpeaking is almoſt as common as ſpeaking, ordinary converſation extremely abounding therewith, that Miniſters ſhould diſcharge their office in dehorting and diſſuading from it.

Well indeed it were, if by their example of uſing mild and moderate diſcourſe, of abſtaining from virulent invectives, tauntings and ſcoffings, good for little but to enflame anger, and infuſe ill-will, they would lead men to good practice of this ſort: for no examples can be ſo wholſome, or ſo miſchievous to this purpoſe, as thoſe which come down from the Pulpit, the place of edification, backed with ſpecial authority and advantage.

How-ever, it is to Preachers a ground of aſſurance, and matter of ſatisfaction, that in preſſing this Duty they ſhall perform their duty: their Text being not ſo much of their own chuſing, as given them by S. Paul; they can ſurely ſcarce find a better to diſcourſe upon: it cannot be a matter of ſmall moment or uſe, which this great Maſter and Guide ſo expreſly directeth us to inſiſt upon. And to the obſervance of his Precept, ſo far as concerneth me, I ſhall immediately apply my ſelf.

It is then the Duty of all Chriſtian people, (to be taught, and preſſed on them,) not to reproach, or ſpeak evil of any man. The which Duty, for your inſtruction, I ſhall firſt endeavour ſomewhat to explain, declaring its import and extent; then, for your farther edification, I ſhall inculcate it, propoſing ſeveral inducements perſuaſive to the obſervance of it.

I. For Explication, we may firſt conſider the Object of it, no man; then the Act it ſelf, which is prohibited, to blaſpheme, that is, to reproach, to revile, or (as we have it rendred) to ſpeak evil.

NO MAN. S. Paul queſtionleſs did eſpecially mean hereby to hinder the Chriſtians at that time from reproaching the Jews and the Pagans among whom they lived, men in their lives very wicked and corrupt, men in opinion extremely diſſenting from them, men who greatly did hate, and cruelly did perſecute them; of whom therefore they had mighty provocations and temptations to ſpeak ill; their judgment of the perſons, and their reſentment of injuries, making it difficult to abſtain from doing ſo. Whence by a manifeſt analogy may be inferred, that the Object of this Duty is very large, indeed univerſal and unlimited: that we muſt forbear reproach not only againſt pious and vertuous perſons, againſt perſons of our own judgment or party, againſt thoſe who never did harm or offend us, againſt our relations, our friends, our benefactours; in reſpect of whom there is no ground or temptation of ill-ſpeaking; but even againſt the moſt unworthy and wicked perſons, againſt thoſe who moſt diſcoaſt in opinion and practice from us, againſt thoſe who never did oblige us, yea thoſe who have moſt diſobliged us, even againſt our moſt bitter and ſpiteful enemies. There is no exception or excuſe to be admitted from the quality, ſtate, relation, or demeanour of men; the Duty (according to the proper ſenſe, or due qualifications and limits of the Act) doth extend to all men: for, Speak evil of no man.

As for the Act, it may be inquired what the word βλασφημεῖν, to BLASPHEME, doth import. I anſwer, that it is to vent words concerning any perſon which do ſignifie in us ill opinion, or contempt, anger, hatred, enmity conceived in our minds toward him; which are apt in him to kindle wrath, and breed ill bloud toward us; which tend to beget in others that hear ill conceit, or ill-will toward him; which are much deſtructive of his reputation, prejudicial to his intereſts, productive of damage or miſchief to him. It is otherwiſe in Scripture termed λοιδορεῖν, to rail or revile, (to uſe bitter and ignominious language;) ὑβρίζειν, to ſpeak contumeliouſly; φέρειν βλάσφημον κρίσιν, to bring railing accuſation, or reproachful cenſure;) καταλαλεῖν, to uſe obloquy, or obtrectation; καταρᾶσθαι, to curſe, that is, to ſpeak words importing that we do wiſh ill to a perſon.

Luk. 11. 45.
2 Pet. 2. 11.
Jud. 9.
Jam. 4. 11.
Rom. 12. 14.
Luk. 6. 28.
(2 Sam. 16. 10.)

Such is the language we are prohibited to uſe. To which purpoſe we may obſerve, that whereas in our converſation and commerce with men, there do frequently occur occaſions to ſpeak of men and to men words apparently diſadvantageous to them, expreſſing our diſſent in opinion from them, or a diſlike in us of their proceedings, we may do this in different ways and terms; ſome of them gentle and moderate, ſignifying no ill mind or diſaffection toward them; others harſh and ſharp, arguing height of diſdain, diſguſt, or deſpite, whereby we bid them defiance, and ſhew that we mean to exaſperate them. Thus, telling a man that we differ in judgment from him, or conceive him not to be in the right, and calling him a Liar, a Deceiver, a Fool; ſaying that he doeth amiſs, taketh a wrong courſe, tranſgreſſeth the rule, and calling him diſhoneſt, unjuſt, wicked; (to omit more odious and provoking names, unbecoming this place, and not deſerving our notice;) are ſeveral ways of expreſſing the ſame things: whereof the latter, in relating paſſages concerning our Neighbour, or in debating caſes with him, is prohibited: for thus the words reproaching, reviling, railing, curſing, and the like, do ſignifie; and thus our Lord himſelf doth explain them, in his Divine Sermon, wherein he doth enact this Law; Whoſoever (ſaith he) ſhall ſay to his brother, RACA, (that is, Vain man, or Liar, ſhall be in danger of the council: but whoſoever ſhall ſay, THOU FOOL, ſhall be in danger of Hell-fire; that is, he rendreth himſelf liable to a ſtrict account, and to ſevere condemnation before God, who uſeth contemptuous and contumelious expreſſions toward his Neighbour, in proportion to the malignity of ſuch expreſſions.

(Acts 23. 3, 4, 5.)

Matt. 5. 22.

The reaſon of things alſo doth help to explain thoſe words, and to ſhew why they are prohibited: becauſe thoſe harſh terms are needleſs; mild words ſerving as well to expreſs the ſame things: becauſe they are commonly unjuſt, loading men with greater defect or blame than they can be proved to deſerve, or their actions do import: (for every man that ſpeaketh falſhood is not therefore a Liar, every man that erreth is not thence a Fool, every man that doeth amiſs is not conſequently Diſhoneſt or wicked; the ſecret intentions and the habitual diſpoſitions of men not being always to be collected from their outward actions: becauſe they are uncharitable, ſignifying that we entertain the worſt opinions of men, and make the worſt conſtruction of their doings, and are diſpoſed to ſhew them no favour or kindneſs: becauſe alſo they produce miſchievous effects, ſuch as ſpring from the worſt paſſions raiſed by them.

This in groſs is the meaning of the Precept. But ſince there are ſome other Precepts ſeeming to claſh with this; ſince there are caſes wherein we are allowed to uſe the harſher ſort of terms, there are great examples in appearance thwarting this rule; therefore it may be requiſite for determining the limits of our duty, and diſtinguiſhing it from tranſgreſſion, that ſuch exceptions or reſtrictions ſhould be ſomewhat declared.

1. Firſt then, we may obſerve, that it may be allowable to perſons any-wiſe concerned in the proſecution or adminiſtration of Juſtice, to ſpeak words which in private intercourſe would be reproachful. A Witneſs may impeach of crimes hurtful to juſtice, or publick tranquillity; a Judge may challenge, may rebuke, may condemn an offender in proper terms, (or forms of ſpeech preſcribed by Law,) although moſt diſgraceful and diſtaſtful to the guilty: for it belongeth to the majeſty of publick Juſtice to be bold, blunt, ſevere; little regarding the concerns or paſſions of particular perſons, in compariſon to the publick welfare.

A Teſtimony therefore or Sentence againſt a criminal, which materially is a reproach, and morally would be ſuch in a private mouth, is not yet formally ſo accordingly to the intent of this rule. For practices of this kind, which ſerve the exigencies of Juſtice, are not to be interpreted as proceeding from anger, hatred, revenge, any bad paſſion or humour; but in way of needful diſcipline for God's ſervice, and common benefit of men. It is not indeed ſo much the Miniſter of Juſtice, as God himſelf, our abſolute Lord, as the Sovereign, God's repreſentative, acting in the publick behalf, as the Commonwealth it ſelf, who by his mouth do rebuke the obnoxious perſon.

2. God's Miniſters in Religious affairs, to whom the care of mens inſtruction and edification is committed, are enabled to inveigh againſt ſin and vice, who-ever conſequentially may be touched thereby: yea ſometimes it is their duty, with ſeverity and ſharpneſs to reprove particular perſons, not only privately, but publickly, in order to their correction, and edification of others.

Thus Saint Paul directeth Timothy; Them that ſin (notoriouſly and ſcandalouſly, he meaneth) rebuke before all, that others may fear: that is in a manner apt to make impreſſion on the minds of the hearers, ſo as to ſcare them from like offences. And to Titus he writes, Rebuke them ſharply, that they may be ſound in the faith. And, Cry aloud, ſpare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and ſhew my people their tranſgreſſions, and the houſe of Jacob their ſins, ſaith the Lord to the Prophet. Such are the charges and commiſſions laid on and granted to his Meſſengers.

1 Tim. 5. 20.
2 Tim. 4. 2.
Tit. 1. 13.
Iſa. 58. 1.

Thus may we obſerve that God's Prophets of old, S. John the Baptiſt, our Lord himſelf, the Holy Apoſtles did in terms moſt vehement and biting reprove the Age in which they lived, and ſome particular perſons in them. The Prophets are full of declamations and invectives againſt the general corruption of their Times, and againſt the particular manners of ſome perſons in them. Ah ſinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a ſeed of evil-doers, children that are corrupters! They are all adulterers, an aſſembly of treacherous men; and they bend their tongues like their bow for lies. * Thy Princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves, every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards: they judge not the fatherleſs, neither doth the cauſe of the widow come before them. † The Prophets propheſie falſly, and the Prieſts rule by their means. ‖ As troups of robbers wait for a man, ſo the company of Prieſts murther in the way by conſent, Vide Hier. in Pelag. 1. 9.

Iſa. 1. 4.
Jer. 9. 2, 3.
* Iſa. 1. 23.
Hoſ. 9. 15.
Ezek. 22. 6. 27.
† Jer. 5. 31. & 14. 14.
‖ Hoſ. 6. 9.
Ezek. 22. 26.
Mic. 3. 11.
Zeph. 3. 4.

conſent, and commit lewdneſs. Such is their ſtyle commonly. S. John the
* Matt. 3. 7. Baptiſt calleth the Scribes and Phariſees * a generation of vipers. Our † Matt. 16. 4. & 12. 34, 39. Saviour ſpeaketh of them in the ſame terms; calleth them an † evil and || Matt. 23. adulterous generation, Serpents, and children of vipers; || Hypocrites, pain-
13, &c. Matt. 15. 7. ted ſepulchres, obſcure graves, (μνημεῖα ἄδηλα,) blind Guides, Fools and
14. & 16. 3. blind, children of the Devil. S. Paul likewiſe calleth the Schiſmatical & 22. 18. and heretical Teachers, * Dogs, falſe Apoſtles, evil and deceitful work-
Luk. 12. 1. & 11. 44. ers, men of corrupt minds, Reprobates and abominable. With the like co-Matt. 23. 24, lours do S. Peter, S. Jude, and other the Apoſtles paint them. Which
17. ſort of ſpeeches are to be ſuppoſed to proceed, not from private paſſi-
Joh. 8. 44. * Phil. 3. 2. on or deſign, but out of holy zeal for God's honour, and from earneſt
2 Cor. 11. 13. charity toward men, for to work their amendment and common edifi-
1 Tim. 6. 5. 2 Tim. 3. 8. cation. They were uttered alſo by ſpecial wiſdom and peculiar or-
Tit. 1. 16. der; from God's authority and in his name: ſo that as God by them is 2 Cor. 5. 20. ſaid to preach, to entreat, to warn, and to exhort, ſo by them alſo he
Col. 1. 28. may be ſaid to reprehend and reproach.

3. Even private perſons in due ſeaſon, with diſcretion and temper, may reprove others, whom they obſerve to commit ſin, or follow bad courſes, out of charitable deſign, and with hope to reclaim them. This was an office of charity impoſed anciently even upon the Jews; much more doth it lie upon Chriſtians, who are obliged more earn-Levit. 19. 17. eſtly to tender the ſpiritual good of thoſe who by the ſtricter and more holy bands of brotherhood are allied to them. Thou ſhalt 1 Theſſ. 5. 14. not hate thy brother; thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy neighbour, and not ſuffer ſin upon him, was a precept of the old Law: and, νουθετεῖν ἀτάκτους, to admoniſh the diſorderly, is an Evangelical rule. Such perſons we are 1 Tim. 6. 5. enjoyned to ſhun and decline: but firſt we muſt endeavour by ſober
Rom. 16. 17. advice and admonition to reclaim them; we muſt not thus reject them
Tit. 3. 10. 2 Theſſ. 3. 6. till they appear contumacious and incorrigible, refuſing to hear us, or Matt. 18. 17. becoming deaf to reproof. This although it neceſſarily doth include ſetting out their faults, and charging blame on them, (anſwerable to their offences,) is not the culpable reproach here meant, it being needful toward a wholſome effect, and proceeding from charitable intention.

4. Some vehemency (ſome ſmartneſs and ſharpneſs) of ſpeech may ſometimes be uſed in defence of Truth, and impugning Errours of bad conſequence; eſpecially when it concerneth the intereſt of Truth, that the reputation and authority of its adverſaries ſhould ſomewhat be abaſed or abated. If by a partial opinion or reverence toward them, however begotten in the minds of men, they ſtrive to overbear or diſcountenance a good cauſe, their faults (ſo far as truth permitteth and need requireth) may be detected and diſplayed. For this cauſe particularly may we preſume our Lord (otherwiſe ſo meek in his temper, and mild in his carriage toward all men) did characterize the Jewiſh Scribes in ſuch terms, that their authority (being then ſo prevalent with the Jud 3. people) might not prejudice the Truth, and hinder the efficacy of his Doctrine. This is part of that ἐπαγωνίζεσθαι τῇ πίστει, that duty of contending earneſtly for the faith, which is incumbent on us.

5. It may be excuſable upon particular emergent occaſions, with Matt. 17. 17. ſome heat of language to expreſs diſlike of notorious wickedneſs. As our Lord doth againſt the perverſe incredulity and ſtupidity in the Acts 8. 23. Phariſees, their profane miſconſtruction of his words and actions, their malicious oppoſing truth, and obſtructing his endeavours in God's ſer-vice. As S. Peter did to Simon Magus, telling him, that he was in the Acts 13. 8, 10. gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity. As S. Paul to Elimas the Sorcerer,

Sorcerer, when he withſtood him, and deſired to turn away the Deputy, Sergius, from the faith; O (ſaid he, ſtirr'd with a holy zeal and indignation) thou full of all ſubtlety and all miſchief, thou child of the Devil, thou enemy of all righteouſneſs, wilt thou not ceaſe to pervert the right ways of the Lord? The ſame ſpirit which inabled him to inflict a ſore puniſhment on that wicked wretch, did prompt him to uſe that ſharp language toward him; unqueſtionably deſerved, and ſeaſonably pronounced. As alſo, when the High Prieſt commanded him illegally and unjuſtly to be miſuſed, that ſpeech from a mind juſtly ſenſible of ſuch outrage broke forth, God ſhall ſmite thee, thou whited wall. So, Acts 23. 3. when Saint Peter preſumptuouſly would have diſſuaded our Lord from compliance with God's will, in undergoing thoſe croſſes which were appointed to him by God's decree, our Lord calleth him Satan;---- Ὕπαγε, Σατανᾶ, Avant, Satan, thou art an offence unto me; for Matt. 16. 23. thou ſavoureſt not the things that be of God, but thoſe that are of men.

Theſe ſort of ſpeeches, iſſuing from juſt and honeſt indignation, are ſometimes excuſable, oftentimes commendable; eſpecially when they come from perſons eminent in authority, of notable integrity, endued with ſpecial meaſures of Divine grace, of wiſdom, of goodneſs; ſuch as cannot be ſuſpected of intemperate anger, of ill nature, of ill will, of ill deſign.

In ſuch caſes as are above mentioned, a ſort of Evil-ſpeaking about our Neighbour may be allowable or excuſable. But for fear of overdoing, great caution and temper is to be uſed; and we ſhould never apply any ſuch limitations as cloaks to pallitate unjuſt or uncharitable dealing. Generally it is more adviſable, to ſuppreſs ſuch eruptions of paſſion, than to vent it; for ſeldom paſſion hath not inordinate motions joyned with it, or tendeth to good ends. And however it will do well to reflect on thoſe caſes, and to remark ſome particulars about them.

Firſt, We may obſerve, that in all theſe caſes all poſſible moderation, equity and candour are to be uſed; ſo that no ill-ſpeaking be practiſed beyond what is needful or convenient. Even in proſecution of offences, the bounds of truth, of equity, of humanity and clemency are not to be tranſgreſſed. A Judge muſt not lay on the moſt criminal perſon more blame, or contumely, than the caſe will bear, or than ſerveth the deſigns of juſtice. However our Neighbour doth incurr the calamities of ſin and of puniſhment, we muſt not be inſolent or contemptuous toward him. So we may learn by that Law of Moſes, back'd with a Deut. 25. 2,3 notable reaſon: And it ſhall be, if the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, that the Judge cauſe him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face, according to his fault, by a certain number. Forty ſtripes he may give him, and not exceed; leſt if he ſhould exceed, and beat him above thoſe ſtripes, then thy brother ſhould ſeem vile unto thee. Whence appears, that we ſhould be careful of not vilifying an offender beyond meaſure. And how mildly Governours ſhould proceed in the adminiſtration of juſtice, the example of Joſhua may teach us, who thus examineth Achan, Joſh. 7. 19, 25. the cauſe of ſo great miſchief to the publick; My ſon, give, I pray thee, glory to the Lord God of Iſrael, and make confeſſion unto him; and tell me now what thou haſt done, hide it not from me. My ſon; what compellation could be more benign and kind? I pray thee; what language could be more courteous and gentle? give glory to God, and make confeſſion; what words could be more inoffenſively pertinent? And when he ſentenced that great Malefactour, the cauſe of ſo much miſchief, this was all he ſaid, Why haſt thou troubled us? The Lord will trouble thee; words void of contumely or inſulting, containing only a cloſe intimation of the cauſe, and a ſimple declaration of the event he was to undergo.

Secondly, Likewiſe Miniſters, in the taxing ſin and ſinners, are to proceed with great diſcretion and caution, with much gentleneſs and meekneſs; ſignifying a tender pity of their infirmities, charitable deſires of their good, the beſt opinion of them, and the beſt hopes for them, that may conſiſt with any reaſon; according to thoſe Apoſtolical rules: Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are ſpiritual, reſtore ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs; conſidering thy ſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted: and, We that are ſtrong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to pleaſe our ſelves: and more expreſly, A ſervant of the Lord muſt not fight, but be gentle toward all, apt to teach, patient, In meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves. Thus did S. Peter temper his reproof of Simon Magus with this wholſome and comfortable advice; Repent therefore from this thy wickedneſs, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee.

Gal. 6. 1.

Rom. 15. 1.

2 Tim. 2. 24, 25.

Acts 8. 22.

Thirdly, As for fraternal correption and reproof of faults, (when it is juſt and expedient to uſe it,) ordinarily the * calmeſt and mildeſt way is the moſt proper, and moſt likely to obtain good ſucceſs: it commonly doth || in a more kindly manner convey the ſenſe thereof into the heart, and therein more powerfully worketh remorſe, than the fierce and harſh way. Clearly to ſhew a man his fault, with the reaſon proving it ſuch ſo that he becometh throughly convinced of it, is ſufficient to breed in him regret, and to ſhame him before his own mind: to do more (in way of aggravation, of inſulting on him, of inveighing againſt him,) as it doth often not well conſiſt with humanity, ſo it is ſeldom conſonant to diſcretion, if we do, as we ought, ſeek his health and amendment. Humanity requireth, that when we undertake to reform our Neighbour, we ſhould take care not to deform him; (not to diſcourage or diſpleaſe him more than is neceſſary;) when we would correct his manners, that we ſhould alſo conſider his modeſty, and conſult his reputation; curam agentes (as Seneca ſpeaketh) non tantùm ſalutis, ſed & honeſtæ cicatricis, having care not only to heal the wound, but to leave a comely ſcar behind. Be (adviſeth S. Auſtin) ſo diſpleaſed with iniquity, as to conſider and conſult humanity: for, Zeal void of humanity, is not (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) zeal, but rather animoſity; and reproof not mixt with good will, appeareth a kind of malignity. We ſhould ſo rebuke thoſe who, by frailty or folly incident to mankind, have fallen into miſdemeanours, that they may perceive we do ſincerely pity their ill caſe, and tender their good; that we mean not to upbraid their weakneſs, or inſult upon their misfortune; that we delight not to inflict on them more grief than is plainly needful and unavoidable; that we are conſcious and ſenſible of our own obnoxiouſneſs to the like ſlips or falls, and do conſider, that we alſo may be tempted, and being tempted may be overborn. This they cannot perceive, or be perſuaded of, except we temper our ſpeech with

* Reprehenſio contumeliâ vacare debet. Neque monitio aſpera ſit, nec objurgatio contumelioſa. Ambroſ. de Offic. 3. 16.

|| Prov. 17. 10. A reproof entreth more into a wiſe man, than a hundred ſtripes into a fool.

Ὁ ὁδηγὸς, ὅταν λάβῃ τινὰ πλανώμενον, ἤγαγεν ἐπὶ ὁδὸν τὴν δέουσαν· οὐχὶ καταγελάσας ἢ λοιδορησάμενος ἀπῆλθε· καὶ σὺ δεῖξον αὐτῷ τὴν ἀλήθειαν, καὶ ὄψει ὅτι ἀκολουθεῖ, &c. Epict. 2. 12.

Sen. de Clem. 1. 7.

Vide Chryſ. in Matt. 9. 8. Or. 29.

Ità ſuccenſe iniquitati, ut conſulere memineris humanitatis. Aug.

Ζῆλος φιλανθρωπίας κενὸς, οὐ ζῆλος, &c.

Gal. 6. 1.

with benignity and mildneſs. Such ſpeech || prudence alſo dictateth, as moſt uſeful and hopeful for producing the good ends honeſt reprehenſion doth aim at; it mollifieth and it melteth a ſtubborn heart, it ſubdueth and winneth a perverſe will, it healeth diſtempered affections. Whereas roughly handling is apt to defeat or obſtruct the cure; rubbing the ſore doth tend to exaſperate and inflame it. Harſh ſpeech rendreth advice odious and unſavoury; driveth from it, and depriveth it of efficacy: it turneth regret for a fault into diſpleaſure and diſdain againſt the reprover: it looks not like the dealing of a kind friend, but like the perſecution of a ſpiteful enemy: it ſeemeth rather an ebullition of gall, or a defluxion from rancour, than an expreſſion of good will: the offender will take it for a needleſs and pitileſs tormenting, or for a proud and tyrannical domineering over him. He that can bear a friendly touch, will not endure to be laſhed with angry and reproachful words. In fine, all reproof ought to be ſeaſoned with diſcretion, with candour, with moderation and meekneſs.

|| Pleaſant words are as an hony-comb, ſweet to the ſoul, and health to the bones: Prov. 16. 24.

A ſoft anſwer turneth away wrath; but grievous words ſtir up anger. Prov. 15. 1.

2 Theſſ. 3. 15. Μὴ ὡς ἐχθρὸν ἡγεῖσθε, ἀλλὰ νουθετεῖτε ὡς ἀδελφόν.

Fourthly, Likewiſe in defence of truth, and maintenance of a good cauſe, we may obſerve, that commonly the faireſt language is moſt proper and advantageous, and that reproachful or foul terms are moſt improper and prejudicial. A calm and meek way of diſcourſing doth much advantage a good cauſe, as arguing the patron thereof to have confidence in the cauſe it ſelf, and to rely upon its ſtrength; that he is in a temper fit to apprehend it himſelf, and to maintain it; that he propoundeth it as a friend, wiſhing the hearer for his own good to follow it, leaving him the liberty to judge, and chuſe for himſelf. But rude ſpeech, and contemptuous reflexions on perſons, as they do ſignifie nothing to the queſtion, ſo they commonly bring much diſadvantage and damage to the cauſe, creating mighty prejudices againſt it: they argue much impotency in the advocate, and conſequently little ſtrength in what he maintains; that he is little able to judge well, and altogether unapt to teach others: they intimate a diffidence in himſelf concerning his cauſe, and that, deſpairing to maintain it by reaſon, he ſeeks to uphold it by paſſion; that, not being able to convince by fair means, he would bear down by noiſe and clamour; that, not skilling to get his ſuit quietly, he would extort it by force, obtruding his conceits violently as an enemy, or impoſing them arbitrarily as a Tyrant. Thus doth he really diſparage and ſlur his cauſe, however good and defenſible in it ſelf.

Quid dum dicit, malus videtur, utique malè dicit. Quint: 6. 2.

Niſi quòd imperitos etiam animoſos atque iracundos eſſe manifeſtum eſt, dum per inopiam conſilii & ſermonis ad iracundiam facilè vertuntur. Firmil. apud Cyp. Ep. 75.

A modeſt and friendly ſtyle doth ſute truth; it, like its authour, doth uſually reſide (not in the rumbling wind, nor in the ſhaking earthquake, nor in the raging fire, but) in the ſmall ſtill voice: ſounding in this, it is moſt audible, moſt penetrant, and moſt effectual: thus propounded, it is willingly hearkned to; for men have no averſation from hearing thoſe who ſeem to love them, and wiſh them well. It is eaſily conceived; no prejudice or paſſion clouding the apprehenſive faculties: it is readily embraced; no animoſity withſtanding or obſtructing it. It is the ſweetneſs of the lips, which (as the Wiſe-man telleth us) encreaſeth learning; diſpoſing a man to hear leſſons of good doctrine, rendring him capable to underſtand

1 King. 19. 11, 12.

——& inhumanum eſt, & ipſi qui dicit inutile; tum cauſæ contrarium, quia planè & adverſarii fiunt, & inimici: & quantulumcunque his virium eſt, contumeliâ augetur. Quint. 12. 9.

Prov. 16. 21.

derſtand them, inſinuating and impreſſing them upon the mind: the affections being thereby unlocked, the paſſage becomes open to the Reaſon.

Δεῖ γὰρ τὸν μέλλοντα τι τῶν χρησίμων μαθεῖν, πρὸ τῶν ἄλλων πάντων ἡδέως ἔχειν πρὸς τὸν διδάσκοντα.----ἡδέως δὲ οὐκ ἄν τις σχοίη πρὸς τὸν θρασυνόμενον καὶ τὸν ὑβρίζοντα. Chryſ. in 2 Tim. Or. 6.

But it is plainly a very prepoſterous method of inſtructing, of deciding controverſies, of begetting peace, to vex and anger thoſe concerned by ill language. Nothing ſurely doth more hinder the efficacy of diſcourſe, and prevent conviction, than doth this courſe, upon many obvious accounts. It doth firſt, put in a ſtrong bar to attention: for no man willingly doth afford an ear to him, whom he conceiveth diſaffected toward him; which opinion harſh words infallibly will produce: no man can expect to hear truth from him, whom he apprehendeth diſordred in his own mind, whom he ſeeth rude in his proceedings, whom he taketh to be unjuſt in his dealing; as men certainly will take thoſe to be, who preſume to revile others for uſing their own judgment freely, and diſſenting from them in opinion. Again, this courſe doth blind the hearer's mind, ſo that he cannot diſcern what he that pretends to inſtruct him doth mean, or how he doth aſſert his doctrine. Truth will not be diſcerned through the ſmoak of wrathful expreſſions; right being defaced by foul language will not appear; paſſion being excited will not ſuffer a man to perceive the ſenſe, or the force of an argument. The will alſo thereby is hardned and hindred from ſubmitting to truth. In ſuch a caſe, non perſuadebis, etiamſi perſuaſeris; although you ſtop his mouth, you cannot ſubdue his heart; although he can no longer fight, yet he never will yield: animoſity raiſed by ſuch uſage rendreth him invincibly obſtinate in his conceits and courſes. Briefly, from this proceeding men become unwilling to mark, unfit to apprehend, indiſpoſed to embrace any good inſtruction or advice: it maketh them indocil and intractable, averſe from better inſtruction, pertinacious in their opinions, and refractory in their ways.

Ὃν ἴσως ἐκέρδησας ἂν τῇ χρηστότητι, τοῦτον ἀπολλύεις τῇ θρασύτητι. Greg. Naz. Or. 26.

Οὐ γὰρ ἀπαιδεύτως παιδεύομεν, οὐδὲ τοῖς ὕβρεσι βάλλομεν, ὅπερ πάσχουσιν οἱ πολλοὶ, μὴ τῷ λόγῳ μαχόμενοι, τοῖς δὲ λέγουσι, καὶ τὴν ἀσθένειαν ἔστιν ὅτε τῶν λογισμῶν ταῖς ὕβρεσι συγκαλύπτοντες. Naz. Or. 32.

Ὅταν πρός τινα ἀηδῶς ἔχωμεν, κἂν χρηστόν τι λέγῃ, οὐ προθύμως οὐδὲ μεθ' ἡδονῆς δεχόμεθα τὰ λεγόμενα. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 59.

Prov. 24. 26. Every man (ſaith the Wiſe-man) ſhall kiſs his lips that giveth a right anſwer: but no man ſurely will be ready to kiſs thoſe lips which are embittered with reproach, or defiled with dirty language.

It is ſaid of Pericles, that with thundring and lightning he put Greece into confuſion: ſuch diſcourſe may ſerve to confound things, it ſeldom tendeth to compoſe them. If reaſon will not pierce, Rage will ſcarce avail to drive it in. Satyrical virulency may vex men ſorely, but it hardly ever ſoundly converts them. Few become wiſer or better by ill words. Children may be frighted into compliance by loud and ſevere increpations; but men are to be allured by rational perſuaſion back'd with courteous uſage: they may be ſweetly drawn, they cannot be violently driven to change their judgment and practice. Whence that advice of the Apoſtle, With meekneſs inſtruct thoſe that oppoſe themſelves, doth no leſs ſavour of wiſdom, than of goodneſs. 2 Tim. 2. 25.

Βροντῶν καὶ ἀστράπτων ἐκύκα τὴν Ἑλλάδα.

Chryſ. in 2 Tim. 2. 24.

Ὁ γὰρ σφοδρὸς ἔλεγχος, ὅταν μετ' ἐπιεικείας γίνηται, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ μάλιστα δακεῖν δυνάμενος· ἔνεστι γὰρ, ἔνεστι μετὰ πραότητος καθάψασθαι μᾶλλον, ἢ μετὰ θρασύτητος ἐντρέψαι.

Fifthly, As for the examples of extraordinary perſons, which in ſome caſes do ſeem to authorize the practice of Evil-ſpeaking, we may conſider, that as they had eſpecial commiſſion enabling them to do ſome things beyond ordinary ſtanding rules, wherein they are not to be imitated; as they had eſpecial illumination and direction, which preſerved them from ſwerving in particular caſes from truth and equity; ſo the tenour of their life did evidence, that it was the glory of God, the goodof men, the neceſſity of the caſe, which moved them to it. And of them alſo we may obſerve, that in divers occaſions, (yea generally, whenever only their private credit or intereſt were concerned,) although grievouſly provoked, they did out of meekneſs, patience and charity, wholly forbear reproachful ſpeech. Our Saviour, who ſometimes upon ſpecial reaſon in his diſcourſes, uſed ſuch harſh words, yet when he was moſt ſpitefully accuſed, reproached and perſecuted, did not open his mouth, or return one angry word: Being reviled, he did not (as S. Peter, propoſing his example to us, telleth us) revile again; ſuffering, he did not threaten. He uſed the ſofteſt language to Judas, to the Souldiers, to Pilate and Herod, to the Prieſts, &c. And the Apoſtles, who ſometimes inveigh ſo zealouſly againſt the oppoſers and perverters of truth, did in their private converſation and demeanour ſtrictly obſerve their own rules of abſtinence from reproach: Being reviled we bleſs, being perſecuted we ſuffer it; ſo doth Saint Paul repreſent their practice. And in reaſon we ſhould rather follow them in this their ordinary courſe, than in their extraordinary ſallies of practice.

This caſe is like the other caſes, wherein the practice of good and great men, although excuſable, is not yet exemplary: as the heroical acts of David, of Sampſon, of Ehud,of Phineas, of Elias, of Moſes; David's Duel, Sampſon's Suicide, Moſes's ſlaying the Egyptian, Ehud's ſtabbing the K. of Moab, Elias's calling for fire, by extraordinary and peculiar inſtinct.

1 Pet. 2. 23.

1 Cor. 4. 12.
Rom. 12. 14.

In fine, however in ſome caſes and circumſtances the matter may admit ſuch exceptions, ſo that all language diſgraceful to our Neighbour is not ever culpable; yet the caſes are ſo few and rare in compariſon, the practice commonly ſo dangerous and ticklish, that worthily forbearing to reproach doth bear the ſtyle of a general Rule: and particularly, (for clearer direction,) we are in the following caſes obliged carefully to ſhun it; or in ſpeaking about our Neighbour we muſt obſerve theſe Cautions.

1. We ſhould never in ſevere terms inveigh againſt any man without reaſonable warrant, or preſuming upon a good call and commiſſion thereto. As every man ſhould not aſſume to himſelf the power of adminiſtring juſtice, (of trying, ſentencing and puniſhing offenders,) ſo muſt not every man take upon him to ſpeak againſt thoſe who ſeem to do ill; which is a ſort of puniſhment, including the infliction of ſmart and damage upon the perſons concerned. Every man hath indeed a commiſſion, in due place and ſeaſon, with diſcretion and moderation to admoniſh his Neighbour offending; but otherwiſe to ſpeak ill of him, no private man hath juſt right or authority: and therefore in preſuming to do it, he is diſorderly and irregular, treſpaſſing beyond his bounds, uſurping an undue power to himſelf.

2. We ſhould never ſpeak ill of any man without apparent juſt cauſe. It muſt be juſt: we muſt not reproach men for things innocent or indifferent; for not concurring in diſputable opinions with us, for complying with our humour, for not ſerving our intereſt, for not doing any thing to which they are not obliged, or for uſing their liberty in any caſe: it muſt be at leaſt ſome conſiderable fault, which we can ſo much as tax. It muſt alſo be clear and certain, notorious and palpable:

pable; for to ſpeak ill upon ſlender conjectures, or doubtful ſuſpicions, Jude 10. is full of iniquity. Ὅσα οὐκ οἴδασι, βλασφημοῦσι, They rail at things which they know not, is part of thoſe wicked mens character, whom S. Jude doth ſo ſeverely reprehend. If indeed, theſe conditions being wanting, we preſume to reproach any man, we do therein no leſs than ſlander him; which to do is unlawful in any caſe, is in truth a moſt diabolical and deteſtable crime. To impoſe odious names and characters on any perſon, which he deſerveth not, or without ground of truth, is to play the Devil; and Hell it ſelf ſcarce will own a fouler practice.

3. We ſhould not caſt reproach upon any man without ſome neceſſary reaſon. Prov. 10. 12. 1 Pet. 4. 8. 1 Cor. 13. 4. In charity (that Charity which covereth all ſins, which covereth a multitude of ſins) we are bound to connive at the defects, and to conceal the faults of our brethren; to extenuate and excuſe them, when apparent, ſo far as we may in truth and equity. We muſt not therefore ever produce them to light, or proſecute them with ſeverity, except very needful occaſion urgeth: ſuch as is the glory and ſervice of God, the maintenance of truth, the vindication of innocence, the preſervation of publick juſtice and peace; the amendment of our Neighbour himſelf, or ſecuring others from contagion. Barring ſuch reaſons, (really being, not affectedly pretended,) we are bound not ſo much as to diſcloſe, as to touch our Neighbour's faults; much more, not to blaze them about, not to exaggerate them by vehement invectives.

4. We ſhould never ſpeak ill of any man beyond meaſure: be the cauſe never ſo juſt, the occaſion never ſo neceſſary, we ſhould yet nowiſe be immoderate therein, exceeding the bounds preſcribed by truth, equity and humanity. We ſhould never ſpeak worſe of any man whatever than he certainly deſerveth, according to the moſt favourable conſtruction of his doings; never more than the cauſe abſolutely requireth. We ſhould rather be careful to fall ſhort of what in rigorous truth might be ſaid againſt him, than in the leaſt to paſs beyond it. The beſt cauſe had better ſeem to ſuffer a little by our reſervedneſs in its defence, than any man be wronged by our aſperſing him; for God, the patron of truth and right, is ever able to ſecure them without the ſuccour of our unjuſt and uncharitable dealing. The contrary practice hath indeed within it a ſpice of Slander, that is, of the worſt iniquity.

5. We muſt never ſpeak ill of any man out of bad principles, or for bad ends.

Eph. 4. 31. Col. 3. 8. No ſudden or raſh anger ſhould inſtigate us thereto. For, Let all bitterneſs, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil-ſpeaking, be put away from you, with all malice, is the Apoſtolical precept: they are all aſſociates and kindred, which are to be caſt away together. Such anger it ſelf is culpable, as a work of the fleſh, and therefore to be ſuppreſſed; and all its brood therefore is alſo to be ſmothered: the daughter of ſuch a mother cannot be legitimate. The wrath of man worketh not the Jam. 1. 20. righteouſneſs of God.

We muſt not ſpeak ill out of inveterate Hatred or ill-will. For this murtherous, this viperous diſpoſition ſhould it ſelf be rooted out of our hearts: whatever iſſueth from it cannot be otherwiſe than very bad; it muſt be a poiſonous breath that exhaleth from that foul ſource.

We muſt not be provoked thereto by any Revengeful diſpoſition, or rancorous Spleen, in regard to any injuries or diſcourteſies received. For, as we muſt not revenge our ſelves, or render evil in any other way; ſo particularly not in this, which is commonly the ſpecial in-1 Pet. 3. 9. ſtance expreſly prohibited. Render not evil for evil (ſaith Saint Peter) nor railing railing for railing; but contrariwiſe bleſs, or ſpeak well: and, Bleſs them (ſaith our Lord) which curſe you: Bleſs (ſaith Saint Paul) and curſe not.

Matt. 5. 44.
Rom. 12. 14.

We muſt not alſo do it out of Contempt: for we are not to ſlight our brethren in our hearts. No man really (conſidering what he is, whence he came, how he is related, what he is capable of) can be deſpicable. Extreme naughtineſs is indeed contemptible; but the unhappy perſon that is engaged therein, is rather to be pitied, than deſpiſed. However, Charity bindeth us to ſtifle contemptuous motions of heart, and not to vent them in vilifying expreſſion. Particularly, it is a barbarous practice, out of contempt to reproach perſons for natural imperfections, for meanneſs of condition, for unlucky diſaſters, for any involuntary defects: this being indeed to reproach Mankind, unto which ſuch things are incident; to reproach Providence, from the diſpoſal whereof they do proceed. Whoſo mocketh the poor, deſpiſeth his Maker, ſaith the Wiſeman: and the ſame may be ſaid of him that reproachfully mocketh him that is dull in parts, deformed in body, weak in health or ſtrength, or defective in any ſuch way.

Deut. 25. 3.

He that is void of wiſdom deſpiſeth his neighbour. Prov. 11. 12.

Prov. 17. 5.

Likewiſe we muſt not ſpeak ill out of Envy; becauſe others do excell us in any good quality, or exceed us in fortune. To harbour this baſe and ugly diſpoſition in our minds is unworthy of a Man, (who ſhould delight in all good ſpringing up any-where, and befalling any man, naturally allied unto him;) it is moſt unworthy of a Chriſtian, who ſhould tender his brother's good as his own, and rejoyce with thoſe that rejoyce. From thence to be drawn to caſt reproach upon any man, is horrible and hainous wickedneſs.

Rom. 12. 15.

Neither ſhould we ever uſe reproach as a means of compaſſing any Deſign we do affect or aim at: 'tis an unwarrantable engine of raiſing us to wealth, dignity or repute. To grow by the diminution, to riſe by the depreſſion, to ſhine by the eclipſe of others, to build a fortune upon the ruines of our Neighbour's reputation, is that which no honourable mind can affect, no honeſt man will endeavour. Our own wit, courage and induſtry, managed with God's aſſiſtance and bleſſing, are ſufficient, and only lawful inſtruments of proſecuting honeſt enterpriſes; we need not, we muſt not in ſtead of them employ our Neighbour's diſgrace: no worldly good is worth purchaſing at ſuch a rate, no project worth atchieving by ſuch foul ways.

Neither ſhould we out of Malignity, to cheriſh or gratifie ill humour, uſe this practice. It is obſervable of ſome perſons, that not out of any formed diſpleaſure, grudge, or particular diſaffection, nor out of any particular deſign, but merely out of a κακοήθεια, an ill diſpoſition, ſpringing up from nature, or contracted by uſe, they are apt to carp at any action, and with ſharp reproach to bite any man that comes in their way, thereby feeding and ſoothing that evil inclination. But as this inhumane and curriſh humour ſhould be corrected, and extirpated from our hearts; ſo ſhould the iſſues thereof at our mouths be ſtopped: the beſpattering our Neighbour's good name ſhould never afford any ſatisfaction or delight unto us.

Nor out of Wantonneſs ſhould we ſpeak ill, for our divertiſment or ſport. For our Neighbour's reputation is too great and pretious a thing to be played with, or offered up to ſport; we are very fooliſh in ſo diſvaluing it, very naughty in ſo miſuſing it. Our wits are very barren, our brains are ill furniſhed with ſtore of knowledge, if we can find no other matter of converſation.

Nor out of Negligence and inadvertency ſhould we ſputter out reproachful ſpeech; ſhooting ill-words at rovers, or not regarding who ſtands in our way. Among all temerities this is one of the moſt noxious, and therefore very culpable.

In fine, we ſhould never ſpeak concerning our Neighbour from any other principle than Charity, or to any other intent but what is charitable; ſuch as tendeth to his good, or at leaſt is conſiſtent therewith. Let all your things (ſaith S. Paul) be done in charity: and words are moſt of the things we do concerning our Neighbour, wherein we may expreſs Charity. In all our ſpeeches therefore touching him, we ſhould plainly ſhew that we have a care of his reputation, that we tender his intereſt, that we even deſire his content and repoſe. Even when reaſon and need do ſo require, that we ſhould diſcloſe and reprehend his faults, we may, we ſhould by the manner and ſcope of our ſpeech ſignifie thus much. Which rule were it obſerved, if we ſhould never ſpeak ill otherwiſe than out of charity, ſurely moſt Ill-ſpeaking would be cut off; moſt, I fear, of our tattling about others, much of our goſſiping would be marr'd.

1 Cor. 16. 14.

Indeed ſo far from bitter or ſour our language ſhould be, that it ought to be ſweet and pleaſant; ſo far from rough and harſh, that it ſhould be courteous and obliging; ſo far from ſignifying wrath, ill-will, contempt, or animoſity, that it ſhould expreſs tender affection, good eſteem, ſincere reſpect toward our brethren; and be apt to produce the like in them toward us: the ſenſe of them ſhould be grateful to the heart; the very ſound and accent of them ſhould be delightful to the ear. Every one ſhould pleaſe his neighbour for his good to edification. Our words ſhould always be ἐν χάριτι, with grace, ſeaſoned with ſalt; they ſhould have the grace of courteſie, they ſhould be ſeaſoned with the ſalt of diſcretion, ſo as to be ſweet and ſavoury to the hearers. Commonly ill language is a certain ſign of inward enmity and ill-will. Good-will is wont to ſhew it ſelf in good terms; it cloatheth even its grief handſomely, and its diſpleaſure carrieth favour in its face; its rigour is civil and gentle, temper'd with pity for the faults and errours which it diſliketh, with the deſire of their amendment and recovery whom it reprehendeth. It would inflict no more evil than is neceſſary; it would cure its Neighbour's diſeaſe without exaſperating his patience, troubling his modeſty, or imparing his credit. As it always judgeth candidly, ſo it never condemneth extremely.

Prov. 15. 26. & 16. 24.

Rom. 15. 2.
1 Cor. 10. 33.
Col. 4. 6.

Charitas----cùm arguit mitis eſt, cùm blanditur ſimplex eſt: piè ſolet ſævire, ſine dolo mulcere; patienter novit iraſci, humiliter indignari. S. Bern. Ep. 2.

II. But ſo much for the explication of this Precept, and the directive part of our diſcourſe. I ſhall now briefly propound ſome inducements to the obſervance thereof.

1. Let us conſider, that nothing more than railing and reviling is oppoſite to the nature, and inconſiſtent with the tenour of our Religion; the which (as even a Heathen did obſerve of it) nil niſi juſtum ſuadet, & lene, doth recommend nothing but what is very juſt and mild: which propoundeth the practices of Charity, Meekneſs, Patience, Peaceableneſs, Moderation, Equity, Alacrity or good humour, as its principal laws, and declareth them the chief fruits of the Divine Spirit, and Grace: which chargeth us to curb and compoſe all our Paſſions; more particularly to reſtrain and repreſs Anger, Animoſity, Envy, Malice, and ſuch like diſpoſitions, as the fruits Ammian. Marcell.

Lingua Chriſtum confeſſa non ſit maledica, non turbulenta, non convitiis & litibus perſtrepens audiatur. Cypr. de Unit. Eccl.

Convitiis & maledictis quæſo vos abſtinete; quia neque maledici regnum Dei conſequentur; & lingua quæ Chriſtum confeſſa eſt, incolumis & pura cum ſuo honore ſervanda eſt. Cypr. Ep. 7.

fruits of carnality and corrupt luſt: which conſequently drieth up all the ſources, or dammeth up the ſluces of bad language. As it doth above all things oblige us to bear no ill-will in our hearts, ſo it chargeth us to vent none with our mouths.

1 Pet. 4. 8.

2. It is therefore often expreſly condemned and prohibited as evil. Tis the property of the wicked, a character of thoſe who work iniquity, to whet their tongues like a ſword, and bend their bows to ſhoot their arrows, even bitter words.

Pſal. 64. 3.

3. No practice hath more ſevere puniſhments denounced to it than this. The Railer (and it is indeed a very proper and fit puniſhment for him, he being exceedingly-bad company) is to be baniſhed out of all good Society; thereto S. Paul adjudgeth him: I have (ſaith he) now written unto you, not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicatour, or covetous, or an idolater, or a Railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with ſuch an one not to eat. Ye ſee what company the Railer hath in the Text, and with what a crew of people he is coupled: but no good company he is allowed other-where; every good Chriſtian ſhould avoid him as a blot, and a peſt of converſation: and finally he is ſure to be excluded from the bleſſed Society above in Heaven; for *---neither thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor Revilers, nor extortioners ſhall inherit the Kingdom of God: and, || Without (without the heavenly city) are Dogs, (ſaith S. John in his Revelation,) that is, thoſe chiefly, who out of curriſh ſpite or malignity do frowardly bark at their Neighbours, or cruelly bite them with reproachful language.

1 Cor. 5. 11.

Hinc intelligere poſſumus quàm gravis ſit & pernicioſa maledictio, quando, etiamſi alia bona adfuerint, ſola excludit à cœlo. Salv. de Guber. Dei, lib. 3.

* 1 Cor. 6. 10.

|| Apoc. 22. 15.

4. If we look upon ſuch language in its own nature, what is it but a ſymptome of a foul, a weak, a diſordered and diſtempered mind? 'Tis the ſmoak of inward rage and malice: 'tis a ſtream that cannot iſſue from a ſweet ſpring: 'tis a ſtorm that cannot bluſter out of a calm region. The words of the pure are pleaſant words, as the Wiſe-man ſaith.

Prov. 15. 26.

5. This practice doth plainly ſignifie low ſpirit, ill breeding and bad manners; and thence misbecometh any wiſe, any honeſt, any honourable perſon. It agreeth to Children, who are unapt and unaccuſtomed to deal in matters conſiderable, to ſquabble; to Women of meaneſt rank, (apt by nature, or cuſtom, to be tranſported with paſſion,) to ſcold. In our modern languages it is termed Villany, as being proper for ruſtick Boors, or men of courſeſt education and employment; who, having their minds debaſed by being converſant in meaneſt affairs, do vent their ſorry paſſions, and bicker about their petty concernments, in ſuch ſtrains; who alſo, being not capable of a fair reputation, or ſenſible of diſgrace to themſelves, do little value the credit of others, or care for aſperſing it. But ſuch language is unworthy of thoſe perſons, and cannot eaſily be drawn from them, who are wont to exerciſe their thoughts about nobler matters, who are verſed in affairs manageable only by calm deliberation and fair perſuaſion, not by impetuous and provocative rudeneſs; the which do never work otherwiſe upon maſculine ſouls, than ſo as to procure diſdain, and reſiſtence. Such perſons, knowing the benefit of a good name, being wont to poſſeſs a good repute, prizing their own credit as a conſiderable good, will never be prone to bereave others of the like by opprobrious ſpeech. A noble enemy will never ſpeak of his enemy in bad terms.

In quo admirari ſoleo gravitatem & juſtitiam & ſapientiam Cæſaris, qui nunquam niſi honorificentiſſimè Pompeium appellat. Cic. Epiſt. Tom. 6. 6.

Pſal. 15. 3.
Prov. 17. 4.

We may farther conſider, that all wiſe, all honeſt, all ingenuous perſons have an averſion from ill ſpeaking, and cannot entertain it with any acceptance or complacence; that only ill-natured, unworthy and naughty people are its willing auditours, or do abett it with applauſe. The good man, in the 15. Pſalm, non accipit opprobrium, doth not take up, or accept, a reproach againſt his neighbour: but A wicked doer (ſaith the Wiſe-man) giveth heed to falſe lips, and a liar giveth ear to a naughty tongue. And what reaſonable man will do that which is diſguſtful to the wiſe and good, is grateful only to the fooliſh and baſer ſort of men? I pretermit, that uſing this ſort of language doth incapacitate a man for to benefit his Neighbour, and defeateth his endeavours for his edification, diſparaging a good cauſe, prejudicing the defence of truth, obſtructing the effects of good inſtruction and wholeſome reproof; as we did before remark and declare. Farther,

It is always taken as an argument of ill-will. -Maledicus à malefico non diſtat. niſi occaſione. Quint. 12. 9.

8. He that uſeth this kind of ſpeech doth, as harm and trouble others, ſo create many great inconveniences and miſchiefs to himſelf thereby. Nothing ſo enflameth the wrath of men, ſo provoketh their enmity, ſo breedeth laſting hatred and ſpite, as do contumelious words. They are often * called ſwords and arrows; and as ſuch they pierce deeply, and cauſe moſt grievous ſmart; which men feeling are enraged, and accordingly will ſtrive to || requite them in the like manner, and in all other obvious ways of revenge. Hence ſtriſe, clamour and tumult, care, ſuſpicion and fear, danger and trouble, ſorrow and regret, do ſeiſe on the Reviler; and he is ſufficiently puniſhed for this dealing. No man can otherwiſe than live in perpetual fear of reciprocal like uſage from him, whom he is conſcious of having ſo abuſed. Whence, if not juſtice, or charity toward others, yet love and pity of our ſelves, ſhould perſuade us to forbear it as diſquietful, incommodious and miſchievous to us.

* The ſcourge of the tongue, Job. 5. 21. Prov. 12. 18. There is that ſpeaketh like the piercings of a ſword. Pſal. 57. 4. & 59. 7. & 64. 3. Pſal. 52. 2. ſharp raſour. Prov. 30. 14. knives. || The froward tongue ſhall be cut out, Prov. 10. 31.

We ſhould indeed certainly enjoy much love, much concord, much quiet, we ſhould live in great ſafety and ſecurity, we ſhould be exempted from much care and fear, if we would reſtrain our ſelves from abuſing and offending our Neighbour in this kind: being conſcious of ſo juſt and innocent demeanour toward him, we ſhould converſe with him in a pleaſant freedom and confidence, not ſuſpecting any bad language or ill uſage from him.

9. Hence with evidently-good reaſon is he that uſeth ſuch language
Prov. 18. 6, 7. called a Fool, and he that abſtaineth from it is commended as wiſe. A fool's lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for ſtrokes. *A fool's
Prov. 10. 19. mouth is his deſtruction*, and his lips are the ſnare of his ſoul. He that re-Prov. 12. 18. ſtraineth his tongue is wiſe. In the tongue of the wiſe is health. He that Prov. 13. 3. keepeth his lips keepeth his life: but he that openeth wide his mouth (that is, in evil-ſpeaking, gaping with clamour and vehemency) ſhall have Eccles 10. 12. deſtruction. The words of a wiſe man's mouth are gracious: but the lips of a Prov. 18. 21. fool will ſwallow up himſelf. Death and life are in the power of the tongue; and they that love it ſhall eat the fruit thereof; that is, of the one or the other, anſwerably to the kind of ſpeech they chuſe.

In fine, very remarkable is that advice, or reſolution of the grand Pſal. 34. 12, 13. point concerning the beſt way of living happily, in the Pſalmiſt: What man is he that deſireth life, and loveth many days, that he may ſee good? Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from ſpeaking guile. Abſtinence from ill ſpeaking he ſeemeth to propoſe as the firſt ſtep toward the fruition of a durably-happy life.

10. Laſtly, we may conſider, that it is a grievous perverting the deſign of Speech, (that excellent faculty, which ſo much diſtinguiſheth us from, ſo highly advanceth us above other creatures,) to uſe it to the defaming and diſquieting our Neighbour. It was given us as an inſtrument of beneficial commerce, and delectable converſation; that with it we might aſſiſt and adviſe, might chear and comfort one another: we therefore in employing it, to the diſgrace, vexation, damage or prejudice in any kind of our Neighbour, do foully abuſe it; and ſo doing, render our ſelves indeed worſe than dumb beaſts: for, * better far it were that we could ſay nothing, than that we ſhould ſpeak ill.

* Mutos naſci, & egere omni ratione ſatius fuiſſet, quàm providentiæ munera in mutuam perniciem convertere. Quint. 12. 1.

Now the God of grace and peace----make us perfect in every good work to do his will, working in us that which is well pleaſing in his ſight, through Jeſus Chriſt; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen. Heb. 13. 20, 21.

SERMON XVII.

The Folly of Slander.

PROV. 10. 18.

He that uttereth Slander is a Fool.

GEneral Declamations againſt Vice and Sin are indeed excellently uſeful, as rouzing men to conſider and look about them: but they do often want effect, becauſe they only raiſe confuſed apprehenſions of things, and indeterminate propenſions to action; the which uſually, before men throughly perceive or reſolve what they ſhould practiſe, do decay and vaniſh. As he that cries out Fire doth ſtir up people, and inſpireth them with a kind of hovering tendency every way, yet no man thence to purpoſe moveth, until he be diſtinctly informed where the miſchief is; then do they, who apprehend themſelves concerned, run haſtily to oppoſe it: So, till we particularly diſcern where our offences lie, (till we diſtinctly know the hainous nature and the miſchievous conſequences of them,) we ſcarce will effectually apply our ſelves to correct them. Whence it is requiſite, that men ſhould be particularly acquainted with their ſins, and by proper arguments be diſſuaded from them.

In order whereto I have now ſelected one ſin to deſcribe, and diſſuade from, being in nature as vile, and in practice as common, as any other what-ever that hath prevailed among men. It is Slander, a ſin which in all times and places hath been epidemical and riſe; but which eſpecially doth ſeem to reign and rage in our Age and Countrey.

There are Principles innate to men, which ever have, and ever will incline them to this offence. Eager appetites to ſecular and ſenſual goods; violent paſſions, urging the proſecution of what men affect; wrath and diſpleaſure againſt thoſe who ſtand in the way of compaſſing their deſires; emulation and envy toward thoſe who hap to ſucceed better, or to attain a greater ſhare in ſuch things; exceſſive ſelf-love; unaccountable malignity and vanity, are in ſome degrees connatural to all men, and ever prompt them to this dealing, as appearing the moſt efficacious, compendious and eaſie way of ſatisfying ſuch appetites, of promoting ſuch deſigns, of diſcharging ſuch paſſions. Slander thence hath always been a principal engine, whereby covetous, ambitious, envious, ill-natured and vain perſons have ſtrove to ſupplant their competitours, and advance themſelves; meaning thereby to procure, what they chiefly prize and like, wealth, or dignity, or reputation, favour and power in the court, reſpect and intereſt with the people.

But from eſpecial cauſes our Age peculiarly doth abound in this practice: for, beſides the common diſpoſitions inclining thereto, there are conceits newly coined, and greedily entertained by many, which ſeem purpoſely levelled at the diſparagement of Piety, Charity and Juſtice, ſubſtituting Intereſt in the room of Conſcience, authorizing and commending, for good and wiſe, all ways ſerving to private advantage. There are implacable diſſenſions, fierce animoſities and bitter zeals ſprung up; there is an extreme curioſity, niceneſs and delicacy of judgment; there is a mighty affectation of ſeeming wiſe and witty by any means; there is a great unſettlement of mind, and corruption of manners, generally diffuſed over people: from which ſources it is no wonder that this floud hath ſo overflown, that no banks can reſtrain it, no fences are able to reſiſt it; ſo that ordinary converſation is full with it, and no demeanour can be ſecure from it.

If we do mark what is done in many (might I not ſay, in moſt?) companies, what is it, but one telling malicious ſtories of, or faſtning odious characters upon another? What do men commonly pleaſe themſelves in ſo much, as in carping and harſhly cenſuring, in defaming and abuſing their Neighbours? Is it not the ſport and divertiſement of many, to caſt dirt in the faces of all they meet with; to beſpatter any man with foul imputations? Doth not in every corner a Momus lurk, from the venome of whoſe ſpiteful or petulant tongue no eminency of rank, dignity of place, or ſacredneſs of office, no innocence or integrity of life, no wiſdom or circumſpection in behaviour, no good nature, or benignity in dealing and carriage, can protect any perſon? Do not men aſſume to themſelves a liberty of telling Romances, and framing characters concerning their Neighbour, as freely as a Poet doth about Hector or Turnus, Therſites or Draucus? Do they not uſurp a power of playing with, of toſſing about, of tearing in pieces their Neighbour's good name, as if it were the verieſt toy in the world? Do not many, having a form of godlineſs, (ſome of them demurely, others confidently, both without any ſenſe of, or remorſe for what they do,) backbite their brethren? Is it not grown ſo common a thing to aſperſe cauſeleſly, that no man wonders at it, that few diſlike, that ſcarce any deteſt it? that moſt notorious Calumniatours are heard, not only with patience, but with pleaſure; yea are even held in vogue and reverence, as men of a notable talent, and very ſerviceable to their party? ſo that Slander ſeemeth to have loſt its nature, and not to be now an odious ſin, but a faſhionable humour, a way of pleaſing entertainment, a fine knack, or curious feat of policy; ſo that no man at leaſt taketh himſelf or others to be accountable for what is ſaid in this way? Is not, in fine, the caſe become ſuch, that whoever hath in him any love of truth, any ſenſe of juſtice or honeſty, any ſpark of charity toward his brethren, ſhall hardly be able to ſatisfie himſelf in the converſations he meeteth; but will be tempted, with the Holy Prophet, to wiſh himſelf ſequeſtred from ſociety, and caſt into ſolitude; repeating thoſe words of his, Oh that I had in the wilderneſs a lodging-place of way-faring men, that I might leave my people, and go from them: for they are---an aſſembly of treacherous men, and they bend their tongues like their bow for lies? This he wiſhed in an Age ſo reſembling ours, that I fear the deſcription with equal patneſs may ſute both: Take ye heed (ſaid he then, and may we not adviſe the like now?) every one of his neighbour, and truſt ye not in any brother: for every brother will utterly ſupplant, and every neighbour will walk with ſlanders. They will deceive every one his neighbour, and will not ſpeak the truth: they have taught their tongue to ſpeak lies, and weary themſelves to commit iniquity.

Jer. 9. 2, 3. & 6. 28. Ezek. 22. 9.

Jer. 9. 4, 5.

Such being the ſtate of things, obvious to experience, no diſcourſe may ſeem more needful, or uſeful, than that which ſerveth to correct or check this practice: the which I ſhall endeavour to do, 1. by deſcribing the Nature, 2. by declaring the Folly of it; or ſhewing it to be very true which the Wiſe-man here aſſerteth, He that uttereth ſlander is a Fool. The which particulars I hope ſo to proſecute, that any man ſhall be able eaſily to diſcern, and ready heartily to deteſt this practice.

I. For explication of its Nature, we may deſcribe Slander to be the uttering falſe (or equivalent to falſe, morally falſe) ſpeech againſt our Neighbour, in prejudice to his fame, his ſafety, his welfare, or concernment in any kind, out of malignity, vanity, raſhneſs, ill-nature, or bad deſign. That which is in Holy Scripture forbidden and reproved under ſeveral names and notions; of (a) bearing falſe witneſs, (b) falſe accuſation, (c) railing cenſure, (d) ſycophantry, * tale-bearing, (f) whiſpering, (g) backbiting, (h) ſupplanting, † taking up reproach: which terms ſome of them do ſignifie the nature, others denote the ſpecial kinds, others imply the manners, others ſuggeſt the ends of this practice. But it ſeemeth moſt fully intelligible by obſerving the ſeveral kinds and degrees thereof; as alſo by reflecting on the divers ways and manners of practiſing it.

(a) Exod. 20. 16. (b) Pſ. 35. 11. (c) Jud. 9. 2 Pet. 2. 11. (d) Luk. 3. 14. & 19. 8. * Levit. 19. 16. Prov. 18. 8. & 26. 20. (f) Prov. 16. 28. Rom. 1. 29. 2 Cor. 12. 20. (g) Pſal. 15. 3. Rom. 1. 30. (h) Jer. 9. 4. † Pſal. 15. 3.

The principal kinds thereof I obſerve to be theſe.

1. The groſſeſt kind of Slander is that which in the Decalogue is called Bearing falſe teſtimony againſt our neighbour; that is, flatly charging him with facts the which he never committed, and is no-wiſe guilty of. As in the caſe of Naboth, when men were ſuborned to ſay, Naboth did blaſpheme God and the King: and as was David's caſe, when he thus complained, Falſe witneſſes did riſe up, they laid to my charge things that I knew not of. This kind in the higheſt way (that is, in judicial proceedings) is more rare; and of all men, they who are detected to practiſe it, are held moſt vile and infamous; as being plainly the moſt pernicious and perillous inſtruments of injuſtice, the moſt deſperate enemies of all mens right and ſafety that can be. But alſo out of the Court there are many Knights-errant of the poſt, whoſe buſineſs it is to run about ſcattering falſe reports; ſometimes loudly proclaiming them in open companies, ſometimes cloſely whiſpering them in dark corners;

1 Kin. 21. 13.

Pſal. 35. 11.

thus infecting converſation with their poiſonous breath: theſe no leſs notoriouſly are guilty of this kind, as bearing always the ſame malice, and ſometimes breeding as ill effects.

Num. 16. 3, 13, 14.
Joh. 19. 7, 21.
Matt. 26. 65.
Matt. 9. 3. & 12. 24.
Matt. 11. 19.
Luk. 23. 2, 5, 14.
John 19. 12.
Luk. 23. 2.
* Acts 17. 6. & 24. 5.

2. Another kind is, Affixing ſcandalous names, injurious epithets, and odious characters upon perſons, which they deſerve not. As when Corah and his complices did accuſe Moſes of being ambitious, unjuſt and tyrannical: when the Phariſees called our Lord an Impoſtour, a Blaſphemer, a Sorcerer, a Glutton and Wine-bibber, an Incendiary and Perverter of the people, one that ſpake againſt Cæſar, and forbad to give tribute: when the Apoſtles were charged of being * peſtilent, turbulent, factious and ſeditious fellows. This ſort being very common, and thence in ordinary repute not ſo bad, yet in juſt eſtimation may be judged even worſe than the former; as doing to our Neighbour more heavy and more irreparable wrong. For it impoſeth on him really more blame, and that ſuch which he can hardly ſhake off: becauſe the charge ſignifieth habit of evil, and includeth many acts; then, being general and indefinite, can ſcarce be diſproved. He, for inſtance, that calleth a ſober man Drunkard, doth impute to him many acts of ſuch intemperance; (ſome really paſt, others probably future;) and no particular time or place being ſpecified, how can a man clear himſelf of that imputation, eſpecially with thoſe who are not throughly acquainted with his converſation? So he that calleth a man unjuſt, proud, perverſe, hypocritical, doth load him with moſt grievous faults, which it is not poſſible that the moſt innocent perſon ſhould diſcharge himſelf from.

3. Like to that kind is this, Aſperſing a man's actions with harſh cenſures, and foul terms, importing that they proceed from ill principles, or tend to bad ends; ſo as it doth not, or cannot appear. Thus when we ſay of him that is generouſly hoſpitable, that he is profuſe; of him that is prudently frugal, that he is niggardly; of him that is chearful and free in his converſation, that he is vain or looſe; of him that is ſerious and reſolute in a good way, that he is ſullen or moroſe; of him that is conſpicuous and briſk in vertuous practice, that it is ambition or oſtentation which acts him; of him that is cloſe and baſhful in the like good way, that it is ſneaking ſtupidity, or want of ſpirit; of him that is reſerved, that it is craft; of him that is open, that it is ſimplicity in him: when we aſcribe a man's liberality and charity to vain-glory, or popularity; his ſtrictneſs of life, and conſtancy in devotion, to ſuperſtition, or hypocriſie. When, I ſay, we paſs ſuch cenſures, or impoſe ſuch characters on the laudable or innocent practice of our Neighbours, we are indeed Slanderers, imitating therein the great Calumniatour, who thus did ſlander even God himſelf, imputing his prohibition of the Fruit unto envy toward men; (God, ſaid he, doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof, your eyes ſhall be opened, and ye ſhall be as Gods, knowing good and evil;) who thus did aſcribe the ſteddy Piety of Job, not to a conſcientious love and fear of God, but to policy, and ſelfiſh deſign, Doth Job fear God for nought?

At nos virtutes ipſas invertimus, atq; Sincerum cupimus vas incruſtare. Probus quis Nobiſcum vivit? multùm eſt demiſſus homo. Illi. Tardo cognomen pinguis damus. &c. optimé. Hor. Serm. 1. 3. Vid. Sidon. Apoll.

Gen. 3. 5.

Job 1. 9. & 2. 4.

Whoever indeed pronounceth concerning his Neighbour's intentions otherwiſe than as they are evidently expreſſed by words, or ſignified by what actions, is a Slanderer; becauſe he pretendeth to know, and dareth to averr, that which he no-ways poſſibly can tell whether it be true; becauſe the heart is exempt from all juriſdiction here, is only ſubject to the government and trial of another world; becauſe no man can judge concerning the truth of ſuch accuſations; becauſe no man can exempt, or defend himſelf from them: ſo that apparently ſuch practice doth thwart all courſe of juſtice and equity.

4. Another kind is, Perverting a man's words or actions diſadvantageouſly by affected miſconſtruction. All words are ambiguous, and capable of different ſenſes, (ſome fair, ſome more foul;) all actions have two handles, one that candour and charity will, another that diſingenuity and ſpite may lay hold on: and in ſuch caſes, to miſapprehend is a calumnious procedure, arguing malignant diſpoſition and miſchievous deſign. Thus when two men did witneſs, that our Lord affirmed, he could demoliſh the temple, and rear it again in three days; although he did indeed ſpeak words to that purpoſe, meaning them in a figurative ſenſe, (diſcernible enough to thoſe who would candidly have minded his drift and way of ſpeaking;) yet they who crudely alledged them againſt him are called falſe witneſſes. (At laſt, ſaith the Goſpel, came two falſe witneſſes, and ſaid, This fellow ſaid, I am able to deſtroy the temple, &c.) Thus alſo when ſome certified of St. Stephen, as having ſaid, that Jeſus of Nazareth ſhould deſtroy that place, and change the cuſtoms that Moſes delivered; although probably he did ſpeak words near to that purpoſe, yet are thoſe men called falſe witneſſes: And (ſaith S. Luke) they ſet up falſe witneſſes, which ſaid, This man ceaſeth not to ſpeak blaſphemous words, &c. Which inſtances plainly do ſhew, if we would avoid the guilt of Slander, how careful we ſhould be to interpret fairly and favourably the words and the actions of our Neighbour.

Jer. 23. 36.

Πᾶν πρᾶγμα ἔχει δύο λαβάς. Epict.

Matth. 26. 60, 61.
Joh. 2. 19.

Pſal. 56. 5. Every day they wreſt my words.

Matt. ubi ſupra.

Act. 6. 13, 14.

5. Another ſort of this practice is, partial and lame repreſentation of mens diſcourſe, or their practice; ſuppreſſing ſome part of the truth in them, or concealing ſome circumſtances about them, which might ſerve to explain, to excuſe, or to extenuate them. In ſuch a manner eaſily, without uttering any Logical untruth, one may yet grievouſly calumniate. Thus ſuppoſe that a man ſpeaketh a thing upon ſuppoſition, or with exception, or in way of objection, or merely for diſputation ſake, in order to the diſcuſſion or clearing of truth; he that ſhould report him aſſerting it abſolutely, unlimitedly, poſitively and peremptorily, as his own ſettled judgment, would notoriouſly calumniate. If one ſhould be inveagled by fraud, or driven by violence; or ſlip by chance into a bad place, or bad company; he that ſhould ſo repreſent the groſs of that accident, as to breed an opinion of that perſon, that out of pure diſpoſition and deſign he did put himſelf there, doth ſlanderouſly abuſe that innocent perſon. The reporter in ſuch caſes muſt not think to defend himſelf by pretending that he ſpake nothing falſe; for ſuch propoſitions, however true in Logick, may juſtly be deemed lies in morality, being uttered with a malicious and deceitful (that is, with a calumnious) mind, being apt to impreſs falſe conceits, and to produce hurtful effects concerning our Neighbour. There are ſlanderous truths, as well as ſlanderous falſhoods: when truth is uttered with a deceitful heart, and to a baſe end, it becomes a lie. He that ſpeaketh truth is a Wiſe-man) ſheweth forth righteouſneſs: but a falſe witneſs, deceives. Deceiving is the proper work of Slander; and truth abuſed to that who putteth on its nature, and will engage into like guilt.

Prov. 12. 17

Vid. Herm. Paſtor. where the Paſtor obſerves, that the Devil doth in his temptations interſperſe ſome truths, ſerving to render his deluſions paſſable.

6. Another kind of Calumny is, by inſtilling ſly ſuggeſtions; which although they do not downrightly aſſert falſhoods, yet they breed ſiniſter opinions in the hearers; eſpecially in thoſe who, from weakneſs or credulity, from jealouſie or prejudice, from negligence or inadvertency, are prone to entertain them. This is done many ways; by propounding wily ſuppoſitions, ſhrewd inſinuations, crafty queſtions, and ſpecious compariſons, intimating a poſſibility, or inferring ſome likelihood of, and thence inducing to believe the fact. Doth not (ſaith this kind of Slanderer) his temper incline him to do thus? may not his intereſt have ſwayed him thereto? had he not fair opportunity and ſtrong temptation to it? hath he not acted ſo in like caſes? Judge you therefore whether he did it not. Thus the cloſe Slanderer argueth; and a weak or prejudiced perſon is thereby ſo caught, that he preſently is ready thence to conclude the thing done. Again; He doth well, (ſaith the Sycophant) it is true; but why, and to what end? Is it not, as moſt men do, out of ill deſign? may he not diſſemble now? may he not recoil hereafter? have not others made as fair a ſhew? yet we know what came of it. Thus do calumnious tongues pervert the judgments of men to think ill of the moſt innocent, and meanly of the worthieſt actions. Even commendation it ſelf is often uſed calumniouſly, with intent to breed diſlike and ill-will toward a perſon commended in envious or jealous ears; or ſo as to give paſſage to diſpraiſes, and render the accuſations following more credible. 'Tis an artifice commonly obſerved to be much in uſe there, where the fineſt tricks of ſupplanting are practiſed, with greateſt effect; ſo that, peſſimum inimicorum genus, laudantes; there is no more peſtilent enemy, than a * malevolent praiſer. All theſe kinds of dealing, as they iſſue from the principles of Slander, and perform its work, ſo they deſervedly bear the guilt thereof.

* excuſando exprobraret. Tac. Ann. 1. p. 10.

Καινός τις εὕρηται τρόπος οὗτος τῆς διαβολῆς, τὸ μὴ ψέγοντας, ἀλλ' ἐπαινοῦντας λυμαίνεσθαι τοὺς πέλας. Polyb. lib. 4.

7. A like kind is that of oblique and covert reflexions; when a man doth not directly or expreſly charge his Neighbour with faults, but yet ſo ſpeaketh, that he is underſtood, or reaſonably preſumed to do it. This is a very cunning and very miſchievous way of Slandering; for therein the ſculking Calumniatour keepeth a reſerve for himſelf, and cutteth off from the perſon concerned the means of defence. If he goeth to clear himſelf from the matter of ſuch aſperſions: What need (ſaith this inſidious ſpeaker) of that? muſt I needs mean you? did I name you? why do you then aſſume it to your ſelf? do you not prejudge your ſelf guilty? I did not, but your own Conſcience it ſeemeth doth accuſe you. You are ſo jealous and ſuſpicious, as perſons overwiſe or guilty uſe to be. So meaneth this ſerpent out of the hedge ſecurely and unavoidably to bite his Neighbour; and is in that reſpect more baſe and more hurtful than the moſt flat and poſitive Slanderer.

8. Another kind is that of magnifying and aggravating the faults of others; raiſing any ſmall miſcarriage into a hainous crime, any ſlender defect into an odious vice, and any common infirmity into a ſtrange enormity; turning a ſmall mote in the eye of our Neighbour into a huge beam, a little dimple in his face into a monſtrous wen. This is plainly Slander, at leaſt in degree, and according to the ſurpluſage whereby the cenſure doth exceed the fault. As he that, upon the ſcore of a ſmall debt, doth extort a great ſumm, is no leſs a thief, in regard to what amounts beyond his due, than if without any pretence he had violently or fraudulently ſeiſed on it: ſo is he a Slanderer, that, by heightning faults or imperfections, doth charge his Neighbour with greater blame, or loads him with more diſgrace than he deſerves. 'Tis not only Slander to pick a hole where there is none, but to make that wider which is, ſo that it appeareth more ugly, and cannot ſo eaſily be mended. For Charity is wont to extenuate faults, Juſtice doth never exaggerate them. As no man is exempt from ſome defects, or can live free from ſome miſdemeanours; ſo by this practice every man may be rendred very odious and infamous.

Matt. 7. 3.

9. Another kind of Slander is, Imputing to our Neighbour's practice, judgment, or profeſſion, evil conſequences (apt to render him odious, or deſpicable) which have no dependence on them, or connexion with them. There do in every Age occur diſorders and miſhaps, ſpringing from various complications of cauſes, working ſome of them in a more open and diſcernible, others in a more ſecret and ſubtle way; (eſpecially from Divine Judgment and Providence checking or chaſtizing Sin:) from ſuch occurrences it is common to ſnatch occaſion and matter of Calumny. Thoſe who are diſpoſed this way, are ready peremptorily to charge them upon whom-ever they diſlike or diſſent from, although without any apparent cauſe, or upon moſt frivolous and ſenſeleſs pretences; yea, often, when Reaſon ſheweth the quite contrary, and they who are ſo charged are in juſt eſteem of all men the leaſt obnoxious to ſuch accuſations. So uſually the beſt friends of mankind, thoſe who moſt heartily wiſh the peace and proſperity of the world, and moſt earneſtly to their power ſtrive to promote them, have all the diſturbances and diſaſters happening charged on them by thoſe fiery Vixons, who (in purſuance of their baſe deſigns, or gratification of their wild paſſions) really do themſelves embroil things, and raiſe miſerable combuſtions in the world. So it is, that they who have the conſcience to do miſchief, will have the confidence alſo to diſavow the blame and the iniquity, to lay the burthen of it on thoſe who are moſt innocent. Thus, whereas nothing more diſpoſeth men to live orderly and peaceably, nothing more conduceth to the ſettlement and ſafety of the publick, nothing ſo much draweth bleſſings down from Heaven upon the Common-weal, as true Religion; yet nothing hath been more ordinary, than to attribute all the miſcarriages and miſchiefs that happened unto it; even thoſe are laid at its door, which plainly do ariſe from the contempt or neglect of it; being the natural fruits, or the juſt puniſhments of Irreligion. King Ahab by forſaking God's Commandments, and following wicked ſuperſtitions, had troubled Iſrael, drawing ſore judgments and calamities thereon; yet had he the heart and the face to charge thoſe events on the great aſſertour of Piety, Elias: Art thou he that troubleth Iſrael? The Jews by provocation of Divine juſtice had ſet themſelves in a fair way toward deſolation and ruine; this event to come they had the preſumption to lay upon the faith of our Lord's doctrine: If (ſaid they) we let him alone, all men will believe on him, and the Romans ſhall come, and take away our place and nation: when as, in truth, a compliance with his directions and admonitions had been the only means to prevent thoſe preſaged miſchiefs. And, Si Tibris aſcenderit in mœnia, if any publick calamity did appear, then Chriſtianos ad Leones, Chriſtians muſt be charged and perſecuted as the cauſes thereof. To them it was that Julian and other Pagans did impute all the concuſſions, confuſions and devaſtations falling upon the Roman Empire. The * ſacking of Rome by the Goths they caſt upon Chriſtianity: for the vindication of it from which reproach Saint Auſtin did write thoſe renowned Books de Civitate Dei. So liable are the beſt and moſt innocent ſort of men to be calumniouſly accuſed in this manner.

1 King. 18. 17, 18.

Joh. 11. 48.

Tertull. Apol.

* Chriſtianis temporibus detrahunt, & mala quæ illa civitas pertulit, Chriſto imputant. De Civ. D. I. 1. III. 31. They (ſaith that great Father) detract from the Chriſtian times, and impute the evils which that city ſuffered, unto Chriſt.

Another practice (worthily bearing the guilt of Slander) is, || being aiding and acceſſory thereto, by any-wiſe furthering, cheriſhing, abetting it. He that by crafty ſignifications of ill-will doth prompt the || τὸ εὐπρόσδεκτον τῆς διαβολῆς. M. Ant.

Slanderer to vent his poiſon; he that by a willing audience and attention doth readily ſuck it up, or who greedily ſwalloweth it down by credulous approbation and aſſent; he that pleaſingly reliſheth and ſmacketh at it, or expreſſeth a delightful complacence therein; as he is a partner in the fact, ſo is he a ſharer in the guilt. There are not only ſlanderous Throats, but ſlanderous Ears alſo; not only wicked Inventions, which ingender and brood lies, but wicked Aſſents, which hatch and foſter them. Not only the ſpiteful Mother which conceiveth ſuch ſpurious brats, but the Midwife that helpeth to bring them forth, the Nurſe that feedeth them, the Guardian that traineth them up to maturity, and ſetteth them forth to live in the world, as they do really contribute to their ſubſiſtence, ſo deſervedly they partake in the blame due to them, and muſt be reſponſible for the miſchief they do. For indeed were it not for ſuch free entertainers, ſuch nouriſhers, ſuch encouragers of them, Slanders commonly would die in the womb, or prove ſtill-born, or preſently entring into the cold air would expire, or for want of nouriſhment ſoon would ſtarve. It is ſuch friends and patrons of them who are the cauſes that they are ſo rife; they it is who ſet ill-natured, baſe and deſigning people upon deviſing, ſearching after, and picking up malicious and idle ſtories. Were it not for ſuch cuſtomers, the trade of Calumniating would fall. Many purſue it merely out of ſervility and flattery, to tickle the ears, to ſooth the humour, to gratifie the malignant diſpoſition, or ill-will of others; who upon the leaſt diſcouragement would give over the practice. If therefore we would exempt our ſelves from all guilt of Slander, we muſt not only abſtain from venting it, but forbear to * regard or countenance it: for † He is (ſaith the Wiſeman) a wicked doer, who giveth heed to falſe lips; and a liar, who giveth ear to a naughty tongue. Yea, if we thoroughly would be clear from it, we muſt ſhew an averſation from hearing it, an unwillingneſs to believe it, an indignation againſt it; ſo either ſtifling it in the birth, or condemning it to death being uttered. This is the ſure way to deſtroy it, and to prevent its miſchief. If we would * ſtop our ears, we ſhould ſtop the Slanderer's mouth: if we would reſiſt the Calumniatour, he would fly from us: if we would reprove him, we ſhould repell him. For, As † the north-wind driveth away rain, ſo (the Wiſe-man telleth us) doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue.

David, Pſal. 101. 5. Whoſo privily ſlandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off; τοῦτον ἐξεδίωκον, him have I driven away, ſay the LXX.

Neque verò illa juſta eſt excuſatio, Referentibus aliis injuriam facere non poſſum. Nemo invito auditori libenter refert. Sagitta in lapidem nunquam figitur; interdum reſiliens percutit dirigentem. Diſcat detractor, dum te videt non libenter audire, non facilè detrahere. Hier. ad Nepot. Ep. 2.

Poſidonius relateth of S. Auſtin, that he had upon his table written theſe two verſes, Quiſquis amat dictis abſentum rodere vitam,

Hanc menſam indignam noverit eſſe ſibi:

(He that loveth by ill ſpeech to gnaw the life of thoſe who are abſent, let him know himſelf unworthy to ſit at this table; or, that this table is unfit for him:) and if any there did uſe detraction, he was offended, and minded them of thoſe verſes, threatning alſo to leave the table, and withdraw to his Chamber. Poſid. cap. 22.

* Οὐ παραδέξῃ ἀκοὴν ματαίαν, Thou ſhalt not receive (or, take up) a falſe report, ſaith the Law, Exod. 23. 1.

† Prov. 17. 4.

Beatus eſt, qui ità ſe contra hoc vitium armavit, ut apud eum detrahere nemo audeat. Hier. ad Celantiam.

* Hedge thy ears with thorns, &c. Ecclus 28. 24. ità legit Cypr. Ep. 55.

† Prov. 25. 23. Ἂν μάθωσιν οἱ κακήγοροι ὅτι τῶν διαβαλλομένων μᾶλλον ἡμεῖς αὐτοὺς ἀποστρεφόμεθα, παύσονται καὶ αὐτοί ποτε τῆς πονηρᾶς ταύτης συνηθείας, καὶ διορθώσονται τὸ ἁμάρτημα, καὶ ἐπαινέσονται μετὰ ταῦτα καὶ ἡμᾶς αὐτοὺς, ὡς σωτῆρας αὐτῶν γενομένους, καὶ εὐεργέτας ἀνακηρύξουσιν. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. γʹ.

Theſe are the chief and moſt common kinds of Slander; and there are ſeveral ways of practiſing them worthy our obſerving, that we may avoid them; namely theſe.

1. The moſt notoriouſly-hainous way is, forging, and immediately venting ill ſtories. As it is ſaid of Doeg, Thy tongue deviſeth miſchief; and of another like companion, Thou giveſt thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit: and as our Lord ſaith of the Devil, When he ſpeaketh a lie, ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων λαλεῖ, he ſpeaketh of his own; for he is a liar, and

Pſal. 52. 2.
Pſal. 50. 19.
Joh. 8. 44.
(Iſa. 32. 7)

and the father of it. This palpably is the ſupreme pitch of Calumny, uncapable of any qualification or excuſe: Hell cannot go beyond this; the curſed Fiend himſelf cannot worſe employ his wit, than in minting wrongful falſhoods.

2. Another way is, receiving from others, and venting ſuch ſtories, which they who do it certainly know, or may reaſonably preſume to be falſe: the becoming huckſters of counterfeit wares, or factours in this vile trade. There is no falſe coiner, who hath not ſome complices and emiſſaries ready to take from his hand, and put off his money: and ſuch Slanderers at ſecond hand are ſcarce leſs guilty than the firſt authours. He that brueth lies may have more wit and skill, but the broacher ſheweth the like malice and wickedneſs. In this there is no great difference between the great Devil, that frameth ſcandalous reports, and the little Imps, that run about and diſperſe them.

3. Another way is, when one without competent examination, due weighing, and juſt reaſon, doth admit, and ſpread tales prejudicial to his Neighbour's welfare; relying for his warrant (as to the truth of them) upon any ſlight or ſlender authority. This is a very common and current practice: men preſume it lawful enough to ſay over whatever they hear; to report any thing, if they can quote an author for it. It is not, ſay they, my invention; I tell it as I heard it: ſit fides penes authorem; let him that informed me undergo the blame, if it prove falſe. So do they conceive themſelves excuſable for being the inſtruments of injurious diſgrace and damage to their Neighbours. But they greatly miſtake therein: for as this practice commonly doth ariſe from the ſame wicked principles, at leaſt in ſome degree, and produceth altogether the like miſchievous effects, as the wilful deviſing and conveying Slander: ſo it no leſs thwarteth the rules of duty, and laws of equity; God hath prohibited it, and reaſon doth condemn it. Thou ſhalt not (ſaith God in the Law) go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy people: as a tale-bearer, (as Rachil, that is,) as a merchant or trader in ill reports and ſtories concerning our Neighbour, to his prejudice. Not only the framing them, but the dealing in them beyond reaſon or neceſſity, is interdicted. And it is part of a Good man's character in the 15. Pſal. Non accipit opprobrium, He taketh not up a reproach againſt his neighbour; that is, he doth not eaſily entertain it, much leſs doth he effectually propagate it: and in our Text, He, it is ſaid, that uttereth Slander (not only he that conceiveth it) is a Fool.

Τί διαπορθμεύεις τὸν λόγον, &c. Chryſoſt. in Heb. 11. 3.

Δέον συσκιάζειν καὶ συγκρύπτειν τὰ ἐλαττώματα τῶν πλησίον. σὺ δὲ ἐκπομπεύεις, &c. Ibid.

Levit. 19. 16. Prov. 18. 8. & 26. 22.

Pſal. 15. 3.

And in reaſon, before exact trial and cognizance, to meddle with the fame and intereſt of another, is evidently a practice full of iniquity, ſuch as no man can allow in his own caſe, or brook being uſed toward himſelf, without judging himſelf to be extremely abuſed by ſuch reporters. In all reaſon and equity, (yea in all diſcretion) before we yield credence to any report concerning our Neighbour, or adventure to relate it, many things are carefully to be weighed and ſcanned. We ſhould concerning our Author conſider, whether he be not a particular enemy, or diſaffected to him; whether he be not ill-humoured, or a delighter in telling bad ſtories; whether he be not diſhoneſt, or unregardful of juſtice in his dealings and diſcourſe; whether he be not vain, or careleſs of what he ſaith; whether he be not light and credulous, or apt to be impoſed upon by any ſmall appearance; whether at leaſt in the preſent caſe he be not negligent, or too forward and raſh in ſpeaking. We ſhould alſo concerning the Matter reported mind, whether it be poſſible, or probable; whether ſutable to the diſpoſition of our Neighbour, to his principles, to the conſtant tenour of his practice; whether the action imputed to him be not liable to miſapprehenſion, or his words to miſconſtruction. All reaſon and equity do, I ſay, exact from us, diligently to conſider ſuch things, before we do either embrace our ſelves, or tranſmit unto others any ſtory concerning our Neighbour; leſt unadviſedly we do him irreparable wrong and miſchief. Briefly, we ſhould take his caſe for our own, and conſider whether we our ſelves ſhould be content, that upon like grounds or teſtimonies any man ſhould believe, or report diſgraceful things concerning us. If we fail to do thus, we do (vainly, or raſhly, or maliciouſly) conſpire with the Slanderer to the wrong of our innocent Neighbour; and that in the Pſalmiſt (by a parity of reaſon) may be transferred to us, Thou haſt conſented unto the Liar, and haſt partaken with the authour of Calumny.

Pſal. 50. 18.

4. Of kin to this way is the aſſenting to popular rumours, and thence affirming matters of obloquy to our Neighbour. Every one by experience knows how eaſily falſe news do riſe, and how nimbly they ſcatter themſelves; how often they are raiſed from nothing, how ſoon they from ſmall ſparks grow into a great blaze, how eaſily from one thing they are transformed into another: eſpecially news of this kind, which do ſute and feed the bad humour of the vulgar. 'Tis obvious to any man how true that is of Tacitus, how * void of conſideration, of judgment, of equity, the buſie and talking part of mankind is. Whoever therefore gives heed to flying tales, and thruſts himſelf into the herd of thoſe who ſpread them, is either ſtrangely injudicious, or very malignantly diſpoſed. If he want not judgment, he cannot but know, that when he complieth with popular fame, it is mere chance that he doth not ſlander, or rather it is odds that he ſhall do ſo: he conſequently ſheweth himſelf to be indifferent whether he doth it or no, or rather that he doth encline to do it: whence, not caring to be otherwiſe, or loving to be a Slanderer, he in effect and juſt eſteem is ſuch; having at leaſt a ſlanderous heart and inclination. He that puts it to the venture whether he lieth or no, doth eo ipſo lie morally, as declaring no care or love of truth. Thou ſhalt not (ſaith the Law) follow a multitude to do evil: and with like reaſon we ſhould not follow the multitude in ſpeaking evil of our Neighbour.

* Plebi non judicium, non veritas. Tac. Ann. 16.

Non eſt conſilium in vulgo, non ratio, non diſcrimen, non diligentia——ex opinione plurima, ex veritate pauca judicat. Cic. pro Planco.

Λαῷ μὴ πίστευε πολύτροπός ἐστιν ὅμιλος. Phocyl.

Prov. 14. 15. The ſimple believeth every word.

Exod. 23. 2.

5. Another ſlanderous courſe is, to build cenſures and reproaches upon ſlender conjectures, or uncertain ſuſpicions, (thoſe ὑπόνοιαι πονηραὶ evil ſurmiſes, which S. Paul condemneth.) Of theſe occaſion can never be wanting to them who ſeek them, or are ready to embrace them; no innocence, no wiſdom can any-wiſe prevent them; and if they may be admitted as grounds of defamation, no man's good name can be ſecure. But he that upon ſuch accounts dareth to aſperſe his Neighbour, is in moral computation no leſs a Slanderer, than if he did the like out of pure invention, or without any ground at all: for doubtful and falſe in this caſe differ little; to deviſe, and to divine, in matters of this nature, do import near the ſame. He that will judge or ſpeak ill of others, ought to be well aſſured of what he thinks or ſays; he that aſſerteth that which he doth not know to be true, doth as well lie, as he that affirmeth that which he knoweth to be falſe; (for he deceiveth the hearers, begetting in them an opinion that he is aſſured of what he affirms;) eſpecially in dealing with the concernments of others, whoſe right and repute juſtice doth oblige us to be wary of infringing, charity ſhould diſpoſe

1 Tim. 6. 4.
Matt. 9. 4.

Ziba. 2 Sam. 16. 3. & 19. 27.

diſpoſe us to regard and tender as our own. It is not every poſſibility, every ſeeming, every faint ſhew or glimmering appearance, which ſufficeth to ground bad opinion, or reproachful diſcourſe concerning our Brother: the matter ſhould be clear, notorious and palpable, before we admit a diſadvantageous conceit into our head, a diſtaſtful reſentment into our heart, a harſh word into our mouth about him. Men may fanſie themſelves ſagacious and ſhrewd, (perſons of deep judgment and fine wit they may be taken for,) when they can dive into others hearts, and ſound their intentions; when through thick miſts or at remote diſtances they can deſcry faults in them; when they collect ill of them by long trains, and ſubtle fetches of diſcourſe: but in truth they do thereby rather bewray in themſelves ſmall love of truth, care of juſtice, or ſenſe of charity, together with little wiſdom and diſcretion: for Truth is only ſeen in a clear light; Juſtice requireth ſtrict proof; Charity thinketh no evil, and believeth all things for the beſt; Wiſdom is not forward to pronounce before full evidence. (He, ſaith the Wiſe-man, that anſwereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and ſhame unto him.) In fine, they who proceed thus, as it is uſual that they ſpeak falſely, as it is caſual that they ever ſpeak truly, as they affect to ſpeak ill, true or falſe; ſo worthily they are to be reckoned among Slanderers.

1 Cor. 13. 5. 7.

Prov. 18. 13.

6. Another like way of Slandering is, impetuous or negligent ſputtering out of words, without minding what truth or conſequence there is in them, how they may touch or hurt our Neighbour. To avoid this ſin, we muſt not only be free from intending miſchief, but wary of effecting it; not only careful of not wronging one diſtinct perſon, but of harming any promiſcuouſly; not only abſtinent from aiming directly, but provident not to hit caſually any perſon with obloquy. For as he that diſchargeth ſhot into a crowd, or ſo as not to look about regarding who may ſtand in the way, is no leſs guilty of doing miſchief, and bound to make ſatisfaction to them he woundeth, than if he had aimed at ſome one perſon: ſo if we fling out bad words at random, which may light unluckily, and defame ſome-body, we become Slanderers unawares, and before we think on it. This practice hath not ever all the malice of the worſt Slander, but it worketh often the effects thereof, and therefore doth incurr its guilt, and its puniſhment; eſpecially it being commonly derived from ill temper, or from bad habit, which we are bound to watch over, to curb, and to correct. The Tongue is a ſharp and parlous weapon, which we are bound to keep up in the ſheath, or never to draw forth but adviſedly, and upon juſt occaſion; it muſt ever be wielded with caution and care: to brandiſh it wantonly, to lay about with it blindly and furiouſly, to ſlaſh and ſmite therewith any that happeth to come in our way, doth argue malice or madneſs.

7. It is an ordinary way of proceeding to calumniate, for men, reflecting upon ſome bad diſpoſition in themſelves, (although reſulting from their own particular temper, from their bad principles, or from their ill cuſtome,) to charge it preſently upon others; preſuming others to be like themſelves; like the wicked perſon in the Pſalm, Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch an one as thy ſelf. This is to ſlander Mankind firſt in the groſs; then in retail, as occaſion ſerveth, to aſperſe any man: this is the way of half-witted Machiavilians, and of deſperate reprobates in wickedneſs, who, having proſtituted their conſciences to vice, for their own defence and ſolace, would * ſhrowd themſelves from blame under the ſhelter of common pravity and infirmity; accuſing

Pſal. 50. 21.

* Remedium pœnæ ſuæ arbitrantur, ſi nemo ſit ſanctus, ſi omnibus detrahatur, ſi turba ſit pereuntium, &c. Hier. ad Aſellam, Ep. 99.

accuſing all men of that whereof they know themſelves guilty. But ſurely there can be no greater iniquity than this, that one man ſhould undergo blame for the ill conſcience of another.

Theſe ſeem to be the chief kinds of Slander, and moſt common ways of practiſing it. In which deſcription the Folly thereof doth, I ſuppoſe, ſo clearly ſhine, that no man can look thereon without loathing and deſpiſing it, as not only a very ugly, but a moſt fooliſh practice. No man ſurely can be wiſe, who will ſuffer himſelf to be defiled therewith. But to render its Folly more apparent, we ſhall diſplay it; declaring it to be extremely fooliſh upon ſeveral accounts. But the doing this, in regard to your patience, we ſhall forbear at preſent.

SERMON XVIII.

The Folly of Slander.

PROV. 10. 18.

He that uttereth Slander is a Fool.

I Have formerly in this place, diſcourſing upon this Text, explained the Nature of the Sin here condemned, with its ſeveral kinds and ways of practiſing.

II. I ſhall now proceed to declare the Folly of it; and to make good by divers reaſons the aſſertion of the Wiſe-man, that He who uttereth Slander is a Fool.

1. Slandering is Fooliſh, as ſinful and wicked.

All Sin is fooliſh upon many accounts; as proceeding from ignorance, errour, inconſiderateneſs, vanity; as implying weak judgment, and irrational choice; as thwarting the dictates of Reaſon, and beſt rules of Wiſdom; as producing very miſchievous effects to our ſelves, bereaving us of the chief goods, and expoſing us to the worſt evils. What can be more egregiouſly abſurd, than to diſſent in our opinion and diſcord in our choice from infinite Wiſdom; to provoke by our actions ſovereign Juſtice, and immutable Severity; to oppoſe Almighty Power, and offend immenſe Goodneſs; to render our ſelves unlike, and contrary in our doings, our diſpoſition, our ſtate, to abſolute Perfection and Felicity? What can be more deſperately wild, than to diſoblige our beſt Friend, to forfeit his love and favour, to render him our Enemy, who is our Lord and our Judge, upon whoſe mere will and diſpoſal all our ſubſiſtence, all our well-fare does abſolutely depend? What greater madneſs can be conceived, than to deprive our Minds of all true content here, and to ſeparate our Souls from eternal Bliſs hereafter; after; to gall our Conſciences now with ſore Remorſe, and to engage our ſelves for ever in remedileſs Miſeries? Such Folly doth all Sin include: whence in Scripture-ſtyle worthily Goodneſs and Wiſdom are terms equivalent; Sin and Folly do ſignifie the ſame thing.

If thence this practice be proved extremely ſinful, it will thence ſufficiently be demonſtrated no leſs fooliſh. And that it is extremeley ſinful may eaſily be ſhewed. It is the character of the ſuperlatively-wicked man; Thou giveſt thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit: Thou ſitteſt and ſpeakeſt againſt thy brother; thou ſlandereſt thine own mother's ſon. It is indeed plainly the blackeſt and moſt helliſh ſin that can be; that which giveth the grand Fiend his names, and moſt expreſſeth his nature. He is ὁ Διάβολος, the Slanderer; Satan, the ſpiteful Adverſary; the old Snake, or Dragon, hiſſing out lies, and ſpitting forth venome of calumnious accuſation; the Accuſer of the brethren, a murtherous, envious, malicious Columniatour; the Father of lies; the grand defamer of God to Man, of Man to God, of one Man to another. And highly wicked ſurely muſt that practice be, whereby we grow Nameſakes to him, conſpire in proceeding with him, reſemble his diſpoſition and nature. It is a complication, a compriſal, a collection and ſumm of all wickedneſs; oppoſite to all the principal Vertues, (to Veracity and Sincerity, to Charity and Juſtice,) tranſgreſſing all the great Commandments, violating immediately and directly all the Duties concerning our Neighbour.

Pſ. 50. 19, 20.
Apoc. 12. 10.
Joh. 8. 44.

To Lie ſimply is a great fault, being a deviation from that good Rule which preſcribeth truth in all our words; rendring us unlike and diſagreeable to God, who is the God of truth; (who * loveth truth, and practiſeth it in all his doings, who abominateth all falſehood;) including a treacherous breach of faith toward mankind; (we being all, in order to the maintenance of ſociety, by an implicit compact, obliged by ſpeech to declare our mind, to inform truly, and not to impoſe upon our Neighbour;) arguing puſillanimous timorouſneſs and impotency of mind, a diſtruſt in God's help, and diffidence in all good means to compaſs our deſigns; begetting deception and errour, a foul and ill-favour'd brood: Lying, I ſay, is upon ſuch accounts a ſinful and blameable thing: and of all Lies thoſe certainly are the worſt, which proceed from malice, or from vanity, or from both, and which work miſchief; ſuch as Slanders are.

Eph. 4. 25.
1 Pet. 2. 1.
Pſal. 31. 5.
& 25. 10.
& 86. 15.
& 89. 14.
& 146. 6.
* Prov. 12. 22. & 6. 17.

Again, to bear any hatred or ill-will, to exerciſe enmity toward any man, to deſign or procure any miſchief to our Neighbour, whom even Jews were commanded to love as themſelves, whoſe good, by many laws, and upon divers ſcores, we are obliged to tender as our own, is a hainous fault: and of this apparently the Slanderer is moſt guilty in the higeſt degree. For evidently true it is which the Wiſe-man affirmeth, A lying tongue hateth thoſe that are afflicted with it; there is no ſurer argument of extreme hatred; nothing but the height of ill-will can ſuggeſt this practice. The Slanderer is an enemy, as the moſt fierce and outrageous, ſo the moſt baſe and unworthy that can be: he fighteth with the moſt perillous and moſt unlawful weapon in the moſt furious and foul way that can be. His weapon is an envenomed arrow, full of deadly poiſon, which he ſhooteth ſuddenly, and feareth not; a weapon which by no force can be reſiſted, by no art declined, whoſe impreſſion is altogether inevitable and unſuſtainable. It is a moſt inſidious, moſt treacherous and cowardly way of fighting; wherein manifeſtly the weakeſt and baſeſt Spirits have extream advantage, and may eaſily

Levit. 19. 18.
Prov. 26. 28.
Jam. 3. 8.
Pſal. 64. 3, 4.
& 57. 4.

eaſily prevail againſt the braveſt and worthieſt: for no man of honour or honeſty can in way of reſiſtence or requital deign to uſe it, but muſt infallibly without repugnance be born down thereby. By it the vile practiſer atchieveth the greateſt miſchief that can be. His words are, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith of Doeg, devouring words, (Thou loveſt all devouring words, O thou deceitful tongue:) and, A man (ſaith the Wiſe-man) that beareth falſe witneſs againſt his neighbour is a maul, and a ſword, and a ſharp arrow; that is, he is a complicated inſtrument of all miſchiefs: he ſmiteth and bruiſeth like a maul, he cutteth and pierceth like a ſword, he thus doth hurt near at hand; and at diſtance he woundeth like a ſharp arrow, it is hard any-where to evade him, or to get out of his reach. Many (ſaith another Wiſe-man, the imitatour of Solomon) have fallen by the edge of the ſword: but not ſo many as have fallen by the tongue. Well is he that is defended from it, and hath not paſſed through the venome thereof; who hath not drawn the yoke thereof, nor hath been bound in its bands. For the yoke thereof is as a yoke of iron, and the bands thereof are bands of braſs. The Death thereof is an evil death, the grave were better than it. Incurable are the wounds which the Slanderer inflicteth, irreparable the damages which he cauſeth, indeleble the marks which he leaveth. No balſam can heal the biting of a Sycophant; no thread can ſtitch up a good name torn by calumnious defamation; no ſoap is able to cleanſe from the ſtains aſperſed by a foul mouth. Aliquid adhærebit; ſomewhat always of ſuſpicion and ill opinion will ſtick in the minds of thoſe who have given ear to ſlander. So extremely oppoſite is this practice unto the Queen of Virtues, Charity. Its property indeed is, to believe all things, that is, all things for the beſt, and to the advantage of our Neighbour; Not ſo much as to ſuſpect any evil of him, without unavoidably-manifeſt cauſe: how much more not to deviſe any falſehood againſt him? It covereth all things, ſtudiouſly conniving at real defects, and concealing aſſured miſcarriages: how much more not divulging imaginary or falſe ſcandals? It diſpoſeth to ſeek and further any the leaſt good concerning him: how much more will it hinder committing grievous outrage upon his deareſt good name?

Pſal. 52. 4.
Prov. 25. 18. & 12. 6.

An ungodly man diggeth up evil, and in his lips there is a burning fire. Prove 16. 27.
Ecclus 28. 18, &c.

Adverſus Sycophantæ morſum nullum eſt remedium.

1 Cor. 13. 7.
Prov. 17. 9.

Again, all injuſtice is abominable; to do any ſort of wrong is a hainous crime; that crime, which of all moſt immediately tendeth to the diſſolution of ſociety, and diſturbance of humane life; which God therefore doth moſt loath, and men have reaſon eſpecially to deteſt. And of this the Slanderer is moſt deeply guilty. A witneſs of Belial ſcorneth judgment, and the mouth of the wicked devoureth iniquity, ſaith the Wiſe-man. He is indeed, according to juſt eſtimation, guilty of all kinds whatever of injury, breaking all the Second Table of Commands reſpecting our Neighbour. Moſt formally and directly he beareth falſe witneſs againſt his neighbour: He doth covet his neighbour's goods; for 'tis conſtantly out of ſuch an irregular deſire, for his own preſumed advantage, to diſpoſſeſs his Neighbour of ſome good, and transfer it on himſelf, that the Slanderer uttereth his tale: He is ever a thief and robber of his good name, a deflowrer and defiler of his reputation, an * aſſaſſine and murtherer of his honour. So doth he violate all the rules of Juſtice, and perpretateth all ſorts of wrong againſt his Neighbour.

Prov. 19. 28.

* Dei Epiſcopos linguæ gladio jugulaſtis, fundentes ſanguinem non corporis, ſed honoris. Opt. lib. 2. Wo be to them who juſtifie the wicked for reward, and take away the righteouſneſs of the righteous from him. Iſa. 5. 23.

He may indeed perhaps conceive it no great matter that he committeth; becauſe he doth not act in ſo boiſterous and bloody away, but only by words, which are ſubtle, ſlimme, and tranſient things; upon his Neighbour's credit onely, which is no ſubſtantial or viſible matter. He draweth (thinks he) no bloud, nor breaketh any bones, nor impreſſeth any remarkable ſcar: 'tis onely the ſoft air he breaketh with his tongue, 'tis onely a ſlight character that he ſtampeth on the fancy, 'tis onely an imaginary ſtain that he daubeth his Neighbour with: therefore he ſuppoſeth no great wrong done, and ſeemeth to himſelf innocent or very excuſable. But theſe conceits ariſe from great inconſiderateneſs, or miſtake; nor can they excuſe the Slanderer from grievous injuſtice. For in dealing with our Neighbour, and medling with his property, we are not to value things according to our fancy, but according to the price ſet on them by the owner: we muſt not reckon that a trifle, which he prizeth as a jewel. Since then all men (eſpecially men of honour and honeſty) do, from a neceſſary inſtinct of nature, eſtimate their good name beyond any of their goods, yea do commonly hold it more dear and pretious than their very lives: we, by violently or fraudulently bereaving them of it, do them no leſs wrong, than if we ſhould rob or couzen them of their ſubſtance, yea than if we ſhould maim their body, or ſpill their bloud, or even ſtop their breath. If they as grievouſly feel it, and reſent it as deeply, as they do any other outrage, the injury is really as great to them. Even the Slanderers own judgment and conſcience might tell him ſo much: for they who moſt ſlight another's fame, are uſually very tender of their own, and can with no patience endure that others ſhould touch it: which demonſtrates the inconſiderateneſs of their judgment and the iniquity of their practice It is an injuſtice not to be corrected or cured. Thefts may be reſtored, Wounds may be cured; but there is no reſtitution or cure of a loſt good name: it is therefore an irreparable injury.

Nor is the thing it ſelf, in true judgment, contemptible; but in it ſelf really very conſiderable. A good name, ſaith Solomon himſelf, (no fool,) is rather to be choſen than great riches; and loving favour rather than ſilver and gold. In its conſequences it is much more ſo; the chief intereſts of a man, the ſucceſs of his affairs, his ability to do good (for himſelf, his friends, his neighbour,) his ſafety, the beſt comforts and conveniences of his life, ſometimes his life it ſelf, depending thereon: ſo that whoever doth ſnatch or filch it from him, doth not onely according to his opinion, and in moral value, but in real effect commonly rob, ſometime murther, ever exceedingly wrong his Neighbour. It is often the ſole reward of a man's Vertue and all the fruit of his induſtry; ſo that by depriving him of that, he is robb'd of all his eſtate, and left ſtark naked of all, excepting a good Conſcience, which is beyond the reach of the world, and which no malice or misfortune can deveſt him of. Full then of iniquity, full of uncharitableneſs, full of all wickedneſs is this practice; and conſequently full it is of folly. No man, one would think, of any tolerable ſenſe, ſhould dare, or deign to incurr the guilt of a practice ſo vile and baſe, ſo indeed diabolical and deteſtable. But farther more particularly,

Prov. 22. 1.
& 15. 30.
Eccles. 7. 1.

Prov. 12. 6.

2. The Slanderer is plainly a Fool; becauſe he maketh wrong judgments and valuations of things, and accordingly driveth on ſilly bargains for himſelf, in reſult whereof he proveth a great loſer. He means by his calumnious ſtories either to vent ſome paſſion boiling in him, or to compaſs ſome deſign which he affects, or to pleaſe ſome humour that he is poſſeſſed with: but is any of theſe things worth purchaſing at ſo dear a rate? can there be any valuable exchange for our honeſty? Is it not more adviſable to ſuppreſs our paſſion, or to let it evaporate otherwiſe, than to diſcharge it in ſo foul a way? Is it not better to let go a petty intereſt, than to further it by committing ſo notorious and hainous a ſin; to let an ambitious project ſink, than to buoy it up by ſuch baſe means? Is it not wiſdom rather to ſmother, or curb our humour, than by ſatisfying it thus to forfeit our innocence? Can any thing in the world be ſo conſiderable, that for its ſake we ſhould defile our Souls by ſo foul a practice, making ſhipwreck of a good Conſcience, abandoning honour and honeſty, incurring all the guilt and all the puniſhment due to ſo enormous a crime? Is it not far more wiſdom, contentedly to ſee our Neighbour to enjoy credit and ſucceſs, to flouriſh and thrive in the world, than by ſuch baſe courſes to ſully his reputation, to rifle him of his goods, to ſupplant or croſs him in his affairs? we do really, when we think thus to depreſs him, and to climb up to wealth or credit by the ruines of his honour, but debaſe our ſelves. Whatever comes of it, (whether he ſucceeds or is diſappointed therein) aſſuredly he that uſeth ſuch courſes will himſelf be the greateſt loſer, and deepeſt ſufferer. 'Tis true which the Wiſe-man ſaith, the getting of treaſures by a lying tongue, is a vanity toſſed to and fro of them that ſeek death. And, Woe unto them (ſaith the Prophet) that draw iniquity with cords of vanity; that is, who by falſehood endeavour to compaſs unjuſt deſigns.

Prov. 21. 6.
Iſa. 5. 18.

But it is not, perhaps he will pretend, for to aſſwage a private paſſion, or to promote his particular concernment, that he makes ſo bold with his Neighbour, or deals ſo harſhly with him; but for the ſake of orthodox Doctrine, for advantage of the true Church, for the advancement of publick Good, he judgeth it expedient to aſperſe him. This indeed is the covert of innumerable Slanders: zeal for ſome Opinion, or ſome party, beareth out men of Sectarian and factious ſpirits in ſuch practices; they may do, they may ſay any thing for thoſe fine ends. What is a little truth, what is any man's reputation in compariſon to the carrying on ſuch brave deſigns? But (to omit that men do uſually prevaricate in theſe caſes; that it is not commonly for love of truth, but of themſelves, not ſo much for the benefit of their ſect, but for their own intereſt, that they calumniate) this plea will no-wiſe juſtifie ſuch practice. For Truth and Sincerity, Equity and Candour, Meekneſs and Charity are inviolably to be obſerved, not onely toward diſſenters in opinion, but even toward declared enemies of truth it ſelf; we are to bleſs them, (that is, to ſpeak well of them, and to wiſh well to them,) not to curſe them, (that is, not to reproach them, or to wiſh them ill, much leſs to bely them.) Truth alſo, as it cannot ever need, ſo doth it alwayes loath and ſcorn the patronage and the ſuccour of lies; it is able to ſupport and protect it ſelf by fair means; it will not be killed upon a pretence of ſaving it, or thrive by its own ruine. Nor indeed can any party be ſo much ſtrengthned and underpropt, as it will be weakned and undermined, by ſuch courſes: No cauſe can ſtand firm upon a bottom ſo looſe and ſlippery, as falſhood is: All the good a Slanderer can do is, to diſparage what he would maintain. In truth, no Hereſie can be worſe, than that would be which ſhould allow to play the Devil in any caſe. He that can diſpenſe with himſelf to ſlander a Jew or a Turk, doth in ſo doing render himſelf worſe than either of them by profeſſion are: for even they (and even Pagans themſelves) diſallow the practice of inhumanity and iniquity. All men by light of nature avow Truth to be honourable, and Faith to be indiſpenſably obſerved. He doth not underſtand what it is to be Chriſtian, or careth not to practiſe according thereto, who can find in his heart in any caſe, upon any pretence, to calumniate? In fine, to proſtitute our conſcience, or ſacrifice our honeſty, for any cauſe, to any intereſt what-ever, can never be warrantable or wiſe. Farther,

3. The Slanderer is a Fool, becauſe he uſeth improper means and prepoſterous methods of effecting his purpoſes. As there is no deſign worth the carrying on by ways of falſhood and iniquity; ſo is there ſcarce any (no good or lawful one at leaſt) which may not more ſurely, more ſafely, more cleverly be atcheived by means of truth and juſtice. Is not always the ſtreight way more ſhort than the oblique and crooked? is not the plain way more eaſie than the rough and cragged? is not the fair way more pleaſant and paſſable than the foul? Is it not better to walk in paths that are open and allowed, than in thoſe that are ſhut up and prohibited; than to clamber over walls, to break through fences, to treſpaſs upon encloſures? Surely yes: He that walketh uprightly walketh ſurely. Prov. 10. 9. Uſing strict veracity and integrity, candour and equity is the beſt method of accompliſhing good deſigns. Our own induſtry, good uſe of the parts and faculties God hath given us, embracing fair opportunities, God's bleſſing and Providence, are ſufficient means to rely upon for procuring, in an honeſt way, what-ever is convenient for us. Theſe are ways approved, and amiable to all men; they procure the beſt friends, and feweſt enemies; they afford to the practiſer a chearful courage, and good hope; they meet with leſs diſappointment, and have no regret or ſhame attending them. He that hath recourſe to the other baſe means, and maketh lies his refuge, as he renounceth all juſt and honeſt means, as he diſclaimeth all hope in God's aſſiſtence, and forfeiteth all pretence to his bleſſing; ſo he cannot reaſonably expect good ſucceſs, or be ſatisfied in any undertaking. Iſa. 28. 15, 17. Jer. 28. 15. The ſupplanting way indeed ſeems the moſt curt and compendious way of bringing about diſhoneſt or diſhonourable deſigns: but as a good deſign is certainly diſhonoured thereby, ſo is it apt thence to be defeated; it raiſing up enemies and obſtacles, yielding advantages to who-ever is diſpoſed to croſs us. As in trade it is notorious, that the beſt courſe to thrive is by dealing ſquarely and truly; any fraud or cozenage appearing there doth overthrow a man's credit, and drive away cuſtome from him: ſo in all other tranſactions, as he that dealeth juſtly and fairly will have his affairs proceed roundly, and ſhall find men ready to comply with him; ſo he that is obſerved to practiſe falſhood, will be declined by ſome, oppoſed by others, diſliked by all: no man ſcarce willingly will have to do with him; he is commonly forced to ſtand out in buſineſs, as one that plays foul play.

4. Laſtly, the Slanderer is a very Fool, as bringing many great inconveniences, troubles and miſchiefs on himſelf.

First, A fool's mouth (ſaith the wiſeman) is his deſtruction, his lips are the ſnare of his ſoul: Prov. 18. 7. & 13. 3. & 18. 21. and if any kind of ſpeech is deſtructive and dangerous, then is this certainly moſt of all; for by no means can a man enflame ſo fierce anger, impreſs ſo ſtiff hatred, raiſe ſo deadly enmity againſt himſelf, and conſequently ſo endanger his ſafety, eaſe and welfare, as by this practice. Men can more eaſily endure, and ſooner will forgive, any ſort of abuſe than this; they will rather pardon a robber of their goods, than a defamer of their good name.

Secondly, Such an one indeed is not onely odious to the perſon immediately concerned, but generally to all men that obſerve his practice, every man preſently will be ſenſible how eaſily it may be his own caſe, how liable he may be to be thus abuſed, in a way againſt which there is no guard or defence. The Slanderer therefore is apprehended a common enemy, dangerous to all men; and thence rendreth all men averſe from him, and ready to croſs him. Love and peace, tranquility and ſecurity can only be maintained by innocent and true dealing: ſo the Pſalmiſt hath Pſ. 34. 12, 13. well taught us; What Man is he that deſireth life, and loveth many days, that he may ſee good? Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from ſpeaking guile.

——ecquid
Ad te poſt paulo ventura pericula ſentis?
Hor. Lib. 1. Ep. 18.

——Sibi quiſque timet, quanquam eſt intactus & odit. Idem.

Thirdly, All wiſe, all noble, all ingenuous and honeſt Perſons have an averſation from this practice, and cannot entertain it with any accep-
Prov. 13. 5. tance or complacence. (A righteous man hateth lying, ſaith the Wiſe-man.) It is only ill-natured and ill-nurtured, unworthy and naughty
Prov. 17. 4. people that are willing auditours or encouragers thereof. A wicked doer (ſaith the Wiſe-man again) giveth heed to falſe lips; and a liar giveth ear to a naughty tongue. All love of truth, and regard to juſtice, and ſenſe of humanity, all generoſity and ingenuity, all charity and good will to Men, muſt be extinct in thoſe who can with delight, or indeed with patience lend an ear, or give any countenance to a Slanderer: and is not he a very Fool, who chuſeth to diſpleaſe the beſt, only ſoothing the worſt of men?

Fourthly, The Slanderer indeed doth Baniſh himſelf from all converſation and company, or intruding into it becomes very diſguſtful thereto: for he worthily is not only looked upon as an enemy to thoſe whom he ſlandereth, but to thoſe alſo upon whom he obtrudeth his calumnious diſcourſe. He not only wrongeth the former by the injury, but he mocketh the latter by the falſhood of his ſtories; implicitly charging his hearers with weakneſs and credulity, or with injuſtice and pravity.

Fifthly, He alſo derogateth wholly from his own Credit, in all matters of diſcourſe. For he that dareth thus to injure his Neighbour, who can truſt him in any thing he ſpeaks? what will not he ſay to pleaſe his vile humour, or further his baſe intereſt? what (thinks any man) will he ſcruple or boggle at, who hath the heart in thus doing wrong and miſchief to imitate the Devil? Farther, Sixthly, This practice is perpetually haunted with moſt troubleſome companions, inward regret and ſelf-condemnation, fear and diſquiet: * the conſcience of dealing ſo unworthily doth ſmite and rack him; he is ever in danger, and thence in fear to be diſcovered, and requited for it. Of theſe paſſions the manner of his behaviour is a manifeſt indication: for men do ſeldom vent their ſlanderous reports openly and loudly, to the face, or in the ear of thoſe who are concern'd in them; but do utter them in a low voice, in dark corners, out of ſight and hearing, where they conceit themſelves at preſent ſafe from being called Pſal. 59. 7. to an account. Swords (ſaith the Pſalmiſt of ſuch perſons) are in their

101. 5. lips; Who, ſay they, doth hear? And whoſo privily ſlandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off, ſaith David again, intimating the common manner
91. 6. of this practice. Calumny is like the plague, that walketh in darkneſs. Hence appoſitely are the practiſers thereof termed whiſperers and backbiters: their heart ſuffers them not openly to avow, their conſcience tells them they cannot fairly defend their practice. Again,

* Ὁ κακῶς εἰπὼν ἐναγώνιος λοιπόν ἐστιν, ὑποπτεύει τε, καὶ δέδοικε, καὶ μετανοεῖ, καὶ κατεσθίει τὴν ἑαυτοῦ γλῶτταν, δεδοικὼς καὶ τρέμων, μήποτε εἰς ἑτέρους ἐξενεχθὲν τὸ ῥῆμα μέγαν ἐπαγάγῃ τὸν κίνδυνον, καὶ περιττὴν ἔχθραν καὶ ἀνόνητον ἐργάσηται τοῖς εἰρηκόσι, &c. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. γ΄.

Seventhly, The conſequent of this practice is commonly ſhameful diſgrace, with an obligation to retract, and render ſatisfaction: for ſeldom doth Calumny paſs long without being detected and || confuted, † He that walketh uprightly walketh ſurely: but he that perverteth his ways ſhall be known: and, * The lip of truth ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever; but a lying lip is but for a moment, ſaith the great obſerver of things. And when the Slander is diſcloſed, the Slanderer is obliged to excuſe, (that is, to palliate one lie with another, if he can do it,) or forced to recant, with much diſgrace and extreme diſpleaſure to himſelf: he is alſo many times conſtrained with his loſs and pain, to repair the miſchief he hath done.

|| Pſal. 63. 11. The mouth of them that ſpeak lies ſhall be ſtopped.
† Prov. 10. 9.
* Prov. 12. 19. (Prov. 26. 26.) -----Refrain your tongue from backbiting: for there is no word ſo ſecret that ſhall go for nought; and the mouth that ſlandereth, ſlayeth the ſoul. Sap. 1. 11.
Et delator habet quod dedit exitium, Vide Tac. An. 1. p. 45.

Eighthly, To this in likelihood the concernments of men, and the powers which guard juſtice will forcibly bring him: and certainly his Conſcience will bind him thereto; God will indiſpenſably exact it from him. He can never have any ſound quiet in his mind, he can never expect pardon from Heaven without acknowledging his fault, repairing the wrong he hath done, reſtoring that good name of which he diſpoſſeſſed his Neighbour: for in this no leſs than in other caſes Conſcience cannot be ſatisfied, remiſſion will not be granted, except due reſtitution be performed: and of all reſtitutions this ſurely is the moſt difficult, moſt laborious and moſt troubleſome. 'Tis no-wiſe ſo hard to reſtore goods ſtollen or extorted, as to recover a good opinion loſt, to wipe off aſperſions caſt on a man's name, to cure a wounded reputation: the moſt earneſt and diligent endeavour can hardly ever effect this, or ſpread the plaiſter ſo far as the ſore hath reached. The Slanderer therefore doth engage himſelf into great ſtraits, incurring an obligation to repair an almoſt irreparable miſchief.

Ninthly, This practice doth alſo certainly revenge it ſelf, impoſing on its actour a perfect retaliation; a tooth for a tooth; an irrecoverable infamy to himſelf, for the infamy he cauſeth to others. Who will regard his fame, who will be concerned to excuſe his faults, who ſo outrageouſly abuſeth the reputation of others? He ſuffereth juſtly, he is paid in his own coin, will any man think, who doth hear him reproached.

He that diligently ſeeketh good, procureth favour: but he that ſeeketh miſchief, it ſhall come unto him. Prov. 11. 27. Prov. 26. 27. It was the puniſhment of Slanderers in the Law.---- Then ſhall ye do unto him as he had thought to have done unto his Brother. Deut. 19. 19. Prov. 19. 5. A falſe witneſs ſhall not be unpuniſhed; and he that telleth lies ſhall not eſcape: Pſal. 52. 4, 5. God ſhall deſtroy thee for ever, thou falſe tongue. Lying Lips are an abomination to the Lord; but they that deal truly are his delight. Prov. 12. 22.

Tenthly, In fine, the Slanderer (if he doth not by ſerious and ſore repentance retract his practice) doth baniſh himſelf from Heaven and happineſs, doth expoſe himſelf to endleſs miſeries and ſorrows. For, if none that maketh a lie ſhall enter into the heavenly city; if without thoſe manſions of joy and bliſs every one muſt eternally abide that loveth, or maketh a lie; if πᾶσι τοῖς ψευδέσι, to all liars their portion is aſſigned in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone; then aſſuredly the capital Liar, the Slanderer, (who lieth moſt injuriouſly and miſchievouſly,) ſhall be far excluded from felicity, and thruſt down into the depth of that miſerable place. If (as S. Paul ſaith) no railer, or evil-ſpeaker, ſhall inherit the Kingdom of God; how far thence ſhall they be removed,

Apoc. 21. 27. 22. 15.

* Apoc. 21. 8. It is one of thoſe things which God eſpecially doth abominate. Prov. 6. 19. & 12. 22. A falſe witneſs ſhall periſh. Prov. 21. 28.

1 Cor. 6. 10. & 5. 11.

removed, who without any truth or juſtice do ſpeak ill of and reproach Matth. 12.36. their Neighbour? If for every ἀργὸν ῥῆμα, idle, or vain, word we muſt render a ſtrict account; how much more ſhall we be ſeverely reckoned with for this ſort of words, ſo empty of truth and void of equity; words that are not only negatively vain, or uſeleſs, but poſitively vain, as falſe, and ſpoken to bad purpoſe? If Slander perhaps here may evade detection, or ſcape deſerved puniſhment; yet infallibly hereafter, at the dreadful Day, it ſhall be diſcloſed, irreverſibly condemned, inevitably perſecuted with condign reward of utter ſhame and ſorrow.

Is not he then, he who, out of malignity, or vanity, to ſerve any deſign, or ſooth any humour in himſelf or others, doth by committing this ſin involve himſelf into all theſe great evils, both here and hereafter, a moſt deſperate and deplorable Fool?

Having thus deſcribed the Nature of this Sin, and declared the Folly therefore, we need, I ſuppoſe, to ſay no more for diſſuading it; eſpecially to perſons of a generous and honeſt mind, who cannot but ſcorn to debaſe and defile themſelves by ſo mean and vile a practice; or to thoſe who ſeriouſly do profeſs Chriſtianity, that is, the Religion which peculiarly above all others preſcribeth conſtant Truth, ſtricteſt Juſtice, and higheſt Charity.

I ſhall only add, that ſince our faculty of Speech (wherein we do excell all other creatures) was given us, as in the firſt place to praiſe and glorifie our Maker, ſo in the next to benefit and help our Neighbour; as an inſtrument of mutual ſuccour and delectation, of friendly commerce and pleaſant converſe together; for inſtructing and adviſing, comforting and chearing one another; it is an unnatural perverting, and an irrational abuſe thereof, to employ it to the damage, diſgrace, vexation, or wrong in any kind of our brother. Better indeed had we been as Brutes without its uſe, than we are, if ſo worſe than brutiſhly we abuſe it.

Finally, all theſe things being conſidered, we may, I think, reaſonably conclude it moſt evidently true, that, He which uttereth Slander, is a Fool.

SER-

SERMON XIX.

Againſt Detraction.

S. JAMES 4. 11.

Speak not evil one of another, Brethren.

Μὴ καταλαλεῖτε ἀλλήλων, ἀδελφοί.

ONE half of our Religion conſiſteth in Charity toward our Neighbour; and of that Charity much the greater part ſeemeth exerciſed in Speech; for as ſpeaking doth take up the greateſt part of our life, (our quick and active Mind continually venting its Thoughts, and diſcharging its Paſſions thereby; all our converſation and commerce paſſing through it, it having a large influence upon all our practice) ſo Speech commonly having our Neighbour and his Concernments for its Objects, it is neceſſary, that either moſt of our Charity will be employed therein, or that by it we ſhall moſt offend againſt that great Duty, together with its Aſſociates, Juſtice and Peace.

And all Offences of this kind (which tranſgreſs Charity, violate Juſtice, or infringe Peace) may perhaps be forbidden in this Apoſtolical Precept; for the word καταλαλεῖν, according to its origination, and according to ſome uſe, doth ſignifie all kind of Obloquy, and ſo may comprize ſlander, harſh cenſure, reviling, ſcoffing, and the like kinds of ſpeaking againſt our Neighbour; but in ſtricter acceptation, and according to peculiar uſe, it denoteth that particular ſort of Obloquy, which is called Detraction, or Backbiting: So therefore we may be allowed to underſtand it here; and accordingly I now mean to deſcribe it, and to diſſuade from its practice.

There is between this, and the other chief ſorts of Obloquy, (Slander, Cenſuring and Reviling) much affinity, yet there is ſome difference; for Slander involveth an imputation of falſhood; Reviling includeth bitter and foul language; but Detraction may be couched in Truth, and cloathed in fair Language; it is a Poiſon often infuſed in ſweet Liquor, and miniſtred in a Golden Cup. It is of nearer kin to Cenſuring, and accordingly S. James here coupleth it thereto: He that detracteth from a Brother, and he that cenſureth his Brother, backbiteth the Law, and cenſureth the Law: yet may theſe two be diſtinguiſhed; for cenſuring ſeemeth to be of more general purport, extending indifferently to all kinds of Perſons, Qualities and Actions, which it unduly taxeth; but Detraction eſpecially reſpecteth worthy Perſons, good Qualities, and laudable Actions, the reputation of which it aimeth to deſtroy, or to impair.

This ſort of ill practice (ſo rife in uſe, ſo baſe in its nature, ſo miſchievous in its effects) it ſhall be my endeavour to deſcribe, that we may know it, and to diſſwade, that we may ſhun it.

It is the fault (oppoſite to that part of Charity and Goodneſs, which is called Ingenuity or Candour), which out of naughty diſpoſition or deſign, ſtriveth to diſgrace worthy Perſons, or to diſparage good Actions, looking for blemiſhes and defects in them, uſing care and artifice to pervert and miſrepreſent things to that purpoſe.

An honeſt and charitable Mind diſpoſeth us, when we ſee any Man endued with good Qualities, and purſuing a tenour of good practice, to eſteem ſuch a perſon, to commend him, to interpret what he doeth to the beſt, not to ſuſpect any ill of him, or to ſeek any exception againſt him; it inclineth us, when we ſee any action materially good, to yield it ſimply due approbation and praiſe, without ſearching for, or ſurmiſing any defect in the cauſe or Principle, whence it cometh, in the deſign or end to which it tendeth, in the way or manner of performing it. A good man would be ſorry to have any good thing ſpoiled: as to find a crack in a fair Building, a flaw in a fine Jewel, a canker in a goodly Flower, is grievous to any indifferent man; ſo would it be diſpleaſing to him to obſerve defects in a worthy perſon, or commendable action; he therefore will not eaſily entertain a ſuſpicion of any ſuch, he never will hunt for any. But on the contrary, 'tis the property of a Detractour, when he ſeeth a worthy perſon, (whom he doth not affect, or whom he is concerned to wrong) to ſurvey him throughly, and to ſift all his actions, with intent to deſcry ſome failing, or any ſemblance of a fault, by which he may diſparage him; when he vieweth any good action, he peereth into it, labouring to eſpy ſome pretence to derogate from the commendation apparently belonging to it. This in general is the nature of this fault. But we may get a fuller underſtanding of it. by conſidering more diſtinctly ſome particular Acts, wherein it is commonly exerciſed, or the ſeveral paths, in which the detracting ſpirit treadeth; ſuch are theſe following:

1. A Detractour is wont to repreſent perſons and actions under the moſt diſadvantageous circumſtances he can, ſetting out thoſe which may cauſe them to appear odious or deſpicable, ſlipping over thoſe which may commend or excuſe them. There is no perſon ſo excellent, who is not by his circumſtances forced to omit ſome things, which would become him to do, if he were able; to perform ſome things lamely, and otherwiſe than he would do, if he could reach it; no action ſo worthy, but may have ſome defect in matter, or manner, uncapable of redreſs; and he that repreſenteth ſuch perſon or action, leaving out thoſe excuſing circumſtances, doth tend to beget a bad or mean opinion of them, robbing them of their due value and commendation: thus to charge a man of not having done a good work, when he had not the power or opportunity to perform it, or is by croſs accidents hindered from doing it according to his deſire; to ſuggeſt the action was not done exactly, in the beſt ſeaſon, in the righteſt mode, in the moſt proper place, with expreſſions, looks or geſtures moſt convenient, theſe are tricks of a Detractour; who when he cannot deny the Metal to be good, and the Stamp true, he clippeth it, and ſo would reject it from being current.

Πολὺ τὸ ἐχ-ὑποκῖον. ἐδὲ δεξάμενον τὸ εὖ. Theoph.

2. He is wont to miſconſtrue ambiguous words, or to miſinterpret doubtful appearances of things; Let a man ſpeak never ſo well, or act never ſo fairly, yet a Detractuor will ſay his words may bear this ill ſenſe, his actions may tend to that bad purpoſe; we may therefore ſuſpect his meaning, and cannot yield him a full approbation.

3. He is wont to miſ-name the qualities of perſons or things, aſſigning bad appellations or epithets to good or indifferent qualities: the names of Vertue and Vice do ſo nearly border in ſignification, that it is eaſie to transfer them from one to another, and to give the beſt quality a bad name: Thus, by calling a ſober man ſour, a chearful man vain, a conſcientious man moroſe, a devout man ſuperſtitious, a free man prodigal, a frugal man ſordid, an open man ſimple, a reſerved man crafty, one that ſtandeth upon his honour and honeſty proud, a kind man ambitiouſly popular, a modeſt man ſullen, timorous or ſtupid, is a very eaſie way to detract, and no man thereby can ſcape being diſparaged.

At nos virtutes ipſas invertimus, atq;
Sincerum cupimus vas incruſtare; probus quis
Nobiſcum vivit? multum eſt demiſſus homo; illi
Tardo cognomen pinguis damus, &c.
Hor. Ser. l. 1. Sat. 3.

4. He doth imperfectly characterize perſons, ſo as ſtudiouſly to vail, or faintly to diſcloſe their Vertues, and good qualities, but carefully to expoſe, and fully to aggravate or amplifie any defects or failings in them. The Detractour will pretend to give a character of his Neighbour, but in ſo doing he ſtifleth what may commend him, and blazoneth what may diſgrace him; like an envious Painter he hideth, or in dusky colours ſhadoweth all the graceful parts and goodly features, but ſetteth out all blemiſhes in the briskeſt light, and moſt open view. Every face hath in it ſome mole, ſpot or wrinkle; there is no man, that hath not (as they ſpeak) ſome blind place; ſome blemiſhes in his nature or temper, ſome faults corrected by education or cuſtom, ſomewhat amiſs proceeding from ignorance, or miſapprehenſion of things; theſe (although they be in themſelves ſmall and inconſiderable, although they are ſome of them involuntary and thence inculpable, although they be much corrected or reſtrained by vertuous diſcipline, although they are compenſated by greater vertues, yet theſe) the Detractour ſnatcheth, mouldeth, and out of them frameth an Idea of his Neighbour, apt to breed hatred, or contempt of him in an unwary ſpectator; whereas were Charity, were Equity, were Humanity to draw the perſon, it repreſenting his qualities with juſt advantage, would render him lovely and venerable.

5. He is wont not to commend or allow any thing abſolutely and clearly, but always interpoſing ſome exception, to which he would have it ſeem liable: the man indeed, ſaith he, doth ſeem to have this or that laudable quality; the action hath a fair appearance, but then if he can, he blurteth out ſome ſpiteful objection; if he can find nothing colourable to ſay againſt it, yet he will ſeem to know, and to ſuppreſs ſomewhat; but (ſaith he) I know what I know, I know more than I'le ſay ------ ſo (adding perhaps a crafty Nod or Shrug, a malicious Sneer or Smile) he thinks to blaſt the faireſt performance.

Non audes repetere, qui tacendo amplius criminaris: & quia non habes quod objicias, ſimulas verecundiam; ut lector te putet mihi parcere, qui mentiens nec tuæ animæ peperciſti. Hier. in Ruff. 3. 6.

6. He is ready to ſuggeſt ill cauſes and principles (latent in the heart) of practices apparently good; aſcribing what is well done to bad diſpoſition, or bad purpoſe: So to ſay of a liberal man, that he is ſo from an ambitious temper, or out of a vain-glorious deſign; of a religious man, that his conſtant exerciſes of devotion proceed not from a conſcientious love and fear of God, or out of intention to pleaſe God and work out his Salvation, but from hypocriſie, from affectation to gain the favour and good opinion of men, from deſign to promote worldly intereſts; this is the way of Detraction: He doeth well (ſaith the Detractour) it cannot be denied; but for what reaſon doth he ſo? is it not plainly his intereſt to do ſo? doth he not mean to get applauſe, or preferment thereby? Doth Job ſerve God for nought? ſo ſaid the Father of detracting Spirits.

7. He derogateth from good actions by pretending to correct them, or to ſhew better that might have been done in their room: it is, ſaith he, done in ſome reſpect well or tolerably; but it might have been done better, with as ſmall trouble and coſt; he was overſeen in chuſing this way, or proceeding in this manner: Thus did Judas blame the good woman, who anointed our Lord's feet; Why (ſaid he) was not this Ointment ſold, and given to the poor? ſo did his covetous baſeneſs prompt him to detract from that performance, of which our Saviour's goodneſs did pronounce, that it was a good work, which ſhould perpetually through the whole world paſs for memorable.

Joh. 12. 5.

Matth. 26. 10, 13.

8. A Detractour not regarding the general courſe and conſtant tenour of a man's Converſation, which is conſpicuouſly and clearly good, will attaque ſome part of it, the goodneſs whereof is leſs diſcernable, or more ſubject to conteſt and blame; as if in a body admirably handſome, one overlooking that curious harmony, that delicate complection, thoſe fine lineaments, and goodly features which running through the whole, do conſpire to render it a lovely Spectacle, ſhould pitch on an Eye, or a Noſe to carp at; or as if in a Town, otherwhere begirt with impregnable defences, one ſhould ſearch for the weakeſt place, to form a battery againſt it.

9. In fine, the Detractour injecteth ſuggeſtions of every thing anywiſe plauſible or poſſible, that can ſerve to diminiſh the worth of a perſon, or value of an action, which he would diſcountenance; he pryeth into every nook, he bolteth every circumſtance, he improveth every pretence, he alledgeth any report or rumour, he uſeth all the tricks imaginable to that end. Such is the nature and way of Detraction; in enlarging upon which I am the more ſparing, becauſe the arts and methods of Detraction being in great part common with thoſe of Slander and Cenſure, I have otherwhile in treating upon thoſe Offences more fully declared them.

Now for diſſuading from its practice, I ſhall propound to your conſideration the cauſes whence it proceedeth, the irregularities and pravities which it involveth, the effects which it produceth; the which will appear ſo baſe and ugly, that whoever ſhall conſider them, cannot I ſuppoſe but loath the Daughter of ſuch Parents, the ſubject of ſuch qualities, and the Mother of ſuch Children.

The cauſes of detraction are

I.

1. Ill nature, and bad humour: As good nature and ingenuous diſpoſition incline men to obſerve, like and commend what appeareth beſt in our Neighbour; ſo malignity of temper and heart prompteth to eſpy, and catch at the worſt: one, as a Bee, gathereth Honey out of any Herb; the other, as a Spider, ſucketh Poiſon out of the ſweeteſt Flower.

2. Pride, Ambition, and inordinate Self-love: the Detractour would engroſs praiſe, and derive all glory to himſelf; he would be the chief, the only excellent perſon; therefore he would juſtle another's worth out of the way, that it may not endanger ſtanding in competition with his, or leſſening it by a partnerſhip; that it may not outſhine his reputation, or dim it by the luſtre thereof.

Expedit vobis niminem videri bonum, quaſi aliena virtus exprobatio veſtrorum delictorum ſit. Sen. de Vit. B. 19.

3. Envy: A Detractour liketh not to ſee another thrive, and flouriſh in the good eſteem of men, therefore he would gladly blaſt his worth, and vertue; his Eye is evil and ſore, therefore would he quench, or cloud the light that dazleth it.

4. Malicious Revenge and Spite: his Neighbour's good practice condemneth his bad life; his Neighbour's worth diſparageth his unworthineſs; this he conceiveth highly prejudicial to him; hence in revenge he will labour to vilifie the worth and good works of his Neighbour.

5. Senſe of weakneſs, want of Courage, or deſpondency of his own Ability: He that in any kind deemeth himſelf able, or confideth in his own ſtrength and induſtry, will allow to others the commendation beſeeming their ability; for he thinketh himſelf in capacity to deſerve the ſame, and as he would not loſe the fruits of his own deſerts, ſo he taketh it for equitable, that another ſhould enjoy them; to deprive another of them, he ſeeth were in conſequence to prejudice his own capacity and hope: but he that feeleth himſelf deſtitute of worth, and deſpaireth to arrive to the credit of others, is thence tempted to diſparage and defame ſuch perſons: this courſe he taketh as the beſt allay of his contemptibleneſs, the only ſolace for his defects that he can hope for; being he cannot ariſe to another's pitch, he would bring down that other to his; he cannot directly get any praiſe, therefore he would indirectly find excuſe by ſhrouding his unworthineſs under the blame of others: Hence Detraction is a ſign of the weakeſt and baſeſt ſpirit; 'tis an impotent and groveling Serpent, that lurketh in the Hedge, waiting opportunity to bite the heel of any nobler Creature that paſſeth by.

Οἱ ἐυτελεῖς ϗ ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν μὴ δυνάμενοι φαίνεσθαι, ἐκ τοῦ ψέγειν τοὺς ἑαυτῶν κρείττονας δείκνυσθαι βούλονται. Socr. Hiſt. Eccl. 6. 13.

6. Evil Conſcience: A man that is conſcious to himſelf of a ſolid worth and vertue of having honeſt intentions, of having performed good deeds, is ſatisfied with the fruits of inward comfort, and outward approbation, which they do yield; he therefore will ſcorn to ſeek the bettering himſelf by the diſcredit of others; he will not by ſo mean a practice adulterate that worth, in which he feeleth ſufficient complacence; he rather doth like that others ſhould enjoy their due commendation, as juſtifying his own claim thereto; he willingly payeth it, becauſe he may juſtly demand it; and becauſe with-holding it from another, may prejudice his own right thereto: But he that is ſenſible of no good qualities in himſelf, that is conſcious of no worthy actions that he hath done, to breed a ſatisfaction of mind, or build a reputation upon, would pleaſe himſelf in making others as little better than himſelf as he can, would ground a kind of credit upon the ruins and rubbiſh of another's fame. When he knoweth he cannot ſhine by his own Light, he would ſeem leſs obſcure by eclipſing the brightneſs of others, and ſhutting out the day from about him; conceiving that all things look alike in the dark, and that bad appeareth not bad where no good is near.

Remedium pœnæ ſuæ arbitrantur ſi nemo ſit ſanctus, ſi omnibus detrabatur, ſi turba ſit pereuntium, ſi multitudo peccantium, Hier. ad Aſellam. Ep. 99.

As alſo a good man liketh worth and virtue, becauſe they reſemble what he diſcerneth in himſelf; ſo evil men hate them, becauſe they do not find themſelves maſters of them; they are like the Fox, who ſaid, the Grapes were ſowr, becauſe he could not reach them; and that the Hare was dry meat, becauſe he could not catch her. A Detractour therefore is always a bad man, and wanteth thoſe good qualities which he would diſparage.

7. Bad ſelfiſh Deſign: Detraction is a common Engine, whereby naughty men ſtrive to compaſs their ends; when by fair means, by their own wit, induſtry, courage, worthy behaviour, they cannot promote their intereſts, they cannot drive on their ambitious or covetous projects, they cannot attain that preferment or that gain which they affect, then they betake themſelves to this crooked and foul way of ſupplanting, by detracting thoſe whom they conceit to ſtand in the way of their Deſigns. It was the firſt piece of wicked policy that ever was practiſed in the world, the Devil by detracting from the goodneſs and veracity of God (miſrepreſenting his intentions, and miſconſtruing his commands) ſtrove to atchieve his miſchievous deſign of ſeducing our Fore-fathers; and in his footſteps his ſerpentine progeny (the race of malicious, envious, ambitious, covetous and crafty Politicians) do tread. It is obſerved to be a fault that uſually haunteth Courts, wherein there is competition for the favour of a Prince, and the conſequences thereof, (for dignity, power, wealth, repute;) to get which to themſelves, they ſtrive to diſpoſſeſs, or prevent others by this inſtrument of Detraction. It is alſo rife among Scholars, that is, among Competitours for wit, learning, induſtry, and the rewards of them, reputation or preferment. From ſuch principles and cauſes uſually doth this practice ſpring.

II. It doth involve theſe kinds of irregularity and pravity.

1. Injuſtice: A Detractour careth not how he dealeth with his Neighbour, what wrong he doeth him. Juſtice obligeth to render every man his due; honour to whom honour is due, and praiſe to him that deſerveth praiſe. There can be no greater injury done a man, than to ſpoil his beſt good, his vertue; than to rob him of the beſt reward of his pains and cares, which is a fair reputation; (I ſpeak of rewards which lie in the reach of men.) No man prizes any thing comparably to his honeſty and honour; who therefore by any means blurreth them, is moſt injurious. Wo unto them—— who take the righteouſneſs of the righteous from him, Iſa. 5. 23. Prov. 17. 15.

Injurious indeed he is not only to the vertuous perſon, but to Vertue it ſelf; for commendation is a debt we owe to it wherever it is found; which conduceth to its encouragement and advancement; and to wrong Goodneſs it ſelf, is the moſt heinous injuſtice.

2. Uncharitableneſs; It is evident that the Detractour doth not love his Neighbour; for Charity maketh the beſt of every thing: Charity believeth every thing, hopeth every thing to the advantage of its Object; Charity delighteth to ſee the beloved to proſper and flouriſh; and will therefore contribute its endeavour to the procuring it to do ſo: the Detractour therefore (who would defile the beſt, and diſplay the worſt in his Neighbour) can have no Charity; he indeed manifeſteth the greateſt hatred, ſeeing he ſtriveth to do the greateſt miſchief, to cauſe the greateſt vexation to his Neighbour, in bereaving him of his moſt pretious and dear enjoyments. 1 Cor. 13.

3. Impiety: He that loveth and reverenceth God, will acknowledge and approve his goodneſs, in beſtowing excellent Gifts and graces to his Brethren; when ſuch appear, he will be afraid to diſavow, or diſgrace them, that he may not rob God himſelf of the Glory thence due to his favour and mercy, or through his Neighbour's ſide wound the Divine Benignity: he will be ready to bleſs and praiſe God for all ſuch emanations of his goodneſs; as thoſe did in the Goſpel, who beholding our Saviour's miraculous works of grace, did glorifie God, who had given ſuch Gifts unto men: but the Detractour careth not for that; he feareth not to bereave God of the honour of diſpenſing good gifts, that his Brother may not have the honour of receiving them; he will rather deny God to be good, than allow a man to be ſo by his Grace and bleſſing; ſo is he no leſs a Detractour from God, than from his Neighbour.

Hence of all offences, Detraction certainly muſt be moſt odious to God: He is the God of Truth, and therefore deteſteth Lying, of which Detraction ever (eſpecially in moral eſteem) hath a ſpice: He is the God of Juſtice, and therefore eſpecially doth abhor wronging the beſt perſons and actions; he is the God of Love, and therefore cannot but loath this capital violation of Charity; he is jealous of his Glory, and cannot therefore endure it to be abuſed by ſlurring his good Gifts and Graces; he cannot but hate that Offence, which approacheth to that moſt heinous and unpardonable ſin, that conſiſteth in defaming the excellent works performed by Divine power and goodneſs, aſcribing them to bad cauſes. Matth. 12.

4. Detraction involveth degenerous baſeneſs, meanneſs of ſpirit, and want of good manners. All men affect to ſeem generous, and will ſay, they ſcorn to be baſe; but Generoſity is in nothing more ſeen, than in a candid eſtimation of other mens vertues and good qualities; to this generoſity of Nature, generoſity of Education, generoſity of Principles and Judgment do all conſpiringly diſpoſe: 'Tis the nobleſt kind of courteſie, to tender and farther the reputation of others; to be liberal in beſtowing commendation on deſerving perſons; it obligeth men more than any other Benefit can do, procuring them commonly real advantage, always chearing and ſatisfying their mind; for in nothing more do they pleaſe themſelves, than in reaping this fruit of their good intention, and honeſt induſtry, the approbation of worthy men; it is therefore a moſt gentile thing thus to oblige men. But on the other ſide, nothing more plainly argueth a degenerate and ignoble heart, ill-breeding and ill-formed manners, a ſorry mind and poor judgment, than to diſeſteem or diſparage worth and virtue in others: 'Tis the moſt ſavage rudeneſs, the moſt ſordid illiberality, the moſt ugly clowniſhneſs that can be; of all men therefore it moſt doth misbecome thoſe who pretend to be Gentlemen.

5. In conſequence to theſe things, Detraction includeth Folly; for every unjuſt, every uncharitable, every impious, every baſe perſon is (as ſuch) a Fool: none of thoſe qualities are conſiſtent with Wiſedom; but the folly of it will particularly appear (together with its pravity) by the bad and hurtful effects which it produceth, both in regard to others, and to him that practiſeth it; ſome of which are theſe:

III. 1. The practice thereof is a great diſcouragement, and obſtruction to the common practice of Goodneſs: for many ſeeing the beſt men thus diſparaged, and the beſt actions vilified, are diſheartned and deterr'd from practiſing vertue, eſpecially in a conſpicuous and eminent degree: Why, will many a man ſay, ſhall I be ſtrictly good, ſeeing Goodneſs is ſo liable to be miſuſed, ſeeing thereby I ſhall provoke the detracting Tongue, ſeeing my reward ſhall be to have a ſevere inquiſition paſs upon me, to have my life defac'd, and my name beſpattered? Had not I better be contented with a mediocrity and obſcurity of goodneſs, than by a glaring luſtre thereof to draw the envious eye, and kindle raging obloquy upon me? Thus men of a weaker ſpirit, or a baſhful temper (who are not ſtiff and reſolute in their way, who have not the heart or the face to bear up againſt rude aſſaults of their reputation) will be ſcared and daunted by Detraction; ſo as conſequently to be induced.

-----placare invidiam virtute relicta. Hor.

And when thus the credit of Vertue is blaſted in its practiſers, many will be diverted from it; ſo will it grow out of requeſt, and the World will be corrupted by theſe agents of the Evil One.

It were indeed upon this conſideration, adviſable and juſt, not to ſeem ever to detract; even not then when we are well aſſured that by ſpeaking ill, we ſhall not really do it; if we ſhould diſcover any man to ſeem worthy, or to be ſo reputed, whom yet we diſcern (by ſtanding in a nearer light) not to be truly ſuch, having had opportunity to know his bad qualities, bad purpoſes or bad deeds; yet Wiſedom would commonly dictate, and Goodneſs diſpoſe not to mar his repute: If we ſhould obſerve (without danger of miſtake) any plauſible action to be performed out of bad inclinations, principles or deſigns; yet ordinarily in diſcretion and honeſty we ſhould let it paſs with ſuch commendation as its appearance may procure, rather than to ſlur it by venting our diſadvantageous apprehenſions about it: for it is no great harm that any man ſhould enjoy undeſerved commendation, or that a counterfeit worth ſhould find a diſſembled reſpect; it is but being over juſt, which if it be ever a fault, can hardly be ſo in this caſe, wherein we do not expend any coſt, or ſuffer any damage; but it may do miſchief to blemiſh an appearance of Vertue; it may be a wrong thereto to deface its very Image; the very diſcloſing hypocriſie doth inflict a wound on goodneſs, and expoſeth it to ſcandal; for bad men thence will be prone to infer, that all vertue proceedeth from the like bad principles: ſo the diſgrace caſt on that which is ſpurious, will redound to the prejudice of that which is moſt genuine: and if it be good to forbear detracting from that which is certainly falſe, much more is it ſo in regard to that which is poſſibly true; and far more ſtill is it ſo in reſpect to that which is clear and ſure.

2. Hence Detraction is very noxious and baneful to all Society; for all ſociety is maintained in welfare by encouragement of honeſty and induſtry; the which, when diſparagement is caſt upon them, will be in danger to languiſh and decay; whence a Detractour is the worſt member that can be of a Society; he is a very Moth, a very Canker therein.

3. Detraction worketh real damage and miſchief to our Neighbour; it bereaveth him of that goodly reputation which is the proper reward of Vertue, and a main ſupport to the practice of it; it often really obſtructeth and diſappointeth his undertakings, eſtranging thoſe from him, or ſetting them againſt him, who do credulouſly entertain it.

4. The Detractour abuſeth thoſe, into whoſe ears he inſtilleth his poiſonous ſuggeſtions, engaging them to partake in the injuries done to worth and vertue; cauſing them to entertain unjuſt and uncharitable conceits, to practice unſeemly and unworthy behaviour toward good men.

5. The Detractour produceth great inconveniences and miſchiefs to himſelf.

He raiſeth againſt himſelf fierce animoſity and wrath: for men that are conſcious to themſelves of their own honeſt meaning and blameleſs proceedings, cannot endure to be abuſed by unjuſt diſparagement; hence are they ſtirred to boil with paſſion, and to diſcharge revenge upon the Detractour.

He expoſeth himſelf to general hatred; all good men loath him as a baſe and miſchievous perſon, and a particular enemy of theirs, always ready to wrong them; every man is apt to ſay, He that doth thus abuſe another, will be ready to ſerve me in like manner if I chance to come in his way, vilifying the beſt thing I can do, even the worſt of men will diſlike him; for even ſuch affect to do ſomewhat laudable or plauſible, and would be glad to enjoy approbation for it; and cannot therefore brook thoſe who lie in wait to rob them of the fruit of their good endeavours; ſo do all men worthily deteſt and ſhun the Detractour, as a common enemy to goodneſs firſt, and then unto men. Farther,

6. The Detractour yieldeth occaſion to others, and a kind of right to return the ſame meaſure upon him. If he hath in him a ſhew of any thing laudable, men will not allow him any commendation from it: for why, conceive they, ſhall he receive that which he will not ſuffer others to enjoy? How can any man admit him to have any real worth or virtue in himſelf who doth not like it or treat it well in another? Hence, if a Detractour hath any good in him, he much injureth himſelf, depriving himſelf of all the reſpect belonging thereto.

7. Again, the Detractour (eſteeming things according to moral poſſibility) will aſſuredly be defeated in his aims; his Detraction in the cloſe will avail nothing, but to bring trouble and ſhame upon himſelf; for God hath a particular care over innocence and goodneſs, ſo as not to let them finally to ſuffer: the good man's righteouſneſs he will bring forth as the light, and his judgment as the noon day: Wiſe men eaſily will diſcern the foul play, and will ſcorn it; good men ever will be ready to clear and vindicate the truth; Worth however clouded for a time, will break through all miſts, and glorioully expand it ſelf, to the confuſion of its moſt ſly oppoſers. Pſal. 37. 6.

Such are the natural and obvious effects of this practie; the conſideration whereof (together with the cauſes producing it, and the eſſential adjuncts which it doth involve) will, I ſhould think, ſuffice to deter us from it.

I ſhall only adjoyn one conſideration, which our Text ſuggeſteth: Speak not evil of one another, Brethren, ſaith the Apoſtle: Brethren; That Appellation doth imply a ſtrong Argument enforcing the precept: Brethren, with eſpecial tenderneſs of affection, ſhould love one another, and delight in each others good; they ſhould tender the intereſt and honour of each other as their own; they ſhould therefore by all means cheriſh and countenance vertue in one another, as that which promoteth the common welfare, which adorneth and illuſtrateth the dignity of their Family. We ſhould rejoice in the good qualities and worthy deeds of any Chriſtian, as glorifying our common Father, as gracing our common Profeſſion, as edifying the common Body, whereof we are Members; Members we are one of another, and as ſuch ſhould find complacence in the health and vigour of any part, from whence the whole doth receive benefit and comfort: for one Brother to repine at the welfare, to malign the proſperity, to decry the merit, to deſtroy the reputation of another, is very unnatural; for one Chriſtian any-wiſe to wrong or prejudice another, is highly impious.

To conclude; It is our duty (which Equity, which Ingenuity, which Charity, which Piety do all concurrently oblige us to) when-ever we do ſee any good perſon, or worthy deed, to yield hearty eſteem, to pay due reſpect, gladly to congratulate the perſon, and willingly to commend the work; rendring withal, thanks and praiſe for them to the Donour of all good Gifts: unto whom, for all the good things beſtowed upon us, and upon all his Creatures, be for ever all glory and praiſe. Amen.

SERMON XX.

Againſt Raſh Cenſuring and Judging.

S. MATTH. 7. 1.

Judge not.

THESE Words (being part of our Saviour's moſt Divine Sermon upon the Mount) contain a very ſhort Precept, but of vaſt uſe and conſequence; the obſervance whereof would much conduce to the good of the World, and to the private quiet of each man; it interdicting a Practice, which commonly produceth very miſchievous and troubleſome Effects; a practice never rare among men, but now very rife; when with the general cauſes, which ever did and ever will in ſome meaſure diſpoſe Men thereto, ſome ſpecial ones do concur, that powerfully incline to it.

There are innate to men an unjuſt Pride, emboldning them to take upon them beyond what belongeth to them, or doth become them; an exceſſive Self-love, prompting them as to flatter themſelves in their own conceit, ſo to undervalue others, and from vilifying their Neighbours, to ſeek commendation to themſelves; an envious malignity, which ever luſteth to be pampered with finding or making faults; many corrupt Affections, ſpringing from fleſhly Nature, which draw or drive men to this Practice; ſo that in all Ages it hath been very common, and never any profeſſion hath been ſo much invaded, as that of the Judge.

But divers peculiar Cauſes have ſuch an influence upon our Age, as more ſtrongly to ſway men thereto: there is a wonderful affectation to ſeem hugely wiſe and witty; and how can we ſeem ſuch more, than in putting on the garb and countenance of Judges; ſcanning and paſſing Sentence upon all Perſons, and all things incident? there is an extreme niceneſs and delicacy of conceit, which maketh us apt to reliſh few things, and to diſtaſte any thing; there are diſſenſions in opinion, and addictedneſs to parties, which do tempt us, and ſeem to authorize us in condemning all that differ from us; there is a deep corruption of mind and manners, which engageth men in their own defence to cenſure others, diverting the blame from home, and ſhrowding their own under the covert of other mens faults; there are new principles of Morality and Policy become current with great vogue, which allow to do or ſay any thing ſubſervient to our Intereſts or Deſigns; which alſo do repreſent all men ſo bad, that (admitting them true) nothing hardly can be ſaid ill of any man beyond Truth and Juſtice.

Expedit vobis neminem videri bonum; quaſi aliena virtus exprobratio veſtrorum delictorum ſit. Sen. de Vit. B. 19.

Hence is the World become ſo extremely critical and cenſorious, that in many places the chief employment of men, and the main body of Converſation is, if we mark it, taken up in Judging: Every goſſiping is, as it were, a Court of Juſtice; every ſeat becometh a Tribunal; at every table ſtandeth a Bar, whereto all men are cited, whereat every man (as it happeneth) is arreigned and ſentenced: No ſublimity or ſacredneſs of dignity, no integrity or innocence of life, no prudence or circumſpection of demeanour can exempt any perſon from it: Not one eſcapeth being taxed under ſome ſcandalous name, or odious character, one or other. Not only the outward actions and viſible practices of men are judged; but their retired ſentiments are brought under trial, their inward diſpoſitions have a verdict paſt on them, their final ſtates are determined. Whole Bodies of men are thus judged at once, and nothing it is in one breath to damn whole Churches, at one puſh to throw down whole Nations into the bottomleſs Pit. All mankind in a lump is ſeverely cenſured, as void of any real goodneſs or true vertue; ſo fatally depraved as not to be corrigible by any good diſcipline, not to be recoverable even by the grace of God: yea God himſelf is hardly ſpared, his Providence coming under the bold obloquy of thoſe, who (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh of ſome in his time, whoſe race doth yet ſurvive) ſpeak loftily, and ſet their mouth againſt the Heavens.

Εἰς τὸ τῶν ἄλλων πολυπραγμονεῖν καὶ καταδικάζειν δαπανᾶται ἡμῖν ἅπας ὁ βίος· καὶ οὐδένα ἂν εὕροις ταχέως, οὐ βιωτικὸν ἄνδρα, οὐ μοναχὸν ταύτης ἐλεύθερον τῆς ἁμαρτίας, καίτοιγε τοσαύτης ἀπειλῆς κειμένης αὐτῇ. Chryſ. ad dem. T. 6. Orat. 42.

Pſal. 73. 8, 9.

This being too apparently the preſent ſtate of things, and obvious practice of men, it were deſirable, that in order to their being reclaimed, men commonly did well underſtand the nature of this practice with the heinous guilt, and conſequently the deadly hazard they do incur thereby: at this purpoſe my diſcourſe ſhall aim, wherein I ſhall endeavour both to deſcribe the nature of the practice forbidden in my Text, and to declare the pravity, iniquity and folly of it.

Judge not. As to the word we may obſerve, that it being in it ſelf according to its primitive ſenſe of a middle and indifferent ſignification, is yet frequently in the Scripture uſed in the worſt ſenſe; ſo as to import thoſe acts, or thoſe effects of judgment, which paſs to the diſadvantage of the perſons ſubjected thereto; for condemnation, and for infliction of puniſhment: And this ſenſe here ſurely the word doth principally reſpect, yet not ſo preciſely as to exclude ſomewhat contained in the larger ſenſe: We are ſo prohibited the condemning and puniſhing our Neighbour in his good name, that withal ſome acts antecedent, or concomitant to thoſe, are glanced at in the prohibition: undue application thereto, unjuſt proceeding therein are alſo ſignified unlawful; for the meaning of the word, and the reaſon of the caſe may be be ſo far extended.

But for the fuller and clearer underſtanding of the matter, we muſt obſerve, that there are divers ſorts of Judging, or acts reſembling Judgment, which do not belong to this precept; which it is requiſite to diſtinguiſh from this Judging prohibited.

1. That exerciſing publick Judgment, or adminiſtring Juſtice is not here prohibited, I need not to inſiſt, that is neceſſary; Humane Society could not ſubſiſt, Right could not be maintained, nor Peace preſerved without it; God thereby governeth the World, earthly Judges being his Inſtruments and Subſtitutes; ſuch Judgment is not ſo much the act of men, as of God himſelf, by whoſe Authority, in whoſe Name, for whoſe Service it is miniſtred. As Moſes told the Judges in his time, You

Deut. 1. 17. ſhall not be afraid of the face of man, for the Judgment is God's. And in numberleſs places of Scripture this Judgment is allowed and authorized; it therefore is not touched here.

2. That Trial and Cenſure (although out of Court, and without formal proceſs) which any kind of Superiours do exerciſe upon their Inferiours, committed to their inſpection and care; ſuch as of Parents over Children, Maſters over Servants, Paſtors over their Flock, any Governours over their Charge, their admonitions, reprehenſions and corrections are to be excepted hence, as being in themſelves needful and warranted, yea enjoyned by God.

3. Neither are fraternal correption or friendly reproof (proceeding out of charitable deſign, upon clear ground, in fit ſeaſon, within reaſonable compaſs) concerned in this prohibition; this being a wholeſome practice, and a duty incumbent on us: Thou ſhalt (ſaith the Law) not hate thy Brother in thine heart; thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy Neighbour, and not ſuffer ſin upon him. Levit. 19. 17. 1 Theſſ. 5. 14.

4. All obſerving and reflecting upon our Neighbours actions, all framing an opinion about them, and expreſſing our minds concerning them are not forbidden. For we are not bound perpetually to ſhut our eyes, or go about hood-winked; nor to ſtop our ears and make our ſelves deaf. And how can we forbear to think according to plain evidence? how can we reſiſt the impreſſions of ſenſe upon our minds? how can we conteſt notorious experience? How alſo, barring ſuch apprehenſions of obvious and apparent things, could we bear teſtimony concerning them? how could we ſignifie our approbation or diſlike of them? How could we for his amendment admoniſh or reprove our Neighbour, as in ſome caſes we are obliged to do?

5. We are not hence obliged to think ſo well of all men, as without competent knowledge always to rely upon their pretences, or to intruſt our intereſts in their hands; for common experience acquainteth us that we may be deceived in truſting men, prudence biddeth us in matters of importance not to confide in uncertainties; wherefore we ſhall not be culpable for being wary in ſuch caſes: this indeed is not a poſitive Judgment, but only a waving to declare in favour, when ſufficient ground of doing ſo doth not appear; it is only a reaſonable ſuſpecting the poſſibility of miſcarriage in ſome perſons, not a downright aſſerting ill concerning any one man; wherefore to do it as it ſuiteth diſcretion, ſo it doth not thwart Juſtice or Charity; and cannot therefore be prohibited here.

6. We are alſo not hence obliged, in contradiction to plain ſenſe, to judge well of men; accounting him for a Saint, or a good man, whom we ſee living diſorderly, or committing ſcandalous offences, plainly repugnant to the rules of Piety, Juſtice or Sobriety.

In fine, there are ſome ſpecial caſes and circumſtances wherein good men excuſably may in ſevere terms declare their reſentment of maniſeſt wickedneſs, eſpecially ſuch as is prejudicial to God's honour, and publick good. Of this there are divers inſtances, which yet hardly can be reduced to common rules, or propoſed for general example; the matter being tickliſh, and men being apt to pervert any liberty or pretence of this kind, by indulging to their own bad humours and paſſions.

Theſe ſorts of allowable Judgments being excepted, it is then private, affected, needleſs, groundleſs, raſh and harſh cenſuring the perſons or actions of our brethren; ſuch as doth reſemble not the acting of a lawful Superiour, of a needful Witneſs, of a faithful Friend, but of a Judge, acting without competent right, upon no good grounds, or in undue manner, which is here interdicted: the word Judging doth well imply the nature of this fault, the manner of our proceeding therein, the grounds of its unlawfulneſs; neither perhaps can we better underſtand our duty in this matter, than by expending what are the Properties and Obligations of a Judge, and comparing our practice thereto; for thence it may plainly appear how unqualified we are to bear this Office, and how unduly we execute it.

1. No Judge ſhould intrude himſelf into the Office, or aſſume a judicial Power without competent Authority; that is, by delegation from ſuperiour Powers, or by voluntary reference of the Parties concerned. This condition we fail in, when-ever without warrant from God, or ſpecial reaſon exacting it from us, we do pry into, ſcan and tax the actions of our Neighbour. When, I ſay, we are pragmatically inquiſitive into the purpoſes and proceedings of our Superiours, of our Equals, of thoſe who are not ſubject to our charge and care, when we narrowly examine them: When we peremptorily blame them, then do we unduly exalt our ſelves above them, and exerciſe an unwarrantable juriſdiction over them. What Senſe doth offer, we may receive in; what Judgment Reaſon doth extort, we may follow; what teſtimony publick Benefit requireth we may yield; what expreſſion Charity doth call for toward our Neighbour's edification, we may ſeaſonably vent: but if we proceed further in this way, the Party concerned may appeal from us as incompetent and unlawful Judges of his actions or his ſtate; we are arrogant and injurious in preſuming to exerciſe that Office. God is the Maſter and Judge of men, and without Authority from him, we muſt not preſume to judge his Servants and Subjects: So we are taught by S. Paul; Who (ſaith he) art thou that judgeſt another man's ſervant? to his own maſter he ſtandeth or falleth: and S. James in like manner, upon the ſame ground, expoſtulateth with the Cenſurer; There is (ſaith he) one Law-giver, who is able to ſave, or to deſtroy; Who art thou that judgeſt another? Our Lord himſelf for this reaſon declined intermedling in the affairs of men; Who (ſaid he) made me a judge or divider over you? And ſhall we conſtitute our ſelves in the Office, ſhall we ſeat our ſelves on the Tribunal, without any Commiſſion from God, or call from men? How many Judges, if this proviſo were obſerved, would have their Quietus? how many Cenſurers would be voided hence?

1 Pet. 4. 15.
1 Theſſ. 4. 11.
Prov. 27. 16.
1 Tim. 5. 13.

Quid in poteſtatem alienam irruis? quid temerarius Dei Tribunal aſcendis? Opt. lib. 2.

Rom. 14. 4.

Jam. 4. 11.

Luk. 12. 14.

2. A Judge ſhould be free from all Prejudices, and all partial Affections; eſpecially from thoſe which are diſadvantageous to the Party in danger to ſuffer; ſuch as tempt or incline to condemn him; from ill-opinion and ill-will, from anger, envy, revengefulneſs, contempt, and the like: for he that is poſſeſſed with theſe, is no-wiſe qualified to be a Judge; his eyes are blinded, or diſtorted, or infected with bad tinctures, ſo that he cannot diſcern what is right, or that he ſeeth things repreſented in the wrong place, and under falſe colours: His Mind is diſcompoſed and diſturbed, ſo that he cannot calmly and ſteddily apprehend or conſider the juſt ſtate of the Caſe; his Will is biaſſed, and ſtrongly propendeth one way, ſo that he cannot proceed uprightly in a ſtreight and even courſe: Being not indifferently affected, but concerned on one ſide, he is become a Party, or an Adverſary, and thence unfit to be a Judge; He hath determined the Cauſe with himſelf beforehand, ſo that no place is left to farther diſcuſſion or defence; wherefore before ſuch a Judge the beſt Cauſe will fall, the cleareſt Innocence Levit. 19. 15.

Jam. 2. 1.
Matt. 22. 16.
1 Tim. 5. 21.

ſhall not preſerve from condemnation. He therefore that will undertake this Office, muſt firſt deveſt himſelf of all Prejudices, muſt rid himſelf of all Paſſions, muſt purifie himſelf from all corrupt Inclinations, taking care not to come with a condemning mind, or a luſt to puniſh the obnoxious party; otherwiſe a juſt exception lieth againſt him, and reaſonably his Juriſdiction may be declined.

If this Rule were put in practice, there would be little cenſuring; for few come to it with a free and pure mind; few blame their Neighbours without ſome pre-occupation of Judgment, or ſome diſaffection toward them.

3. A Judge ſhould never proceed in Judgment, without careful examination Deut. 1. 16. of the Cauſe, ſo as well to underſtand it. Even thoſe, who out of indiſpenſible duty, or by a juſt power, may call others to accompt, are yet obliged to be wary, and never to paſs Sentence without due cognizance of the Cauſe; otherwiſe they will judge blindly and raſhly; they will either decide wrongly, or ſo truly, that doing it muſt be imputed not to their Vertue, but to their Fortune; often they will be miſtaken, and 'tis luck that they are not ſo always; and what plainer Iniquity can there be, than that the Reputation or real Intereſt of any man ſhould be put to the arbitrement of Chance; that he ſhould be defamed, or damnified, not for a certain Fault, but from an unhappy Lot? As things viewed at a diſtance appear much different in bigneſs, ſhape and colour, from what they are in nature and reality; ſo if we do not look nearly and narrowly, we ſhall greatly miſapprehend the nature, the degrees, the right characters of things, and of perſons; then be our pretence to judge never ſo fair, yet our proceeding is unjuſt; then if we do unduly invade the place, it will be a great aggravation of our miſdemeanour: If of our own head and pleaſure, we will conſtitute our ſelves Judges, yet at leaſt we ſhould act the Judge's part, in patiently attending to, and heedfully ſifting the Cauſe: If we have not a ſtomach to hear, if we will not afford the care to mind what may be alledged in favour of the Party concerned; if we cannot, or will not ſcan every point and circumſtance which may ſerve to acquit him, or to excuſe and extenuate his guilt, why do we undertake to be his Judges? Why do we engage our ſelves into the Commiſſion of ſo palpable Prov. 18. 13. injuſtice? yea, of ſo diſgraceful folly: for, He that anſwereth a matter before he heareth it, it is (ſaith the Wiſe-man) a folly, and ſhame unto him. This caution excludeth raſh Judgment, from which if men would abſtain, there would be little cenſuring: for nothing is more ordinary, than for men to do like thoſe of whom S. Jude ſaith, Jude. 10. Ὅσα ȣ̓κ οἴδασι βλασφημȣ̃σι, they rail at what they know not; they cenſure perſons with whom they are not throughly acquainted, they condemn actions whereof they do not clearly ken the reaſons; they little weigh the cauſes and circumſtances which urge or force men to do things; they ſtand at great diſtance, and yet with great aſſurance and peremptorineſs determine how things are, as if they did ſee through them, and knew them moſt exactly.

4. A Judge ſhould never pronounce final Sentence, but ex allegatis & probatis, upon good grounds, after certain proof, and upon full conviction. Not any ſlight conjecture, or thin ſurmiſe; any idle report, or weak pretence is ſufficient to ground a Condemnation upon: the Caſe ſhould be irrefragably clear and ſure before we determine on the worſe ſide: Judge not (ſaith our Lord) according to the appearance, but Judge righteous Judgment. The Jews, ſeeing our Lord cure an infirm perſon upon the Sabbath day, preſently upon that ſemblance condemned him of violating the Law; not conſidering either the ſenſe of the Law, or the nature of his performance; and this he termeth unrighteous Judgment. Every Accuſation ſhould be deemed null, until both as to matter of fact, and in point of right, it be firmly proved true; it ſufficeth not to preſume it may be ſo; to ſay, It ſeemeth thus, doth not ſound like the voice of a Judge; otherwiſe ſeeing there never is wanting ſome colour of accuſation, every Action being liable to ſome ſuſpicion, or ſiniſter conſtruction, no Innocence could be ſecure, no Perſon could eſcape condemnation; the Reputation and Intereſt of all men living would continually ſtand expoſed to inevitable danger. It is a Rule of equity and humanity, built upon plain reaſon, that rather a nocent perſon ſhould be permitted to eſcape, than an innocent ſhould be conſtrained to ſuffer: for the impunity of the one is but an inconvenience, the ſuffering of the other is wrong; the puniſhment of the guilty, yieldeth only a remote probable benefit; the affliction of the blameleſs, involveth a near certain miſchief: wherefore it is more prudent and more righteous to abſolve a man, of whoſe guilt there are probable arguments, than to condemn any man upon bare ſuſpicions. And remarkable it is how God in the Law did preſcribe the manner of Trial and Judgment, even in the higheſt Caſe, and moſt nearly touching himſelf, that of Idolatry; If (ſaith the Law, Deut. 17. 4.) it be told thee, and thou haſt heard of it, and enquired diligently, and behold it be true, and the thing certain, that ſuch an abomination is wrought in Iſrael; then ſhalt thou bring forth that man, or that woman, and ſhalt ſtone them: See what great caution is preſcribed, what pregnant evidence is required in ſuch caſes; it is not enough that it be reported, or come to our ear; diligent inquiry muſt be made, it muſt be found true, it muſt appear certain, before we may proceed to condemn, or execute; it is indeed not fair Judgment, but meer calumny, to condemn a man, before he doth by ſufficient proof appear guilty.

John 7. 24.
—— μὴ πρότερον τὰς ψήφους ἐκφέρειν, πρὶν ἂν ἐναργεῖς ἀποδείξεις γένωνται. Chryſ. in Gen. Hom. 42.

Quod probari non poteſt, mihi infectum eſt. Bern.

De occultis cordis alieni temerè judicare iniquum eſt, & cùm cujus non videntur opera niſi bona, peccatum eſt ex ſuſpicione reprehendere.
Joh. 3. 1. Ep. 1.

If this Rule were regarded, how many Cenſures would be prevented? For do not men catch at any ſhadow of a fault? are they not ready upon the leaſt preſumption to condemn their Neighbour? Doth not any, even the weakeſt and vaineſt teſtimony, any wandring hear-ſay, or vulgar rumour ſerve to ground the moſt heavy Sentences?

5. From hence is plainly conſequent, that there are divers Cauſes wholly exempted from our Judgment, and which in no caſe we muſt pretend to meddle with; ſuch as are the ſecret thoughts, affections and purpoſes of men, not expreſſed by plain words, nor declared by overt acts; for a capacity of judging, doth ever ſuppoſe a power of cognizance; and it being impoſſible for us to reach the knowledge of thoſe things, we cannot therefore pretend to judge of them. As it is the property of God to ſearch the Hearts, and try the Reins, ſo it is his Prerogative to judge concerning the ſecret motions in them; the which we attempting to do, no leſs vainly and fooliſhly, than preſumptuouſly and profanely do encroach upon.

This Point alſo being regarded, would prevent innumerable raſh Judgments; for men commonly do no leſs dive into the thoughts, and reprehend the inward diſpoſitions and deſigns of their Neighbour, than they do his moſt apparent and avowed actions; 'tis almoſt as ordinary to blame men for the inviſible workings of their mind, as for their moſt viſible deportment in converſation.

6. Hence alſo it is not commonly allowable to judge concerning the ſtate (either preſent or final) of our Neighbour in regard to God; ſo as to take him for a wicked man, or to denounce Reprobation upon him: for the ſtate of men is not ſo much determined by ſingle actions, as by a body of practice, or by a long Courſe and tenour of life, compounded and complicated of actions in number and kind unconceivably various, it dependeth not only upon external viſible Behaviour, but upon the practice of cloſe Retirements, and occult motions of Soul; upon the reſults of natural Temper, upon the influence of fortuitous Circumſtances; upon many things indiſcernible, inſcrutable and unaccomptable to us; the which God alone can perceive and eſtimate thoroughly: God ſeeth not (as he did himſelf tell Samuel) as man ſeeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart: He ſearcheth our hearts, and underſtandeth our thoughts afar off; He compaſſeth our path, and is acquainted with all our ways: He weigheth our ſpirits; he knoweth our frame; he numbreth our ſteps; he ſcanneth our deſigns, and poiſeth all our circumſtances exactly; he doth penetrate and conſider many things tranſcending our reach, upon which the true worth of perſons and real merit of actions do depend; he therefore only can well judge of mens ſtate. As a ſpecious outſide doth often cover inward hallowneſs and ſoulneſs, ſo under an unpromiſing appearance much ſolidity and ſincerity of goodneſs may lodge; a dirty ground doth often contain good ſeeds within it; our judgment therefore in ſuch caſes is likely (at leaſt in degree) to be fallacious and unjuſt; and therefore it is fit to superſede it, according to the advice and diſcourſe of S. Paul; He that judgeth me is the Lord; Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come; who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and make manifeſt the counſels of the heart; and then ſhall every man have praiſe (that is, a right eſtimate of his perſon and deeds) from God.

Πολλὰ δεῖ ϛρεβλῶσαι, καὶ παθεῖν, πρὶν ἄλλου κατα-γνῶναι δυσσέβειαν. Greg. Naz. Or. 26.

Pſal. 139. 6.

1 Sam. 16. 7.

Iſa. 11. 3.

Pſ. 139. 2, 3.

Prov. 16. 2.

1 Sam. 2, 3.

Pſal. 103. 14.

Job 14. 16.

1 Cor. 4. 5.

If this were duly conſidered, many hard thoughts, and many harſh words would be ſpared; men would not be ſo apt to damn thoſe, whom they have no skill to try.

7. Farther; A Judge ſhould not undertake to proceed againſt any man, without warning and citing him to appear, or without affording him competent liberty and opportunity to defend and juſtifie himſelf. Judgment ſhould not be adminiſter'd clancularly, in dark corners, but in open Court; not ſuſpiciouſly, in a muttering or whiſpering way; but frankly, with a clear and audible voice; not upon ſurprize, but with allowance of leiſure and advice, that the party may be able to apprehend his caſe, and manage his plea, for his beſt defence: for it may juſtly be preſumed, that as he is moſt concerned, ſo he is beſt acquainted with his own proceedings, and may alledge reaſons for them, which no man can ſo well perceive as himſelf; it is therefore fit that he ſhould be heard before he is condemned, that he may not ſuffer wrong; at leaſt that he may be convinced that he doth not, and that our proceeding may be cleared from miſpriſion; that alſo the world may be ſatisfied of Juſtice being done; and that likewiſe falſe accuſers may be liable to due ſhame and chaſtiſement. The manner of proceeding uſed by the Romans, and reported by Feſtus in S. Paul's caſe, was full of reaſon and equity: It is not (ſaid that Governour) the manner of the Romans to deliver a man to die, before that he, which is accuſed, have the Accuſers face to face, and have licence to anſwer for himſelf, concerning the Crime laid againſt him: Otherwiſe indeed any Innocence may eaſily be oppreſſed irrecoverably, without any defence, and conſequently without any means of evaſion or redreſs. We ſhould never yield both ears to the Accuſer, but reſerve one for the Accuſed. The end of Juſtice, we may conſider, is not to condemn nor to work miſchief to any one, but rather, ſo far as may be, to acquit and prevent evil to all; at leaſt it aimeth to clear the Truth, and ſtate the caſe indifferently; wherefore 'tis juſt, that all advantage that well can be, ſhould be afforded to the obnoxious party for his juſtification and deliverance; at leaſt that he be not denied equal advantage with his Proſecutours; Humanity would allow him ſome favour; the moſt rigorous Juſtice cannot refuſe him leave to conteſt his Cauſe upon equal terms: wherefore 'tis fit that he ſhould be acquainted with his Caſe, that competent time and means ſhould be afforded him to prepare for his Defence, that his Plea ſhould receive, if not a favourable, yet a free audience: the contrary practice is indeed rather backbiting, whiſpering, ſupplanting, or ſychophantry, than fair and lawful judging.

Acts 25. 16.

Χρὴ τοὺς ἐννόμως δικάζοντας τοῦ κατηγορουμένου θατέραν τοῖν ἀκοαῖν ἀκέραιαν φυλάξαι, &c. Theod. Ep. 91.

God himſelf (as ſome of the Fathers obſerve) hath ſhewed us an example of this equity, deſcendam igitur & videbo, &c. Gen. 18. 21.

Καίτοι σαφῶς ᾔδει τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐκείνων τὴν πονηρίαν. Ἀλλ' ὅμως ἔφη καταβὰς ὄψομαι, διδάσκων ἡμᾶς ἀναμένειν τῶν πραγμάτων τὴν πεῖραν. Theod. Ep. 119. P. Pelagius ad Eliam.

The obſervation of this rule would alſo cut off many Cenſures; for ſeldom it is that our Cenſurers do charge men to their faces, but rather take all poſſible care, that what they ſay may never come to the ears of thoſe whom they accuſe; they fear nothing more than being confronted, and detected; they decline the ſhame and the requital due to their ſycophantick practice; which is a manifeſt argument of their foul dealing; and they no leſs in reality do thence condemn themſelves, than they would ſeem to condemn others.

8. Moreover, a Judge is obliged to conform all his determinations to the ſettled rules of Judgment, ſo as never to condemn any man for acting that which is enjoyned, or approved, or permitted by them; he muſt not pronounce according to his private fancy, or particular affection, but according to the ſtanding Laws; which as they are the only certain rules of moral action, the only grounds of obligation, the only ſtandards of guilt and innocence, ſo in reaſon they ſhould be the ſole meaſures of Judging; he that proceedeth otherwiſe, is an arbitrary and a ſlippery Judge; he encroacheth upon the right and liberty of thoſe with whom he meddleth, pronouncing them guilty, whom God and reaſon do proclaim blameleſs. This is that which S. Paul doth reprove in the 14*th* to the Romans, and other-where; the caſe was this: ſome were of opinion, that abſtaining from ſome kinds of meat, and obſerving ſome feſtival times, were matters of duty required by God; others thought it free to eat any thing, and to uſe any times alike: theſe, according to ſuch their private opinions, did cenſure the practices of each other; one party condemned the other as tranſgreſſing Duty, the other contemned them as weak in Judgment; but the Apoſtle reproveth both as irregular in their behaviour, in taxing one another for matters which on both hands were indifferent; the Divine Law having clearly neither enjoined thoſe obſervances, nor prohibited them; ſo that each

Rom. 14.
1 Cor. 8. 8.
Col. 2. 16.

each man had a liberty to do, or to abſtain as he thought good, or moſt agreeable to his duty, and conducible to his Salvation: So is it culpable in us to blame any man for doing that which is not repugnant to God's expreſs command, or to the plain dictates of reaſon.

The obſerving this condition would ſmother many Cenſures: For do we not commonly reprehend our Neighbours for practices wholly blameleſs, perhaps commendable? Do we not ſometimes grievouſly reproach them for not complying with our deſires, for not ſerving our intereſts, for not jumping with our humours, for not dancing after our pipe; for diſſenting from us in any conceit, although dubious or falſe; for diſcoſting from our practice, although bad or inconvenient? Say we not ordinarily, he is moroſe, peeviſh, ſingular, rude, becauſe he would not run with us into the ſame exceſs of riot; he is weak, nice, ſuperſtitious, becauſe he conſtantly and ſtrictly adhereth to his duty; he is negligent, looſe, profane, becauſe he uſeth his liberty in ſome matters indifferent? Bar ſuch matters of obloquy, into how narrow a compaſs would it be reſtrained?

Ἕκαϛος κρίνει καλῶς ἃ γινώσκει, ϗ τούτων ἐϛὶν ἀγαθὸς κριτής. Ariſt. Eth. l. 3.

9. Hence farther it is to be ſuppoſed, that a Judge ſhould be a perſon of good knowledge and ability; well verſed and ſkilful in the Laws concerning matters under debate; endued with good meaſure of reaſon, enabling him as to ſift and canvas matters of Fact, ſo to compare them acurately with the rules of right: for nothing is more abſurd than an ignorant and unſkilful Judge. Men therefore of weak capacity, of mean education, of ſmall experience, are qualified to judge in few caſes, moſt things being placed above their reach; ſuch never ſhould preſume to cenſure actions, the worth or moral quality whereof, depend upon the ſtating and reſolution of abſtruſe, intricate or ſubtile queſtions: It is not therefore for Mechanicks or Ruſticks to judge about difficulties of Science, about Controverſies in Religion, about Myſteries of Policy, or Reaſons of State; or to cenſure thoſe who deal in them; in ſo doing they hugely treſpaſs beyond their Calling and Sphere; they do ſtrangely miſbecome the Bench, and will very untowardly miſbehave themſelves thereon; the deciſion of ſuch matters is to be reſerved to thoſe, who by ſtudy and experience have attained peculiar faculties to do it reſpectively.

Obſerving this point, would draw many down from their uſurped Seats of Judicature, and ſtop numberleſs vain ſentences; we ſhould have very few Judges left, if all men would be ſo modeſt and ſo wiſe, as not to meddle beyond their ſkill and ability.

Sine dubio in omnibus ſtatim accuſationibus hoc agendum eſt, nè ad eas libenter deſcendiſſe videamur Quint. 11. 1.

10. Again: It is proper for a Judge not to make himſelf an Accuſer; not to ſeek for miſdemeanours, not to draw more cauſes under his cognizance than are in courſe preſented before him: He ſhould rather judge as out of conſtraint, than of choice; rather as ſorry to find a neceſſity, than glad to ſnatch an occaſion of condemning Offenders. So ſhould we rather decline, than ſeek the office of cenſuring our Brethren, rather conniving at, and concealing their faults, than being forward to expoſe them; abſolute reaſon only ſhould induce, or indiſpenſable neceſſity force us thereto.

This alſo greatly would diminiſh the Trade of Cenſuring; for if we ſhould never cenſure without great reaſon or neceſſity, how ſeldom ſhould we do it? Do we not rather affect to do it cauſleſly and needleſly? do we not eagerly ſearch after, and greedily embrace all occaſions to do it? Is it not a pleaſant entertainment to us, to be carping and cavilling at any body we meet, at any thing we ſee done? Farther,

11. He that pretendeth to judge others ſhould himſelf be innocent; under no Indictment, and not liable to condemnation: Is it not very improper for a Criminal, for one who is not only in Truth and in his own Conſcience guilty, but who ſtandeth actually convicted of heinous Offences, to ſit upon the Bench, determining about the Deeds and the States of others? It is the caſe of us all, we are all notoriouſly guilty of heinous crimes before God, we all do lie under the Sentence of his Law; we do all ſtand in need of pardon from our Judge, his mercy is our only hope and refuge; and ſhall we then pretend to be Judges, or be paſſing Sentence on our Brethren? If only thoſe, who are free and guiltleſs ſhould judge, who could undertake it? there would ſurely be no more than there appeared then, when in the caſe of the woman taken in Adultery, our Lord propounded the like condition; Ὁ ἀναμάρτητος ὑμῶν, He that is without ſin among you, let him caſt the firſt ſtone at her: upon which Propoſition the ſequel was; and they which heard it, being convicted by their own conſcience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldeſt, even to the laſt; and Jeſus was left alone and the woman ſtanding in the midſt; ſo infallibly ſhould no man be allowed to judge, who were not himſelf void of like guilt, would every man eſcape cenſure.

Cum ipſe ſis reus, in alterum audes ferre ſententiam? Opt. 2.

Pſal. 143. 2.

Joh. 8. 7, 9.

12. Laſtly: It is the property of a good Judge to proceed with great moderation, equity, candour and mildneſs; as a general Friend, a Friend to Juſtice, to the Publick, to Mankind, to the Party impeached: As a Friend to Juſtice, he ſhould be careful that the Defendant receive no wrong in his Credit, or intereſt; as a lover of the Publick, he ſhould wiſh that no Offences or Scandals be found; out of humanity he ſhould deſire, that no man may incur the blemiſh of guilt, or pain of ſuffering; he ſhould tender the parties caſe as compaſſionable, and deſire that he may be delivered from the evil threatning him; this ſhould render him willing to acquit and free the party, apt to apprehend and interpret all things favourably, ready to excuſe and mollifie the buſineſs what he can; far from picking faults out of obſcure ſurmiſes, or ſlender pretences, from aggravating the miſcarriages that are detected, from ſtretching the blame farther than it will reach of it ſelf, or making the caſe worſe than it needs muſt be, from pronouncing a harſh or heavy ſentence thereon. He ſhould always be of Counſel to the Defendant, pleading his Cauſe ſo far as truth and equity will permit; putting himſelf in his caſe, and thence no-wiſe dealing with him more rigorouſly, than he, according to impartial judgment, ſhould in the like caſe deem it equal that himſelf ſhould be dealt with: in fine, however the matter in the reſult appear to ſtand, he ſhould avoid rigour and extremity, he ſhould exerciſe clemency and mercy.

If this courſe were obſerved, innumerable Cauſes, which now are ſeverely judged, would never be mentioned, or come under trial, but would preſently be caſt out; many would ſoon, after ſmall diſcuſſion, be voided; few would paſs that extremity of cenſure, which now by the cruel aſperity of men, they are forced to undergo: For do we not accuſe men for things that are no faults; do we not exaggerate the guilt of petty faults; do we not inſult over great miſcarriages with too unmerciful ſeverity? as if they were incorrigible and unpardonable.

Seeing then few of us, according to thoſe reaſonable qualifications and conditions, are capable of being Judges; ſeeing if thoſe equal rules were obſerved, moſt Cenſures would be diſcarded; ſeeing hard it is for any man either warrantably to undertake, or uprightly to diſcharge this Office; great reaſon there is for this precept, moſt fit it is that we ſhould be forbidden to judge.

So much for the part explicative and directive, now for the perſuaſive, and for inducing us to eſchew this practice, let us briefly declare the pravity and vanity of it; the performing which, will, I ſuppoſe be ſufficient to diſſwade and deterr us from it. Be pleaſed only firſt to note that ſome Conſiderations which we ſhall propound, will be applicable to ſome kind of bad cenſure, ſome to another, according to the ſeveral defects and incapacities we have to judge lawfully, upon the grounds already touched.

1. Cenſuring is an impious practice in regard to God.

By taking upon our ſelves to judge unduly, without authority, or beyond it, we do invade God's Office, ſetting up our ſelves as Judges in his room; we uſurp his right, exerciſing juriſdiction over his Subjects, Rom. 14. 4. without order and licence from him: 'tis S. Paul's argument, Who art thou that judgeſt another's ſervant? that is, how intollerably bold and arrogant, how ſacrilegiouſly injurious and profane art thou, to climb up into God's Tribunal, and thence to pronounce doom upon his Subjects?

By raſh judgment in matters not ſubject to our cognizance, (as when we pronounce concerning the ſecret thoughts and intentions of men) we proudly and perverſly do arrogate to our ſelves the incommunicable perfections of God, who alone can know ſuch things, and determine rightly in ſuch caſes; who therefore hath reſerved them to himſelf, 1 Cor. 4. 5. commanding us to judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come.

By paſſing Sentence about the State of our Neighbour, we do anticipate God's Judgment, and by prejudging ſtrive to fruſtrate it. We Matt. 3. 12, 13. & 25. 32. take upon us to purge his Floor, to ſever the Chaff from the Corn, and the Tares from the Wheat, to diſcriminate the Goats from the Sheep; which to perform, will be the work of God's infinite Wiſdom and Juſtice at the great day.

Quantus arrogantiæ tumor eſt, quanta humilitatis ac lenitatis oblivio, arrogantiæ ſuæ quanta jactatio, at quis aut facere ſe poſſe credat, quod nec Apoſtolis conceſſit Dominus, ut zizania à frumento putet ſe poſſe diſcernere, aut quaſi ipſi paleam auferre, & aream purgare conceſſum ſit, paleas conetur à tritico ſeparare? Cypr. Ep. 52.

By cenſuring our Brethren cauſleſly, for not complying with our conceits, humours or practices, we lay hold upon, and appropriate to our ſelves God's Legiſlative Power; we ſubject his law to our fancy and pleaſure; we in effect condemn his law of error and imperfection; we do at leaſt make our ſelves ſharers with him in the enacting Laws, Jam. 4. 11. and diſpenſing Juſtice: He (ſaith S. James) that ſpeaketh againſt his Brother, and judgeth his Brother, ſpeaketh againſt the Law, and judgeth the Law; that is, he opprobriouſly doth imply the Law to be defective, until he doth compleat or correct it; making it a guilt not to ſatisfie his will or conceit, beſide the plain intent of the Law; the diſpenſation of Juſtice is not ſufficient, unleſs he partake therein, taxing whom and why he pleaſeth; God without him is not a perfect Law-giver, or Judge.

We are alſo very ingrateful in not being favourable towards our Brethren in Judgment; when as God is in his Judgment ſo benign, patient and merciful toward us, who is not extreme to mark what we do amiſs; is not forward to ſeek or find faults, but rather waiteth to be gracious, hideth his face from our ſins, and paſſeth by our tranſgreſſions; doth not aggravate our offences, but rather doth excuſe them, remembring that we are fleſh; is not glad of occaſion to puniſh, but delighteth in mercy,

Pſal. 130. 3.
Iſa. 30. 18.
Pſal. 51. 9.
Mich. 7. 18.
Pſal. 78. 39. & 103. 14.
Mich. 7. 18.

mercy, and doth not afflict willingly, or grieve the children of men; is not ſevere, but puniſheth us leſs than our iniquities deſerve, and in his wrath remembreth mercy. And are we not impious if we do ſo ill requite him, and ſo little reſemble him, in being rigorous and harſh toward our Brethren, when they offend, or ſeem to do ſo?

Lam. 3. 33.
Ezr. 9. 13.
Hab. 3. 2.

In fine, Cenſuring is impious, as involving the violation of thoſe great Commandments, of exerciſing (in all our demeanour and dealing) humility, meekneſs, pity and mercy toward our Brethren; of purſuing and promoting peace among them.

2. Cenſuring, in reſpect to our Neighbour, is an unjuſt practice. It is unjuſt to meddle in affairs with which we have nothing to do; to draw thoſe perſons under our Juriſdiction who are not ſubject to it, but are liable to render their accompt at another Bar; to puniſh thoſe in their reputation or intereſt, over whom we have no juſt authority, Who have their own maſter, to whom they muſt ſtand or fall.

'Tis moſt unjuſt to judg any man without competent means of knowing, or skill to determine his Caſe; to condemn him without diligent Trial, without certain proof, without full conviction of his fault; to puniſh him without juſt cauſe, or beyond due meaſure.

'Tis very unjuſt to uſurp an intereſt in the Goods which are to our Neighbour moſt proper and dear, his credit and concernments depend thereon, diſpoſing of them as we pleaſe, to his diſadvantage and prejudice.

'Tis alſo very unjuſt, when as we do need the candid Judgment the forbearance and pardon of others for many things faulty and offenſive that we commit, to refuſe the like to others.

----æquum eſt Peccatis veniam poſcentem reddere rurſus. Hor. Serm. 1. 3.
Det ille veniam facilè, cui veniâ eſt opus. Sen. Tr.

3. Cenſuring is alſo a very uncharitable practice, and ſo contrary to the principal duty of our Religion; it is ſo eminently in all caſes wherein it is unjuſt, (for Charity doth virtually contain Juſtice, and tranſcendeth it) it is ſo peculiarly when-ever it is harſh or rigorous, when it is affected, when it is needleſs or unprofitable; for Charity diſpoſeth us to be gentle, meek, patient and merciful in all our dealings; it engageth us to hide and ſmother, to diminiſh and excuſe, to paſs by and pardon Offences: Charity ſeeketh no evil, it covereth all things, it beareth all things; it tendreth our Neighbour's good, and advantage of all kinds, (his credit, his intereſt, his convenience and pleaſure) it therefore will inflict no more evil, than reaſon and neceſſity ſhall indiſpenſably require.

1 Cor. 13. 5, 7.

οὕτως ἔχω ἐν τοῖς ἀμφιβόλοις, νεύειν χρῆναι πρὸς τὸ φιλάνθρωπον, καὶ ἀπογινώσκειν μᾶλλον, ἢ καταγινώσκειν τῶν ὑπαιτίων. Naz. Or. 21.

A Cenſurer is indeed unjuſt and uncharitable, not only toward thoſe whom he cenſureth, but alſo toward thoſe into whom thereby he doth infuſe ill-opinion, and ill-will toward their Neighbour; he is guilty of their injuſtice and uncharitableneſs, a miſchief more irreparable than his own.

4. Cenſuring is a very fooliſh and vain practice in manifold reſpects; as arguing great ignorance and inconſiderateneſs, as producing grievous inconveniences and miſchiefs, eſpecially to the practiſer of it.

Eſt proprium ſtultitiæ aliorum vitia cernere, obliviſci ſuorum. Cic. Tuſc. 1.

'It ſignifieth that we do not well underſtand, or not well conſider the natural impotency and frailty of mankind; how liable others are to miſtake and ſlip, and how prone we our ſelves are thereto; how (as S. James ſaith) in many things we offend all; did we obſerve or would weigh this, we ſhould not be ſo forward to cenſure, or ſo vehement and bitter in it; we ſhould ſee failing and tripping in many things to be a common caſe, rather demanding commiſeration than cenſure.

Jam. 3. 2.

It implieth alſo, that we little conſider how our eſcaping any faults, which our Neighbour ſlippeth into, is no wiſe imputable to any worth or vertue in us, ſo much as the good Providence, and merciful Grace of God, guarding or reſcuing us from them; if we did apprehend and reflect on this, it would appear our duty rather to bleſs God for our being protected from miſcarriages, than cenſoriouſly to inſult over thoſe who ſeem to fall into them. It ſignifieth we have no ſight or ſenſe of our own defects; for did we clearly ſee, did we humbly reſent them, that would damp our heat and earneſtneſs to cenſure. It declares a fond ſelf-conceit, that we deem our ſelves ſuperiour to our Neighbour in wiſdom, and leſs obnoxious to blame, and therefore fit to be his Judges; whereas according to a ſober eſteem of our ſelves, we ſhould appear more fit to ſtand at the Bar, than to ſit upon the Bench; and ſhould thence more dread the one than affect the other.

It ſheweth likewiſe, that we do not rightly conceive the nature, or worthily eſteem the Conſequences of this practice: We know not,or regard not, the value of our Neighbour's Reputation, which by cenſure we do mean to ruine or impair: We perhaps by no means would rob him of his ſubſtance, or of his Life; yet we ſcruple not by grievous cenſure to bereave him of his good name; which he, the beſt prizer of his own goods, may eſteem beyond his eſtate, or his life it ſelf; we think it nothing, or a ſlight matter to carp at him, but he feeleth it very painful and deeply reſenteth it.

It argueth in us an untamed fierceneſs of mind, and diſcompoſedneſs of paſſion which can never conſiſt or cohabit with Wiſedom; for a well-ordered, calm and free mind, will be ſlow in conceiving offence or diſlike, moderate in eſtimating things, reſerved in expreſſing its ſentiments, not eaſily tranſported into extremity or exceſs; it conſequently hardly will ſuffer a man to break forth into raſh or harſh cenſure. So many ſigns and arguments of incogitancy and blindneſs this practice doth involve.

Prov. 12. 16. A Fools wrath is preſently known; but a prudent man covereth ſhame.

Prov. 29. 11. A fool uttereth all his mind; but a wiſe man keepeth it till afterwards.

5. Furthermore, this practice will produce many great inconveniences and miſchiefs to us.

—at tibi contrà Evenit, inquirant vitia ut tua rurſus, & illi. Hor. Serm. l. 3.

1. We do thereby provoke, and in a ſort authorize others to requite us in the ſame kind: for nothing more doth excite the indignation, doth enflame the anger, doth engender the hatred of men toward us, than being pragmatical in finding fault, and haſty to cenſure their doings cauſleſly or immoderately; nothing ſeeming to them a more certain argument that we bear them ill-will, or do contemn them; and if we ſo vex them, they will in requital be as ready by finding or making faults in us, to vex and trouble us; it engageth their care, and quickneth their induſtry, and whetteth their invention to obſerve, or deviſe matter of recrimination. Men think it not only lawful, but even needful for them, in their own defence,to diſparage the Cenſurer, that his judgment may have the leſs weight to their prejudice: So that it will infallibly come upon us, as our Lord warneth (uſing it as an argument to diſſuade us from this practice) that, with what judgment we judge, we ſhall be judged; and with what meaſure we mete, it ſhall be meaſured to us, again: Men take it for allowable to retaliate in this way to the height, and ſtoutly to load the cenſorious man with cenſure.

Matt. 7. 2. Luk. 6. 37, 38.

2. We do by this practice, not only expoſe our ſelves to cenſure, but implicitly, and according to ready conſequence, do paſs it upon our ſeves, ſeeing we ſeldom, in kind or equivolently, are our ſelves clear of

Vid. Chryſ. in Matt. Or. 36. p. 249.

of that which we charge upon others; with our own Weapon of ſharp cenſure, we through another's ſide do imprudently wound our ſelves; and often, as David did in his parley with Nathan, adjudge our ſelves to capital puniſhment; ſo that to any cenſorious perſon, it may be ſaid, in S. Paul's words, Wherein thou judgeſt another, thou condemneſt thy ſelf; for thou that judgeſt, doſt the ſame things.

2 Sam. 12.

Rom. 2. 1.

3. We do by cenſuring others aggravate our own faults, and deprive them of excuſe, and render our ſelves uncapable of mercy and pardon: for of all men, he that is forward and prone to cenſure, who is rigorous and ſevere in judging others, deſerveth no favour, nor can reaſonably pretend thereto. Inexcuſable (ſaith S. Paul) art thou, O man, whoſoever thou art that judgeſt; for, thinkeſt thou this, O man, that judgeſt them which do ſuch things, and doeſt the ſame, that thou ſhalt eſcape the judgment of God? and, Μὴ στενάζετε κατ' ἀλλήλων. Do not (ſaith S. James) moanfully complain one againſt another, leſt you be condemned; and he ſhall have Judgment without mercy, that hath ſhewed no mercy, in his judgment, ſaith the ſame Apoſtle. Which paſſages imply, that to be unmerciful in this kind, will expoſe us to the ſeverity of judgment in regard to our offences; or that if we deal harſhly with our Brethren now, God will then proceed the more ſeverely toward us, when our great cauſe doth come under trial.

Ὁ πικρῶς τὰ ἀλλότρια ἐξετάζων ἐν τοῖς καθ' ἑαυτὸν πλημμελήμασιν οὐδεμιᾶς ἀπολαῦσαι συγγνώμης ποτέ. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. γ'.

Rom. 2. 1. 3.

—ἀνθρώπων οἱ πλεῖστοι βραδεῖς μὲν εἰσι τῶν ἰδίων κριταὶ, ταχεῖς δὲ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων ἐξετασταί. Naz. Or. 26. Οὕτω τῶν μὲν ἑτέροις ἁμαρτανομένων πικροὶ καθήμεθα δικασταὶ, τὰς δὲ ἑαυτῶν δοκοὺς παρορῶμεν. Chryſ. ad Demet. Tom. 6. Or. 52.

Jam. 5. 9. & 2. 13.

Οὐδὲ γὰρ ἀπὸ τῆς φύσεως τῶν πεπλημμελημένων ἡμῖν μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς κρίσεως τῆς σῆς περὶ ἑτέρων οἴσει τὴν ψῆφον ὁ Θεός. Chryſ. Ibid. Ὥσπερ γὰρ ὁ φιλάνθρωπος, καὶ ἥμερος, καὶ συγγνωμονικὸς ὑποτέμνεται τὸν πλείονα τῶν ἁμαρτημάτων ὄγκον, οὕτως ὁ πικρὸς, καὶ ὠμὸς, καὶ ἀπαραίτητος πολὺ τοῖς οἰκείοις ἁμαρτήμασι προστίθησι μέγεθος. Ibid.

4. Indeed cenſuring others is an argument that we do little mind our own caſe, or conſider to what a dreadful Judgment we do ſtand obnoxious: did we think of that we ſhould ſee cauſe rather to employ our leiſure and care in ſtating our own accompts, than in examining thoſe of others; more adviſeable it would appear to mind our own caſe, than to buſie our ſelves in canvaſing and determining the ſtate of our Neighbour, finding what great need our actions will have in that day of favourable conſtruction and merciful allowance, we ſhould become candid and mild in reflecting upon the actions of others; we ſhould not be forward to carp at any thing, we ſhould ſcarce have the heart to condemn any man; this S. Paul ſeemeth to imply, when he thus argueth: Why doſt thou judge thy brother, or why doſt thou ſet at nought thy brother? We ſhall all ſtand at the judgment ſeat of Chriſt: that is, why do any of us judge others, ſeeing we muſt all be judged our ſelves? It is not ſeemly, it is not expedient for thoſe, who ſoon muſt be arraigned, and put to anſwer for themſelves, to be buſie in queſtioning and prejudging others; but rather to ſpend their care and pains in preparing for their own accompt.

Rom. 14. 10.

Τὰ ἡμέτερα ἐξετάζωμεν, καὶ οὐδένα ἐροῦμεν κακῶς. Chryſ. in 2 Tim. Or. 2.

5. Nothing indeed more cauſeth us to neglect our own caſe, nothing more engageth us to leave our own faults unobſerved and uncorrected, than this humour. It is eaſie to obſerve, that as they who are moſt ſparing and gentle in cenſure, are uſually moſt exempt from blame (for that careſully reflecting upon their own infirmities and defects, ſpending their heat and activity of ſpirit upon amending their own errours and faults, they have leſs time, leſs concernment, leſs mind to ſearch out and ſcan the imperfections and miſdemeanours of others; they do find leſs reaſon alſo, and therefore have leſs will to be fierce or ſevere toward them) ſo the moſt cenſorious are uſually the moſt ſtupid in diſcerning, and moſt careleſs in retrenching their own faults. And needs it muſt be ſo, for the actions of other men devour their leiſure, take up the intention of their ſpirits, employ the keeneſs of their Paſſions upon them, ſo that they cannot, and will not attend to themſelves; they are ſo much abroad, they are ſo very buſie otherwhere, that they little know, or care what is done at home; while they are ſpying and pulling out motes from their Brothers eye, they conſider not the beam that is in their own eye, although never ſo groſs and obvious.

Οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἄνθρωπον κατηγοροῦντα καὶ τοὺς ἀλλοτρίους πολυπραγμονοῦντα βίους τῆς ἰδίας ἐπιμεληθῆναί ποτε ζωῆς. Τῆς γὰρ σπουδῆς ἁπάσης αὐτῷ εἰς τὴν ἑτέρων πολυπραγμοσύνην ἀναλισκομένης, ἀνάγκη τὰ αὐτοῦ πάντα ἁπλῶς κεῖσθαι καὶ ἠμελημένως. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. γ'.

6. Hence, I ſay, it is that commonly the beſt men are the moſt candid and gentle, and they are moſt apt to blame others who deſerve worſe themſelves, that the ſharpeſt tongues and fouleſt lives do uſually go together, that they who are the ſtricteſt Judges of their own are the faireſt interpreters of other mens actions; and they who will leaſt pardon others do moſt excuſe themſelves, that they who are ſtrangely acute in deſcrying other mens faults are ſtark blind in diſcerning their own. Our Saviour therefore chargeth ſuch perſons with hypocriſie, (Thou hypocrite; firſt caſt the beam out of thine own eye) implying, that they do but falſly pretend a reſpect for goodneſs and zeal againſt ſin, ſeeing in their own practice they indulge it; that it is indeed rather pride, peeviſhneſs, idleneſs, ſpleen, or ſelfiſh deſign that acteth them.

7. In fine, the cenſorious humour, as it argueth ill nature to be predominant, (a vulturous nature, which eaſily ſmelleth out, and haſtily flyeth toward, and greedily feedeth on Carrion) as it ſignifieth bad Conſcience; for he that knoweth evil of himſelf is moſt prone to ſuſpect, and moſt quick to pronounce ill concerning others, ſo it breedeth and foſtereth ſuch ill diſpoſitions; it debaucheth the minds of men, rendring them dim and doltiſh in apprehending their own faults, negligent and heedleſs in regard to their own hearts and ways; apt to pleaſe and comfort themſelves in the evils, real or imaginary, of their Neighbours; which to do, is a very barbarous and brutiſh practice.

Theſe Conſiderations may, I hope, ſuffice to perſuade the obſervance of this precept, by the help of God's Grace, to which I commend you, and conclude.

Now the God of peace---make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight, through Jeſus Chriſt, to whom be glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

Vide Chryſ. Tom. 2. Or. 42. Sen. de Vit. B. 27. Βραδὺ εἰς ὑπόνοιαν κακοῦ τὸ πρὸς κακίαν δυσκίνητον. Naz. Orat. 8.

* Matt. 7. 3, 4. Τὸ κακίας ἐλεύθερον, καὶ ὑφορᾶται κακίαν ἀλλότριον, N. Ep. 27. Ὁ μὲν γὰρ κακὸς τάχιστα ἂν καταγνοίη καὶ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ, ὁ ἀγαθὸς δὲ οὐδὲ τοῦ κακοῦ ῥᾳδίως. Naz. Orat. 21. Ego mi ignoſco, Mænius inquit, Stultus & improbus hic amor eſt, dignúſque notari Hor. Serm. l. 3.

SER-

SERMON XXI.

Of Quietneſs, and doing our own Buſineſs.

1 THESS. 4. 11.

And that ye ſtudy to be quiet, and to do your own Buſineſs. Chryſ. in 2 Cor. Or. 19.

AS frequently between neighbouring States there do riſe Diſſentions and Conteſts about the juſt limits of their Territories; ſo doth it frequently happen between Vertue and Vice, Right and Wrong, Duty and Miſcarriage in Practice; for although the extreme degrees, and even the middle regions of theſe things are very diſtant, yet the borders of them do lie very cloſe together, and are in a manner contiguous; a certain ridge of ſeparation running between them, which commonly (being very narrow, thin and obſcure) it is not eaſie to diſcern. So it particularly falleth out in the matter before us, wherein our Text is concerned. Duty and Offence do nearly confine, and almoſt indiſcernibly differ one from the other; for there are about this Caſe Precepts which ſeem to contradict; there are Duties appearing to thwart one another.

S. Paul here biddeth us to be ſtudious or ambitious of quiet; otherwhere he enjoyneth us to be earneſtly active, (to be σπουδῇ μὴ ὀκνηροὶ Rom. 12. 11. not ſlothful in buſineſs;) Here he would have us to mind our own Affairs; otherwhere he preſcribeth, that we ſhould not look every man to Phil. 2. 4. his own things, but every man alſo to the things of others.

According to the general drift of Scripture, and the tenour of our Religion, we are in Charity obliged to concern our ſelves heartily for the good of our Neighbour, and to ſtrive earneſtly in promoting it; we are enjoined ſo far to interpoſe and meddle in the Affairs of others, as to watch over them for their good; to inſtruct and adviſe them, to admoniſh and excite them, to check and reprove them upon occaſion; to offer and yield them ſuccour, to compoſe Differences between them; to promote their Edification and Peace; Let us (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) conſider one another, to provoke unto love, and to good Κατανοῶμεν ἀλλήλους. works. Heb. 10. 24. Let us (ſaith S. Paul to the Romans) follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edifie another; and, Rom. 14. 19. & 15. 2. exhort your ſelves together, and edifie one another; warn them that are 1 Theſſ. 5. 11. unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, ſupport the weak, ſaith he to the Theſſalonians in this Epiſtle. 14.

To be zealous and earneſt in the maintenance and propagation of Truth, of Vertue, of Piety, is a Duty incumbent on us, which implieth care and activity concerning others; that we offer to inſtruct them; that we enter into conteſt with them; that we examine their Tit. 1. 11. words and actions; that we preſume to tax and oppoſe them;

In fine; Our Religion doth ſeem by the bands of mutual Relation, and obligations of Charity ſo to unite us together, ſo to endear us to one another, and to all men; that all things belonging to our Brethren do nearly touch us, and ſhould anſwerably affect us; ſo that by intermedling with any thing relating to their welfare, we can hardly be ſaid to meddle with what doth not concern us.

The condition of things alſo may ſeem to require, that we ſo intermeddle; for the Duties and Affairs of Men are ſo entangled or intewoven, that we can hardly proſecute any Concernments of our own, without being engaged in the matters of others: in diſcharging all Offices of Society, in purſuance of any Traffick or Commerce, in all entercourſe and converſation, while we tranſact our own buſineſs, we cannot avoid the furthering or obſtructing the buſineſs of others, who are engaged in the ſame, or contrary Deſigns: Society doth ſubſiſt by combinations of care and pain, regarding common Intereſts, ſo that it ſeemeth impoſſible ſo to mind our own buſineſs, as not to meddle with the buſineſs of others.

Yet notwithſtanding S. Paul injoyneth us ſo to affect Quiet, as ſimply to mind our own buſineſs, or not to be meddleſome in the concernments of others; for that doing our own buſineſs, is meant excluſive to medling with the affairs of others is plain enough, by the importance of τὰ ἴδια, which is emphatical, and ſignifieth only our own, or our proper buſineſs; and becauſe it is joined with being quiet, which reſpecteth others, and importeth not ſtirring beyond our own bounds; to be ſo meddleſome, being alſo a practice expreſly condemned by S. Peter, 1 Pet. 4. 16. in that prohibition, But let none of you ſuffer as a murtherer, or as a thief, or as a malefactour, or as a buſie-body in other mens matters; where Pragmaticalneſs is we ſee not only forbidden, but is coupled with the moſt heinous Offences.

How then ſhall we reconcile theſe things? how ſhall we in the caſe ſever between the bounds of Duty and Blame? It is indeed ſomewhat difficult to do it preciſely, and with diſtinctions which ſhall reach all caſes: But ſomewhat I ſhall endeavour toward it, by propounding ſome Rules and Directions, which ſhould commonly be obſerved in our dealing and entercourſe with others; but firſt let us a little reflect upon the terms in which the Precept is couched.

Study to be quiet: Study; the word is φιλοτιμεῖσθαι, which ſignifieth to be ambitious, that is, to affect quiet with the like vehemency of deſire and care, as men are wont to purſue Reputation, Dignity and Power, the Objects of Ambition: the Expreſſion containeth a remarkable emphaſis, or a grave acumen; for whereas Ambition commonly doth prompt men to be reſtleſly buſie, and engageth them in the concernments proper to others, S. Paul biddeth them to be ambitious the contrary way, in affecting quiet, and abſtinence from other affairs beſide their own.

To be quiet; This doth ſignifie not a phyſical, but a moral Reſt; not a total forbearance of action; not a faſtidious or drowſie liſtleſneſs to do any thing; not a ſenſleſs indifferency concerning the matters of others; not an abſolute ſequeſtring our ſelves from common affairs; this is not quiet or tranquility, the τὸ ἡσυχάζειν here, but a naughty ſloth, ſtupidity or ſavageneſs; the Quiet here meant is oppoſed to diſorderly motion, to turbulency, to contention, to pragmatical curioſity, to all ſuch exorbitant behaviour, whereby the Right of others is infringed, their Peace diſturbed, their juſt Intereſt or Welfare any-wiſe prejudiced;

This Quiet is a calm, ſteady, regular way of proceeding, within the bounds and meaſures preſcribed by reaſon, juſtice and charity, modeſty and ſobriety; ſuch a motion as the Heavenly Bodies do keep, which ſo move that they ſeem ever to ſtand ſtill, and never diſturb one another; in fine, what a Quiet is meant, the ſubſequent words and the context do ſhew; it followeth.

And πράσσειν τὰ ἴδια, to do our own buſineſs, or to act things proper and pertinent to us; things which ſute to our condition, our ſtation, our vocation; whereby we may diſcharge our own duties and ſupply our own needs; may work benefit to others, or however avoid being any-wiſe burthenſome or troubleſome to them; an inſtance of which practice is immediately ſubjoined; to work with our own hands — that we may have lack of nothing; in another place St. Paul calleth it μετ᾽ ἡσυχίας ἐργάζεσθαι, to work with quiet, oppoſing it to περιεργάζεσθαι, being over-buſie, or pragmatically curious, and to walking diſorderly; that is, beyond the bounds of our calling, or the rules of our duty; ſo as to encroach upon the rights, or moleſt the quiet of others. 1 Theſ. 3. 12.

The words then as they do imply an Obligation lying upon us to be induſtrious in our own buſineſs, ſo they chiefly deſign to prohibit our medling with the concernments of others; but how to ſettle the limits between this quiet minding our own buſineſs, and a culpable neglect of the duties concerning others; how to diſtinguiſh between medling innocently, from being blameably meddleſome, hic labor, hoc opus eſt; this is that hard task which I am to undertake, but cannot hope thoroughly to perform. However the method toward it, which I ſhall obſerve, is this: Firſt, I ſhall touch ſome caſes in which it is allowable or commendable to meddle with the affairs of others; then I ſhall propound ſome general rules, according to which ſuch meddleſomeneſs is commonly blameable: In the next place, I ſhall aſſign ſome directions proper to ſome chief and moſt obvious kinds of medling; and laſtly, offer ſome conſiderations to diſſuade men from this pragmatical humour.

1. Superiours may intermeddle with the buſineſs of their Inferiours, (that is, of ſuch as are ſubject to their care and charge) in all matters relating to the needful execution of their Office. Magiſtrates may inſpect the carriage, may examine the doings, may reprehend and puniſh the offences of their Subjects: Parents may adviſe, rebuke and correct their Children: Spiritual Guides and Paſtours may admoniſh and reprove their Flock: Theſe things while (with due prudence, equity and moderation) they perform, they do indeed πράσσειν τὰ ἴδια, do their own buſineſs; it is their proper work, to which God hath deſigned them, and which reaſon exacteth of them; they are appointed (to uſe St. Paul's expreſſion) to attend continually upon this very thing; their proceedings therefore are not to be charged with culpable pragmaticalneſs. I. Rom. 13. 6.

2. In any caſe, wherein the Honour and Intereſt of God is much concerned, we may interpoſe in vindication and maintenance of them. If any man dareth to blaſpheme God's name, we may and ought to ſtand up in its defence; if any man diſparageth Religion, we ſhould ſtrive to clear its repute; if any man impugneth any Divine truth of moment, we ſhould endeavour to aſſert it; if any man notoriouſly tranſgreſſeth God's law, we may diſcountenance his preſumption, and reprove him for it: Every man in ſuch caſes, as God's ſubject, hath not only a Commiſſion, but an Obligation; is indeed by his Allegiance bound to ſerve God, in maintaining the honour and intereſt of his Empire; 'tis foul diſloyalty, Κοινόν ἐστι τὸ ἔγκλημα, δημόσιον τὸ ἀδίκημα· ἔξεστιν ἑκάστῳ τῶν βουλομένων κατηγορεῖν. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. α´.

Κἂν ἀκούσῃς τινὸς ἐν ἀμφόδῳ, ἢ ἐν ἀγορᾷ μέσῃ βλασφημοῦντος τὸν Θεόν, πρόσελθε, ἐπιτίμησον, κἂν πληγὰς ἐπιθεῖναι δέῃ, μὴ παραιτήσῃ· ῥάπισον αὐτοῦ τὴν ὄψιν, σύντριψον αὐτοῦ τὸ στόμα, ἁγίασόν σου τὴν χεῖρα διὰ τῆς πληγῆς, &c. Chryſ. Ibid.

'tis pitiful baſeneſs to forbear medling in ſuch caſes. Thus have good men, without fear or ſhame, defended Religion and Truth, againſt the mightieſt Powers and moſt dangerous oppoſition that could be; Thus ſtood up Phineas and executed judgment, Pſal. 106.30. not only checking, but avenging that heinous ſcandal: Thus Elias maintained the true Worſhip of God againſt all the Corrupters of it, the Kings and whole Nation of Iſrael: Thus the Prophets did not forbear to tax the wicked manners of the Princes, the Prieſts, and the People in their times: Thus St. John Baptiſt did not ſtick to reprove K. Herod for his unlawful practice: So our Saviour cenſured the ſuperſtitious and hypocritical Scribes, and he chaſtiſed the profaners of God's houſe: So, in fine, the Holy Apoſtles reſolutely did aſſert God's truth againſt all the World.

Terull.

3. When the publick Weal and Safety are manifeſtly concerned, we may alſo intermeddle to ſupport or ſecure them: So may we rebuke him that ſlandereth or reproacheth our Prince; we may check him that would break the Peace; we may impeach him that violateth the Laws, conducing to publick welfare: Every man is a Soldier againſt Traytors and Enemies of his Country: Every man is born with a Commiſſion to defend the Publick againſt thoſe which plot its ruin or harm: Every man is a party for his Prince againſt Rebels, for the Church againſt Schiſmaticks, for the Law againſt lawleſs Tranſgreſſors, for common Peace againſt thoſe who outragiouſly diſturb it: Duty to our Superiors, Juſtice and Charity to mankind, juſt regard to our own welfare, allow and oblige us to ſuch medling.

Act. 7. 24.
Luk. 23. 40.

4. We may alſo meddle for the ſuccor of right againſt palpable wrong and outrage: We may help an Honeſt man againſt a Thief aſſaulting him; we may guard the life of any man againſt an Aſſaſſin; we may vindicate the reputation of an innocent perſon aſperſed by a ſlanderous tongue; as Moſes—— ſeeing one of his brethren ſuffer wrong, defended him; and avenged him that was oppreſſed, and ſmote the Egyptian; as the penitent thief rebuked his companion, unjuſtly railing upon our Saviour; the common Intereſt of Juſtice and Charity do not only excuſe, but commend medling in ſuch caſes.

* Cum moderamine inculpatæ tutelæ.

5. We may likewiſe meddle with the proceedings of others, when our own juſt defence requireth it; we may * repell thoſe who attack our ſafety or peace, who invade or rifle our goods, who traduce our good name; we may endeavour to defeat their Plots, and to reſtrain their Violence: This is indeed doing our own buſineſs, for to preſerve our life with its conveniences and comforts, to maintain our right and juſt intereſt, to keep our honour and reputation clear from ſcandal, is incumbent upon us; we are naturally the Patrons, Advocates and Guards of thoſe conſiderable goods aſſigned or intruſted to us by Providence.

6. When the life or welfare (either ſpiritual or temporal) of our Neighbour is deeply concerned, and cannot otherwiſe than by our aid be ſupported or relieved, we may lawfully interpoſe to yield it: If we ſee him expoſing his life to any great hazard, or engaging his Soul into any great ſin, we may in any fair way, (by admonition, advice, reproof, politick device, harmleſs force) without any invitation or licenſe, with or againſt his will, preſume to reclaim or reſtrain him. We may ſtop him in his career to ruin or grievous miſchief; we may withhold him from running into a Snare, or tumbling down a Precipice, or drinking in Poyſon; we may (as St. Jude ſpeaketh) ſnatch him out of the fire. In ſuch caſes we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that our Neighbour, being himſelf, will allow us to meddle, or will not be diſpleaſed therewith; if he hath not his wits about him, we may ſupply him with ours in ſuch exigence; his preſent conſent and approbation are not then requiſite, Jude v. 23.

ἐκ τοῦ πυρὸς ἁρπάζοντες
Invito non tribuitur quodcunque pro eo præſtatur.
Reg. J.

quiſite, he not being in condition to yield them; he needeth Guardians, and opportunity conſtituteth us in that Office: Extreme and evident need will not only excuſe the liberty we ſhall aſſume, but it obligeth us to uſe our power to ſave him; in caſe of neglect, that ſurly anſwer, Am I my brother's keeper? will not ſerve our turn. We may, we ſhould, it is not only innocent, but juſt and laudable for us to be watchful over our Neighbour's concernment and deportment, if we do it out of pure charity, in a diſcreet, quiet and gentle manner.

Furioſis nulla voluntas eſt. R. J.

Gen. 4. 2. Μή μοι λέγε τὸ ψυχρὸν τοῦτο ῥῆμα. Τί δέ μοι μέλει; οὐδὲν ἔχω κοινὸν πρὸς αὐτόν, &c. Vid. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. 1. & Tom. 2. Or. 59. in Mat. Orat. 77, 78. in Joh. Or. 15. in Eph. Or. 19. Chryſ. in Tit. Or. 5. in Hebr. Or. 30.

7. In fine; If any ſignal opportunity of doing our Neighbour conſiderable good, eſpecially to his Soul, doth offer it ſelf, we may lawfully, we ſhould in charity embrace it; we may then even obtrude upon him our direction and ſuccour; if he be ſo blind as not to diſcern our good will, ſo peeviſh as to diſlike our proceeding, ſo ingrateful as not to thank us for our pains, yet our good intent will juſtifie us before God, and at the Bar of Reaſon; and we have, to countenance us therein, the common example of good men, who, for doing thus, have worthily been accounted the Friends and Benefactors of mankind.

In theſe and the like caſes we may, without offending, intermeddle; in doing ſo, we may indeed truly be ſaid to be quiet, and to do our own buſineſs; becauſe there is no exorbitancy or diſorder in ſuch proceeding, becauſe God's Law and ſound Reaſon have appropriated theſe things to us, and made them our concernment: There is no buſineſs more proper or pertinent to us, than that wherein we labour to promote the Glory of God, or to procure the good of men; this is the principal deſign of our Being, and therefore employment therein cannot miſbecome us: but we muſt however in ſuch caſes take heed that our pretences are real and well-grounded, that our proceedings are regular and fair; we muſt not take or uſe ſuch liberty maliciouſly; we muſt never out of hypocritical pretence to the maintenance of God's Honour, of Publick Good, of Juſtice, Truth or Peace, be irregularly pragmatical or turbulent; this is to be doubly bad, adding to the irregularity of Offence, the wickedneſs of Fraud and Malice.

II. 1. We ſhould never (out of ambition, covetous deſire or ſelf-conceit) ſo meddle as to invade any man's Office; or to aſſume the exerciſe of it. A private man ſhould not preſume to act the Prince or the Stateſman; offering to controll thoſe who are not under him, to deliberate, debate, determine or paſs cenſure about Political Affairs or Occurences: A Lay-man ſhould not intrude himſelf to adminiſter the Sacred Functions of Authoritative Teaching, of diſpenſing the Sacraments, of exerciſing Spiritual Cenſures, of defining Theological Controverſies, which are committed to the Guides and Paſtors of the Church. No man ſhould ſet himſelf upon the Tribunal to Judge, or undertake without licenſe or invitation to arbitrate the Cauſes of others: Doing thus, is to encroach upon God, and to uſurp upon man; We encroach upon God, aſſuming to our ſelves Powers not derived from his Order, and deſerting the ſtation aſſigned us by his Providence; we uſurp upon man, exercising authority over him, which he is not bound to ſtoop unto.

2. We ſhould not (without Call or Allowance) meddle with our Superiors, ſo as to adviſe them, to reprehend them, to blame or inveigh againſt their Proceedings; for this is to confound the right order of things, to treſpaſs beyond the bounds of our calling and ſtation; to do wrong, not only to them, but to the Publick, which is concerned in the upholding their Power and Reſpect: It is indeed a worſe fault than aſſuming the Enſigns of their Dignity, or counterfeiting their Stamps; for that is but to borrow the Semblance, this is to enjoy the Subſtance of their Authority.

Nothing in this buſie and licentious Age is more uſual, than for private men to invade the Office, to exerciſe the Duties, to canvas and controll the Actions of their Superiors; diſcuſſing what they ought to do, and preſcribing Laws to them; taxing what is done by them; murmuring at their Decrees, and inveighing againſt their Proceedings: Every one is finding holes in the State, and picking quarrels with the conduct of Political Affairs: Every one is reforming and ſetling the Publick according to models framed in his own conceit: Things (ſaith one) are out of order, the Conſtitution is very defective, and ought to be corrected; ſuch a Law in all reaſon ſhould be repealed, and ſuch an one enacted: Here our Stateſmen were out of their Politicks, and there our Law-givers failed in point of equity or prudence: No, clamors another no leſs eagerly, all things ſtand as well as can be, nothing can be amended, or ought to be altered; our eſtabliſhment in all reſpects is more perfect than Plato's Commonwealth, or the State of Eutopia: Thus doth each man appoint himſelf Counſellor of State, and turns Legiſlator without any Call from the King, or Choice of the Country; every one ſnatches at the Scepter, and inveſts himſelf with the Senator's Robe; Every one acteth a Prince and a Biſhop, or indeed is rather a Cenſor and Controller of both Orders; not conſidering the wrong he committeth, nor the arrogance he practiſeth, nor the miſchiefs which naturally enſue upon ſuch demeanour: for to direct, or to check Governours, is in effect to exauctorate or depoſe them, ſubſtituting our ſelves in their room; and what greater injury can we do them, or the Publick? to fix or reverſe Laws, belongeth to the higheſt Authority and deepeſt Wiſdom, which 'tis enormous preſumption for us to arrogate to our ſelves; by attempting ſuch things, we confound the ranks of men, and courſe of things; we ruffle the World, we ſupplant publick Tranquillity; and what greater miſchief than this can we do among men?

It is the buſineſs and duty of thoſe whom God hath conſtituted his Repreſentatives and Miniſters to deliberate and conclude what is to be done; and for the due performance of their Charge, they are accountable to their Maſter, not to us; Nobis obſequii gloria relicta eſt; our Duty and our Privilege, (for ſo it is, if we could underſtand it, it being far more eaſie and ſafe) it is to ſubmit and obey with quiet and patience; if we do more, we are therein irregular, and no leſs undutiful to God, than to our Superiours; We forget thoſe Divine Rules and Precepts; Where the word of a King is, there is power; and who may ſay to him, What doeſt thou? Submit your ſelves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's ſake? Do all things without murmurings and diſputings: We conſider not what Judgments are denounced upon thoſe, whoſe Character it is, to deſpiſe government, to be preſumptuous and ſelf-willed, not to be afraid to ſpeak evil of dignities.

Tibi ſummum rerum judicium dii dedere; Nobis obſequii gloria relicta eſt. M. Terent. apud Tac. Ann. V. C.
Eccleſ. 8. 4.
1 Pet. 2. 13, 18.
Phil. 2. 14.
2 Pet. 2. 11.

We do not weigh the nature of the things we meddle with, nor the advantages of the perſons whom we tax; nor our own incapacity to judge rightly about them. There is a kind of ſacredneſs in the Myſteries of State; as the Myſteries of Faith do ſurpaſs natural reaſon, ſo do thoſe of State tranſcend vulgar capacity: as Prieſts by ſpecial Grace are qualified beſt to underſtand the one; ſo are Princes by like peculiar aſſiſtence enabled to penetrate the former. He that employeth them in that great Work of governing the World, and maketh them Inſtruments of his Providence, is not wanting in affording to them direction and aid needful for the diſcharge of their Duty; whence their Judgments of things are ſomewhat more than humane, and their words may with us paſs for Oracular; A divine ſentence (the wiſe King ſaid) is in the lips of the King; his mouth tranſgreſſeth not in judgment: According to the ordinary reaſon of things they are beſt able to judge of ſuch things, being, by reaſon of their eminent ſtation, able to diſcern more, and farther than others; having by experience and conſtant practice acquired a truer inſight into things, and a better skill to manage them: whereas we being placed beneath in a valley, can have no good proſpect upon the grounds and cauſes of their reſolutions and proceedings; we, for want of ſufficient uſe and exerciſe, cannot skill to balance the contrary weights and reaſons of things; to ſurmount the difficulties and rubs, to unfold the knots and intrigues, which occur in affairs of that kind; we cannot expect thoſe ſpecial influences of light and ſtrength from Heaven, toward judging of affairs, which do not properly concern us: wherefore we are altogether incompetent Judges, and impertinent Dealers about thoſe things; it is great odds, that in doing ſo, we ſhall miſtake and misbehave our ſelves; we conſequently do vainly and naughtily to meddle with them. If the love of Publick Good doth tranſport us, let us reſtrain our ſelves. Prov. 16. 10.

3. We ſhould not indeed ſo much as meddle with the affairs of our equals, (thoſe I mean not who do equal us in dignity or worth, but all ſuch who are not ſubject to our command or charge, however otherwiſe inferior to us; thoſe, I ſay, we ſhould not meddle with) ſo as to controll or croſs them; to direct, or check, or cenſure their proceedings againſt their will, or without ſpecial reaſon engaging us thereto; for this is alſo to uſurp an undue authority; this argueth ſelf-conceit; this containeth immodeſty and arrogance.

4. We ſhould not, without the deſire or leave of parties concerned, intermeddle in the ſmaller temporal intereſts of others, upon pretence to further them, or with deſign to croſs them, for every man ſhould be left to himſelf to chuſe and to manage his own buſineſs, proſecuting it in the method he beſt liketh (conſiſtent with Law and Juſtice toward others) without interruption or controll: Every man hath a right to do ſo, every man deſireth it, every man commonly hath a capacity ſufficient for it; for each man is apt to ſtudy his own buſineſs, to weigh his caſe, to poiſe his abilities, with the circumſtances in which he ſtandeth; and thence is likely to get righter notions concerning the ſtate of his affairs, to deſcry better ways of accompliſhing them, than others leſs regarding them can do: Every man is beſt acquainted with his own humour and temper, and thence can pick his buſineſs, and wind the management of it, ſo that it ſhall comply with them, or not grate upon them. However, as every man in point of intereſt and honour is moſt concerned in the ſucceſs, and ſuffereth moſt by fruſtration of his endeavours, ſo it is equal that a free choice of his proceedings ſhould be allowed him, without impediment or diſturbance; which enjoying, he will more contentedly bear any diſappointment that ſhall happen. This eſpecially we ſay, in reſpect to matters of leſſer conſequence, (ſuch as moſt worldly intereſts are) by the ill ſucceſs whereof our Neighbour is not extremely damaged or hurt; for in ſuch caſes the immodeſty and arrogancy of medling with the vexation and trouble it is apt to work, do commonly much outweigh any benefit we can preſume by our medling to procure.

5. We ſhould not indeed ever in matters of indifferent and innocent nature ſo far meddle, as without conſiderable reaſon or need, to infringe any man's liberty, to croſs his humour, to obſtruct his pleaſure, however diſcordant theſe may be to our judgment and palate: Every man hath a particular guſt for diet, for garb, for divertiſements and diſports, (ariſing from particular complexion, or other unaccountable cauſes) and fit it is that he ſhould ſatisfie it; it is enough, that what he doeth ſeemeth good, and reliſheth to himſelf; if we check him therein, we ſhall ſeem impertinent and troubleſome, and therefore we ſhall really be ſo; for it is not our office to be taſters, to be dreſſers, to be maſters of the ſports to all men: we in ſuch matters would pleaſe our own fancy, and therefore we ſhould not about them offend others; 'tis incivility, 'tis injuſtice to do it.

6. We ſhould never offer to put a force upon any man's inclination, or ſtrive to bend it unto a compliance with ours; in attempting that we ſhall commonly be diſappointed, and we ſhall never come fairly off: for ſome are ſo tough, they will never yield to us, none will comply againſt the grain, without regret and diſpleaſure; if you extort a compliance with your deſire, you thereby do loſe their good-opinion and good-will; for no man liketh to be over-born with violence or importunity.

7. We ſhould not in converſation meddle ſo as to impoſe our opinions and conceits upon others: In converſation with our equals, we have a liberty to propound our judgment, and declare our reaſons for it; but if our judgment doth not take, nor our reaſons perſuade, we ſhould have done; to preſs farther is rude, to be diſpleaſed for it is vain, to be angry or violent is unjuſt; for by the Law of converſation every man taketh himſelf to have an abſolute right to uſe and follow his own reaſon; and he that affects to deprive any man thereof, will paſs for a petty Tyrant, a Clown, or an Idiot; to retain the ſatisfaction which our own perſuaſion affordeth, is enough to content a juſt and ſober mind, without triumphing over the underſtandings of others.

8. We ſhould not ordinarily in converſe affect or undertake to teach; for this implies a pretence to a kind of ſuperiority, and a preferring our ſelves to others in wiſdom; which argueth vanity, and is offenſive to thoſe with whom we converſe; who care not to be dealt with as Diſciples or underlings. We may with our equals modeſtly diſpute the caſe, upon even ground, as fellow Students of knowledge, or advocates of truth; but we muſt not peremptorily dictate, or pronounce with authority, like Maſters or Judges.

Nec quid agatur in alia domus alia per te noverit. Hier. Ep. 2.

9. We ſhould indeed be cautious of interrupting any man's diſcourſe, or of taking his words out of his mouth: for this is a rude way of diſpoſſeſſing men of that which by common Law of ſociety they ſuppoſe themſelves to enjoy, ſpeaking their mind through, and perfecting their diſcourſe; 'tis an implicite accuſation of impertinency or weakneſs in their ſpeech; 'tis an argument, that we deem our ſelves wiſer than they, or able to ſpeak more to the purpoſe; it is therefore an unſociable and diſtaſteful practice.

10. We ſhould be careful of intrenching upon any man's modeſty, in any way, either of commendation or diſpraiſe; ſo as to put him to the bluſh, or to expoſe him unto ſcorn: Sober men care not to be the ſubjects of talk; no man can endure to be the object of ſport; we ſhould not therefore thruſt any man upon the ſtage; 'tis vexatious, and therefore always diſcourteous, ſometimes very injurious.

11. It is good to be very ſtaunch and cautious of talking about other men and their concernments, in way of paſſing characters on them, or deſcanting upon their proceedings for want of other diſcourſe: This is the common refuge of idleneſs, and the practice of fidling goſſips, who becauſe they will do nothing themſelves, muſt be reflecting upon the doings of others; and that they may not ſay nothing, will talk impertinently: φλύαροι καὶ περίεργοι, S. Paul well coupleth together, that is, frivolous tatlers and buſie-bodies; And withall (ſaith he of ſuch goſſiping women, 1 Tim. 5. 13.) they learn to be idle, wandring about from houſe to houſe; and not only idle, but tatlers alſo, and buſie-bodies, ſpeaking things which they ought not: To affect talking about others, is indeed a great temptation to ſpeaking things which we ought not to ſpeak; words of unjuſt and uncharitable obloquy.

Vide Chryſ. in Heb. 31. 3. Orat. 21.

12. Further; we ſhould not be inquiſitive into the deſigns of men; for this (beſide the vain curioſity and impertinency of ſo doing) is to aſſail their modeſty, and an adventure to vex both them and our ſelves: Thy Neighbour perhaps (as moſt adviſed men are) is deſirous to keep his purpoſe cloſe to himſelf; then by inquiry thou either forceſt him unwillingly to diſcloſe what he would not, or to give thee a repulſe, which he liketh not to do; and which whenever he doth, he is diſpleaſed; what is pumped out, comes up againſt nature, and bringeth regret with it; and if we cannot get any thing out, we yet cauſe diſturbance within; and our ſelves are not well ſatisfied in the diſappointment.

Percontatorem fugito.

Φιλοπευστία τῶν ἐν ἀποκρύψει.

13. We ſhould not preſs into the retirements of men; to do ſo, is not only immodeſt and rude, but unjuſt: 'tis immodeſt to deſire to know from any man, what he is aſhamed or unwilling to ſhew: 'tis rude to diſturb any man in the enjoyment of his lawful freedom, to interrupt him in his converſation with himſelf, to obſtruct his private ſatisfactions: 'tis unjuſt to bereave a man of that leiſure and opportunity which he poſſeſſeth, of doing that which he beſt liketh, and perhaps is greatly concerned in; of enjoying his own thoughts, of meditating upon his concerns, of examining his ways, of compoſing his paſſions, of ſtudying truth, of devotion and entercourſe with his God; of contriving and carrying on in any wiſe the welfare of his own Soul. Why doth he retire, but to ſhun diverſion, or that he may be maſter of his time and thoughts? why then are we ſo unkind, or ſo unjuſt, as to deprive him of thoſe contents and advantages?

Arcanum neque tu ſcrutaberis ullius unquam, Commiſſúmque teges, & vino tortus & irâ.

14. We ſhould not pry, or peep into mens ſecrets; it is a practice upon many accounts blameable.

It is commonly impertinent curioſity; for men hide things, becauſe they do not think others concerned to know them; the concealment argueth their opinion to be ſuch; and conſequently that he is fondly curious who would ſearch into them: Why (ſaid he well to one, who, ſeeing him carry a basket covered, did ask what was in it) doſt thou ſeek to know, when thou ſeeſt it covered, that thou mayſt not know?

Τὸ τοῦ Αἰγυπτίου χάριεν πρὸς τὸν ἐρωτῶντα τί φέρει συγκεκαλυμμένον, διὰ τοῦτο συγκεκάλυπται. Plut. περὶ πολυπρ.

It is foully diſcourteous, becauſe offenſively depriving men of the ſatisfaction they take in concealing their matters; encroaching upon the innocent freedoms which they would enjoy, without rendring account to any; treſpaſſing upon their baſhfulneſs, or fruſtrating their diſcretion; for therefore men chuſe to keep things cloſe, becauſe they like not, or judge it not expedient to declare them. Eccleſ. 7. 21. Take no heed unto all words that are ſpoken, leſt thou hear thy Servant curſe thee.

It is alſo groſly injurious to deal thus; for it is a robbery of what is moſt dear to men; which they with more care reſerve and guard, than they do their gold or their jewels; ſo that to break open the cloſet of a man's breaſt, to ranſack his mind, to pilfer away his thoughts, his affections, his purpoſes, may well be deemed a worſe ſort of burglary or theſt, than to break open doors, to rifle trunks, or to pick pockets.

It is a practice in the common opinion of men worthily eſteemed very diſhoneſt and treacherous; for men generally do ſuppoſe each other to be under a tacit, but well underſtood compact, obliged mutually (as they tender greatly the retaining their own ſecrets, ſo) to abſtain from attempting to diſcover the ſecrets of others; to do otherwiſe, is therefore taken for an act of perfidious enmity, and a violation of mutual confidence.

In fine; to peep into chinks, to liſten at doors or windows, to mind whiſpers, to dive into letters and papers, and the like practices, are the practices of inſidious Eveſ-droppers, Spies and Sycophants, which common humanity will not endure.

Yea, if the knowledge of what our Neighbour would conceal, doth caſually arrive to us, it is adviſable to ſmother it, 'tis inhumanity to reveal it to his prejudice. To reveal ſecrets, is a practice condemned in Scripture as odious and baſe; *Prov.*20.9. He that goeth about as a tale-bearer, revealeth ſecrets. Prov. 11. 13. A tale-bearer revealeth ſecrets, but he that is of a faithful ſpirit concealeth the matter.

Not to take up, or ſcatter reports prejudicial, Eccluſ. 19.7, 10.

A wiſe man would not willingly any-wiſe know the ſecrets of others, but gladly would ſhun them, although offering themſelves to his knowledge; that he may be freed from the burthen of keeping them, and the danger of venting them, to the diſtaſte, wrong or prejudice of others; and he is commended for his diſcretion, who to a Prince asking him what of his he ſhould impart to him? replied, Whatever you pleaſe, except your Secrets; them he well thought unſafe to keep, and dangerous to utter; How fooliſh then is it voluntarily to intrude, or carefully to ſearch into them?

Μηδέποτε δευτερώσῃς λόγον--᾿Ακήκοας λόγον Συναποθανέτω σοι.

Philippides apud Plut. in Apopth. ad Lyſimach. τίνος σοι, εἶπεν, τῶν ἐμῶν μεταδῶ; κἀκεῖνος, οὗ βούλει πλὴν τῶν ἀπορρήτων.

15. We ſhould not lie in wait to ſurprize or catch any man at advantage, to overthrow him when he trips, to inſult upon his miſtake or his diſaſter; to do thus is always ill manners, 'tis ſometimes barbarous inhumanity. Goodneſs in ſuch caſes would diſpoſe a man to ſupport, relieve and comfort another, if he demandeth, or his caſe needeth ſuch medling.

16. Laſtly; We ſhould never, at leaſt with much earneſtneſs, meddle with affairs more properly belonging to others, and which we do not, or may not handſomely pretend to underſtand ſo well as others: ſuch are affairs beſide our profeſſion, which if we underſtand not, 'tis a folly, in a peremptory manner, to treat of them; if we do underſtand them, 'tis yet undecent to conteſt or dictate about them, in the preſence at leaſt of thoſe who profeſs them: thus ſhould private men beware (at leaſt in that magiſterial or eager way) to meddle with Political Affairs, illiterate men with Scholaſtical, lay-men with Theological, unexperienced men with any ſuch matters, the comprehenſion whereof dependeth upon Skill and Exerciſe; no man ſhould be forward to meddle with things extraneous to his way and calling: doing ſo is wont to create much offence, it hath uſually much immodeſty and much folly in it; often it containeth much injuſtice.

Theſe are ſome more general Rules concerning the matter in hand: I ſhould now (if time did permit) inſiſt upon ſome particular kinds of medling, (Advice, Reproof, Interpoſing in Conteſts) but in regard to your patience, I ſhall proceed no farther at preſent.

SER-

SERMON XXII.

Of Quietneſs, and doing our own Buſineſs.

1 THESS. 4. 11.

And that ye ſtudy to be quiet, and to do your own Buſineſs.

IN a former Diſcourſe upon theſe words, I have already ſhewed,

I. In what caſes it is allowable or commendable to meddle with the affairs of others.

II. Next, I propounded ſome General Rules concerning this Matter, according to which we may diſcern in what caſes medling with the affairs of others is commonly blameable. Thus far I have proceeded;

III. I ſhall now give ſome Directions concerning particular kinds of medling. And becauſe they are many, I ſhall at preſent only inſiſt upon three, (referring others to other occaſions) they are, Advice, Reproof, Interpoſing in Conteſts, and Contentions.

I. As to medling in Advice, we may do well to obſerve theſe Directions.

1. Adviſe not (except upon Call) a Superiour, or one more eminent than thy ſelf in Authority, in Dignity, or in Age: for he that offereth to adviſe, doth thereby claim to himſelf a kind of ſuperiority, or excellence, above another; and it is not well conſiſtent with the reverence and reſpect due to our betters to ſeem to do ſo: they ſhould be wiſer than we, at leaſt it becometh us not to declare we think they are not; If they ask Advice, we may without preſumption give it, ſuppoſing it to be not ſo much their defect of knowledge as prudent caution, which maketh them willing to hear what any man can ſay to the caſe; but to obtrude it on them argueth we think them to need it, and our ſelves able to direct them, which is preſumption, and will paſs for arrogance.

2. We ſhould not indeed, with any violence or importunity, thruſt advice upon our Equals, or upon any man not ſubject to our charge, who is unwilling to receive it; for this is alſo an exalting our ſelves in skill and wiſdom above him, and implieth a contemptuous opinion concerning his knowledge; that he is ſo weak as to need Advice, and yet more weak in not ſeeking it when needful from us; which practice conſiſteth not with modeſty, and needs muſt breed offence, it is indeed unjuſt; for every man of right is to be allowed to act by his own advice, and to chuſe his own Counſellors.

3. Be not obſtinate in preſſing Advice; if he that asketh thy counſel do not like it, deſiſt from urging farther, and reſt content: If thou haſt performed the part of a faithful Friend, of a good Man, of a charitable Chriſtian in adviſing what ſeemed beſt to thee, that may abundantly ſatisfie thee; for the reſt ipſe viderit, 'tis his concernment more than thine: If thou pretendeſt that he muſt follow thy Advice, or art diſ-

diſpleaſed becauſe he doth not ſo, thou makeſt thy ſelf a Commander, not a Counſellor; the which to appoint thee, was beſide his intention, he meant to ſeek thy help, not to forfeit his own liberty; and thou art not juſt in pretending to ſo much.

4. Affect not to be a Counſellor, nor let any Conſiderations (except of friendſhip, humanity or charity) eaſily diſpoſe thee to accept the Office; it is not worth the while to undertake it as a matter of reputation, or becauſe it ſeemeth to argue a good opinion concerning thy skill and ability; for it is a critical and dangerous thing to adviſe; becauſe if the buſineſs ſucceedeth well according to thy Advice, the Principal uſually carrieth away the profit and the praiſe; his judgment, his induſtry, his fortune are applauded; little commendation or benefit accrueth to the Counſellor; but if it proſper not, the main weight of blame is ſurely laid upon him that adviſed the courſe; If you (ſaith the party, and ſay the lookers on) had not thus directed, it had not thus fallen out.

5. Wherefore it is commonly expedient not to adviſe otherwiſe than with reſervation and diffidence: 'Tis, we may ſay, the moſt probable courſe I know, but I queſtion whether it will ſucceed; I hope well of it, but do not thoroughly confide therein; this modeſt and diſcreet way, whatever the event ſhall be, will ſhelter thee from blame; yea, will advance the reputation of thy ſagacity; for if it fail, thy reaſon to ſuſpect will be approved; if it proſper, the goodneſs of thy judgment will be applauded: whereas the confident director, if ſucceſs croſſeth his Advice, is exclaimed upon for his raſhneſs; if ſucceſs favoureth, he is not yet admired for his wiſdom, becauſe he ſeemed to be ſure; it being more admirable to gueſs the beſt among doubtful things, than to determine that which is certain. So much for medling about Advice.

II. For Reproof, (which is neceſſary, and a duty upon ſome occaſions) we may do well to follow theſe Directions.

Levit. 19. 17. Epheſ. 5. 11. 1. Reprove not a Superior; for 'tis exerciſing a power over him, and a puniſhing him; we thereby therefore do ſoar above our pitch, we confound ranks, and pervert the order ſettled among men; the practice containeth irreverence and preſumption, it ſeemeth injurious, and is ever odious. What the Miniſters of God, or Spiritual Paſtors do in this kind, they do it by ſpecial commiſſion or inſtinct, (as the Prophets in reprehending Princes and Prieſts, as S. John Baptiſt in reproving Herod;) or as ordinary Superiors in the caſe of Spiritual Guidance, being ſet over us for that purpoſe, and watching for our ſouls, for which they muſt render an account; yet they muſt do it with great moderation and diſcretion Heb. 13. 17. 1 Tim. 5. 11. πρεσβυτέρῳ μὴ ἐπιπλήξῃς, Rebuke not an Elder, (or one more aged than thy ſelf) but intreat him as a Father, that is, adviſe him in the moſt reſpectful and gentle manner) is the charge of S. Paul to B. Timothy. In caſe of grievance or ſcandal, it becometh Inferiors not proudly or peremptorily to criminate and tax, but humbly to remonſtrate and ſupplicate for redreſs.

2. Reprove not raſhly, and without certain cognizance of the fact; for to reprove for things not done, or (which in moral reckoning is the ſame) for things not apparent, is both unjuſt, and argueth a malignant diſpoſition: 'tis unjuſt to puniſh ſo much as the modeſty of any man without clear evidence and proof; 'tis malignity to ſuſpect a man of ill, 'tis calumny to charge blame on him upon ſlender pretences, or doubtful ſurmiſes.

3. Reprove not alſo raſhly as to the point of right, or without being able to convince the matter to be aſſuredly culpable; to reprove for things not bad, or not unqueſtionably ſuch (for things that are, or perhaps may be indifferent and innocent) is alſo unjuſt, and ſignifieth a tyrannical diſpoſition: 'tis unjuſt any-wiſe to puniſh a man without clear warrant of Law; 'tis tyrannical to impoſe upon men our conceit, or to perſecute them for uſing their Liberty, following their judgment, or enjoying their humour; which in effect we do when we reprove them for that which we cannot prove blameable: 'Tis (S. James ſaith) a judging the Law, or charging it with defect, when we condemn perſons for things not prohibited by it: He (ſaith the Apoſtle) that ſpeaketh againſt his brother, and judgeth his brother, ſpeaketh againſt the law, and judgeth the law.

Jam. 4. 11.

Both theſe kinds of raſh Reproof are very inconvenient, as breeding needleſs offence and endleſs contention; for whoever is thus taxed, will certainly take it ill, and will contend in his own defence; no man patiently, for no ſufficient cauſe or ſure ground, will lie under the ſtroak of Reproof, which always ſmarteth, but then enrageth when it is ſuppoſed to be inflicted unjuſtly or maliciouſly: Even thoſe who contentedly will bear friendly Reproof, can worſt brook to be cauſleſly taxed.

4. Reprove not for ſlight matters; for ſuch faults or defects as proceed from natural frailty, from inadvertency, from miſtake in matters of ſmall conſequence: for it is hard to be juſt in ſuch Reproof; or ſo to temper it as not to exceed the meaſure of blame due to ſuch faults; they occurr ſo often, that we ſhould never ceaſe to be carping, if we do it upon ſuch occaſions; 'tis not worth the while, 'tis not handſome to ſeem diſpleaſed with ſuch little things; 'tis ſpending our Artillery upon a Game not worth the killing: Reproof is too grave and ſtately a thing to be proſtituted upon ſo mean things; to uſe it upon ſmall cauſe, derogateth from its weight, when there is conſiderable reaſon for it; Friendſhip, Charity and Humanity, ſhould cover ſuch Offences. In fine, It is unſeemly to reprove men for ſuch things as all men, as themſelves are ſo continually ſubject unto: It is therefore better to let ſuch things paſs without any mark of diſpleaſure or diſlike.

Mitem animum, & mores modicis erroribus æquos. Juv. Sat. 14.

5. Reprove not unſeaſonably; not when a perſon is indiſpoſed to bear reproof, or unfit to profit thereby; not, when there is likely to be no good effect come from it; when thou ſhalt only thereby conjure up an evil ſpirit of diſpleaſure and enmity againſt thy ſelf. Reproof is a thing of it ſelf not good or pleaſant, but ſomtimes needful, becauſe wholſome, and good in order to the end; it ſhould therefore be adminiſtred as Phyſick, then only, when the Patient is fit to receive it, and it may ſerve to correct his Diſtemper; otherwiſe you will only make him more ſick, and very angry.

'Tis ever almoſt unſeaſonable to reprove ſome perſons; as ſcorners, impudent, incorrigibly profligate perſons, who will hate the Reprover without regarding the Reproof: He that reproveth a ſcorner, getteth to himſelf ſhame; and he that rebuketh a wicked man, getteth himſelf a blot. Reprove not a ſcorner, leſt he hate thee. To be maligned, to be derided, to be aſperſed with reproach and ſlander, is all one ſhall get by reproving ſuch perſons; it is both proſtituting good advice, and expoſing ones ſelf to miſchief; as our Saviour intimateth in that prohibition: Give not that which is holy unto dogs, neither caſt your pearls before ſwine, leſt they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rent you.

Prov. 9. 7,8. & 15. 12.

Mat. 7. 6.

As ſuch men ever, ſo moſt men in ſome ſeaſons are uncapable of Reproof; ſo are men in calamity, who are diſcompoſed by grief, the which is rather to be mitigated by comfort than increaſed and exaſperated by blame; ſo are men in a paſſion, who have no ears to hear, no reaſon to judge, no will to comply with advice: Reproof is apt to produce rather anger and ill-blood, than any contrition or kindly remorſe in perſons ſo affected.

It is alſo uſually not ſeaſonable to reprove men publickly, when their modeſty is highly put to it, and their reputation grievouſly ſuffereth; for this is an extreme ſort of puniſhment, and is taken for needleſs; 'tis extreme, becauſe men had rather ſuffer any way than in their honour; 'tis deemed needleſs, becauſe it may be miniſtred privately.

6. Reprove mildly and ſweetly; in the calmeſt manner, in the gentleſt terms; not in a haughty or imperious way, not haſtily or fiercely; not with ſowr looks, or in bitter language; for theſe ways do beget all the evil, and hinder the beſt effects of Reproof: They do certainly enflame and diſturb the perſon reproved; they breed wrath, diſdain and hatred againſt the Reprover; but do not ſo well enlighten the man to ſee his error, or affect him with kindly ſenſe of his miſcarriage, or diſpoſe him to correct his fault; ſuch reproofs look rather like the wounds and perſecutions of enmity, than as remedies miniſtred by a friendly hand; they harden men with ſtomach and ſcorn to mend upon ſuch occaſion. If Reproof doth not ſavour of Humanity, it ſignifieth nothing; it muſt be like a bitter Pill wrapt in Gold, and tempered with Sugar, otherwiſe it will not go down, or work effectually.

7. Affect not to be reprehenſive; ſeem not willingly to undertake the place of a Reprover; appear to be merely drawn thereto by ſenſe of Duty, or exigency of Friendſhip, or conſtraint of Charity and Good-will. For to affect reproving, is a ſign of ill-nature and arrogance; that we delight to obſerve the Faults, that we love to inſult upon the Infirmities and Infelicities of other men; which is the part of a domineering and cruel humour. A truly good man indeed would be glad to be excuſed from the office; it is the moſt unpleaſant thing he can do to be raking in mens Sores, and cauſing ſmart to his Neighbours; far more gladly would he be commending their good deeds, and cheriſhing their vertue; nothing therefore but Conſcience and Charity can put him on this employment. But ſo much for medling in Reproof.

III. Another kind of medling is, Interpoſing in the Conteſts and Contentions of others. As to this, we may, briefly, do well to obſerve theſe Directions.

1. We ſhould never meddle, ſo as to raiſe Diſſentions, or to do ſuch things which breed them; we ſhould by no means create miſunderſtandings or diſtaſts between our Neighbours; we ſhould not inſtill jealouſies or ſurmiſes; we ſhould not miſconſtrue words or actions, to an offenſive ſenſe or conſequence: we ſhould not conveigh ſpiteful tales; we ſhould not diſcloſe the ſecrets of one to another: theſe practices engender enmity and ſtrife among men; and are therefore inhumane, or rather diabolical; for the Devil is the great Make-bate in the World.

2. We ſhould not foment Diſſentions already commenced, blowing up the coals that are kindled, by abetting the ſtrife, or aggravating the cauſes thereof; it is not good to ſtrengthen the quarrel, by ſiding with one part, except that part be notoriouſly oppreſſed or abuſed; in ſuch a caſe indeed, when Juſtice calleth for them, we may lend our advice and aſſiſtence; and may bear the inconvenience of being engaged; as Moſes honeſtly and generouſly did, when he ſuccoured his brother that ſuffered wrong; otherwiſe 'tis adviſable to keep our ſelves out of the Fray; that we do not encourage it by our taking part, and involve our ſelves in the miſchiefs of it.

3. Eſpecially we ſhould not make our ſelves Parties in any Faction, Where both ſides are eager and paſſionate; for then even they who have the juſter cauſe, are wont to do unjuſt things, in which 'tis hard for any man engaged not to have ſhare, at leaſt not to undergo the imputation of them: 'tis wiſdom therefore in ſuch caſes to hold off, and to retain a kind of indifferency; to meddle with them is, (as the Wiſeman ſaith) to take a dog by the ears; which he that doth, can hardly take care enough of his fingers. Prov. 26. 17.

4. We ſhould not interpoſe our ſelves (without invitation) to be Arbitratours in points of difference: We may cautiouſly mediate perhaps, or adviſe to agreement; but not pretend as Judges with authority to decide the controverſie; this ſavoureth of arrogance; this will work trouble to us, and bring the diſpleaſure of both ſides upon us; it is hard in doing ſo, to avoid becoming Parties, and offending one ſide: Our Lord therefore did, we ſee, wave this office, and put off the invitation, with a, Who made me a Divider, or a Judge between you? Οἱ ἐν μέσῳ ὄντες ἀδικοῦνται ἀπ' ἀμφοτέρων. Ariſt.

5. If we would at all meddle in theſe caſes, it ſhould be only in endeavouring, by the moſt fair and prudent means, to renew peace, and reconcile the diſſenters; if we can by exhortation and perſuaſion to peace, by removing miſpriſions, by repreſenting things handſomely, by mitigating their paſſions, bring them to good terms; this is a laudable medling, this is a bleſſed practice. So I leave this particular, and finiſh the directive part of my Diſcourſe.

IV. I ſhall now further only briefly propoſe ſome Conſiderations inducing to Quietneſs, and diſſuaſive from Pragmaticalneſs; ſuch as ariſe from the nature, properties, cauſes and effects of each; ſerving to commend the one, and diſparage the other.

1. Conſider that Quietneſs is juſt and equal, Pragmaticalneſs is injurious. When we contain our ſelves quiet, and mind only our own Buſineſs, we allow every man his right, we harm no man's repute; we keep our ſelves within our bounds, and treſpaſs not on the place or intereſt of our Neighbour; we diſturb not the right order and courſe of things: but in being pragmatical, we do wrongfully deprive others of their right and liberty to manage their buſineſs; we prejudice their Credit, implicitly charging them with weakneſs, and incapacity to diſpatch their affairs without our direction; we therefore, upon our own unequal and impartial judgment, do prefer and advance our ſelves above them; we aſſume to our ſelves in many reſpects more than our due, withdrawing it from others. In fine, No man loveth that others ſhould invade his office, or intrude into his buſineſs; therefore in juſtice every man ſhould forbear doing ſo toward others.

2. Quietneſs ſignifieth Humility, Modeſty and Sobriety of mind; that we conceit not our ſelves more wiſe than our Neighbour, that we allow every man his ſhare of diſcretion; that we take others for able and skilful enough to underſtand and manage their own affairs, but pragmaticalneſs argueth much over-weening and arrogance; that we take our ſelves for the only men of Wiſdom, at leaſt for more wiſe than thoſe, into whoſe buſineſs we thruſt our ſelves.

3. Quietneſs is beneficial to the World, preſerving the general order of things, diſpoſing men to keep within their rank and ſtation, and within the ſphere of their power and ability, regularly attending to the work and buſineſs proper to them; whereby as themſelves do well, ſo the Publick doth thrive; but pragmaticalneſs diſturbeth the World, confounding things, removing the diſtinction between Superiour, Inferiour and Equal, rendring each man's buſineſs uncertain; while ſome undertake that which belongeth not to them: One buſie-body often (as we find by experience) is able to diſturb and peſter a whole Society.

4. Quietneſs preſerveth Concord and Amity: for no man is thereby provoked, being ſuffered undiſturbedly to proceed in his courſe, according to his mind and pleaſure: but Pragmaticalneſs breedeth Diſſentions and Feuds: for all men are ready to quarrel with thoſe, who offer to controll them, or croſs them in their way; every man will be zealous in maintaining his privilege of chuſing and acting according to his choice; and cannot but oppoſe thoſe, who attempt to bereave him of it; whence between the buſie-body aſſailing, and others defending their Liberty, Combuſtions muſt ariſe.

5. Quietneſs to the perſon endued with it, or practiſing it, begetteth tranquillity and peace; for he that letteth others alone, and cometh in no man's way; no man will be apt to diſquiet or croſs him; he keepeth himſelf out of Broils and Factions; but the Buſy-body createth vexation and trouble to himſelf; others will be ready to moleſt him in his proceedings, becauſe he diſturbeth them in theirs; he that will have a Sickle in another's Corn, or an Oar in every man's Boat, no wonder if his fingers be rapped; men do not more naturally bruſh off flies, which buz about their ears, ſit upon their faces or hands, and ſting or tickle them; than they ſtrive to drive away clamorous and encroaching Buſy-bodies. 1 Pet. 4. 15. Let (ſaith S. Peter) none of you ſuffer as a Buſy-body in other men's matters; it is, he intimateth, a practice whereby a man becometh liable to ſuffer, or which men are apt to puniſh ſoundly: and ſo the Wiſe-man, implying the fondneſs and danger of it; Prov. 26. 17. He (ſaith he) that paſſeth by, and medleth with ſtrife not belonging to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears; that is, without any probable good effect, he provoketh a creature that will ſnarle at him, and bite him.

6. Quietneſs is a decent and lovely thing, as ſignifying good diſpoſition, and producing good effects; but Pragmaticalneſs is ugly and odious. Every man gladly would be Neighbour to a quiet perſon, as who by the ſteady calmneſs and ſmoothneſs of his humour, the inoffenſive ſtillneſs and ſweetneſs of his demeanour, doth afford all the pleaſure of converſation, without any croſs or trouble. But no man willingly would dwell by him, who is apt ever to be infeſting him by his turbulent humour, his obſtreperous talk, his tumultuous and furious carriage; who, upon all occaſions, without invitation or conſent, will be thruſting in his eyes, his tongue, his hand; prying into all that is done, dictating this or that courſe, taxing all proceeding, uſurping a kind of juriſdiction over him and his actions: no man will like, or can well endure ſuch a Neighbour. It is commonly obſerved, that Pride is not only abominable to God, but loathſome to man; and of all Prides, this is the moſt offenſive and odious: for the Pride which keepeth at home, within a man's heart or fancy, not iſſuing forth to trouble others, may indeed well be deſpiſed, as hugely ſilly and vain; but that which breaketh out to the diſturbance and vexation of others, is hated, as moleſtful and miſchievous.

7. Quietneſs adorneth any Profeſſion, bringing credit, reſpect and love thereto; but Pragmaticalneſs is ſcandalous, and procureth odium to any Party or Cauſe: Men uſually do cloak their pragmatical behaviour with pretences of Zeal for publick Good, or of kindneſs to ſome Party, which they have eſpouſed; but thereby they do really caſt reproach, and draw prejudice upon their ſide; if it be a good Cauſe, they do thereby wrong it, making it to partake of the blame incident to ſuch carriage, as if it did produce or allow diſorder; if it be a bad Cauſe, they wrong themſelves, aggravating the guilt of their adherence thereto; for it is a leſs fault to be calm and remiſs in an ill-way, than buſie or violent in promoting it. Nothing hath wrought more prejudice to Religion, or hath brought more diſparagement upon Truth, than boiſterous and unſeaſonable Zeal; pretending in ways of paſſion, of fierceneſs, of rudeneſs to advance them: A quiet Sectary doth to moſt mens fancy appear more lovely, than he that is furiouſly and factiouſly orthodox: The ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, is (ſaith S. Peter) in God's ſight of great price; and it is alſo very eſtimable in the opinion of men.

1 Pet. 3. 4.

8. Quiet is a ſafe practice; keeping men not only from needleſs encumbrances of Buſineſs, but from the hazards of it, or being charged with its bad ſucceſs: but Pragmaticalneſs is dangerous; for if things go ill, the medler ſurely will be loaded with the blame; the profit and commendation of Proſperities will accrue to the perſons immediately concerned; but the diſaſter and damage will be imputed to thoſe who medled in the buſineſs; to excuſe or eaſe themſelves, men will caſt the diſgrace on thoſe who did project or further the undertaking: He therefore that would be ſecure, let him be quiet; he that loveth peril and trouble, let him be pragmatical.

Τῷ ὄντι φαίνεται ὁ κατὰ τὴν ἡσυχίαν βίος ἀκίνδυνόν τι καὶ ἀσφαλὲς ἔχειν. Chryſ. apud Plut.

9. It is conſequently a great point of diſcretion to be quiet, it yielding a man peace and ſafety, without any trouble; and it is a mainfeſt folly to be pragmatical, it being only with care, pains and trouble to ſeek diſſatisfaction to others, and danger to himſelf; it being alſo to affect many not only inconveniences, but impoſſibilities.

Is it poſſible for any man to graſp or compaſs an infinity of buſineſs? yet this the pragmatical man ſeemeth to drive at; for the buſineſſes of other men are infinite; and into that abyſs he plungeth himſelf, who paſſeth beyond his own bounds; by the ſame reaſon that he medleth with any beſide his own, he may undertake all the affairs in the World; ſo he is ſure to have work enough; but fruit ſurely little enough of his pains.

Is it imaginable, that we can eaſily bring others to our bent, or induce men to ſubmit their buſineſs to our judgment and humour? Will not he that attempteth ſuch things, aſſuredly expoſe himſelf to diſappointment and regret? Is it not therefore wiſdom to let every man have his own way, and purſue his concernments without any check or controll from us?

10. We may alſo conſider, that every man hath buſineſs of his own ſufficient to employ him; to exerciſe his mind, to exhauſt his care and pains, to take up all his time and leiſure: To ſtudy his own near concernments, to provide for the neceſſities and conveniences of his Life, to look to the intereſts of his Soul, to be diligent in his Calling, to diſcharge faithfully and carefully all his Duties relating to God and man, will abundantly employ a man; well it is if ſome of them do not encumber and diſtract him; he that will ſet himſelf with all his might to perform theſe things, will find enough to do; he need not ſeek farther for work, he need not draw more trouble on him.

Ὁ πλεῖστα πράσσων πλεῖσθ' ἁμαρτάνει βροτῶν. Eurip.

Ἀπράγμονας εἶναι ἐκκλίνειν γὰρ τὸ καθῆκον. Zenon. apud Laert. Chryſ. Tom. 2. Eth. 64.

Seeing then every man hath burthen enough on his ſhoulders, impoſed by God and Nature, it is vain to take on him more load, by engaging himſelf in the affairs of others; he will thence be forced, either to ſhake off own his buſineſs, or to become over-burthened and oppreſſed with more than he can bear. It is indeed hence obſervable, and it needs muſt happen, that thoſe who meddle with the buſineſs of others, are wont to neglect their own; they that are much abroad, can ſeldom be at home; they that know others moſt, are leaſt acquainted with themſelves; And the wiſe Hebrew, Eccl. 38. 26. The wiſdom of a learned man comes by opportunity of leiſure, (σοφία σοφιστοῦ ἐν εὐκαιρίᾳ σχολῆς) and he that hath little buſineſs ſhall be wiſe ; ὁ ἐλασσούμενος πράξει αὐτοῦ σοφισθήσεται.) Whence it is ſcarce poſſible that a pragmatical man ſhould be a good man ; that is, ſuch an one, who honeſtly and carefully performeth the Duties incumbent on him.

Philoſophers therefore generally have adviſed men to ſhun needleſs Occupations, as the certain impediments of a good and happy Life ; they bid us endeavour ἁπλοῦν ἑαυτούς, to ſimpliſie our ſelves, or to get into a condition requiring of us the leaſt that can be to do ; S. Paul intended the ſame, when he adviſed us, μὴ ἐμπλέκεσθαι ταῖς τοῦ βίου πραγματείαις, not to be entangled in the negotiations of life ; and our Saviour, when he touched Martha for being troubled about many things : So far therefore we ſhould be from taking in hand the affairs of other men, that we ſhould labour to contract our own, and reduce them to the feweſt that we can ; otherwiſe we ſhall hardly attain Wiſdom, or be able to perform our Duty.

Ὁ σοφὸς, ἰδιοπράγμων, καὶ ἀπράγμων. Democ. Sen. Ep. 72, 22. Tertullian calleth Stoiciſm, quietis Magiſterium. De pall. 5. 2 Tim. 2. 4. Luk. 10. 41. θορυβάζῃ περὶ πολλά.

11. But ſuppoſe us to have much ſpare time, and to want buſineſs ; ſo that we are to ſeek for divertiſement, and muſt for relief fly to curioſity ; yet it is not adviſeable to meddle with the affairs of other men ; there are divers other ways more innocent, more ſafe, more pleaſant, more advantageous to divert our ſelves, and ſatisfie curioſity.

Omnium occupatorum conditio miſera eſt, eorum tamen miſerima, qui nè ſuis quidem occupationibus laborant. Sen. de Brev. Vitæ, 19.

Nature offereth her ſelf, and her inexhauſtible ſtore of appearances to our contemplation ; we may, without any harm, and with much delight, ſurvey her rich Varieties, examine her Proceedings, pierce into her Secrets. Every kind of Animals, of Plants, of Minerals, of Meteors preſenteth matter, wherewith innocently, pleaſantly and profitably to entertain our minds ; There are many noble Sciences, by applying our minds to the ſtudy whereof, we may not only divert them, but improve and cultivate them : The Hiſtories of Ages paſt, or Relations concerning foreign Countries, wherein the manners of men are deſcribed, and their actions reported, may afford us uſeful pleaſure and paſtime ; thereby we may learn as much, and underſtand the World as well, as by the moſt curious inquiry into the preſent actions of men ; there we may obſerve, we may ſcan, we may tax the proceedings of whom we pleaſe, without any danger or offence : There are extant numberleſs Books, wherein the wiſeſt and moſt ingenious of men have laid open their hearts ; and expoſed their moſt ſecret cogitations unto us ; in purſuing them we may ſufficiently buſie our ſelves, and let our idle hours paſs gratefully, we may meddle with our ſelves, ſtudying our own diſpoſitions, examining our principles and purpoſes, reflecting on our thoughts, words and actions ; ſtriving thoroughly to underſtand our ſelves ; to do this, we have an unqueſtionable right, and by it we ſhall obtain vaſt benefit, much greater than we can hope to get by puddering in the deſigns or doings of others. Pragmaticalneſs then, as it is very dangerous and troubleſome, ſo it is perfectly needleſs ; it is a kind of idleneſs, but of all idleneſs the moſt unreaſonable : It is at leaſt worſe than idleneſs, in S. Gregory Nazianzen's opinion : for, I had rather, ſaid he, be idle more than I ſhould, than over-buſie. Other Conſiderations might be added, but theſe, I hope, may be ſufficient to reſtrain this practice, ſo unprofitable and uneaſie to our ſelves, and for the moſt part, ſo injurious and troubleſome to others.

Tacitus ſaith of the Stoicks Sect.—— quæ turbidos & negotiorum appetentes facit.

Ἀνδρὶ Λυδῷ πράγματα οὐκ ἦν, ἀλλ' αὐτὸς ἐξελθὼν ἐπρίατο. Adag. apud Suidam.

Ἀργὸς εἶναι μᾶλλον τοῦ δέοντος, ἢ περίεργος δέχομαι. Greg. Naz. Or. 26.

Now the God of Peace, make us perfect in every good word and work, through Jeſus Chriſt, to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

S E R-

SERMON XXIII

Of the Love of God.

MATTH. XXII. 37.

Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart.

THIS Text is produced by our Saviour out of Moſes his Law in anſwer to a queſtion wherewith a learned Phariſee thought to poſe or puzzle him; the queſtion was, Which was the great, and firſt commandment in the Law? a queſtion which, it ſeems, had been examined, and determined among the Doctours, in the Schools of thoſe days, (for, in Saint Luke, to the like queſtion intimated by our Saviour, another Lawyer readily yields the ſame anſwer, and is therefore commended by our Saviour, with a rectè reſpondiſti, thou haſt anſwered rightly) ſo that had our Saviour anſwered otherwiſe; he had, we may ſuppoſe, been taxed of ignorance and unskilfulneſs, perhaps alſo of errour and heterodoxie: to convict him of which, ſeems to have been the deſign of this Jewiſh trier or tempter (for he is ſaid to ask πειράζων αὐτόν, trying, or tempting, him.) But our Saviour defeats his captious intent, by anſwering, not only according to truth and the reaſon of the thing, but agreeably to the doctrine then current, and as the Lawyer himſelf out of his memory and learning would have reſolved it: and no wonder, ſince common ſenſe dictates, that the Law enjoyning ſincere and entire love toward God is neceſſarily the firſt and chief, or the moſt fundamental Law of all Religion; for that whoſoever doth believe the being of God (according to the moſt common notion that Name bears) muſt needs diſcern himſelf obliged firſt and chiefly to perform thoſe acts of mind and will towards him, which moſt true and earneſt love do imply: different expreſſions of love may be preſcribed, peculiar grounds of love may be declared in ſeveral ways of Religion; but in the general and main ſubſtance of the duty, all will conſpire; all will acknowledge readily, that it is love we chiefly owe to God; the duty which he may moſt juſtly require of us, and which will be moſt acceptable to him. It was then indeed the great Commandment of the old (or rather of the young and leſs perfect) Religion of the Jews, and it is no leſs of the more adult and improved Religion which the Son of God did inſtitute and teach: the difference only is, that Chriſtianity declares more fully how we ſhould exerciſe it; and more highly engages us to obſerve it; requires more proper and more ſubſtantial expreſſions thereof; extends our obligation, as to the matter, and intends it, as to the degree thereof: for as it repreſents Almighty God in his nature and in his doings more lovely than any other way of Religion (either natu-

Deut. 6. 5. 10. 12.
πειράζων αὐτόν.
πρώτη ἐντολή.
Luke 10. 27.

ral, or instituted) hath done, or could do; ſo it proportionably rai-
1 Tim. 1. 5. ſes our obligation to love him: it is, as S. Paul ſpeaketh, τὸ τέλος τῆς παραγγελίας, the laſt drift, or the ſupreme pitch of the Evangelical profeſſion and inſtitution, to Love; to love God firſt, and then our neigh-Coloſſ. 3. 14. bour out of a pure heart, and good conſcience, and faith unfeigned: it is
Mat. 5. 48. the bond, or knot of that perfection which the Goſpel injoins us to aſpire Galat. 5. 22. to: 'tis the firſt and principal of thoſe goodly fruits, which the Holy Spirit of Chriſt produceth in good Chriſtians. It is therefore plainly with us alſo, the great Commandment and chief Duty: chiefly great in its extent, in its worth, in its efficacy and influence: moſt great it is, in that it doth (eminently at leaſt, or virtually) contain all other Laws and Duties of Piety; they being all as Branches making up its Body, or
Rom. 13. 9, 10. growing out of it as their Root. Saint Paul ſaith of the love towards our neighbour, that it is πλήρωμα τοῦ νόμου, a full performance of the laws
Gal. 5. 14. concerning him; and that all commandments, ἀνακεφαλαιοῦνται, are recapitulated, or ſumm'd up in this one ſaying, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf: and by like, or greater reaſon are all the Duties of Piety com-
Verſ. 40. priſed in the love of God; which is the chief of thoſe two hinges, upon which (as our Saviour here ſubjoyns) the whole law and the prophets do hang. So great is this Duty in extent: and it is no leſs in proper worth; both as it immediately reſpects the moſt excellent, and moſt neceſſary performances of Duty (employing our higheſt faculties in their beſt operations) and as it imparts virtue and value to all other acts of Du-Levit. 2. 13. ty: for no Sacrifice is acceptable, which is not kindled by this heaven-
9. 24. 20. 1. ly Fire; no Offering ſweet and pure, which is not ſeaſoned by this holy Salt; no Action is truly good or commendable, which is not conjoined with, or doth not proceed from the love of God; that is not performed with a deſign to pleaſe God, (or at leaſt) with an opinion that we ſhall do ſo thereby. If a man perform any good work not out of love to God, but from any other principle; or for any other deſign (to pleaſe himſelf or others, to get honour or gain thereby) how can it be acceptable to God; to whom it hath not any due regard? And what action hath it for its principle, or its ingredient, becomes ſanctified thereby, in great meaſure pleaſing and acceptable to God; ſuch is the worth and value thereof. It is alſo the great Commandment for efficacy and influence, being naturally productive of Obedience to all other Commandments; eſpecially of the moſt genuine and ſincere Obedience; no other principle being in force and activity comparable thereto: (fear may drive to a compliance with ſome, and hope may draw to an obſervance of others; but it is Love, that with a kind
2 Cor. 5. 14. of willing conſtraint, and kindly violence carries on chearfully, vi-
1 Joh. 2. 5. gorouſly and ſwiftly to the performance of all God's Command-
Joh. 14. 23. ments: If any man loves me, ſaith our Saviour, he will keep my word;
1 Joh. 5. 3. to keep his word is a natural and neceſſary reſult of love to him; this is the love of God (ſaith Saint John) that we keep his commandments, and his commandments are not grievous; 'tis the nature of that Love to beget a free and delightful Obedience) Such then is the Subject of our Diſcourſe; even the ſum, the ſoul, the ſpring of all our Religion and Duty. And becauſe it is requiſite, both for our direction how to do, and the examination of our ſelves whether we do as we ought; that we ſhould underſtand what we are thus ſo far obliged to, that we may be able to perform it, and that we be effectually diſpoſed thereto, I ſhall uſe this method; I will firſt endeavour to explain the nature of this love commanded us; then, to ſhew ſome means of attaining attaining it; laſtly, to propound ſome inducements to the purchaſe and practice thereof.

I. For the firſt part; we may deſcribe Love in general (for it ſeems not ſo eaſie to define it exactly) to be an affection or inclination of the Soul towards an object, proceeding from an apprehenſion and eſteem of ſome excellency or ſome conveniency therein (its Beauty, Worth or Uſefulneſs) producing thereupon, if the object be abſent or wanting, a proportinable deſire, and conſequently an endeavour to obtain ſuch a propriety therein, ſuch a poſſeſſion thereof, ſuch an approximation or union thereto, as the thing is capable of; alſo a regret and diſpleaſure in the failing ſo to obtain it; or in the want, abſence and loſs thereof; likewiſe begetting a complacence, ſatisfaction and delight in its preſence, poſſeſſion or enjoyment; which is moreover attended with a good will thereto, ſuitable to its nature; that is, with a deſire that it ſhould arrive unto, and continue in its beſt ſtate; with a delight to perceive it ſo to thrive and flouriſh; with a diſpleaſure to ſee it ſuffer or decay in any wiſe; with a conſequent endeavour to advance it in all good, and preſerve it from all evil. Which deſcription containing the chief properties of Love in common, do in ſome ſort (not to inſiſt upon abſtracted notions, or in examples remote from our purpoſe) all of them well agree to that Love which we owe to God, according to the tenour of this Law, and in the degree therein expreſſed; that is, in the beſt manner and higheſt degree; for even of this Divine Love the chief properties (prerequiſite thereto, or intimately conjoined therewith, or naturally reſulting from it) I conceive are theſe.

1. A right apprehenſion and firm perſuaſion concerning God, and conſequently a high eſteem of him as moſt excellent in himſelf and moſt beneficial to us: for ſuch is the frame of our Soul, that the perceptive part doth alwayes go before the appetitive, that affection follows opinion, that no object otherwiſe moves our deſire, than as repreſented by reaſon, or by fancy, good unto us: what effect will the goodlieſt beauty, or the ſweeteſt harmony have upon him, who wants ſenſe to diſcern, or judgment to prize them? This is our natural way of acting; and according to it, that we may in due meaſure love God, He muſt appear proportionably amiable, and deſirable to us; we muſt entertain worthy thoughts of, as full of all Perfection in himſelf; as the Fountain of all Good; as the ſole Author of all that Happineſs we can hope for or receive: as He, in poſſeſſion of whom we ſhall poſſeſs all things deſireable; in effect and vertue all riches, all honours, all pleaſure, all good that we are capable of; and without whom we can enjoy no real good or true content: Which eſteem of him, how can it otherwiſe than beget affection towards him? If the faint reſemblances, or the ſlender participations of ſuch Excellencies (of that incomprehenſible Wiſedom, that uncontrollable power, that unconfined Bounty, that unblemiſhed Purity, which are united in him, and ſhine from him with a perfect luſtre; if, I ſay, the very faint reſemblances, and imperfect participations of theſe Excellencies) diſcerned in other things, are apt to raiſe our admiration, and allure our affection toward them; if the glimmering of ſome ſmall inconſiderable benefit, the ſhadow of real profit diſcovered in theſe inferiour empty things, is able ſo ſtrongly to attract our eyes, and fix our hearts upon them, why ſhould not from a like, but ſo much greater cauſe, the like effect proceed? Whence can it be that the apprehenſion of an Object ſo infinitely lovely, ſo incomparably beneficial (if not paſſing curſorily through our fancy, but deeply impreſſed upon our mind) ſhould not proportionably affect and incline us towards Him with all that deſire, that delight, that good will which are proper to love? If we think, Pſal. 89. 6. as the Pſalmiſt did, that there is none in heaven or in earth comparable to God (comparable in eſſential Perfection, comparable in beneficial Influ- Pſal. 73. 25. ence) why ſhould we not be diſpoſed alſo to ſay with him; Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I deſire beſides thee. Such a reverent eſteem is the proper foundation upon which true Love is built, and which upholds it: whence, as the Love of God doth commonly denote all the Duties of Religion; ſo doth Fear (or Reverence to him) likewiſe in Scripture ſtyle comprehend and expreſs them all; Comp. Pſal. 113. 17, 18. it being the Root from whence Love doth ſprout and by which it is nou- Pſal. 31. 23. 34. 9. 145. 19, 20. riſhed; it being the beginning of that true Wiſdom by which we embrace and faſten our affection upon the Sovereign Good. Hence we may obſerve, that thoſe devout perſons, whoſe hearts were fulleſt of this Love, their minds were moſt employed in meditation upon the Divine excellencies, and upon the beneficial Emanations from them in Bounty and Mercy upon the Creatures; their Tongues being tuned by Pſal. 146. 7. 104. 33. 34. 1. 71. 15. 145. 2. 35. 28. 71. 8. their thoughts, and their inward Eſteem breaking forth into Praiſe. Every day, all the day long, at all times did they bleſs God, praiſe his name, ſpeak of his righteouſneſs, ſhew forth his ſalvation, as the Pſalmiſt expreſſes his Practice, ariſing from Love enlivened by the eſteem of God and the apprehenſion of his excellent Goodneſs: from whence alſo that ſtrong Faith, that conſtant Hope, that chearful Confidence they repoſed in him; that hearty approbation of all his Counſels and Purpoſes: that full acquieſcence of mind in his Proceedings; that entire ſubmiſſion of their underſtanding to his Diſcipline, and reſignation of their will to his good pleaſure; that yeilding up themſelves (their Souls and Bodies, their Lives and Goods) to his diſpoſal, with all the like high effects and pregnant ſigns of Love did flow: but

2. Another property of this Love is an earneſt deſire of obtaining a Propriety in God; of Poſſeſſing him (in a manner) and enjoying him; of approaching him and being, ſo far as may be, united to him. When we ſtand upon ſuch terms with any perſon, that we have a free acceſs unto and a familiar entercourſe with him, that his converſation is profitable and delightfull to us; that we can upon all occaſions have his advice and aſſiſtance; that he is always ready in our needs, and at our deſire to employ what is in him of ability for our good and advantage, we may be ſaid to own ſuch a perſon, to poſſeſs and enjoy him; to be 1 Sam. 18. 1. tyed (as it were) and joyned to him (as 'tis ſaid the ſoul of Jonathan was knit to the ſoul of David, ſo that he loved him as his own ſoul) And ſuch a propriety in, ſuch a poſſeſſion of, ſuch an alliance and conjunction to himſelf God vouchſafes to them, who are duely qualified for Heb. 11. 16. ſo great a good; He was not aſhamed (ſaith the Apoſtle concerning the faithful Patriarchs) to be called their God; to be appropriated in a 1 Joh. 2. 23. manner unto them; And, He that Acknowledgeth the Son (ſaith S. John Pſal. 119. 2. Iſa. 65. 1. concerning good Chriſtians) καὶ τὸν πατέρα ἔχει, hath, (or poſſeſſeth) Deut. 11. 22. the Father alſo: and to ſeek; to find; to draw near to; to cleave unto; Joſh. 23. 8. 1 Cor. 6. 17. to abide with, to abide in, and ſuch other phraſes frequently do occurr Acts. 11. 23. in Scripture denoting that near relation which good men ſtand in to- Joh. 15. 4. 17. 21. ward God; implying that he affords them a continual liberty of acceſs 1 Joh. 2. 24. and coming into his eſpecial preſence, that he admits them to a kind of converſe and communion with himſelf, full of ſpiritual benefit and delight; that bearing an eſpecial good will and favour toward them, he is diſpoſed to exert his infinite wiſdom and power in their behalf; is ready dy to impart all needful and convenient good unto them (help in their needs, ſupply in wants, protection in dangers; the direction, aſſiſtance and comfort of his Holy Spirit; pardon of ſins and peace of conſcience; all the bleſſings of grace here, and all the felicities of glory hereafter) ſuch an intereſt, as it were, in God and a title unto him, ſuch a poſſeſſion and enjoyment of him we are capable of obtaining: and as that enjoyment is in it ſelf infinitely above all things deſirable; ſo, if we love God, we cannot ſurely but be earneſtly deſirous thereof: a cold indifferency about it, a faint wiſhing for it, a ſlothful tendency after it are much on this ſide love; it will inflame our heart, it will tranſport our mind, it will beget a vigorous and lively motion of ſoul towards it: for Love you know is commonly reſembled unto, yea even aſſumes the name of Fire; for it warms the breaſt, agitates the ſpirits, quickens all the powers of Soul, and ſets them on work in deſire and purſuance of the beloved Object: you may imagine as well fire without heat or activity, as love without ſome ardency of deſire. Pſ. 84.2. 42.1. 63.1. 143.6. Longing, and thirſting of ſoul; fainting for, and panting after; crying out, and ſtretching forth the hands toward God; ſuch are the expreſſions ſignifying the good Pſalmiſt's love; by ſo apt, and ſo pathetical reſemblances doth he ſet out the vehemency of his deſire to enjoy God. I need not add concerning Endeavour; for that by plain conſequence doth neceſſarily follow Deſire: the thirſty ſoul will never be at reſt till it have found out its convenient refreſhment: if we, as David did, do long after God, we ſhall alſo with him earneſtly ſeek God; nor ever be at reſt till we have found him. Coherent with this is a

3. Third property of this Love, that is, a great Complacence, Satiſfaction and Delight in the enjoyment of God: in the ſenſe of having ſuch a propriety in him; in the partaking thoſe emanations of favour and beneficence from him; and conſequently in the inſtruments conveying, in the means conducing to ſuch enjoyment: for joy and content are the natural fruits of obtaining what we love, what we much value, what we earneſtly deſire. Yea, what we chiefly love, if we become poſſeſſed thereof, we eaſily reſt ſatisfied therewith, although all other comforts be wanting to us. The covetous perſon for inſtance, who dotes upon his wealth, let him be pinched with the want of conveniences; let his body be wearied with toil; let his mind be diſtracted with care; let him be ſurrounded with obloquy and diſgrace —at mihi plaudo ipſe domi; he nevertheleſs enjoys himſelf in beholding his beloved pelf: the ambitious man likewiſe, although his ſtate be full of trouble and diſquiet; though he be the mark of common envy and hatred; though he be expoſed to many croſſes and dangers; yet while he ſtands in power and dignity, among all thoſe thorns of care and fear, his heart enjoys much reſt and pleaſure. In like manner we may obſerve thoſe pious men, whoſe hearts were endued with this Love, by the preſent ſenſe, or aſſured hope of enjoying God, ſupporting themſelves under all wants and diſtreſſes; rejoycing, yea boaſting and exulting in their afflictions; Luke 6. 23. 1 Pet. 4. 13. Rom. 5. 3. Col. 1. 24. and no wonder, while they conceived themſelves ſecure in the poſſeſſion of their heart's wiſh; of that which they incomparably valued and deſired above all things; which by experience they have found ſo comfortable and delicious: O taſte and ſee (exclaims the Pſalmiſt, inſpired with this paſſion) Pſal. 34. 8. O taſte and ſee, that the Lord is good: 36. 7. How excellent is thy loving kindneſs, O Lord; they, (they who enjoy it) ſhall be abundantly ſatisfied with the fatneſs of thy houſe, and thou ſhalt make them drink of the river of thy pleaſures: A day in thy courts is better than

Pſal. 84. 1, 10. than a thouſand: my ſoul ſhall be ſatisfied as with marrow and fatneſs; ſo
63. 5. did thoſe devout practiſers of this Duty expreſs the ſatisfaction they felt in God, and in thoſe things whereby he did impart the enjoyment of Neh. 9. 25. himſelf unto them. So did the light of God's countenance cheer their Pſal. 4. 6. heart; ſo did his loving kindneſs appear better than life it ſelf unto them.
63. 3. Hence do they ſo frequently enjoyn and exhort us to be glad; to delight
Pſal. 33. 1. 32. 11. 105. 3. our ſelves; to glory; to rejoyce continually in the Lord; in the ſenſe of his 107. 12. 37. 4. goodneſs, in the hope of his favour; the doing ſo being an inſeparable property of love; to which we adjoyn another.

4. The feeling much diſpleaſure and regret in being deprived of ſuch enjoyment; in the abſence or diſtance as it were of God from us; the loſs or leſſening of his favour; the ſubtraction of his gracious influences from us: for ſurely anſwerable to the love we bear unto any thing will be our grief for the want or loſs thereof: it was a ſhrewd argument which the Poet uſed to prove, that men loved their moneys better than their friends, becauſe —— majore tumultu plorantur nummi, quàm funera —— they more lamented the loſs of thoſe than the death of theſe; Indeed, that which a man principally affects, if he is bereaved thereof, be his condition otherwiſe how proſperous and comfortable ſoever, he cannot be contented; all other enjoyments become unſavoury and unſatisfactory to him. And ſo it is in our caſe, when God, although only for trial, (according to his Wiſdom and good pleaſure) hides his face, and withdraws his hand; leaving the ſoul in a kind of deſolation and darkneſs; not finding that ready aid in diſtreſs, not feeling that chearful vivacity in obedience, not taſting that ſweet reliſh of devotion, which have been uſually afforded thereto; if love reſide in the heart, it will ſurely diſpoſe it to a ſenſible grief; it will inſpire ſuch Pſal. 89. 46. exclamations as thoſe of the Pſalmiſt: How long, Lord, wilt thou hide
69. 16. 30. 7. thy face? hide not thy face from thy ſervant, for I am in trouble; turn unto
42. 3. to me according to the multitude of thy tender mercies; draw nigh unto my ſoul and redeem it. Even our Saviour himſelf in ſuch a caſe, when God ſeemed for a time to withdraw the light of his countenance, and the protection of his helpful hand from him (or to frown and lay his heavy Mat. 26. 38. hand upon him) had his ſoul περίλυπον ἕως θανάτου, extremely grieved
27. 46. and full of deadly anguiſh; neither ſurely was it any other cauſe than exceſs of love, which made that temporary deſertion ſo grievous and bitter to him, extorting from his moſt meek and patient heart that wofull complaint, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me! But Iſa. 59. 2. eſpecially when, our iniquities have, (as the Prophet expreſſeth it) ſeparated
Jer. 5. 25. between our God and us; and our ſins have hid his face from us;
Iſa. 44. 26. when that thick cloud hath eclipſed the light of his countenance, and intercepted his gracious influences; when by wilfully offending we have 1 Sam. 8. 7. (as the Iſraelites are ſaid to have done) rejected our God, caſt him off,
10. 9. and driven him from us; ſo depriving our ſelves of propriety in him, and the poſſeſſion of his favour; then if any love be alive in us, it will Pſal. 6. 35. prompt us with thoſe good men in their penitential agonies, to be grievouſly
38. 51. 102. ſenſible of, and ſorely to bewail that our wretched condition;
130. 143. there will not (if we ſo heartily love God and value his favour as they Pſal. 38. 3. did) be any ſoundneſs in our fleſh, or reſt in our bones; our ſpirit will be 143. 4. overwhelmed within us, and our heart within us deſolate. Our heart will 102. 4. be ſmitten and withered like graſs, upon the conſideration and ſenſe of ſo ineſtimable a loſs. Love will render ſuch a condition very ſad and uneaſie to us; will make all other delights inſipid and diſtaſtful; all our life will become bitter and burthenſome to us; neither if it in any meaſure abides in us, ſhall we receive content, till by humble deprecation we have regained ſome glimpſe of God's favour, ſome hope of being reinſtated in our poſſeſſion of him. Farther yet,

Pſal. 6. 4. 38. 21. 51. 11. 102. 2. 143, 7.

5. Another property of this Love is, to bear the higheſt good will toward God; ſo as to wiſh heartily and effectually (according to our power) to procure all good to him, and to delight in it; ſo as to endeavour to prevent and to remove all evil (if I may ſo ſpeak) that may befall him, and to be heartily diſpleaſed therewith. Although no ſuch benefit or advantage can accrue to God which may increaſe his eſſential and indefectible happineſs; no harm or damage can arrive that may impair it (for he can be neither really more or leſs rich, or glorious, or joyfull than he is; neither have our deſire or our fear, our delight or our grief, our deſigns or our endeavours any object, any ground in thoſe reſpects) yet hath he declared, that there be certain intereſts and concernments, which, out of his abundant goodneſs and condeſcenſion, he doth tender and proſecute as his own; as if he did really receive advantage by the good, and prejudice by the bad ſucceſs, reſpectively belonging to them; that he earneſtly deſires, and is greatly delighted with ſome things, very much diſlikes, and is grievouſly diſpleaſed with other things: for inſtance, that he bears a fatherly affection towards his creatures, and earneſtly deſires their welfare; and delights to ſee them enjoy the good he deſigned them; as alſo diſlikes the contrary events; doth commiſerate and condole their miſery; that he is conſequently well pleaſed, when piety and juſtice, peace and order (the chief means conducing to our welfare) do flouriſh; and diſpleaſed, when impiety and iniquity, diſſenſion and diſorder (thoſe certain ſources of miſchief to us) do prevail; that he is well ſatisfied with our rendring to him that obedience, honour and reſpect which are due to him; and highly offended with our injurious and diſreſpectfull behaviour towards him, in the commiſſion of ſin and violation of his moſt juſt and holy commandments: ſo that there wants not ſufficient matter of our exerciſing good will both in affection and action toward God; we are capable both of wiſhing, and (in a manner, as he will interpret and accept it) of doing good to him, by our concurrence with him, in promoting thoſe things which he approves and delights in, and in removing the contrary. And ſo ſurely ſhall we do, if we truly love God: for love, as it would have the object to be its own, as it intends to enjoy it; ſo it would have it in its beſt ſtate, and would put it thereinto, and would conſerve it therein; and would thence contribute all it is able to the welfare, to the ornament, to the pleaſure and content thereof. What is it (ſaith Cicero) to love, but to will or deſire, that the perſon loved ſhould receive the greateſt good that can be? Love alſo doth reconcile, conform and unite the inclinations and affections of him who loves, to the inclinations and affections of him who is beloved; Eadem velle & eadem nolle, to conſent in liking and diſliking of things; if it be not the cauſe, if it be not the formal reaſon or eſſence (as ſome have made it) 'tis at leaſt a certain effect of love. If then we truly love God, we ſhall deſire that all his deſigns proſper, that his pleaſure be fulfilled, that all duty be performed, all glory rendred to him: we ſhall be grieved at the wrong, the diſhonour the diſappointment he receives: eſpecially we ſhall endeavour in our own practice, with Holy David, to perform πάντα τὰ θελήματα αὐτοῦ, all that God wills, deſires, or delights in; to eſchew whatever offends him. Our deſire, our delight, our endeavour will conſpire with and be ſubordinate to his; for it would be a ſtrange kind of Pſal. 16. 2. Job. 22. 3.

Jer. 9. 24.

Quid eſt amare, niſi velle bonis aliquem affici quàm maximis? Cic. de Fin. 2.

Acts. 13. 22.

of love that were conſiſtent with the voluntary doing of that which is hurtfull, injurious or offenſive to that we love ; ſuch actions being the 1 Joh. 4. 20. proper effects, the natural ſigns of hatred and enmity : If any man ſay,
3. 17. I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a lier, ſaith Saint John; and, If any man ſeeth his brother need, and ſhutteth his bowels towards him, how doth the love of God abide in him ? He that in his affections is ſo unlike, ſo contrary unto God ; he that is unwilling to comply with God's will in ſo reaſonable a performance ; he that in a matter wherein God hath declared himſelf ſo much concerned, and ſo affected therewith, doth not care to croſs him, to diſpleaſe and diſappoint him ; how can he with any ſhew of truth, or with any modeſty pretend to love God ? Hence it is, that keeping of God's Commandments is commonly repreſented to us as the moſt proper expreſſion, as the ſureſt argument of our love to God :
Exod. 20. 6. —ſhewing mercy to thouſands of them that love me, and keep my commandments;
they are joined together as terms equivalent ; or as inſeparable
Joh. 14. 21. companions in effect : He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, 23. 15. 14. he it is that loveth me : Ye are my friends, (that is, not only objects of my affection, but actively friends, bearing affection unto me) if 1 Joh. 4. 12. ye do whatſoever I command you, ſaith our Saviour : And, Whoſo keepeth his word, in him is the love of God truly perfected : (he hath the truth and ſincerity ; he hath the integrity and conſummation of love :
without it love is wholly falſe and counterfeit, or very lame and imperfect ; ſo the loving and beloved Diſciple teaches us.) For by doing thus, as we ſignifie our eſteem of God's wiſdom which directeth us, our dread of his power and juſtice that can puniſh us, our hope in his goodneſs and fidelity to reward us, our regard to his majeſty and authority over us ; ſo eſpecially thereby (if our obedience at leaſt be free and cheerful) we expreſs our good will towards him ; ſhewing thereby, that we are diſpoſed to do him all the good and gratifie him all we can ; that his intereſts, his honour, his content are dear and precious to Pſal. 86. 11. us. And were indeed our hearts knit unto God, with this bond of perfection, Col. 3. 14. we could not in our wills, and conſequently in our practice be ſo ſevered from him ; we ſhould alſo love heartily all vertue and goodneſs, the neareſt reſemblances of him, and which he chiefly loves ; we Pſal. 11. 7. ſhould do what David ſo oft profeſſes himſelf to do, love his law, and
Pſ. 119. 163, greatly delight in his commandments. With our Saviour, we ſhould delight 165, 113, 16, to perform his will ; it would (as it was to him) be our meat and 35, 70, 47, 24, 77. our drink to do it ; his yoke would be eaſie indeed, and his burthen light
Pſal. 1. 2. 112. 1. 40. 8. unto us ; his yoke ſo eaſie, that we ſhould wear it rather as a jewel about
Heb. 10. 7. our necks than as a yoke ; his burthen ſo light, that we ſhould not
Joh. 4. 34. 5. 30. feel it as a burthen, but eſteem it our privilege. We ſhould not be ſo Prov. 3. 22. dull in apprehending, or ſo ſlack in performing duty ; for this ſharpſighted affection would preſently diſcern, would readily ſuggeſt it to us; by the leaſt intimation it would perceive what pleaſeth God, and would ſnatch opportunity of doing it : we ſhould not need any arguments to perſuade us, nor any force to compell us ; love would inſpire us with ſufficient vigour and alacrity ; it would urge and ſtimulate us forward not only to walk in, but even (as the Pſalmiſt expreſſeth it) to run Pſal. 119. 32. the ways of God's commandments.

But let thus much ſerve for explication of the nature of this Duty ; in order (as was before ſaid) to the direction of our Practice, and examination thereof: The particular Duties mentioned being comprehended in, or appertaining to the love of God ; if we perceive that we practiſe them, we may, to our ſatiſfaction and comfort, infer, that proportionably we are endued with this Grace; if not, we have reaſon (ſuch as ſhould beget remorſe and pious ſorrow in us) to ſuſpect we abide in a ſtate of diſaffection or of indifferency towards him. If we find the former good diſpoſition, we ſhould ſtrive to cheriſh and improve it; if the ſecond bad one, we ſhould (as we tender our own welfare and happineſs, as we would avoid utter ruine and miſery) endeavour to remove it.

II. To the effecting of which purpoſes, I ſhall next propound ſome means conducible; ſome in way of removing Obſtacles, others by immediately promoting the Duty.

Of the firſt kind are theſe enſuing:

1. The deſtroying of all loves oppoſite to the love of God, extinguiſhing all affection to things odious and offenſive to God: mortifying all corrupt and perverſe, all unrighteous and unholy deſires*. It agrees with ſouls no leſs than with bodies, that they cannot at once move or tend contrary ways; upward and downward, backward and forward at one time; it is not poſſible we ſhould together truly eſteem, earneſtly deſire, bear ſincere good will to things in nature and inclination quite repugnant each to other. No man ever took him for his real friend, who maintains correſpondence, ſecret or open; who joins in acts of hoſtility with his profeſſed enemies; at leaſt we cannot, as we ought, love God with our whole heart, if with any part thereof we affect his enemies; thoſe, which are mortally and irreconcileably ſo; as are all iniquity and impurity, all inordinate luſts both of fleſh and ſpirit: the carnal mind (the minding or affecting of the fleſh) is, Saint Paul tells us, enmity toward God; for 'tis not ſubject to the law of God, nor can be; 'tis an enemy, even the worſt of enemies, an incorrigibly obſtinate rebel againſt God, and can we then retaining any love to God, or peace with him, comply and conſpire therewith? And, The friendſhip of the world (that is I ſuppoſe of thoſe corrupt principles, and thoſe vicious cuſtoms which uſually prevail in the world) is alſo, Saint James tells us, enmity with God; ſo that (he adds) if any man be a friend to the world, he is thereby conſtituted (he immediately ipſo facto becomes) an enemy to God. Saint John affirms the ſame; If any man love the world, the love of the father is not in him; explaining himſelf, that by the world he means thoſe things, which are moſt generally embraced and practiſed therein; the luſt, or deſire, of the fleſh, (that is, ſenſuality and intemperance) the luſt of the eyes, (that is, envy, covetouſneſs, vain curioſity, and the like) the oſtentation, or boaſting, of life (that is, pride, ambition, vain-glory, arrogance) qualities as irreconcileably oppoſite to the holy nature and will of God, ſo altogether inconſiſtent with the love of him; begetting in us an averſation and antipathy towards him; rendring his holineſs diſtaſtfull to our affections, and his juſtice dreadful to our conſciences; and himſelf conſequently, his will, his law, his preſence hatefull to us: while we take him to be our enemy and to hate us, we ſhall certainly in like manner ſtand affected towards him: this indeed is the main obſtacle, the removal of which will much facilitate the introduction of divine love; it being a great ſtep to reconciliation and friendſhip, to be diſengaged from the adverſe party: we ſhould then eaſily diſcern the beauty of divine goodneſs and ſanctity, when the miſts of ignorance, of errour, of corrupt prejudice, ariſing from thoſe groſs carnal affections, were diſſipated; we ſhould better reliſh the ſweet and ſavoury graces of God, when the palate of our mind were purged from τὸ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκός. Rom. 8. 7.

* Pſal. 97. 10. Ye that love the Lord, hate evil.

Jam. 4. 4.

καθίσταται.

1 Joh. 2. 15.

ἐπιθυμία τῆς σαρκός. ἐπιθυμία τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν. ἡ ἀλαζονεία τοῦ βίου.

from vicious tinctures; we ſhould be more ready to hope for peace and favour in his eyes, when our conſciences were freed from the ſenſe of ſuch provocations and defilements. But

2. If we would obtain this excellent Grace, we muſt reſtrain our affections towards all other things, however in their nature innocent and ἄρχων. Matt. 19. 20. indifferent. The young Gentleman in the Goſpel had, it ſeems, arrived Mark 10. 21. to the former pitch; having through the courſe of his life abſtained ἠγάπησεν αὐτόν. from groſſer iniquities and impurities; ſo far, that our Saviour, in regard Luk. 18. 22. to that attainment of his, conceived an affection for him (he loved him, 'tis ſaid) yet was not he ſufficiently diſpoſed to love God; being in one thing deficient, that he retained an immoderate affection to his wealth and worldly conveniencies; with which ſort of affections the love of God cannot conſiſt: for we much undervalue God, and cannot therefore duely love him, if we deem any thing comparable to him, or conſiderable in worth or uſefulneſs when he comes in competition: if we deem, that the poſſeſſion of any other thing beſides him,can confer to our happineſs, or the want thereof can prejudice it, and make us miſerable:
no other love ſhould bear any proportion to the love of him; no other object ſhould appear (as indeed none really is) ſimply good, de-Phil. 3. 8. ſirable or aimable to us. What value Saint Paul had of his legal qualifications and privileges, the ſame ſhould we have concerning all other things in appearance pleaſant or convenient to us; they ought, in regard ζημία, σκύβαλα. to God, to ſeem dammage and dung; not only mean and deſpicable, but even ſordid and loathſome to us; not only unworthy of our regard and deſire, but deſerving our hatred and abhorrence; we ſhould, Luke 14. 26. I ſay, even hate the beſt of them; ſo our Saviour expreſſeth it; If any man doth not hate his father and his mother, his wife and his children, his brothers and ſiſters, and even his own ſoul (or his own life) he cannot be my diſciple; that is, if any man retain in his heart any affection not infinitely (as it were) leſs than that which he bears to God; if any thing be in compariſon dear and precious to him, he is not diſpoſed to entertain the main point of Chriſt's diſcipline, the ſincere and entire love of God. To love him, as he requires, with all our heart, implies, that our heart be filled with his love, ſo that no room be left for any other paſſion to enter or dwell there. And indeed ſuch, if we obſerve it, is the nature of our ſoul, we can hardly together harbour earneſt or ſerious affections toward different objects; one of them will prevail and predominate; and ſo doing will not ſuffer the other to remain, but will extrude or extinguiſh it: No heart of man can correſpond with two Matt: 6. 24. rivals, but, (as our Saviour teacheth us) it will hate and deſpiſe one, will love and ſtick to the other; whence he inferrs, that we cannot ſerve (that is, affectionately adhere to) both God and Mammon. If we have Pſal. 62. 10. (according to the Pſalmiſt's phraſe) ſet our hearts upon wealth, and 1 Tim. 6. 9. 17. will be rich (are reſolved to be, as S. Paul expreſſeth it) if we eagerly Joh. 12. 43. aſpire to power and honour, with the Phariſees, preferring the applauſe of men before the favour of God: if any worldly or bodily pleaſure, or any curioſity how plauſible ſoever, hath ſeiſed upon our ſpirits and captivated our affections; if any inferiour object whatever with its appa-2 Tim. 4. 10. rent ſplendour, ſweetneſs, goodlineſs, convenience hath ſo inveagled our fancy, that we have an exceeding eſteem thereof, and a greedy appetite thereto; that we enjoy it with huge content, and cannot part from it without much regret; that thing doth at preſent take up God's place within us; ſo that our heart is uncapable, at leaſt in due meaſure, of divine love; but if we be indifferently affected towards all ſuch things, and are unconcerned in the preſence or abſence of them; eſteeming them as they are, mean and vain; loving them as they deſerve, as inferiour and trivial; if (according to Saint Paul's direction) we uſe them as if we uſed them not; 'tis another good ſtep toward the love of God: the divine light will ſhine more brightly into ſo calm and ſerene a medium: a ſoul void of other affections, will not be only more capable to receive, but apt to ſuck in that heavenly one; being inſenſible, in any conſiderable degree, of all other comforts and complacences, we ſhall be apt to ſearch after, and reach out at that, which alone can ſatisfie our underſtanding, and ſatiate our deſires; eſpecially if we add hereto,

1 Cor. 7. 31.

3. The freeing of our hearts alſo from immoderate affection to our ſelves (I mean not from a ſober deſire or an earneſt regard to our own true good; for this as nature enforces to, ſo all reaſon allows, and even God's command obligeth us to; nor can it be exceſſive; but a high conceit of our ſelves as worthy or able, a high confidence in any thing we have within us or about us) for this is a very ſtrong bar againſt the entrance, as of all other charity, ſo eſpecially of this; for as the love of an external object doth thruſt, as it were, our ſoul outwards towards it; ſo the love of our ſelves detains it within, or draws it inwards; and conſequently theſe inclinations croſſing each other cannot both have effect, but one will ſubdue and deſtroy the other. If our mind be—Ipſa ſuis contenta bonis—ſatisfied with her own (taking them for her own) endowments, abilities, or fancied perfections; if we imagine our ſelves wiſe enough to perceive, good enough to chuſe, reſolute enough to undertake, ſtrong enough to atchieve conſtant enough to purſue whatever is conducible to our real happineſs and beſt content; we ſhall not care to go farther; we will not be at the trouble to ſearch abroad for that, which, in our opinion, we can ſo readily find, ſo eaſily enjoy at home. If we ſo admire and dote upon our ſelves, we thereby put our ſelves into God's ſtead, and uſurp the throne due to him in our hearts; comparing our ſelves to God, and in effect preferring our ſelves before him; thereby conſequently ſhutting out that unparallel'd eſteem, that predominant affection we owe to him; while we are buſie in dreſſing and decking, in courting and worſhipping this Idol of our fancy, we ſhall be eſtranged from the true object of our devotion; both we ſhall willingly neglect him, and he in juſt indignation will deſert us. But if as all other things, ſo even our ſelves do appear exceedingly vile and contemptible, foul and ugly in compariſon to God? If we take our ſelves to be (as truly we are) mere nothings, or ſomethings worſe; not only deſtitute of all conſiderable perfections, but full of great defects; blind and fond in our conceits, crooked and perverſe in our wills, infirm and unſtable in all our powers, unable to diſcern, unwilling to embrace, backward to ſet upon, inconſtant in proſecuteing thoſe things which are truly good and advantageous to us; If we have, I ſay, this right opinion and judgment of our ſelves, ſeeing within us nothing lovely or deſirable, no proper object there of our eſteem or affection, no bottom to reſt our mind upon, no ground of ſolid comfort at home, we ſhall then be apt to look abroad, to direct our eyes, and ſettle our affections upon ſomewhat more excellent in it ſelf, or more beneficial to us, that ſeems better to deſerve our regard, and more able to ſupply our defects: And if all other things about us appear alike deformed and deficient (unworthy our affection and unable to ſatisfie our deſires) then may we be diſpoſed to ſeek, to find, to faſten and repoſe our ſoul upon the only proper object of our love; in whom we ſhall obtain all that we need, infallible wiſdom to guide us, omnipotent ſtrength to help us, infinite goodneſs for us to admire and enjoy.

Τῷ γὰρ ὄντι ὁ ἐξ αὐτοῦ τις ἔχει περισσὸς καὶ μάταιος παρ' ἄλλου λαμβάνων. Epict. 1. 9.

Gal. 6. 3.

Theſe are the chief Obſtacles, the removing of which conduce to the begetting and increaſing the love of God in us. A ſoul ſo cleanſed from love to bad and filthy things, ſo emptied of affection to vain and unprofitable things, ſo opened and dilated by excluding all conceit of, all confidence in it ſelf, is a veſſel proper for the divine love to be infuſed into; into ſo large and pure a vacuity (as finer ſubſtances are apt to flow of themſelves into ſpaces void of groſſer matter) that free and moveable Spirit of divine grace will be ready to ſucceed, and therein to diſperſe it ſelf. As all other things in nature, the cloggs being removed which hinder them, do preſently tend with all their force to the place of their reſt and well being; ſo would, it ſeems, our ſouls being loſed from baſer affections obſtructing them, willingly incline toward God, the natural centre (as it were) and boſom of their affection; would reſume (as Origen ſpeaks) that natural philtre (that intrinſick ſpring, or incentive of Love) which all creatures have toward their creatour; eſpecially, if to theſe we add thoſe poſitive Inſtruments, which are more immediately and directly ſubſervient to the production of this love; they are theſe:

Φίλτρον ἀναλαμβάνειν φυσικὸν τὸ πρὸς τὸν κτίσαντα. Orig. in Celſ. p. 135.

1. Attentive conſideration of the divine Perfections, with endeavour to obtain a right and clear apprehenſion of them.

2. The conſideration of God's Works and Actions; his works and actions of nature, of providence, of grace.

3. Serious regard and reflection upon the peculiar Benefits by the divine goodneſs vouchſafed to our ſelves.

4. An earneſt reſolution and endeavour to perform God's commandments, although upon inferiour conſiderations of reaſon; upon hope, fear, deſire to attain the benefits of Obedience, to ſhun the miſchiefs from Sin.

5. Aſſiduous Prayer to Almighty God, that he in mercy would pleaſe to beſtow his love upon us, and by his Grace to work it in us.

But I muſt forbear the proſecution of theſe things, rather than farther treſpaſs upon your patience. Let us conclude all with a good Collect, ſometimes uſed by our Church.

O Lord, who haſt taught us, that all our doings without charity are nothing worth, ſend thy Holy Ghoſt, and pour into our hearts that moſt excellent gift of charity, the very bond of peace and of all vertues, without which whoſoever liveth is counted dead before thee; Grant this for thine only Son Jeſus Chriſt his ſake. Amen.

SERMON XXIV.

Of the Love of God.

MATTH. XXII. 37.

Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart.

W*Hich is the great commandment?* was the queſtion, in anſwer whereto our Saviour returns this Text; and that with higheſt reaſon (diſcernible by every man) for that of neceſſity the love of God is the principal duty we owe unto him; the great duty indeed, as being largeſt in extent, and comprehending in a manner all other duties of piety; as that which exceeds in proper worth and dignity (employing the nobleſt faculties of our ſouls in their beſt operations upon the moſt excellent object) as that which communicates virtue unto, and hath a ſpecial influence upon all other duties; in fine, as that, which is the ſum, the ſoul, the ſpring of all other duties: in diſcourſing whereupon, I did formerly propound this method; Firſt, to declare the nature thereof; Then, to ſhew ſome means apt to beget and improve that excellent vertue in us; Laſtly, to propoſe ſome inducements to the practice thereof.

The firſt part I endeavoured to perform, by deſcribing it according to its eſſential properties (common to love in general, and more particularly to this) of duely eſteeming God, of deſiring (according as we are capable) to poſſeſs and enjoy him, of receiving delight and ſatisfaction in the enjoyment of him, of feeling diſpleaſure in being deprived hereof, of bearing good will unto him, expreſſed by endeavours to pleaſe him, by delighting in the advancement of his glory, by grieving when he is diſſerved or diſhonoured.

The next part I alſo entred upon, and offered to conſideration thoſe means, which ſerve chiefly to remove the impediments of our love to God; which were,

1. The ſuppreſſing all affections oppoſite to this; all perverſe and corrupt, all unrighteous and unholy deſires.

2. The reſtraining or keeping within bounds of moderation our affections towards other things, even in their nature innocent or indifferent.

3. The freeing our hearts from immoderate affection towards our ſelves; from all conceit of, and confidence in any qualities or abilities of our own; the diligent uſe of which means I did ſuppoſe would conduce much to the production and increaſe of divine love within us.

To them I ſhall now proceed to ſubjoin other Inſtruments more immediately and directly ſubſervient to the ſame purpoſe; whereof the Firſt is, Καθόλȣ μὲν ἡ τῶν παθῶν κακία διὰ τὴν περὶ θεȣ̃ ἀγνωσίαν, ἢ ἀδόκιμον γνῶσιν ἐγγίνεται. Baſil. de Jud. Dei, Tom. 2. p. 261.

1. Attentive conſideration upon the divine Perfections, with endeavour to obtain a right and clear apprehenſion of them: as counterfeit worth and beauty receive advantage by diſtance and darkneſs; ſo real excellency —ſi propius ſtes Te capiet magis— the greater light you view it in, the nearer you approach it, the more ſtrictly you examine it, the more you will approve and like it; ſo the more we think of God, the better we know him, the fuller and clearer conceptions we have of him, the more we ſhall be apt to eſteem and deſire him, the more excellent in himſelf, the more beneficial to us he will appear. Hence is the knowledge of God repreſented in holy Writ not only as a main in-
2 Pet. 2. 20. ſtrument of Religion, but as an eſſential character thereof: as equivalent Pſal. 36. 10. to the being well affected toward God: O continue (ſaith the Pſalmiſt)
9. 10.
Iſa. 5. 13. thy loving kindneſs unto them that know thee; that is, to all religious
11. 9. people. And This (ſaith our Saviour) is life eternal, to know thee
Hoſ. 2. 10.
Joh. 17. 3. the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent; knowledge of
Jer. 22. 16. them implying all good affections toward them: as on the other ſide,
24. 7. 31. 34. ignorance of God denotes diſaffection or want of affection toward God:
2 Cor. 10. 5.
Iſa. 1. 3. Now the ſons of Eli ('tis ſaid) were ſons of Belial, they knew not the
Jer. 19. 3, 6. Lord: And, He that loveth not (ſaith Saint John) doth not know God;
10. 25.
1 Theſſ. 4. 5. the want of love to God is an evident ſign, a natural effect of ignorance
1 Sam. 2. 12. concerning him: indeed conſidering the nature of our mind, and its
1 Joh. 4. 8. ordinary method of operation, it ſeems impoſſible, that ſuch perfection diſcerned ſhould not beget anſwerable reverence and affection thereto: if beautiful ſpectacles, harmonious ſounds, fragrant odours, delicate ſavours do neceſſarily and certainly pleaſe the reſpective ſenſes; why ſhould not with the like ſure efficacy the proper objects of our mind affect it, if duely repreſented and conveyed thereto? If the wit of the moſt ingenious Artiſts, the cunning of the deepeſt Politicians, the wiſdom of the ſageſt Philoſophers are but mere blindneſs and ſtupidity in compariſon to the wiſdom of God; the loweſt inſtance or ex-
1 Cor. 1. 25. preſſion of whoſe wiſdom (his τὸ μωρὸν, his folly, as Saint Paul ſpeaks) is wiſer than men, doth excell the reſults of man's higheſt wiſdom; yet them we admire and commend in men, why then do we not much more adore the divine wiſdom? If the abilities of them who dextrouſly manage great buſineſs, or atchieve proſperouſly great exploits are indeed mere impotency in regard to God's power; whoſe weakneſs (that is, the ſmalleſt effects of whoſe power) is (as Saint Paul again tells us) ſtronger than men, ſurpaſſes the utmoſt reſults of humane endeavour; yet thoſe things in men we extoll and celebrate, how can we then forbear to reverence the divine power? If the diſpenſers of freeſt and largeſt bounty among men, the nobleſt patriots, the moſt munificent benefactours, the moſt tenderly affectionate friends be in reſpect of God unworthy to be counted or called good (as our Saviour tells us; Matt. 7. 11. If ye being bad know to give good things; and, There is none good, but
Luke 11. 13.
Matt. 19. 17. God;) yet ſuch perſons are much beloved and applauded; how then can we abſtain from paying the like meaſure of affection and reſpect to the divine goodneſs? if good qualities ſo inferiour and defective obtain ſo much from us, whence comes it that the infinitely ſuperiour and moſt perfect excellencies of God do not beget in their proportion a ſuitable regard and veneration in us towards him? whence, if not either from our not firmly believing them, or not rightly apprehending them, or not attentively conſidering them? Our belief of them in groſs and at large we may ſuppoſe, as connected with the belief of God's exiſtence, and included in the very notion of God; the defect therefore muſt proceed ceed from the remaining cauſes, want of a right apprehenſion, or neglect of attentive conſideration about them: as to the firſt of theſe; it is common for men to have confuſed, imperfect and wrong conceptions about the Divine Attributes, eſpecially in the receſſes of their mind: which although they ſpare to utter with their mouths, yet they vent in their practice: if we, for inſtance, imagine, that we can comprehend the extent of God's deſigns, or fathom the depth of his counſels; if we meaſure and model his reaſons of proceeding according to our fancy (as if his thoughts were as our thoughts, and his ways as our ways; or, as if he did ſee as man ſees) if we can bleſs our ſelves in following our own imaginations, counſels and devices although repugnant to the reſolutions of divine wiſdom; taking theſe not to befit, or not to concern us, as we find many in the Scripture reproved for doing; we greatly miſtake and undervalue that glorious Attribute of God (his Wiſdom) and no wonder then, if we do not upon account thereof duely reverence and love God: likewiſe if we concerning the divine Power conceit, that notwithſtanding it, we ſhall be able to accompliſh our unlawful deſigns; that we may (as it is in Job*) harden our hearts againſt him and proſper; that we can any wiſe either withſtand, or evade his Power (as alſo many are intimated to do, in Scripture; even generally all thoſe who dare preſumptuouſly to offend God) we alſo miſconceive of that excellent Attribute; and the contempt of God, rather than love of him will thence ariſe. If concerning the divine goodneſs and holineſs, we imagine, that God is diſaffected towards his Creatures (antecedently to all demerits, or bad qualifications in them) yea indifferent in affection toward them; inclinable to do them harm, or not propenſe to do them good; if we deem him apt to be harſh and rigorous in his proceedings, to exact performances unſuitable to the ſtrength he hath given us, to impoſe burdens intolerable upon us; will not ſuch thoughts be apt to Breed in us toward God (as they would toward any other perſon ſo diſpoſed) rather a ſervile dread (little different from downright hatred) or an hoſtile averſation, than a genuine reverence or a kindly affection towards him? If we fanſie him, like to pettiſh man, apt to be diſpleaſed without cauſe, or beyond meaſure, for our doing ſomewhat innocent (neither bad in it ſelf, nor prejudicial to publick or private good) or for our omitting that, which no law, no good reaſon plainly requires of us; what will ſuch thoughts but ſour our ſpirits toward him, make us fearfull and ſuſpicious of him; which ſort of diſpoſitions are inconſiſtent with true love? If, on the other ſide, we judge him fond and partial in his affections; or ſlack and eaſie (as it were) in his proceedings; apt to favour us although we neglect him; to indulge us in our ſins, or connive at our miſcarriages; will not ſuch thoughts rather incline us in our hearts to ſlight him, and in our actions inſolently to dally with him, than heartily and humbly to love him? if we conceit his favour procured, or his anger appeaſed by petty obſervances, perhaps without any good rule or reaſon affected by our ſelves, when we neglect duties of greater worth and conſequence (the more weighty matters of the law;) what is this but inſtead of God to reverence an Idol of our own fancy; to yield unto him (who is only pleaſed with holy diſpoſitions of mind, with real effects of goodneſs) not duties of humble love, but acts of preſumption and flattery? But if contrariwiſe, we truly conceive of God's wiſdom, that his counſels are always throughly good, and that we are concerned both in duty and intereſt to follow them, although exceeding the reach of our underſtanding, or contrary to the ſuggeſtions

Iſa. 55. 8.
1 Sam. 16. 7.
Deut. 29. 19.
Pſal. 81. 12.
107. 11.
Iſa. 65. 2.
53. 6.
Jer. 18. 12.
Hoſ. 10. 12.
8. 12.
Pſal. 73. 11.
10. 11. 94. 7.

* Job. 9. 4.
Iſa. 45. 9.
10. 15. 54. 17.
1 Cor. 10. 22.
Deut. 33. 8.
Dan. 5. 23.
Amos. 9. 2.
Iſa. 2. 19.
Jer. 16. 16.
Deut. 28. 29.
Num. 14. 41.
2. Chr. 13. 12.

Τόν γε θεὸν οὐ ῥητέον ἔχειν ἦθος τοιοῦτον, ὅγε τι αὐτὸς μισεῖ Plat. de. Leg. 10.

ons of our fancy; concerning his power, that it will certainly interpoſe it ſelf to the hindrance of our bad projects, that it will be in vain to conteſt therewith, that we muſt ſubmit unto, or ſhall be cruſhed by his hand; concerning his goodneſs, that as he is infinitely good and benign, ſo he is alſo perfectly holy and pure; as he wiſheth us all good, and is ready to promote it, ſo he deteſteth our ſins, nor will ſuffer us to do himſelf, our ſelves and our neighbour any wrong; as moſt bountiful in diſpenſing his favours, ſo not prodigal of them, or apt to caſt them away on ſuch as little value them, and do not endeavour to anſwer them; as a faithful rewarder of all true vertue and piety, ſo a ſevere chaſtiſer of all iniquity and profaneneſs; as full of mercy and pity toward them, who are ſenſible of their unworthineſs, and penitent for their faults, ſo an implacable avenger of obſtinate and incorrigible wickedneſs; in fine, as a true friend to us, if we be not wilful enemies to him; and deſirous of our welfare, if we do not perverſly render our ſelves incapable thereof, ſo withall jealous of his own honour, reſolute to maintain and vindicate his juſt authority, carefull to uphold the intereſts of right and truth, and to ſhew the diſtinction he makes between good and evil; if we have, I ſay, ſuch conceptions of God (agreeable to what his word and his doings repreſent him to us) how can we otherwiſe than bear a moſt high reſpect, a moſt great affection unto him? A Prince ſurely endued with ſuch qualities; wiſe and powerfull, good and juſt together; tendering the good of his people, yet preſerving the force of his Laws; deſigning always what is beſt, and conſtantly purſuing his good intentions; tempering bounty and clemency with needful juſtice and ſeverity; we ſhould all commend and extoll as worthy of moſt affectionate veneration; how much more then ſhall we be ſo affected towards him, in whom we apprehend all thoſe excellencies to concurr without any imperfection or allay? eſpecially if by attention we impreſs thoſe conceptions upon our hearts; for how true and proper ſoever, if they be only ſlight and tranſient, they may not ſuffice to this intent; if they paſs away as a flaſh, they will not be able to kindle in us any ſtrong affection. But if ſuch abſtracted conſideration of the divine perfections will not alone wholly avail, let us add hereto as a farther help toward the production and encreaſe of this divine grace in us.

Iſa. 5. 4.
Hab. 1. 13.
Pſal. 5. 4. 11. 5. &c.

2. The conſideration of God's Works and Actions; his works of nature, his acts of providence, his works and acts of grace; the carefull meditating upon theſe will be apt to breed, to nouriſh, to improve and augment this affection. Even the contemplation of the lower works of nature, of this viſible frame of things (upon which indeed many perſpicuous characters of divine perfection, of immenſe power, of admirable wiſdom, of abundant goodneſs are engraven) hath in many minds excited a very high degree of reverence and good affection toward God: the devouteſt perſons (the holy Pſalmiſt particularly) we may obſerve frequent in this practice, inflaming their hearts with love, and elevating them in reverence toward God, by ſurveying the common works of God, by viewing and conſidering the magnificent vaſtneſs and variety, the goodly order and beauty, the conſtant duration and ſtability of thoſe things we ſee; in remarking the general bounty and munificence with which this great paterfamilias hath provided for the neceſſary ſuſtenance, for the convenience, for the defence, for the relief, for the delight and ſatisfaction of his creatures: even in the contemplation of theſe things being raviſhed with admiration and affection, how often do they thus exclaim: O Lord, how manifold are thy works, Pſal. 33. 5. in wiſdom haſt thou made them all. The earth is full of the goodneſs of 119. 64. 145. 10. the Lord: the earth, O Lord, is full of thy mercy! Great is our Lord, 147. 4. &c. and of great power; his underſtanding is infinite; All thy works ſhall praiſe thee, O Lord; With ſuch reflections, I ſay, upon thoſe common, yet admirable, and excellent works of God (which we perhaps with a regardleſs eye unprofitably paſs over) did thoſe good men kindle and foment pious affections toward God. The ſame effect may alſo the conſidering the very common proceedings of divine providence beget in us; ſuch as are diſcernible to every attentive mind, both from hiſtory and daily experience; conſidering God's admirable condeſcenſion in regarding and ordering humane affairs both for common benefit and for relief of particular neceſſities, his ſupplying the general needs of men, relieving the poor, ſuccouring the weak and helpleſs, protecting and vindicating the oppreſſed, his ſeaſonable encouraging and rewarding the good, reſtraining and chaſtiſing the bad: Even ſuch obſervations are productive of love to God in thoſe, who, according to that duty intimated by the Prophet, do regard the works of the Lord, and conſider the operations of his Iſa. 5. 12. hands; They who are wiſe, and will obſerve theſe things, they (as the Pſal. 28. 5. Pſalmiſt tells) ſhall underſtand the loving-kindneſs of the Lord; 107. 43. underſtand it practically, ſo as to be duly affected thereby; and ſo accor- 64. 9. dingly we find the conſideration of theſe things applied by the great 111. 2. guides and patterns of our devotion. 77. 11. But eſpecially the ſtudy and contemplation 143. 5. of thoſe more high and rare proceedings of God, in managing his gracious deſign of our Redemption from ſin and miſery, wherein a wiſdom ſo unſearchable and a goodneſs ſo aſtoniſhing declare themſelves, are moſt proper and effectual means of begetting divine love: if the conſideration of God's eternal care for our welfare, of his deſcending to the loweſt condition for our ſake, of his willingly undertaking and patiently undergoing all kinds of inconvenience, of diſgrace, of bitter pain and ſorrow for us; of his freely offering us mercy, and earneſtly wooing us to receive it, even when offenders, when enemies, when rebels againſt him; of his bearing with exceeding patience all our neglects of him, all our injuries towards him; of his preparing a treaſure of perfect and endleſs bliſs, and uſing all means poſſible to bring us unto the poſſeſſion thereof; if, I ſay, conſidering thoſe wonderful ſtreins of goodneſs will not affect us, what can do it? How miſerably cold and damp muſt our affections be, if all thoſe powerful rays (ſo full of heavenly light and heat) ſhining through our minds cannot inflame them; how deſperately hard and tough muſt our hearts be, if ſuch incentives cannot ſoften and melt them? Is it not an apathy more than Stoical, more than ſtony, which can ſtand immovable before ſo mighty inducements to paſſion? is it not a horridly prodigious inſenſibility to think upon ſuch expreſſions of kindneſs without feeling affection reciprocal? But if the conſideration of God's general and publick beneficence will not touch us ſufficiently; let us farther hereto adjoin.

Pſal. 8. 18. 145. 109. 147.

3. Serious reflections upon the peculiar (perſonal or private) benefits by the divine goodneſs vouchſafed unto our ſelves. There is, I ſuppoſe, ſcarce any man, who may not, if he be not very ſtupid and regardleſs, have obſerved (beſide the common effects of God's univerſal care and bounty wherein he partakes) even ſome particular expreſſions and teſtimonies of divine favour diſpenſed unto him by God's hand (apt to convince him of God's eſpecial providence, care and good-will to him particularly, and thereby to draw him unto God) both in relation to his temporal and to his ſpiritual ſtate; in preventing and preſerving him from miſchiefs imminent, in opportune relief, when he was preſſed with want, or ſurpriſed by danger; in directing him to good and diverting him from evil. Every man's experience (I ſay and ſuppoſe) will inform him, that he hath received many ſuch benefits from a hand, inviſible indeed to ſenſe, yet eaſily diſcernible, if he do attend to the circumſtances wherein, to the ſeaſons when they come; it is natural to every man being in diſtreſs (from which he cannot by any preſent or viſible means extricate himſelf) to ſtretch forth his hand and lift up his voice towards heaven, making his recourſe to divine help; and it is as natural for God to regard the needs, to hearken to the cries, to ſatisfie the deſires Pſal. 145. 16. of ſuch perſons (for, The Lord is nigh to all that call upon him; he openeth

18. 107. 8. his hand, and ſatisfieth the deſire of every living thing: He will be
34. 6, 10. a refuge to the oppreſſed, a refuge in times of trouble: He ſatisfieth the
9. 9.
Ecclus. 2. 10. longing ſoul, and filleth the hungry ſoul with goodneſs: They that ſeek the Lord, ſhall not want any good thing: Look at the generations of old and ſee: did ever any truſt in the Lord and was forſaken? or whom did he ever deſpiſe that called upon him? This poor man (this, and that, any poor man) cryed, and the Lord heard him, and ſaved him out of all his troubles) ſince then, no man in all likelihood hath not ſome occaſion of God's eſpecial favour and aſſiſtance, and God is always ſo ready to afford them, we may reaſonably preſume, that every man doth ſometime receive them, and is thereby obliged to return a gratefull affection to him, not only as to a common benefactour, but as to his particular friend and patron. However there is none of us, who may not perceive himſelf ſingularly indebted to God's patience in forbearing to puniſh him, to his mercy in pardoning and paſſing over innumerable offences Luk. 7. 47. committed againſt him; the renowned Penitent in the Goſpel did love much, becauſe much was forgiven her; And who is there of us, that hath not the ſame reaſon to love much? who is there that, at leaſt according to God's inclination and intention, hath not had much forgiven him?
Rom. 2. 4. whom have not the riches of divine goodneſs and long-ſuffering attended upon in order to his repentance? who hath not been in ſo great degree ungratefull, unfruitfull and unprofitable, that he hath not abundant reaſon Luk. 17. 10. to acknowledge God's eſpecial grace in bearing with him, and to Pſal. 130. 3. confeſs with Jacob, that he is leſs than the leaſt of all God's mercies? if any Gen. 32. 10. ſuch there were, he ſhould have no leſs cauſe to be affected with the abundance of that grace, which ſo preſerv'd him from ſins and provocations.
For if we ſtand, it is he that upholdeth us; if we fall, it is he that Pſal. 37. 23. 146. 8. raiſeth us; it is his eſpecial favour that either we avoid ſin, or ſinning eſcape puniſhment. Now then God having by many real evidences declared ſuch particular affection towards us, can we conſidering thereon 1 Joh. 4. 19. do otherwiſe than ſay to our ſelves, after Saint John, Nos ergò diligamus deum, quoniam prior dilexit nos; Let us therefore love God, becauſe God firſt loved us; ſurely in all ingenuity, according to all equity, we are bound to do ſo; the reaſon and nature of things doth require it of us: all other loves (even thoſe of the baſer ſort) are able to propagate Ἐςι χάρις γὰρ ἡ χάριν τίκτουσ᾽ ἀεί. Soph. themſelves; (to continue and enlarge their kind) are commonly fruitfull and effectual in producing their like; how ſtrangely then unnatural and monſtrous is it, that this love only (this ſo vigorous and perfect Matt. 5. 46. love) ſhould be barren and impotent as it were? If you love thoſe that love you (ſaith our Saviour) what reward have you? (what reward can you pretend to for ſo common, ſo neceſſary a performance) do not even the publicans do the ſame? (the Publicans, men not uſually of the beſt natures, natures, or tendereſt hearts, yet they do thus) And (again ſaith he) If Luke 6. 32. you love thoſe who love you, what thank is it, for even ſinners love thoſe that love them? (ſinners, men not led by conſcience of duty, or regard, to reaſon, but hurried with a kind of blind and violent force, by inſtinct of nature, do ſo much, go ſo far) If thus men, both by nature and cuſtom moſt untractable, the leaſt guided by rules of right, of reaſon, of ingenuity; yea not only the moſt barbarous men, but even the moſt ſavage beaſts are ſenſible of courteſies, return a kind of affection unto them who make much of them and do them good, what temper are we of, if all that bounty we experience cannot move us; if God's daily loading us with his benefits, if his crowning us with loving-kindneſs and Pſal. 68. 19. tender mercies, if all thoſe ſhowers of bleſſings, which he continually 103. 14. Ezek. 34. 26. poureth down upon our heads do not produce ſome good degree of correſpondent affection in us? It cannot ſurely proceed altogether from a wretched baſeneſs of diſpoſition, that we are ſo cold and indifferent in our affection toward God, or are ſometimes ſo averſe from loving him; it muſt rather in great part come from our not obſerving carefully, not frequently calling to mind, not earneſtly conſidering what God hath done for us, how exceedingly we ſtand obliged to his goodneſs, from our following that untoward generation of men, who were not ('tis ſaid) mindfull of the wonders which God did among them; who remembred not Neh. 9. 17. Pſal. 78. 10, his hand, nor the day that he delivered them; rather following, I ſay 42. Deut. 5. ſuch careleſs and heartleſs people (ſo they are termed) than imitating 29. 29. 4. that excellent Perſon's diſcretion, who conſtantly did ſet God's loving- Pſal. 26. 3. kindneſs before his eyes, who frequently did thus raiſe his mind and rouſe, up his affections; Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, and all that is within me Pſal. 103. bleſs his holy name; Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, and forget not all his benefits, who forgiveth all thine iniquities and healeth all thy diſeaſes, &c. It is not for want of the like experience, or the like obligation, but for want of the ſame wiſdom, of the ſame care, of the ſame honeſt conſideration and diligence, that we do not the like.

To theſe means I add that,

4. A ſpecial help to breed in us this holy diſpoſition of ſoul will be the ſetting our ſelves in good earneſt, with a ſtrong and conſtant reſolution, to endeavour the performance of all our duty toward God, and keeping his commandments although upon inferiour conſiderations of reaſon, ſuch as we are capable of applying to this purpoſe; regards of fear, of hope, of deſire to avoid the miſchiefs ariſing from ſin, or attaining the benefits enſuing upon vertue. if we cannot immediately raiſe our hearts to that higher pitch of acting from that nobler principle of love, let us however apply that we can reach unto practice, ſtriving as we are able to perform what God requires of us; exerciſing our ſelves as to material acts, in keeping a conſcience void of offence toward God and toward man; the doing which as it may in time diſcover the excellency of goodneſs to our mind, ſo it will by degrees reconcile our affections thereto; then by God's bleſſing (who graciouſly regards the meaneſt endeavours toward good; who deſpiſeth not the day of ſmall things; Iſa. 42. 1. who will not quench the ſmoaking flax nor break the bruiſed reed) from Zech. 4. 10. doing good out of a ſober regard to our own welfare, we ſhall come to like it in it ſelf, and conſequently to love him, unto whoſe nature and to whoſe will it renders us conformable: for as doing ill breeds a diſlike to goodneſs, and an averſation from him, who himſelf is full thereof, and who rigorouſly exacts it of us; as a bad conſcience removes expectation of good from God, and begets a ſuſpicion of evil from him, conſe-quently ſtifling all kindneſs towards him; ſo doing well, we ſhall become acquainted with it, and friends thereto; a hearty approbation, eſteem and good liking thereof will enſue; finding by experience, that indeed the ways of wiſdom, vertue and piety are pleaſantneſs, and all her paths are peace; that the fruits of conſcientious practice are health to our body, and to our ſoul, ſecurity to our eſtate, and to our reputation, reſt in our mind, and comfort in our conſcience; goodneſs will become precious in our eyes, and he who commends it to us, being himſelf eſſential goodneſs; will appear moſt venerable and moſt amiable, we ſhall then become diſpoſed to render him, what we perceive he beſt deſerves, entire reverence and affection.

5. But I commend farther, as a moſt neceſſary mean of attaining this diſpoſition, aſſiduous earneſt prayer unto God, that he would in mercy beſtow it on us, and by his grace beſtow it on us: which practice is indeed doubly conducible to this purpoſe; both in way of impetration, and by real efficacy; it will not fail to obtain it as a gift from God; it will help to produce it as an inſtrument of God's grace.

Upon the firſt account it is abſolutely neceſſary; for it is from God's free repreſentation of himſelf as lovely to our minds, and drawing our hearts unto him (although ordinarily in the uſe of the means already mentioned, or ſome like to them) that this affection is kindled; our bare conſideration is too cold, our rational diſcourſe too faint; we cannot ſufficiently recollect our wandring thoughts, we cannot ſtrongly enough impreſs thoſe proper incentives of love upon our hearts (our hearts ſo dampt with ſenſual deſires ſo clogg'd and peſter'd with earthly inclinations) ſo as to kindle in our ſouls this holy flame; it can onely be effected by a light ſhining from God, by a fire coming from heaven: As all others, ſo more eſpecially this Queen of graces muſt proceed from the Father of lights, and giver of all good gifts: he alone, who is love, can be the parent of ſo goodly an off-ſpring, can beget this Galat. 5. 22. lively image of himſelf within us: it is the principal fruit of God's Holy Spirit, nor can it grow from any other root than from it; it is called the love of the Spirit, as its moſt ſignal and peculiar effect; in fine, the Rom. 15. 30. love of God (as Saint Paul expreſly teaches us) is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit given unto us; given, but that not without asking, withont ſeeking; a grace ſo excellent, God, we may be aſſured will not diſpenſe, a gift ſo precious he will not beſtow on them, who do not care to look after it, who will not vouchſafe to beg it: if we are not willing to acknowledge our want thereof; if we refuſe to expreſs our deſire of it, if we will not ſhew that we regard and value it; if, when God freely offers it, and invites us to receive it (he doth ſo by Luk. 11. 9, offering his Holy Spirit, the fountain thereof, unto us) we will not de- 13. cently apply our ſelves to him for it, how can we expect to obtain it? Matt. 21. 22. 7. 7. God hath propounded this condition (and 'tis ſurely no hard, no griev- 1 Chro. 28. 9. ous condition) if we ask we ſhall receive; he hath expreſly promiſed 2 Chro. 15. 2. that He will give his Spirit (his Spirit of love) to them who ask it; we may be therefore ſure, performing the condition duly, to obtain it; and as ſure, neglecting that, we deſerve to go without it.

Prayer then is upon this account a needful means; and it is a very profitable one upon the ſcore of its own immediate energy or virtue: for as by familiar converſe (together with the delights and advantages attending thereon) other friendſhips are begot and nouriſhed, ſo even by that acquaintance, as it were, with God, which devotion beſets, by experience therein how ſweet and good he is, this affection is produced and ſtrengthned. As want of entercourſe weakens and diſſolves friendſhip; ſo if we ſeldom come at God, or little converſe with him, it is not only a ſign, but will be a cauſe of eſtrangement and diſaffection towards him: according to the nature of the thing, prayer hath peculiar advantages above other acts of piety, to this effect: therein not only as in contemplation the eye of our mind (our intellectual part) is directed toward God; but our affections alſo (the hand of our ſoul by which we embrace good, the feet thereof by which we purſue it) are drawn out and fixed upon him; we not only therein behold his excellencies, but in a manner feel them and enjoy them; our hearts alſo being thereby ſoftned and warmed by deſire become more ſuſceptive of love. We do in the performance of this duty approach nearer to God, and conſequently God draws nearer to us (as ſaint James aſſures; Draw near, ſaith he, unto God, and he will draw near to you) and thereby we partake more fully and ſtrongly of his gracious influences; therein indeed he moſt freely communicates his grace, therein he makes us moſt ſenſible of his love to us, and thereby diſpoſeth us to love him again. I add, that true (fervent and hearty) prayer doth include, and ſuppoſe ſome acts of love, or ſome near tendencies thereto; whence, as every habit is corroborated by acts of its kind, ſo by this practice divine love will be confirmed and encreaſed. Theſe are the means, which my meditation did ſuggeſt as conducing to the production and growth of this moſt excellent grace in our ſouls.

Πολλὰς μὲν φιλίας ἀπροσηγορίη διέλυσε.

Jam. 4. 8.

III. I ſhould laſtly propound ſome Inducements apt to ſtir us up to the endeavour of procuring it, and to the exerciſe thereof, by repreſenting to your conſideration the bleſſed fruits and benefits (both by way of natural cauſality and of reward) accruing from it; as alſo the woful conſequences and miſchiefs ſpringing from the want thereof. How being endued with it perfects and advances our nature, rendring it in a manner and degree divine, by reſemblance to God (who is full thereof, ſo full that he is called Love) by approximation, adherence and union (in a ſort) unto him: how it ennobles us with the moſt glorious alliance poſſible, rendring us the friends and favourites of the Sovereign King and Lord of all, brethren of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven; enriches us with a right and title to the moſt ineſtimable treaſures (thoſe which eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, nor have entred into the heart of man to conceive, which God hath prepared for them that love him) a ſure poſſeſſion of the ſupreme good, of all that God is able to beſtow, all whoſe wiſdom and power, whoſe counſel and care it eternally engageth for our benefit; how all ſecurity and welfare, all reſt and peace, all joy and happineſs attend upon it; for that The Lord preſerveth all them that love him (preſerveth them in the enjoyment of all good, in ſafety from all danger and miſchief) and that to thoſe who love God all things co-operate for their good: how incomparable a ſweetneſs and delight accompany the practice thereof, far ſurpaſſing all other pleaſures; perfectly able to content our minds, to ſuſtain and comfort us even in the want of all other ſatisfactions, yea under the preſſure of whatever moſt grievous afflictions can befall us. How contrariwiſe the want thereof will depreſs us into a ſtate of greateſt imperfection and baſeneſs, ſetting us at the greateſt diſtance from God in all reſpects, both in ſimilitude of Nature, and as to all favourable regard, or beneficial communication from him: caſting us into a wretched and diſgraceful conſortſhip with the moſt degenerate creatures,

1 Cor. 2. 9.

Pſal. 145. 20.

Rom. 8. 28.

tures, the accurſed fiends, who, for diſaffection and enmity toward God, are baniſhed from all happineſs; how it extremely impoveriſheth and beggereth us, deveſting us of all right to any good thing, rendring us incapable of any portion, but that of utter darkneſs; how it excludeth us from any ſafety, any reſt, any true comfort or joy, and expoſeth us to all miſchief and miſery imaginable; all that being deprived of the divine protection, preſence and favour, being made objects of the divine anger, hatred and ſevere juſtice, being abandoned to the malice of hell, being driven into utter darkneſs and eternal fire doth import or can produce. I ſhould alſo have commended this love to you by comparing it with other loves, and ſhewing how far in its nature, in its cauſes, in its properties, in its effects it excelleth them: even ſo far as the object thereof in excellency doth tranſcend all other objects of our affection: how this is grounded upon the higheſt and ſureſt reaſon; others upon accounts very low and mean, commonly upon fond humour and miſtake; this produceth real, certain, immutable goods; others at beſt terminate only in goods apparent, unſtable and tranſitory; this is moſt worthy of us, employing all our faculties in their nobleſt manner of operation upon the beſt object; others misbeſeem us, ſo that in purſuing them we diſgrace our underſtanding, miſapply our deſires, diſtemper our affections, miſpend our endeavours. I ſhould have enlarged upon theſe conſiderations; and ſhould have adjoyned ſome particular advantages of this grace; as for inſtance, that the procuring thereof is the moſt ſure, the moſt eaſie, the moſt compendious way of attaining all others; of ſweetning and ingratiating all obedience to us; of making the hardeſt yoke eaſie, and the heavieſt burden light unto us. In fine, I ſhould have wiſhed you to conſider, that its practice is not only a mean and way to happineſs, but our very formal happineſs it ſelf; the real enjoyment of the beſt good we are capable of; that in which alone heaven it ſelf (the felicity of Saints and Angels) doth conſiſt; which more than comprehends in it ſelf all the benefits of higheſt dignity, richeſt plenty and ſweeteſt pleaſure. But I ſhall forbear entring upon ſo ample and fruitful ſubjects of meditation, and conculde with that good Collect of our Church:

O Lord, who haſt prepared for them that love thee ſuch good things as paſs man's underſtanding; pour into our hearts ſuch love toward thee, that we, loving thee above all things, may obtain thy promiſes, which exceed all that we can deſire: through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

SERMON XXV.

Of the Love of our Neighbour.

MATTH. XXII. 39.

And the Second is like unto it, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf.

THE eſſential goodneſs of God, and his ſpecial benignity toward mankind are to a conſidering mind divers ways very apparent; the frame of the world, and the natural courſe of things do with a thouſand voices loudly and clearly proclaim them to us; every ſenſe doth yield us affidavit to that Speech of the Holy Pſalmiſt, The earth is full of the goodneſs of the Lord: Pſal. 33. 5. 119. 64. we ſee it in the glorious brightneſs of the skies, and in the pleaſant verdure of the fields; we taſte it in the various delicacies of food, ſupplied by land and ſee; we ſmell it in the fragrancies of herbs and flowers; we hear it in the natural muſick of the woods; we feel it in the comfortable warmth of heaven, and in the chearing freſhneſs of the air; we continually do poſſeſs and enjoy it in the numberleſs accommodations of life, preſented to us by the bountiful hand of nature.

Of the ſame goodneſs we may be well aſſured by that common providence which continually doth uphold us in our being, doth oppertunely relieve our needs, doth protect us in dangers, and reſcue us from imminent miſchiefs, doth comport with our infirmities and miſdemeanours; the which (in the divine Pſalmiſt's ſtyle) doth hold our ſoul in life, and ſuffereth not our feet to be moved; doth redeem our life from deſtruction; doth crown us with loving-kindneſs, and tender mercies. Pſal. 66. 9. 56. 13. 103. 4. 145. 16.

The diſpenſations of grace, in the revelation of heavenly truth, in the overtures of mercy, in the ſuccours of our weakneſs, in the propoſal of glorious rewards, in all the methods and means conducing to our ſalvation, do afford moſt admirable proofs and pledges of the ſame immenſe benignity.

But in nothing is the divine goodneſs towards us more illuſtriouſly conſpicuous, than in the nature and tendency of thoſe Laws which God hath been pleaſed for the regulation of our lives to preſcribe unto us, all which do palpably evidence his ſerious deſire and provident care of our welfare; ſo that in impoſing them he plainly doth not ſo much exerciſe his Sovereignty over us, as expreſs his kindneſs towards us; neither do they more clearly declare his will, than demonſtrate his good will to us.

And among all divine Precepts this eſpecially contained in my Text, doth argue the wonderful goodneſs of our heavenly Law-giver, appearing both in the manner of the propoſal, and in the ſubſtance of it.

The

Luke 10. 27. The Second, ſaith our Lord, is like to it; that is, to the Precept of loving the Lord our God with all our heart: and is not this a mighty argument of immenſe goodneſs in God, that he doth in ſuch a manner commend this duty to us, coupling it with our main duty towards him, and requiring us with like earneſtneſs to love our neighbour as to love himſelf?

He is tranſcendently amiable for the excellency of his nature; he by innumerable and ineſtimable benefits graciouſly conferred on us hath deſerved our utmoſt affection; ſo that naturally there can be no obligation bearing any proportion or conſiderable ſemblance to that of loving him; yet hath he in goodneſs been pleaſed to create one, and to endue it with that privilege; making the love of a man (whom we cannot value but for his gifts, to whom we can owe nothing but what properly we owe to him) no leſs obligatory, to declare it near as acceptable as the love of himſelf, to whom we owe all. To him, as the ſole authour and free donour of all our good, by juſt correſpondence all our mind and heart, all our ſtrength and endeavour are due: and reaſonably might he engroſs them to himſelf, excluding all other beings from any ſhare in them; ſo that we might be obliged only to fix our thoughts and ſet our affections on him, only to act directly for his honour and intereſt; ſaying with the Holy Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 73. 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none on earth that I deſire beſide thee: Yet doth he freely pleaſe to impart a ſhare of theſe performances on mankind; yet doth he charge us to place our affection on one another; to place it there indeed in a meaſure ſo large that we can hardly imagine a greater; according to a rule, than which none can be deviſed more compleat or certain.

O marvellous condeſcenſion, O goodneſs truly divine; which ſurpaſſeth the nature of things, which diſpenſeth with the higheſt right, and forgoeth the greateſt intereſt that can be! Doth not God in a ſort debaſe himſelf, that he might advance us? doth he not appear to wave his own due, and neglect his own honour for our advantage? how otherwiſe could the love of man be capable of any reſemblance to the love of God, and not ſtand at an infinite diſtance, or in an extreme diſparity from it? how otherwiſe could we be obliged to affect or regard any thing beſide the Sovereign, the only goodneſs? how otherwiſe could Matt. 19. 17. there be any ſecond or like to that firſt, that great, that peerleſs command, Matt. 22. 38. Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart?

This indeed is the higheſt commendation whereof any Law is capable; for as to be like God is the higheſt praiſe that can be given to a perſon; ſo to reſemble the divineſt Law of love to God is the faireſt character that can be aſſigned of a Law: the which indeed repreſenteth it to be Jam. 2. 8. νόμος Βασιλικὸς, as Saint James calleth it, that is, a Royal and Sovereign Law; exalted above all others, and bearing a ſway on them. Saint Paul telleth us, that the end of the commandment (or, the main 1 Tim. 1. 6. ſcope of the Evangelical doctrine) is charity out of a pure heart and a Rom. 13. 8, 9. good conſcience, and faith unfeigned; that charity is the ſumme and ſubſtance Gal. 5. 14. of all other duties, and that he that loveth another hath fulfilled the whole law; that Charity is the chief of the Theological vertues, and 1 Cor. 13. 13. the prime fruit of the divine ſpirit; and the bond of perfection, which Gal. 5. 22. combineth and conſummateth all other graces, and the general principle Col. 3. 14. 1 Cor. 16. 14. of all our doings. S. Peter enjoyneth us that to all other vertues we add 2 Pet. 1. 7. charity, as the top and crown of them; and Above all things (ſaith he) 1 Pet. 4. 8. have fervent charity among your ſelves. Saint John calleth this Law, in way of exellence, the commandment of God; and our Lord himſelf claimeth 1 Joh. 3. 23. 11. 4. 21. it as his peculiar Precept, This (ſaith he) is my commandment, Joh. 15. 12. that ye love one another as I have loved you; A new commandment I give Joh. 13. 34. unto you, that ye love one another; and maketh the obſervance of it the ſpecial cognizance of his followers, By this ſhall all men know, that ye are Joh. 13. 35. my diſciples, if ye love one another.

Theſe indeed are lofty commendations thereof, yet all of them may worthily veil to this; all of them ſeem verified in virtue of this, becauſe God hath vouchſafed to place this command in ſo near adjacency to the firſt great Law, conjoyning the two Tables; making Charity contiguous, and as it were commenſurate to Piety.

It is true, that in many reſpects Charity doth reſemble Piety: for it is the moſt genuine daughter of Piety, thence in complexion, in features, in humour much favouring its ſweet mother; It doth conſiſt in like diſpoſitions and motions of ſoul; It doth grow from the ſame roots and principles of benignity, ingenuity, equity, gratitude, planted in our original conſtitution by the breath of God, and improved in our hearts by the divine Spirit of Love; It produceth the like fruits of beneficence 1. Joh. 4. 7, 11. towards others and of comfort in our ſelves; It in like manner doth aſſimilate Matt. 5. 45. us to God, rendring us conformable to his nature, followers of Eph. 5. 1. 2. his practice and partakers of his felicity; It is of like uſe and conſequence towards the regulation of our practice, and due management of our whole life: In ſuch reſpects, I ſay, this Law is like to the other; but it is however chiefly ſo for that God hath pleaſed to lay ſo great ſtreſs thereon, as to make it the other half of our Religion and duty; or becauſe, as Saint John ſaith, This commandment have we from him, that Matt. 22. 40. he who loveth God, love his brother alſo; which is to his praiſe a moſt 1 Joh. 4. 21. pregnant demonſtration of his immenſe goodneſs towards us.

But no leſs in the very ſubſtance of this Duty will the benignity of him that preſcribeth it ſhine forth, diſplaying it ſelf in the rare beauty and ſweetneſs of it; together with the vaſt benefit and utility, which it, being obſerved, will yield to mankind; which will appear by what we may diſcourſe for preſſing its obſervance; but firſt let us explain it, as it lyeth before us expreſſed in the words of the Text, wherein we ſhall conſider two Particulars obſervable: Firſt, the Object of the Duty; Secondly, the Qualification annexed to it; The Object of it, Our Neighbour; The Qualification, As our ſelves.

I. The Object of Charity is our Neighbour; that is, (it being underſtood, as the Precept now concerneth us, according to our Lord's expoſition, or according to his intent, and the tenour of his Doctrine every man, with whom we have to do, or who is capable of our love, eſpecially every Chriſtian.

The Law as it was given to God's ancient people did openly regard only thoſe among them, who were linked together in a holy neighbourhood or Society, from which all other men being excluded were deemed ſtrangers and foreigners; (aliens, as Saint Paul ſpeaketh, from Eph. 2. 12. the common-wealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenants of promiſe.) for thus the Law runneth in Leviticus, Thou ſhalt not bear any grudge Levit. 19. 18. againſt the children of thy people, but thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf; where plainly Jews and Neighbours are terms equivalent; other men being ſuppoſed to ſtand at diſtance without the fold or politick encloſure, which God by ſeveral Ordinances had fenced, to keep that Nation Levit. 20. 26, 24. unmixt and ſeparate: nor can it be excepted againſt this notion, Exod. 33. 16. that in the ſame Chapter it is enjoined, But the ſtranger that dwelleth Deut. 7. 6. 14. 2.

Levit. 19. 34. with you ſhall be unto you as one born among you, and thou ſhalt love him as thy ſelf; for by that ſtranger (as the Jewiſh Maſters will interpret it) is meant a Proſelyte of righteouſneſs; or one who although a ſtranger by birth, was yet a brother in Religion, having voluntarily ſubmitted to their Law, being engaged in the ſame Covenant, and thence admitted to the ſame Priveleges, as an adopted Child of that Holy Family.

Eph. 2. 14. But now, ſuch diſtinctions of men being voided, and that wall of par-
Gal. 3. 28. tition demoliſhed, all the world is become one people; ſubject to the Acts 10. 36. Tit. 3. 4. Laws of one common Lord; and capable of the mercies purchaſed by Joh. 3. 16. one Redeemer. God's love to mankind did move him to ſend our Lord into the world, to aſſume humane nature, and therein to become a Me-1 Tim. 2. 5. diatour between God and men. Our Lord's kindneſs to all his brethren diſpoſed him to undertake their ſalvation, and to expiate their ſins, and 1 Joh. 2. 2. to taſte death for every man; the effect whereof is an univerſal reconci-
Heb. 2. 9. liation of God to the world, and an union of men together.

2 Cor. 5. 19. Col. 1. 20. Now the blood of Chriſt hath cemented mankind; the favour of Eph. 1. 10. God embracing all hath approximated and combined all together; ſo
2. 13. that now every man is our brother, not only by nature, as derived from the ſame ſtock, but by grace, as partaker of the common redemp-1 Tim. 2. 4. tion; Now God deſiring the ſalvation of all men, and inviting all men to Tit. 2. 11. mercy, our duty muſt be co-extended with God's grace, and our charity
Col. 1. 23. muſt follow that of our Saviour.

We are therefore now to all men, that which one Jew was to another;
yea more than ſuch, our Chriſtianity having induced much higher obligations, ſtricter alliances and ſtronger endearments, than were thoſe, whereby Judaiſm did engage its followers to mutual amity. The duties of common humanity, (to which our natural frame and ſenſe do incline us, which Philoſophy recommendeth and natural Religion doth preſcribe, being grounded upon our community of nature and cognati-on of blood, upon apparent equity, upon general convenience and utility) our Religion doth not only enforce and confirm, but enhance and improve; ſuperadding higher inſtances and faſter tyes of ſpiritual relation, reaching in a ſort to all men (as being in duty, in deſign, in remote capacity our ſpiritual brethren) but in eſpecial manner to all Chriſtians, who actually are fellow-members of the ſame holy fraterni-
1 Pet. 1. 23. ty, contracted by ſpiritual regeneration from one heavenly ſeed, ſup-
2. 17. ported by a common faith and hope, ſtrengthened by communion in acts of devotion and charity.

Hereon therefore are grounded thoſe Evangelical commands, expli-Gal. 6. 10. catory of this Law as it now ſtandeth in force; that as we have opportu- nity we ſhould do good unto all men, eſpecially unto them who are of the hou-1 Theſſ. 3. 12. ſhold of faith; that we ſhould abound in love one towards another, and to-
2 Cor. 9. 12. 13. wards all men, that we ſhould glorifie God in our profeſſed ſubjection un- to the Goſpel of Chriſt, by liberally diſtributing to the Saints, and to all Heb. 12. 24. 1 Theſſ. 5. 14. men; that we ſhould follow peace with all men, ſhould be patient towards
Tit. 3. 2. all men, and gentle towards all men, and ſhew all meekneſs towards all men
1 Theſſ. 5. 15. and ever follow that which is good both among our ſelves, and to all men; ἤπιον εἶναι πρὸς πάντας· that we ſhould make ſupplications, interceſſions and thankſgivings for all
2 Tim. 2. 24. men, eſpecially for all Saints, or all our Fellow-Chriſtians, and * expreſs
1 Tim. 2. 1. Eph. 6. 18. moderation, or ingenuity, to all men.

* Phil. 4. 5. Such is the Object of our Charity; and thus did our Lord himſelf expound it, when by a Jewiſh Lawyer being put to reſolve this queſtion, Luke. 10. 29 And who is my neighbour? he did propound a caſe, or hiſtory, whereby he did extort from that Rabbi this confeſſion, that even a Samaritan, diſ-charging a notable office of humanity and mercy to a Jew, did thereby moſt truly approve himſelf a good neighbour to him; and conſequently that reciprocal performances of ſuch offices were due from a Jew to a Samaritan; whence it might appear, that this relation of neighbourhood is univerſal and unlimited. So much for the object.

Πλησίον γὰρ ἀνθρώπου οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἐστὶν ἢ τὸ ὁμοιοπαθὲς καὶ λογικὸν ζῶον. &c. Juſt. M. c. Tryph. (p. 320.)

II. As for the Qualification annexed and couched in thoſe words, as thy ſelf, that, as I conceive, may import both a Rule declaring the Nature, and a Meaſure determining the Quantity of that love which is due from us to our neighbour; the comparative term As implying both Conformity or Similitude, and Commenſuration or Equality.

Ἡ ὑπερβολὴ τῆς φιλίας τῇ πρὸς ἑαυτὸν ὁμοιοῦται. Ariſt. Eth. 9. 4.

1. Loving our neighbour as our ſelves doth import a Rule directing what kind of love we ſhould bear and exerciſe towards him; or informing us, that our charity doth conſiſt in having the ſame affections of ſoul, and in performing the ſame acts of beneficence towards him, as we are ready by inclination, as we are wont in practice to have or to perform towards our ſelves, with full approbation of our judgment and conſcience, apprehending it juſt and reaſonable ſo to do.

We cannot indeed better underſtand the nature of this duty, than by reflecting on the motions of our own heart, and obſerving the courſe of our demeanour towards our ſelves; for thence infallibly we may be aſſured how we ſhould ſtand affected, and how we ſhould behave our ſelves towards others.

This is a peculiar advantage of this Rule (inferring the excellent wiſdom and goodneſs of him who framed it) that by it very eaſily and certainly we may diſcern all the ſpecialties of our duty, without looking abroad or having recourſe to external inſtruction; ſo that by it we may be perfect Law-givers, and ſkilful Judges, and faithful Monitours to our ſelves of what in any caſe we ſhould do: for every one by internal experience knoweth what it is to love himſelf, every one is conſcious how he uſeth to treat himſelf; each one conſequently can preſcribe and decide for himſelf, what he ought to do towards his neighbour; ſo that we are not only θεοδίδακτοι taught of God, as the Apoſtle ſaith, to love one another, but αὐτοδίδακτοι, taught of our ſelves how to exerciſe that duty; whence our Lord otherwhere doth propoſe the Law of charity in theſe terms, Whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do unto you, do ye even ſo unto them, for this is the law and the prophets; that is, unto this Rule all the ſpecial precepts of charity propoſed in Holy Scripture, may be reduced.

Οὐ χρεία πολλῶν λόγων οὐδὲ μακροτέρων νόμων οὐδὲ διδασκαλίας ποικίλης· τὸ θέλημά σου γινέσθω νόμος —— Σὺ γένου δικαστὴς, σὺ γένου νομοθέτης τῆς σεαυτοῦ ζωῆς. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ιγ΄.
1 Theſſ. 4. 9.
Matt. 7. 12.
Luk. 6. 31.
Ὃ μισεῖς μηδενὶ ποιήσῃς· Tob. 4. 15.
Conſt. Apoſt. 1. 1.

Wherefore for information concerning our duty in each caſe and circumſtance, we need only thus to conſult and interrogate our ſelves, hence forming reſolutions concerning our practice.

Do we not much eſteem and ſet by our ſelves, do we not ſtrive to maintain in our minds a good opinion of our ſelves; can any miſchances befalling, any defects obſervable in us, any faults committed by us induce us to ſlight or deſpiſe our ſelves? this may teach us what regard and value we ſhould ever preſerve for our neighbour.

Do we not ſincerely and earneſtly deſire our own welfare and advantage in every kind; do we not heartily wiſh good ſucceſs to our own deſigns and undertakings; are we unconcerned or coldly affected in any caſe touching our own ſafety, our eſtate, our credit, our ſatisfaction or pleaſure? do we not eſpecially, if we rightly underſtand our ſelves, deſire the health and happineſs of our ſouls? this doth inform us, what we ſhould wiſh and covet for our neighbour.

Ὁ τὸν πλησίον ὡς ἑαυτὸν ἀγαπῶν, ἅπερ αὐτῷ βούλεται ἀγαθὰ, ἀγαθὰ κἀκείνῳ βουλήσεται. &c. Juſt. M. c. Tryph. (p. 321.)

Have we not a ſenſible delight and complacency in our own proſperity? do we ever repine at any advantages accruing to our perſon or condition? are we not extremely glad to find our ſelves thriving and flouriſhing in wealth, in reputation, in any accommodation or ornament of our ſtate? eſpecially if we be ſober and wiſe, doth not our ſpiritual proficiency and improvement in vertue yield joyous ſatisfaction to us? are we not much comforted in apprehending our ſelves to proceed in a hopefull way towards everlaſting felicity? this may inſtruct us what content we ſhould feel in our neighbours proſperity, both temporal and ſpiritual.

Do we not ſeriouſly grieve at our own diſaſters and diſappointments; are we not in ſad dumps, whenever we incurr any damage or diſgrace; do not our diſeaſes and pains ſorely afflict us; do we not pity and bemoan our ſelves in any want, calamity or diſtreſs? can we eſpecially, if we are our ſelves, without grievous diſpleaſure apprehend our ſelves enſlaved to Sin and Satan, deſtitute of God's favour, expoſed to endleſs miſery? hence may we learn how we ſhould condole and commiſerate the miſfortunes of our neighbour.

Do we not eagerly proſecute our own concerns? do we not with huge vigour and induſtry ſtrive to acquire all conveniences and comforts to our ſelves, to rid our ſelves of all wants and moleſtations? is our ſolicitous care or painful endeavour ever wanting toward the ſupport and ſuccour of our ſelves in any of our needs? are we ſatisfied in merely wiſhing our ſelves well? are we not alſo buſie and active in procuring what we affect? eſpecially, if we are well adviſed, do we not effectually provide for the weal of our ſoul, and ſupply of our ſpiritual neceſſities; labouring to reſcue our ſelves from ignorance and errour, from the tyranny of ſin, from the torture of a bad conſcience, from the danger of hell? this ſheweth how ready we ſhould be really to further our neighbours's good, miniſtring to him all kinds of aſſiſtance and relief ſuitable to his needs, both corporal and ſpiritual.

Are we ſo proud or nice, that we diſdain to yield attendance or ſervice needfull for our own ſuſtenance or convenience? do we not indeed gladly perform the meaneſt and moſt ſordid offices for our ſelves? this declareth how condeſcenſive we ſhould be in helping our neighbour, how ready even to waſh his feet, when occaſion doth require.

Do we love to vex our ſelves, or croſs our own humour? do we not rather ſeek by all means to pleaſe and gratifie our ſelves? this may warn us, how innocent and inoffenſive, how compliant and complacent we Rom. 15. 2. ſhould be in our behaviour towards others; endeavouring to pleaſe them in all things, eſpecially for their good to edification.

Are we eaſily angry with our ſelves, do we retain implacable grudges againſt our ſelves, or do we execute upon our ſelves miſchievous revenge? are we not rather very meek and patient towards our ſelves, mildly comporting with our own great weakneſſes, our troubleſome humours, our impertinences and follies; readily forgiving our ſelves the moſt heinous offences, neglects, affronts, injuries and outrages committed by us againſt our own intereſt, honour and welfare? hence may we derive leſſons of meekneſs and patience, to be exerciſed towards our neighbour, in bearing his infirmities and miſcarriages, in remitting any wrongs or diſcourteſies received from him.

Are we apt to be rude in our deportment, harſh in our language, or rigorous in our dealing towards our ſelves? do we not rather in word and deed treat our ſelves very ſoftly, very indulgently? Do we uſe to pry for faults, or to pick quarrels with our ſelves, to carp at any thing ſaid or done by us, raſhly or upon ſlight grounds to charge blame on our ſelves, to lay heavy cenſures on our actions, to make foul conſtructions of our words, to blazon our defects, or aggravate our failings? do we not rather connive at and conceal our blemiſhes; do we not excuſe and extenuate our own crimes?

Can we find in our hearts to frame virulent invectives, or to dart bitter taunts and ſcoffs againſt our ſelves; to murder our own credit by ſlander, to blaſt it by detraction, to maim it by reproach, to proſtitute it to be deflowred by jeering and ſcurrilous abuſe? are we not rather very jealous of our reputation, and ſtudious to preſerve it, as a precious ornament, a main fence, an uſefull inſtrument of our welfare?

Do we delight to report, or like to hear ill ſtories of our ſelves? do we not rather endeavour all we can to ſtifle them; to tie the tongues and ſtop the ears of men againſt them? hence may we be acquainted how civil and courteous in our behaviour, how fair and ingenuous in our dealing, how candid and mild in our judgment or cenſure we ſhould be towards our neighbour; how very tender and carefull we ſhould be of any-wiſe wronging or hurting his fame.

Thus reflecting on our ſelves, and making our practice towards our ſelves the pattern of our dealing with others, we ſhall not fail to diſcharge what is preſcribed to us in this Law: and ſo we have here a Rule of Charity. But farther,

2. Loving our neighbour as our ſelves doth alſo import the meaſure of our love towards him; that it ſhould be commenſurate and equal in degree to that love which we bear and exerciſe towards our ſelves. Saint Peter once and again doth exhort us to love one another ἐκτενῶς, with an 1 Pet. 1. 22.
outſtretched affection; and how far that affection ſhould be ſtretched we 4. 8.
are here informed; even that it ſhould reach the fartheſt that can be, or to a parity with that intenſe love, which we do bear in heart, and expreſs in performance towards our ſelves: ſo that we do either bring down our ſelf-love to ſuch a moderation, or raiſe up our charity to ſuch a fervency, that both come to be adjuſted in the ſame even level; this is that pitch, at which we ſhould aim and aſpire; this is that perfection of charity, which our Lord recommendeth to us in that injunction, Be Mat. 5. 48.
perfect, even as your father in heaven is perfect.

That this ſenſe of the words is included, yea chiefly intended, divers reaſons will evince: For

1. The moſt natural ſignification and common uſe of the phraſe doth import thus much; and any one at firſt hearing would ſo underſtand the words.

2. It appeareth by comparing this Precept with that to which it is annexed, of loving God with all our heart and all our ſoul, which manifeſtly deſigneth the quantity and degree of that love; conſequently the like determination is intended in this precept, which is expreſſed to reſemble that, or deſigned in like manner to qualifie and bound our duty towards our neighbour.

3. If the Law doth not ſignifie thus much, it doth hardly ſignifie any thing; not at leaſt any thing of direction or uſe to us; for no man is ignorant that he is obliged to love his neighbour, but how far that love muſt extend, is the point wherein moſt of us do need to be reſolved, and without ſatisfaction in which we ſhall hardly do any thing; for as he that oweth money will not pay except he can tell how much it is; ſo to know the Duty will not avail towards effectual obſervance of it, if its meaſure be not fixed.

4. Indeed, the Law otherwiſe underſtood will rather be apt to miſguide than to direct us; inducing us to apprehend, that we ſhall ſatisfie its intent and ſufficiently diſcharge our duty, by practiſing charity in any low degree or mean inſtance. Alſo,

5. The former ſenſe, which is unqueſtionable, doth infer and eſtabliſh this; becauſe ſimilitude of love, morally ſpeaking, cannot conſiſt with inequality thereof; for if in conſiderable degrees we love our ſelves more than others, aſſuredly we ſhall fail both in exerting ſuch internal acts of affection, and in performing ſuch external offices of kindneſs toward them, as we do exert and perform in regard to our ſelves; whence this Law, taken merely as a Rule, demanding a confuſed and imperfect ſimilitude of practice, will have no clear obligation or certain efficacy.

6. But farther to aſſure this expoſition, I ſhall declare that the Duty thus interpreted is agreeable to reaſon, and may juſtly be required of us, upon conſiderations, which together will ſerve to preſs the obſervance of it, according to ſuch meaſure.

1. It is reaſonable that we ſhould thus love our neighbour as our ſelves, becauſe he is as our ſelves, or really in all conſiderable reſpects the ſame with us: We concurr with him in all that is neceſſary, ſubſtantial and ſtable; we differ from him only in things contingent, circumſtantial and variable; in the which, of courſe or by chance we are liable in a ſmall time as much to differ from our ſelves: in ſuch reſpects we are not the ſame to day that we were yeſterday, and ſhall be to morrow; for we ſhift our circumſtances as we do our cloaths; our bodies are in continual flux, and our ſouls do much conform to their alteration; our temper and complexion do vary with our air, out diet, our converſation, our fortunes, our age; our parts grow and decay, our principles and judgments, our affections and deſires are never fixed, and ſeldom reſt long in the ſame place; all our outward ſtate doth eaſily change face; ſo that if we conſider the ſame Perſon in youth and in age, in health and in ſickneſs, in proſperity and in diſtreſs, may we not ſay quantùm mutatus ab illo, how quite another man is he grown? Yet ſhall a man for ſuch alterations ſurceaſe or abate his love to himſelf? why then in regard to the like differences ſhall we leſs affect our neighbour, who is endued with that common nature, which alone through all thoſe viciſſitudes ſticketh faſt in us; who is the moſt expreſs image of us, (or rather a copy, drawn by the ſame hand, of the ſame original) another ſelf, attired in a divers garb of circumſtances? do we not ſo far as we deſpiſe or diſaffect him, by conſequence ſlight or hate our ſelves; ſeeing (except bare perſonality, or I know not what metaphyſical identity) there is nothing in him different from what is, or what may be in us?

2. It is juſt that we ſhould love our neighbour equally with our ſelves, becauſe he really no leſs deſerveth love, or becauſe upon a fair judgment he will appear equally amiable: juſtice is impartial, and regardeth things as they are in themſelves, abſtracting from their relation to this or that perſon; whence if our neighbour ſeem worthy of affection no leſs than we, it demandeth that accordingly we ſhould love him no leſs.

And what ground can there be of loving our ſelves, which may not as well be found in others? is it endowments of nature, is it accompliſhments of knowledge, is it ornaments of vertue, is it accouſtrements of fortune; but is not our neighbour poſſeſſed of the ſame; is he not at 1 Cor. 4. 6, 7. leaſt capable of them, the collation and acquiſt of them depending on the ſame arbitrary bounty of God, or upon faculties and means commonly diſpenſed to all? May not any man at leaſt be as wiſe and as good as we? why then ſhould we not eſteem, why not affect him as much? doth relation to us alter the caſe? is ſelf as ſelf-lovely or valuable, doth that reſpect lend any worth or price to things?

Likewiſe, what more can juſtice find in our neighbour to obſtruct or depreſs our love than it may obſerve in our ſelves? hath he greater infirmities or defects, is he more liable to errours and miſcarriages, is he guilty of worſe faults than we? If without arrogance and vanity we cannot affirm this, then are we as unworthy of love as he can be; and refuſing any degree thereof to him, we may as reaſonably withdraw the ſame from our ſelves.

3. It is fit that we ſhould be obliged to love our neighbour equally with our ſelves, becauſe all charity beneath ſelf-love is defective, and all ſelf-love above charity is exceſſive.

It is an imperfect charity which doth not reſpect our neighbour according to his utmoſt merit and worth, which doth not heartily deſire his good, which doth not earneſtly promote his advantage in every kind, according to our ability and opportunity: and what beyond this can we do for our ſelves?

If in kind or degree we tranſcend this, it is not vertuous love or true friendſhip to our ſelves, but a vain fondneſs or perverſe dotage; proceeding from inordinate diſpoſitions of ſoul, grounded on fooliſh conceits, begetting foul qualities and practices; envy, ſtrife, ambition, avarice, and the like.

4. Equity requireth that we ſhould love our neighbour to this degree, becauſe we are apt to claim the ſame meaſure of love from others: no mean reſpect or ſlight affection will ſatisfie us; we cannot brook the leaſt diſregard or coldneſs; to love us a little is all one to us as not to love us at all: it is therefore equitable, that we ſhould be engaged to the ſame height of charity towards others; otherwiſe we ſhould be allowed in our dealings to uſe double weights and meaſures, which is plain iniquity: what indeed can be more ridiculouſly abſurd, than that we Prov. 20. 10 ſhould pretend to receive that from others, which we are not diſpoſed to yield to them upon the ſame ground and title?

5. It is needful that ſo great a charity ſhould be preſcribed, becauſe none inferiour thereto will reach divers weighty ends deſigned in this Law; namely, the general convenience and comfort of our lives in mutual ſociety and entercourſe: for if in conſiderable degree we do affect our ſelves beyond others, we ſhall be continually bickering and claſhing with them about points of intereſt and credit; ſcrambling with them for what may be had, and clambering to get over them in power and dignity; whence all the paſſions annoying our ſouls, and all the miſchiefs diſturbing our lives muſt needs enſue.

6. That entire love which we owe to God our Creatour, and to Chriſt our Redeemer, doth exact from us no leſs a meaſure of Charity than this; for ſeeing they have ſo clearly demonſtrated themſelves to bear an immenſe love to men, and have charged us therein to imitate them; it becometh us, in conformity, in duty, in gratitude to them, to bear the higheſt we can, that is, the ſame as we bear to our ſelves: for how can we love God enough, or with all our ſoul, if we do not accord with him in loving his friends and relations, his ſervants, his children with moſt entire affection?

If in God's judgment they are equal to us, if in his affection and care they have an equal ſhare, if he in all his dealings is indifferent and impartial partial towards all, how can our judgment, our affection, our behaviour be right, if they do not conſpire with him in the ſame meaſures?

7. Indeed the whole tenour and Genius of our Religion do imply obligation to this pitch of charity, upon various accounts.

It repreſenteth all worldly goods and matters of private intereſt as very inconſiderable and unworthy of our affection, thereby ſubtracting the fuel of immoderate ſelf-love.

It enjoyneth us for all our particular concerns entirely to rely upon providence, ſo barring ſolicitude for our ſelves, and diſpoſing an equal care for others.

It declareth every man ſo weak, ſo vile, ſo wretched, ſo guilty of ſin and ſubject to miſery (ſo for all good wholly indebted to the pure grace and mercy of God) that no man can have reaſon to dote on himſelf or, to prefer himſelf before others: we need not cark, or prog, or ſcrape for our ſelves, being aſſured that God ſufficiently careth for us.

In its account the fruits and recompences of love to others in advantage to our ſelves do far ſurpaſs all preſent intereſts and enjoyments; whence in effect the more or leſs we love others, anſwerably the more or leſs we love our ſelves, ſo that charity and ſelf-love become co-incident, and both run together evenly in one channel.

Matt. 5. 45. It recommendeth to us the imitation of God's love and bounty, which are abſolutely pure, without any regard, any capacity of benefit redounding to himſelf.

It commandeth us heartily to love even our bittereſt enemies and moſt cruel perſecuters; which cannot be performed without a proportionable abatement of ſelf-love.

1 Joh. 3. 16. It chargeth us not only freely to impart our ſubſtance, but willingly to expoſe our lives for the good of our brethren; in which caſe charity doth plainly match ſelf-love; for what hath a man more dear or precious than his life to lay out for himſelf?

It repreſenteth all men (conſidering their divine extraction, and being formed after God's Image; their deſignation for eternal glory and happineſs, their partaking of the common redemption by the undertakings and ſufferings of Chriſt, their being objects of God's tender affection and care) ſo very conſiderable, that no regard beneath the higheſt will befit them.

It alſo declareth us ſo nearly allied to them, and ſo greatly concerned
Gal. 3. 28. in their good, (we being all one in Chriſt, and members one of another)
Joh. 17. 21. that we ought to have a perfect complacency in their welfare, and a
Rom. 12. 5. 1 Cor. 12. 26. ſympathy in their adverſity, as our own.

Joh. 13. 35. It condemneth ſelf-love, ſelf-pleaſing, ſelf-ſeeking as great faults, 1 Tim. 3. 2. which yet (even in the higheſt exceſs) do not ſeem abſolutely bad; or 2 Pet. 2. 10. Rom. 15. 1. otherwiſe culpable, than as including partiality, or detracting from Phil. 2. 4. that equal meaſure of charity, which we owe to others; for ſurely we 1 Cor. 10. 24. cannot love our ſelves too much, if we love others equally with our
13. 5. ſelves; we cannot ſeek our own good exceſſively, if with the ſame earneſtneſs we ſeek the good of others.

It exhibiteth ſupernatural aids of grace, and conferreth that Holy Spirit of love, which can ſerve to no meaner purpoſes, than to quel that ſorry principle of niggardly ſelfiſhneſs, to which corrupt nature doth incline; and to enlarge our hearts to this divine extent of goodneſs.

8. Laſtly, many conſpicuous examples, propoſed for our direction in this kind of practice, do imply this degree of charity to be required of us.

It may be objected to our diſcourſe, that the duty thus underſtood, is unpracticable, Nature violently ſwaying to thoſe degrees of ſelf-love, which charity can no wiſe reach. This exception (would time permit) I ſhould aſſoil, by ſhewing how far, and by what means we may attain to ſuch a practice; (how at leaſt by aiming at this top of perfection we may aſcend nearer and nearer thereto) in the mean time experience doth ſufficiently evince poſſibility, and aſſuredly that may be done, which we ſee done before us: And ſo it is, pure charity hath been the root of ſuch affections and ſuch performances (recorded by indubitable teſtimony) toward others, which hardly any man can exceed in regard to himſelf: nor indeed hath there ſcarce ever appeared any heroical vertue, or memorable piety, whereof charity overbearing ſelfiſhneſs, and ſacrificing private intereſt to publick benefit, hath not been a main ingredient. For inſtance then;

Did not Abraham even prefer the good of others before his own, when he gladly did quit his countrey, patrimony, friends and kindred, to paſs his days in a wandring pilgrimage, upon no other encouragement than an overture of bleſſing on his poſterity?

Did not the charity of Moſes ſtretch thus far, when for the ſake of his brethren he voluntarily did exchange the ſplendours and delights of a Court for a condition of vagrancy and ſervility; chuſing rather, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin? did not it overſtretch, when (although having been grievouſly affronted by them) he wiſhed that rather his name ſhould be expunged from God's book, than that their ſin ſhould abide unpardoned?

Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 25. in Eph. Or. 7.

Heb. 11. 24.

Exod. 33. 32.

Βούλομαι μετ' ἐκείνων ἀπολέσθαι ἢ χωρὶς ἐκείνων σώζεσθαι.

ὄντως μανία, ὄντως ἔρως μέγας ——— Chryſt. in Eph. Or. 7.

Did not Samuel exerciſe ſuch a charity, when being ingratefully and injuriouſly diſmounted from his authority, he did yet retain toward that people a zealous deſire of their welfare, not ceaſing earneſtly to pray for them? 1 Sam. 12. 23.

Did not Jonathan love David equally with himſelf, when for his ſake he choſe to incurr the diſpleaſure of his father and his King; when for his advantage he was content to forfeit the privilege of his birth, and the inheritance of a Crown; when he could without envy or grudge look on the growing proſperity of his ſupplanter, could heartily wiſh his ſafety, could effectually protect it, could purchaſe it to him with his own great danger and trouble? when he, that in gallantry of courage and vertue did yield to none, was yet willing to become inferiour to one born his ſubject, one raiſed from the duſt, one taken from a ſheep-coat; ſo that unrepiningly and without diſdain he could ſay, Thou ſhalt be King over Iſrael, and I ſhall be next unto thee: are not theſe pregnant evidences, that it was truly ſaid in the ſtory, The ſoul of Jonathan was knit to the ſoul of David, and he loved him as his own ſoul?

1 Sam. 20. 30.

Pſal. 78. 70.

1 Sam. 23. 17.

1 Sam. 18. 1. 20. 17.

Did not the Pſalmiſt competently practice this duty, when in the ſickneſs of his ingrateful adverſaries he cloathed himſelf with ſackcloath, he humbled his ſoul with faſting; he bowed down heavily as one that mourneth for his mother? Pſal. 35. 12.

Were not Elias, Jeremy, and other Prophets as much concerned for the good of their country-men as for their own, when they took ſuch pains, when they ran ſuch hazards, when they endured ſuch hardſhips not only for them, but from them; being requited with hatred and miſuſage for endeavouring to reclaim them from ſin, and ſtop them from ruin?

May not the Holy Apoſtles ſeem to have loved mankind beyond themſelves, when for its inſtruction and reformation, for reconciling it to God and procuring its ſalvation, they gladly did undertake and undergo ſo many rough difficulties, ſo many formidable dangers, ſuch irkſome pains and troubles, ſuch extreme wants and loſſes, ſuch grievous ignominies and diſgraces; ſlighting all concerns of their own, and relinquiſhing whatever was moſt dear to them (their ſafety, their liberty, their eaſe, their eſtate, their reputation, their pleaſure, their very blood and breath) for the welfare of others; even of thoſe who did ſpitefully maligne and cruelly abuſe them?

Survey but the Life of one among them; mark the wearisome travels he undervent over all the earth, the ſolicitous cares which did poſſeſs his mind for all the Churches: the continual toils and drudgeries ſuſtained by him in preaching by word and writing; in viſiting, in admoniſhing, in all paſtoral employments; the impriſonments, the ſtripes, the reproaches, the oppoſitions and perſecutions of every kind, and from all ſorts of people, which he ſuffered; the pinching wants, the deſperate hazards, 2 Cor. 11. 23. the lamentable diſtreſſes with the which he did ever conflict; peruſe
4. 8. thoſe black catalogues of his afflictions regiſtred by himſelf; then tell 1 Cor. 4. 11. me how much his charity was inferiour to his ſelf-love? did not at leaſt the one vie with the other, when he, for the benefit of his diſciples, was Phil. 1. 24. content to be abſent from the Lord, or ſuſpended from a certain fruition
2 Cor. 5. 1, &c. of glorious beatitude; reſting in this uncomfortable ſtate, in this fleſhly tabernacle wherein he groaned, being burthened, and longing for enlargement? did he not ſomewhat beyond himſelf love thoſe men, for whoſe
Rom. 9. 3. ſalvation he wiſhed himſelf accurſed from Chriſt, or debarred from the aſ-2 Cor 11. 24, ſured enjoyment of eternal felicity; thoſe very men, by whom he had 25. 1 Theſſ. 2. 15. been ſtoned, had been ſcourged, had been often beaten to extremity, from whom he had received manifold indignities and outrages?

Acts 4. 34. Did not they love their neighbours as themſelves, who ſold their poſſeſſions, and diſtributed the prices of them for relief of their indigent brethren? did not moſt of the ancient Saints and Fathers mount near the top of this duty, of whom it is by unqueſtionable records teſtified, that they did freely beſtow all their private eſtate and ſubſtance on the poor, devoting themſelves to the ſervice of God and edification of his people? Finally,

Did not our Lord himſelf in our nature exemplifie this Duty, yea by his Practice far out-do his Precept? for, He who from the brighteſt glories, from the immenſe riches, from the ineffable joys and felicities of his celeſtial Kingdom, did willingly ſtoop down to aſſume the garb of a ſervant, to be cloathed with the infirmities of fleſh, to become a man of ſorrow, and acquainted with grief; He who for our ſake vouchſafed to live in extreme penury and diſgrace, to feel hard want, ſore travel, bitter perſecution, moſt grievous ſhame and anguiſh; He who not only did contentedly bear, but purpoſely did chuſe to be accuſed, to be ſlandered, to be reviled, to be mocked, to be tortured, to pour forth his
Rom. 5. 6, 8, heart-blood upon a croſs, for the ſake of an unprofitable, an unworthy,
10. 1 Pet. 3. 18. an impious, an ingrateful generation; for the ſalvation of his open ene-
Eph. 2. 1. mies, of baſe apoſtates, of perverſe rebels, of villainous traitours; He
Col. 2. 13. who, in the height of his mortal agonies, did ſue for the pardon of his Chryſ. in Eph. Or. 7. cruel murtherers; who did ſend his Apoſtles to them, did cauſe ſo many in 1 Cor. wonders to be done before them, did furniſh all means requiſite to con-
Or. 32. vert and ſave them; He that acted and ſuffered all this, and more than Heb. 12. 2. can be expreſſed, with perfect frankneſs and good will; did he not ſig-nally

nally love his neighbour as himſelf, to the utmoſt meaſure: did not in him vertue conquer nature, and charity triumph over ſelf-love? This he did to ſeal and impreſs his Doctrine; to ſhew us what we ſhould do, and what we can do by his grace; to oblige us and to encourage us unto a conformity with him in this reſpect; for, Walk in love, ſaith the Eph. 5. 1.
Apoſtle, as Chriſt hath alſo loved us, and hath given himſelf for us; And, 1 Joh. 3. 16. Joh. 15. 12.
This (ſaith he himſelf) is my commandment, that ye love one another as I 13. 34.
have loved you: And how can I better conclude, than in the recommendation of ſuch an Example?

Now, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, and God even our father, who hath 2 Theſſ. 2. 16.
loved us, and hath given us everlaſting conſolation, and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and ſtabliſh you in every good word and work.

SERMON XXVI.

Of the Love of our Neighbour.

MATTH. XXII. 39.

Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf.

I Have formerly diſcourſed on theſe words, and then ſhewed how they do import two obſervable Particulars; firſt a Rule of our Charity, or that it ſhould be like in nature; then a Meaſure of it, or that it ſhould be equal in degree to the love which we do bear to our ſelves. Of this latter interpretation I did aſſign divers reaſons, urging the obſervance of the Precept according to that notion: but one material point ſcantneſs of time would not allow me to conſider; which is the removal of an Exception, to which that interpretation is very liable, and which is apt to diſcourage from a ſerious application to the practice of this duty ſo expounded.

If, it may be ſaid, the Precept be thus underſtood, as to oblige us to love our neighbours equally with our ſelves, it will prove unpracticable, ſuch a charity being merely romantick and imaginary; for who doth, who can love his neighbour in this degree? nature powerfully doth reſiſt, common ſenſe plainly doth forbid that we ſhould do ſo: A natural inſtinct doth prompt us to love our ſelves, and we are forcibly driven thereto by an unavoidable ſenſe of pleaſure and pain, reſulting from the conſtitution of our body and ſoul, ſo that our own leaſt good or evil are very ſenſible to us; whereas we have no ſuch potent inclination to love others; we have no ſenſe or a very faint one of what another doth enjoy or endure: doth not therefore Nature plainly ſuggeſt, that our neighbours good cannot be ſo conſiderable to us as our own? eſpecially when charity doth claſh with ſelf-love, or when there is a competition between our neighbour's intereſt and our own, is it poſſible that we ſhould not be partial to our own ſide? is not therefore this Precept ſuch as if we ſhould be commanded to fly, or to do that which natural propenſion will certainly hinder?

In anſwer to this Exception, I ſay, firſt,

1. Be it ſo, that we can never attain to love our neighbour altogether ſo much as our ſelves, yet may it be reaſonable that we ſhould be enjoyned to do ſo; for

Laws muſt not be depreſſed to our imperfection, nor rules bent to our obliquity; but we muſt aſcend toward the perfection of them, and ſtrive to conform our practice to their exactneſs: if what is preſcribed be according to the reaſon of things juſt and fit, it is enough although our practice will not reach it; for what remaineth may be ſupplied by repentance and humility in him that ſhould obey, by mercy and pardon in him that doth command.

In the preſcription of duty it is juſt, that what may be required (even in rigour) ſhould be preciſely determined, though in execution of juſtice or diſpenſation of recompence conſideration may be had of our weakneſs; whereby both the authority of our Governour may be maintained, and his clemency glorified.

It is of great uſe, that by comparing the Law with our practice, and in the perfection of the one, diſcerning the defect of the other, we may be humbled, may be ſenſible of our impotency, may thence be forced to ſeek the helps of grace and the benefit of mercy.

Were the Rule never ſo low, our practice would come beneath it; it is therefore expedient that it ſhould be high, that at leaſt we may riſe higher in performance than otherwiſe we ſhould do; for the higher we aim, the nearer we ſhall go to the due pitch; as he that aimeth at heaven, although he cannot reach it, will yet ſhoot higher than he that aimeth only at the houſe top.

The height of duty doth prevent ſloth and decay in vertue, keeping us in wholſome exerciſe and in continual improvement, while we be always climbing toward the top, and ſtraining unto farther attainment: the ſincere proſecution of which courſe, as it will be more profitable unto us, ſo it will be no leſs acceptable to God, than if we could thoroughly fulfil the Law: for in judgment God will only reckon upon the ſincerity and earneſtneſs of our endeavour: ſo that if we have done our beſt, it will be taken as if we had done all. Our labour will not be loſt in the Lord; for the degrees of performance will be conſidered, and he that hath done his duty in part ſhall be proportionably recompenſed; according to that of Saint Paul; Every man ſhall receive his own reward according to his own work. Hence ſometimes we are enjoyned to be perfect as our heavenly father is perfect; and to be holy as God is holy; otherwhile to go on to perfection, and to preſs toward the mark; which Precepts in effect do import the ſame thing; but the latter implieth the former, although in attainment impoſſible, yet in attempt very profitable: and ſurely he is likely to write beſt, who propoſeth to himſelf the faireſt Copy for his imitation.

Phil. 3. 12.
1 Cor. 5. 28.
1 Theſſ. 1. 13.
Heb. 6. 10.
1 Cor. 3. 8.
Matt. 5. 48.
19. 21.
1 Pet. 1. 16.
Col. 4. 12.
Heb. 6. 1.
Phil. 3.

In fine, if we do act what is poſſible, or as we can, do conform to the rule of duty, we may be ſure that no impoſſibility of this, or of any other ſublime Law can prejudice us.

I ſay of any other Law; for it is not only this Law, to which this exception may be made, but many others, perhaps every one Evangelical Law, are alike repugnant to corrupt Nature, and ſeem to ſurmount our ability.

But neither is the performance of this taſk ſo impoſſible, or ſo deſperately hard (if we take the right courſe, and uſe proper means toward it) as is ſuppoſed; as may ſomewhat appear, if we will weigh the following conſiderations.

1. Be it conſidered, that we may be miſtaken in our account, when we do look on the impoſſibility or difficulty of ſuch a practice, as it appeareth at preſent, before we have ſeriouſly attempted, and in a good method, by due means, earneſtly laboured to atchieve it: for many things cannot be done at firſt, or with a ſmall practice, which by degrees and a continued endeavour may be effected; divers things are placed at a diſtance, ſo that without paſſing through the interjacent way we cannot arrive at them: divers things ſeem hard before trial, which afterward prove very eaſie: it is impoſſible to fly up to the top of a ſteeple, but we may aſcend thither by ſteps; we cannot get to Rome without croſſing the Seas, and travelling through France or Germany, it is hard to comprehend a ſubtle Theoreme in Geometry if we pitch on it firſt, but if we begin at the ſimple principles, and go forward through the intermediate propoſitions, we may eaſily attain a demonſtration of it: it is hard to ſwim, to dance, to play on an inſtrument, but a little trial, or a competent exerciſe will render thoſe things eaſie to us: So may the practice of this duty ſeem impoſſible, or inſuperably difficult, before we have employed divers means, and voided divers impediments; before we have enured our minds and affections to it, before we have tried our forces in ſome inſtances thereof, previous to others of a higher ſtrain, and nearer the perfection of it.

If we would ſet our ſelves to exerciſe charity in thoſe inſtances whereof we are at firſt capable without much reluctancy, and thence proceed toward others of a higher nature, we may find ſuch improvement, and taſte ſuch content therein, that we may ſoon ariſe to incredible degrees thereof, and at length perhaps we may attain to ſuch a pitch, that it will ſeem to us baſe and vain to conſider our own good before that of others, in any ſenſible meaſure; and that Nature which now ſo mightily doth conteſt in favour of our ſelves, may in time give way to a better Nature, born of cuſtom, affecting the good of others. Let not therefore a preſent ſenſe or experience raiſe in our minds a prejudice againſt the poſſibility or practicableneſs of this duty.

2. Let us conſider, that in ſome reſpects, and in divers inſtances, it is very feaſible to love our neighbour no leſs than our ſelves.

We may love our neighbour truly and ſincerely, out of a pure heart and a good conſcience, and faith unfeigned, as Saint Paul doth preſcribe; or according to Saint Peter's injunction, from a pure heart love one another fervently; and in this reſpect we can do no more toward our ſelves; for truth admitteth no degrees, ſincerity is a pure and compleat thing, excluſive of all mixture or alloy.

1 Tim. 1. 6.
1 Pet. 1. 22.
(Rom. 12. 9.)

And as to external acts at leaſt it is plain that charity toward others may reach ſelf-love; for we may be as ſerious, as vigorous, as induſtrious in acting for our neighbours good, as we can be in purſuing our own deſigns and intereſts; for reaſon eaſily can manage and govern external practice; and common experience ſheweth the matter to this extent practicable, ſeeing that often men do employ as much diligence on the concerns of others, as they can do on their own (being able to do no more than their beſt in either caſe) wherefore in this reſpect charity may vie with ſelfiſhneſs; and practiſing thus far may be a ſtep to mount higher.

Alſo rational conſideration will enable us to perform ſome interiour acts of charity in the higheſt degree; for if we do but, (as without much difficulty we may do) apply our mind to weigh the qualities and the actions of our neighbour, we may thence obtain a true opinion and juſt eſteem of him; and (ſecluding groſs folly or flattery of our ſelves) how can we in that reſpect or inſtance be more kind or benign to our ſelves?

Is it not alſo within the compaſs of our ability to repreſs thoſe paſſions of ſoul, the eruption whereof tendeth to the wrong, damage and offence of our neigbour; in regard to which practice Saint Paul affirmeth that Rom. 13. 10. the law may be fulfilled, Love, ſaith he, worketh no evil to his neighbour; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law? And what more in this reſpect can we perform for our ſelves?

3. We may conſider, that commonly we ſee men inclined by other principles to act as much or more for the ſake of others, as they would for themſelves.

Ἀληθὲς δὲ τὸ περὶ τοῦ σπουδαίου καὶ τὸ τῶν φίλων ἕνεκα πολλὰ πράττειν, καὶ τῆς πατρίδος κἂν δέῃ ὑπεραποθνήσκειν—— Ariſt. Eth. 9. 8.

Moral honeſty hath inclined ſome, ambition and popularity have excited others, to encounter the greateſt dangers, to attack the greateſt difficulties, to expoſe their ſafety, to ſacrifice their lives for the welfare of their Countrey.

Inſana amicitia. Sen. Ep. 9.

Common friendſhip hath often done as much, and brutiſh love (that mad friendſhip, as Seneca calleth it) commonly doth far more: for what will not a fond lover undertake and atchieve for his Minion, although ſhe really be the worſt enemy he can have? yet for ſuch a Snake Chryſ. in Eph. p. 797. will he not laviſh his eſtate, proſtitute his honour, abandon his eaſe, hazard his ſafety, ſhipwreck his conſcience, forfeit his ſalvation? what may not a Delilah obtain of her Sampſon, a Cleopatra of her Anthony, how prejudicial ſoever it be to his own intereſt and welfare?

Why then may not a principle of Charity (grounded on ſo much better reaſon, and backed by ſo much ſtronger motives) be conceived able to engage men to the like practice? why may not a man be diſpoſed to do that out of hearty good-will, which he can do out of vain conceit, or vicious appetite? why ſhall other forces overbear nature, and the power of charity be unable to match it?

4. Let us conſider, that thoſe diſpoſitions of ſoul which uſually with ſo much violence do thwart the obſervance of this Precept, are not ingredients of true ſelf-love, by the which we are directed to regulate our charity, but a ſpurious brood of our folly and pravity, which imply not a ſober love of our ſelves, but a corrupt fondneſs toward an idol of our fancy miſtaken for our ſelves.

A high conceit of our worth or ability, of our fortune or worldly ſtate, of our works and atchievements; a great complacence or confidence in ſome endowment or advantage belonging to us, a ſtiff adherence to our own will or humour, a greedy appetite to ſome particular intereſt or baſe pleaſure; theſe are thoſe, not attendants of natural ſelf-love, but iſſues of unnatural depravedneſs in judgment and affections, which render our practice ſo exorbitant in this regard, making us ſeem to love our ſelves ſo immoderately, ſo infinitely; ſo contracting our ſouls and drawing them inwards, that we appear indiſpoſed to love our neighbour in any conſiderable degree: If theſe (as by ſerious conſideration they may be) were voided, or much abated, it would not be found ſo grievous a matter to love our neighbour as our ſelves; for that ſober love remaining behind, to which nature inclineth, and which reaſon approveth, would rather help to promote than yield any obſtacle to our charity; if ſuch perverſe ſelfiſhneſs were checked and depreſſed, and natural kindneſs cheriſhed and advanced, then true ſelf-love and charity would compoſe themſelves into near a juſt poiſe.

5. Indeed (which we may farther conſider) our Nature is not ſo abſolutely averſe or indiſpoſed to the practice of ſuch charity, as to thoſe may ſeem, who view it ſlightly, either in ſome particular inſtances, or in ordinary practice; Nature hath furniſhed us with ſtrong inſtincts for the defence and ſuſtenance of our life; and common practice is depraved by ill education and cuſtom; theſe ſome men poring on do imagin no room left for charity in the conſtitution of men; but they conſider not, that one of theſe may be ſo moderated, and the other ſo corrected, that charity may have a fair ſcope in mens hearts and practice; and they ſlip over divers pregnant marks of our natural inclination thereto.

Man having received his ſoul from the breath of God, and being framed after the image of his moſt benign Parent, there do yet abide in him ſome Features reſembling God, and Relicks of the divine original; there are in us ſeeds of ingenuity, of equity, of pity, of benignity, which being cultivated by ſober conſideration and good uſe (under the conduct and aid of heavenly grace) will produce noble fruits of charity.

The frame of our Nature ſo far diſpoſeth us thereto, that our bowels are touched with ſenſible pain upon the view of any calamitous object; our fancy is diſturbed at the report of any diſaſter befalling any perſon; we can hardly ſee or read a Tragedy without motions of compaſſion.

The practice of benignity, of courteſie, of clemency at firſt ſight, without any diſcurſive reflection, doth obtain approbation and applauſe from us; being no leſs grateful and amiable to the mind than beauty to our eyes, harmony to our ears, fragrancy to our ſmell, and ſweetneſs to our palate, and to the ſame mental ſenſe malignity, cruelty, harſhneſs, all kinds of uncharitable dealing, are very diſguſtful and loathſome.

There wanteth not any commendation to procure a reſpect for Charity; nor any invective to breed abhorrence of uncharitableneſs, Nature ſufficiently prompting to favour the one and to deteſt the other.

The practice of the former in common language hath ever been ſtyled humanity, and the diſpoſition from whence it floweth is called good nature; the practice of the latter is likewiſe termed inhumanity, and its ſource ill-nature; as thwarting the common notions and inclinations of Mankind, diveſting us of our manhood, and rendring us a ſort of Monſters among men.

No quality hath a clearer repute, or is commonly more admired than generoſity, which is a kind of natural charity, or hath a great ſpice thereof; No diſpoſition is more deſpiſed among men than niggardly ſelfiſhneſs; whence commonly men are aſhamed to avow ſelf-intereſt as a principle of their actions, (rather fathering them on ſome other cauſe) as being conſcious to themſelves that it is the baſeſt of all principles.

Whatever the cenſurers and detractours of humane nature do pretend, yet even themſelves do admire pure beneficence, and contemn ſelfiſhneſs; for (if we look to the bottom of their intent) it is hence, they are bent Ὅθεν τοὺς φιλανθρώπους ἐπαινοῦμεν —— Ariſt. Eth. 8. 1.

Ἐπιτιμῶσι γὰρ τοῖς ἑαυτοὺς μάλιστα ἀγαπῶσι, καὶ ὡς ἐν αἰσχρῷ φιλαύτους ἀποκαλοῦσι. Ariſt. 9. 8.

Ὅσῳ ἂν βελτίων ᾖ, μᾶλλον διὰ τὸ καλὸν καὶ φίλου ἕνεκα, τὸ δ' αὑτοῦ παρίησι. Ibid.

to ſlander mankind as void of good nature, becauſe out of malignity they would not allow it a quality ſo excellent and divine.

Wherefore according to the general judgment and conſcience of men (to omit other conſiderations) our Nature is not ſo averſe from charity, or deſtitute of propenſions thereto; and therefore cheriſhing the natural ſeeds of it, we may improve it to higher degrees.

6. But ſuppoſing the inclinations of Nature, as it now ſtandeth in its depraved and crazy ſtate, do ſo mightily obſtruct the practice of this duty in the degree ſpecified, ſo that however we cannot by any force of reaſon or philoſophy attain to deſire ſo much or reliſh ſo well the good of others as our own, yet we muſt remember, that a ſubſidiary power is by the divine mercy diſpenſed, able to control and ſubdue Nature to a compliance, to raiſe our practice above our natural forces. We have a like averſeneſs to other ſpiritual duties (to the loving God with all our hearts, to the mortifying our fleſh and carnal deſires, to the contempt of worldly things, and placing our happineſs in ſpiritual goods) yet we are able to perform them by the ſuccour of grace, and in virtue of that omnipotency which Saint Paul aſſumed to himſelf when he ſaid, I can do all things by Chriſt enabling me.

Phil. 4. 13. ἐν τῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντι ——
2. Tim. 1. 7.

It we can get the Spirit of love (and aſſuredly we may get it, if we carefully will ſeek it, with conſtant fervency imploring it from him, who hath promiſed to beſtow it on thoſe that ask it) it will infuſe into our minds that light, whereby we ſhall diſcern the excellency of this duty, together with the folly and baſeneſs of that ſelfiſhneſs which croſſeth it; it will kindle in our hearts charitable affections, diſpoſing us to wiſh all good to our neighbour, and to feel pleaſure therein; it will render us partakers of that divine nature, which ſo will guide and urge us in due meaſure to affect the benefit of others, as now corrupt nature doth move us unmeaſurably to covet our own; being ſupported and elevated by its virtue, we may (ſurmounting the clogs of fleſhly ſenſe and conceit) ſoar up to the due pitch of charity; being θεοδίδακτοι, taught of God to love one another; and endowed with the fruits of the Spirit, which are love, gentleneſs, goodneſs, meekneſs, and created according to God in Chriſt Jeſus to the practice of anſwerable good works.

1 Theſſ. 4. 9.
Gal. 5. 22. }
Eph. 5. 9. }
Col. 3. 12.
Eph. 4. 24.
2. 10.

7. There are divers means conducible to the abatement of difficulty in this practice, which I ſhall propoſe, referring the matter to iſſue upon due trial of them.

1. Let us carefully weigh the value of thoſe things which immoderate ſelf-love doth affect in prejudice to charity, together with the worth of thoſe which charity doth ſet in balance to them.

Ariſtotle himſelf doth obſerve, that the ground of culpable ſelf-love, ſcraping, ſcrambling, ſcuffling for particular intereſt, is mens high eſteem and paſſion for, and greedy appetite of wealth, of honours, of corporeal pleaſures; whereas vertuous perſons not admiring thoſe things will conſtantly act for honeſty ſake, and out of love to their friends or country; wherein although they moſt really benefit and truly gratifie themſelves, yet are they not blamed for ſelfiſhneſs.

Οἱ μὲν οὖν εἰς ὄνειδος ἄγοντες αὐτὸ φιλαύτους καλοῦσι τοὺς ἑαυτοῖς ἀπονέμοντας τὸ πλεῖον ἐν χρήμασι καὶ τιμαῖς καὶ ἡδοναῖς ταῖς σωματικαῖς· τούτων γὰρ οἱ πολλοὶ ὀρέγονται, καὶ ἐσπουδάκασι περὶ αὐτὰ ὡς ἄριστα ὄντα, διὸ καὶ περιμάχητά ἐστιν· οἱ δὲ περὶ ταῦτα πλεονέκται χαρίζονται ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις καὶ ὅλως τοῖς πάθεσι, καὶ τῷ ἀλόγῳ τῆς ψυχῆς· ——δικαίως δὲ τοῖς οὕτω φιλαύτοις ὀνειδίζεται. —— Ariſt. Eth. 9. 8. [illegible]

And ſo indeed it is; If we rightly did apprehend the infinite vanity of all worldly goods, the meanneſs of private concerns, the true deſpicableneſs of all thoſe honours, thoſe profits, thoſe delights on which commonly men do ſo dote, we ſhould not be ſo fond or jealous of them, as to ſcrape or ſcuffle for them, envying or grutching them to others; If we did conceive the tranſcendent worth of future rewards allotted to this and other vertues, the great conſiderableneſs of publick good at which charity aimeth, the many advantages which may accrue to us from our neighbours welfare, (entertained with complacence, and wiſely accommodated to our uſe) we ſhould not be ſo averſe from tendring his good as our own.

2. Let us conſider our real ſtate in the world, in dependence upon the pleaſure and providence of Almighty God.

If we look upon our ſelves as ſubſiſting only by our own care and endeavour, without any other patronage or help, it may thence prove hard to regard the intereſts of others as comparable to our own, ſeeing then in order to our living with any convenience, it is neceſſary that we ſhould be ſolicitous for our own preſervation and ſuſtenance, that will engage us to contend with others as competitours for the things we need, and uncapable otherwiſe to attain: But if (as we ought to do, and the true ſtate of things requireth) we conſider our ſelves as ſubſiſting under the protection, and by the providence of God, who no leſs careth for us than for others, and no leſs for others than for us (for, as the Wiſe-man ſaith, he careth for all alike) who recommendeth to us a being mutually concerned each for other, and is engaged to keep us from ſuffering thereby; who commandeth us to diſburthen our cares upon himſelf; who aſſuredly will the better provide for us, as we do more further the good of others: If we do conſider thus, it will deliver us from ſolicitude concerning our ſubſiſtence and perſonal accommodations, whence we may be free to regard the concerns of others, with no leſs application than we do regard our own.

Ὁμοίως δὲ προνοεῖ περὶ πάντων. Sap. 6. 7.

As living under the ſame Government and Laws (being members of one Common-wealth, one Corporation, one Family) diſpoſeth men not only willingly but earneſtly to ſerve the publick intereſt, beyond any hopes of receiving thence any particular advantage anſwerable to their pain and care; ſo conſidering themſelves as members of the world, and of the Church, under the governance and patronage of God, may diſengage us from immoderate reſpect of private good, and incline us to promote the common welfare.

3. There is one plain way of rendring this duty poſſible, or of perfectly reconciling charity to ſelf-love; which is, a making the welfare of our neighbour to be our own, which if we can do, then eaſily may we deſire it more ſeriouſly, then may we promote it with the greateſt zeal and vigour; for then it will be an inſtance of ſelf-love to exerciſe charity, then both theſe inclinations conſpiring will march evenly together, one will not extrude nor depreſs the other.

It may be hard, while our concerns appear divided, not to prefer our own, but when they are coincident, or conſpire together, the ground of that partiality is removed.

Nor is this an imaginary courſe, but grounded in reaſon, and thereby reducible to practice: for conſidering the manifold bands of relation (natural, civil, or ſpiritual) between men, as naturally of the ſame kind and blood, as civilly members of the ſame ſociety, as ſpiritually linked in one brotherhood; conſidering the mutual advantages derivable from the wealth and welfare of each other, (in way of needful ſuccour, advice and comfort, of profitable commerce, of pleaſant converſation;)

verſation;) conſidering the miſchiefs, which from our neighbours indigency and affliction we may incur, they rendring him as a wild beaſt, unſociable, troubleſome and formidable to us; conſidering that we cannot be happy without good nature, and good humour, and that good nature cannot behold any ſad object without pity and dolorous reſentment, good humour cannot ſubſiſt in proſpect of ſuch objects; conſidering that charity is an inſtrument, whereby we may apply all our neighbour's good to our ſelves, it being ours, if we can find complacence therein; it may appear reaſonable to reckon all our neighbour's concerns to our account.

That this is practicable, experience may confirm; for we may obſerve, that men commonly do thus appropriate the concerns of others, reſenting the diſaſters of a friend, or of a relation with as ſenſible diſpleaſure as they could their own; and anſwerably finding as high a ſatisfaction in their good fortune. Yea many perſons do feel more pain by compaſſion for others, than they could do in ſuſtaining the ſame evils; divers can with a ſtout heart undergo their own afflictions, who are melted with thoſe of a friend or brother. Seeing then in true judgment humanity doth match any other relation, and Chriſtianity far doth exceed all other alliances, why may we not on them ground the like affections and practices, if reaſon hath any force, or conſideration can any wiſe ſway in our practice?

4. It will greatly conduce to the perfect obſervance of this Rule, to the depreſſion of ſelf-love, and advancement of charity to the higheſt pitch, if we do ſtudiouſly contemplate our ſelves, ſtrictly examining our conſcience, and ſeriouſly reflecting on our unworthineſs and vileneſs; the infirmities and defects of nature, the corruptions and defilements of our ſoul, the ſins and miſcarriages of our lives; which doing, we ſhall certainly be far from admiring or doting on our ſelves; but Job 9. 20. rather, as Job did, we ſhall condemn and abhor our ſelves; when we Job 42. 6. ſee our ſelves ſo deformed and ugly, how can we be amiable in our own eyes? how we can more eſteem or affect our ſelves than others, of whoſe unworthineſs we can hardly be ſo conſcious or ſure? what place can there be for that vanity and folly, for that pride and arrogance, for that partiality and injuſtice, which are the ſources of immoderate ſelf-love?

5. And laſtly, we may from many conſpicuous Experiments and Examples be aſſur'd that ſuch a practice of this Duty is not impoſſible; but theſe I have already propuced and urged in the precedent Diſcourſe, and ſhall not repeat them again.

SER-

SERMON XXVII.

The Nature, Properties and Acts of Charity.

EPHESIANS V. 2.

And walk in love.

SAint Paul telleth us, that the end of the commandment (or the main 1 Tim. 1. 5. ſcope of the Evangelical Doctrine) is charity, out of a pure heart and a good conſcience, and faith unfeigned; that charity is a general principle of all good practice, (let all your things be done in charity;) 1 Cor. 16. 14.
that it is the ſum and abridgment of all other duties, ſo that he Gal. 5. 14.
that loveth another, hath fulfilled the whole law; that it is the chief of Rom. 13. 8, 9.
the Theological vertues; the prime fruit of the divine Spirit, and the 1 Cor. 13. 13. Gal. 5. 22.
band of perfection, which combineth and conſummateth all other graces. Col. 3. 14.

Saint Peter enjoyneth us that to all other vertues we ſhould add charity, 2 Pet. 1. 7.
as the top and crown of them; and, Above all things, ſaith he, have 1 Pet. 4. 8.
fervent charity among your ſelves.

Saint James ſtyleth the Law of Charity νόμον βασιλικὸν, the royal, or Jam. 2. 8.
Sovereign Law.

Saint John calleth it, in way of excellence, the commandment of God, 1 Joh. 3. 23, (This is his commandment, that we ſhould love one another.) 11. 4. 21.

Our Lord claimeth it for his peculiar Law, This is my commandment; Joh. 15. 12. and a new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another. And he 13. 34.
maketh the obſervance of it the ſpecial badge and cognizance of his followers;
By this ſhall all men know that ye are my diſciples, if ye love one Joh. 13. 35.
another.

It being therefore a duty of ſo grand importance, it is moſt requiſite that we ſhould well underſtand it, and faithfully obſerve it; to which purpoſes I ſhall by God's aſſiſtance endeavour to confer ſomewhat, firſt, by explaining its Nature, then by preſſing the obſervance of it by ſeveral Inducements.

The nature of it will, as I conceive, be beſt underſtood by repreſenting the ſeveral chief Acts, which it compriſeth or implieth as neceſſary pre-requiſites, or eſſential ingredients, or inſeparable adherents to it; ſome internally reſident in the ſoul, others diſcharged in external performance; together with ſome ſpecial properties of it. And ſuch are thoſe which follow.

I. Loving our neighbour doth imply, that we ſhould value and eſteem him: this is neceſſary, for affection doth follow opinion; ſo that we cannot like any thing which we do not eſteem, or wherein we do not apprehend ſome conſiderable good, attractive of affection; that is not amiable which is wholly contemptible; or ſo far as it is ſuch.

But in right judgment no man is ſuch; for the Wiſe-man telleth us, Prov. 14. 21. that He that deſpiſeth his neighbour, ſinneth; and, He is void of under- Prov. 11. 12. ſtanding that deſpiſeth his neighbour; but no man is guilty of ſin or folly for deſpiſing that which is wholly deſpicable.

It is indeed true, that every man is ſubject to defects, and to miſchances, apt to breed contempt, eſpecially in the minds of vulgar and weak people; but no man is really deſpicable. For Every man living hath ſtamped on him the venerable Image of his glorious Maker, which nothing incident to him can utterly deface.

Every man is of a divine extraction, and allied to heaven by nature and by grace; as the Son of God, and the Brother of God incarnate. If Job 31. 13, 14, 15. I did deſpiſe the cauſe of my man-ſervant or of my maid ſervant, when they contended with me; What then ſhall I do when God riſeth up, and when he viſiteth what ſhall I anſwer him? Did not he that made me in the womb, make him? and did not one faſhion us in the womb?

Every man is endewed with that celeſtial faculty of reaſon, inſpired Job 32. 8. by the Almighty, (for, There is a ſpirit in man, and the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth them underſtanding) and hath an immortal ſpirit reſiding in him; or rather is himſelf an Angelical ſpirit dwelling in a viſible tabernacle.

Every man was originally deſigned and framed for a fruition of eternal happineſs.

Every man hath an intereſt in the common redemption, purchaſed by the blood of the Son of God, who taſted death for every one.

Every man is capable of Sovereign bliſs, and hath a crown of endleſs glory offered to him.

In fine, every man, and all men alike, antecedently to their own will and choice, are the objects of his love, of his care, of his mercy; who Pſal. 145. 9. is loving unto every man, and whoſe mercy is over all his works; who hath Job 34. 19. Sap. 6. 8. made the ſmall and the great, and careth for all alike; who is rich, in Rom. 10. 12. 3. 22. bounty and mercy, toward all that call upon him.

How then can any man be deemed contemptible, having ſo noble relations, capacities, and privileges? How a man ſtandeth in eſteem with Job 36. 5. God Elihu telleth us, God (ſaith he) is mighty and deſpiſeth not any; Pſal. 69. 33. although he be ſo mighty, ſo excellent in perfection, ſo infinitely in ſtate exalted above all, yet doth not he ſlight any; and how can we contemn thoſe, whom the certain voucher and infallible judge of worth deigneth to value? Indeed God ſo valued every man as to take great care, to be at great coſt and trouble, to ſtoop down from heaven, to aſſume mortal fleſh, to endure pinching wants and ſore diſtreſſes, to taſte death for every one.

Rom. 14. 10. We may ask with S. Paul, Why doſt thou ſet at nought thy brother?

Is it for the lowneſs of his condition, or for any misfortune that hath
Jam. 2. 5. befallen him? but are not the beſt men, are not all men, art not thou Pſal. 38. 33. 146. 9. thy ſelf obnoxious to the like? hath not God declared that he hath a ſpecial regard to ſuch? and are not ſuch things commonly diſpoſed by his hand with a gracious intent?

Is it for meanneſs of parts, or abilities, or endowments? but are not theſe the gifts of God, abſolutely at his diſpoſal, and arbitrarily diſtributed or preſerved; ſo that thou who art ſo wiſe in thy own conceit to day, mayeſt by a diſeaſe, or from a judgment (deſerved by thy pride) 1 Cor. 1. 26. become an Idiot to morrow? have not many good and therefore many happy men wanted thoſe things?

Is it for moral imperfections or blemiſhes; for vicious habits, or actual miſdemeanours? theſe indeed are the only debaſements and diſparagements of a man; yet do they not expunge the characters of Divinity impreſſed on his nature; and he may by God's mercy recover from them: And are not we our ſelves, if grace do not uphold us, liable to the ſame? yea may we not, if without partiality or flattery we examin our ſelves, diſcern the ſame within us, or other defects equivalent? And however, is not pity rather due to them than contempt? whoſe Luk. 18. 9. character was it, that they truſted they were righteous, and deſpiſed others? 16. 15. That the moſt palpable offender ſhould not be quite deſpiſed God had a ſpecial care in his Law, for that end moderating puniſhment, and reſtraining the number of ſtripes; If (ſaith the Law) the wicked man be Deut. 25. 2- worthy to be beaten, the Judge ſhall cauſe him to lye down, and to be beaten before his face, according to his fault, by a certain number; forty ſtripes he may give him and not exceed; leſt if he ſhould exceed, and beat him above theſe with many ſtripes, then thy brother ſhould ſeem vile unto thee.

We may conſider, that the common things (both good and bad) wherein men agree, are far more conſiderable than the peculiar things wherein they differ; to be a Man is much beyond being a Lord, or a Wit, or a Philoſopher; to be a Chriſtian doth infinitely ſurpaſs being an Emperour, or a learned Clerk; to be a Sinner is much worſe than to be a Beggar or an Idiot: The agreement of men is in the ſubſtance and body of things; the difference is in a circumſtance, a fringe, or a ſhadow about them; ſo that we cannot deſpiſe another man, without reflecting contempt on our ſelves, who are ſo very like him, and not conſiderably better than he, or hardly can without arrogance pretend to be ſo.

We may therefore, and reaſon doth require that we ſhould value our neighbour; and it is no impoſſible or unreaſonable Precept which S. Peter giveth us, to Honour all men; and with it a charitable mind will ea- 1 Pet. 2. 17. ſily comply; it ever will deſcry ſomething valuable, ſomething honourable, ſomething amiable in our neighbour; it will find ſomewhat of dignity in the meaneſt, ſomewhat of worth in the baſeſt, ſomewhat hopeful in the moſt degenerate of men; it therefore will not abſolute- 1 Cor. 13. 7. ly ſlight or ſcorn any man whatever, looking on him as an abject or forlorn wretch, unworthy of conſideration.

It is indeed a point of charity to ſee more things eſtimable in others than in our ſelves; or to be apprehenſive of more defects meriting diſeſteem in our ſelves than in others; and conſequently in our opinion to prefer others before us, according to thoſe Apoſtolical Precepts, Be Rom. 12. 10. kindly affected one toward another with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. In lowlineſs of mind let each eſteem other better than them- Phil. 2. 3. ſelves. Be ſubject one to another. 1 Pet. 5. 5.

II. Loving our neighbour doth imply a ſincere and earneſt deſire of his welfare, and good of all kinds, in due proportion: for it is a property of love, that it would have its object moſt worthy of it ſelf, and conſequently that it ſhould attain the beſt ſtate whereof it is capable, and perſiſt firm therein; to be fair and plump, to flouriſh and thrive without diminution or decay; this is plain to experience in reſpect to any other thing (a horſe, a flower, a building, or any ſuch thing) which we pretend to love; wherefore charity ſhould diſpoſe us to be thus affected to our neighbour; ſo that we do not look upon his condition or affairs with an indifferent eye, or cold heart, but are much concerned for him, and put forth hearty wiſhes for his intereſts: we ſhould wiſh him adorned with all vertue, and accompliſhed with all worthy endowments of ſoul; we ſhould wiſh him proſperous ſucceſs in all his deſigns; and a comfortable ſatisfaction of his deſires; we ſhould wiſh him with alacrity of mind to reap the fruits of his induſtry, and to enjoy the beſt accommodations of his life. Not formally and in complement, as the mode is, but really and with a cordial ſenſe, upon his undertaking any enterprize, we ſhould wiſh him good ſpeed; upon any proſperous ſucceſs of his endeavours, we ſhould bid him joy; wherever he is going, whatever he is doing, we ſhould wiſh him peace and the preſence of God with him: we ſhould tender his health, his ſafety, his quiet, his reputation, his wealth, his proſperity in all reſpects; but eſpecially with peculiar ardency we ſhould deſire his final welfare, and the happineſs of his ſoul, that being incomparably his chief concern.

Hence readily ſhould we pour forth our prayers, which are the trueſt expreſſions of good deſire, for the welfare of our neighbour, to him who is able to work and beſtow it.

Such was the charity of Saint Paul for his Country-men, ſignified in Rom. 10. 1. thoſe words, Brethren, my heart's deſire and prayer to God for Iſrael is, ἐπιποθῶ ὑμάς. that they may be ſaved; ſuch was his love to the Philippians, God is my
Phil. 1. 8---- 2 Cor. 13. 9. record how greatly I long after you all, in the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt; and this I pray, that your love may abound more and more in knowledge, and in all judgment——

Such was Saint John's charity to his friend Gaius, to whom he ſaid, 3 Joh. 2. Beloved, I wiſh above all things, that thou mayſt proſper and be in health even as thy ſoul proſpereth.

Such is the charity, which we are enjoyned to expreſs toward all 1 Tim. 2. 3. men, by praying for all men, in conformity to the charity of God, who will have all men to be ſaved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Such is the charity we are commanded to uſe toward our enemies, Matt. 5. 44. bleſſing thoſe that curſe us, and praying for thoſe who deſpitefully uſe us,
Luk. 23. 34. and perſecute us; the which was exemplified by our Lord, by S. Ste-
Acts. 7. 60. 1 Cor. 4. 12. phen, by all the Holy Apoſtles.

III. Charity doth imply a complacence or delightful ſatisfaction in the good of our neighbour; this is conſequent on the former property, for that joy naturally doth reſult from events agreeable to our deſire: Charity hath a good eye, which is not offended or dazled with the luſtre of its neighbour's vertue, or with the ſplendour of his fortune, but vieweth either of them ſteadily with pleaſure, as a very delightful ſpectacle; It beholdeth him to proſper and flouriſh, to grow in wealth and repute, not only without envious repining, but with gladſome content: Its
Rom. 12. 15. property is to rejoice with them that rejoice; to partake of their enjoyments, to feaſt in their pleaſures, to triumph in their ſucceſs.

As one member doth feel the health and the delight which another 1 Cor. 12. 26. immediately doth enjoy; ſo hath a charitable man a ſenſible complacence in the welfare and joy of his neighbour.

His proſperity of any kind, in proportion to its importance, doth pleaſe him; but eſpecially his ſpiritual proficiency and improvement in vertue doth yield matter of content; and his good deeds he beholdeth with abundant ſatisfaction.

2 Cor. 13. 9. This is that inſtance of charity which S. Paul ſo frequently doth ex-Phil. 2. 2. 4. 1. 1 Theſſ. 3. 9. preſs in his Epiſtles, declaring the extreme joy he did feel in the faith, in
2. 19. the vertue, in the orderly converſation of thoſe brethren to whom he writeth.

This charity poſſeſſed Saint John, when he ſaid, I have no greater joy 3 Joh. 4. than to hear that my children walk in truth.

This is the charity of heaven, which doth even chear the Angels, and doth enhance the bliſs of the bleſſed Spirits there; of whom it is ſaid, There is joy in heaven over every ſinner that repenteth. Hence, Luk. 15. 7, 10. This is the diſpoſition of charitable perſons ſincerely to congratulate any good occurrence to their neighbour; they are ready to conſpire in rendring thanks and praiſe to the Authour of their welfare; taking the good conferred on their neighbour as a bleſſing and obligation on themſelves; ſo that they upon ſuch occaſions are apt to ſay with Saint Paul; What thanks can we render to God for you, for all the joy wherewith we 1 Theſſ. 3. 9. joy for your ſakes before God? and, We are bound to thank God always 2 Theſſ. 1. 3. for you, brethren, becauſe that your faith groweth exceedingly, and that the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth: and, I 1 Cor. 1 4, 5. (Phil. 1. 3. thank my God always on your behalf for the grace of God, which is given you Rom. 1. 8. by Jeſus Chriſt, that in every thing ye are enriched by him. Eph. 1. 16. Col. 1. 3.

It is a Precept of Saint Paul, Give thanks always ὑπὲρ πάντων, which 1 Theſſ. 1. 2.) is tranſlated for all things, but it might as well be rendred for all perſons, Eph. 5. 20. according to that injunction, I exhort, that firſt of all ſupplications, pray- 1 Tim. 2. 1. ers, interceſſions, and giving of thanks be made for all men; Not only Prayers are to be made, but thankſgivings are to be offered for all men, out of general charity.

IV. Correſpondently, Love of our neighbour doth imply condolency and commiſeration of the evils befalling him: for what we love, we cannot without diſpleaſure behold lying in a bad condition, ſinking into decay, or in danger to periſh; ſo to a charitable mind the bad ſtate of any man is a moſt unpleaſant and painful ſight.

It is the property of Charity to mourn with thoſe that mourn; not coldly, but paſſionately, (for 'tis to weep with thoſe that weep) reſenting Κλαίειν. every man's caſe with an affection ſutable thereto, and as he doth himſelf Rom. 12. 15. reſent it.

Is any man fallen into diſgrace? charity doth hold down its head, is abaſhed and out of countenance, partaking of his ſhame: Is any man diſappointed of his hopes or endeavours? charity crieth out alas, as if it were it ſelf defeated: Is any man afflicted with pain or ſickneſs? charity looketh ſadly, it ſigheth and groaneth, it fainteth and languiſheth with him: Is any man pinched with hard want? charity if it cannot ſuccour, it will condole: doth ill news arrive? charity doth hear it with an unwilling ear, and a ſad heart, although not particularly concerned in it: The ſight of a Wreck at Sea, of a Field ſpread with Carcaſes, of a Country deſolated, of Houſes burnt, and Cities ruined, and of the like calamities, incident to mankind, would touch the bowels of any man; but the very report of them would affect the heart of charity: It doth not ſuffer a man with comfort or eaſe to enjoy the accommodations of his own ſtate, while others before him are in diſtreſs: It cannot be merry while any man in preſence is ſorrowful; it cannot ſeem happy while its neighbour doth appear miſerable: It hath a ſhare in all the afflictions which it doth behold or hear of; according to that inſtance in S. Paul of the Philippians, Ye have done well, that ye did communicate with (or Συγκοινωνοῦν- partake in) my afflictions; and according to that Precept, Remember τες. thoſe which are in bonds, as bound with them. Heb. 13. 3.

Such was the charity of Job; Did not I weep for him that was in Job 30. 25. trouble? was not my ſoul grieved for the poor?

Such was the charity of the Pſalmiſt, even toward his ingrateful Pſal. 35. 12, 13, 14. enemies, They (ſaith he) rewarded me evil for good to the ſpoiling of my ſoul; but as for me, when they were ſick, my cloathing was ſackcloth, I humbled my ſoul with faſting.— I behaved my ſelf, as though it had been my friend or my brother, I bowed down heavily as one that mourneth for his mother?

2 Cor. 11. 29. Such was the charity of Saint Paul; who is weak, ſaid he, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not? with fervent compaſſion.

Such was the charity of our Saviour; which ſo reigned in his heart, that no paſſion is ſo often attributed to him as this of pity; it being Matt. 14. 14. expreſſed to be the motive of his great works. Jeſus (ſaith Saint Matthew) went forth, and ſaw a great multitude, καὶ ἐσπλαγχνίσθη ἐπ' αὐτοῖς, and was moved (in his bowels) with compaſſion toward them, and he healed Σπλαγχνίζομαι. their ſick; and I have compaſſion on the multitude, becauſe they have Matt. 15. 32. nothing to eat, and I will not ſend them away faſting, leſt they faint in the Matt. 20. 34. way; and, Jeſus had compaſſion on them, and touched their eyes; and Jeſus
Mark 1. 41. moved with compaſſion put forth his hand and touched him (the Leper)
Luke 7. 13. and ſaith unto him, I will, be thou clean; and, When the Lord ſaw her
(the Widow of Naim, whoſe Son was carried out) he had compaſſion on Luke 19. 41. her; and, He beheld the city and wept over it, conſidering the miſeries impendent on it, as a juſt puniſhment of their outragious injuries againſt himſelf; and when the two good Siſters did bewail their Brother Lazarus, Joh. 11. 33, 35. He groaned in ſpirit and was troubled; and wept with them;
whence the Jews did collect, Behold how he loved him.

Thus any calamity or misfortune befalling his neighbour doth raiſe diſtaſtful regret and commiſeration in a charitable ſoul; but eſpecially moral evils (which indeed are the great evils, in compariſon whereto nothing elſe is evil) do work that effect: To ſee men diſhonour and wrong their Maker, to provoke his anger, and incur his diſfavour; to ſee men abuſe their reaſon, and diſgrace their nature; to ſee men endamage their ſpiritual eſtate, to endanger the loſs of their ſouls, to diſcoſt from their happineſs, and run into eternal ruin, by diſtemper of mind, and an inordinate converſation! this is moſt afflictive to a man endewed with any good degree of charity. Could one ſee a man ſprawling on the ground, weltring in his blood, with gaping wounds, gaſping for breath, without compaſſion? And ſeeing the condition of him that lieth grovling in ſin, weltring in guilt, wounded with bitter remorſe and pangs of conſcience, nearly obnoxious to eternal death, is far worſe and more deplorable, how can it but touch the heart of a charitable man, and ſtir his bowels with compaſſionate anguiſh?

Such was the excellent charity of the Holy Pſalmiſt, ſignified in thoſe Pſ. 119. 158. ejaculations, I beheld the tranſgreſſours and was grieved, becauſe they
Pſ. 119. 136. kept not thy word; and, Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, becauſe men keep not thy law.

Such was the charity of Saint Paul toward his incredulous and obdurate Country-men (notwithſtanding their hatred and ill treatment Rom. 9. 1, 2. of himſelf) the which he ſo earneſtly did aver in thoſe words, I ſay the truth, I lie not, my conſcience alſo bearing me witneſs in the Holy Ghoſt, that I have great heavineſs and continual ſorrow in my heart for them.

Such was the charity of our Lord, which diſpoſed him as to a continual ſenſe of mens evils, ſo upon particular occaſions, to grieve at their ſins and ſpiritual wants; as when the Phariſees maligned him for his Mark 3. 5. doing good, he ('tis ſaid) did συλλυπεῖσθαι, grieve (or condole) *for
the*

the hardneſs of their heart; and, when he ſaw the multitudes, he was moved with compaſſion on them, becauſe they fainted and were ſcattered abroad as ſheep having no ſhepherd; and, when he wept over Jeruſalem, becauſe it did not know in its day the things which belonged to its peace (either temporal, or eternal.)

Matt. 9. 36.
Luk. 19. 41.

This is that charity, which God himſelf in a wonderful and incomprehenſible manner doth exemplifie to us; for he is the Father of pities; πολύσπλαγχνος, full of bowels; his bowels are troubled, and do ſound, when he is (for upholding juſtice, or reclaiming ſinners) conſtrained to inflict puniſhment; of him 'tis ſaid, that his ſoul was grieved for the miſery of Iſrael; and, that he was afflicted in all the afflictions of his people: So incredible miracles doth infinite charity work in God, that the impaſſible God in a manner ſhould ſuffer with us, that happineſs it ſelf ſhould partake in our miſery; that grief ſhould ſpring up in the fountain of joy: How this can be, we thoroughly cannot well apprehend, but ſurely thoſe expreſſes are uſed in condeſcenſion to ſignifie the greatly charitable benignity of God, and to ſhew us our duty, that we ſhould be merciful as our heavenly Father is merciful, ſympathizing with the miſeries and ſorrows of our brethren.

Jam. 5. 11.
Luk. 1. 78.
Jer. 31. 20.
Iſa. 63. 15.
Jud. 10. 16.
(ὠλιγώθη. LXX.)
Iſa. 63. 9.
(Hoſ. 11. 8.)
Luk. 6. 36.
Eph. 5. 1.
(Luk. 15. 20.)

This is that duty which is ſo frequently inculcated: when we are charged to put on bowels of pity, to be (εὔσπλαγχνοι, tender hearted, to be (συμπαθεῖς) compaſſionate one toward another.

Col. 3. 12.
Phil. 2. 1.
Eph. 4. 32.
1 Pet. 3. 8.

Hence it is, that good men in this world cannot live in any briskneſs of mirth or height of jollity, their own enjoyments being tempered by the diſcontents of others; the continual obvious ſpectacles of ſorrow and of ſin damping their pleaſures, and quaſhing exceſſive tranſports of joy: for who could much enjoy himſelf in an hoſpital, in a priſon, in a charnel?

V. It is generally a property of Love to appropriate its Object; in apprehenſion and affection embracing it, poſſeſſing it, enjoying it as its own: So charity doth make our neighbour to be ours, engaging us to tender his caſe, and his concerns as our own; ſo that we ſhall exerciſe about them the ſame affections of ſoul (the ſame deſires, the ſame hopes and fears, the ſame joys and ſorrows) as about our own neareſt and moſt peculiar intereſt; ſo that his danger will affright us, and in his ſecurity we ſhall find repoſe; his profit is gain, and his loſſes are damages to us; we do riſe by his preferment, and ſink down by his fall; his good ſpeed is a ſatisfaction, and his diſappointment a croſs to us; his enjoyments afford pleaſure, and his ſufferings bring pain to us.

So charity doth enlarge our minds beyond private conſiderations, conferring on them an univerſal intereſt, and reducing all the world within the verge of their affectionate care; ſo that a man's ſelf is a very ſmall and inconſiderable portion of his regard; whence Charity is ſaid not to ſeek its own things, and we are commanded not to look on our own things; for that the regard which charity beareth to its own intereſt, in compariſon to that which it beareth toward the concerns of others, hath the ſame proportion as one man hath to all men, being therefore exceedingly ſmall, and as it were none at all.

1 Cor. 11. 5.
10. 24.
Phil. 2. 4.

This (ſaith Saint Chryſoſtome) is the Canon of moſt perfect Chriſtianiſme, this is an exact boundary, this is the higheſt top of it, to ſeek things profitable to the publick: And according to this rule charity doth walk, it preſcribeth that compaſs to it ſelf, it aſpireth to that pitch; it diſpoſeth to act as Saint Paul did, I please

Τοῦτο κανὼν χριστιανισμοῦ τοῦ τελειοτάτου, τοῦτο ὅρος ἠκριβωμένος, αὕτη ἡ κορυφὴ ἡ ἀνωτάτω, τὸ τὰ κοινῇ συμφέροντα ζητεῖν. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Orat. 25.

Phil. 4. 16.
1 Cor. 10. 33.

pleaſe all men in all things, not ſeeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be ſaved

VI. It is a property of Love to affect union, or the greateſt approximation that can be to its Object: As hatred doth ſet things at diſtance, making them to ſhun or chaſe away one another; ſo love doth attract things, doth combine them, doth hold them faſt together; every one would be embracing and enjoying what he loveth in the manner whereof it is capable: So doth charity diſpoſe a man to conjunction with others; it ſoon will breed acquaintance, kind converſation, and amicable correſpondence with our neighbour.

It would be a ſtranger to no man to whom by its entercourſe it may yield any benefit or comfort.

Its arms are always open, and its boſom free to receive all, who do not reject or decline its amity.

It is moſt frankly acceſſible, moſt affable, moſt tractable, moſt ſociable moſt apt to interchange good offices; moſt ready to oblige others, and willing to be obliged by them.

It avoideth that unreaſonable ſuſpiciouſneſs and diffidence, that timorous ſhineſs, that crafty reſervedneſs, that ſupercilious moroſity, that faſtidious ſullenneſs, and the like untoward diſpoſitions, which keep men in eſtrangement, ſtifling good inclinations to familiarity and friendſhip.

Spes mutuæ charitatis. Sen. Ep. 9. VII. It is a property of Love to deſire a reciprocal affection; for that is the ſureſt poſſeſſion and firmeſt union, which is grounded upon voluntarily conſpiring in affection; and if we do value any perſon, we cannot but prize his good-will and eſteem.

Charity is the mother of Friendſhip, not only as inclining us to love others, but as attracting others to love us; diſpoſing us to affect their amity, and by obliging means to procure it.

Heb. 12. 14. 2 Tim. 2. 22. Rom. 12. 18. Hence is that Evangelical Precept ſo often enjoyned to us, of purſuing peace with all men, importing that we ſhould deſire and ſeek by all fair means the good-will of men, without which peace from them cannot ſubſiſt; for if they do not love us, they will be infeſting us with unkind words or deeds.

VIII. Hence alſo Charity diſpoſeth to pleaſe our neighbour, not only by inoffenſive but by obliging demeanour; by a ready complaiſance and compliance with his faſhion, with his humour, with his deſire in matters lawful, or in a way conſiſtent with duty and diſcretion.

Rom. 15. 2. 1 Cor. 10. 33. 9. 19. Such charity Saint Paul did preſcribe, Let every one pleaſe his neighbour for his good to edification: Such he practiſed himſelf, Even as I pleaſe all men in all things, not ſeeking mine own profit; and, I have made my ſelf a ſervant to all, that I might gain the more.

Rom. 15. 3. Joh. 2. 2. Matt. 11. 19. Luke. 7. 34. Such was the charity of our Lord, for even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf: He indeed did ſtoop to converſe with ſorry men in their way, he came when he was invited, he accepted their entertainment, he from the frankneſs of his converſation with all ſorts of perſons did undergo the reproach of being a wine-bibber, a friend of Publicans and ſinners.

It is the Genius and complexion of charity to affect nothing uncouth or ſingular in matters of indifferent nature; to be candid, not rigid in opinion; to be pliable, not ſtiff in humour; to be ſmooth and gentle, not rugged and peeviſh in behaviour.

It doth indeed not flatter, not ſooth, not humour any man in bad things, or in things very abſurd and fooliſh; it would rather chuſe to diſpleaſe and croſs him, than to abuſe, to delude, to wrong or hurt him;

but excepting ſuch caſes, it gladly pleaſeth all men, denying its own will and conceit to ſatisfie the pleaſure and fancy of others; practiſing that which Saint Peter injoyned in that Precept, be of one mind, be compaſſionate, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous; or as Saint Paul might intend, when he bid us, χαρίζεσθαι ἀλλήλοις, to gratifie, to indulge one another.

Ὁμόφρονες, Συμπαθεῖς, φιλάδελφοι, εὔσπλαγχνοι, φιλόφρονες. 1 Pet. 3. 8.

Eph. 4. 32.
Col. 3. 13.

IX. Love of our neighbour doth imply readineſs upon all occaſions to do him good, to promote and advance his benefit in all kinds.

It doth not reſt in good opinions of mind, and good affections of hearts, from thoſe roots doth put forth abundant fruits of real beneficence; it will not be ſatisfied with faint deſires, or ſluggiſh wiſhes, but will be up and doing what it can for its neighbour.

Love is a buſie and active, a vigorous and ſprightful, a couragious and induſtrious diſpoſition of ſoul; which will prompt a man, and puſh him forward to undertake or undergo any thing, to endure pains, to encounter dangers, to ſurmount difficulties for the good of its object.

Love is ſtrong as death. Cant. 8. 6.

Such is true charity; it will diſpoſe us to love, as Saint John preſcribeth, ἔργῳ καὶ ἀληθείᾳ, in work and in truth; not only in mental deſire, but in effectual performance; not only in verbal pretence, but in real effect.

1 Joh. 3. 8.
Jam. 2. 16.

Hence charity will render a man a general benefactour, in all matters, upon all occaſions; affording to his neighbour all kinds of aſſiſtance and relief, acording to his neighbour's need, and his own ability: It will make him a bountiful diſpenſer of his goods to the poor, a comforter of the afflicted, a viſiter of the ſick, an inſtructour of the ignorant, an adviſer of the doubtful, a protectour of the oppreſſed, a hoſpitable entertainer of ſtrangers, a reconciler of differences, an interceſſour for offenders, an advocate of thoſe who need defence, a ſuccourer of all that want help.

Ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι τῶν ἀσθενούντων. Acts 20. 35.
Ἀντέχεσθε τῶν ἀσθενῶν. 1 Theſſ. 5. 14.
Παραμυθεῖσθε τοὺς ὀλιγοψύχους. 1 Theſſ. 5. 14.
Job 29. 17.
Job 31. 32.

The practice of Job deſcribeth its nature; I (ſaith he) delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherleſs, and him that had none to help him: The bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh came upon me, and I cauſed the widows heart to ſing for joy. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame; I was a father to the poor, and the cauſe which I knew not I ſearched out; And I brake the jaws of the wicked, and plucked the ſpoil out of his teeth. If I have held the poor from their deſire, or have cauſed the eyes of the widow to fail; Or have eaten my morſel my ſelf alone, and the fatherleſs hath not eaten thereof; If I have ſeen any periſh for want of cloathing, or any poor without covering. The ſtranger did not lodge in the ſtreet; but I opened my doors to the traveller.

Job 29. 12.---
Job 32. 16.---
Job 32. 32.

Such is a charitable man; the Sun is not more liberal of his light and warmth, than he is of beneficial influence.

He doth not ſpare his ſubſtance, being rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate; And where his eſtate faileth, yet the contribution of his endeavour will not be wanting; he will be ready to draw and preſs others to beneficence; ſo doing good not only according to his power, but in a manner beyond it, making the ability of others to ſupply his own weakneſs, and being liberal with their wealth. The deſcription of Cimon is a good character of a charitable man, Nulli fides ejus, nulli opera, nulli res familiaris defuit.

Corn. Nep. (in Cimone.)

Thus may the pooreſt men be great benefactours; ſo the poor Apoſtles who had nothing, yet did enrich many; not only in ſpiritual treaſure, but taking care for ſupply of the poor, by their precepts and moving

(1 Cor. 4. 11.)
2 Cor. 6. 10. ὡς πτωχοὶ, πολλοὺς δὲ πλουτίζοντες.

ving exhortations; and he that had not where to lay his head, was the moſt bountiful perſon that ever was; for our ſake he became poor, that we by his poverty might be made rich.

2 Cor. 8. 9.

In all kinds charity diſpoſeth to further our neighbour's good, but eſpecially in the concerns of his ſoul; the which as incomparably they do ſurpaſs all others, ſo it is the trueſt and nobleſt charity to promote them.

Iſa. 58. 7.---, 10.
Ezek. 18. 16.

It will incline us to draw forth our ſoul to the hungry, and to ſatisfie the afflicted ſoul; to bring the poor that are caſt out to our houſe; to cover the naked, to looſe the bands of wickedneſs, to undo the heavy burthens, to let the oppreſſed go free, to break every yoke; to ſupply any corporal indigency, to relieve any temporal diſtreſs; but eſpecially it will induce to make proviſion for the ſoul, to relieve the ſpiritual needs of our neighbour; by affording him good inſtruction, and taking care that he be informed in his duty, or conducted in his way to happineſs; by admonition and exhortation quickning, encouraging, provoking, ſpurring him to good works; by reſolving him in his doubts, and comforting him in his troubles of conſcience; (lifting up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees) by ſeaſonable and prudent reproof; by all ways ſerving to convert him from the errour of his way; and ſo ſaving a ſoul from death, and hiding a multitude of ſins; which is the proper work of charity; for charity (ſaith ſaint Peter) covereth a multitude of ſins.

Εἰς παροξυσμὸν καλῶν ἔργων.
Heb. 10. 24.
Heb. 12. 12.
ἀνορθώσατε
1 Theſſ. 5. 14.
Jam. 5. 20.
1 Pet. 4. 8.
Prov. 10. 12.

This was the charity of our Saviour, He went about doing good, healing the bodily infirmities, (every ſickneſs and every diſeaſe among the people) ſatisfying their bodily neceſſities, comforting them in their worldly diſtreſſes, ſo far as to perform great miracles for thoſe purpoſes (curing inveterate maladies, reſtoring limbs and ſenſes, raiſing the dead, multiplying loaves and fiſhes) but his charity was chiefly exerciſed in ſpiritual beneficence; in pourveying ſuſtenance and comfort for their ſouls, in feeding their minds by wholſome inſtruction, in curing their ſpiritual diſtempers, in correcting their ignorances and errours, in exciting them to duty by powerful advices and exhortations, in ſupporting them by heavenly conſolations againſt temptations and troubles.

Acts 10. 38.
Matt. 4. 23.
9. 35.
Joh. 14. 1.
15. 11.——
16. 33.
Matt. 5. 10.--

Thus alſo did the charity of the holy Apoſtles principally exert it ſelf: they did not neglect affording relief to the outward needs of men; they did take care by earneſt interceſſion and exhortation for ſupport of the poor; but eſpecially they did labour to promote the ſpiritual benefit of men; for this they did undertake ſo many cares, and toils, and travels; for this they did undergo ſo many hardſhips, ſo many hazards, ſo many difficulties and troubles; Therefore (ſaid S. Paul) I endure all things for the elects ſake, that they may alſo obtain the ſalvation which is in Chriſt Jeſus, with eternal glory.

Acts 3. 6. 5. 15, 16. 8. 7. 28. 8, 9.
Act. 20. 35.-- Rom. 15. 26. 1 Cor. 16. 1.
Gal. 2. 10. 2 Cor. 8. 7.--2 Cor. 9. 1.-- 1 Tim. 6. 18. Heb. 13. 16.
2 Tim. 2. 10.

X. This indeed is a property of Charity to make a man deny himſelf, to neglect his own intereſt, yea to deſpiſe all ſelfiſh regards for the benefit of his neighbour; to him that is inſpired with charity his own good is not good, when it ſtandeth in competition with the more conſiderable good of another; nothing is ſo dear to him, which he gladly will not part with upon ſuch conſiderations.

Liberty is a precious thing, which every man gladly would enjoy, yet how little did Saint Paul's charity regard it? how abſolutely did he abandon it for his neighbour's good? Though (ſaid he) I am free from all men, yet I have made my ſelf ſervant (or have enſlaved my ſelf) unto all, that I might gain the more: And he did expreſs much ſatisfaction

Πᾶσιν ἐμαυτὸν ἐδούλωσα.
1 Cor. 9. 19.

on in the bonds which he bare for the good of his brethren. I Paul Phil. 1. 12.
(ſaith he) the priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt for you Gentiles ;—— I ſuffer trouble Eph. 3. 1,-13 2 Tim. 2. 9, as an evil doer, even unto bonds ;——endure all things for the Elects ſake. 10.

Every man loveth his own humour, and would pleaſe himſelf; but the charity of Saint Paul did rather chuſe to pleaſe all men ; making him all 1 Cor. 9. 33.
things to all men, that by all means he might ſave ſome ; and the Rule he 1 Cor. 10. 22.
commended to others, and impoſed on himſelf, was this, We that are Rom. 15. 1.
ſtrong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to pleaſe our ſelves.

Profit is the common mark of mens deſigns and endeavours ; but charity often doth not aim thereat, but waveth it for its neighbour's advantage ; for μὴ σκοπεῖτε, Aim not every man at his own things, but every Phil. 2. 8.
man alſo at the things of others, is Saint Paul's Rule ; and, not to ſeek 1 Cor. 10. 24. his own profit, but the profit of many, that they might be ſaved, was his practice.

To ſuffer is grievous to human nature, and every man would ſhun it;
but charity not only doth ſupport it, but joyeth in it, when it conduceth to its neighbour's advantage ; I rejoyce, ſaid that charitable Apoſtle, Col. 1. 24.
in my ſufferings for you. 2 Cor. 1. 4, 6.
7. 4.

Eaſe is a thing generally deſirable and acceptable; but charity doth part with it, embracing labour, watchings, travels and troubles for its neighbour's good : upon this account did the holy Apoſtles undertake abundant labours (as Saint Paul telleth us) and to this end (ſaith he) 1 Theſſ. 2. 9.
do I labour, ſtriving according to his working, which worketh in me mighti- 2 Theſſ. 3. 8.
ly ; to what end? that we may preſent every man perfect in Chriſt Jeſus : 2 Cor. 11. 23.
6. 5.
this is that κόπος ἀγάπης, that labour of love, which they did commend Εἰς ὃ καὶ κοπιῶ ἀγωνιζόμενος—— in others, and ſo notably themſelves exerciſe. Col. 1. 29.

Acts 21. 31, 35. Heb. 6. 7. 1 Theſſ. 1. 3.

Life of all things is moſt held precious and dear ; yet this charity upon urgent occaſions will expoſe, will ſacrifice for its neighbour's good;
This (our Lord telleth us) is the greateſt love that any man can expreſs Joh. 15. 13.
to his friend ; and the higheſt inſtance that ever was of charity was herein ſhewed ; the imitation whereof Saint John doth not doubt to recommend to us ; In this (ſaith he) have we known the love of God, be- 1 Joh. 3. 16.
cauſe he hath laid down his life for us ; and we ought to lay down our life Joh. 15. 12.
for the brethren ; and Saint Paul, Walk in love, even as Chriſt loved us, Eph. 5. 2.
and gave himſelf for us an offering and ſacrifice to God ; the which Precept he backed with his own example, I (ſaith he) very gladly will 2 Cor. 12. 15.
ſpend and be ſpent for your ſouls ; and, If I be offered upon the ſacrifice Phil. 2. 17.
and ſervice of your faith, I joy and rejoice with you all ; and, being affecti- 1 Theſſ. 2. 8.
onately deſirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you not the Goſpel of God only, but alſo our own ſouls, becauſe ye were dear unto us.

Reputation to ſome is more dear than life, and 'tis worſe than death to be held a malefactour, to be loaded with odious reproaches, to have an infamous character ; yet charity will ingage men hereto, willingly to ſuſtain the moſt grievous oblcquy and diſgrace ; for this the ſame heroical Apoſtles did paſs through honour and diſhonour, through evil report 2 Cor. 6. 8.
and good report, as deceivers, and yet true— for this they were made a 1 Cor. 4. 9, 10.
ſpectacle to the world, as fools, as weak, as deſpicable ;——were reviled, de- 13.
famed, made as the filth of the world, and off-ſcouring of all things. For this
S. Paul was content to ſuffer ὡς κακοῦργος, as a malefactour. So there 2 Tim. 2. 9.
was nothing which charity will not deny it ſelf, and loſe for the good of its neighbour.

XI. It is a property of Love not to ſtand upon diſtinctions and nice reſpects, but to be condeſcenſive, and willing to perform the meaneſt offices, needful or uſeful for the good of its friend.

He that truly loveth is a voluntary ſervant, and gladly will ſtoop to any employment, for which the need, or conſiderable benefit of him whom he loveth doth call.

So the greateſt Souls, and the moſt glorious Beings, the which are moſt endewed with Charity, by it are diſpoſed with greateſt readineſs to ſerve their inferiours.

1 Cor. 9. 19.

This made Saint Paul conſtitute hmſelf a ſervant (we might render it a Slave) of all men, abſolutely devoted to the promoting their intereſts with his utmoſt labour and diligence; undertaking toilſome drudgeries, running about upon errands for them.

Pſal. 91. 11. 34. 7.
Heb. 1. 7, 14.
Luk. 15. 7, 10. ἐνώπιον τῶν ἀγγέλων.

This maketh the bleſſed and glorious Angels (the principalities and powers above) vouchſafe to wait on men, to be the guards of all good men, to be miniſtring Spirits, ſent out to miniſter for them who ſhall inherit ſalvation; not only obedience to God enforceth them, but charity diſpoſeth them gladly to ſerve us, who are ſo much their inferiours; the ſame charity, which produceth joy in them at the converſion of a ſinner.

Joh. 17. 5.
2 Cor. 8. 9.
Luk. 22. 27.
Matt. 20. 28.
Joh. 13. 14.

This made the Son of God to deſcend from heaven; and lay aſide that glory which he had with God before the world was; this made him who was ſo rich, to become poor, that we by his poverty might be enriched; this made him converſe and demean himſelf among his ſervants, as he that miniſtred; this made him to waſh his Diſciples feet; thereby deſigning inſtructively to exemplifie the duty and nature of Charity, for If (ſaid he) I your Lord and Maſter have waſhed your feet, then ye alſo ought to waſh one anothers feet: for I have given you an example, that ye ſhould do as I have done to you.

Iſa. 57. 15.
Pſal. 113. 6.
(Pſal. 8. 4. 144. 3. Job. 7. 17.)
Iſa. 43. 24.

This maketh God himſelf (the high and lofty one that inhabiteth eternity) to condeſcend ſo far, as to be continually employed in carefully watching over, in providing for, in protecting and aſſiſting us vile and wretched worms; for though he dwelleth on high, yet humbleth he himſelf to behold the things that are in heaven and earth. This maketh him with ſo much pain and patience to ſupport our infirmities, to bear with our offences, to wait for our converſion; according to that Proteſtation in the Prophet, Thou haſt made me to ſerve with thy ſins, thou haſt wearied me with thine iniquities.

Gal. 5. 13.

In conformity to this wonderful practice, whoſe actions are the beſt rules and patterns of our deportment, charity ſhould diſpoſe us, according to Saint Paul's practice, by love to ſerve one another.

Job 31. 13, 14, 15.
2 Pet. 1. 1.
* Eph. 6. 9. Col. 4. 1.
Matt. 23. 9.
Philem. 16.

Indeed it will not ſuffer any man to look down on another with ſupercilious contempt or neglect; as if he were unworthy or beneath our regard. It will incline ſuperiours to look on their inferiours (their ſubjects, their ſervants, their meaneſt and pooreſt neighbours) not as beaſts or as ſlaves; but as men, as brethren; as deſcending from the ſame ſtock, as partakers of the common nature and reaſon; as thoſe who have obtained the like precious faith; as heirs of the ſame precious promiſes and glorious hopes; as their equals in the beſt things, and in all conſiderable advantages; equals * in God's ſight, and according to our Lord's intent, when he ſaid, one is your Maſter, even Chriſt, and all ye are brethren; according to Saint Paul's exhortation to Philemon, that he would receive Oneſimus, not now as a ſervant, but above a ſervent, a brother beloved in the Lord.

Accordingly charity will diſpoſe men of rank in their behaviour to be condeſcenſive, lowly, meek, courteous, obliging and helpful to thoſe, who in humane eye or in worldly ſtate are moſt below them; remembring that ordinance of our Lord, charged on all his Diſciples, and enforced by his own pattern, He that is greateſt among you let him be your ſervant. Matt. 23. 11. Luk. 22. 27.

Love indeed is the great Leveller, which in a manner ſetteth all things on even ground, and reduceth to a juſt poiſe; which bringeth down heaven to earth, and raiſeth up earth to heaven; which inclineth the higheſt to wait upon the loweſt, which engageth the ſtrength of the mightieſt to help the weakeſt, and the wealth of the richeſt to ſupply the pooreſt, ὅπως γένηται ἰσότης, that there may be an equality; that no where there may be an uſeleſs abundance, or a helpleſs indigence. Amicitia pares invenit, aut facit. 2 Cor. 8. 14.

XII. Charity doth regulate our dealing, our deportment, our converſation toward our neighbour, implying good uſage, and fair treatment of him on all occaſions; for no man doth handle that which he loveth rudely or roughly, ſo as to endanger the loſs, the detriment, the hurt or offence thereof.

Wherefore the language of charity is ſoft and ſweet, not wounding the heart, nor grating on the ear of any with whom a man converſeth; like the language of which the Wiſe-man ſaith, The words of the pure are pleaſant words——; ſuch as are ſweet to the ſoul, and health to the bones; and, The words of a wiſe man's mouth are gracious; ſuch as our Lord's were, λόγοι χάριτος, words of grace; ſuch as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, Let your ſpeech be always, ἐν χάριτι, with grace—ſuch as may give grace to the hearers; being entertained, not with averſation, but with favourable acceptance. Prov. 15. 26. Prov. 16. 24. Eccleſ. 10. 12. Luk. 4. 22. Col. 4. 6. ἵνα δῷ χάριν τοῖς ἀκούουσι. Eph. 4. 29.

Its carriage is gentle, courteous, benign; bearing in it marks of affection and kind reſpect.

Its dealing is equal, moderate, fair, yielding no occaſion of diſguſt, or complaint; not catching at, or taking advantages, not meeting hard meaſure.

It doth not foſter any bad paſſion or humour, which may embitter or ſour converſation, ſo that it rendreth a man continually good company.

If a man be harſh or ſurly in his diſcourſe, rugged or rude in his demeanour, hard and rigorous in his dealing, it is a certain argument of his defect in charity; for that calmeth and ſweetneth the mind, it quaſheth keen, fierce, and boiſterous paſſions; it diſcardeth thoſe conceits, and thoſe humours, from whence ſuch practice doth iſſue.

Charity (ſaith Saint Paul) οὐκ ἀσχημονεῖ, behaveth not it ſelf unhandſomely; is not untoward, unſeemly, uncivil, or clowniſh in word, or in carriage, or in deed; It is in truth the moſt civilizing, and moſt poliſhing diſpoſition that can be: Nothing doth render a man ſo compleatly Gentile; not in an affected, or artificial way, (conſiſting in certain poſtures or motions of body; (dopping, cringing, &c.) in forms of expreſſion, or modiſh addreſſes, which men learn like Parrots, and vent by rote, uſually not meaning any thing by them, often with them diſguiſing fraud and rancour) but in a real and natural manner, ſuggeſted by good judgment and hearty affection. 1 Cor. 13. 5.

A charitable man may perhaps not be guilty of courtſhip, or may be unpractiſed in the modes of addreſs; but he will not be deficient in the ſubſtance of paying every man proper and due reſpect: this indeed is true courteſie, grounded on reaſon, and proceeding from the heart, which therefore is far more genuine, more ſolid, more ſteady, than that which is built on faſhion, and iſſueth from affectation; the which indeed only doth ape or counterfeit the deportment of charity; for what a charitable man truly is, that a Gallant would ſeem to be.

Such are the properties of Charity.

There be alſo farther many particular Acts, which have a very cloſe alliance to it; being ever Coherent with it, or ſpringing from it; which are recommended to us by precepts in the holy Scripture; the which it will be convenient to mention.

1. It is a proper act of Charity to forbear anger upon provocation, or to repreſs its motions, to reſent injuries and diſcourteſies either not at all, or very calmly and mildly: for 1 Cor. 13. 5. Charity οὐ παροξύνεται, is not eaſily provoked.

V. 4. Charity μακροθυμεῖ ſuffereth long and is kind.
V. 7. Charity πάντα ὑπομένει, doth endure all things.

Anger is a violent inſurrection of the mind againſt a perſon; but love is not apt to riſe up in oppoſition againſt any; anger is an intemperate heat, love hath a pure warmth quite of another nature; as natural heat is from a fever; or as the heat of the Sun from that of a culinary fire; which putteth that out, as the Sun-beams do extinguiſh a culinary fire; anger hath an ὄρεξις ἀμύνης, an appetite of revenge, or doing miſ-
Rom. 13. 10. chief to the object of it; but love is innocent and worketh no evil.

Love diſpoſeth, if our neighbour doth miſbehave himſelf toward us (by wrongful uſage, or unkind carriage) to be ſorry for him, and to pity him; which are paſſions contrary to anger, and ſlaking the violences of it.

Cant. 8 7. It is ſaid in the Canticles, Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it; charity would hold out againſt many neglects, many provocations.

Ἀνεχόμενοι ἀλ- Hence the Precepts; Walk with all lowlineſs, and meekneſs, with long-ſuf- λήλων ἐν ἀγά- fering, forbearing one another in love: Let all bitterneſs, and wrath, and
πῃ. Eph. 4. 1, 2. anger, and clamour, and evil-ſpeaking be put away from you, with all ma-
Eph. 4. 31. lice: Put off anger, wrath, malice, &c. * Be ſlow to wrath.

1 Theſſ. 1. 14. μακρόθ 2. It is a proper Act of Charity to remit offences, ſuppreſſing all de-Col. 3. 8. ſigns of revenge, and not retaining any grudge: for,

* Jam. 1. 19. Charity, πάντα στέγει, doth cover all things; and in this ſenſe doth hide
1 Cor. 13. 7. Prov. 10. 12. a multitude of ſins: all diſpoſitions, all intents to do harm are inconſi-
1 Pet. 4. 8. ſtent with it, are quite repugnant to it.

Jam. 5. 20. Col. 3. 12, 13. Hence thoſe Precepts, Put on, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindneſs, humbleneſs of mind, meekneſs, long-ſuffering, for-μομφὼ. bearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man hath a quarrel Eph. 4. 32. againſt any, even as Chriſt forgave you, ſo alſo do ye: Be ye kind one to a- ther, tender hearted, forgiving one another; even as God for Chriſt's ſake 1 Theſſ. 5. 15. hath forgiven you: See that none render evil for evil, but ever follow
1 Pet. 3. 9. that which is good both among your ſelves and to all men: And many the Rom. 12. 17. Matt. 6. 14. like Precepts occur in the Goſpels, the Apoſtolical Writings; yea even
5. 44. in the Old Teſtament, wherein charity did not run in ſo high a ſtrain.

Prov. 20. 22. 3. It is a Duty coherent with charity, to maintain concord and peace;
25. 21. to abſtain from contention and ſtrife; together with the ſources of them, pride, envy, emulation, malice.

Phil. 2. 2. We are commanded to be σύμψυχοι, and ὁμόφρονες, of one ſoul, of one
1 Pet. 3. 8. mind (like the multitude of believers in the Acts, who had one heart Acts 4. 32. Eph. 4. 3. and one ſoul) that we ſhould keep the unity of the ſpirit in the bond of Phil. 2. 2. 1, 27. peace; that we ſhould be of one accord, of one mind, ſtanding faſt in one ſpirit, with one mind: that we ſhould all ſpeak the ſame thing, and that there be no diviſions among us, but that we be perfectly joyned together in the ſame mind, and in the ſame judgment: that there be no factions, or ſchiſms in the body: that all diſſentions, all clamours, all murmurings, all emulations ſhould be abandoned and put away from us; that we ſhould purſue and maintain peace with all men: obedience to which commands can only be the reſult of charity, eſteeming the perſon and judgment of our neighbour; deſiring his good will, tendring his good; curbing thoſe fleſhly luſts, and thoſe fierce paſſions, from the predominancy whereof diſcords and ſtrifes do ſpring.

1 Cor. 1. 10.
2 Cor. 13. 11.
Rom. 15. 5, 6.
12. 16.
Phil. 3. 16.
1 Cor. 12. 25.
11. 18. 1. 11.
3. 3.
2 Cor. 12. 20.
Phil. 2. 14.
Heb. 12. 14.
Rom. 12. 18.
2 Tim. 2. 22.
Jam. 4. 1.

4. Another charitable practice is, being candid in opinion, and mild in cenſure about our neighbour and his actions; having a good conceit of his perſon, and repreſenting him to our ſelves under the beſt character we can; making the moſt favourable conſtruction of his words, and the faireſt interpretation of his deſigns.

1 Cor. 3. 3.
Gal. 5. 20.
1 Tim. 6. 4.

Charity diſpoſeth us to entertain a good opinion of our neighbour, for deſiring his good we ſhall be concerned for him, and prejudiced (as it were) on his ſide; being unwilling to diſcover any blemiſh in him to our own diſappointment and regret.

Love cannot ſubſiſt without eſteem; and it would not willingly by deſtroying that loſe its own ſubſiſtence.

Love would preſerve any good of its friend, and therefore his reputation, which is a good in it ſelf precious, and ever very dear to him.

Love would beſtow any good, and therefore its eſteem; which is a conſiderable good.

Harſh cenſure is a very rude kind of treatment, grievouſly vexing a man, and really hurting him; charity therefore will not be guilty of it.

It diſpoſeth rather to overſee, and connive at faults, than to find them, or to pore on them; rather to hide and ſmother, than to diſcloſe or divulge them; rather to extenuate and excuſe, than to exaggerate or aggravate them.

Are words capable of a good ſenſe? charity will expound them thereto: may an action be imputed to any good intent? charity will ever refer it thither: doth a fault admit any plea, apology or diminution? charity will be ſure to alledge it: may a quality admit a good name? charity will call it thereby.

It doth not λογίζεσθαι κακὸν, impute evil, or put it to any mans account, beyond abſolute neceſſity.

1 Cor. 13. 5.

It hopeth all things, and believeth all things; hopeth and believeth all things for the beſt, in favour to its neighbour, concerning his intentions and actions liable to doubt.

1 Cor. 13. 7.

It baniſheth all evil ſurmiſes; it rejecteth all ill ſtories, malicious inſinuations, perverſe gloſſes and deſcants.

1 Tim. 6. 4.

5. Another charitable practice is to comport with the infirmities of our neighbour; according to that Rule of Saint Paul, We that are ſtrong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to pleaſe our ſelves; and that Precept, Bear one anothers burthens, and ſo fulfil the Law of Chriſt.

Ἀντέχεσθε. ἀσθενῶν.
Acts 20. 35.
1 Theſſ. 5. 14.
Rom. 15. 1.
Gal. 6. 2.

Is a man wiſer than his neigbour (or in any caſe freer of defects) charity will diſpoſe to uſe that advantage ſo as not to contemn him, or inſult over him; but to inſtruct him, to help him, to comfort him.

As we deal with children, allowing to the infirmities of their age, bearing their ignorance, frowardneſs, untoward humours, without diſtaſting them; ſo ſhould we with our brethren who labour under any weakneſs of mind or humour.

6. 'Tis an act of charity to abſtain from offending, or ſcandalizing our brethren; by doing any thing, which either may occaſion him to commit ſin, or diſaffect him to Religion, or diſcourage him in the practice of duty, (that which Saint Paul calleth to * defile and ſmite his weak conſcience) or which any-wiſe may diſcompoſe, vex, and grieve him: for, If thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkeſt thou not charitably.

* Μολύνεται. 1 Cor. 10. 7. Τύπτοντες τὴν συνείδησιν ἀσθενοῦσαν. 1 Cor. 8. 12. Rom. 14. 15. Οὐκέτι κατ᾽ ἀγάπην περιπατεῖς. 1 Cor. 10. 32. 8. 13. Rom. 14. 21.

SERMON XXVIII.

Motives and Arguments to Charity.

HEBREWS. 10. 24.

Let us conſider one another to provoke unto love, and to good works.

THAT which is here recommended by the Apoſtle, as the common Duty of Chriſtians toward each other, upon emergent occaſions, with zeal and care to provoke one another to the practice of Charity and Beneficence, may well be conceived the ſpecial Duty of thoſe, whoſe Office it is to inſtruct and guide others, when opportunity is afforded: with that obligation I ſhall now comply, by repreſenting divers conſiderations ſerving to excite and encourage us to that practice: this (without premiſing any deſcription or explication of the Duty; the Nature, ſpecial Acts and Properties whereof I have already declared) I ſhall immediately undertake.

I. Firſt then, I deſire you to remember and conſider that you are men, and as ſuch obliged to this Duty; as being very agreeable to humane nature, the which (not being corrupted or diſtempered by ill uſe) doth incline to it, doth call for it, doth like and approve it, doth find ſatisfaction and delight therein.

Saint Paul chargeth us to be εἰς ἀλλήλους φιλόστοργοι; or to have a
Rom. 12. 10 natural affection one toward another; that ſuppoſeth a στοργὴ inbred to men, which ſhould be rowſed up, improved and exerciſed: Such an one indeed there is, which although often raked up and ſmothered in the common attendances on the providing for our needs, and proſecuting our affairs, will upon occaſion, more or leſs break forth and diſcover it ſelf.

That the conſtitution and frame of our nature diſpoſeth to it, we can not but feel, when our bowels are touched with a ſenſible pain at the view of any calamitous object, when our fancies are diſturbed at the report of any diſaſter befalling a man; when the ſight of a Tragedy wringeth compaſſion and tears from us; which affections we can hardly quaſh by any reflexion, that ſuch events (true or feigned) do not concern our ſelves.

Οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἕλοιτ' ἂν καθ' αὑτὸν τὰ πάντ' ἔχειν ἀγαθά. Ariſt. Eth. 9. 9.

Hence doth nature ſo ſtrongly affect ſociety and abhor ſolitude; ſo that a man cannot enjoy himſelf alone, or find ſatisfaction in any good without a companion; not only for that he then cannot receive, but alſo becauſe he cannot impart aſſiſtance, conſolation and delight in converſe; for men do not affect ſociety only that they may obtain benefits thereby; but as much or more, that they may be enabled to communicate them; nothing being more diſtaſtful than to be always on the taking hand: neither indeed hath any thing a more pleaſant and ſavoury reliſh than to do Good; as even Epicurus, the great Patron of pleaſure did confeſs.

Hominem homini natura conciliat. Sen. Ep. 9.

Nullius boni ſine ſocio jucunda poſſeſſio eſt. Sen. Eph. 6.

Καὶ γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς βουλόμενος συνδῆσαι πάντας ἀλλήλοις, τοιαύτην τοῖς πράγμασιν ἐπέθηκεν ἀνάγκην, ὡς ἐν τῷ τοῦ πλησίον συμφέροντι τὸ τοῦ ἑτέρου δεδέσθαι· καὶ ὁ κόσμος ἅπας οὕτω συνέστηκε. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 25.

The practice of benignity, of courteſie, of clemency do at firſt ſight, without aid of any diſcurſive reflexion, obtain approbation and applauſe from men; being acceptable and amiable to their mind, as beauty to their ſight, harmony to their hearing, fragrancy to their ſmell, and ſweetneſs to their taſte; And correſpondently uncharitable diſpoſitions and practices (malignity, harſhneſs, cruelty,) do offend the mind with a diſguſtful reſentment of them.

We may appeal to the conſcience of each man, if he doth not feel diſſatisfaction in that fierceneſs or frowardneſs of temper, which produceth uncharitableneſs; if we have not a complacence in that ſweet and calm diſpoſition of ſoul, whence charity doth iſſue; if he do not condemn himſelf for the one, and approve himſelf in the other practice.

This is the common judgment of men; and therefore in common language this practice is ſtyled humanity, as beſt ſorting with our nature, and becoming it; and the principle whence it ſpringeth is called good-nature; and the contrary practice is ſtyled inhumanity, as thwarting our natural inclinations, or diveſting us of manhood; and its ſource likewiſe is termed ill-nature, or a corruption of our nature.

Εἰς γὰρ φιλανθρωπίας ἔργα ὑπὸ Θεοῦ κατεσκευάσμεθα. Flavian. CP. Ep. in Syn. Chalc. Acts 1. (p. 111.)

It is therefore a monſtrous paradox, croſſing the common ſenſe of men, which in this looſe and vain world hath lately got ſuch vogue, that all men naturally are enemies one to another: it pretendeth to be grounded on common obſervation and experience; but it is only an obſerving the worſt actions of the worſt men; of diſſolute ruffians, of villainous cheats, of ravenous oppreſſours, of malicious politicians, of ſuch degenerate Apoſtates from humanity; by whoſe practice (debauched by vain conceits and naughty cuſtoms) an ill meaſure is taken of mankind: Ariſtotle himſelf, who had obſerved things as well as any of theſe men, and with as ſharp a judgment, affirmeth the contrary, that all men are friends, and diſpoſed to entertain friendly correſpondence with one another: Indeed to ſay the contrary is a blaſphemy againſt the Authour of our nature; and is ſpoken no leſs out of profane enmity againſt him, than out of venomous malignity againſt men: out of hatred to God and Goodneſs they would diſparage and vilifie the nobleſt work of God's Creation; yet do they Οἰκεῖον πᾶς ἄνθρωπος ἀνθρώπῳ καὶ φίλον. Ariſt. Eth. 8. 1. Rhet. 1. 11.

Ἐνέθηκε γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς φίλτρον τῇ φύσει τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ, ὥστε ἀλλήλους ἀγαπᾷν. Chryſ. in Eph. Orat. 2.

Συνδεσμὸν εἰς ὁμογνωμοσύνην ὁ ἀριστοτέχνης Θεὸς ἣν ἐδημιούργησε φύσιν τῇ διαθέσει τοὺς λόγῳ διοικουμένους συνέσφιγξε, &c. Proclus Conſtantinopl. Syn. Chalc. Acts 14.

(if we ſound the bottom of their mind) imply themſelves to admire this quality, and by their decrying it do commend it; for it is eaſie to diſcern that therefore only they ſlander mankind as uncapable of goodneſs, becauſe out of malignity they would not allow it ſo excellent a quality.

II. Let us conſider what our neighbour is, how near in blood, how like in nature, how much in all conſiderable reſpects the ſame with us he is.

Should any one wrong or defame our brother, we ſhould be diſpleaſed; ſhould we do it our ſelves, or ſhould we omit any office of kindneſs toward him, we ſhould blame our ſelves; Every man is ſuch, of one ſtock, of one blood with us; and as ſuch may challenge and call for real affection from us.

Should any one mar, tear, or deface our Picture, or ſhew any kind of diſreſpect thereto, we ſhould be offended, taking it for an indignity put on our ſelves; and as for our ſelves, we ſhould never in ſuch a manner affront or deſpight our ſelves; Every man is ſuch, our moſt lively image, repreſenting us moſt exactly in all the main figures and features of body, of ſoul, of ſtate; we thence do owe reſpect to every one.

Δὶ ὁμοιότητες πάντα φιλεῖ πρὸς ἄλληλα συνάπτεσθαι. Plato Symp.

Every man is another ſelf, partaker of the ſame nature, endewed with the ſame faculties, ſubject to the ſame Laws, liable to the ſame fortunes; diſtinguiſhed from us only in accidental and variable circumſtances; whence if we be amiable or eſtimable, ſo is he upon the ſame grounds; and acting impartially (according to right judgment) we ſhould yield love and eſteem to him: by ſlighting, hating, injuring, hurting him we do conſequentially abuſe our ſelves, or acknowledge our ſelves deſervedly liable to the ſame uſage.

Every man, as a Chriſtian, is in a higher and nobler way allied, aſſimilated and identified to us; to him therefore upon the like grounds improved charity is more due; and we wrong our heavenly relations, our better nature, our more conſiderable ſelves, in withholding it from him.

III. Equity doth plainly require Charity from us; for every one is ready not only to wiſh and ſeek, but to demand and claim love from others; ſo as to be much offended, and grievouſly to complain if he do not find it.

We do all conceive love and reſpect due to us from all men; we take all men bound to wiſh and tender our welfare, we ſuppoſe our need to require commiſeration and ſuccour from every man; if it be refuſed, we think it a hard caſe, and that we are ill uſed; we cry out of wrong, of diſcourteſie, of inhumanity, of baſeneſs practiſed toward us.

A moderate reſpect and affection will hardly ſatisfie us, we pretend to them in the higheſt degree, diſguſting the leaſt appearance of diſregard or diſaffection; we can ſcarce better digeſt indifference than hatred.

This evidenceth our opinion and conſcience to be, that we ought to pay the greateſt reſpect and kindneſs to our neighbour; for it is plainly unjuſt and ridiculouſly vain, to require that from others, which we refuſe to others, who may demand it upon the ſame title; nor can we without ſelf-condemnation practiſe that which we deteſt in others.

In all reaſon and equity, if I would have another my friend, I muſt be a friend to him; if I pretend to charity from all men, I muſt render it to all in the ſame kind and meaſure.

Matt. 7. Hence is the Law of Charity well expreſſed in thoſe terms, of doing to others whatever we would have them do to us; whereby the palpable equity of this practice is demonſtrated.

IV. Let us conſider that Charity is a right noble and worthy thing; greatly perfective of our nature; much dignifying and beautifying our ſoul.

It rendreth a man truly great, enlarging his mind unto a vaſt circumference, and to a capacity near infinite; ſo that it by a general care doth reach all things; by an univerſal affection doth embrace and graſp the world.

By it our reaſon obtaineth a field or ſcope of employment worthy of it, not confined to the ſlender intereſts of one perſon, or one place, but extending to the concerns of all men.

Charity is the imitation and copy of that immenſe love, which is the fountain of all being and all good; which made all things, which preſerveth the world, which ſuſtaineth every creature; Nothing advanceth us ſo near to a reſemblance of him, who is eſſential love and goodneſs; who freely and purely, without any regard to his own advantage, or capacity of finding any beneficial return, doth bear and expreſs the higheſt good-will, with a liberal hand pouring down ſhowers of bounty and mercy on all his creatures: who daily putteth up numberleſs indignities and injuries; upholding and maintaining thoſe who offend and provoke him.

Chryſ. in Eph. Or. 9.

Ἡμᾶς εἴ τις ἐρωτήσειε, τί τὸ τιμώμενον ὑμῖν καὶ προσκυνούμενον, πρόχειρον εἰπεῖν ἡ ἀγάπη· ὁ γὰρ Θεὸς ἡμῶν ἡ ἀγάπη ἐστι, ῥῆσις τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος. καὶ τοῦτο χαίρει μᾶλλον ἀκούων ὁ Θεὸς, ἢ τι ἄλλο. Naz. Or. 14.

Καθ᾽ ἑκάστην ὑβρίζεται τὴν ἡμέραν, παρῶν καὶ ὁρῶν, καὶ ἀκούων, καὶ οὔτε σκηπτὸν ἀφῆκε, &c. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. γʹ.

Charity rendreth us as Angels, or Peers to thoſe glorious and bleſſed Creatures, who without receiving or expecting any requital from us, do heartily deſire and delight in our good, are ready to promote it, do willingly ſerve and labour for it. Nothing is more amiable, more admirable, more venerable, even in the common eye and opinion of men; it hath in it a beauty and a majeſty apt to raviſh every heart; Even a ſpark of it in generoſity of dealing breedeth admiration, a glimpſe of it in formal courteſie of behaviour procureth much eſteem, being deemed to accompliſh and adorn a man; how lovely therefore and truly gallant is an intire, ſincere, conſtant and uniform practice thereof, iſſuing from pure good-will and affection!

Love indeed or goodneſs (for true love is nothing elſe but goodneſs exerting it ſelf, in direction toward objects capable of its influence) is the only amiable and only honourable thing: Power and Wit may be admired by ſome, or have ſome fond Idolaters; but being ſevered from goodneſs, or abſtracted from their ſubſerviency to it, they cannot obtain real love, they deſerve not any eſteem; for the worſt, the moſt unhappy, the moſt odious and contemptible of Beings do partake of them in a high meaſure: The Prince of Darkneſs hath more power, and reigneth with abſolute Sovereignty over more Subjects by many than the Great Turk; One Devil may have more wit than all the politick Achitophels, and all the profane Hectors in the world; yet with all his power and all his Wit he is moſt wretched, moſt deteſtable, and moſt deſpicable; and ſuch in proportion is every one, who partaketh in his accurſed diſpoſitions of malice and uncharitableneſs. For,

On the other ſide Uncharitableneſs is a very mean and baſe thing: It contracteth a man's ſoul into a narrow compaſs, or ſtraitneth it as it were into one point; drawing all his thoughts, his deſires, his affections into himſelf, as to their centre; ſo that his reaſon, his will, his activity have but one pitiful object to exerciſe themſelves about: To ſcrape together a little pelf, to catch a vapour of fame, to prog for a frivolous ſemblance of power or dignity, to ſooth the humour or pamper the ſenſuality of one poor worm, is the ignoble ſubject of his buſie care and endeavour.

Sen. de Tranq. 3.

By it we debaſe our ſelves into an affinity with the meaneſt things; becoming either like Beaſts or Fiends; like Beaſts, affecting only our own preſent ſenſible good; or like Fiends, deſigning miſchief and trouble to others.

Ezek. 22. 27.

It is indeed hard for a man without Charity, not to be worſe than an innocent beaſt; not at leaſt to be as a Fox, or a Wolf; either cunningly lurching, or violently ravening for prey; Love only can reſtrain a man from flying at all, and ſeiſing on whatever he meeteth; from biting, from worrying, from devouring every one that is weaker than himſelf, or who cannot defend himſelf from his paws and teeth.

V. The practice of Charity is productive of many great benefits and advantages to us; ſo that to love our neighbour doth involve the trueſt love to our ſelves; and we are not only obliged in duty, but may be encouraged by our intereſt thereto: Beatitude is often pronounced to it, or to ſome particular inſtances of it; and well may it be ſo, for it indeed will conſtitute a man happy, producing to him manifold comforts and conveniences of life: ſome whereof we ſhall touch.

Ὁ γὰρ τοιοῦτος καὶ φθόνου καὶ ὀργῆς καὶ βασκανίας καὶ ἀπονοίας καὶ κενοδοξίας, καὶ πονηρᾶς ἐπιθυμίας, καὶ παντὸς ἔρωτος ἀτόπου, καὶ παντὸς νοσήματος καθαρεύουσαν τηρήσει τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ψυχήν. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Orat. 32.

VI. (1.) Charity doth free our ſouls of all thoſe bad diſpoſitions and paſſions which vex and diſquiet them; from thoſe gloomy paſſions, which cloud our mind, from thoſe keen paſſions, which fret our heart, from thoſe tumultuous paſſions, which ruffle us and diſcompoſe the frame of our ſoul.

It ſtifleth anger, (that ſwoon of reaſon, tranſporting a man out of himſelf) for a man hardly can be incenſed againſt thoſe whom he tenderly loveth: a petty neglect, a hard word, a ſmall diſcourteſie will not fire a charitable ſoul; the greateſt affront or wrong can hardly kindle rage therein.

Φθόνος, ἡ δαπάνη τῶν ἐχόντων, ὁ τῶν παρεχόντων ἰός, τὸ μόνον τῶν παθῶν ἀδικώτατόν τε ἅμα καὶ δικαιότατον, τὸ μὲν ὅτι πᾶσι ἐνοχλεῖ τοῖς καλοῖς, τὸ δὲ ὅτι τήκει τοὺς ἔχοντας. Gr. Naz. Or. 27.

It baniſheth envy (that ſeverely juſt vice, which never faileth to puniſh it ſelf) for no man will repine at his wealth or proſperity, no man will malign his worth or vertue, whoſe good he charitably deſireth and wiſheth.

It excludeth rancour and ſpite, thoſe diſpoſitions which create a hell in our ſoul; which are directly repugnant to charity, and thereby diſpelled as darkneſs by light, cold by heat.

It ſuffereth not revenge (that canker of the heart) to harbour in our breaſt, for who can intend miſchief to him, in whoſe good he delighteth, in whoſe evil he feeleth diſpleaſure?

1 Joh. 4. 18. κόλασιν ἔχει.

Oderunt quem metuunt.

It voideth fear, ſuſpicion, jealouſie of miſchief deſigned againſt us; the which paſſions have torment, or do puniſh us (as Saint John ſaith) racking us with anxious expectation of evil; wherefore there is, ſaith he, no fear in love, but perfect love caſteth out fear: No man indeed is apt to fear him whom he loveth, or is able much to love him whom he feareth; for love eſteemeth its object as innocent, fear apprehendeth it as hurtful; love diſpoſeth to follow and embrace, fear inclineth to decline and ſhun. To ſuſpect a friend therefore is to diſavow him for ſuch; and upon ſlender grounds to conceit ill of him, is to deem him unworthy of our love; The innocence and inoffenſiveneſs of charity, which provoketh no man to do us harm, doth alſo breed great ſecurity and confidence; any man will think he may walk unarmed and unguarded among thoſe to whom he beareth good-will, to whom he neither meaneth, nor doth any harm; being guarded by a good conſcience and ſhielded with innocence.

It removeth diſcontent or diſſatisfaction in our ſtate; the which uſually doth ſpring from ill conceits and ſurmiſes about our neighbour, or from wrathful and ſpiteful affections toward him; for while men have good reſpect and kindneſs for their neighbours, they ſeldom are diſſatisfied in their own condition; they can never want comfort or deſpair of ſuccour.

It curbeth ambition and avarice; thoſe impetuous, thoſe inſatiable, thoſe troubleſome diſpoſitions; for a man will not affect to climb above thoſe, in whoſe honour he findeth ſatisfaction; nor to ſcramble with them for the goods, which he gladly would have them to enjoy; a competency will ſatisfie him, who taketh himſelf but for one among the reſt, and who can as little endure to ſee others want as himſelf: who would trouble himſelf to get power over thoſe, to o'er-top them in dignity and fame, to ſurpaſs them in wealth, whom he is ready to ſerve in the meaneſt offices of kindneſs, whom he would in honour prefer to himſelf, unto whom he will liberally communicate what he hath for his comfort and relief?

Κατὰ γὰρ τοῦ ἀγαπωμένου οὐκ ἄν τις ἐπαρθείη ποτέ. Chryſoſt. in 1 Cor. Or. 32.

In the prevalence of ſuch bad paſſions and diſpoſitions of ſoul our miſery doth moſt conſiſt; thence the chief troubles and inconveniences of our life do proceed; wherefore charity doth highly deſerve of us in freeing us from them.

VII. (2.) It conſequently doth ſettle our mind in a ſerene, calm, ſweet and cheerful ſtate; in an even temper and good humour, and harmonious order of ſoul, which ever will reſult from the evacuation of bad paſſions, from the compoſure of ſuch as are indifferent, from the excitement of thoſe which are good and pleaſant: The fruits of the Spirit, ſaith Saint Paul, are love, joy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs (or benignity:) love precedeth, joy and peace follow as its * conſtant attendants, gentleneſs and benignity come after as its certain effects.

Gal. 5. 22. Eph. 5. 12. Col. 3. 15.

* Eldeſt Daughter.

Love indeed is the ſweeteſt of all paſſions, ever accompanied with a ſecret delectation and pleaſant ſenſe; whenever it is placed upon a good object, when it acteth in a rational way, when it is vigorous, it muſt needs yield much joy.

It therefore greatly conduceth to our happineſs, or rather alone doth ſuffice to conſtitute us happy.

VIII. (3.) Charity will preſerve us from divers external miſchiefs and inconveniences, to which our life is expoſed, and which otherwiſe we ſhall incur.

If we have not charity toward men, we ſhall have enmity with them; and upon that do wait troops of miſchief; we ſhall enjoy nothing quietly or ſafely, we ſhall do nothing without oppoſition or contention; no converſation, no commerce will be pleaſant; clamour, obloquy, tumult and trouble will ſurround us; we ſhall live in perpetual danger; the enmity of the meaneſt and weakeſt Creature being formidable.

But all ſuch miſchiefs charity will prevent or remove; damming up the fountains, or extirpating the roots of them: for who will hate a perſon that apparently loveth him; who can be ſo barbarous or baſe as to hurt that man, whom he findeth ever ready to do himſelf good? what brute, what devil can find in his heart to be a foe to him, who is a ſure friend to all? No Publican can be ſo wretched-

Τίς δ' ἂν καὶ ἐχθρὸς εὐλόγως γένοιτο ἀνδρὸς οὐδὲ μίαν οὐδαμῶς παρέχοντος αἰτίαν ἔχθρας; Clem. Str. 7. (p. 532.) Chryſ. in 1 Theſſ. Or. 4. Κἂν θηρίον ἐκεῖνος ᾖ, κἂν λίθος, &c.

Οὐδεὶς ἐχθρὸς τῷ σπουδαίῳ. Hier.

Οὐκ οἷόν τε τὸν ἀγαπώμενον μὴ καὶ ἀγαπᾶν. Chryſ. in Gen. Or. 32.

Matt. 5. 46.

ly vile, no ſinner ſo deſtitute of goodneſs; for, If (ſaith our Lord, upon common experience) you love them which love you, what reward have you, do not even the publicans the ſame? and, If you do good to them which do good to you, what thank have you? for ſinners alſo do even the ſame: It ſeemeth beyond the greateſt degeneracy and curruption whereof human nature is capable, to requite charity with enmity, yea not to return ſome kindneſs for it: Τίς ὁ κακώσων; Who (ſaith Saint Peter) is he that will do you hurt, if you be followers of that which is good; or imitators of him that is good; (of the Sovereign goodneſs?) none ſurely can be ſo unjuſt, or ſo unworthy.

1 Pet. 3. 13. Ἐὰν τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ μιμηταὶ γένεσθε.

As charity reſtraineth us from doing any wrong, or yielding any offence to others in thought, in word, in deed; from entertaining any bad conceits without ground, from hatching any miſchievous deſigns againſt our neighbour; from uſing any harſh, virulent, biting language; from any rugged, diſcourteous, diſobliging behaviour; from any wrongful, rigorous, ſevere dealing toward him; from any contemptuous pride, or ſupercilious arrogance; ſo it conſequently will defend us from the like treatment; for ſcarce any man is ſo malicious as without any provocation to do miſchief; no man is ſo incorrigibly ſavage, as to perſiſt in committing outrage upon perfect innocence, joyned with patience, with meekneſs, with courteſie; Charity will melt the hardeſt heart, and charm the fierceſt ſpirit; it will bind the moſt violent hand, it will ſtill the moſt obſtreperous tongue; it will reconcile the moſt offended, moſt prejudiced heart: it is the beſt guard that can be of our ſafety from aſſaults, of our intereſt from damage, of our reputation from ſlander, detraction and reproach.

Vincit malos pertinax bonitas. Sen.

Carbones ignis congregabis ſuper caput ejus; non in maledictum & condemnationem, ut plerique exiſtimant, ſed in correctionem & pœnitudinem; ut ſuperatus beneficiis, excoctus fervore charitatis, inimicus eſſe deſiſtat. Hier. in Pelag. 1. c. 9.

If you would have Examples of this, experience will afford many; and ſome we have in the Sacred Records commended to our obſervation; Eſau was a rough man, and one who had been exceedingly provoked by his brother Jacob; yet how did meek and reſpectful demeanour overcome him! ſo that Eſau (it is ſaid in the hiſtory) ran to meet him (Jacob,) and fell on his neck, and kiſſed him, and they wept.

Gen. 32. 20.
Gen. 33. 4.

Saul was a man poſſeſſed with a furious envy and ſpite againſt David; yet into what expreſſions did the ſenſe of his kind dealing force him! Is this thy voice, my Son David? —Thou art more righteous than I; for thou haſt rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil; —behold I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly. So doth charity ſubdue and triumph over the moſt inveterate prejudices, and the moſt violent paſſions of men.

1 Sam. 24. 16, 17.
26. 17, 21.

Cadit ſtatim ſimultas ab altera parte deſerta—— Sen. de Ir. 2. 34.

If peace and quiet be deſirable things, as certainly they are, and that form implyeth, when by wiſhing peace with men, we are underſtood to wiſh all good to them, it is charity only that preſerveth them; which more ſurely than any power or policy doth quaſh all war and ſtrife; for war muſt have parties, and ſtrife implieth reſiſtance; be it the firſt or ſecond blow which maketh the fray, charity will avoid it; for it neither will ſtrike the firſt in offence, nor the ſecond in revenge. Charity therefore may well be ſtyled the band of peace, it being that only which can knit mens ſouls together, and keep them from breaking out into diſſenſions.

Eph. 4. 3.

It alone is that which will prevent bickering and claſhing about points of credit or intereſt; if we love not our neighbour, or tender not his good as our own, we ſhall be ever in competition and debate with him about thoſe things, not ſuffering him to enjoy any thing quietly; ſtruggling to get above him, ſcrambling with him for what is to be had.

IX. (4.) As charity preſerveth from miſchiefs, ſo it procureth many ſweet comforts and fair accommodations of life.

Friendſhip is a moſt uſeful and pleaſant thing; and charity will conciliate good ſtore thereof; it is apt to make all men friends; for love is the only general philtre and effectual charm of ſouls; the fire which kindleth all it toucheth, and propagateth it ſelf in every capable ſubject; and ſuch a ſubject is every man in whom humanity is not quite extinct, and hardly can any ſuch man be, ſeeing every man hath ſome good humour in him, ſome blood, ſome kindly juice flowing in his veins; no man wholly doth conſiſt of dusky melancholy, or fiery choler; whence all men may be preſumed liable to the powerful impreſſions of charity; its mild and ſerene countenance, its ſweet and gentle ſpeech, its courteous and obliging geſture, its fair dealing, its benign converſation, its readineſs to do any good or ſervice to any man, will inſinuate good-will and reſpect into all hearts.

Ego tibi monſtrabo amatorium ſine medicamento, ſine herba, ſine ullius veneficæ carmine, Si vis amari, ama. Sen. Ep. 9.

It thence will encompaſs a man with friends, with many guards of his ſafety, with many ſupports of his fortune, with many patrons of his reputation, with many ſuccourers of his neceſſity, with many comforters of his affliction: for is a charitable man in danger, who will not defend him? is he falling, who will not uphold him? is he falſly accuſed or aſperſed, who will not vindicate him? is he in diſtreſs, who will not pity him, who will not endeavour to relieve and reſtore him? who will inſult over his calamity? will it not in ſuch caſes appear a common duty, a common intereſt to aſſiſt and countenance a common friend, a common benefactour to mankind?

Whereas moſt of our life is ſpent in ſociety and diſcourſe, charity is that which doth ſeaſon and ſweeten theſe, rendring them grateful to others, and commodious to ones ſelf; for a charitable heart is a ſweet ſpring, from whence do iſſue ſtreams of wholſome and pleaſant diſcourſe; it not being troubled with any bad paſſion or deſign, which may ſour or foul converſation, doth ever make him good company to others, and rendreth them ſuch to himſelf; which is a mighty convenience. In ſhort, a charitable man, or, true lover of men will (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) inhabit earth as a heaven, every where carrying a ſerenity with him, and plaiting ten thouſand crowns for himſelf. Again,

Prov. 15. 26. 16. 24.

Τὴν γῆν οὕτως ὡς τὸν οὐρανὸν οἰκήσει, πανταχοῦ γαλήνης ἀπολαύων, καὶ μυρίους ἑαυτῷ πλέκων στεφάνους. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 32.

X. (5.) Charity doth in every eſtate yield advantages ſutable thereto; bettering it, and improving it to our benefit.

It rendreth proſperity not only innocent and ſafe, but uſeful and fruitful to us, we then indeed enjoy it, if we feel the comfort of doing good by it: It ſolaceth adverſity, conſidering that it doth not ariſe as a puniſhment or fruit of ill-doing to others; that it is not attended with the deſerved ill-will of men; that no man hath reaſon to delight for it, or inſult over us therein; that we may probably expect commiſeration and relief, having been ready to ſhew the like to others.

It tempereth both ſtates; for in proſperity a man cannot be tranſported with immoderate joy, when ſo many objects of pity and grief do preſent themſelves before him, which he is apt deeply to reſent; in proſperity he cannot be dejected with extreme ſorrow, being refreſhed by ſo many good ſucceſſes befalling thoſe whom he loveth: One condition will not puff him up, being ſenſible of his neighbours miſery; the other will not ſink him down, having complacence in his neighbours welfare. Uncharitableneſs (proceeding from contrary cauſes, and producing contrary effects) doth ſpoil all conditions, rendring proſperity fruitleſs, and adverſity comfortleſs.

XI. (6.) We may conſider, that ſecluding the exerciſe of charity, all the goods and advantages we have (our beſt faculties of nature, our beſt endowments of ſoul, the gifts of providence, and the fruits of our induſtry) will become vain and fruitleſs, or noxious and bainful to us; for what is our reaſon worth, what doth it ſignifie, if it ſerveth only for contriving ſorry deſigns, or tranſacting petty affairs about our ſelves? what is wit good for, if it muſt be ſpent only in making ſport, or hatching miſchief? to what purpoſe is knowledge, if it be not applied to the inſtruction, direction, admonition or conſolation of others? what mattereth abundance of wealth, if it be to be uſeleſly hoarded up, or vainly flung away, in wicked or wanton profuſeneſs; if it be not employed in affording ſuccour to our neighbours indigency and diſtreſs? what is our credit but a mere noiſe or a puff of air, if we do not give a ſolidity and ſubſtance to it, by making it an engine of doing good? what is our vertue it ſelf, if it be buried in obſcurity, or choaked with idleneſs, yielding no benefit to others by the luſtre of its example, or by its real influence? What is any talent if it be wrapped up in a napkin, any light if it be hid under a buſhel; any thing private, if it be not by good uſe ſpread out and improved to publick benefit? If theſe gifts do miniſter only to our own particular advantage, to our perſonal convenience, glory or pleaſure, how ſlim things are they, how inconſiderable is their worth?

Paulum ſepultæ diſtat inertiæ Celata virtus. Hor. Carm. 4. 9.

But they being managed by charity become precious and excellent things; they are great in proportion to the greatneſs of their uſe, or the extent of their beneficial influence: as they carry forth good to the world, ſo they bring back various benefits to our ſelves; they return into our boſom laden with reſpect and reward from God and from man; they yield thanks and commendation from without, they work comfort and ſatisfaction within: Yea, which is infinitely more conſiderable, and enhanceth the price of our gifts to a vaſt rate, they procure glory and bleſſing to God; for hereby is God glorified, if we bring forth much fruit; and no good fruit can grow from any other ſtock than that of charity.

Luke 6. 38.

Joh. 15. 8.
Phil. 1. 11.
Matt. 5. 16.

Uncharitableneſs therefore ſhould be loathed and ſhunned by us, as that which robbeth us of all our ornaments and advantages; which indeed marreth and corrupteth all our good things, which turneth bleſſings into curſes, and rendreth the means of our welfare to be cauſes of miſchief to us; for without charity a man can have no goods, but goods worldly and temporal; and ſuch goods thence do prove impertinent baubles, burthenſome incumbrances, dangerous ſnares, baneful poiſons to him.

Prov. 4. 31.
2 Cor. 9. 11.
1 Cor. 13.

XII. (7.) Charity doth hugely advance and amplifie a man's ſtate, putting him into the poſſeſſion or fruition of all good things: It will endow, enrich, ennoble, embelliſh us with all the world hath of precious, of glorious, of fair; by appropriation thereof to our ſelves, and acquiring of a real intereſt therein. What men commonly out of fond ſelf-love do vainly affect, that infallibly by being charitable they may compaſs, the engroſſing to themſeves all kinds of good: moſt eaſily, moſt innocently, in a compendious and ſure way, without any ſin or blame, without any care or pain, without any danger or trouble, they may come to attain and to enjoy whatever in common eſteem is deſirable or valuable; they may, without greedy avarice, or the carkings, the drudgeries, the diſgraces going with it, procure to themſelves abundant wealth; without fond ambition, or the difficulties, the hazards, the emulations, the ſtrugglings to which it is liable, they may arrive to great honour; without ſordid voluptuouſneſs, or the ſatieties, the maladies, the regrets conſequent thereon, they may enjoy all pleaſure; without any wildneſs or wantonneſs, pride, luxury, ſloth, any of its temptations and ſnares, they may have all proſperity; they may get all learning and wiſdom without laborious ſtudy, all vertue and goodneſs without the fatigues of continual exerciſe: for are not all theſe things yours, if you do eſteem them ſo, if you do make them ſo, by finding much delight and ſatisfaction in them? doth not your neighbours wealth enrich you, if you feel content in his poſſeſſing and uſing it? doth not his preferment advance you, if your ſpirit riſeth with it in a gladſome complacence? doth not his pleaſure delight you, if you reliſh his enjoyment of it? doth not his proſperity bleſs you, if your heart doth exult and triumph in it? do not his endowments adorn you, if you like them, if you commend them, if the uſe of them doth miniſter comfort and joy to you? This is the divine Magick of charity, which conveyeth all things into our hands, and enſtateth us in a dominion of them, whereof nothing can diſſeiſe us; by vertue whereof being (as Saint Paul ſpeaketh of himſelf) ſorrowful we yet always rejoyce, having nothing we yet poſſeſs all things. 2 Cor. 6. 10.

Neither is this property in things merely imaginary or phantaſtick (like that of Lunaticks, who fancy themſelves mighty Princes, or rich Aldermen) but very ſubſtantial and real; yea far more real to the charitable perſon, than it is commonly to thoſe, who in legal or popular account are maſters of them; for how is propriety in things otherwiſe conſiderable, than for the content and pleaſure which they yield to the preſumed owner? the which if a charitable perſon abundantly draweth from them, why are they not truly his? why is not the Tree his, if he can pull and taſte its Fruits without injury or blame? yea doth not the propriety more really belong to him, as to the groſs poſſeſſour, if he doth equally enjoy the benefit, without partaking the inconveniences and impurities adherent to them; if he taſte them innocently and purely, without being cloyed, without being diſtracted, without being puffed, without being encumbred, enſnared or corrupted by them?

A charitable man therefore can never (in a moral account) be poor, or vile, or any-wiſe miſerable; except all the world ſhould be caſt into penury and diſtreſs; for while his neighbour hath any thing, he will enjoy it; rejoicing with thoſe that rejoice, as the Apoſtle doth enjoin.

XIII. (8.) If therefore we love our ſelves, we muſt love others, and do others good; charitable beneficence carrying with it ſo many advantages to our ſelves.

We by charitable complacence do partake in their welfare, reaping pleaſure from all the fruits of their induſtry and fortune.

We by charitable aſſiſtance do enable and diſpoſe them to make grateful returns of ſuccour in our need.

We thence aſſuredly ſhall obtain their good-will, their eſteem, their commendation: we ſhall maintain peaceable and comfortable entercourſe with them, in ſafety, in quiet, in good humour and cheer.

Beſides all other benefits we ſhall get that of their prayers; the which of all prayers have a moſt favourable audience and aſſured efficacy: for if the complaints and curſes of thoſe who are oppreſſed or neglected by uncharitable dealing, do certainly reach God's ears, and pull down vengeance

Jam. 5. 4.
Deut. 24. 15.
Ecclus. 4. 6.

geance from above; how much more will the interceſſions and bleſſings of the poor pierce the heavens, and thence draw recompence; ſeeing God is more ready to perform his proper and pleaſant works of bounty and mercy, than to execute his ſtrange and unpleaſing work of puniſhment; Eſpecially the bleſſings of the poor being always accompanied with praiſes and glorifications of him, who enableth and diſpoſeth men to do good, the which praiſes will ever be reckoned on the account of him who drew them forth by his beneficence; it will be (as the Apoſtle ſaith) fruit redounding to his account; while it aboundeth by many thankſgivings to God.

Pſal. 62. 12. Mic. 7. 18. Iſa. 28. 21.

Phil. 4. 17. 2 Cor. 9. 11. 8. 19.

So in virtue of Charity the pooreſt man amply may requite the wealthieſt; and a peaſant may out-do the greateſt Prince in beneficence.

XIV. We may conſider, that Charity is a practice ſpecially grateful to God, and a moſt excellent part of our Duty; not only becauſe he hath commanded it as ſuch with greateſt earneſtneſs; nor only becauſe it doth conſtitute us in neareſt reſemblance of him; but as a peculiar expreſſion of love and good-will toward him; for if we love him, we muſt for his ſake have a kindneſs for his friends, we muſt tender his intereſts, we muſt favour his reputation, we muſt deſire his content and pleaſure, we muſt contribute our endeavours toward the furtherance of theſe his concerns: Seeing then God is an aſſured friend to all men, ſeeing he hath a property in all men (for he is God and Lord of all) ſeeing he much concerneth himſelf for all mens welfare; ſeeing from the proſperity, from the vertue, from the happineſs of every man he gaineth honour and praiſe; ſeeing he is greatly ſatisfied and delighted in the good of men, we alſo muſt love them; otherwiſe we greatly ſhall diſoblige and diſguſt him.

Ezek. 18.

Is it not indeed a practice guilty of notorious enmity toward him, inconſiſtent with the maintenance of any friendſhip or peace with him, to diſcord in affection from him, maligning or diſaffecting thoſe whom he dearly loveth and favoureth, who are ſo nearly allied to him by manifold relations, as his Creatures, his Subjects, his Servants, his Children, whom he deſigneth and deſireth to crown with eternal glory and bliſs?

Ὅταν στυγῇ τις ἄνδρα, ὃν θεὸς φιλεῖ, ἑαυτῷ μεγίστην μωρίαν καθεισάγει φανερῶς γὰρ αὐτῷ τῷ θεῷ κορύσσεται. Vid. Anthol.
Δεῖ γὰρ φιλεῖν ἐκεῖνον, ὃ θεὸς φιλεῖ· Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 32.

XV. Seeing God vouchſafeth to eſteem whatever is done in Charity to our neighbour (if done with an honeſt and pious mind, as to his friends) to be done unto himſelf; that in feeding our indigent neighbour, we refreſh him; in cloathing our neighbour, we comfort him; we do by charitable beneficence oblige God, and become in a manner benefactours to him; and as ſuch aſſuredly ſhall be requited by him; and is not this a high privilege, a great honour, a mighty advantage to us? If a man had opportunity to do that, which his Prince would acknowledge a courteſie and obligation to him, what a happineſs would he account it? and how far more conſiderable is it, that we can ſo eaſily do that which the Lord of all, in whoſe diſpoſal all things are, will take ſo kindly at our hands?

Rom. 12. 8.
Ἡ γὰρ ἀγάπη μετὰ τοῦ κέρδους πολλὴν ἔχει καὶ τὴν ἡδονὴν, καὶ πόνον οὐδένα—— Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 32.
2 Cor. 9. 7. 8. 12.
Ποῖος πόνος μὴ κακῶς εἰπεῖν οὐδένα; ποία δυσκολία ἀπαλλαγῆναι φθόνου καὶ βασκανίας; ποῖος μόχθος μὴ κακῶς εἰπεῖν μηδένα; -Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. η′.

XVI. We may conſider, that Charity is a very feaſible and very eaſie Duty; it requireth no ſore pain, no grievous trouble, no great coſt; for it conſiſteth only in good-will, and that which naturally ſpringeth thence; willingneſs and chearfulneſs are neceſſary ingredients or adjuncts of it, the which imply facility: whence the weakeſt and pooreſt man is no leſs able to perform it than the greateſt potentate; his heart may be as charitable, though his hand cannot be ſo liberal; one of the moſt noble and moſt famous charities that ever was, was the giving two mites; Luk. 21. 2. and the giving a cup of cold water is the inſtance of that beneficence, Matt. 10. 42. which ſhall not fail of being rewarded.

At nunc cum omnia quæ Difficiliora ſunt vel modica ex parte faciamus, hoc ſolum non facimus quod & factu facilius eſt, & abſque quo caſa ſunt univerſa quæ facimus: Jejunii corpus ſentit injuriam, vigiliæ carnem macerant——hæc omnia ſunt qui faciant, ſola charitas ſine labore eſt. Hier. in Gal. 5. 13.

XVII. We may conſider, that Charity is the beſt, the moſt aſſured, the moſt eaſie and expedite way, or inſtrument of performing all other dutys toward our neighbour: If we would diſpatch, love and all is done; if we would be perfect in obedience, love and we ſhall not fail in any point; for love is the fulfilling of the law; love is the bond of perfectneſs: Rom. 13. 10. Gal. 5. 14. would we be ſecure in the practice of juſtice, of meekneſs, of humility toward all men, of conſtant fidelity toward our friends, of gentle moderation toward our enemies, of loyalty toward our ſuperiours, of benignity toward our inferiours; if we would be ſure to purifie our minds from ill thoughts, to reſtrain our tongues from ill ſpeaking, to abſtain from all bad demeanour and dealing; it is but having charity, and infallibly you will do all this; for love worketh no ill to its neighbour; Rom. 12. love thinketh no evil; love behaveth not it ſelf unſeemly. 1 Cor. 13. 5.

Would we diſcharge all our Duties without any reluctancy or regret, with much ſatisfaction and pleaſure? love will certainly diſpoſe us thereto; for it always acteth freely and chearfully, without any compulſion or ſtraining; it is ever accompanied with delectation: If we would know its way and virtue of acting, we may ſee it repreſented in the proceeding of Jacob, who being inſpired by love did contendedly and without regret endure ſo long and hard toil, ſuch diſappointments and ſuch affronts; And Jacob, ſaith the Text, ſerved ſeven years for Rachel, and they ſeemed to him but a few days for the love he had to her. Gen. 29. 20.

Εἰ γὰρ ἅπαντες ἠγάπων καὶ ἠγαπῶντο, οὐδὲν ἂν ἠδίκησεν οὐδεὶς, &c. Chryſ. in Cor. Or. 32.

It is winged.
It is fire.

Amor obſequitur ſponte, gratis obtemperat, liberè reveretur. Bern. ad Eug. Prol. Vid. Bern. Ep. 11. p. 1404——

This is the root, from whence voluntary obedience doth naturally grow; if it be planted in our heart, we need not fear but that all kind of good fruit will ſprout forth into converſation and practice.

Ὁ γὰρ φιλῶν οὐχ. οὕτως ἐπιτάττων, ὡς ἐπιταττόμενος χαίρει, &c. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 32.

But without it we ſhall not ever perform any good work perfectly, ſteadily, in a kindly manner; no other principle will ſerve, if we are only moved by whip and ſpur, driven on by fear, or incited by hope, we ſhall go forward unwillingly and dully, often halting, ever flagging; thoſe principles which do put ſlaves and mercenaries on action, as they are not ſo noble and worthy, ſo neither are they ſo effectual and ſure; as ambition, vain-glory, ſelf-intereſt, deſign of ſecurity, of profit, of compliance with the expectation of men, &c.

XVIII. Charity giveth worth, form and life to all vertue, ſo that without it no action is valuable in it ſelf, or acceptable to God. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 25.

Sever it from courage; and what is that, but the boldneſs or fierceneſs of a beaſt? from meekneſs; and what is that, but the ſoftneſs of a woman, or weakneſs of a child? from courteſie; and what is that, but affectation or artifice? from juſtice; what is that, but humour or policy? from wiſdom; what is that, but craft and ſubtilty?

What meaneth faith without it, but dry opinion; what hope, but blind preſumption; what alms-doing, but ambitious oſtentation; what undergoing martyrdom, but ſtiffneſs or ſturdineſs of reſolution; what is devotion, but glozing or mocking with God? what is any practice (how ſpecious ſoever in appearance, or materially good) but an iſſue of 1 Cor. 13.2,3. ſelf-conceit, or ſelf-will, of ſervile fear, or mercenary deſign? Though I have faith, ſo that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing; though I beſtow all my goods to feed the poor; and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

But Charity doth ſanctifie every action, and impregnate all our practice with a ſavour of goodneſs, turning all we do into vertue; it is true fortitude and gallantry indeed, when a man out of charity and hearty deſign to promote his neighbours good doth encounter dangers and difficulties; it is genuine meekneſs, when a man out of charity and unwillingneſs to hurt his neighbour, doth patiently comport with injuries and diſcourteſies; it is vertuous courteſie, when cordial affection venteth it ſelf in civil language, in reſpectful deportment, in obliging performances; it is excellent juſtice, when a man regarding his neighbours caſe as his own, doth unto him, as he would have it done to himſelf: it is admirable wiſdom, which ſagaciouſly contriveth and dexterouſly manageth things with the beſt advantage toward its neighbours good:
Gal. 5. 6. It is a worthy faith, which being ſpirited and actuated by charity, doth Jam. 2. 26. produce goodly fruits of beneficence; it is a ſound and ſolid hope, which 1 Cor. 3. 8. is grounded on that everlaſting foundation of charity, which never doth fail, or fall away; it is ſincere alms, which not only the hand, but the heart doth reach forth; it is an acceptable ſacrifice, which is kindled by the holy fire of fervent affection; it is a pure devotion, which is offered
1 Tim. 2. 8. up with a calm and benign mind, reſembling the diſpoſition of that good-Matt. 5. 23. neſs which it adoreth.

If therefore we would do any thing well, if we would not loſe all the vertue, and forfeit all the benefit of what we perform, we muſt fol-
1 Cor. 16. 14. low the Rule of Saint Paul, to do all our works in charity.

XIX. So great benefits doth Charity yield; yet if it did not yield any of them, it would deſerve and claim our obſervance; without regard to its ſweet fruits and beneficial conſequences, it were to be embraced and cheriſhed; for it carrieth a reward and a heaven in it ſelf; the very ſame which conſtituteth God himſelf infinitely happy, and which beatifieth every bleſſed Spirit, in proportion to its capacity and exerciſe thereof: A man doth abundantly enjoy himſelf in that ſteddy compoſedneſs, and ſavoury complacence of mind which ever doth attend it; and as the preſent ſenſe, ſo is the memory of it, or the good conſcience of having done good, very delicious and ſatisfactory.

As it is a raskally delight (tempered with regret, and vaniſhing into bitterneſs) which men feel in wreaking ſpite, or doing miſchief; ſuch as they cannot reflect upon without diſguſt and condemning their baſe impotency of ſoul; ſo is the pleaſure which charity doth breed altogether pure, grateful to the mind, and encreaſing by reflexion; never periſhing or decaying; a man eternally enjoying the good he hath done, by remembring and ruminating thereon. In fine,

XX. Whereas the great obſtacle to Charity is ſelf-love, or an extravagant fondneſs of our own intereſts, yet uncharitableneſs deſtroyeth that: for how can we love our ſelves if we do want charity, how can we appear lovely to our ſelves if we are deſtitute of ſo worthy an endowment? or if we can diſcern thoſe unworthy diſpoſitions, which accompany company the defect of it; can we eſteem ſo mean, ſo vile, ſo ugly things as we then are? Ariſtotle ſaith, that bad men cannot be friends to themſelves, becauſe having in themſelves nothing amiable, they can feel no affection toward themſelves; and certainly, if we are not ſtark blind, or can but ſee wrath, ſpite, envy, revenge in their own black and ugly hue, we muſt needs (if they do poſſeſs our ſouls) grow odious and deſpicable to our ſelves. And being they do rob us of ſo many great benefits, and bring ſo many grievous miſchiefs on us, we cannot be otherwiſe than enemies to our ſelves by cheriſhing them, or ſuffering them to lodge in us.

Οὐθὲν φιλητὸν ἔχοντες, οὐθὲν φιλικὸν πάσχουσι. Ariſt. Eth. 9. 4.

Theſe are ſome very conſiderable inducements to the practice of this great vertue; there are divers others of a higher nature, derivable from the inmoſt bowels of our Religion, grounded on its peculiar Conſtituon and Obligations, which I ſhall now forbear to mention, reſerving them for a particular Diſcourſe by themſelves.

O Lord, who haſt taught us, that all our doings without Charity are nothing worth; Send thy Holy Ghoſt, and pour into our hearts that moſt excellent gift of Charity, the very bond of peace and of all vertues, without which whoſoever liveth is counted dead before thee. Grant this for thine only Son Jeſus Chriſt's ſake.

Quinquag. Sund.

SERMON XXIX.

Of a Peaceable Temper and Carriage.

ROMANS 12. 18.

If it be poſſible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.

THIS Chapter containeth many excellent Precepts and wholſome advices (ſcarce any portion of Holy Scripture ſo many in ſo little compaſs.) From among them I have ſelected one, alas, but too ſeaſonable and pertinent to the unhappy condition of our diſtracted Age, wherein to obſerve this, and ſuch like Injunctions, is by many eſteemed and impoſſibility, by others a wonder, by ſome a crime. It hath an apt coherence with, yet no neceſſary dependence upon the parts adjoining; whence I may preſume to treat upon it diſtinctly by it ſelf; and without farther preface or circumſtance we may conſider ſeveral particulars therein.

I. And Firſt, Concerning the advice it ſelf, or the Subſtance of the Duty charged on us, Εἰρηνεύειν (to be in peace, or live peaceably) we may take notice, that, whether according to the more uſual acception it be applied to the publick eſtate of things, or as here doth relate only to private converſation, it doth import,

1. Not barely a negation of doing, or ſuffering harm; or an abſtinence from ſtrife and violence (for a mere ſtrangeneſs this may be, a want of occaſion, or a truce, rather than a peace) but a poſitive Amity, and diſpoſition to perform ſuch kind offices, without which good correſpondence among men cannot ſubſiſt. For they who by reaſon of diſtance of place, non-acquaintance, or defect of opportunity maintain no entercourſe, cannot properly be ſaid to be in peace with one another: But thoſe who have frequent occaſion of commerce, whoſe conditions require enterchanges of courteſie and relief, who are ſome way obliged and diſpoſed to afford needful ſuccour, and ſafe retreat to each other; Theſe may be ſaid to live in peace together; and theſe only; it being in a manner impoſſible, that they who are not diſpoſed to do good to others (if they have power and opportunity) ſhould long abſtain from doing harm.

2. Living peaceably implies not ſome few tranſitory performances, proceeding from caſual humour or the like; but a conſtant, ſtable, and well-ſetled condition of being; a continual ceſſation from injury, and promptitude to do good offices. For as one blow doth not make a battel, nor one skirmiſh a war; ſo cannot ſingle forbearances from doing miſchief, or ſome few particular acts of kindneſs (ſuch as mere ſtrangers may afford each other) be worthily ſtyled a being in peace: but an habitual inclination to theſe, a firm and durable eſtate of innocence and beneficence.

3. Living in peace ſuppoſes a reciprocal condition of being: not only a performing good, and forbearing to do bad offices, but a receiving the like treatment from others. For he, that being aſſaulted is conſtrained to ſtand upon his defence, may not be ſaid to be in peace, though his not being ſo (involuntarily) is not to be imputed to him.

4. Being in peace imports not only an outward ceſſation of violence and ſeeming demonſtration of amity, but an inward will and reſolution to continue therein. For he that intends, when occaſion is preſented, to do miſchief to another, is nevertheleſs an enemy, becauſe more ſecret and dangerous: an ambuſcado is no leſs a piece of war, than confronting the enemy in open field. Proclaiming and denouncing ſignifie, but good and ill intention conſtitute, and are the ſouls of peace and war. From theſe conſiderations we may infer a deſcription of being in peace, viz. that it is, to bear mutual good-will, to continue in amity, to maintain good correſpondence, to be upon terms of mutual courteſie and benevolence; to be diſpoſed to perform reciprocally all offices of humanity; aſſiſtance in need, comfort in ſorrow, relief in diſtreſs; to pleaſe and ſatisfie one another, by advancing the innocent delight, and promoting the juſt advantage of each other; to converſe with confidence and ſecurity, without ſuſpicion on either hand of any fraudulent, malicious, or hurtful practices againſt either: Or, negatively; Not to be in a ſtate of enmity, perſonal hatred, pertinacious anger, jealouſie, envy, or ill-will; not to be apt to provoke, to reproach, to harm, or hinder another, nor to have reaſonable grounds of expecting the ſame bad uſage from others: to be removed from danger of vexatious quarrels, entercourſe of odious language, offending others or being diſquieted ones ſelf. This I take to be the meaning of living, or being in peace, differing only in degree of obligation, and latitude of object, from the ſtate of friendſhip properly ſo called, and oppoſed to a condition of enmity, defiance, contention, hatred, ſuſpicion, animoſity.

II. In the next place we may conſider the Object of this Duty, ſignified in thoſe words, With all men. We often meet in Scripture with exhortations directed peculiarly to Chriſtians, to be at peace among themſelves; as (Mark 9. 5.) Our Saviour layes this Injunction upon his Diſciples, εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἀλλήλοις, Have peace one with another; inculcated by Saint Paul upon the Theſſalonians in the ſame words: and the like we have in the Second Epiſtle to Timothy, Chap. 2. Ver. 22. Follow 1 Theſſ. 5. 13.
ighteouſneſs, faith, charity, peace with them that call upon the Lord out of a pure heart; and to the Romans, (14. 17.) Let us therefore follow Vid. Eph. 4. 3.
after the things that make for peace, and things wherewith one may edifie another. But here the Duty hath a more large and comprehenſive Object; πάντες ἄνθρωποι, all men: as likewiſe it hath in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, Chap. 12. Ver. 14. Purſue peace with all men; with all men without any exception, with men of all Nations, Jews and Gentiles, Greeks and Barbarians; of all Sects and Religions; perſecuting Jews and Idolatrous Heathens; (for of ſuch conſiſted the generality of men at that time) and ſo Saint Paul expreſly in a like advice, (1 Cor. 10. 32. Give no offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the Church of God; Even as I pleaſe all men.) And I may add by evident parity of reaſon, with men of all degrees and eſtates, high and low, noble and baſe, rich and poor; of all tempers and diſpoſitions, meek and angry, gentle and froward, pliable and perverſe; of all endowments, wiſe and fooliſh, vertuous and vicious; of all judgments and perſuaſions, Orthodox and Heretical, peaceable and ſchiſmatical perſons: this univerſally vaſt and boundleſs term, All men, contains them all. Neither is there any evading our obligation to this Duty, by pretending about others, that they differ from us in humour and complexion of ſoul, that they entertain opinions irreconcileably contrary to ours; that they adhere to ſects and parties which we diſlike and diſavow, that they are not ſo vertuous, ſo religious, ſo holy as they ſhould be, or at leaſt not in ſuch a manner as we would have them; for be this allegation true or falſe, it will not excuſe us; while they are not diveſted of humane nature; and can truly lay claim to the name and title of men, we are by virtue of this Precept obliged to live peaceably with them.

III. We may conſider the Qualification of the Duty here expreſſed, and what thoſe words mean; If it be poſſible, as much as lieth in you. To which purpoſe we may advert; from our deſcription of living peaceably, that it conſiſts mainly of two parts: one active, or proceeding from us, and terminated on others, To bear good-will, to do good offices, to procure the profit, delight and welfare, to abſtain from the diſpleaſure, damage and diſturbance of others: The other paſſive, iſſuing from others, and terminated on our ſelves; That they be well affected toward us, inclinable to do us good, and no wiſe diſpoſed to wiſh, deſign or bring any harm, trouble or vexation upon us. Whereof the former is altogether in our power, conſiſting of acts or omiſſions depending upon our free choice and counſel; and we are directly obliged to it, by virtue of thoſe words, τὸ ἐξ ὑμῶν, as much as lieth in you: the latter is not fully ſo, yet commonly there be probable means of effecting it, which we are hence bound to uſe, though ſometimes they may fail of ſucceſs. For the words εἰ δυνατὸν, if it be poſſible, as they ſignifie the utmoſt endeavour is to be employed; and that no difficulty (beneath the degree of impoſſibility) can diſcharge us from it, ſo they intimate plainly, that ſometime our labour may be loſt, and our purpoſe defeated; and that by the default of others it may be impoſſible we ſhould arrive to a peaceable condition of life with all men. However, by this Rule we are directed not only our ſelves not to infringe the terms of peace towards others, but to endeavour earneſtly by all honeſt and prudent means to obtain the good-will, favour and reſpect of others, by which they may be diſpoſed to all friendly correſpondence with us, and not to diſturb the quiet and tranquility of our lives.

Having thus by way of Explication ſuperficially glanced upon the words, we will proceed to a more large and punctual review of them; and ſhall conſider more diſtinctly the Particulars groſly mentioned; and

I. What thoſe eſpecial Duties are, included in this more comprehenſive one of living peaceably with all men; both thoſe which are directly required of us, as the neceſſary cauſes or immediate reſults of a peaceable diſpoſition in us toward others; and alſo thoſe which are to be performed by us, as juſt and reaſonable means conducible to beget or preſerve in others a peaceable inclination toward us: theſe I ſhall conſider promiſcuouſly: and

1. We are by this Precept directly obliged heartily to love, that is, to bear good-will to, to wiſh well to, to rejoice in the welfare, and commiſerate the adverſities of all men: at leaſt not to hate, or bear ill-will to, to deſire, or deſign the harm, to repine at the happy ſucceſs, or delight in the misfortunes of any: for as it is very hard to maintain peace and amicable correſpondence with thoſe we do not truly love; ſo it is abſolutely impoſſible to do it long with thoſe we hate; this Satanick paſſion (or diſpoſition of ſoul) always prompting the mind poſſeſſed therewith to the contrivance and execution of miſchief; whence, he that 1 Joh. 3. 15. hates his brother, is ſaid to be a murtherer, as having in him that bitter root, from whence, if power and occaſion conſpire, will probably ſpring that moſt extreme of outrages, and capital breach of peace. Love is the only ſure cement, that knits and combines men in friendly ſociety; and hatred the certain fountain of that violence which rends and diſſolves it. We cannot eaſily hurt, or ſtrive with thoſe we love and wiſh well to: we cannot poſſibly long agree with thoſe we hate and malign. Peace without love can be eſteemed little more than politick diſſimulation; and peace with hatred is really nothing leſs than an artificial diſguiſe, or an inſidious covert of enmity.

2. We are hence obliged to perform all kind offices of humanity, which the condition of any man can require, and may by us be performed without conſiderable inconvenience or detriment to our ſelves or others. When, for the preſervation, or comfortable accommodation of life, they need our help or our advice, we are readily to afford them; when they are in want or diſtreſs, we are to miniſter to them what comfort and relief we can. We are (upon this very ſcore) to obey Gal. 6. 10. that Injunction of Saint Paul to the Galatians; As we have opportunity, let us do good to all men. For without this beneficence a man's carriage (though otherwiſe harmleſs and inoffenſive) appears rather a ſuſpicious ſtrangeneſs, than a peaceable demeanour, and naturally produces an enmity in thoſe that are concerned in it. For he to whom, being preſſed with neceſſity, requiſite aſſiſtncae is denied, will infallibly be apt to think himſelf not only neglected and diſeſteemed, but affronted alſo and injured; (Need in the general conceit of men, and eſpecially of thoſe that fell it, begetteth a kind of title to ſome competent relief) and conſequently will heinouſly reſent, and complain bitterly of ſuch ſuppoſed wrong, and if ever he become able, repay it with advantage. And much more are we upon the ſame account not to perform ill offices toward any man; not to diſturb him in the enjoyment of his innocent pleaſure, nor to hinder him in the advancing his lawful profit, nor to interrupt him in the proſecution of his reaſonable deſigns; nor any wiſe to vex and grieve him needleſly; and (above all) not to detain him in, nor to aggravate his affliction. For theſe are actual violations of peace, and impediments of good correſpondence among men. Farther,

3. In this Duty of living peaceably is included an obligation to all kind of juſt and honeſt dealing with all men; punctually to obſerve contracts, impartially to decide controverſies, equally to diſtribute rewards; to injure no man either in his eſtate, by violent or fraudulent encroachments upon his juſt poſſeſſions; or in his reputation, by raiſing or diſperſing ſlanderous reports concerning him: For theſe courſes of all others are moſt deſtructive to peace, and upon the pretence of them moſt quarrels that ever were, have been commenced.

Juſtice in its own nature is, and by the common agreement of men hath been deſigned the Guardian of peace and ſovereign remedy of contention: but not to inſiſt long upon ſuch obvious ſubjects.

4. It much conduceth to the preſervation of peace, and upholding amiable correſpondence in our dealings and tranſactions with men, liable to doubt and debate, not to inſiſt upon nice and rigorous points of right, not to take all advantage offered us, not to deal hard meaſure, not to uſe extremities, to the damage or hindrance of others, eſpecially when no comparable benefit will thence accrue to our ſelves. For ſuch proceedings, as they diſcover in us little kindneſs to, or tenderneſs of our neighbours good, ſo they exceedingly exaſperate them, and perſwade them we are their enemies, and render them ours, and ſo utterly deſtroy peace between us. When as abating ſomething from the height and ſtrictneſs of our pretences, and a favourable receſſion in ſuch caſes will greatly engage men to have an honourable opinion, and a peaceable affection towards us.

Vid. Tit. 3. 2. ἀμάχους εἶναι, ἐπιεικεῖς.

5. If we would attain to this peaceable eſtate of life, we muſt uſe toward all men ſuch demonſtrations of reſpect and courteſie, which according to their degree and ſtation cuſtom doth entitle them to, or which upon the common ſcore of humanity they may be reaſonably deemed to expect from us: reſpective geſtures, civil ſalutations, free acceſs, affable demeanour, cheerful looks and courteous diſcourſe. Theſe as they betoken good-will in them that uſe them, ſo they beget, cheriſh and encreaſe it in thoſe, whom they refer to: and the neceſſary fruit of mutual good-will is peace. But the contrary carriages; contemptuous or diſregardful behaviour, difficulty of admiſſion to converſe, a tetrical or ſullen aſpect, rough and faſtidious language, as they diſcover a mind averſe from friendly commerce, ſo they beget a more potent diſdain in others: Men generally (eſpecially thoſe of generous and hearty temper) valuing their due reſpect beyond all other intereſts, and more contentedly brooking injury than neglect. Whence this skill and dexterity of deportment (though immediately, and in its own nature of no great worth, and regulating actions of ſmall importance, geſtures, looks and forms of ſpeech) yet becauſe it is a nurſe of peace, and greatly contributes to the delightfulneſs of ſociety, hath been always much commended, and hath obtained a conſpicuous place in the honourable rank of vertues, under the titles of courteſie, comity and affability; and the oppoſites thereto, rudeneſs and ruſticity, have been deſervedly counted and called vices in morality.

6. This Precept directly prohibits the uſe of all reproachful, ſcornfull and provoking language; theſe being the immediate reſults of enmity, and actual breaches of peace. Whence Saint Paul conjoins, Μηδένα βλασφημεῖν, and ἀμάχους εἶναι, Tit. 3. 2. To ſpeak evil of no man, to be no quarrellers, (or fighters) but gentle, ſhewing all meekneſs unto all men. For war is managed (and that with more deadly animoſity) with the tongue, as well as with the hand (There is that ſpeaketh like the piercings of a ſword, ſaith Solomon; and whoſe teeth are ſpears and arrows, and their tongue a ſharp ſword, ſaith David.) Words are with more anguiſh felt than blows; their wounds are more incurable, and they leave a deeper ſcar. Men uſually dread more the loſs of their honour than their lives, and take more grievouſly the raviſhing of their credit than the depredation of their eſtate. Living peaceably therefore implies as much abſtaining from opprobrious words as injurious actions; yea more: for reviling is not only a violation of peace, but a diſhonourable waging of war; like ſhooting arrows dipt in poiſon, and diſcharging ſluggs againſt our neighbours reputation; practices condemned by all as baſe and inhumane, and contrary to the laws of a noble warfare; being arguments, we affect rather our adverſaries utter ruine, than a gallant victory over him. There be fair ways of diſputing our cauſe, without contumelious reflexions upon perſons; and the errours of men may be ſufficiently refuted without Satyrical virulency. One good reaſon modeſtly propounded hath in it naturally more power and efficacy to convince him that is in a miſtake, or to confound him with ſhame that is guilty of a fault, than ten thouſand ſcoffs and ignominous taunts. When we are to expreſs thoſe deeds of nature (the performance of which is concealed, as containing in it ſomething of ſuppoſed turpitude) we are wont to veil them in ſuch modeſt circumlocutions, that by the hearers without offence to their baſhfulneſs may ſufficiently be underſtood. So when it is needful or expedient to confute the opinions, or reprove the actions of men, if we either charitably deſign their amendment, or deſire to maintain peaceable correſpondence with them, it behoves that we do not by uſing the moſt broad and diſtaſtful language immoderately treſpaſs upon their modeſty and patience; that (to uſe Seneca's phraſe) we do Agere curam non tantùm ſalutis, ſed & honeſtæ cicatricis, De Clem. lib. 1. c. 17. Have a care not only to cure the wound, but to leave a comely ſcar, and not to deform him, whom we endeavour to reform; for no ſore is the eaſilier cured for being roughly handled, and leaſt of all thoſe in manners and opinion. A ſoft hand, and a tender heart, and a gentle tongue are moſt convenient qualities of a ſpiritual Chirurgeon. But farther to this purpoſe.

Tit. 3: 2.

Ποταπὸν δὲ χρῆμα λοιδορία; ὡς θυμοδακὲς ἀληθῶς, καὶ ἀμύτλον ψυχὴν μᾶλλον, ἢ σίδηρος χρῶτα. Jul. 2. Orat.
Prov. 12. 18. Pſal. 57. 4. and 64. 3.
Prov. 18. 8.

Ζῆλος γὰρ συγγνώμης ἀπεστερημένος οὐ ζῆλος, ἀλλὰ θυμὸς μᾶλλόν ἐστιν, καὶ νουθεσία φιλανθρωπίαν οὐκ ἔχουσα, βασκανία τις εἶναι δοκεῖ. Chryſ. Tom. 5. p. 32.

Vid. Egregium Antonini locum, lib. 11. § 18. 9. ἀδήκτως.

Prov. 15. 1.

7. If we deſire to live peaceably with all men we are to be equal in cenſuring mens actions, candid in interpreting their meanings, mild in reprehending, and ſparing to relate their miſcarriages, to derive their actions from the beſt principles (from which in the judgment of charity they may be ſuppoſed to proceed, as from caſual miſtake rather than from wilful prejudice; from humane infirmity rather than from malicious deſign) to conſtrue ambiguous expreſſions to the moſt favourable ſenſe they may admit; not to condemn mens practices without diſtinct knowledge of the caſe, and examining the reaſons, which poſſibly may abſolve or excuſe them: to extenuate their acknowledged faults by ſuch circumſtances as aptly ſerve that purpoſe, and not to exaggerate them by ſtreined conſequences, or uncertain conjectures. To rebuke them (if need be) ſo as they may perceive we ſincerely pity their errours, and tender their good; and wiſh nothing more than their recovery, and do not deſign to upbraid, deride, or inſult over them being fallen; and finally not to recount their miſ-deeds over-frequently, unſeaſonably, and with complacence. He that thus demeaneth himſelf, manifeſtly ſheweth himſelf to prize his neighbours good-will, and to be deſirous to continue in amity with him; and aſſuredly obliges him to be in the ſame manner affected toward him. But he that is rigidly ſevere and cenſorious in his judgments, blaming in them things indifferent, condemning actions allowable, detracting from qualities commendable, deducing mens doings from the worſt cauſes, and imputing them to the worſt ends, and repreſenting them under the moſt odious appellations; that calls all Impoſitions of ſuperiours, which he diſlikes, Tyranny, and all manners of divine worſhip, that ſute not to his fancy, ſuperſtition, and all pretences to conſcience in thoſe that diſſent from him, hypocriſie, and all opinions different from his, hereſie; that is ſuſpicious of ill intention without ſufficient ground, and prejudicates mens meanings before he well apprehends them, and captiouſly perverts ſayings capable of good conſtruction; That is curiouſly inquiſitive into his neighbours life, and gladly obſerves failings therein, and upon all occaſions recites ſtories to his diſgrace and diſadvantage: that is immoderately bitter, fierce and vehement in accuſing and inveighing againſt others, painting ſuch, as he aſſumes to impugn, with the blackeſt colours, in the moſt horrid ſhape and ugly dreſs, converting all matter of diſcourſe (though never ſo unſeaſonably and impertinently) into declamation, and therein copiouſly expatiating; in fine, employing his utmoſt might of wit and eloquence and confidence in rendring that to others as hateful, as he ſignifies they are to himſelf; ſuch men, what do they elſe but loudly proclaim that they deſpiſe their neighbours good-will, purpoſely provoke his anger, and defie his utmoſt enmity? for 'tis impoſſible ſuch dealing ſhould not by them, who are therein concerned, be accounted extremely unjuſt, and to proceed from deſperate hatred.

Prov. 17. 9.

That flies like a Vulture to Carrion only. Plut. de util. cap. ex inim. Prov. 17. 9. Prov. 24. 17.

8. He that would effectually obſerve this Apoſtolick rule, muſt be diſpoſed to overlook ſuch leſſer faults committed againſt him, as make no great breach upon his intereſt or credit, yea, to forget or forgive the greateſt and moſt grievous injuries: To excuſe the miſtakes, and connive at the neglects, and bear patiently the haſty paſſions of his neighbour, and to embrace readily any ſeaſonable overture, and accept any tolerable conditions of reconcilement. For even in common life that obſervation of our Saviour moſt exactly holds, It is impoſſible that offences ſhould not come, The air may ſooner become wholly fixed, and the ſea continue in a perfect reſt without waves or undulations, than humane converſation be altogether free from occaſions of diſtaſte, which he that cannot either prudently diſſemble, or patiently digeſt, muſt renounce all hopes of living peaceably here. He that like tinder is inflammable by the leaſt ſpark, and is inraged by every angry word, and reſents deeply every petty affront, and cannot endure the memory of a paſt unkindneſs ſhould upon any terms be defaced, reſolves ſurely to live in eternal tumult and combuſtion; to multiply daily upon himſelf freſh quarrels, and to perpetuate all enmity

Sen. Ben. 7. 31. Vincit malos pertinax bonitas. Νίκα ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ τὸ κακόν. Rom. 12. 21.

Iraſcitur aliquis? tu contrà beneficiis provoca: cadit ſtatim ſimultas ab altera parte deſerta; niſi par non pugnat: ſi utrinque certabitur, ille eſt melior, qui prior pedem retulit; victus eſt qui vicit. Sen. de Ira, 2. 34.

ty already begun. Whenas by total paſſing by thoſe little cauſes of diſguſt, the preſent contention is altogether avoided, or inſtantly appeaſed, our neighbours paſſion ſuddenly evaporates and conſumes it ſelf; no remarkable footſteps of diſſention remain; our neighbour reflecting upon what is paſt ſees himſelf obliged by our diſcreet forbearance, however all poſſible means are uſed to prevent trouble and preſerve peace. To Prov. 19. 11. this purpoſe (The diſcretion of a man deferreth his anger, and it is his glo- Prov. 17. 9. ry to paſs over a tranſgreſſion) ſaith Solomon: and, He that covereth a tranſgreſſion ſeeketh love, ſaith the ſame wiſe Prince. But farther,

9. If we would live peaceably with all men, we muſt not over highly value our ſelves, nor over eagerly purſue our own things. We muſt not admire our own endowments, nor inſiſt upon our deſerts, for this will make us apt to depretiate others, and them to loath us. We muſt not be over tender of our credit, and covetous of reſpect; for this will render us apt to take exceptions, and engage us in troubleſome competitions for ſuperiority of place, and preeminence in the vain opinions of Prov. 28. 25. men. (He that is of a proud heart ſtirreth up ſtrife: and, Onely (i. e.
Prov. 13. 10. chiefly) from pride cometh contention, ſaith Solomon.) We muſt not be much addicted to our own intereſts, for this will diſpoſe us to encroach upon the concernments of others, and them to reſiſt our attempts, whence conflict and enmity will neceſſarily ariſe. We muſt not prefer our own judgments, and imperiouſly obtrude them upon others; nor be pertinacious in perſuading them to embrace our private opinions, nor violently urgent to a compliance with our humour. For theſe things are intolerably faſtidious in converſation, and obnoxious to be charged with uſurpation and iniquity; all men naturally challenging to themſelves an equal, or at leaſt a proportionable ſhare of reaſon, together with the free conduct of their lives uncontrollable by private dictates. If therefore we deſire to live quietly, and not needleſly to diſoblige or diſpleaſe others, we ſhould be modeſt in eſteeming our own abilities, and moderate in purſuing our own advantages, and in our converſe not leſs complacent to others than we deſire they ſhould be to us; and as liberal in allowing leave to diſſent from us, as we are bold in taking freedom to abound in our own ſenſe. And if in debate a modeſt declaration of our opinion, and the reaſons inducing us thereto, will not prevail, it behoves us to give over ſuch a ſucceſleſs combat, and to retire into the ſilent enjoiment of our own thoughts. From not obſerving which rule diſcourſe grows into contention, and contention improves into feud and enmity.

10. If we would live peaceably, it concerns us to abſtain from needleſs conteſts about matters of opinion, and queſtions either merely vain and frivolous, of little uſe or concernment, or over nice and ſubtile, and thence indeterminable by reaſon; or that are agitated with extraordinary eagerneſs and heat of paſſion; or ſuch as are already defined by general conſent, or ſuch upon the deciſion of which the publick peace and ſafety do depend. There are ſome controverſies prickly like brambles, and apt to ſcratch thoſe that handle them, but yielding no ſavoury or wholeſome fruit: ſuch as concern the conſequences of imaginary ſuppoſitions, the ſtate and circumſtances of Beings to us unknown, the right application of artificial terms, and the like impertinent matters; which ſerve to no other purpoſe but the exerciſe of curious wits, and exciting emulation among them. Others there be concerning matters of more weighty moment, yet having the reſolution depending upon ſecrets unſearchable, or the interpretation of ambiguous words and obſcure phraſes, or upon ſome other uncertain conjectures; and are yet rendred more difficult by being intangled with inextricable folds of ſubtilty, nice diſtinctions, and crafty evaſions, deviſed by the parties engaged in them for the maintenance of their cauſes reſpectively, whence it hath happened, though with immenſe care and diligence of both parts they have been long canvaſed; that yet they do, and in all probability will for ever remain undecided. So that now to engage in conteſt about them, may be reaſonably deemed nothing more than a wilfull miſpenſe of our time, labour and good humour; by vainly reciprocating the ſaw of endleſs contention. Other queſtions there be in themſelves of more eaſie reſolution, and of conſiderable importance, which yet by extreme oppoſition of parties are ſo clouded and overgrown with inſuperable prejudices, that the diſputing them is ſeldom attended with other ſucceſs, than an inflaming our ſelves and others with paſſion. Others are by ſmall and obſcure parties managed againſt the common conſent, and againſt the poſitive decrees of the moſt venerable authorities among men, by ventilating which as truth is like to gain little, ſo peace is ſure to ſuffer much. For as it is no-wiſe a ſafe or adviſed courſe (except in caſe of neceſſary defence) to ſubject received opinions to the hazardous trial of a tumultuary conflict, their credit being better upheld by a ſtately reſervedneſs, than by a popular forwardneſs of diſcourſe; as buildings ſtand faſteſt that are never ſhaken, and thoſe poſſeſſions remain moſt ſecure that are never called in queſtion; ſo on the other hand to countenance new and uncouth paradoxes, as it argues too much arrogance and preſumption in confronting our ſingle apprehenſions againſt the deliberate ſenſe and ſuffrage of ſo many men, yea ſo many ages of men; and is likely to prove a ſucceſleſs attempt, like ſwimming againſt the current, accompanied with much toil and little progreſs, ſo it ſerves no good end, but only foments diviſions, and diſturbs both our private and the publick peace. But moſt of all we are to be cautelous of medling with controverſies of dangerous conſequence, wherein the publick weal and quiet are concerned, which bare the roots of ſacred authority, and proſtitute the myſteries of government to vulgar inſpection. Such points ought to be ſubjects of law, not of ſyllogiſm, and the errors in them to be corrected by puniſhment, rather than confuted by argument: neither can it be thought reaſonable that the intereſt of publick Peace ſhould depend upon the event of private diſputation. It concerns us therefore, if we would live peaceably in ſuch diſputable matters, reſerving all due reverence to the judgments of the moſt, the beſt and wiſeſt perſons, to be content in a modeſt privacy, to enjoy the reſults of a ſerious and impartial diſquiſition, patiently enduring others to diſſent from us, and not attempting by needleſs, fruitleſs and endleſs contentions to gain others to our perſuaſions; eſpecially ſince the truth contended for may not be worth the paſſion employed upon it, and the benefits of the victory not countervail the prejudices ſuſtained in the combat. For goodneſs and vertue may often conſiſt with ignorance and errour, ſeldom with ſtrife and diſcord. And this conſideration I ſhall conclude with thoſe exhortations of Saint Paul, Tit. 3. 9. But fooliſh queſtions, and genealogies, and contentions, and law-conteſts decline, for they are unprofitable and vain. And in 2 Ep. to Tim. cap. 2. v. 23. But fooliſh and unlearned queſtions avoid, knowing that they gender ſtrifes; And the ſervant of the Lord (that is, a miniſter of Religion) muſt not ſtrive, but be gentle to all men, apt to teach, patient. In meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that are

Non amplius inveniri licet quàm quod à Deo diſcitur. Tertull. de Anim. cap. 2.

Οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἀποροῦντες πότερον δεῖ τοὺς θεοὺς τιμᾷν, καὶ τοὺς γονεῖς ἀγαπᾷν, ἢ οὒ, κολάσεως δέονται· οἱ δὲ πότερον ἡ χιὼν λευκὴ, αἰσθήσεως. Ariſt. Top. 1. 8.

* Τοὺς ἀντιδιατιθεμένους.

are * contrarily diſpoſed. And in the ſame Chapter, v. 14. Of theſe things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord, that they ſtrive not about words to no profit, to the ſubverting of the hearers: Of ſo pernicious conſequence did Saint Paul eſteem unneceſſary wrangling and diſputing to be. But farther,

According to S. Paul's advice (1 Theſſ. 4. 11.) Strive (or be ambitious) to be quiet, and to mind your own buſineſs. (Φιλοτιμεῖσθαι ἡσυχάζειν, καὶ πράσσειν τὰ ἴδια.)

11. If we deſire to live peacably, we muſt reſtrain our pragmatical curioſity within the bounds of our proper buſineſs and concernment, not [being curioſi in aliena Republ.] invading other mens provinces, and without leave or commiſſion intermedling with their affairs; not ruſhing into their Cloſets, prying into their concealed deſigns, or dictating counſel to them without due invitation thereto; not controlling their actions, nor ſubjecting their proceedings to our cenſure without competent Authority. For theſe courſes men uſually look upon as raſh intruſions, both injurious and reproachful to them, uſurping upon that freedom of choice (which all men paſſionately affect to preſerve entire to themſelves) and arguing them of weakneſs and incapacity to manage their own buſineſs: neither do men more naturally drive away flies that buzze about their ears and moleſt them in their employments, than they with diſdain repel ſuch immodeſt and unſeaſonable medlers in their affairs. Let no man ſuffer (ſaith S. Peter)
1 Pet. 4. 15. as a buſie body in other mens matters: intimating that thoſe who are impertinently inquiſitive into other mens matters, make themſelves liable to ſuffer (and that deſervedly) for their fond curioſity and bold pre-Prov. 26. 17. ſumption. And He that paſſeth by, and medleth with ſtrife belonging not to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears (ſaith Solomon;) that is, he catcheth at that which he cannot hold, and vainly aims at that which he cannot effect, and raſhly irritates thoſe which will turn upon him and bite him. If therefore we would neither moleſt others, nor be diſquieted our ſelves, we muſt be like natural agents, never working ought beyond our proper ſphere of activity. But eſpecially, if we deſire to live peaceably, we muſt beware of aſſuming to our ſelves a liberty to cenſure the deſigns, decrees, or tranſactions of publick authority, and of ſaying to our Superiours, what doeſt thou? and much more, by querulous murmurings, or clamorous declamations, of bringing envy and odium upon them. Few private men are capable of judging aright concerning thoſe things, as being placed beneath in a valley, and wanting a due proſpect upon the ground and cauſes of their proceedings, who by reaſon of their eminent ſtation can ſee more and farther than they; and therefore are incompetent Judges, and unjuſtly preſume to interpoſe their ſentence in ſuch caſes. But ſuppoſe the actions of Superiours notoriouſly blameable and ſcandalous, and that by infallible arguments we are perſuaded thereof; yet ſeeing neither the taxing of, nor complaint againſt them doth in any wiſe regularly belong to us, nor the diſcovery of our mind therein can probably be an efficacious means of procuring redreſs, and immediately tends to diminiſh the reputation and weaken the affection due to government, and conſequently to impair the peaceable eſtate of things, which by them is ſuſtained, we are wholly to abſtain from ſuch unwarrantable, unprofitable and turbulent practices; and with a ſubmiſs and diſcreet ſilence, paſſing over the miſcarriages of our Superiours, to wait patiently upon the providence, and implore the aſſiſtance of Him, who is the onely competent Judge of ſuch, and ſove-
Prov. 21. 1. reign diſpoſer of all things, who hath their hearts in his hands, and fa-Prov. 33. 15. ſhioneth them as he thinks good. Farther,

12. If we would live peaceably with all men, it behoves us not to engage our ſelves ſo deeply in any ſingular friendſhip, or in devotion to any one party of men, as to be entirely partial to their intereſts, and prejudiced in their behalf, without diſtinct conſideration of the truth and equity of their pretences in the particular matters of difference; not to approve, favour or applaud that which is bad in ſome; to diſlike, diſcountenance or diſparage that which is good in others: not out of exceſſive kindneſs to ſome, to give juſt cauſe of diſtaſte to others: not for the ſake of a fortuitous agreement in diſpoſition, opinion, intereſt or relation to violate the duties of juſtice or humanity. For he that upon ſuch terms is a friend to any one man, or party of men, as to be reſolved (with an implicit faith, or blind obedience) to maintain what-ever he or they ſhall affirm to be true, and what-ever they ſhall do to be good, doth in a manner undertake enmity againſt all men beſide, and as it may happen doth oblige himſelf to contradict plain truth, to deviate from the rules of vertue, and to offend Almighty God himſelf. This unlimited partiality we owe only to truth and goodneſs, and to God (the fountain of them) in no caſe to ſwerve from their dictates and preſcriptions. He that followed Tiberius Gracchus in his ſeditious practices, upon the bare account of friendſhip, and alledg'd in his excuſe, that if his friend had required it of him, he ſhould as readily have put fire to the Capitol, was much more abominable for his diſloyalty to his Country, and horrible impiety againſt God, than commendable for his conſtant fidelity to his friend. And that Souldier, which is ſaid to have told Cæſar (in his firſt expedition againſt Rome) that in obedience to his commands he would not refuſe to ſheath his ſword in the breaſt of his Brother, or in the throat of his aged Father, or in the bowels of his pregnant Mother, was for his unnatural barbarity rather to be abhorred, than to be eſteemed for his loyal affection to his General. And in like manner he that to pleaſe or gratifie the humour of his friend, can be either injurious, or treacherous, or notably diſcourteous to any man elſe, is very blameable, and renders himſelf deſervedly odious to all others. Lælius, who incomparably well both underſtood and practiſed the rules of friendſhip, is by Cicero reported to have made this the firſt and chief Law thereof. Ut neque rogemus res turpes, nec faciamus rogati, That we neither require of our friends the performance of baſe and naughty things; nor, being requeſted of them, perform ſuch our ſelves. And in the heraldry, or compariſon of duties, as all others muſt give place to thoſe of piety, verity and vertue, ſo after them the duties of humanity juſtly challenge the next place of reſpect, even above thoſe which belong to the higheſt degree of friendſhip (due to our neareſt relations, yea to our Country it ſelf) preciſely taken, abſtracted and diſtinguiſhed from thoſe of humanity. For the World is in nature the firſt, the moſt comprehenſive and deareſt Country of us all; and our general obligations to mankind are more ancient, more fundamental, and more indiſpenſible, than thoſe particular ones ſuperadded to or ſuperſtructed on them. The peace therefore of the World, and the general welfare of men its Citizens, ought to be more dear to us, and the means conducing thereto more carefully regarded by us in our actions, than either the love, favour or ſatisfaction of any particular perſons is to be valued or purſued. And the not obſerving this rule may reaſonably be eſteemed to have a great influence upon the continuance of thoſe implacable feuds and diſſentions wherewith the world is ſo miſerably torn and ſhattered.

Cic. in Lælio.

Luc. lib. 1.

Prov. 24.24. He that ſaith to the wicked, thou art righteous, him ſhall the people curſe, nations ſhall abhor him.

Cic. in Lælio.

Mens being peremptorily reſolved to extol, countenance, or excuſe promiſcuouſly all the principles and proceedings of the party to which they have addicted themſelves, and to ſee no errour, fault or abuſe in them; but by all means to depreſs, vilifie and condemn (if not to reproach, calumniate and perſecute) the opinions and practices of others, and not to acknowledge in them any thing conſiderably good or commendable; whence commonly all apprehend their adverſaries extremely unjuſt and diſingenuous towards them, and are alienated from all thoughts, (or however diſcouraged from all hopes) of friendly accommodation and reconcilement. But he that would live peaceably with all men, muſt be free in his judgment, impartial in his dealing, and Jud. 16. ingenuous in his carriage toward all: not θαυμάζων πρόσωπα, admiring or Jam. 2. 1. wondring at ſome men (as if they were impeccable, or infallible) nor having the truth in reſpect of perſons, abetting in his friends only what is juſt and true, and allowing the ſame in others, but in neither by ſignal approbation countenancing any thing falſe or evil; for ſo demeaning himſelf, he giveth no man juſt occaſion of diſpleaſure or enmity againſt him.

13. If we would live peaceably our ſelves, we ſhould endeavour to preſerve peace, and prevent differences, and reconcile diſſentions among others, by doing good offices, and making fair repreſentations of intercurrent paſſages between them; by concealing cauſes of future diſguſt, and removing preſent miſunderſtandings, and excuſing paſt miſtakes; by allaying their paſſions, and rightly informing their minds, by friendly interceſſions, and pacifick adviſes. For the fire that devoureth our neighbours houſe threatneth and endangereth ours, and it is hard to approach contention without being engaged therein. 'Tis not eaſie to keep our ſelves indifferent or neutral, and doing ſo we ſhall in likelihood be maligned and perſecuted by both the contending parties. Bleſſed are the Matt. 5. 9. peace-makers, ſaith our Saviour, for they ſhall be called the ſons of God; that is, they ſhall be highly eſteemed and reverenced for this divine quality, wherein they ſo nearly reſemble the God of peace, and his bleſſed Son the great Mediatour: but farther, without reſpect to other recompence, and from the nature of their employment, ſuch are immediately happy, and in this their vertuous practice rewards it ſelf, that by appeaſing others quarrels, they ſave themſelves from trouble, and enjoy themſelves that tranquility which they procure to others *. But thoſe informing Sycophants, thoſe internuncio's of peſtilent tales, and incendiaries of diſcord, that (from bad nature, or upon baſe deſign) by the ſtill breath of clandeſtine whiſpers, or by the more violent blaſts of impudent calumnies kindle the flames of diſſention, or foment them among others; that, by diſſeminating infamous rumours, and by malicious ſuggeſtions, inſtil jealouſies into, and nouriſh malevolent ſurmiſes in the Prov. 16. 28. minds of men, ſeparating (as it is in the Proverbs) between chief friends, and widening the diſtance between others; Theſe (I ſay) from the ſeeds of variance they ſcatter among others, reap in the end miſchief and diſturbance to themſelves; nor can expect to enjoy the benefit of that Prov. 17. 14. quiet, which they labour to deprive others of. The beginning of ſtrife (ſaith Solomon) is as when one letteth out water; and he that to the intent his neighbours Lands ſhould be overflown with a torrent of diſſenſion, doth unlooſe the damms, and cut the banks of former friendſhip, Prov. 25. 8. may (if he be wiſe) expect the mercileſs floud ſhould at length reach himſelf, and that his own habitation ſhould be at laſt ſurrounded therewith. For when men at length begin to be weary, and to repent of their needleſs needleſs quarrels, and the miſchievous conſequences attending them, and to be inquiſitive into the cauſes and inſtruments of their vexation, they will certainly find out, deteſt and invert the edge of their diſpleaſure upon theſe wretched makebates; and ſo the poiſon they mingled for others they themſelves drink up; the Cataſtrophe of the Tragedy (begun by them) is acted upon themſelves; they ſink down into the pit they made for others, and in the net which they hid is their own foot taken: Et delator habet quod dedit exitium.

* To the Counſellours of peace is joy. Prov. 12. 20.

Vid. Prov. 11. 27. He hat diligently ſeeketh good procureth favour; but he that ſeeketh miſchief it ſhall come upon him.

Laſtly, If we would effectually obſerve this Precept, we muſt readily comply with the innocent cuſtoms, and obey the eſtabliſhed laws of the places where we live. I ſay firſt comply with the cuſtoms; which alſo are in effect inferiour laws enacted by the tacit agreement of the generality of men; the non-obſervation of which is upon many accounts very prejudicial to peaceable life. For to thoſe concern'd in it, it will always ſeem to intimate a ſqueamiſh niceneſs, a froward perverſeneſs, an arrogant ſelf-conceitedneſs, a manifeſt deſpiſing other mens judgments, and a virtual condemning their practices of fault or folly, and conſequently a monopolizing all goodneſs, and appropriating all wiſdom to himſelf; qualities intolerably odious to men and productive of enmity. It incenſes the people (hugely ſuſceptive of provocation) with a ſenſe of notable injury done, and contempt caſt upon it. For the onely authority, which the commonalty can lay claim to, conſiſts in preſcribing Rules of decency in language, habit, geſture, ceremony, and other circumſtances of action, declared and ratified by ordinary practice; non-conformity to which is by them adjudged a marvellous irregularity, contumacy and rebellion againſt the Majeſty of the people, and is infallibly revenged and puniſhed by them.

There's no preſerving peace, nor preventing broils and ſtirs, but by punctually obſerving that ordinary Rule of equity, That in caſes of doubtful debate, and points of controverted practice, the feweſt ſhould yield to the moſt, the weakeſt bend to the ſtrongeſt, and that to the greateſt number ſhould be allowed at leaſt the greateſt appearance of reaſon. To which purpoſe we may obſerve, that the beſt and wiſeſt men, (not to diſpleaſe thoſe with whom they converſed, as far as their Duty to God, and their conſcience would permit) have commonly in their manners of life followed not what in their retired judgment they moſt approved, but what ſuted to the cuſtoms of their times and places, avoiding a moroſe ſingularity as offenſive to others, and productive of diſquiet to themſelves. You know how Cicero cenſured Cato for endeavouring, againſt the grain and predominant genius of thoſe times, to reduce things to a ſtrict agreement with his private notions: Ille optimo animo utens, & ſummâ fide nocet interdum Reipublicæ. Dicit enim tanquam in Platonis πολιτείᾳ, non tanquam in Romuli fæce ſententiam. But a more clear and partinent inſtance we have in Saint Paul, who thus repreſents his own practice: I have made my ſelf a ſervant to all: Unto the Jews I became as a Jew; to them that are without law as without law: To the weak became I as weak: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means ſave ſome. Saint Paul wiſely knew, that by a prudent compliance with mens cuſtoms, and condeſcenſion to their capacities, he engaged to him, or at leaſt did not alienate from him, their affections; and thereby became more capable of enfuſing good Doctrine into their minds, Id agamus, ut meliorem vitam ſequamur quàm vulgus non ut contrariam, alioqui quos emendari volumus fugamus & à nobis avertimus.

Temperetur vita inter bonos mores & publicos, &c. Sen. Epiſt. 5.

Epiſt. ad Att. Lib. 2. Ep. 1.

1 Cor. 9. 22.
10. 33.

Vid. Act. 21.

and promoting their ſpiritual good. And the ſame courſe was generally taken by the primitive Chriſtians, who in all things (not inconſiſtent with the rules and principles of their Religion) did induſtriouſly conform their converſation to the uſual practices of men; thereby ſhunning thoſe ſcandalous imputations of pride and perverſeneſs, which then rendred the Jews ſo odious to the world, as appears by divers paſſages in the ancient Apologiſts for Chriſtian Religion: particularly Juſtin Martyn (in his Epiſtle to Diognetus) hath theſe words: Χριστιανοὶ γὰρ οὔτε γῇ, οὔτε φωνῇ, οὔτε ἔθ[illegible] διακεκριμένοι τῶν λοιπῶν εἰσὶν ἀνθρώπων· οὔτε γὰρ που πόλεις ἰδίας κατοικοῦσιν, οὔτε διαλέκτῳ τινι παρηλλαγμένῃ χρῶνται, οὔτε βίον παράσημον ἀσκοῦσιν… κατοικοῦντες δὲ πόλεις Ἑλληνικάς τε καὶ βαρβάρους, ὡς ἕκαστος ἐκληρώθη, ἐν τοῖς ἐγχωρίοις ἔθεσιν ἀκολουθοῦντες, &c. The Chriſtians neither in dwelling, language or cuſtoms differ from the reſt of men; they neither inhabit towns proper to themſelves, nor uſe any peculiar dialect, nor exerciſe an uncouth manner of living, but, as by chance it is allotted to them, inhabiting cities belonging both to Greeks and Barbarians, comply with the cuſtoms of the country. And much more hath he there; and much Tertullian likewiſe in his Apologetick, to the ſame purpoſe. Neither do we find in the life of our Saviour, that exact pattern of wiſedom and goodneſs, that in any thing he did affect to differ from the received cuſtoms of his time and country, except ſuch as were grounded upon vain conceits, extremely prejudicial to piety, or directly repugnant thereto.

And I cannot except from this Rule the compliance with religious cuſtoms uſed in the Worſhip and Service of God: ſince a wilful diſcrepancy from them doth much more deſtroy peace, and kindle the flame of contention, in as much as men are apt to apprehend themſelves much more ſlighted and more condemned by a diſagreement in thoſe, than in matters of leſſer concernment. And it cannot reaſonably be imagined, that the God of love and peace, who queſtionleſs delights to ſee men converſe in peace and amity, and who therefore in Rom. 14. 19. general terms enjoyns us, to purſue the things that make for peace (whereof certainly in reaſon and to experience, following indifferent and harmleſs cuſtoms, not expreſly repugnant to his law, nor to the dictates of natural reaſon, is one thing, and not the leaſt) in our addreſſes to himſelf (partly deſigned and mainly ſerving more ſtrictly to unite, not to diſſociate men in affection) ſhould diſlike or diſapprove the uſe of this courſe ſo expedient and conducible to peace: eſpecially ſince he infinitely more regards the ſubſtance of the Duty, and the devotion of the heart therein, than the manner or any circumſtantial appendages thereof: 'Tis certain however, that Saint Paul intimates a wilful departure from ordinary practice in ſuch caſes, to proceed from a contentious diſpoſition: But if any man (ſaith he) have a mind to 1 Cor. 11. 16. be contentious (ſo δοκεῖ φιλόνεικος εἶναι imports) we have no ſuch cuſtom, nor the Churches of God.

But yet much more is peaceable converſation impeached by diſobedience to eſtabliſhed Laws, thoſe great bulwarks of Society, fences of Order, and ſupports of Peace; which he that refuſes to obey, is ſo far from living peacably with all men, that he may reaſonably be preſumed unwilling to have peace with any man; ſince in a manner he defies all mankind, vilifies its moſt ſolemn Judgments, endeavours to diſſolve thoſe ſacred bands by which its union is contained, and to ſubvert the only foundations of publick tranquility. He declares himſelf either to affect an univerſal tyranny over, or an abhorrency from ſociety with other men, to be unwilling to live with them upon equal terms, or to ſubmit to any fair arbitration, to deſire that ſtrifes ſhould be endleſs and controverſies never decided, who declines the verdict of Law, the moſt ſolemn iſſue of deliberate advice, proceeding from the moſt honourable, moſt wiſe, moſt worthy and ſelect perſons, and involving in it the conſent of the whole Commonwealth. Saint Paul directing that prayers ſhould be made for Princes and thoſe in Authority, aſſigns the reaſon, that we may lead a quiet and a peaceable life in all godlineſs and honeſty: And certainly if we are to pray for, we are alſo obliged to obey them in order to the ſame end, which to do is abſolutely in our power, and more immediately requiſite to that purpoſe. For as no peace can be preſerved without the influence of authority; ſo no authority can ſubſiſt without obedience to its ſanctions. He that is deſirous to enjoy the privileges of this happy eſtate of peace, muſt in reaſon be content to perform the Duties injoined, and bear the common burthens impoſed by thoſe who are the protectours of it. 1 Tim. 2. 2.

Thus, as plainly as I could, have I deſcribed what it is to live peaceably, and what the means are that principally conduce thereto: I ſhould now proceed to conſider the Object of the Duty, and the Reaſons why it reſpects all men: As alſo whence it comes, that ſometimes we may fail in our endeavour of attaining this deſirable condition: And laſtly to propound ſome Inducements perſuaſive of its practice. But I muſt not farther encroach on your patience, and ſhall therefore reſerve theſe things to the next opportunity.

Now: The peace of God, which paſſeth all underſtanding, keep your hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God, and of his Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; and the bleſſing of God Almighty, the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, be among you, and remain with you always. Amen.

SER-

SERMON XXX.

Of a Peaceable Temper and Carriage.

ROMANS 12. 18.

If it be poſſible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.

I Have very lately conſidered what it is to live peaceably, and what are the Duties included therein; and what Means conduce thereto.

II. I proceed now to conſider the Object thereof, and why the Duty of living peaceably extends to all men, that is, why we are bound to bear good-will, and do good offices, and ſhew civil reſpects to all men: and to endeavour, that all men reciprocally be well affected toward us. For it might with ſome colour of reaſon be objected, and ſaid: Why ſhould I be obliged heartily to love thoſe, that deſperately hate me, to treat them kindly, that uſe me deſpitefully; to help them, that would hinder me; to relieve them, that would plunge me into utter diſtreſs; to comfort them, that delight in my affliction; to be reſpective to and tender of their reputation, who deſpiſe, defame and reproach me; to be indulgent and favourable to them, who are harſh and rigorous in their dealings with me; to ſpare and pardon them, who with implacable malice perſecute me? why ſhould I ſeek their friendſhip, who diſdainfully reject mine; why prize their favour, who ſcorn mine; why ſtrive to pleaſe them, who purpoſely offend me? or why ſhould I have any regard to men void of all faith, goodneſs or deſert? And moſt of all, why ſhould I be bound to maintain amicable correſpondence with thoſe, who are profeſſed enemies to piety and vertue, who oppugn truth, and diſturb peace, and countenance vice, errour and faction? How can any love, conſent of mind, or communion of good offices intercede between perſons ſo contrarily diſpoſed? I anſwer, they may and ought, and that becauſe the obligation to theſe ordinary performances is not grounded upon any peculiar reſpects, ſpecial qualifications, or ſingular actions of men, (which are contingent and variable) but upon the indefectible ſcore of common humanity. We owe them, (as the Philoſopher alledged, when he diſpenſed his alms to an unworthy perſon) οὐ τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ, ἀλλὰ τῷ ἀνθρωπίνῳ· not to the men, but to humane nature reſident in them. There be indeed divers other ſorts of love, in nature and object more reſtrained, built upon narrower foundations, and requiring more extraordinary acts of duty and reſpect (not competent to all men;) as a love of friendſhip, founded upon long acquaintance, ſutableneſs of diſpoſition, and frequent exchanges of mutual kindneſs; a love of gratitude due to the reception of valuable benefits; a love of eſteem belonging ing to perſons endued with worth and vertue; a love of relation reſulting from kindred, affinity, neighbourhood and other common engagements. But the love of benevolence (which is precedent to theſe, and more deeply rooted in nature, more ancient, more unconfined, and more immutable) and the duties mentioned conſequent on it, are grounded upon the natural conſtitution, neceſſary properties, and unalterable condition of humanity, and are upon ſeveral accounts due thereto.

1. Upon account of univerſal cognation, agreement and ſimilitude of nature. For οἰκεῖον ἅπας ἄνθρωπος ἀνθρώπῳ καὶ φίλον. All men naturally are of kin, and friends to each other, ſaid Ariſtotle. Et fratres etiam veſtri ſumus jure naturæ matris unius; We are alſo your brethren in the right of nature our common mother, ſaid Tertullian of old, in the name of the Chriſtians to the Heathens. We are but ſeveral ſtreams iſſuing from one primitive ſource; ſeveral branches ſprouting from the ſame ſtock; ſeveral ſtones hewed out of the ſame quarry. One ſubſtance, by miraculous efficacy of the divine benediction diffuſed and multiplied. One element affords us matter, and one fire actuates it, kindled at firſt by the breath of God. One blood flows in all our veins; one nouriſhment repairs our decayed bodies, and one common air refreſhes our languiſhing ſpirits. We are cohabitants of the ſame earth, and fellow-citizens of the ſame great Common-wealth; Unam Remp. omnium agnoſcimus mundum, ſaid the forementioned Apologiſt for Chriſtianity. We were all faſhioned according to the ſame original Idea (reſembling God our common Father) all endowed with the ſame faculties, inclinations and affections; all conſpire in the eſſential and more notable ingredients of our conſtitution; and are only diſtinguiſhed by ſome accidental inconſiderable circumſtances of age, place, colour, ſtature, fortune, and the like; in which we differ as much from our ſelves in ſucceſſions of time. So that what Ariſtotle ſaid of a friend, is applicable to every man: Every man is ἄλλος αὐτός, Another our-ſelf; And he that hates another, deteſts his own moſt lively picture; he that harms another, injures his own nature; he that denies relief to another, ſtarves a member of his own body, and withers a branch of his own tree. The merciful man doeth good to his own ſoul; but he that is cruel troubleth his own fleſh. Neither can any perſonal demerit of vicious habit, erroneous opinion, enormous practice, or ſignal diſcourteſie towards us, diſſolve theſe bands: for as no unkindneſs of a brother can wholly reſcind that relation, or diſoblige us from the duties annexed thereto: ſo neither upon the faults or injuries of any man can we ground a total diſpenſation from the offices of humanity, eſpecially if the injuries be not irreparable, nor the faults incurable.

8 Eth. cap. 1.

In Apolog.

Ἀνδράποδον οὐκ ἀνέξῃ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ τοῦ σαυτοῦ, ὃς ἔχει τὸν Δία πρόγονον· ὅσπερ υἱὸς ἐκ τῶν αὐτῶν σπερμάτων γέγονε, καὶ τῆς αὐτῆς ἄνωθεν καταβολῆς, &c. Epict. 1. 13.

Acts 17. 26.

Nemo eſt in genere humano, cui non dilectio, etſi non pro mutua charitate, pro ipſa tamen communis naturæ ſocietate debeatur. Aug. Ep. 121. ad Probam.

Cic. Nihil eſt enim unum uni tam ſimile, tam par, quam omnes inter noſmetipſos ſumus, &c. de Legib. pag. 161.

Prov. 11. 17.

See Deut. 25. 3. --- leſt thy brother ſeem vile unto thee.

2. We are indiſpenſably obliged to theſe duties, becauſe the beſt of our natural inclinations prompt us to the performance of them; eſpecially thoſe of pity and benignity, which are manifeſtly diſcernible in all, but moſt powerful and vigorous in the beſt natures; and which queſtionleſs by the moſt wiſe and good Author of our beings were implanted therein both as monitors to direct, and as ſpurrs to incite us to the performance of our duty. For the ſame bowels, that in our want of neceſſary ſuſtenance, do by a lively ſenſe of pain inform us thereof, and inſtigate us to provide againſt it; do in like manner grievouſly reſent the diſtreſſes of another, and thereby admoniſh us of our duty, and provoke us to relieve them. Even the ſtories of calamities, that in ages long ſince paſt have happened to perſons, no-wiſe related to us, yea the fabulous reports of tragical events, do (even againſt the bent of our wills, and all reſiſtance of reaſon) melt our hearts with compaſſion, and draw tears from our eyes: and thereby evidently ſignifie that general ſympathy which naturally intercedes between all men, ſince we can neither ſee, nor hear of, nor imagine anothers grief without being afflicted our ſelves. Antipathies may be natural to wild beaſts; but to rational creatures they are wholly unnatural. And on the other ſide, as nature to eating and drinking, and ſuch acts requiſite to the preſervation of our life, hath enjoyned a ſenſible pleaſure and ſatisfaction, enticing us to and encouraging us in the performance of them; ſo, and doubtleſs to the ſame end, hath ſhe made relieving the neceſſities of others, and doing good offices to them, to be accompanied with a very contentful and delicious reliſh to the mind of the doer. Epicurus, that great Maſter of pleaſure, did himſelf confeſs, that to beſtow benefits was not only more brave, but more pleaſant, than to receive them; (Ἐπίκουρος ſaith * Plutarch, τοῦ εὖ πάσχειν, τὸ εὖ ποιεῖν, οὐ μόνον κάλλιον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἥδιον εἶναι φησί). And certainly no kind of actions, a man can perform, are attended with a more pure, more perfect, more ſavoury delight, than thoſe of beneficence are. Since nature therefore hath made our neighbours miſery our pain, and his content our pleaſure; ſince with indiſſoluble bands of mutual ſympathy ſhe hath concatenated our fortunes and affections together; ſince by the diſcipline of our ſenſe ſhe inſtructs us, and by the importunity thereof ſolicits us to the obſervance of our duty, let us follow her wiſe directions, and conſpire with her kindly motions; let us not ſtifle, or weaken by diſuſe, or contrary practice, but by conformable action cheriſh and confirm the good inclinations of nature.

--- hæc noſtri pars optima ſensûs, ---mutuus ut nos Affectus petere auxilium, & præſtare juberet. Juven. Sat. 15.

* De philoſ. convictu cum Princip. Εὐφραίνου τὸ εὐεργετεῖν. M. Ant.

3. We are obliged to theſe duties upon account of common equity. We have all (the moſt ſowre and ſtoical of us all) implanted in us a natural ambition, and a deſire (which we can by no means eradicate) of being beloved and reſpected by all; and are diſpoſed in our need to demand aſſiſtance, commiſeration of our misfortunes, and relief in our diſtreſs of all that are in capacity to afford them; and are apt to be vehemently diſpleaſed, to think our ſelves hardly dealt with, and to complain of cruelty and inhumanity in thoſe that refuſe them to us: and therefore in all reaſon and equity we ſhould readily pay the ſame love, reſpect, aid and comfort to others, which we expect from others; for, Beneficium qui dare neſcit, injuſte petit: Nothing is more unreaſonable, or unequal, than to require from others thoſe good turns, which upon like occaſion we are unwilling to render to others.

4. We are obliged to theſe duties of humanity, upon account of common intereſt, benefit and advantage. The welfare and ſafety, the honour and reputation, the pleaſure and quiet of our lives are concerned in our maintaining a loving correſpondence with all men. For ſo uncertain is our condition, ſo obnoxious are we to manifold neceſſities, that there is no man, whoſe good-will we may not need, whoſe good word may not ſtand us in ſtead, whoſe helpful endeavour may not ſometime oblige us. The Great Pompey, the glorious Triumpher over Nations, and admired darling of fortune, was beholden at laſt to a ſlave for the compoſing his aſhes and celebrating his funeral obſequies. The honour of the greateſt men depends on the eſtimation of the leaſt, and the good-will of the meaneſt peaſant is a brighter ornament to the fortune, a greater acceſſi-on to the grandeur of a Prince, than the moſt radiant gemme in his royal diadem. However the ſpite and enmity of one (and him the moſt weak otherwiſe and contemptible) perſon, may happen to ſpoil the content of our whole life, and deprive us of the moſt comfortable enjoyments thereof; may divert our thoughts from our delightful employments to a ſolicitous care of ſelf-preſervation and defence; may diſcompoſe our minds with vexatious paſſions; may by falſe reports, odious ſuggeſtions, and ſlanderous defamations blaſt our credit, raiſe a ſtorm of general hatred, and conjure up thouſands of enemies againſt us; may by inſidious practices ſupplant and undermine us, prejudice our welfare, endanger our eſtate, and involve us in a bottomleſs gulf of trouble: it is but reaſonable therefore, if we deſire to live ſecurely, comfortably and quietly, that by all honeſt means we ſhould endeavour to purchaſe the good-will of all men, and provoke no man's enmity needleſly; ſince any man's love may be uſeful, and every man's hatred is dangerous.

5. We are obliged to theſe duties by a tacit compact and fundamental conſtitution of mankind, in purſuance of thoſe principal deſigns, for which men were incorporated, and are ſtill contained in civil Society. For to this purpoſe do men congregate, cohabit, and combine themſelves in ſociable communion, that thereby they may enjoy a delightful converſation, void of fear, free from ſuſpicion, and free from danger; promote mutual advantage and ſatisfaction; be helpful aud beneficial each to other: abſtracting from which commodities the retirements of a cloyſter, or the ſolitudes of a deſart; the life of a recluſe, or of a wild beaſt, would perhaps be more deſirable, than theſe of gregarious converſe: For as men, being pleaſed and well affected to each other, are the moſt obliging friends, and pleaſant companions; ſo being enraged, they are the moſt miſchievous and dangerous neighbours, the moſt fierce and ſavage enemies. By neglecting therefore or contravening theſe duties of humanity, we fruſtrate the main ends of ſociety, diſappoint the expectations of each other, ſubvert the grounds of ordinary civility, and in the commonwealth deal as unpolitickly, as the members in the body ſhould act unnaturally, in ſubtracting mutual aſſiſtance, or harming each other; as if the eye ſhould deny to the hands the direction of ſight, and the hands in revenge ſhould pluck out the eyes.

6. We are by obſerving theſe rules to oblige, and render men well-affected to us, becauſe being upon ſuch terms with men conduceth to our living (not only delightfully and quietly, but) honeſtly and religiouſly in this world. How peace and edification, ſpiritual comfort and temporal quiet do concur and co-operate, we ſee intimated Act. 9. v. 31. Then had the Churches peace throughout all Judæa, and Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified, and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghoſt were multiplied. Saint Paul adviſed the Chriſtians of his time, liable to perſecution, to make prayers for all men (and eſpecially for thoſe in eminent power,) that they might lead * a quiet and peaceable life in all godlineſs and honeſty; to pray for them, that is, to pray that they might be ſo diſpoſed, as not to moleſt, interrupt or diſcourage them in the exerciſe of vertue, and practice of piety. For theſe by a tranquility of mind, a ſedateneſs of affections, a competency of reſt and leiſure and retirement, a freedom from amazing fear, diſtracting care, and painful ſenſe are greatly advanced; of which advantages by contentious broils and enmities we are deprived, and encumbred with the contrary impediments. They breed thorny anxieties, and by them

1 Tim. 2. 2.

* Ἤρεμον ϗ ἡσύχιον βίον, (a retired and quiet life.)

choak the ſeeds of good intention: they raiſe dusky fumes of melancholy, by them intercepting the beams of ſpiritnal light, and ſtifling the flames of devout affection. By them our thoughts are affixed upon the baſeſt, and taken off from the moſt excellent objects; our fancies are diſordered by turbulent animoſities; our time is ſpent, and our endeavour taken up in the moſt ungrateful, and unprofitable employments, of defeating the attempts, reſiſting the aſſaults, diſproving the calumnies, countermining the plots of adverſaries; they bring us upon the ſtage againſt our will, and make us act parts in Tragedies, neither becoming, nor delighting us. They diſturb often our natural reſt, and hinder us in the diſpatch of our ordinary buſineſs; and much more impead the ſteadineſs of our devotion, and obſtruct the courſe of religious practice. They tempt us alſo to omiſſions of our duty, to unſeemly behaviour, and to the commiſſions of grievous ſin; to harſh cenſure, envious detraction, unwarrantable revenge, repining at the good ſucceſſes, and delighting in the misfortunes of others. Many examples occur in hiſtory, like thoſe of Hanno the Carthaginian, and Quint. Metellus (Pompey's antagoniſt) who, in purſuance of ſome private grudges, have not only betrayed their own intereſts, and ſullyed their own reputations; but notably diſſerved, and damnified the publick weal of their country; And ſo will our being engaged in enmity with men cauſe us to neglect, if not to contradict, our deareſt concernments: Whence we ſhould carefully avoid the occaſions thereof, and by an innocent and beneficent converſation oblige men to a friendly correſpondence with us.

7. We are obliged to perform theſe duties of humanity, becauſe by ſo doing we become more capable of promoting goodneſs in others, and ſo of fulfilling the higheſt duties of Chriſtian Charity; of ſucceſsfully adviſing and admoniſhing others; of inſtructing their ignorance, and convincing their miſtakes; of removing their prejudices, and ſatisfying their ſcruples; of reclaiming them from vice, errour, faction; and reconciling them to vertue, truth and peace. For by no force of reaſon, or ſtratagem of wit are men ſo eaſily ſubdued, by no bait ſo throughly allured and caught, as by real courteſie, gentleneſs and affability; as on the other ſide, by a ſowre and peeviſh humour, ſupercilious looks, bitter language and harſh dealing men are rendred indocile and intractable, averſe from better inſtruction, obſtinate in their ways, and pertinacious in their conceits. Eaſily do men ſwallow the pill gilded with fair carriage, and ſweetned by kind ſpeech; readily do they afford a favourable ear to the advice ſeeming to proceed from good-will, and a tender care of their good; but the phyſick of wholeſome admonition being ſteeped in the vinegar of reproach, and tempered with the gall of paſſion, becomes diſtaſtful and loathſome to the patient; neither will men willingly liſten to the reaſonings of thoſe, whom they apprehend diſaffected to their perſons, and more deſirous to wound their reputations, than to cure their diſtempers. The ſlighteſt argument, the moſt ſimple and unpoliſhed oration iſſuing from the mouth of a friend, is wonderfully more prevalent, than the ſtrongeſt demonſtration, than the moſt powerful eloquence of an enemy. For obliging uſage, and courteous ſpeech unlock the affections, and by them inſinuate into the reaſon of men; but ſurly deportment, and froward expreſſions damm up the attention with prejudice, and interclude all avenues to the underſtanding. An illuſtration of which diſcourſe we have from comparing the different practice of the Jews, and the ancient Chriſtians, with the contrary ſuc-ceſſes thereof. The Jews, by their ſeditious, and turbulent practices, by their inſolent contempt, and implacable hatred of others (for you know what Tacitus ſaith of them: Apud ipſos fides obſtinata, miſericordia in promptu, ſed adverſus omnes alios hoſtile odium) by their perverſe and unſociable humours, declining all entercourſe, and refuſing ordinary offices of humanity (ſo much as to ſhew the way, or to direct the thirſty traveller to the fountain) to any not of their own ſect, did procure an odium, ſcorn and infamy upon their religion, rendred all men averſe from inquiring into, or entertaining any good opinion thereof, and ſo very little inlarged its bounds, and gained few proſelytes thereto. But the Christians by a mild, patient and peaceable behaviour; by obedience to laws, and complyance with harmleſs cuſtoms: by perfect innocence, and abſtinence from doing injury; by paying due reſpects, and performing civil offices and demonſtrations of benevolence; by loving converſation, and friendly commerce with all, commended their doctrine to the regard of men: and by this only piece of Rhetorick (without terrour of arms, or countenance of power, or plauſibility of diſcourſe, or promiſe of temporal reward) ſubdued the faith of men, and perſuaded a great part of the world to embrace their excellent profeſſion.

Hiſt. lib. 5.

Thus the ancient Chriſtians; but when religion declined, diſſention and ill-will did grow; ſo that the heathen Hiſtorian (Am. Marc. lib. 22.) could ſay of Julian: Nullas infeſtas hominibus beſtias, ut ſunt ſibi ferales plerique Chriſtianorum, expertus.

"We converſe with you like men, we uſe the ſame diet, habit, and "neceſſary furniture: We have recourſe to your tribunals; we frequent "your markets, your fairs, your ſhops, your ſtalls, your ſhambles, your "baths: We cohabit, we ſail, we warr, we till, we trade, we maintain "all manner of commerce with you; ſaith the Chriſtian Apologiſt, to the Pagans, in behalf of the ancient Chriſtians. Which kind of practice they derived not only from the ſweet temper and noble Genius of their Religion, but from the expreſs inſtitution of the firſt teachers thereof, and from their exemplary practice therein. For both by doctrine did the Apoſtles exhort, and by their example incite them to adorn the Goſpel, and render the diſcipline of Chriſt amiable by their meek, gentle, compliant and inoffenſive converſation; and thereby to allure others to a willing entertainment thereof. To this purpoſe are thoſe exhortations, Phil. 4. 5. Let your moderation (τὸ ἐπιεικὲς ὑμῶν, your equity, or gentleneſs) be known to all men: and, 1 Theſſ. 5. 14. ——— Comfort the * afflicted, ſupport the weak, be long-ſuffering toward all. Be ye all careful not to render evil for evil; but always purſue goodneſs toward each other, and toward all: and, Gal. 6. 10. As we have opportunity, let us do good to all men: and, Tit. 3. 1. Put them in mind to be ſubject to principalities and powers, to be ready to every good work; to reproach no man; not to be contentious, but gentle, ſhewing all meekneſs to all men: and, 1 Tim. 2. 24. The Miniſter of the Lord muſt not ſtrive, but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient: In meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves: (or thoſe that are otherwiſe diſpoſed, τοὺς ἀντιδιατιθεμένους) if peradventure God will give them repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth: where gentleneſs toward all, and meekneſs toward adverſaries are oppoſitely conjoyned, with aptneſs to teach and inſtruct; the one qualification ſo effectually prediſpoſing to the other: and it is beſide intimated, that gentle and meek treatment are ſutable inſtruments ordinarily imployed by God to convert men from errour to truth.

Tertul. Apol.

* Τοὺς ὀλιγοψύχους.

8. We are bound hereto in complyance and conformity to the beſt patterns: God, Chriſt, the Apoſtles, the Primitive Saints: This illuſtri-ous Doctor of Chriſtian Religion Saint Paul did not fail to ſecond this his doctrine with his own example. For, Give none offence (ſaith he) neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the Church of God; 1 Cor. 10. ult. Even as I pleaſe all men in all things, not ſeeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be ſaved: Pleaſe all men in all things; what could Saint Paul ſay, or what do more? and again, * 1 Cor. 19.&c. For though (ſaith he) I be free from all men, yet have I made my ſelf a ſervant unto all, that I might gain the more: To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men, that by all means I might ſave ſome. See how far this charitable deſign of doing good to others tranſported him: He parted with his own freedom, that he might redeem them from the ſlavery of a wicked life; he denyed his own preſent ſatisfaction that he might procure them a laſting content: he deſpiſed his own profit, that he might promote their ſpiritual advantage; he proſtituted his own reputation, that he might advance them to a condition of true glory. He underwent grievous afflictions for their comfort; ſuſtained reſtleſs pains for their eaſe, and hazarded his own ſafety for their ſalvation. He condeſcended to their infirmities, ſuted his demeanour to their tempers, complyed with their various humours, and contrary cuſtoms: He differed from himſelf, that he might agree with them, and transformed himſelf into all ſhapes, that he might convert them into what they ſhould be, reform their manners, and tranſlate them into a happy eſtate. But above all is the practice of our Lord himſelf moſt remarkable to this purpoſe: and diſcovers plainly to him that obſerves an univerſally large and unreſtrained Philanthropie. For having from a wonderful conſpiracy of kindneſs and good-will (between him and his eternal Father) toward the world of men, deſcended willingly from the throne of his celeſtial Majeſty, and inveloped his divine glory in a cloud of mortal frailty, and that (as the Apoſtle ſaith) Coloſſ. 1. 20. he might reconcile all things in heaven and earth, conjoin God and man by a nearer alliance, and unite men together by the more ſacred bands of common relation to himſelf: Having aſſumed not only the outward ſhape and corporeal reſemblance of man, but the inward frame, and real paſſions of humane ſouls; he diſdained not accordingly to obey the laws, to follow the inclinations, to obſerve the duties of the beſt and moſt perfect humanity; with an equal and impartial bounty imparting free admittance, familiar converſe, friendly aid and ſuccour unto all, even the worſt of men in all appearance (and that ſo far, that ſome rigorous cenſurers thence preſumed to tax him as Matt. 11. 19. a glutton, and a good-fellow, a friend to publicans and ſinners) diſtributing liberally to all the incomparable benefits of his heavenly doctrine, of his holy example, of his miraculous power; inſtructing the ignorances, detecting the errours, diſpoſſeſſing the devils; ſuſtaining the weakneſſes, overlooking the injuries, comforting the afflictions, ſupplying the neceſſities, healing the diſeaſes, and remedying all the miſeries of all, that did not wilfully reject their own welfare: Act. 10. 38. He went about (ſaith Saint Peter in the Acts) doing good, and healing all that were oppreſſed of the devil: And, * Matt. 9. 35. * He went about all the cities and villages teaching in their Synagogues, and preaching the Goſpel of the Kingdom, and healing every ſickneſs, and every diſeaſe among the people (ſaith Saint Matthew's Goſpel.) He deſpiſed not the meaneſt, either in outward eſtate, or ſpiritual improvement. He invited all unto him, repelled, or diſcouraged none; nor refuſed to any that came unto him, his counſel, or his help. He was averſe from no man's Luke 18. 9. ſociety (and if in any degree from any, chiefly from thoſe, who confidently pretended to extraordinary ſanctity, and proudly contemned others.) Meek and gentle he was, mild and patient; courteous and benign; lowly and condeſcenſive; tender and compaſſionate in his converſation unto all. And for a compliment of his tranſcendent charity, and for an enforcement unto ours, he laid down his life for us all, as a common price to purchaſe remiſſion of ſins; a general ranſome to redeem the humane creation from the captivity of hell and ſlavery of corruption into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God; demoliſhing by his pacifick death all partition walls, and laying open all encloſures of the divine favour; reconciling God to man, and combining man to himſelf by the freſh cement of his precious blood: ſo that now not only as fellow-creatures; but (which is exceedingly more) as partakers of the ſame common redemption, as objects of the ſame mercy, as obliged in the ſame common debt, and as capable of the ſame eternal happineſs; by new and firmer engagements we are bound to all mutual kindneſs and benevolence toward all. For, Deſtroy not (ſaith Saint Paul, and by like reaſon I may ſay, Harm not, vex not, be not unkind to) him, for whom Chriſt dyed.

Rom. 8. 21.

Rom. 14.

Nay, farther, we have the example of Almighty God himſelf directing, and by our Saviour's expreſs admonition obliging us to this univerſal beneficence, compaſſion and patience towards all. Who by expreſs teſtimony of ſacred writ, and by palpable ſigns of continual experience declareth himſelf to be a * lover of mankind: to be good to all, and tenderly merciful over all his works: not to afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men; to compaſſionate the miſeries, and ſupply the needs, and relieve the diſtreſſes; to deſire the ſalvation, and to delight in the happineſs of men. Who with an indifferent, unlimited munificence diſpenſes his bleſſings, extends his watchful providence, and imparts his loving care unto all: Cauſing his Sun with comfortable beams to ſhine, and the refreſhing ſhowres to deſcend upon the earth to yield her pleaſant fruits; the temperate ſeaſons to recur, and all the elements to miniſter ſuccour, joy and ſatiſfaction even to the moſt impious and ingrateful toward him. Who with immenſe clemency and long ſufferance overlooks the ſacrilegious affronts offered daily to his Majeſty; the outragious violations of his laws, and the contemptuous neglects of his unexpreſſible goodneſs: Who patiently waits for the repentance, and inceſſantly ſolicits the reconcilement, courts the amity, and in a manner begs the good-will of his moſt deadly enemies: whom he hath always in his hand, and can cruſh to nothing at his pleaſure. For, We are Ambaſſadours for Chriſt, as if God by us did entreat you: We beſeech you in Chriſt's behalf; be reconciled to God (ſaith Saint Paul.)

* Tit. 3. 4. &c.
Pſal. 145. 9.

Vid. Clement. Epiſt. ad Cor. pag. 27.

Since therefore upon account of natural conſanguinity, of our beſt inclinations, of common equity, and general advantage, and an implicite compact between men; of ſecuring our, and promoting others vertue and piety; from the exhortations of Scripture mentioned, and many more tending to the ſame purpoſe, from the example of the ancient Chriſtians, the Leaders and Champions of our Religion, of the Apoſtles, the Maſters and Patriarchs thereof, of our Bleſſed Redeemer, and of Almighty God himſelf, we are obliged to this Univerſal benevolence and beneficence toward all; No miſapprehenſions of judgment, no miſcarriages in practice, no ill-diſpoſitions of ſoul, no demerits in himſelf, no diſcourteſies toward us ought wholly to alineate our affections from, or to avert us from doing good, or to encline us to render evil for evil unto any perſon: eſpecially conſidering, that the omiſſions of others, cannot excuſe us from the performance of our duty; that no man is to be preſumed incorrigible, nor (like the lapſed Angels) concluded in deſperate impenitence; and that our loving and gentle demeanour toward them may be inſtrumental to their amendment, and the contrary may contribute to their progreſs and continuance in offences; that God hath promiſed to us a reward of our patience, and hath reſerved to them a ſeaſon of judgment and puniſhment, if they perſiſt obſtinate in their diſorderly courſes; that to avenge their treſpaſſes belongs not to us, but to Almighty God, who is more nearly concerned in, and more injured by them, and is yet content to endure them, to prolong their lives, to continne his benefits to them, and to expect their converſion: That our differing from them is not to be attributed to our ſelves, but wholly, or chiefly to the goodneſs of God; that we always were, are, and ſhall be liable to the ſame errours, vices and miſdemeanours: that (laſtly) the faults and follies of others, like the maims of body, diſtempers of ſoul, or croſſes of fortune (being their own greateſt unhappineſſes) require rather our pity than our hatred, to be eaſed by our help, than aggravated by our unkindneſs. 'Tis two ſcant therefore and narrow a Charity that is limited by correſpondence of courteſie, or by the perſonal merits of others. We are bound to live peaceably with, that is, to be innocent, beneficial, reſpective to all, and to ſeek the reciprocal goodwill, love and amity of all. But I have inſiſted too long upon this particular, concerning the Object of this duty, and its extenſion.

III. I proceed briefly to conſider whence it comes, that (as I before obſerved was intimated in theſe words, If it be poſſible, as much as lieth in you) though we do our parts, and perform carefully the duties incumbent on us, though we bear good-will, and do good offices, and yield due reſpects, and abſtain from all not only injurious, but rigorous dealing toward all; though we revile none, nor cenſure harſhly, nor preſumptuouſly intermeddle with others affairs; though we obey laws, and comply with received cuſtoms, and avoid all occaſions of contention, though our tempers be meek, our principles peaceable, and our converſations inoffenſive, we may yet prove ſucceſsleſs in our endeavours to live peaceably, and may be hated, harmed and diſquieted in our courſe of life. That it ſo happens, we find by plain experience, and manifold example. For Moſes, the meekeſt man upon earth, and commended beſide by all circumſtances of divine favour, and humane worth, was yet often envied, impugned and moleſted by thoſe, whom by all manner of benefits he had moſt highly obliged. And we find David frequently complaining, that by thoſe, whoſe good-will by performing all offices of friendly kindneſs, and brotherly affection, he had ſtudiouſly laboured to deſerve, whoſe maladies and calamites he had not only tenderly commiſerated, but had prayed and humbled his ſoul with faſting for their recovery and deliverance from them, was yet recompenſed by their treacherous devices againſt his ſafety, by grievous reproaches, and ſcornful inſultings over him in his affliction; as we ſee at large in Pſalms the 35. and 69. And in Pſalm 120. he thus lamentably bemoans his condition: Wo is me that I ſojourn in Meſech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar: My ſoul hath long dwelt with him that hateth peace: I am for peace, but when I ſpeak, they are for war: And our Bleſſed Saviour himſelf, though in the whole tenour of his life he demonſtrated an incomparable meekneſs and ſweetneſs of diſpoſition, and exerciſed continually all manner of kindneſs and beneficence toward all men, was notwithſtanding loaded with all kinds of injuries and contumelies,

Vid. Pſal. 55. 10.

melies, was bitterly hated, ignominiouſly diſgraced, and maliciouſly perſecuted unto death: and the ſame lot befel his faithful Diſciples, that although their deſign was benign and charitable, their carriage blameleſs and obliging toward all, they were yet purſued conſtantly both by the outrageous clamours of the people, and cruel uſages from thoſe in eminent power. Now though it ſeem ſtrange and almoſt incredible, that they who are truly friends to all, and are ready to do to all what good they can; who willingly diſpleaſe none, but induſtriouſly ſtrive to acquire (not with glozing ſhews of popularity, but by real expreſſions of kindneſs) the good-will and favour of all, ſhould yet be maligned, or moleſted by any; yet ſeeing it ſo happens, if we inquire into the reaſon, we ſhall find this miracle in morality, to proceed (to omit the neglect of the duties mentioned in our former diſcourſe) chiefly from the exceeding variety, difference and contrariety of mens diſpoſitions, joyned with the moroſity, aptneſs to miſtake, envy, or unreaſonable perverſeneſs of ſome; which neceſſarily render the means of attaining all mens good-will inſufficient, and the endeavours unſucceſsful. For men ſeeing by ſeveral lights, reliſhing with diverſly diſpoſed palates, and meaſuring things by different ſtandards, we can hardly do or ſay any thing, which if approved and applauded by ſome, will not be diſliked and blamed by others; if it advance us in the opinion of ſome, will not as much depreſs us in the judgment of others; ſo that in this irreconcileable diverſity and inconſiſtency of mens apprehenſions, it is impoſſible not to diſpleaſe many: Eſpecially ſince ſome men either by their natural temper, or from the influence of ſome ſowre principles they have imbibed, are ſo moroſe, rigid and ſelf-willed; ſo impatient of all contradiction to, or diſcrepancy from their ſentiments, that they cannot endure any to diſſent in judgment, or vary in practice from them, without incurring their heavy diſdain and cenſure. And, which makes the matter more deſperate and remedileſs, ſuch men commonly being leaſt able either to manage their reaſon, or to command their paſſion, as guided wholly by certain blind impulſes of fancy, or groundleſs prejudices of conceit, or by a partial admiration of ſome mens perſons, examples and authorities, are uſually moſt reſolute and peremptory in their courſes, and thence hardly capable of any change, mitigation or amendment. Of which ſort there being divers engaged in ſeveral ways, it is impoſſible to pleaſe ſome without diſguſting the other; and difficult altogether to approach any of theſe waſps, without being ſtung or vexed by them. Some alſo are ſo apt to miſunderſtand mens meanings, to miſconſtrue their words, and to make ill deſcants upon, or draw bad conſequences from their actions, that 'tis not poſſible to prevent their entertaining ill-favoured prejudices againſt even thoſe that are heartily their friends, and wiſh them the beſt. To others the good and proſperous eſtate of their Neighbour, that he flouriſhes in wealth, power or reputation, is ground ſufficient of hatred and enmity againſt him; for ſo we ſee that Cain hated his innocent brother Abel, becauſe his brother's works were more righteous, and his ſacrifices better accepted than his own: that Joſeph's brethren were mortally offended at him, becauſe his father eſpecially loved and delighted in him: that Saul was enraged againſt David, becauſe his gallant deeds were celebrated with due praiſes and joyful acclamations of the people: and that the Babylonian Princes, upon no other ſcore, maligned Daniel, but becauſe he enjoyed the favour of the King, and a dignity anſwerable to his deſerts: And who, that loves his own welfare, can poſſibly avoid ſuch enmities as theſe? But the fatal rock, upon which peaceable deſigns are moſt inevitably ſplit, and which by no prudent ſteering our courſe can ſometimes be evaded, is the unreaſonable perverſeneſs of mens pretences, who ſometimes will upon no terms be friends with us, or allow us their good-will, but upon condition of concurring with them in diſhoneſt and unwarrantable practices; of omitting ſome duties to which by the expreſs command of God, or evident dictates of right reaſon we are obliged, or performing ſome action repugnant to thoſe indiſpenſable rules. But though peace with men is highly valuable, and poſſeſſing their good-will in worth not inferiour to any other indifferent accommodation of life, yet are theſe nothing comparable to the favour of God, or the internal ſatisfaction of conſcience; nor though we were aſſured thereby to gain the entire love and favour of all men living, are we to purchaſe them at ſo dear a rate as with the loſs of theſe. We muſt not, to pleaſe or gratifie men, commit any thing prohibited, or omit any thing enjoyned by God, the leaſt glimpſe of whoſe favourable aſpect is infinitely more to be prized, than the moſt intimate friendſhip of the mightieſt Monarchs upon earth: and the leaſt ſpark of whoſe indignation is more to be dreaded, than the extremeſt diſpleaſure of the whole world. In caſe of ſuch competition,

* Πείθω. we muſt reſolve with Saint Paul, Gal. 1. 10. *Do I yet conciliate God, or do I endeavour to ſooth men? for if I yet ſoothed (or flattered) men (ſo you know ἀρέσκειν ſignifies) I were not the ſervant of Chriſt. Nor are we, that we may ſatisfie any man's pleaſure, to contravene the dictates of Reaſon (that ſubordinate guide of our actions) to do any diſhonourable or uncomely action, unworthy of a man, misbeſeeming our education, or incongruous to our ſtation in humane ſociety, ſo as to make our ſelves worthily deſpicable to the moſt by contenting ſome: Nor are we bound always to deſert our own conſiderable intereſt, or betray our juſt liberty, that we may avoid the enmity of ſuch as would violently or fraudulently encroach upon them. Nor are we in the adminiſtration of juſtice, diſtribution of rewards, or arbitration of controverſies to reſpect the particular favour of any, but the merits only of the cauſe, or the worth of the perſons concerned. Nor are we by feeding mens diſtempered humours, or gratifying their abuſed fancies to prejudice or neglect their real good; to encourage them in bad practices, to foment their irregular paſſions, to applaud their unjuſt or uncharitable cenſures, or to puff up their minds with vain conceit, by ſervile flattery: but rather, like faithful Phyſicians, to adminiſter wholeſome, though unſavoury, advice; to reveal to them their miſtakes, to check their intended progreſs in bad courſes, to reprove their faults ſeaſonably, and when it may probably do them good, though poſſibly thereby we may provoke their anger and procure their ill-will, Gal. 4. 16. and (as Saint Paul ſaith) become their enemies, for telling them the truth. Nor are we ever explicitly to aſſent to falſhoods (ſo apprehended by us,) to bely our conſciences, or contradict our real judgments (though we may ſometimes for peace-ſake prudently conceal them;) Nor to deny the truth our defence and patronage, when in order to ſome good purpoſe it needs and requires them, though thereby we may incur the diſlike, and forfeit the good-will of ſome men. Nor are we by entertaining any extraordinary friendſhip, intimate familiarity, or frequent converſe with perſons notoriouſly diſſolute in their manners, diſorderly in their behaviour, or erroneous in weighty points of opinion, to countenance their miſdemeanours, diſhonour our profeſſion, render our ſelves juſtly ſuſpected, run the hazard of contagion, or hinder their reformation. And eſpecially we are warily to decline the particular acquaintance of men of contentious diſpoſitions, miſchievous principles, and factious deſigns; a bare keeping company with whom looks like a conſpiracy, an approving or abetting their proceedings; The refuſing any encouragement, ſignification of eſteem, or vouchſafing any peculiar reſpect to ſuch, we owe to the honour of vertue, which they diſgrace, to the love of truth which they oppugn, to the peace of the world which they diſturb, and to the general good of mankind, which they impeach. And ſo S. Paul warns us not to mingle or conſort, not to diet, 1 Cor. 5.

or common (μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, & μὴ συνεσθίειν) with men of a diſſolute and diſorderly converſation: And, to mark them which cauſe ſeditions, and ſcandals, contrary to Chriſtian doctrine, and to ſhun, or decline Ἀτάκτως περιπ.
them (ἐκκλίνειν ἀπ' αὐτῶν) and to repudiate, deprecate the familiarity Rom. 16. 17.
of Hereticks (Αἱρετικὸν ἄνθρωπον παραιτεῖσθαι.) And S. John forbids us Tit. 3. 10.
to wiſh joy, or to allow the ordinary reſpects of civil ſalutation to Apo- 2 Joh. 10.
ſtates and Impoſtours: leſt (by ſuch demonſtration of favour) we communicate with them in their wicked works. None of which Precepts are intended to interdict to us, or to diſoblige us from bearing real goodwill, or diſpenſing needful benefits to any, but to deter us from yielding any ſignal countenance to vice and impiety; and to excite us to declare ſuch diſlike and deteſtation of thoſe heinous enormities as may confer to the reclaiming of theſe, and prevent the ſeduction of others. So Saint Paul expreſly, 2 Theſſ. 3. 14. But if any man obeyeth not our injunction by epiſtle, do not conſort with him, that he may by ſhame be reclaimed (ἵνα ἐντραπῇ) And, account him not an enemy, but admoniſh him as a brother. Nor ought laſtly the love of peace, and deſire of friendly correſpondence with any men, avert us from an honeſt zeal, (proportionable to our abilities and opportunities) of promoting the concernments of truth and goodneſs, though againſt powerful and dangerous oppoſition: I ſay an honeſt zeal, meaning thereby not that blind, heady paſſion, or inflammation of Spirit, tranſporting men beyond the bounds of reaſon and diſcretion, upon ſome ſuperficially plauſible pretences, to violent and irregular practices; but a conſiderate and ſteady reſolution of mind, effectually animating a man by warrantable and decent means vigorouſly to proſecute commendable deſigns; like that S. Jude mentions, of ſtriving earneſtly for the faith once delivered to the Jude 3.
Saints. For this zeal may be very conſiſtent with, yea greatly conducible to the deſigns of peace. And 'tis not a drouſineſs, a ſlack remiſsneſs, a heartleſs diffidence, or a cowardly flinching from the face of danger and oppoſition, we diſcourſe about, or plead for, but a wiſe and wary declining the occaſions of needleſs and unprofitable diſturbance to our ſelves and others.

To conclude this point (which if time would have permitted, I ſhould have handled more fully and diſtinctly) though to preſerve peace, and purchaſe the good-will of men, we may and ought to quit much of our private intereſt and ſatisfaction, yet ought we not to ſacrifice to them what is not our own, nor committed abſolutely to our diſpoſal, and which in value incomparably tranſcends them, the maintenance of truth, the advancement of juſtice, the practice of vertue, the quiet of our conſcience, the favour of Almighty God. And if for being dutiful to God, and faithful to our ſelves in theſe particulars, any men will hate, vex and deſpite us; fruſtrate our deſires, and defeat our purpoſes of living peaceably with all men in this world: we may comfort our ſelves in the enjoyment of eternal peace and ſatisfaction of mind, in the aſſurance of the divine favour, in the hopes of eternal reſt and tranquility in the world to come.

Now briefly to induce us to the practice of this duty of living peaceably, we may conſider,

Pſal. 133. 1.
Prov. 17. 1.
Vid. Clem. ad Cor. pag. 27, &c.
Apoc. 21.
Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a ſtalled ox and hatred therewith. Prov. 15. 17.
Ἀταραξία.
Luk. 2. 14.

1. How good and pleaſant a thing it is (as David ſaith) for brethren (and ſo we are all at leaſt by nature) to live together in unity. How, that (as Solomon ſaith) better is a dry morſel, and quietneſs therewith, than a houſe full of ſacrifices with ſtrife. How delicious that converſation is, which is accompanied with a mutual confidence, freedom, courteſie and complacence: how calm the mind, how compoſed the affections, how ſerene the countenance, how melodious the voice, how ſweet the ſleep, how contentful the whole life is of him that neither deviſeth miſchief againſt others, nor ſuſpects any to be contrived againſt himſelf: and contrariwiſe, how ingrateful and loathſome a thing it is to abide in a ſtate of enmity, wrath, diſſention: having the thoughts diſtracted with ſolicitous care, anxious ſuſpicion, envious regret; the heart boiling with choler, the face overclouded with diſcontent, the tongue jarring and out of tune, the ears filled with diſcordant noiſes of contradiction, clamour and reproach; the whole frame of body and ſoul diſtempered and diſturbed with the worſt of paſſions. How much more comfortable it is to walk in ſmooth and even paths, than to wander in rugged ways, overgrown with briars, obſtructed with rubs, and beſet with ſnares; to ſail ſteadily in a quiet, than to be toſſed in a tempeſtuous Sea; to behold the lovely face of Heaven ſmiling with a cheerful ſerenity, than to ſee it frowning with clouds, or raging with ſtorms; to hear harmonious conſents, than diſſonant janglings; to ſee objects correſpondent in graceful ſymmetry, than lying diſorderly in confuſed heaps; to be in health, and have the natural humours conſent in moderate temper, than (as it happens in diſeaſes) agitated with tumultuous commotions: How all ſenſes and faculties of man unanimouſly rejoyce in thoſe emblems of peace, order, harmony and proportion. Yea how nature univerſally delights in a quiet ſtability or undiſturbed progreſs of motion; the beauty, ſtrength and vigour of every thing requires a concurrence of force, co-operation, and contribution of help; all things thrive and flouriſh by communicating reciprocal aid, and the world ſubſiſts by a friendly conſpiracy of its parts; and eſpecially that political ſociety of men chiefly aims at peace as its end, depends on it as its cauſe, relies on it as its ſupport. How much a peaceful ſtate reſembles Heaven, into which neither complaint, pain, nor clamour (οὔτε πένθος, οὔτε πόνος, οὔτε κραυγὴ, as it is in the Apocalypſe) do ever enter; but bleſſed ſouls converſe together in perfect love, and in perpetual concord; and how a condition of enmity repreſents the ſtate of Hell, that black and diſmal Region of dark hatred, fiery wrath, and horrible tumult. How like a paradiſe the world would be, flouriſhing in joy and reſt, if men would cheerfully conſpire in affection, and helpfully contribute to each others content: and how like a ſavage wilderneſs now it is, when, like wild beaſts, they vex and perſecute, worry and devour each other. How not only Philoſophy hath placed the ſupreme pitch of happineſs in a calmneſs of mind, and tranquility of life, void of care and trouble, of irregular paſſions and perturbations; but that Holy Scripture it ſelf in that one term of peace moſt uſually comprehends all joy and content, all felicity and proſperity: ſo that the heavenly conſort of Angels, when they agree moſt highly to bleſs, and to wiſh the greateſt happineſs to mankind, could not better expreſs their ſenſe, than by ſaying, Be on earth peace, and good-will among men.

2. That as nothing is more ſweet and delightful, ſo nothing more comely and agreeable to humane nature than peaceable living, it being (as Solomon ſaith) an honour to a man to ceaſe from ſtrife; and conſequently alſo a diſgrace to him to continue therein: That rage and fury may be the excellencies of beaſts, and the exerting their natural animoſity in ſtriſe and combat may become them; but reaſon and diſcretion are the ſingular eminencies of men, and the uſe of theſe the moſt natural and commendable method of deciding controverſies among them: and that it extremely misbecomes them that are endowed with thoſe excellent faculties ſo to abuſe them, as not to apprehend each others meanings, but to ground vexatious quarrels upon the miſtake of them: not to be able by reaſonable expedients to compound differences, but with mutual damage and inconvenience to prorogue and encreaſe them: not to diſcern how exceedingly better it is to be helpful and beneficial, than to be miſchievous and troubleſome to one another. How fooliſhly and unskilfully they judge, that think by unkind ſpeech and harſh dealing to allay mens diſtempers, alter their opinions, or remove their prejudices; as if they ſhould attempt to kill by miniſtring nouriſhment, or to extinguiſh a flame by pouring oyl upon it. How childiſh a thing it is eagerly to contend about trifles, for the ſuperiority in ſome impertinent conteſt, for the ſatisfaction of ſome petty humour, for the poſſeſſion of ſome inconſiderable toy: yea how barbarous and brutiſh a thing it is to be fierce and impetuous in the purſuit of things that pleaſe us, ſnarling at, biting and tearing all competitors of our game, or oppoſers of our undertaking. But how divine and amiable, how worthy of humane nature, of civil breeding, of prudent conſideration it is, to reſtrain partial deſires, to condeſcend to equal terms, to abate from rigorous pretences, to appeaſe diſcords, and vanquiſh enmities by courteſie and diſcretion; like the beſt and wiſeſt Commanders, who by skilful conduct, and patient attendance upon opportunity, without ſtriking of ſtroke or ſhedding of blood, ſubdue their Enemy.

Prov. 20. 3.

3. How that peace with its near alliance and concomitants, its cauſes and effects, love, meekneſs, gentleneſs and patience, are in Sacred Writ reputed the genuine fruits of the Holy Spirit, iſſues of Divine Grace, and off-ſprings of heavenly Wiſdom; producing like themſelves a goodly progeny of righteous deeds. But that emulation, hatred, wrath, variance and ſtrife derive their extraction from fleſhly luſt, helliſh craft, or beaſtly folly; propagating themſelves alſo into a like ugly brood of wicked works. For ſo ſaith Saint James, If you have bitter zeal and ſtrife in your hearts, glory not, * nor be deceived untruly: This wiſdom deſcendeth not from above, but is earthly, ſenſual, and deviliſh: For where emulation and ſtrife are, there is † tumult, and every * naughty thing: but the wiſdom that is from above is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, * obſequious, full of mercy (or beneficence) and of good fruits, without partiality and diſſimulation; And the fruit of righteouſneſs is ſowed in peace to thoſe that make peace: and from whence are wars, and quarrels among you? Are they not hence, even from your luſts, that war in your members? Likewiſe, He loveth tranſgreſſion that loveth ſtrife; and A fools lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for ſtrokes, ſaith Solomon. That the moſt wicked and miſerable of Creatures is deſcribed by titles denoting enmity and diſcord: the hater (Satan) the enemy (ὁ ἐχθρὸς ἄνθρωπος) the accuſer (ὁ κατήγορος) the ſlanderer (ὁ διά-

Gal. 5.
Jam. 3. 14.
* Καὶ μὴ ψεύδεσθε κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας.
† Ἀκαταστασία, confuſion.
* Φαῦλον πρᾶγμα.
* εὐπειθής.
Prov. 17. 19.
Prov. 18. 6.
Qui poſuit in cœlo bellum, in paradiſo fraudem, odium inter primos fratres. Aug.

(ὁ διάβολος) the deſtroyer (ὁ ἀπολλύων) the furious dragon, and miſchievouſly treacherous ſnake: and how ſad it is to imitate him in his practices, to reſemble him in his qualities: But that the beſt, moſt excellent, and moſt happy of Beings delihgts to be ſtyled, and accordingly to expreſs himſelf, The God of love, mercy and peace; and his bleſſed Son to be called, and to be, the Prince of peace, the great Mediatour Reconciler, and Peace-maker, who is alſo ſaid from on high to have viſited us, To give light to them that ſit in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death, and to guide our feet in the ways of peace. That laſtly no devotion is pleaſing, no oblation acceptable to God, conjoined with hatred, or proceeding from an unreconciled mind: For, If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee; Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; firſt be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift, ſaith our Saviour.

Mat. 13. 28. Ἀντίδικος, 1 Pet. 5. 8.
A murtherer, Joh. 8. 44.
2 Cor. 13. 11.
Philip. 4. 9.
1 Theſſ. 5. 23.
2 Theſſ. 3. 16.
Heb. 7.
Luk. 1. 79.
Χαίρει γὰρ τῇ συμφωνίᾳ λογικῶν τῶν ζώων ὁ θεὸς, καὶ ἐκτρέπεται τὴν διαφωνίαν. Orig. c. Celſ. 8. (p. 424.)
Mat. 5. 23,24.

I cloſe up all with this Corollary: that if we muſt live lovingly, and peaceably with all men, then much more are we obliged to do ſo with all Chriſtians: to whom by nearer and firmer bands of holy alliance we are related; by more precious communions in faith and devotion we are endeared; by more peculiar and powerful obligations of divine commands, ſacramental vows, and formal profeſſions we are engaged: Our ſpiritual brethren, members of the ſame myſtical body, temples of the ſame Holy Spirit, ſervants of the ſame Lord, ſubjects of the ſame Prince, profeſſors of the ſame truth, partakers of the ſame hope, heirs of the ſame promiſe, and candidates of the ſame everlaſting happineſs.

Now Almighty God, the moſt good and beneficent Maker, gracious Lord, and merciful preſerver of all things, infuſe into our hearts thoſe heavenly graces of meekneſs, patience and benignity, grant us and his whole Church, and all his Creation to ſerve him quietly here, and in a bliſsful reſt to praiſe and magnify him for ever: To whom with his bleſſed Son, the great Mediatour and Prince of peace, and with his Holy Spirit, the ever-flowing Spring of all love, joy, comfort and peace, be all honour, glory and praiſe. And

The peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding keep your hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God, and of his Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord: And the bleſſing of God Almighty, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt be among you, and remain with you for ever. Amen.

THE

THE Duty and Reward OF BOUNTY TO THE POOR.

To the Right Honourable
Sir RICHARD FORD,
Lord MAYOR OF LONDON,
AND THE Court of Aldermen.

Right Houourable,

AS out of grateful Reſpect I did (although otherwiſe indiſpoſed for ſuch Employments) endeavour to diſcharge that Service which You vouchſafed to call me unto, in conceiving and uttering theſe Meditations; ſo now, in publiſhing them, I do purely ſubmit to Your Commands, meaning therein to approve my ſelf,

Right Honourable,

Your moſt Obedient Servant,

Iſaac Barrow.

SERMON XXXI.

The Duty and Reward of Bounty to the Poor.

PSAL. 112. 9.

He hath diſperſed, he hath given to the poor; his rigteouſneſs endureth for ever, his horn ſhall be exalted with honour.

This Sermon was preached at the Spittal upon Wedneſday in Eaſter-week, Anno Domini. 1671.

AS this whole Pſalm appears to have a double intent; one to deſcribe the proper actions and affections of a truly religious or pious man; (of a man who feareth the Lord, and delighteth greatly in his commandments; Verſ. 1.) the other to declare the happineſs of ſuch a man's ſtate, conſequent upon thoſe his affections and actions, whether in way of natural reſult, or of gracious recompence from God: ſo doth this Verſe particularly contain both a good part of a pious man's character, and ſome conſiderable inſtances of his felicity. The firſt words (He hath diſperſed, he hath given to the poor) expreſs part of his character; the latter (His righteouſneſs endureth for ever, his horn ſhall be exalted with honour) aſſign inſtances of his felicity. So that our Text hath two parts, one affording us good information concerning our duty, the other yielding great encouragement to the performance thereof; for we are obliged to follow the pious man's practice, and ſo doing we ſhall aſſuredly partake of his condition. Theſe parts we ſhall in order proſecute, endeavouring (by God's aſſiſtance) ſomewhat to illuſtrate the words themſelves, to confirm the truths couched in them, and to inculcate the duties which they imply.

For the firſt part, He hath diſperſed, he hath given to the poor; theſe words in general do import the liberal bounty and mercy which a pious man is wont to exerciſe; doing which, doth in good part conſtitute him pious, and ſignally declareth him ſuch; is a neceſſary ingredient of his piety, and a conſpicuous mark thereof: But particularly they inſinuate ſome things concerning the nature, the matter, the manner, and the object of thoſe Acts.

He hath diſperſed, he hath given. Thoſe words being put indefinitely, or without determining what is diſperſed and given by him, may be ſuppoſed to imply a kind of univerſality in the matter of his beneficence; that he beſtoweth whatever he hath within compaſs of his poſſeſſion, or his power; his τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, (the things which he hath,) and his τὰ Luke 12. 33.
ἐνόντα, (the things which he may,) according to the preſcriptions of Luke 11. 41.
our Lord in the Goſpel. Every thing (I ſay) which he hath in ſubſtance, or can do by his endeavour, that may conduce to the ſupport of the life, or the health, or the welfare in any kind of his neighbour, to the ſuccour or relief of his indigency, to the removal or eaſement of his affliction, he may well here be underſtood to diſperſe and give. Feeding the hungry, cloathing the naked, viſiting the ſick, entertaining the ſtranger, ranſoming the captive, eaſing the oppreſſed, comforting the ſorrowful, aſſiſting the weak, inſtructing or adviſing the ignorant, together with all ſuch kinds or inſtances of beneficence, may be conceived either meant directly as the matter of the good man's diſperſing and giving, or by juſt analogy of reaſon reducible thereto: Subſtantial alms, as the moſt ſenſible and obvious matter of bounty, was ('tis probable) eſpecially intended, but thence no manner of expreſſing it is to be excluded; for the ſame reaſons which oblige us, the ſame affections which diſpoſe us to beſtow our money, or deal our bread, will equally bind and move us to contribute our endeavour and advice, for the ſuſtenance and comfort of our poor neighbour. Anſwerably our diſcourſe will more expreſly regard the principal matter; liberal communication of our goods; but it may be referred to all ſorts of beneficence.

Farther, the word diſperſed intimateth the nature of his bounty, in excluſion of practices different from it. He diſperſeth, and is therefore not tenacious, doth not hoard up his goods, or keep them cloſe to himſelf, for the gratifying his covetous humour, or nouriſhing his pride, or pampering his ſenſuality; but ſendeth them abroad for the uſe and benefit of others. He diſperſeth his goods, and therefore doth not fling them away altogether, as if he were angry with them, or weary of them, as if he loathed or deſpiſed them; but fairly and ſoftly, with good conſideration he diſpoſeth of them here and there, as reaſon and need do require. He diſperſeth them to the poor, not diſſipateth them among vain or lewd perſons in wanton or wicked profuſions, in riotous exceſſes, in idle divertiſements, in expenſive curioſities, in hazardous gamings, in any ſuch courſes which ſwallow whole all that a man hath, or do ſo cripple him, that he becomes unable to diſperſe any thing: Our good man is to be underſtood wiſely provident, honeſtly induſtrious, and ſoberly frugal, that he may have wherewith to be juſt firſt, and then liberal.

Οὐ γὰρ οἷόντε χρήματα ἔχειν μὴ ἐπιμελούμενον ὅπως ἔχῃ. Ariſt. Eth. 4. 1.

Eph. 4. 28.

His diſperſing alſo (or ſcattering, ſo the * Hebrew word here uſed is otherwhere rendred: There is (ſaith the wiſe man) that ſcattereth, and yet increaſeth: where we may remark, that this word ſingly by it ſelf, without any adjunct matter to limit or interpret it, is uſed to ſignify this kind of practice. This his diſperſing, (I ſay alſo) denotes the extent of the pious man's bounty, that it is very large and diffuſive, and in a manner unreſtrained; that it reacheth to many places, and is withheld from no perſons within the verge of his power, and opportunity to do good. This practice commonly by a like phraſe (unto which perhaps this word refers) is termed ſowing: He (ſaith Saint Paul) which ſoweth ſparingly, ſhall alſo reap ſparingly; and he which ſoweth bountifully, ſhall alſo reap bountifully. Now, he that ſoweth, having choſen a good ſoil, and a fit ſeaſon, doth not regard one particular ſpot, but throweth all about ſo much as his hand can hold, ſo far as the ſtrength of his arm doth carry. It is likewiſe called watering, (He that watereth, ſaith Solomon, ſhall be watred himſelf:) which expreſſion alſo ſeemeth to import a plentiful and promiſcuous effuſion of good, dropping in ſhowers upon dry and parched places; that is, upon perſons dry for want, or parched with affliction. So the good man doth not plant his bounty in one ſmall hole, or ſpout it on one narrow ſpot, but with an open hand diſſeminates it, with an impartial regard diſtils it all about. He ſtints it not to his own family or relations; to his neighbours or friends, or benefactors; to thoſe of his own ſect and opinion, or of his humour and diſpoſition;

* פזר

Prov. 11. 24.

2 Cor. 9. 6, 10.
Gal. 6. 7, 8.
Prov. 11. 18.

Prov. 11. 25.

diſpoſition ; to ſuch as ſerve him, or oblige him, or pleaſe him ; whom ſome private intereſt ties, or ſome particular affection endears him to : but ſcatters it indifferently and unconfinedly toward all men that need it ; toward mere ſtrangers, yea, toward known enemies ; toward ſuch who never did him any good, or can ever be able to do any ; yea, even toward them who have done evil to him, and may be preſumed ready to do more. Nothing in his neighbour but abſence of need, nothing in himſelf but defect of ability, doth curb or limit his beneficence. In that προθυμία (that proclivity and promptitude of mind) which Saint Paul ſpeaketh of, he doeth good every-where : where-ever a man is, there is a room for his wiſhing well, and doing good, if he can : he obſerves that rule of the Apoſtle, As we have opportunity, let us do good unto all men. So the pious man hath diſperſed. It follows, Ἐὰν ἴδῃς τινὰ κακῶς πράττοντα, μηδὲν περιεργάζου λοιπόν· ἔχει τὸ δικαίωμα τῆς βοηθείας, τοῦ κακῶς παθεῖν αὐτόν.--- τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστι, κἂν Ἕλλην, κἂν Ἰουδαῖος. Chryſ. in Heb. Orat. 10.

2 Cor. 8. 12.

Ubicunque homo eſt, ibi beneficio locus eſt. Sen. de Vit. B. cap. 24.

Gal. 6. 10.

2 Cor. 9. 13.

He hath given to the poor. Theſe words denote the freeneſs of his bounty, and determine the principal object thereof: He not only lendeth (though he alſo doth that upon reaſonable occaſion ; for, A good man, as it is ſaid before in this Pſalm, ſheweth mercy, and lendeth ; and other-where, The righteous is ever merciful, and lendeth ; He I ſay, not only ſometimes willingly lendeth) to thoſe who in time may repay, or requite him ; but he freely giveth to the poor, that is, to thoſe from whom he can expect no retribution back. He doth not (as good and pious, he doth not) preſent the rich : to do ſo is but a cleanly way of begging, or a ſubtile kind of trade ; 'tis hardly courteſie ; 'tis ſurely no bounty ; for ſuch perſons (if they are not very ſordid or very careleſs, and ſuch men are not uſually much troubled with preſents) will it is likely over-do him, or at leaſt will be even with him in kindneſs. In doing this, there is little vertue ; for it, there will be ſmall reward. For, If you do good to them who do good to you, (or whom you conceive able and diſpoſed to requite you,) ποία χάρις, what thanks are due to you ? for that (ſaith our Saviour) even ſinners (even men notoriouſly bad) do the ſame: And if you lend to them from whom you hope to receive, what thanks have you ? for ſinners even lend to ſinners, to receive as much again. All men commonly, the bad no leſs than the good, are apt to be ſuperfluouſly kind in heaping favours on thoſe whom fortune befriends, and whoſe condition requires not their courteſie ; every one almoſt is ready to adopt himſelf into the kindred, or to ſcrue himſelf into the friendſhip of the wealthy and proſperous : but where kindred is of uſe, there it is ſeldom found ; it is commonly ſo deaf, as not to hear when it is call'd ; ſo blind, as not to diſcern its proper object, and natural ſeaſon ; (the time of adverſity, for which a brother is born.) Men diſclaim alliance with the needy, and ſhun his acquaintance ; ſo the Wiſe-man obſerved, All the brethren of the poor do hate him, how much more do his friends go far from him? Thus it is in vulgar practice : but the pious man is more judicious, more juſt, and more generous in the placing of his favours ; he is courteous to purpoſe, he is good to thoſe who need. He, as ſuch, doth not make large entertainments for his friends, his brethren, his kindred, his rich neighbours ; but obſerves that precept of the Lord, When thou makeſt a feaſt call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and thou ſhalt be bleſſed : for they cannot recompenſe thee ; thou ſhalt be recompenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt. Thus the pious man giveth, that is, with a free heart

Pſal. 112. 5.

Pſal. 37. 26.

Qui diviti donat, petit.

He that giveth to the rich ſhall ſurely come to want. Prov. 22. 16.

Luk. 6. 33, 34.

Ὅταν δ' ὁ δαίμων εὖ διδῷ, τί χρὴ φίλων; Ἀρκεῖ γὰρ αὐτὸς ὁ θεὸς ὠφελεῖν θέλων. Eurip. in Oreſt.

Τῶν εὐτυχούντων πάντες εἰσὶ συγγενεῖς.

Prov. 17. 17.

Prov. 19. 7, 4.

Εὖ πράσσε· τὰ φίλων δ' οὐδὲν, ἤν τις δυστυχῇ. Eurip.

Luk. 14. 12, 13, 14.

and pure intention beſtoweth his goods on the indigent, without deſigning any benefit, or hoping for any requital to himſelf; except from God, in conſcience, reſpect and love to whom he doeth it.

It may be alſo material to obſerve the form of ſpeech here uſed, in reference to the time: He hath diſperſed, and he hath given; or, He doth diſperſe, he doth give, (for in the Hebrew Language the paſt and preſet times are not diſtinguiſhed:) which manner of ſpeaking may ſeem to intimate the reality, or the certainty, and the conſtancy of his practice in this kind; for what is paſt or preſent, we are infallibly ſecure of; and in morals, what one is ſaid to have done, or to do, is always underſtood according to habit, or cuſtom. It is not, He will diſperſe, he will give; that were no fit deſcription of a good man; to pretend to, would be no argument of Piety; thoſe words might import uncertainty, and delay in his practice: He that ſaith, I will give, may be fallacious in his profeſſions, may be inconſiſtent with his reſolutions, may wilfully or negligently let ſlip the due ſeaſon of performing it. Our good man is not a Doſon, or Will-give, (like that King of Macedon, who got that name from often ſignifying an intention of giving, but never giving in effect;) he not only purpoſes well, and promiſes fairly for the future, but he hath effectually done it, and perſeveres doing it upon every fit occaſion. He puts not his neighbour into tedious expectations, nor puts him off with frivolous excuſes, ſaying to him, (as it is in the Proverbs) Go and come again, and to morrow I will give, when he hath it by him: he bids him not have patience, or ſays unto him, Depart in peace, when his need is urgent, and his pain impatient, when hunger or cold do then pinch him, when ſickneſs inceſſantly vexeth him, when preſent ſtraits and burthens oppreſs him: But he affordeth a ready, quick, and ſeaſonable relief.

Ἐπεκλήθη δὲ Δώσων ὡς ἐπαγγελτικὸς μὲν, οὐ τελεσιουργὸς δὲ τῆς ὑποσχέσεω. Plut. in Paulo Æmil.

Prov. 3. 28.

Jam. 2. 16.

He hath diſperſed, and given, while he lives, not reſerving the diſpoſal of all at once upon his death, or by his laſt Will; that unwilling Will, whereby men would ſeem to give ſomewhat, when they can keep nothing; drawing to themſelves thoſe commendations and thanks, which are only due to their mortality; when as were they immortal, they would never be liberal: No; it is, he hath freely diſperſed, not an inevitable neceſſity will extort it from him; it cannot be ſaid of him, that he never does well, but when he dies; So he hath done it really and ſurely.

Avarus, niſi cum moritur, nil recte facit. Laber.

He alſo doeth it conſtantly, through all the courſe of his life, whenever good opportunity preſents it ſelf. He doeth it not by fits, or by accident, according to unſtable cauſes or circumſtances moving him, (when bodily temper or humour inclineth him, when a ſad object makes vehement impreſſion on him, when ſhame obligeth him to comply with the practice of others, when he may thereby promote ſome deſign, or procure ſome glory to himſelf) but his practice is conſtant and uniform, being drawn from ſteady principles, and guided by certain rules, proceeding from reverence to God, and good-will toward Man; following the clear dictates and immutable laws of Conſcience. Thus hath the pious man diſperſed, and given to the poor: and let thus much ſuffice for explicatory reflexion upon the firſt words,

The main drift and purport of which is, to repreſent the liberal exerciſing of bounty and mercy, to be the neceſſary duty, the ordinary practice, and the proper character of a truly pious man; ſo that performing ſuch acts, is a good ſign of true Piety; and omitting them, is a certain argument of ungodlineſs. For the demonſtration of which

Points, for exciting us to a practice anſwerable, I ſhall propound ſeveral conſiderations, whereby the plain reaſonableneſs, the great weight, the high worth and excellency of this duty, together with its ſtrict connexion with other principal duties of Piety, will appear. And firſt, I will ſhew with what advantage the Holy Scripture repreſents it to us, or preſſes it upon us.

1. We may conſider, that there is no ſort of duties which God hath I. Head of diſcourſe. more expreſly commanded, or more earneſtly inculcated, than theſe of bounty and mercy toward our brethren; whence evidently the great moment of them, and their high value in God's eſteem may be inferred. Even in the ancient Law, we may obſerve very careful proviſions made for engaging men to works of this kind, and the performance of them is with huge life and urgency preſcribed. Thou ſhalt not harden thy heart, nor ſhut thine hand from thy poor brother.——Thou ſhalt open thy hand wide unto thy brother, unto thy poor, and to thy needy in the land. Deut. 15. 7. Verſ. 11. So did Moſes, in God's name, with language very ſignificant and emphatical, enjoin to the children of Iſrael. The holy prophets alſo do commonly with an eſpecial heat and vigour preſs theſe duties, moſt ſmartly reproving the tranſgreſſion or neglect of them; eſpecially when they reclaim men from their wicked courſes, urging them ſeriouſly to return unto God and goodneſs, they propoſe this practice as a ſingular inſtance moſt expreſſive of their converſion, moſt apt to appeaſe God's wrath, moſt effectual to the recovery of his favour. Waſh you, (ſaith God in Eſay) Eſay 1. 16, 17, 18. Jer. 7. 5, 6. make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes, ceaſe to do evil, learn to do well. So in general he exhorts to repentance: then immediately he ſubjoins theſe choice inſtances thereof: Seek judgment, relieve the oppreſſed, judge the fatherleſs, plead for the widow.—— Come now, (then he adds) let us reaſon together: though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as white as ſnow; though they be red like crimſon, they ſhall be as wool. When Daniel would preſcribe to King Nabuchadnezzar the beſt way of amendment, and the ſureſt means of averting God's Judgments impendent on him, he thus ſpeaks: Wherefore, O King, Dan. 4. 27. *let my counſel be acceptable unto thee; * break off thy ſins by righteouſneſs, and thine iniquities by ſhewing mercy to the poor.* This he cull'd out as of all pious acts chiefly grateful to God, and clearly teſtifying repentance; and, ſo very impious a perſon was Alms able to juſtify, ſays the Father thereupon. So alſo when God himſelf would declare what thoſe acts are which render penitential devotions moſt agreeable to him, and moſt effectual, he thus expreſſeth his mind: Is not this the faſt which I have Iſa. 58. 6, 7. choſen? to looſe the bands of wickedneſs, to undo the heavy burthens, to let the oppreſſed go free, and that ye break every yoak? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are caſt out to thine houſe; when thou ſeeſt the naked, that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thy ſelf from thine own fleſh? Of ſo great conſideration and moment was this ſort of duties, even under that old diſpenſation of weakneſs, ſervility and fear; ſo much tenderneſs of compaſſion and benignity did God exact even from that hard-hearted and worldly people, who were ſo little capable of the beſt rules, and had encouragements, in compariſon, ſo mean toward performances of this nature. The ſame we may well conceive, under the more perfect diſcipline of univerſal amity, of ingenuity, of ſpiritual grace and goodneſs, in a higher ſtrain, with more force and greater obligation to be impoſed on us, who have ſo

* Τὰς ἁμαρτίας σου ἐλεημοσύναις λύτρωσαι· ſo the LXX render thoſe words, reading, it ſeems, פרת for פרק.

Ναβουχοδονόσορ, τὸν τοιοῦτον ἀσεβῆ, ἴσχυσεν ἡ ἐλεημοσύνη δικαιῶσαι. Athan. ad Antioch. Quæſt. 87.

much ſtronger engagements, and immenſly greater encouragements to them. And ſo indeed it is: for thoſe Precepts delivered by our Lord, Luke 12. 33. Sell all that you have, and give alms; If thou wilt be perfect, ſell all that
6. 30. 11. 41. thou haſt, and give to the poor; Give to every man that asketh thee; Trea- Matt. 19. 21. 6. 19. ſure not up to your ſelves treaſures upon the earth, do indeed ſound high, but are not inſignificant, or impertinent. They cannot ſignify or deſign leſs than that we ſhould be always in affection, and diſpoſition of mind, ready to part with any thing we have for the ſuccour of our poor brethren; that to the utmoſt of our ability, (according to moral eſtimation prudently rated,) upon all occaſions we ſhould really expreſs that diſ-poſition in our practice; that we are exceedingly obliged to the continual exerciſe of theſe duties in a very eminent degree. Theſe indeed were the duties which our Lord, as he did frequently in his diſcourſe commend and preſcribe, ſo he did moſt ſignally exemplify in his practice; his whole life being in effect but one continual act of moſt liberal bounty and mercy toward mankind; in charity to whom, he out-did his own ſevereſt rules, being content never to poſſeſs any wealth, never to enjoy any eaſe in this world. And therein (both as to doctrine and 2 Cor. 6. 10. practice) did the holy Apoſtles cloſely follow their Maſter: As poor, yet enriching many; as having nothing, yet poſſeſſing all things. So they throughly in deeds practiſed theſe duties, which in words they taught,
*Rom. 12. 13. and earneſtly preſſed; admoniſhing their Converts to * diſtribute to the † Gal. 6. 10. neceſſities of the Saints, to † do good to all men; || to do good, and to com-
|| Heb. 13. 16. municate not to forget; to ſhew mercy with chearfulneſs, to * put on bowels
* Coloſ. 3. 12. of mercy; to † be kind, and tender-hearted one toward another; to abound
† Eph. 4. 32. 2 Cor. 8. 7. in the grace of liberality. Such are their directions and injunctions to all Chriſtian people; ſo did they preach themſelves, and ſo they enjoined
1 Tim. 6. 17, 18. others to preach. Charge the rich in this world (ſaith Saint Paul to his Scholar Timothy) that they do good, that they be rich in good works, rea- dy to diſtribute, willing to communicate: and, Theſe things (ſaith he like-Tit. 3. 8. wiſe adviſing Biſhop Titus) I will that thou affirm conſtantly, that they which believe in God may be careful to maintain good works: what good works he meaneth, the reaſon adjoined doth ſhew; For theſe things (ſaith he) are good and profitable unto men.

2. It is indeed obſervable, that as in every kind that which is moſt excellent doth commonly aſſume to it ſelf the name of the whole kind; ſo among the parts of righteouſneſs, (which word is uſed to comprehend all vertue and goodneſs) this of exerciſing bounty and mercy is peculiarly called righteouſneſs; ſo that righteouſneſs and mercifulneſs, (or alms-deeds) the righteous and bountiful perſon, are in Scripture-expreſſion ordinarily confounded, as it were, or undiſtinguiſhably put one for the other; it being often, when commendations are given to righteouſneſs, and rewards promiſed to righteous perſons, hard to diſcern, whether the general obſervance of God's law, or the ſpecial practice of theſe duties, are concerned in them. Likewiſe works of this nature are in way of peculiar excellency termed good works; and to perform them is uſually ſty-
* Acts 9. 36. led to do good, and to do well; (* ἀγαθὸν ἐργάζεσθαι, † καλὸν ποιεῖν, || ἀ-
1 Tim. 5. 10. γαθοεργεῖν, * ἀγαθοποιεῖν, † εὐποιεῖν, || εὐεργετεῖν, are words applied to
1 Tim. 6. 18. this purpoſe) which manners of expreſſion do argue the eminent digni-
Tit. 3. 8, 14. 2 Cor. 9. 8. ty of theſe performances.

Gal. 6. † 9. || 10. 3. We may alſo conſequently mark, that in thoſe places of Scripture
* Luk. 6. 35. where the divine law is abridged, and religion ſumm'd up into a few † Heb. 13. 16. particulars of main importance, theſe duties conſtantly make a part: ſo || Act. 10. 38. when the Prophet Micah briefly reckons up thoſe things which are beſt in the Law, and chiefly required by God, the whole catalogue of them conſiſting but of three particulars, mercy comes in for one; He hath Micah 6. 8. ſhewed thee, O man, (ſaith he) what is good: and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſtly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God? Likewiſe of thoſe (βαρύτερα τȣ̃ νόμȣ, thoſe) more ſubſtantial and weighty things of God's law, the neglect of which our Saviour objecteth as an argument of impiety, and a cauſe of wo, to thoſe pretending Zelots, this is one: Wo unto you, Scribes and Phariſees, Hypocrites; for ye Matt. 23. 23. pay tythe of Mint and Cumin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the Law, Judgment, Mercy and Faith. The ſum of Saint John the Baptiſt his inſtruction of the people is by Saint Luke reduced to this point; The people asked him, ſaying, What ſhall we do? He anſwering, ſaith Luk. 3. 10, 11. unto them, He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewiſe. Saint James his Syſteme of Religion in this; Pure and undefiled Religion before God and the Father Jam. 1. 27. is this, to viſit the fatherleſs and widow in their affliction, (that is, to comfort and relieve all diſtreſſed and helpleſs perſons,) and to keep himſelf unſpotted from the world. Saint Paul ſeems to be yet more compendious and cloſe: Bear ye (ſaith he) one another's burthens, and ſo fulfil Gal. 6. 2. the Law of Chriſt. Yea, God himſelf compriſeth all the ſubſtantial part of Religion herein, when comparing it with the circumſtantial part, he ſaith, I will have mercy and not ſacrifice. Hoſ. 6. 6.
the

4. It is in like manner conſiderable, that in the general deſcriptions of piety and goodneſs, the practice of theſe duties is ſpecified, as a grand ingredient of them. In this Pſalm, where ſuch a deſcription is intended, it is almoſt the only particular inſtance; and it is not only mentioned, but reiterated in divers forms of expreſſion. In the 37. Pſalm it is affirmed, Pſal. 37. 21, 26. and repeated, that The righteous ſheweth mercy; he ſheweth mercy, and giveth; he ſheweth mercy, and lendeth. The righteous giveth, and ſpareth not. Prov. 21. 26. In the Proverbs, 'tis a commendation of the vertuous woman, whoſe price is far above rubies, that She ſtretcheth out her hand to the poor, yea ſtretcheth forth both her hands to the needy. Prov. 31. 20. And in Ezekiel (which is eſpecially remarkable) the 18. Chapter, where the principal things conſtituting a pious man are, more than once profeſſedly enumerated, this among a very few other particulars is expreſſed, and taketh up much room in the account; of ſuch a perſon (who ſhall ſurely live, and not die, that is, who certainly ſhall abide in God's favour, and enjoy the happy conſequences thereof) it is ſuppoſed, that he neither hath oppreſſed any, nor hath withholden the pledge, nor hath ſpoiled by violence; but hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered Ezek. 18. 7, 16. the naked with a garment, and hath taken off his hand from the poor.

5. Alſo in the particular Hiſtories of good men this ſort of practice is ſpecially taken notice of, and expreſſed in their characters. In the ſtory of our Father Abraham, his benignity to ſtrangers, and hoſpitableneſs, Heb. 13. 2 is remarkable among all his deeds of goodneſs, being propounded to us as a pattern and encouragement to the like practice. In this the Conſcience of Job did ſolace it ſelf, as in a ſolid aſſurance of his integrity: I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherleſs, and him that Job 29. 12, 13, 15. had none to help him. The bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh came upon me, and I cauſed the widow's heart to ſing. I was eyes to the blind, and feet I was to the lame; I was a father to the poor. Did not I weep for him Job 30. 25. that was in trouble? was not my ſoul grieved for the poor? Hence alſo did the good Publican recommend himſelf to the favour and approbation of our Saviour, ſaying, Behold, Lord, half of my goods I give to the poor: hence Luk. 19. 8, 9. did ſalvation come to his houſe: hence he is proclaimed a ſon of Abraham.

Of Dorcas, that good woman, who was ſo gracious and pretious among the Diſciples, this is the commendation and character; She was full of good works, and alms-deeds which ſhe did; ſuch practice made her capable of that favour, ſo great and extraordinary, the being reſtored to life; at leaſt in Saint Chryſoſtom's judgment: The force of her alms, ſaith he, did conquer the tyranny of death. Cornelius alſo, that excellent perſon, who was, though a Gentile ſo acceptable to God, and had ſo extraordinary graces conferred on him, is thus repreſented; He was a devout man, and one that feared God, with all his houſe, who gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway. We may add, that to be hoſpitable (one branch of theſe duties, and inferring the reſt) is reckoned a qualification of thoſe who are to be the Guides and Patterns of goodneſs unto others. And particularly, one fit to be promoted to a widow's office in the Church is thus deſcribed: well reported of for good works; if ſhe have brought up children; if ſhe have lodged ſtrangers; if ſhe have waſhed the Saints feet; if ſhe have relieved the afflicted; if ſhe have diligently followed every good work.

Acts 9. 36.

Ἡ τῆς ἐλεημοσύνης δύναμις ἐνίκησε θανάτου τὴν τυραννίδα. Chryſ. in Gen. Orat. 55.

Acts 10. 2.

1 Tim. 3. 2. Tit. 1. 8.

1 Tim. 5. 10.

6. So near to the heart of Piety doth the holy Scripture lay the practice of theſe duties: and no wonder; for it often expreſly declares Charity to be the fulfilling of God's Law, as the beſt expreſſion of all our duty toward God, of faith in him, love and reverence of him, and as either formally containing, or naturally producing all our duty toward our neighbour. And of Charity, works of bounty and mercy are both the chief inſtances, and the plaineſt ſigns: for whereas all Charity doth conſiſt either in mental deſire, or in verbal ſignification, or in effectual performance of good to our neighbour; this laſt is the end, the completion, and the aſſurance of the reſt. Good-will is indeed the root of Charity; but that lies under-ground, and out of ſight; nor can we conclude its being or life without viſible fruits of beneficence. Good words are at beſt but fair leaves thereof, ſuch as may (and too often do) proceed from a weak and barren diſpoſition of mind. But theſe good works are real fruits, (ſo Saint Paul calls them; Let ours alſo, ſaith he, learn to maintain good works for neceſſary uſes, that they be not unfruitful) which declare a true life, and a good ſtrength of charity in the bearer of them: by them τὸ γνήσιον τῆς ἀγάπης, the ſincerity (or genuineneſs) of our charity is proved. For as no man ever doth impreſs a falſe ſtamp on the fineſt metal; ſo coſtly charity is ſeldom counterfeit. It is to decline ſpending their goods, or their pains, that men forge and feign; pretending to make up in wiſhing well, the defect of doing ſo, and paying words inſtead of things: but he that freely imparts what he hath, or can do for his neighbour's good, needs no other argument to evince that he loves in good earneſt, nor can indeed well uſe any other: for words, if actions are wanting, ſeem abuſive; and if actions are preſent, they are ſuperfluous. Wherefore Saint John thus advices; My little children, let us not love in word, or in tongue, (ἀλλ' ἔργῳ) but in work and in truth. To love in work, and to love in truth, he ſignifies to be the ſame thing; and to pretend love in ſpeech, without practiſing it in deed, he implies not allowable. And Saint James in way of compariſon ſays, that as faith without works is dead, ſo love without beneficence is uſeleſs. For, If a brother or ſiſter be naked, and deſtitute of daily food, and one of you ſay unto him, Depart in peace, be you warmed and filled, notwithſtanding ye give them not thoſe things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit? Even ſo faith without works is dead. Cold wiſhes of good, working no real benefit to our neighbour, and a faint aſſent unto truth Gal. 5. 14. Rom. 13. 9, 10. 1 Tim. 1. 5. Matth. 7. 12.

Ἐπίτασις ἀγάπης ὁ ἔλεος. Greg. Nyſſ. in Matth. 5. 7.

Tit. 3. 14. Rom. 15. 28. Phil. 4. 17.

2 Cor. 8. 8.

1 John 3. 18.

Jam. 2. 15, 16, 17.

truth, producing no conſtant obedience to God, are things near of kin, and of like value; both of little worth or uſe. Charity then being the main point of Religion, mercy and bounty being the chief parts of Charity, well may theſe duties be placed in ſo high a rank, according to the divine Heraldry of Scripture.

7. To enforce which obſervations, and that we may be farther certified about the weight and worth of theſe duties, we may conſider, that to the obſervance of them moſt ample and excellent rewards are aſſigned; that in return for what we beſtow on our poor brethren, God hath promiſed all ſorts of the beſt mercies and bleſſings to us. The beſt of all good things, (that which in David's opinion was better than life it ſelf,) Pſal. 63. 3. the fountain of all bleſſings (God's love and favour, or mercy) is procured thereby, or is annexed to it. For, God loveth a chearful giver, 2 Cor. 9. 7. ſaith Saint Paul; and, The merciful ſhall obtain mercy, ſaith our Saviour; Matth. 5. 7. and, Mercy rejoyceth againſt judgment, (or boaſteth, and triumpheth Jam. 2. 13. over it; ἔλεος κατακαυχᾶται κρίσεως· that is, it appeaſeth God's wrath, and prevents our condemnation and puniſhment,) ſaith Saint James; Matth. 6. 14. God will not continue diſpleaſed with him, nor will withhold his mercy from him, who is kind and merciful to his neighbour. 'Tis true, if rightly underſtood, what the Hebrew Wiſe-man ſaith, Water will quench Ecclus. 3. 39. a flaming fire, and alms maketh an atonement for ſins. For this practice Si nudum veſtias, teipſum induis juſtitiam. Ambr. Offic. 1. 11. Hier. in Pſalm. 133. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Orat. 55. hath the nature and name of a Sacrifice, and is declared, as ſuch, both in excellency and efficacy to ſurpaſs all other Sacrifices; to be moſt acceptable to God, moſt available for expiation of guilt, moſt effectual in obtaining mercy and favour. Other ſacrifices performed in obedience to God's appointment (on virtue of our Lord's perfect obedience, and with regard to his pure Sacrifice of himſelf) did in their way propitiate God, and atone ſin; but this hath an intrinſick worth, and a natural aptitude to thoſe purpoſes. Other obligations did ſignify a willingneſs to render a due homage to God; this really and immediately performs it. They were ſhadows or images well reſembling that duty, (parting with any thing we have for the ſake of God, and for purchaſing his favour,) whereof this is the body and ſubſtance. This is therefore preferr'd as in it ſelf excelling the reſt, and more eſtimable in God's ſight; ſo that in compariſon or competition therewith, the other ſeem to be ſlighted and rejected. I will (ſaith God) have mercy, and not ſacrifice: and, Will Hoſ. 6. 6. the Lord be pleaſed with thouſands of rams, or with ten thouſands of rivers Micah. 6. 7. of oyl? Will he, that is, he will not be pleaſed with ſuch ſacrifices, if they be abſtracted from the more delightful ſacrifices of bounty and mercy. God never made an exception againſt theſe, or derogated from them in any caſe; they abſolutely and perpetually are (as Saint Paul Phil. 4. 18. ſpeaketh) Odours of a ſweet ſmell, ſacrifices acceptable and well-pleaſing to God. And the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſeconds him: To do good, ſaith Heb. 13. 16. he, and to communicate, forget not; for with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed. By theſe, all other works and all enjoyments are ſanctified; for, Give alms (ſaith our Lord) of what you have, and behold all things are Luke. 11. 41. pure unto you. Such charitable perſons are therefore frequently pronounced bleſſed, that is in effect inſtated in a confluence of all good things. Bleſſed is he that conſidereth the poor, ſays the Pſalmiſt; and, He that Pſalm. 41. 1. hath a bountiful eye, is bleſſed, ſaith Solomon; and, He that hath mercy Prov. 22. 9. on the poor, happy is he, ſaith the Wiſe-man again; and, Bleſſed are the Prov. 14. 21. merciful, Matth. 5. 7. ſaith our Lord himſelf. So in groſs and generally. Particularly alſo, and in retail, the greateſt bleſſings are expreſly allotted to this practice: proſperity in all our affairs is promiſed thereto. Thou (ſaith Deut. 15. 10. Moſes)

Moſes) ſhalt ſurely give thy poor brother, and thine heart ſhall not be grieved that thou giveſt unto him; becauſe that for this thing the Lord thy God ſhall bleſs thee in all thy works, and in all that thou putteſt thine hand unto. Stability in a good condition is ordinarily conſequent thereon: ſo the Prophet Daniel implies, when, adviſing King Nebuchadnezzar to theſe Dan. 4. 27. works, he adds, If it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity. Deliverance from evil incumbent, protection in imminent danger, and ſupport in afflictions, are the ſure rewards thereof: ſo the Pſalmiſt aſſures us; Pſalm. 41. 1. &c. Bleſſed (ſaith he) is he that conſidereth the poor: The Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preſerve him and keep him alive, and he ſhall be bleſſed upon earth; and thou wilt not deliver him into the will of his enemies. The Lord will ſtrengthen him upon the bed of languiſhing; thou wilt make all his bed in his ſickneſs. Security from all want is likewiſe a recompence proper thereto: for, Prov. 28. 27. He that giveth to the poor ſhall not lack, ſaith the Wiſe-man. Iſa. 58. 10, 11, 12. If thou draw out thy ſoul to the hungry, and ſatisfy the afflicted ſoul, then ſhall thy light ariſe in obſcurity, &c. Thriving in wealth and eſtate is another ſpecial reward: for, Prov. 11. 25. The liberal ſoul ſhall be made fat; the ſame Author gives us his word for it. Even of the good things here below, to thoſe who for his ſake in this or any other way do Matt. 19. 29. let go houſes or lands, our Lord promiſeth the return of a hundred-fold, either in kind, or in value. So great encouragements are annexed to this practice even in relation to the concernments of this tranſitory life: but to them beſide God hath deſtinated rewards incomparably more conſiderable and precious, ſpiritual and eternal rewards, treaſures of heavenly wealth, crowns of endleſs glory, the perfection of joy and bliſs to be diſpenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt. Luke. 14. 14. Matt. 19. 29. Mark 10. 29, 30. He that for my ſake hath left houſes or lands, ſhall receive a hundred-fold now at this time, (or in this preſent life,) and in the world to come ſhall inherit everlaſting life; ſo infallible Truth hath aſſured us. They who perform theſe duties are ſaid to Luke 12. 33. make themſelves bags, which wax not old, a treaſure that faileth not in the heavens; to Luke 16. 9. make themſelves friends of the unrighteous mammon, who, when they fail, (when they depart, and leave their earthly wealth,) will receive them into everlaſting habitations; to 1 Tim. 6. 19. lay up in ſtore for themſelves a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life: Such rewards are promiſed to the obſervers.

8. And correſpondently grievous puniſhments are deſigned and denounced to the tranſgreſſours of theſe duties; the worſt of miſeries is their portion and doom: they, for being ſuch, do forfeit God's love and favour; they loſe his bleſſing and protection; they can have no ſure poſſeſſion, nor any comfortable enjoyment of their eſtate; for, Jam. 2. 13. He (ſaith Saint James) ſhall have judgment without mercy, who ſheweth no mercy. And of ſuch a perſon it is ſaid in Job, Job 20. 18, 19. That which he laboureth for he ſhall reſtore, and ſhall not ſwallow it down: according to his ſubſtance ſhall the reſtitution be, and he ſhall not rejoyce therein; becauſe he hath oppreſſed, and forſaken the poor. (Not only becauſe he hath unjuſtly oppreſſed, but becauſe he hath uncharitably forſaken the poor.) If by the divine forbearance ſuch perſons do ſeem to enjoy a fair portion in this Pſal. 17. 14. life, (proſpering in the world, and increaſing in riches,) Pſal. 73. 12. they will find a ſad reckoning behind in the other world: this will be the reſult of that Luke 6. 24. Audit; Wo be unto you, rich men, for you have received your conſolation; (ſuch rich men are meant, who have got, or kept, or uſed their wealth baſely; who have detained all the conſolation it yields to themſelves, Luke 16. 25. and imparted none to others;) and, Remember, ſon, thou didſt receive thy good things in this life; (ſo didſt receive them, as to ſwallow them, and ſpend them here, without any proviſion or regard for the future in the uſe of them;) and, Caſt that unprofitable ſervant (who made no good uſe of his Talent) into utter darkneſs. Such will be the fate of every one that treaſures up to himſelf, and is not rich unto God; not rich in Piety and Charity, not rich in performing for God's ſake works of bounty and mercy.

Matt. 25. 30.
Luke 12. 21.

9. It is indeed moſt conſiderable, that at the final reckoning, when all mens actions ſhall be ſtrictly ſcann'd, and juſtly ſentenced according to their true deſert, a ſpecial regard will be had to the diſcharge or neglect of theſe duties. It is the bountiful and merciful perſons, who have relieved Chriſt in his poor members and brethren, who in that day will appear to be the ſheep at the right hand, and ſhall hear the good Shepherd's voice uttering thoſe joyful words, Come, ye bleſſed of my Father, enter into the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat; I was thirſty, and ye gave me drink; I was a ſtranger, and ye took me in; I was naked, and ye cloathed me; I was ſick, and ye viſited me; I was in priſon, and ye came unto me. He doth not ſay, Becauſe you have made goodly profeſſions, becauſe you have been orthodox in your opinions, becauſe you have frequented religious Exerciſes, (have prayed often and long, have kept many Faſts, and heard many Sermons,) becauſe you have been ſtaunch in your converſations, becauſe you have been punctual in your dealings, becauſe you have maintained a ſpecious guiſe of piety, ſobriety and juſtice; (although, indeed, he that will come off well at that great Tryal, muſt be reſponſible, and able to yield a good account in reſpect to all thoſe particulars;) but, Becauſe you have been charitably benign and helpful to perſons in need and diſtreſs, therefore bleſſed are you, therefore enter into the Kingdom of glorious bliſs prepared for ſuch perſons. This proceeding more than intimates, that in the judgment of our Lord no ſort of vertue or good practice is to be preferred before that of charitable bounty; or rather that, in his eſteem, none is equal thereto: ſo that if the queſtion were put to him, which is one of them to Antiochus, (in Athanaſius his works,) Which is the moſt eminent Virtue? our Lord would reſolve it no otherwiſe than is done by that Father, affirming, that mercifulneſs is the Queen of Vertues; for that, at the final account, the examination chiefly proceeds upon that; it is made the ſpecial touchſtone of piety, and the peculiar ground of happineſs. On the other ſide, thoſe who have been deficient in theſe performances (uncharitable and unmerciful perſons) will at the laſt Tryal appear to be the wretched Goats on the left hand, unto whom this uncomfortable ſpeech ſhall by the great Judge be pronounced, Depart from me, ye curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels: for I was hungry, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirſty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a ſtranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye cloathed me not; ſick and in priſon, and ye viſited me not. It is not, we may ſee, for having done that which in this world is called rapine or wrong, for having pillaged or couzened their neighbour, for having committed adultery or murther, or any other thing prohibited, that theſe unhappy men are ſaid to be formerly impeached, and finally condemned to that miſerable doom; but for having been unkind and unmerciful to their poor brethren: this at that high Tribunal, will paſs for a moſt enormous crime, for

Matt. 25. 34, &c.
Athanaſius Tom. 2.
Matt. 25. 41, &c.

Οὐχ ὅτι διηρπάκασιν, οὐδ' ὅτι σεσυλήκασιν, οὐ μεμοιχεύκασιν, ἢ ἄλλο τι τῶν ἀπηγορευμένων πεποιήκασιν, ταύτην τὴν τάξιν κατακριθέντες, ἀλλ' ὅτι μὴ Χριστὸν διὰ τῶν δεομένων τεθεραπεύκασιν. Greg. Naz. Orat. 16.

for the capital offence; for this it is that they ſhall be curſed, and caſt down into a wretched conſortſhip with thoſe malicious and mercileſs Friends, unto whoſe diſpoſition they did ſo nearly approach.

Thus it appears how mighty a ſtreſs God in the holy Scripture doth lay upon theſe duties, ſo peremptorily commanding them, ſo vehemently preſſing them, ſo highly commending them, ſo graciouſly by promiſes alluring us to the performance, ſo dreadfully by threatnings deterring us from the neglect of them. What an affront then will it be to God's authority, what a diſtruſt to his word, what a contempt of his power, his juſtice, his wiſdom, what a deſpight to his goodneſs and mercy, if, notwithſtanding all theſe declarations of his will and purpoſes, we ſhall preſume to be uncharitable in this kind? There are alſo conſiderations (very many, very clear, and very ſtrong) which diſcover the great reaſonableneſs and equity of theſe Laws, with our indiſpenſable obligation to obey them; the which indeed with greater force do exact theſe duties from us, and do more earneſtly plead in the poor man's behalf, than he can beg or cry. If we either look up unto God, or down upon our poor neighbour, if we reflect upon our ſelves, or conſider our wealth it ſelf, every-where we may diſcern various reaſons obliging us, and various motives inducing us to the practice of theſe duties.

In regard to God.

II. Head of diſcourſe. 1. We may conſider, that by exerciſing of bounty and mercy, we are kind and courteous to God himſelf; by neglecting thoſe duties, we are unkind and rude to him: for that what of good or evil is by us done to the poor, God interprets and accepts as done to himſelf. The poor have a peculiar relation to God; he openly and frequently profeſſeth himſelf their eſpecial friend, patron and protectour; he is much concerned in, and particularly chargeth his providence with their ſupport. In effect therefore they ſhall ſurely be provided for, one way or other, (The Pſal. 22. 26. poor ſhall eat and be ſatisfied; God will ſave the afflicted people; The Lord 18, 27. 146. 9. preſerveth the ſtrangers, he relieveth the fatherleſs and widow. When the
Iſa. 41. 17. poor and needy ſeek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirſt, I the Lord will hear them, I the God of Iſrael will not forſake them:) But out of goodneſs to us, he chuſeth, (if it may be, we freely concurring therein,) and beſt liketh, that it ſhould be done by our hands; this conducing no leſs to our benefit, than to theirs; we thereby having opportunity to ſhew our reſpect to himſelf, and to lay an engagement on him to do us good. God therefore lendeth the poor man his own name, and alloweth him to crave our ſuccour for his ſake. (When the poor man asketh us in God's name, or for God's ſake, he doth not uſurp or forge, he hath good authority, and a true ground for doing ſo: God gives him credit from himſelf unto us for what he wants, and bids us charge what he receiveth on his own account; permitting us to reckon him obliged thereby, and to write him our debtor; engaging his own word and reputation duly to repay, fully to ſatisfy us. He Prov. 19. 17. that hath pity on the poor, lendeth to the Lord; and that which he hath Matt. 25. 40, 45. given, will he pay him again, ſaith the Wiſe-man: and, Inaſmuch as ye have done it to the leaſt of my brethren, ye have done it unto me, ſaith our Heb. 6. 10. Saviour: and, God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have ſhewed toward his name, in that ye have miniſtred to the ſaints, and do miniſter, ſaith the Apoſtle. What therefore we give to the poor, God accepteth as an expreſſion of kindneſs to himſelf, being given to one of his friends and clients, in reſpect to him; he regards it as a teſtimony of friendly confidence in him, ſignifying that we have a good opinion of him, that we take him for able and willing to requite a good turn, that we dare take his word, and think our goods ſafe enough in his cuſtody. But if we ſtop our ears, or ſhut our hands from the poor, God interprets it as a harſh repulſe, and an hainous affront put upon himſelf: we doing it to one who bears his name, and wears his livery, (for the poor man's rags are badges of his relation unto God,) he thereby judges, that we have little good-will, little reſpect, little compaſſion toward himſelf: ſince we vouchſafe not to grant him ſo mean a favour, ſince we refuſe at his requeſt, and (as it were) in his need, to accommodate him with a ſmall ſum, he juſtly reputes it as an argument of unkindly diffidence in him, that we have ſorry thoughts of him deeming him no good correſpondent, little valuing his word, ſuſpecting his goodneſs, his truth, or his ſufficiency.

2. We by practiſing thoſe duties are juſt, by omitting them are very unjuſt toward God. For our goods, our wealth, and our eſtate, are indeed none of them ſimply or properly our own, ſo that we have an abſolute property in them, or an entire diſpoſal of them: no, we are utterly incapable of ſuch a right unto them, or power over them: God neceſſarily is the true and abſolute proprietary of them. They are called Eccles. 5. 19. 6. 2.
the gifts of God; but we muſt not underſtand that God, by giving them to us, hath parted with his own right to them: they are depoſited with us in truſt, not alienated from him; they are commited to us as ſtewards, not transferred upon us as maſters: they are ſo ours, that we have no authority to uſe them according to our will or fancy, but are obliged to manage them according to God's direction and order. He by right immutable is Lord paramount of all his Creation; every thing unalienably belongs to him upon many accounts. He out of nothing made all things at firſt, and to every Creature through each moment a new being is conferr'd by his preſervative influence: originally therefore he is Lord of all things, and continually a new title of dominion over every thing ſpringeth up unto him: it is his always, becauſe he always maketh it. We our ſelves are naturally mere ſlaves and vaſſals to him: as we can never be our own, (maſters of our ſelves, of our lives, of our liberties,) ſo cannot we ever properly be owners of any thing; there are no poſſible means by which we can acquire any abſolute title to the leaſt mite; the principal right to what we ſeem to get, according to all law and reaſon, accrueth to our Maſter. All things about us, by which we live, with which we work and trade, the earth which ſupports and feeds Pſal. 24. 1. 50. 12. 89. 11. 95. 5.
us, and furniſheth us with all commodities, the Air we breath, the Sun and Stars which cheriſh our life, are all of them his, his productions and his poſſeſſions, ſubſiſting by his pleaſure, ſubject to his diſpoſal. How then can any thing be ours? How can we ſay with the fooliſh Churl Nabal, Shall I take my bread, and my water, and my fleſh, and give it? 1 Sam. 25. 11.
Thine? O inconſiderate man! How cam'ſt thou by it? how doſt thou hold it? Didſt thou make it? or doſt thou preſerve it? Canſt thou claim any thing by nature? No, thou broughteſt nothing with thee into the world, thou didſt not bring thy ſelf hither. Canſt thou challenge any thing to thy ſelf from chance? No, for there is no ſuch thing as chance, all things being guided and governed by God's providence. Doſt thou conceive thy induſtry can entitle thee to any thing? Thou art miſtaken, for all the wit and ſtrength thou applieſt, the head thou contriveſt with, and the Sed ais, Quid injuſtum eſt, ſi cùm aliena non invadam, propria diligentiùs ſervem? O impudens dictum! propria dicis? quæ? ex quibus reconditis in hunc mundum detuliſti? Ambroſ.

hands thou workeſt with, are God's; all the ſucceſs thou findeſt did wholly depend on him, was altogether derived from him; all thy projects were vain, all thy labours would be fruitleſs, did not he aſſiſt and bleſs thee. Thou doſt vainly and falſly lift up thine heart, and forget the Lord thy God, when as thy herds and flocks multiply, and thy ſilver and gold is multiplied, and all that thou haſt is multiplied; if thou ſayeſt in thy heart, My power and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth. But thou muſt remember the Lord thy God, for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth. [——Who am I (ſaith David) and what is my people, that we ſhould be able to offer ſo willingly after this ſort? for all things come of thee; and of thine own have we given thee, 1 Chron. 29. 14.] Since then upon all ſcores every thing we have doth appertain to God, he may without any injury recal or reſume whatever he pleaſeth; and while he letteth any thing abide with us, we cannot juſtly uſe it otherwiſe than he hath appointed, we cannot duly apply it otherwiſe than to his intereſt and ſervice. God then having enjoyned, that after we have ſatisfied our neceſſities, and ſupplied our reaſonable occaſions, we ſhould employ the reſt to the relief of our poor neighbours; that * if we have two coats, (one more than we need) we ſhould impart one to him that hath none; if we have meat abundant, that we likewiſe communicate to him that wants it: God by the poor man's voice (or by his need and miſery) demanding his own from us, we are very unjuſt if we preſume to withhold it; doubly unjuſt we are, both toward God, and toward our neighbour: we are unfaithful ſtewards, miſapplying the goods of our maſter, and croſſing his order: we are wrongful uſurpers, detaining from our neighbour that which God hath allotted him: we are in the court of Conſcience, we ſhall appear at the bar of God's Judgment no better than robbers, (under vizards of legal right and poſſeſſion) ſpoiling our poor brother of his goods; his, I ſay, by the very ſame title as any thing can be ours, by the free donation of God, fully and frequently expreſſed, as we have ſeen in his holy Word. (He cannot take it away by violence or ſurreption againſt our will, but we are bound willingly to yield it up to him; to do that, were diſorder in him; to refuſe this, is wrong in us.) * 'Tis the hungry man's bread which we hoard up in our barns, 'tis his meat on which we glut, and his drink which we guzzle. 'Tis the naked man's apparel which we ſhut up in our preſſes, or which we exorbitantly ruffle and flaunt in: 'tis the needy perſon's gold and ſilver which we cloſely hide in our cheſts, or ſpend idly, or put out to uſeleſs uſe. We are in thus holding, or thus ſpending, truly πλεονέκται, not only covetous, but wrongful, or havers of more than our own, againſt the will of the right owners; plainly violating that precept of Solomon, Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thy hand to do it. If we are ambitious of having a property in ſomewhat, or affect to call any thing our own, 'tis only by nobly giving that we can accompliſh our deſire; that will certainly appropriate our goods to our uſe and benefit: but from baſely keeping, or vainly embezelling them, they become

Deut. 8. 13, 14, 17, 18.

Aliena rapere convincitur, qui ultra neceſſaria ſibi retinere probatur. Hieron.

Quicquid Deus pluſquam opus eſt dederit, non nobis ſpecialiter dedit, ſed per nos aliis erogandum tranſmiſit; quod ſi non dederimus, res alienas invaſimus. Aug. Serm. 219. de Temp.

* Luke 3. 11.

Proprium nemo dicat quod commune; plus quàm ſufficeret ſumptui violenter obtentum eſt. Ambroſ.

Σὺ δ' οὐκ ἀποστερητὴς, ἃ πρὸς οἰκονομίαν ἐδέξω, ταῦτα ἴδια σαυτοῦ ποιούμενος; Baſ. M.

* Noſtrum eſt (pauperes clamant) quod effunditis; nobis crudeliter ſubtrahitur, quod inaniter expenditur. Bern. Epiſt. 42.

Prov. 3. 27.

Omne quod malè poſſidetur alienum eſt; malè autem poſſidet, qui malè utitur. Auguſt. Epb. 54.

come not our poſſeſſion and enjoyment, but our theft and our bane. (Theſe things, ſpoken after the holy Fathers, wiſe inſtructors in matters of piety, are to be underſtood with reaſonable temperament, and practiſed with honeſt prudence. I cannot ſtand to diſcuſs caſes, and remove ſcruples; a pious charity will eaſily diſcern its due limits and meaſures, both declining perplexity, and not evading duty. The ſum is, that juſtice towards God and man obligeth us, not to ſuffer our poor brother to periſh, or pine away for want, when we ſurfeit and ſwim in plenty, or not to ſee him lack neceſſaries, when we are well able to relieve him.)

3. Shewing bounty and mercy are the moſt proper and the principal expreſſions of our gratitude unto God; ſo that in omitting them, we are not only very unjuſt, but highly ingrateful. Innumerable are the benefits, favours and mercies, (both common and private,) which God hath beſtowed on us, and doth continually beſtow: he inceſſantly ſhowrs down bleſſings on our heads; he daily loadeth us with his benefits; Pſal. 68. 19.
he perpetually crowneth us with loving-kindneſs and tender mercies: all Pſal. 103. 4.
that we are, all that we have, all that we can hope for of good, is alone from his free bounty: our beings and lives, with all the conveniences and comforts of them, we entirely owe to him as to our Maker, our Preſerver, our conſtant Benefactor: all the excellent privileges we enjoy, and all the glorious hopes we have as Chriſtians, we alſo ſtand indebted for purely to his undeſerved mercy and grace. And, What ſhall Pſal. 116. 12.
we render unto the Lord for all his benefits towards us? Shall we render him nothing? ſhall we refuſe him any thing? ſhall we boggle at making returns ſo inconſiderable, in regard to what he hath done for us? What is a little gold, or ſilver, or braſs perhaps, which our poor neighbour craveth of us, in compariſon to our life, our health, our reaſon; to all accommodations of our body, and all endowments of our mind? What are all the goods in the world to the love and favour of God, to the pardon of our ſins, to the gifts of God's Spirit, to the dignity of being the children of God, and heirs of ſalvation; to the being freed from extreme miſeries, and made capable of eternal felicity? And doth not this unexpreſſible goodneſs, do not all theſe ineſtimable benefits require ſome correſpondent thankfulneſs? Are we not obliged, ſhall we not be willing to exhibit ſome real teſtimony thereof? And what other can we exhibit beſide this? We cannot directly or immediately requite God, for he cannot ſo receive any thing from us; he is not capable of being himſelf enriched or exalted, of being any-wiſe pleaſured or bettered by us, who is in himſelf infinitely ſufficient, glorious, joyful and happy: Our goodneſs extends not to him; A man cannot be profitable to his maker. All Pſal. 16. 2. that we can do in this kind, is thus indirectly, in the perſons of his Job 22. 2.
poor relations, to gratify him, imparting at his deſire, and for his ſake, ſomewhat of what he hath beſtowed on us, upon them. Such a thankful return we owe unto God, not only for what he hath given us, but even for the capacity of giving to others; for that we are in the number of thoſe who can afford relief, and who need not to demand it. Our very wealth and proſperous ſtate ſhould not ſeem to us ſo contemptible things, that we ſhould be unwilling to render ſomewhat back in grateful reſentment for them: the very act of giving is it ſelf no mean benefit; (having ſo much of honour in it, ſo much of pleaſure

Δός τι Θεῷ χαριστήριον, ὅτι τῶν εὖ ποιεῖν δυναμένων ἐγένου, ἀλλ' οὐ τῶν εὖ παθεῖν δεομένων. Naz.

— τὸν φιλάνθρωπον ὑμνῆσαι δεσπότην, ὅτι τοῖς ἀλλοτρίοις ἡμᾶς σωφρονίζει παθήμασι, καὶ οὐχ ἡμᾶς εἰς ἑτέρων παρέπεμψεν οἰκίας, ἀλλ' εἰς τὰς ἡμετέρας ἄλλους ἤγαγε θύρας. Theod. Ep. 30.

Εἰ δὲ μὴ νομίζεις λαμβάνειν μᾶλλον, ἢ διδόναι, μὴ παράσχῃς. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Orat. 54.

Nec enim homo Deo præſtat beneficium in his quæ dederit, ſed Deus his homini quæ acceperit. Salvian.

going with it, ſo much of reward following it;) we receive far more than we return in giving; for which therefore it is fit that we ſhould return our gratitude, and conſequently that we ſhould perform theſe duties. For indeed without this practice, no other expreſſion of gratitude can be true in it ſelf, or can be acceptable to God. We may ſeem abundantly to thank him in words; but a ſparing hand gives the lie to the fulleſt mouth: we may ſpare our breath, if we keep back our ſubſtance: for all our praiſing God for his goodneſs, and bleſſing him with our lips, if we will do nothing for him, if we will not part with any thing for his ſake, appears meer complement, is in truth plain mockery, and vile hypocriſie.

4. Yea, which we may farther conſider, all our devotion ſevered from a diſpoſition of practiſing theſe duties, is no leſs ſuch; cannot have any true worth in it, ſhall not yield any good effect from it. Our prayers, if we are uncharitably diſpoſed, what are they other than demonſtrations of egregious impudence and folly? For how can we with any face preſume to ask any thing from God, when we deny him requeſting a ſmall matter from us? How can we with any reaſon expect any mercy from him, when we vouchſafe not to ſhew any mercy for his ſake? Can we imagine that God will hearken unto, or mind our petitions, when we are deaf to his entreaties, and regardleſs of his deſires? No;
Prov. 21. 13. Whoſo ſtoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he alſo ſhall cry himſelf, but ſhall not be heard. 'Tis his declaration to ſuch bold and unreaſonable petitioners, Iſa. 1. 15. When you ſpread forth your hands, I will not hear you; when you make many prayers, I will not hear. No importunity, no frequency of Jam. 5. 4. Ecclus. 4. 4, 5, 6. prayers will move God in ſuch a caſe; the needy man's cries and complaints will drown their noiſe; his ſighs and groans will obſtruct their paſſage, and ſtop the ears of God againſt them. Likewiſe all our ſemblances of repentance, all our corporal abſtinences and auſterities, if a kind and merciful diſpoſition are wanting, what are they truly but preſumptuous dallyings, or impertinent triflings with God? For do we not groſly collude with ſin, when we reſtrain the ſenſual appetites of the τί δὲ κέρδος, σωφροσύνη μετὰ ἀπανθρωπίας; &c. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Orat. 55. body, but foment the ſoul's more unreaſonable deſires? when we curb our wanton fleſh, and give licence to a baſe ſpirit? Do we not palpably baffle, when in reſpect to God we pretend to deny our ſelves, yet upon urgent occaſion allow him nothing? Do we not ſtrangely prevaricate, when we would ſeem to appeaſe God's anger, and purchaſe his favour by our ſubmiſſions, yet refuſe to do that which he declares moſt pleaſing to him, and moſt neceſſary to thoſe purpoſes? It is an ordinary thing for men thus to ſerve God, and thus to delude themſelves: I have known many (ſaith Saint Baſil) who have faſted, and prayed, and groaned, and expreſſed all kind of coſtleſs piety, who yet would not part with one doit to the afflicted. Such a cheap and eaſie piety, which *coſts us little or nothing, can ſurely not be worth much; and we muſt not conceit that the All-wiſe God (the God of knowledge, by whom actions are weighed, as Anna
1 Sam. 2. 3. ſang, and, who weighed the ſpirits alſo, (as the Wiſe-man ſaith) will Prov. 16. 2. be cheated therewith, or take it for more than its juſt value. No, he
Iſa. 58. 5. hath expreſly ſignified, that he hath not choſen ſuch ſervices, nor doth
& 1. 13, 14. take any pleaſure in them: he hath called them vain and impertinent
Mic. 6. 6, 7. Jer. 6. 20. oblations; not ſweet or acceptable, but abominable and troubleſome to him, ſuch as he cannot away with, and is weary to bear. 'Tis religious liberality that doth prove us to be ſerious and earneſt in other religious performances;

Οἶδα πολλοὺς νηστεύοντας, προσευχομένους, στενάζοντας, πᾶσαν τὴν ἀδάπανον εὐλάβειαν ἐνδεικνυμένους, ὀβολὸν δὲ ἕνα μὴ προϊεμένους τοῖς θλιβομένοις. Baſ. M. in Luc. 12. 8.

* 2 Sam. 24. 24.

mances; which aſſures that we value matters of piety at a conſiderable rate; which gives a ſubſtance and ſolidity to our Devotions; which ſanctifies our Faſts, and verifies our Penances; which renders our praiſes real, and our prayers effectual: ſo that theſe being combined, we may reaſonably expect acceptance and recompence; and in effect to hear that from God, which by him was returned to good Cornelius, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God. Acts 10. 4.

5. The conſcionable practice of theſe duties doth plainly ſpring from thoſe good diſpoſitions of mind regarding God, which are the original grounds and fountains of all true piety; and the neglect of them iſſueth from thoſe vicious diſpoſitions which have a peculiar inconſiſtency with piety, being deſtructive thereof in the very foundation and root. Faith in God is the fundamental grace upon which piety is grounded; love and fear of God are the radical principles from which it grows: all which as the charitable man diſcovers in his practice, ſo they are apparently baniſhed from the heart of the illiberal and unmerciful perſon.

As for faith, the good man, in ſhewing bounty, exerciſeth the chief acts thereof; he freely parteth with his goods, becauſe he truſteth on God's providence more than them; and believeth God more ready to help him, than any Creature can do, in his need: becauſe he is perſuaded that God is moſt good and benign, ſo as never to ſuffer him to be oppreſſed with want; becauſe he taketh God to be juſt and faithful, who having charged him to care for nothing, but to caſt his care and burthen upon the Lord, having promiſed to care for him, to ſuſtain him, never to leave or forſake him, having alſo engaged himſelf to repay and recompence him for what he giveth to his poor neighbour, will not fail to make good his word: becauſe he thinks God abundantly ſolvent and himſelf never the poorer for laying out in his behalf; becauſe, in ſhort, he is content to live in a dependance upon God, and at his diſpoſal. It is mentioned by the Apoſtle to the Hebrews, as a ſpecial inſtance of a reſolute and conſtant faith in the firſt Chriſtians, that they took joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods, knowing in themſelves, that they had in heaven a better and an enduring ſubſtance. He that not forcibly by the violent rapacity of others, but voluntarily by his own free reſignation for the ſervice of God, delivereth them up with the ſame alacrity, opinion and hope, thereby demonſtrates the ſame faith. But the gripple Wretch, who will beſtow nothing on his poor brother for God's ſake, is evidently an Infidel, having none at all, or very heatheniſh conceits of God. He muſt be either a mere Atheiſt, disbelieving the exiſtence of God; or an Epicurean, in his heart denying God's providence over humane affairs; (for did he conceive God to have any regard unto, or any influence over what paſſes here, how could he be afraid of wanting upon this ſcore? how could he repoſe any confidence in theſe poſſeſſions? how could he think himſelf ſecure in ſuch a neglect or defiance of God?) or he muſt be exceedingly prophane, entertaining moſt diſhonourable and injurious apprehenſions of God. He cannot but imagine God very unkind, not only in neglecting men that want his help, but in making them to ſuffer for ſpending upon his account; very unjuſt, in not repaying what he borrows; very unfaithful, in breaking his word; very deceitful, in gulling us of our things by fair promiſes of reſtitution and requital: Or he muſt apprehend God forgetful of what we do, and himſelf ſays; or that he is needy and impotent, not having wherewith to make ſatisfaction, not being able to make good what he pretends. He Matth. 6. 25.

Phil. 4. 6.
1 Pet. 5. 7.
Pſal. 55. 22.
Heb. 13. 5.

Heb. 10. 34.

Ὁ γὰρ τοιοῦτος οὐ τῷ Θεῷ πεπίστευκεν, ἀλλὰ τῷ ἑαυτοῦ χρυσίῳ, θεὸν τοῦτο ἡγούμενος, καὶ ἐπ' αὐτῷ πεποιθώς. Conſt. Apoſt. 4. 4.

muſt in his conceit debaſe God even beneath the vileſt Creatures, thinking a ſenſeleſs lump of clay more apt in his need to help him, than God can be with all his power and care; ſuppoſing his money ſafer in his own coffers than in God's hands, and that iron bars will guard it more ſurely than divine protection; eſteeming his neighbour's bond for much better ſecurity than God's word, and that a mortal Man is far more able or more true than the eternal God. He certainly cannot think one word true that God ſays, being loth to truſt him for a penny, for a piece of bread, or for an old garment. All God's promiſes of recompence, and threatnings of puniſhment, he takes for idle fictions: Heaven and Hell are but Utopia's in his conceit; the joys of one, offered to the charitable perſon, are but pleaſant fancies; the torments of the other, denounced to the uncharitable, but fearful dreams. All other things are but names; money and lands are the only real things unto him: all the Habac. 2. 9. happineſs he can conceive or wiſh is contained in bags and barns; theſe are the ſole points of his faith, and objects of his confidence. He makes Job 31. 24, 45. gold his hope, and ſaith to the fine gold, Thou art my confidence. He rejoyces becauſe his wealth is great, and becauſe his hand hath gotten much, as Job ſpeaketh, diſclaiming that practice in himſelf, and tacitly charging it on the perſons we ſpeak of. He doth in fine affect a total independency upon God, and cares to have no dealing with him; he would truſt to himſelf, and live on in his own eſtate: ſo groſs infidelity, and horrible prophaneneſs of mind, lie couched under this ſort of vices.

As for the love of God, the liberal man declares it, in that for God's ſake he is willing to part with any thing, that he values God's love and favour above all other goods; that he deems himſelf rich and happy 1 John. 3. 17. enough in the enjoyment of God. But, Who hath this world's goods, and ſeeth his brother have need, and ſhutteth up his bowels from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? ſaith Saint John: that is, it is impoſſible he ſhould love God; 'tis a vain conceit to think he does; 'tis a frivolous thing for him to pretend it. For how poſſibly can he bear in his heart any affection to God, who will not for his ſake, and at his inſtance, part with a little worthleſs traſh, and dirty pelf? who prizes ſo inconſiderable matters beyond God's favour and friendſhip? who prefers the keeping of his wealth, before the enjoyment of God; and chuſes rather certainly to quit his whole intereſt in God, than to adventure a ſmall parcel of his eſtate with God? His practice indeed ſufficiently diſcovers, that his hard and ſtupid heart is uncapable of any love, except of a corrupt, inordinate and fond love, or dotage toward himſelf, ſince ſo preſent and 1 John 4. 20. ſenſible objects cannot affect him. He that loveth not his brother, whom he hath ſeen, how can he love God, whom he hath not ſeen.

And as to the fear and reverence of God, the liberal man expreſſes it in ſubmiſſion to God's commands, although with his own preſent ſeeming diminution and loſs; in preferring the diſcharging of his Conſcience before the retaining his Money; in caſting over-board his temporal goods, that he may ſecure his ſpiritual and eternal concernments. Pſalm. 119. 127. He can ſay (his practice atteſting to his profeſſion) with David, I love thy commandments above gold; and, The Law of thy mouth is dearer to Exod. 18. 21. me than thouſands of gold and ſilver: he ſhews that he is a man of truth, fearing God, and hating covetouſneſs; which diſpoſitions, as having much affinity and connexion, are well joined together by Jethro. But the uncharitable man can have little fear of God before his eyes; ſince the commands of God have no efficacy on his conſcience; ſince he dreads not the effects of divine power and juſtice, provoked by his diſobedience; ence; ſince he deems an imaginary danger of want from giving, worſe than a certain commiſſion of ſin in withholding; and is more afraid of penury here, than of damnation hereafter.

The truth is, the covetous or illiberal man is therefore uncapable of being truly pious, becauſe his heart is poſſeſſed with vain devotion toward ſomewhat beſide God, which in effect is his ſole divinity: he is juſtly ſtiled an Idolater, for that he directs and employs the chief affections of his mind upon an Idol of clay, which he loves with all his heart, and all his ſoul, which he entirely confides in, which he eſteems and worſhips above all things. It is Mammon, which of all the Competitours and Antagoniſts of God, invading God's right, and uſurping his place, is (as our Lord intimates) the moſt dangerous, and deſperately repugnant: where he becomes predominant, true Religion is quite excluded; Ye cannot ſerve God and Mammon. Other vitious inclinations combat Reaſon, and often baffle it, but ſeldom ſo vanquiſh it, as that a man doth approve or applaud himſelf in his miſcarriages: but the covetous humour ſeizeth on our Reaſon it ſelf, and ſeateth it ſelf therein; inducing it to favour and countenance what is done amiſs. The voluptuous man is ſwayed by the violence of his appetite; but the covetous is ſeduced by the dictate of his judgment: he therefore ſcraps and hoards, and lets go nothing, becauſe he eſteems wealth the beſt thing in the world, and then judges himſelf moſt wiſe, when he is moſt baſe. Labour not to be rich, ceaſe from thine own wiſdom, ſaith Solomon; intimating the judgment ſuch perſons are wont to make of their riches: whence of all diſpoſitions oppoſite to piety, this is the moſt pernicious. But farther.

Coloſ. 3. 5.
Epheſ. 5. 5.
Matt. 6. 24.
Prov. 23. 4.

6. Let us conſider, that nothing is more conformable to God's nature, or renders us more like to him, than beneficence and mercy; and that conſequently nothing can be more grateful to him: that nothing is more diſagreeable and contrary to the eſſential diſpoſition of God, than illiberality and unmercifulneſs; and therefore that nothing can be more diſtaſtful to him. What is any being in the world, but an efflux of his bounty, and an argument of his liberality? Look every-where about Nature, conſider the whole tenour of Providence, ſurvey all the works and ſcan all the actions of God, you will find them all conſpiring in atteſtation to thoſe ſweet characters and elogies which the holy Scripture aſcribeth to God, repreſenting him to be merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering, and abundant in goodneſs; to be ſorry for evil, (incident to or inflicted upon any creature,) to delight in mercy, to wait that he may be gracious; ſtyling him the God of love, of peace, of hope, of patience, of all grace, and of all conſolation, the father of pities, rich in mercy, and full of bowels; affirming of him, and by manifold evidences demonſtrating, that he is benign even unto the ingrateful and evil; that he is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works. Nature, (I ſay) Providence and Revelation, do all concur in teſtifying this, that there is nothing in God ſo peculiarly admirable, nothing (as it were) ſo Godlike, that is, ſo highly venerable and amiable, as to do good and ſhew mercy. We therefore by liberal communication to the needy do moſt approach to the nature of God, and moſt exactly imitate his practice; acquiring to our ſelves thereby ſomewhat of divinity, and becoming little gods to our neighbour. Nothing (ſaith Saint Chryſoſtome) maketh us ſo near equal to God, as beneficence: and, Be (ſaith S. Gregory Nazianzen) a God

Exod. 34. 6.
Joel 2. 13.
Mic. 7. 18.
Iſa. 30. 18.
Rom. 15. 33, 15, 5.
Epheſ. 2. 4.
2 Cor. 13. 11.
1. 3.
Jam. 5. 11.
1 Pet. 5. 10.

Luke 6. 35. Pſalm 145. 9.

Θεοῦ πολλῶν ὄντων ἐφ᾽ οἷς θαυμάζεται, οὐδὲν οὕτως ὡς τὸ πάντας εὐεργετεῖν ἰδιαίτατον. Naz. Orat. 26.

Deus eſt mortali, juvare mortalem. Plin. Nat. H. lib. 2.

Οὐδὲν γὰρ ἡμᾶς ἴσους θεῷ ποιεῖ, ὡς τὸ εὐεργετεῖν. Chryſ. in Mat. Orat. 35.

Γένου τῷ ἀτυχοῦντι θεός, τὸν ἔλεον τοῦ θεοῦ μιμησάμενος· οὐδὲν γὰρ οὕτως ὡς τὸ εὖ ποιεῖν ἄνθρωπος ἔχει θεοῦ. Naz. Orat. 16.

Hic eſt vetuſtiſſimus referendi benè merentibus gratiam mos, ut tales numinibus adſcribantur. Plin. 2. 7.

Suſcepit vita hominum, conſuetudoque communis, ut beneficiis excellentes viro; in cœlum famâ ac voluntate tollerent. Cic. de N. D. 2.

Luke 6. 35. 36.

a God to the unfortunate, imitating the mercy of God; for a man hath nothing of God ſo much as to do good. That ſuch hath always been the common apprehenſion of men, the practice of all times ſheweth, in that men have been ever apt to place their Benefactors among their Gods, deferring that love and veneration unto them in degree, which in perfection do appertain to the ſupreme Benefactor. Be merciful, as your heavenly father is merciful; ſo our Saviour propoſeth God's mercy to us, both as a pattern directing, and as an argument inducing us to mercifulneſs: implying it alſo to be a good ſign declaring us the children of God, the genuine off-ſpring of the all-good and all-merciful Father; yea, that it even renders and conſtitutes us ſuch, (we thereby coming moſt truly to repreſent, and moſt nearly to reſemble him.) Our Lord farther teaches us, ſaying, Love your enemies, bleſs them that curſe you, do good to thoſe that hate you——that you may be the ſons of your father which is in heaven. And they who thus are God's children muſt conſequently be very dear to him, and moſt gracious in his ſight; he cannot but greatly like and love himſelf (the beſt of himſelf) in them; he cannot but cheriſh and treat them well, who are the faireſt and trueſt images of himſelf; no ſpectacle can be ſo pleaſant to him, as to ſee us in our practice to act himſelf, doing good to one another; as the elect of God, holy and beloved, putting on bowels of mercies and kindneſs, humbleneſs of mind, meekneſs, long-ſuffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, even as Chriſt forgave us; being followers of God as dear children, and walking in love, even as Chriſt alſo loved us. But on the other ſide, there is not in nature any thing ſo remotely diſtant from God, or ſo extremely oppoſite to him, as a greedy and griping niggard; Hell is ſcarce ſo contrary to Heaven, as ſuch a man's diſpoſition to the nature of God: for 'tis goodneſs which ſits gloriouſly triumphant at the top of Heaven; and uncharitableneſs lieth miſerably groveling under the bottom of Hell: Heaven deſcends from the one, as its principal cauſe; Hell is built on the other, as its main foundation: as the one approximates the bleſſed Angels to God, and beatifies them; ſo the other removeth the curſed Fiends to ſuch a diſtance from God and happineſs: not to wiſh, not to do any good, is that which renders them both ſo bad, and ſo wretched; and whoever in his conditions is ſo like to them, and in his practice ſo agrees with them, cannot but alſo be very odious to God, and extremely unhappy. God cannot but abhor ſo baſe a degeneration from his likeneſs in thoſe who by nature are his children, and ſhould be farther ſuch according to his gracious deſign; neither can any thing more offend his eyes, than ſeeing them to uſe one another unkindly. So that if obtaining the certain favour of the great God, with all the benefits attending it, ſeem conſiderable to us; or if we think it adviſable to ſhun his diſpleaſure, with its ſad effects; it concerns us to practice theſe duties. So I conclude that ſort of conſiderations, enforcing theſe duties, which more immediately regard God.

Matth. 5. 44, 45.

Coloſ. 3. 12, 13.

Eph. 5. 1, 2.

III. Head of diſcourſe.

Farther, before we deny our relief to our poor neighbour, let us with the eyes of our mind look on him, and attentively conſider who he is, what he is in himſelf, and what he is in relation unto us. [The righteous conſidereth the cauſe of the poor; but the wicked regardeth not to know it, Prov. 29. 7. Bleſſed is he that conſidereth the poor, Pſal. 41. 1.]

1. He whoſe need craves our bounty, whoſe miſery demands our mercy, what is he? He is not truly ſo mean and ſorry a thing, as the diſguiſe of misfortune, under which he appears, doth repreſent him. He who looks ſo deformedly and diſmally, who to outward ſight is ſo ill beſtead, and ſo pitifully accoutred, hath latent in him much of admirable beauty and glory. He within himſelf containeth a nature very excellent; an immortal ſoul, and an intelligent mind, by which he nearly reſembleth God himſelf, and is comparable to Angels: he inviſibly is owner of endowments rendring him capable of the greateſt and beſt things. What are money and lands? what are ſilk and fine linen? what are horſes and hounds in compariſon to reaſon, to wiſdom, to vertue, to religion, which he hath, or (in deſpight of all misfortune) he may have if he pleaſe? He whom you behold ſo dejectedly ſneaking, in ſo deſpicable a garb, ſo deſtitute of all convenience and comfort, (lying in the duſt, naked or clad with rags, meager with hunger or pain,) he comes of a moſt high and heavenly extraction: he was born a prince, the ſon of the greateſt King eternal; he can truly call the Sovereign Lord of all the world his father, having derived his ſoul from the mouth, having had his body formed by the hands of God himſelf. (In this, The rich Prov. 22. 2. and poor, as the Wiſe-man ſaith, do meet together; the Lord is the maker of them all.) That ſame forlorn wretch, whom we are ſo apt to deſpiſe and trample upon, was framed and conſtituted Lord of the viſible world; Gen. 1. 28. had all the goodly brightneſſes of Heaven, and all the coſtly furnitures of earth created to ſerve him. (Thou madeſt him (ſaith the Pſalmiſt of Pſal. 8. 6. man*) to have dominion over the works of thine hands*; thou haſt put all things under his feet.) Yea, he was made an inhabitant of Paradiſe, and poſſeſſor of felicities ſuperlative; had immortal life and endleſs joy in his hand, did enjoy the entire favour and friendſhip of the moſt High. Such in worth of nature and nobleneſs of birth he is, as a Man: and highly more conſiderable he is, as a Chriſtian. For, as vile and contemptible as he looks, God hath ſo regarded and prized him, as for his ſake to deſcend from Heaven, to cloath himſelf with fleſh, to aſſume the form of a ſervant; for his good to undertake and undergo the greateſt inconveniencies, infirmities, wants and diſgraces, the moſt grievous troubles and moſt ſharp pains incident to mortal nature. God hath adopted him to be his child; the Son of God hath deigned to call him brother: he is a member of Chriſt, a temple of the holy Ghoſt, a free denizon of the heavenly City, an heir of Salvation, and candidate of eternal Glory. The greateſt and richeſt Perſonage is not capable of better privileges than God hath granted him, or of higher preferments than God hath deſigned him to. He equally with the mightieſt Prince is the object of God's eſpecial providence and grace, of his continual regard and care, of his fatherly love and affection; who, as good Elihu ſaith, accepteth not the perſons of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the Job 34. 19. poor; for they are all the work of his hands. In fine, this poor creature whom thou ſeeſt is a Man, and a Chriſtian, thine equal, whoever thou art, in nature, and thy peer in condition: I ſay not, in the uncertain and unſtable gifts of fortune, not in this worldly ſtate, which is very inconſiderable; but in gifts vaſtly more precious, in title to an eſtate infinitely more rich and excellent. Yea, if thou art vain and proud, be ſober and humble; he is thy better, in true dignity much to be preferred before

---

---ἐννόησον, ὅτι ὁμοίως σοι ἐλεύθερός ἐστι, καὶ τῆς αὐτῆς σοι κοινωνεῖ εὐγενείας, καὶ πάντα σοι κοινὰ κέκτηται. Chryſ. in Heb. Orat. 2.

Οἱ τοίνυν ἐν τοῖς πνευματικοῖς τοσαύτην ἔχοντες ἰσοτιμίαν, πόθεν μέγα φρονεῖτε; ὅτι ὁ δεῖνα πλούσιος, καὶ ὁ δεῖνα ἰσχυρός; Chryſ. in Eph. 4. 4. in Joh. Orat. 15.

Ἡ τοῦ πνεύματος χάρις ὁμοτίμους ποιεῖ τοὺς ὁμόφρονας. Naz. Orat. 23.

Ecclus. 10. 24. Prov. 28. 6. thee, far in real wealth ſurpaſſing thee: Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightneſs, than he that is perverſe in his ways, though he be rich.

2. That diſtinction which thou ſtandeſt upon, and which ſeemeth ſo vaſt between thy poor neighbour and thee, what is it? whence did it come? whither tends it? It is not any-wiſe natural, or according to primitive deſign: for as all men are in faculties and endowments of nature equal, ſo were they all originally equal in condition, all wealthy and happy, all conſtituted in a moſt proſperous and plentiful eſtate; all things at firſt were promiſcuouſly expoſed to the uſe and enjoyment of all, every one from the common ſtock aſſuming as his own what he needed. Inequality and private intereſt in things (together with ſickneſſes and pains, together with all other infelicities and inconveniences) were the by-blows of our fall: Sin introduced theſe degrees and diſtances; it deviſed the names of rich and poor; it begot theſe ingroſſings and incloſures of things; it forged thoſe two ſmall peſtilent words, meum and tuum, which have engendred ſo much ſtrife among men, and created ſo much miſchief in the world: theſe preternatural diſtinctions were (I ſay) brooded by our fault, and are in great part foſtered and maintained thereby; for were we generally ſo good, ſo juſt, ſo charitable as we ſhould be, they could hardly ſubſiſt, eſpecially in that meaſure they do. God indeed (for promoting ſome good ends, and for prevention of ſome miſchiefs, apt to ſpring from our ill nature in this our lapſed ſtate; particularly to prevent the ſtrife and diſorder which ſcrambling would cauſe among men, preſuming on equal right, and parity of force) doth ſuffer them in ſome manner to continue, and enjoyns us a contented ſubmiſſion to them: but we miſtake, if we think that natural equality and community are in effect quite taken away; or that all the world is ſo cantonized among ſome few, that the reſt have no ſhare therein. No, every man hath ſtill a competent patrimony due to him, and a ſufficient proviſion made for his tolerable ſubſiſtence. God hath brought no man hither to be neceſſarily ſtarved, or pinched with extreme want; but hath aſſigned to every one a child's portion, in ſome fair way to be obtained by him, either by legal right, or by humble requeſt, which according to conſcience ought to have effect. No man therefore is allowed to detain, or to deſtroy ſuperfluouſly what another man apparently wants, but is obliged to impart it to him: ſo that rich men are indeed but the treaſurers, the ſtewards, the caterers of God for the reſt of men, having a ſtrict charge to diſpence unto every one his meat in due ſeaſon, and no juſt privilege to withhold it from any: the honour of diſtribution is conferred on them, as a reward of their fidelity and care; the right of enjoyment is reſerved to the poor, as a proviſion for their neceſſity. Thus hath God wiſely projected, that all his children ſhould both effectually and quietly be provided for; and that none of them ſhould be oppreſſed with penury; ſo that (as Saint Paul hath it) One man's abundance ſhall ſupply another man's want, that there may be an equality: for ſince no man can enjoy more than he needs, and every man ſhould have ſo much as he needs, there can be really no great inequality

Πενία καὶ πλοῦτος, ἐλευθερία τε, ἣν φασὶ, καὶ δουλεία, καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα τῶν ὀνομάτων, ὕστερον ἐπεισῆλθεν τῷ γένει τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ὥσπερ ἀῤῥωστήματα τῇ κακίᾳ συνεισπεσόντα, κἀκείνης ὄντα ἐπινοήματα. Greg. Naz. Orat. 6.

Τὸ γὰρ ἐμὸν. καὶ τὸ σὸν, τοῦτο τὸ, ψυχρὸν ῥῆμα, καὶ μυρίους πολέμους εἰς τὴν οἰκουμένην εἰσαγαγὸν, &c. Chryſ. Tom. 5. λογ. νδʹ. & in Act. 2. 47.

Natura omnia omnibus in commune profudit; ſic enim Deus generari juſſit omnia, ut paſtus omnibus communis eſſet, & terra foret omnium quædam communis poſſeſſio. Natura igitur jus commune generavit, uſurpatio jus fecit privatum. Amb. Offic. 1. 28.

Καὶ γὰρ εἰ μετ' ἀκριβείας τοῦτο ἐφυλάττετο, οὐ δοῦλος, οὐκ ἐλεύθερος ἦν, οὐκ ἄρχων, οὐκ ἀρχόμενος, οὐ πλούσιος, οὐ πένης, οὐ μικρὸς, οὐ μέγας, οὐ διάβολος ἂν ἐγνώσθη ποτέ. Chryſoſt. in 1 Cor. Orat. 32.

Ὥσπερ ἂν εἴ τις ἐν θεάτρῳ θέαν καταλαβὼν εἶτα εἰσείργοι τοὺς ἐπιόντας ἴδιον ἑαυτοῦ κρίνων τὸ κοινὸν πᾶσι κατὰ τὴν χρῆσιν προκείμενον· τοιοῦτοί εἰσι καὶ οἱ πλούσιοι· τὰ καὶ κοινὰ προκατασχόντες ἰδιοποιοῦνται διὰ τὴν πρόληψιν. Baſil. M.

Incaſſum ſe innocentes putant, qui commune Dei munus ſibi privatum vindicant. Greg. M.

Matt. 24. 45. Luke 12. 42.

2 Cor. 8. 14.

quality among men; the diſtinction will ſcarce remain other-where than in fancy. What the Philoſopher ſaid of himſelf, What I have is ſo mine, that it is every man's, is according to the practice of each man, who is truly and in due meaſure charitable; whereby that ſeemingly enormous * diſcrimination among men is well moderated, and the equity of divine Providence is vindicated. But he that ravenouſly graſps for more than he can well uſe, and gripes it faſt into his clutches, ſo that the needy in their diſtreſs cannot come by it, doth pervert that equity which God hath eſtabliſhed in things, defeats his good intention, (ſo far as he can) and brings a ſcandal on his Providence; and ſo doing is highly both injurious and impious.

Ego mea ſic habeo, ut omnium ſint. Demetrius apud Sen. de Benef. VII. 10.

* Ὁ ἀγαπῶν τὸν πλησίον ὡς ἑαυτὸν, οὐδὲν περισσότερον κέκτηται τοῦ πλησίον. Baſil. M.

3. It was alſo (which we ſhould conſider) even one main end of this difference among us, permitted and ordered by God's Providence, that as ſome mens induſtry and patience might be exerciſed by their poverty, ſo other men by their wealth ſhould have ability of practiſing juſtice and charity; that ſo both rich and poor might thence become capable of recompences, ſutable to the worth of ſuch vertuous performances. Why art thou rich (ſaith Saint Baſil) and he poor? Surely for this; That thou mayſt attain the reward of benignity, and faithful diſpenſation; and that he may be honoured with the great prize of patience. God in making thee rich, would have thee to be a double benefactour, not only to thy poor neighbour, but alſo to thy ſelf, whilſt thou beſtoweſt relief on him, purchaſing a reward to thy ſelf. God alſo by this order of things deſigns, that a charitable entercourſe ſhould be maintained among men, mutually pleaſant and beneficial; the rich kindly obliging the poor, and the poor gratefully ſerving the rich. Wherefore by neglecting theſe duties, we unadviſedly croſs the good purpoſe of God toward us, depriving our ſelves of the chief advantages our wealth may afford.

Διὰ τί σὺ μὲν πλουτεῖς, ἐκεῖνος δὲ πένεται; ἢ πάντως ἵνα σὺ χρηστότητος καὶ πιστῆς οἰκονομίας μισθὸν ὑποδέξῃ, κἀκεῖνος τοῖς μεγάλοις ἄθλοις τῆς ὑπομονῆς τιμηθῇ. Baſil. M.

Πλοῦτον καὶ πενίαν, τοῖς ἀνθρώποις διένειμεν ὁ τῶν ὅλων δημιουργός τε καὶ πρύτανις οὐκ ἀδίκῳ ψήφῳ χρησάμενος, ἀλλ᾽ ἀφορμὴν ὠφελείας τοῖς πλουσίοις παρέχων τὴν τῶν πενήτων τὴν ἔνδειαν. Theod. Epiſt. 23.

4. We ſhould alſo do well to conſider, that a poor man, even as ſuch, is not to be diſregarded, and that poverty it ſelf is no ſuch contemptible thing as we may be prone to imagine: there are conſiderations, which may qualify poverty even to diſpute the place with wealth, and to claim precedence to it: If the world vulgarly doth account, and call the rich man happy, a better Authour hath pronounced the poor man ſuch: Bleſſed are the poor, doth march in the van of the beatitudes, and a reaſon goeth along therewith, which aſſerteth its right to the place, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven; for that they are not only in an equal capacity as men, but in a nearer diſpoſition as poor, to the acquiſition of that bliſsful ſtate; for that poverty (the miſtreſs of ſobriety and honeſt induſtry, the mother of humility and patience, the nurſe of all vertue) renders men more willing to go, and more expedite in the way toward Heaven; by it alſo we conform to the Son of God himſelf, the Heir of eternal Majeſty, the Saviour of the World, who for our ſake became poor, (δι᾽ ἡμᾶς ἐπτώχευσε, for our ſake became a beggar) that we through his poverty (or beggary) might become rich: he willingly choſe, he eſpecially dignified and ſanctified that depth of poverty, which we ſo proudly ſlight and loath. The greateſt princes and potentates in the world, the moſt wealthy and haughty of us all, but for one poor beggar had been irrecoverably miſerable: to poverty it is, that every one of us doth owe all the poſſibility there is, all the hopes we can have of our ſalvation; and ſhall we then ingratefully requite it with ſcorn, or with pitileſs neglect?

Luke 6. 20.

2 Cor. 8. 9.

Dedignatur aliquis paupertatem, cujus tam claræ imagines ſunt? Sen. Conſol. ad Helv. 12.

lect? ſhall we preſume in the perſon of any poor man, to abhor or contemn the very poor, but moſt holy and moſt happy JESUS, our Lord and redeemer? No; if we will do poverty right, we muſt rather for his dear ſake and memory defer an eſpecial reſpect and veneration thereto.

5. Thus a due reflexion on the poor man himſelf, his nature and ſtate, will induce us to ſuccour: but let us alſo conſider him as related unto our ſelves: Every ſuch perſon is our near kinſman, is our brother, is by indiſſoluble bands of cognation in blood, and agreement in nature knit and united to us. We are all but ſeveral ſtreams iſſuing from one ſource, ſeveral twigs ſprouting from one ſtock; One blood, derived through ſeveral chanels; one ſubſtance, by miraculous efficacy of the Divine benediction, multiplied or dilated unto ſeveral times and places. We are all faſhioned according to the ſame original Idea, reſembling God our common Father; we are all indowed with the ſame faculties, inclinations and affections; we all conſpire in the ſame eſſential ingredients of our conſtitution, and in the more notable adjuncts thereof; it is only ſome inconſiderable accidents, (ſuch as age, place, figure, ſtature, colour, garb) which diverſify and diſtinguiſh us; in which, according to ſucceſſions of time and chance, we commonly no leſs differ from our ſelves, than we do at preſent from them: ſo that in effect and reaſonable eſteem, every man is not only our brother, but (as Ariſtotle ſaith of a friend) ἄλλος αὐτὸς, another ones ſelf; is not only our moſt lively image, but in a manner our very ſubſtance; another our ſelf under a ſmall variation of preſent circumſtances: the moſt of diſtinction between us and our poor neighbour, conſiſts in exteriour ſhew, in moveable attire, in caſual appendages to the nature of man; ſo that really when we uſe him well, we are kind to our ſelves; when we yield him courteous regard, we bear reſpect to our own nature; when we feed and comfort him, we do ſuſtain and cheriſh a member of our own body: but when we are cruel or harſh to him, we abuſe our ſelves; when we ſcorn him, we lay diſparagement and diſgrace on mankind it ſelf; when we withhold ſuccour or ſuſtenance from him, we do (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) hide our ſelves from our own fleſh; we ſtarve a part of our own body, and wither a branch of our ſtock: immoderate ſelfiſhneſs ſo blindeth us, that we overſee and forget our ſelves: it is in this, as it is in other good ſenſes, true what the Wiſe-man ſaith, The merciful man doeth good to his own ſoul; but he that is cruel, troubleth his own fleſh.

Nemo eſt in genere humano, cui non dilectio, etſi non pro mutua charitate, pro ipſa tamen communis naturæ ſocietate debetur. Aug. Epiſt. 121.

Act. 17. 26.

Οἰκεῖον πᾶς ἄνθρωπος ἀνθρώπῳ καὶ φίλον. Ariſt.

Ἐν ἀλλοτρίοις πάθεσι θεραπευτέον τὸ συγγενὲς, καὶ ὁμόδουλον. Greg. Naz.

Nihil eſt unum uni tam ſimile, tam par, quam omnes inter noſmetipſos ſumus. Cic. de Leg. 1.

Iſa. 58. 7.

Prov. 11. 17.

6. Farther, as the poor man is ſo nearly allied to us by ſociety of common nature, ſo is he more ſtrictly joined to us by the bands of ſpiritual conſanguinity. All Chriſtians (high and low, rich and poor) are children of the ſame heavenly Father, ſpring from the ſame incorruptible ſeed, are regenerated to the ſame lively hope, are co-heirs of the ſame heavenly inheritance; are all members of one body, (members, ſaith Saint Paul, one of another) and animated by one holy ſpirit: which relation, as it is the moſt noble, and moſt cloſe that can be, ſo it ſhould breed the greateſt endearments, and ſhould expreſs it ſelf in correſpondent effects; it ſhould render us full of affection and ſympathy one toward another; it ſhould make us to tender the needs, and feel the ſufferings of any Chriſtian as our own; it ſhould diſpoſe us freely to communicate whatever we have, how precious ſoever, to any of our brethren; this holy friendſhip ſhould eſtabliſh a charitable equality and community among us, both in point of honour and of eſtate: for ſince all

Rom. 12. 5.

Are all one; Gal. 3. 28. πάντες γὰρ ὑμεῖς εἷς ἐστε ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. Chryſ. in Joh. Orat. 15.

Φίλων γὰρ οὐδὲν ἴδιον, οἵτινες φίλοι ὀρθῶς πεφύκασ᾽, ἀλλὰ κοινὰ χρήματα. Eurip. Androm.

all things conſiderable are common unto us, ſince we are all purchaſed and purified by the ſame precious blood, ſince we all partake of the ſame precious faith, of the ſame high calling, of the ſame honourable privileges, of the ſame glorious promiſes and hopes; ſince we all have the ſame Lord and Saviour; why ſhould theſe ſecular trifles be ſo private and particular among us? Why ſhould not ſo huge a parity in thoſe only valuable things not wholly (I ſay not in worldly ſtate, or outward appearance, ſuch as the preſervation of order in ſecular affairs requireth, but) in our opinion and affection extinguiſh that ſlight diſtinction of rich and poor, in concernments temporal? How can we ſlight ſo noble, ſo great a perſonage as a Chirſtian, for wanting a little droſs? How can we deem our ſelves much his ſuperiour, upon ſo petty an advantage, for having that, which is not worth ſpeaking or thinking of, in compariſon to what he enjoyeth? Our Lord himſelf is not aſhamed to call the leaſt among us his brother, and his friend; and ſhall we then diſdain to yield to ſuch an one the regard, and treatment ſutable to ſuch a quality? Shall we not honour any brother of our Lord? ſhall we not be civil and kind to any friend of his? If we do not, how can we pretend to bear any true reſpect or affection unto himſelf? It is his expreſs precept, that the greateſt among us ſhould, in imitation of his moſt humble and charitable ſelf, be ready to ſerve the meaneſt; and, that we ſhould in honour prefer one another, and in lowlineſs of mind eſteem others better than our ſelves, are Apoſtolical Rules, extending indifferently to rich and poor, which are plainly violated by diſregarding the poor. Yea, this relation ſhould, according to Saint John's doctrine, diſpoſe us not only freely to impart theſe temporal goods, but even, if occaſion be, willingly to expoſe our very lives for our brethren: Hereby, ſaith he, we perceive the love of God, becauſe he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for our brethren. How greatly then are they deficient from their duty, how little in truth are they Chriſtians, who are unwilling to part with the very ſuperfluities and excrements of their fortune for the relief of a poor Chriſtian? Thus conſidering our brother, may breed in us charitable diſpoſitions toward him, and induce us to the practice of theſe duties.

Coloſ. 3. 11.
Heb. 2. 11.
Matt. 25. 40.
Joh. 15. 14.
Matt. 20. 26.
Rom. 12. 10.
Phil. 2. 3.
1 Joh. 3. 16.

Moreover, if we reflect upon our ſelves, and conſider either our nature, or our ſtate here, we cannot but obſerve many ſtrong engagements to the ſame practice.

IV. Head of diſcourſe.

1. The very conſtitution, frame and temper of our nature, directeth and inclineth us thereto; whence by obſerving thoſe duties, we obſerve our own nature, we improve it, we advance it to the beſt perfection it is capable of; by neglecting them, we thwart, we impair, we debaſe the ſame —hæc noſtri pars optima ſenſus; The beſt of our natural inclinations (thoſe ſacred reliques of God's Image originally ſtamped on our minds) do ſenſibly prompt, and vehemently urge us to mercy and pity: the very ſame bowels, which in our own want do by a lively ſenſe of pain inform us thereof, and inſtigate us to provide for its relief, do alſo grievouſly reſent the diſtreſſes of another, admoniſhing us thereby, and provoking us to yield him ſuccour. Such is the natural ſympathy between men, (diſcernible in all, but appearing moſt vigorous in the beſt natures) that we cannot ſee, cannot hear of, yea can hardly imagine the calamities of other men, without being ſomewhat diſturbed, and afflicted our ſelves. As alſo nature, to the acts requiſite toward preſervation of our life, hath annexed a ſenſible pleaſure, forcibly enticing us to the performance of them: ſo hath ſhe made the communication of benefits to others, to be accompanied with a very delicious reliſh upon the mind of him that practiſes it; nothing indeed carrying with it a more pure and ſavory delight than beneficence. A man may be vertuouſly voluptuous, and a laudable Epicure by doing much good; for to receive good, even in the judgment of Epicurus himſelf, (the great patron of pleaſure) is no-wiſe ſo pleaſant as to do it: God and Nature therefore within us do ſolicite the poor man's caſe; even our own eaſe and ſatisfaction demand from us compaſſion and kindneſs towards him; by exerciſing them, we hearken to Nature's wiſe diſciplines, and comply with her kindly inſtincts; we cheriſh good humour, and ſweeten our complexion; ſo ennobling our minds, we become not only more like to God, but more perfectly men; by the contrary practice we rebel againſt the Laws, and pervert the due courſe of our Nature; we do weaken, corrupt and ſtifle that which is beſt in us; we harden and ſtupify our ſouls; ſo monſtrouſly degenerating from the perfection of our kind, and becoming rather like ſavage beaſts, than ſociable men; yea, ſomewhat worſe perhaps than many beaſts; for commonly Brutes will combine to the ſuccour of one another, they will defend and help thoſe of the ſame kind.

Juven. Sat. 15.

—— Mutuus ut nos Affectus petere auxilium & praſtare juberet. Juven. 16.

Φιλόπτωχον καὶ συμπαθὲς τὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων γένος. Arch. ad Mon. 852.

Ἐπίκουρος τὸ εὖ πάσχειν τοῦ εὖ ποιεῖν οὐ μόνον κάλλιον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἥδιον εἶναι φησί Plut. de Philoſ. conv. cum Princ.

2. And if the ſenſitive part within us doth ſuggeſt ſo much, the rational dictates more unto us; that heavenly faculty, having capacities ſo wide, and ſo mighty energies, was ſurely not created to ſerve mean or narrow deſigns; it was not given us to ſcrape eternally in earth, or to amaſs heaps of clay for private enjoyment; for the ſervice of one puiſne creature, for the ſuſtenance or ſatisfaction of a ſingle carcaſe: 'tis much below an intelligent perſon to weary himſelf with ſervil toils, and diſtract his mind with ignoble cares for concernments ſo low and ſcanty; but to regard and purſue the common good of men; to diſpenſe, adviſe and aid, where need requires, to diffuſe its virtue all about in beneficial effects; theſe are operations worthy of reaſon, theſe are employments congruous to the native excellency of that Divine power implanted in us; ſuch performances declare indeed what a man is, whence he ſprang, and whither he tends.

3. Farther, examining our ſelves, we may alſo obſerve, that we are in reality, what our poor neighbour appears to be, in many reſpects no leſs indigent and impotent than he: we no leſs, yea far more, for our ſubſiſtence depend upon the arbitrary bounty of another, than he ſeemeth to relie upon ours. We as defectible creatures do continually want ſupport; we as grevious ſinners do always need mercy, every moment we are contracting huge debts, far beyond our ability to diſcharge; debts of gratitude for benefits received, debts of guilt for offences committed; we therefore perpetually ſtand obliged to be craving for mercy and relief at the gates of Heaven. We all, from Prince to Peaſant, live merely upon alms, and are moſt really in condition beggars: to pray always, is a duty incumbent on us from the condition of our nature, as well as by the command of God. Such a likeneſs in ſtate ſhould therefore diſpoſe us to ſuccour our fellows, and δανείζειν Θεῷ ἔλεον ἐλέου χρῄζοντας, to lend mercy to God, who need mercy from him, as the good Father ſpeaketh. We ſhould (as the Apoſtle adviſes and argues) Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which ſuffer adverſity, as being our ſelves alſo in the body; as being companions in neceſſity, or ſubject to the like diſtreſs. If we daily receive mercy and relief, yet unmindful of our obligation to God, refuſe them to others, ſhall we not deſerve to hear that dreadful exprobration, O thou wicked

Greg. Naz.

Heb. 13. 3.

Matt. 18. 32, 33.

ſervant, I forgave thee all that debt becauſe thou deſiredſt me; ſhouldeſt not thou alſo have had compaſſion on thy fellow-ſervant, even as I had pity on thee?

4. The great incertainty, and inſtability of our condition, doth alſo require our conſideration. We that now flouriſh in a fair and full eſtate, may ſoon be in the caſe of that poor creature, who now ſues for our relief; we that this day enjoy the wealth of Job, may the morrow need his patience; there are Sabeans, which may come and drive away our cattle; there are tempeſts, which may ariſe, and ſmite down our houſes; there is a fire of God, which may fall from Heaven, and conſume our ſubſtance; a meſſenger of all theſe miſchiefs may, for all we know, be preſently at our doors; it happened ſo to a better man than we, as unexpectedly and with as ſmall ground to fear it, as it can arrive to us: all our wealth is ſurrounded with dangers, and expoſed to caſualties innumerable; violence may ſnatch it from us, treachery may cheat us of it; miſchance may ſeize thereon, a ſecret moth may devour it; the wiſdom of Providence for our trial, or its juſtice for our puniſhment, may bereave us thereof; its own light and fluid nature (if no other accountable cauſes were apparent) might eaſily ſerve to waft it from us; for, Riches (ſaith the Wiſe-man) make themſelves wings, (they it ſeems do need no help for that) and fly away like as an eagle toward heaven; that is, of their own accord they do ſwiftly convey themſelves away, out of our ſight, and beyond our reach: they are but wind, What profit (ſays the Preacher) hath he that laboureth for the wind? for wind, that is, for a thing which can no-wiſe be fixed or ſetled in one corner; which therefore 'tis a vanity to conceive, that we can ſurely appropriate, or long retain. How then can we think to ſtand firm, upon a place ſo ſlippery? How can we build any confidence on a bottom ſo looſe and brittle? How can we ſuffer our minds to be ſwell'd up, like bubbles, with vain conceit, by the breath of ſuch things, more fleeting and vertiginous than any air? againſt the precepts of the wiſeſt and beſt men: If riches increaſe, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, ſet not your heart on them: Wilt thou ſet thine eyes upon that which is not? ſaith the Wiſe-man: (that is, wilt thou regard that which is ſo tranſitory and evanid, that it hardly may be deemed real; which we can ſcarce look on, before it is gone?) and, Charge them (ſaith Saint Paul) that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor truſt in uncertain riches: (ἐπὶ πλούτου ἀδηλότητι, in the obſcurity, or inevidence of riches; things which we can never plainly diſcern how long we ſhall keep them, how much we can enjoy them) what ſhould make us unwilling with certain advantages to our ſelves, freely to let that go, which preſently without our leave may forſake us? How can we reaſonably judge our caſe much different from that of the pooreſt body, whenas in a trice we may perhaps change places and perſons; when the ſcene turning, he may be advanced unto our wealth, we may be depreſſed into his want? ſince every age yieldeth inſtances of ſome Crœſus, ſome Polycrates, ſome Pompey, ſome Job, ſome Nebuchodonoſor, who within a ſmall compaſs of time doth appear to all men the object both of admiration and pity, is to the leſs-wiſe the mark both of envy and ſcorn; ſeeing every day preſenteth unexpected viciſſitudes, the ſea of humane affairs continually ebbing and flowing, now rolling on this, now on the other ſhore its reſtleſs waves of profit and credit; ſince eſpecially there is a God, who arbitrarily diſpoſeth things, and with a turn of his hand changeth the ſtate of men; who, as the Scripture ſaith, Maketh rich and poor, bringeth low and lifteth up; poureth contempt upon princes;

Ὅμως δ' ἔνεστι τοῖσιν εὖ σκοπουμένοις ταρβεῖν τὸν εὖ πράσσοντα μὴ σφαλῇ ποτέ. Sophoc. Trachin.

Prov. 23. 5.

Eccleſ. 5. 21.

Pſal. 62. 10.

Prov. 23. 5.

Καὶ γὰρ ἐσχάτης ἀνοίας ἂν εἴη ὧν καὶ ἄκοντες ἐξίστασθαι μέλλομεν ἑτέροις, τούτων μὴ μεταδοῦναι ἑκόντας τοῖς δεομένοις. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Orat. 55.

Sejanus---quo die illum Senatus deduxerat, populus in fruſta diviſit. Sen. de tranq. 2.

1 Sam. 2. 7.

Job 12. 21.

princes; raiſeth the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth the beggar from the Pſal. 107. 41. 113. 7. dunghil, to ſet them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory: ſeeing, I ſay, apparently ſuch is the condition of things here, that we may ſoon need his pity and help, who now requeſteth ours, why ſhould we not be very ready to afford them to him? why ſhould we not gladly embrace our opportunity, and uſe our turn well; becoming aforehand with others, and preventing their reciprocal contempt or ne-Eccleſ. 11. 1. glect of us hereafter; Caſt thy bread upon the waters, for thou ſhalt find it after many days; give a portion to ſeven, and alſo unto eight, for thou knoweſt not what evil ſhall be upon the earth: that is, conſidering the in-conſtancy and uncertainty of affairs here, and what adverſity may befall thee, be liberal upon all occaſions, and thou ſhalt (even a good while after) find returns of thy liberality upon thee: ſo the Wiſe-man adviſes, and ſo wiſdom certainly dictates that we ſhould do.

5. And equity doth exact no leſs: for were any of us in the needy man's plight, (as eaſily we may be reduced thereto) we ſhould believe our caſe deſerved commiſeration; we ſhould importunately demand relief, we ſhould be grievouſly diſpleaſed at a repulſe; we ſhould apprehend our ſelves very hardly dealt with, and ſadly we ſhould complain Beneficium qui dare neſcit, injuſtè petit. Laber. Mim. of inhumanity and cruelty, if ſuccour were refuſed to us. In all equity therefore we ſhould be apt to miniſter the ſame to others; for nothing can be more unreaſonable or unjuſt, than to require or expect that from another, which in a like caſe we are unwilling to render unto him; it is a plain deviation from that fundamental rule, which is the baſe of all juſtice; and virtually the ſum (as our Saviour telleth us) of whatever Matt. 7. 12. is preſcribed us: All things whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them; for this is the law and the prophets. I add, that upon theſe conſiderations, by unmerciful dealing, we put our ſelves into a very bad and ticklish condition; wholly depending upon the conſtancy of that which is moſt inconſtant; ſo that if our fortune do fail, we can neither reſonably hope for, nor juſtly pretend to any Eccleſ. 3. 31. relief or comfort from others. He that doeth good turns is mindful of that which may come hereafter, and when he falleth he ſhall find a ſtay.

6. We ſhould alſo remember concerning our ſelves, that we are mortal and frail. Were we immortal, or could we probably retain our poſ-ſeſſions for ever in our hands; yea, could we foreſee ſome definite ſpace of time, conſiderably long, in which we might aſſuredly enjoy our ſtores, it might ſeem ſomewhat excuſable to ſcrape hard, and to hold Prov. 27. 24. faſt; to do ſo might look like rational providence: but ſince Riches are not for ever, nor doth the crown endure to all generations, (as the Wiſe-man ſpeaketh) ſince they muſt infallibly be ſoon left, and there is no certainty of keeping them for any time; 'tis very unaccountable why we ſhould ſo greedily ſeek them, and hug them ſo fondly. The Jam. 1. 10, 11. rich man (ſaith Saint James) as the flower of the graſs, ſhall paſs away:
it is his ſpecial doom to fade away ſuddenly; it is obvious why in many reſpects he is ſomewhat more than others obnoxious to the fatal ſtroke, and upon ſpecial accounts of juſtice he may be farther more expoſed Luke 12. 20. thereto; conſidering the caſe of the rich fool in the Goſpel, we may eaſily diſcern them; we ſhould reckon, that it may happen to us, as it did there to him; that after we have reared great barns, and ſtored up much goods for many years, our ſoul this very night may be required of us;
1 Tim. 6. 7. Eccleſ. 5. 15. Job 1. 21. however, if it be uncertain when, it is moſt certain, that after a very ſhort time our thred will be ſpun out; then ſhall we be rifled, and quite ſtript of all; becoming ſtark naked, as when we came into the world: we ſhall not carry with us one grain of our gliſtering metals, or one rag of our gaudy ſtuff; our ſtately houſes, our fine gardens, and our ſpacious walks, muſt all be exchanged for a cloſe hole under-ground; we muſt for ever bid farewel to our pomps and magnificences, to our feaſts and jollities, to our ſports and paſtimes; not one of all our numerous and ſplendid retinue; no companion of our pleaſure, no admirer of our fortune, no flatterer of our vices can wait upon us; deſolate and unattended we muſt go down to the chambers of darkneſs; then ſhall we find, that to die rich (as men are wont improperly to ſpeak) is really to die moſt poor; that to have carefully kept our money, is to have loſt it utterly; that by leaving much, we do indeed leave worſe than nothing: To have been wealthy, if we have been illiberal and unmerciful, will be no advantage or ſatisfaction to us after we are gone hence; yea, it will be the cauſe of huge damage, and bitter regret unto us. All our treaſures will not procure us any favour, or purchaſe one advocate for us in that impartial world; yea, it ſhall be they which will there proſecute us with clamorous accuſations, will bear ſore teſtimony againſt us, (The ruſt of them, ſaith Saint James, ſhall be a witneſs againſt us, ſignifying our unjuſt or uncharitable detention of them) will obtain a moſt heavy ſentence upon us; they will render our audit more difficult, and enflame our reckoning; they will aggravate the guilt of our ſins with imputations of unfaithfulneſs and ingratitude; ſo with their load they will preſs us deeper into perdition: to omit, that having ſo ill managed them, we ſhall leave them behind us as marks of obloquy, and monuments of infamy upon our memories; for ordinarily of ſuch a rich perſon it is true, that Job ſays of him, Men ſhall clap their hands at him, and ſhall hiſs him out of his place; like one, who departs from off this ſtage, after having very ill acted his part. Is it not therefore infinitely better to prevent this being neceſſarily and unprofitably deprived of our goods, by ſeaſonably diſpoſing them ſo, as may conduce to our benefit, and our comfort, and our honour; being very indifferent and unconcerned in our affection toward them; modeſt and humble in our conceits about them; moderate and ſober in our enjoyments of them; contented upon any reaſonable occaſion to loſe or leave them; and eſpecially moſt ready to diſpenſe them in that beſt way, which God hath preſcribed, according to the exigencies of humanity and charity? By thus ordering our riches, we ſhall render them benefits and bleſſings to us; we ſhall by them procure ſure friendſhip and favour, great worſhip and reſpect in the other world; having ſo lived (in the exerciſe of bounty and mercy) we ſhall truly die rich, and in effect carry all our goods along with us, or rather we have thereby ſent them before us; having, like wiſe Merchants, tranſmitted and drawn them by a moſt ſafe conveyance into our Country and Home; where infallibly we ſhall find them, and with everlaſting content enjoy them. So conſidering our ſelves, and our ſtate, will diſpoſe us to the practice of theſe duties.

Iſa. 14. 11.

Jam. 5. 3. Luk. 16. 25. 6. 24. 12. 21. Matt. 25. 30. Jam. 5. 5.

1 Tim. 6. 9.

Job. 27. 19, 23.

Τῆς γὰρ ἐσχάτης ἀνοίας ἐστὶν ἀφεῖναί τι τῶν ἡμετέρων ἀναπομεῖναι ἐνταῦθα, ἡμῶν μικρὸν ὕστερον μελλόντων ἐντεῦθεν ἀποδημεῖν· καὶ γὰρ ὅπερ ἀπολειφθῇ ζημία γίνεται· πάντα τοίνυν ἐκεῖ προπεμπέσθω, ἔνθα καὶ ἡμεῖς διατρίβειν μέλλομεν λοιπόν. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 54.

Luke 16. 9.

Furthermore, if we contemplate our wealth it ſelf, we may therein deſcry great motives to bounty.

V. Head of diſcourſe.

1. Thus to employ our riches, is really the beſt uſe they are capable of; not only the moſt innocent, moſt worthy, moſt plauſible; but the moſt ſafe, moſt pleaſant, moſt advantageous, and conſequently in all reſpects moſt prudent way of diſpoſing them. To keep them cloſe without uſing or enjoying them at all, is a moſt ſottiſh extravagance, or a ſtrange kind of madneſs; a man thence affecting to be rich, quite impoveriſheth himſelf, diſpoſſeſſeth himſelf of all, and alienateth from himſelf his eſtate: his gold is no more his, than when it was in the Indies, or lay hid in the Mines; his corn is no more his, than if it ſtood growing in Arabia or China; he is no more owner of his lands, than he is maſter of Jeruſalem, or Grand-Cairo: for what difference is there, whether diſtance of place or baſeneſs of mind ſever things from him? whether his own heart, or another man's hand detain them from his uſe? whether he hath them not at all, or hath them to no purpoſe? whether one is a beggar out of neceſſity, or by choice? is preſſed to want, or a volunteer thereto? Such a one may fancy himſelf rich, and others, as wiſe as himſelf, may repute him ſo; but ſo diſtracted perſons to themſelves and to one another do ſeem great princes, and ſtile themſelves ſuch; with as much reaſon almoſt he might pretend to be wiſe, or to be good. Riches are χρήματα, things whoſe nature conſiſts in uſefulneſs; abſtract that, they become nothing, things of no conſideration or value; he that hath them, is no more concerned in them than he that hath them not: it is the heart and skill to uſe affluence of things wiſely and nobly, which makes it wealth, and conſtitutes him rich that hath it; otherwiſe the cheſts may be cramm'd, and the barns ſtuffed full, while the man is miſerably poor and beggarly; 'tis in this ſenſe true, which the Wiſe-man ſays, There is that maketh himſelf rich, yet hath nothing. But the very having riches (will ſuch a man ſay) is matter of reputation; men do eſteem and honour him that hath them: true, if he knows how, and hath the mind to uſe them well, otherwiſe all the credit they yield conſiſts in making their maſter ridiculous to wiſe men, and infamous among all men: but, putting caſe that any ſhould be ſo fooliſh as to reſpect us merely for ſeeming rich, why ſhould we accommodate our practice to their vain opinion, or be baſe our ſelves becauſe others are not wiſe? But however, (may he ſay again) it is a pleaſant thing to ſee them; a heap of gold is the moſt lovely ſpectacle that one can behold; it does a man's heart good to view an abundance of good things about him. For this plea indeed he hath a good Author; this it ſhould ſeem was all the benefit the Wiſe-man obſerved in them, accruing to ſuch perſons: What good, ſaith he, is there to the owners thereof, ſaving the beholding of them with their eyes? But if this be all they are good for, it is, one would think, a very ſlim benefit they afford, little able to ballance the pain and care requiſite to the acquiſt and cuſtody of them; a benefit indeed not proper to the poſſeſſor, for any one may look on them as well as he, or on the like; any one at pleaſure may enjoy better ſights; all the riches and ornaments of Nature, the glorious ſplendours of Heaven, and the ſweet beauties of the Field, are expoſed to common view; the choiceſt magnificences and gallantries of the world, do ſtudiouſly preſent themſelves to every man's eye; theſe in part every man truly may appropriate to himſelf; and by imagination any man can as well take all that he ſees for his own, as the tenacious miſer doth fancy his dear pelf to be his.

Σχορπιζόμενος ὁ πλοῦτος πέφυκε παραμένειν, συνεχόμενος ἀλλοτριοῦται. Baſil. M.

Tam deeſt avaro quod habet, quam quod non habet.

Καὶ γὰρ χρήματα διὰ τοῦτο λέγεται, οὐχ ἵνα κατορύξωμεν, ἀλλ' ἵνα εἰς δέον αὐτοῖς χρησώμεθα. Chryſoſt. in Mat. Orat. 49.

Deſunt inopi multa, avaro omnia. Sen. Epiſt. 108.

Prov. 13. 7.

Eccleſ. 5. 11.

But mine heir (perhaps he will farther ſay) will thank me, will praiſe me, will bleſs me for my great care and providence: If he doth, what is that to thee? Nothing of that will concern thee, or can reach thee; thou ſhalt not hear what he ſays, or feel any good from what he does: And moſt probably thou art miſtaken in thy opinion concerning him; as thou knoweſt not who he ſhall be, that ſhall gather all thou heapeſt up, or ſhall rule over all thy labour, (whether he ſhall be a wiſe man or a fool, a kinſman or a ſtranger, a friend or a foe) ſo thou canſt as little gueſs what he will think or ſay: If he hath wit, he may ſweetly laugh at thee for thy fond wiſdom; if he hath none, his commendations will little adorn thy memory; he will to thy diſgrace ſpend what thou leaveſt, as vainly as thou didſt get or keep it. But (this to be ſure he will in the end ſay for himſelf) money is a good reſerve againſt neceſſary occaſions, or bad times that may come; againſt the time of old age, of ſickneſs, of adverſity; 'tis the ſureſt friend a man can have in ſuch caſes, which, when all fails, will be ready to help him: The rich man's wealth is his ſtrong city; the Wiſe-man he thinks never ſpake more wiſely; he therefore will not diſmantle this fortreſs, but will keep it well ſtored, letting therefore his wealth lie dead and uſeleſs by him; but, (to let paſs now the prophane infidelity of this plea, excluding all hope in God, and ſubſtituting our providence in the room of his) what a folly is it, thus to anticipate evil, and to create to our ſelves a preſent adverſity from a ſuſpicion of one future; to pinch our ſelves now, leſt we ſhould ſuffer hereafter; to pine to day, becauſe we can imagine it poſſible that we may ſtarve to morrow; to forego certain occaſions of enjoying our goods, for that perchance the like occaſions may happen one day, we know not when; not to uſe things now, when reaſon bids us, becauſe they may be uſeful at another time? Not conſidering alſo, that many intervenient accidents, more probably than a moderate and handſome uſe of our wealth, may crop the excreſcencies thereof.

Pſal. 39. 6.
Eccleſ. 2. 19.
Prov. 10. 15.

2. But ſetting aſide theſe abſurd excuſes of penuriouſneſs, we may conſider, that ſecluding the good uſe of them in beneficence, riches are very impertinent, very cumberſome, very dangerous, very miſchievous things; either ſuperfluous toys, or troubleſome clogs, or treacherous ſnares, or rather all theſe in combination, productive of trouble, ſorrow and ſin. A ſmall pittance will, and muſt ſuffice to all reaſonable purpoſes, to ſatisfy our neceſſities, to procure conveniences, to yield innocent delight and eaſe: our nature doth not require, nor cannot bear much: (Take heed and beware of covetouſneſs, ſaith our Lord, for a man's life conſiſteth not in the abundance of the things which he poſſeſſeth; that is, a man may live well without it:) all the reſt, ſetting beneficence apart, can only ſerve vanity or vice, will make us really fools or ſlaves. (They that will be rich, (ſaith the Apoſtle) fall into temptations and a ſnare, and into many fooliſh and hurtful luſts, which drown men into deſtruction and perdition.) They puff up our minds with vain and falſe conceits; making us, as if we were in a dream or frenzy, to take our ſelves for other perſons, more great, more wiſe, more good, more happy than we are; for conſtantly, as the Wiſe-man obſerved, The rich man is wiſe in his own conceit; Great men are not always wiſe. And Agur thus intimates in his prayer, Remove far from me vanity and lies, give me neither poverty nor riches. They render us inſenſible and forgetful of God, of our ſelves, of piety and vertue, of all that is good and worthy of us: (Leſt I be full, ſaid that good man again, aſſigning a reaſon why he deprecated being rich, and deny thee, and ſay, who is the Lord?) they ſwallow up our thoughts, our affections, our endeavours, our time and leiſure, poſſeſſing our hearts with a doting love unto them, (excluding other good affections) diſtracting our minds with anxious cares about them, (choaking other

Luke 12. 15. 1 Tim. 6. 8.
Corporis exigua deſideria ſunt; frigus ſubmovere vult, alimentis famem ac ſitim extinguere; quicquid extra concupiſcitur, vitiis, non uſibus laboratur. Sen. Conſ. ad Helv. 9.

1 Tim. 6. 9.
Prov. 28. 11.
Job 32. 9.
Prov. 30. 8.
Prov. 30. 9.
Matt. 6. 24.
Eccleſ. 31. 1.
Matt. 13. 22.
Luke 10. 41.
2 Tim. 2. 4.

good thoughts) encumbring all our life with buſineſs about them, (inconſiſtent with due attention to our other more weighty and neceſſary concernments) filling our heads with ſuſpicions, and fears, piercing our hearts with troubles and ſorrows; they immerſe our ſouls in all the follies of pride, in all the filths of luxury, in all the miſchiefs emergent from ſloath and ſtupidity; they are the root of all evils unto us, and the greateſt obſtructions of our true happineſs, rendring Salvation almoſt impoſſible, and Heaven in a manner inacceſſible to us: ſo that to be rich, (if ſevered from a ſober mind, and a free heart) is a great diſeaſe, and the ſource of many grievous diſtempers both of body and mind; from which we cannot well otherwiſe ſecure or reſcue our ſelves, than by liberally ſpending them in works of bounty and mercy: ſo ſhall we eaſe our ſelves of the burthens, ſo ſhall we elude the temptations, ſo ſhall we abandon the vices, and ſo ſhall we eſcape all the ſad miſchiefs incident to them: Thus to uſe wealth, ſhall turn it into a convenience, and an ornament of our lives, into a conſiderable bleſſing, and a ground of much comfort to us. Excluding this uſe of wealth, or abſtracting a capacity of doing good therewith, nothing is more pitiful and deſpicable than it; it is but like the load, or the trappings of an Aſs; a wiſe man on that condition would not chuſe it, or endure to be peſtered with it; but would ſerve it, as thoſe Philoſophers did, who flung it away, that it might not diſturb their contemplations: 'tis the power it affords of benefiting men, which only can ſeaſon, and ingratiate it to the reliſh of ſuch a perſon; otherwiſe it is evidently true, which the Wiſe-man affirms, Prov. 15. 16. Better is a little with the fear of the Lord, than great treaſure, and trouble therewith.

1 Tim. 6. 10.
Jam. 5. 5.
Luke 16. 19.
1 Tim. 6. 10.
Matt. 19. 23, 24.

Ἀποφόρτισαί τι τοῦ ὑψὸς, ἵνα πέλῃς κουφότερος. Naz. Or. 27.

3. Again, we may conſider, that to diſpenſe our wealth liberally, is the beſt way to preſerve it, and to continue maſters thereof; what we give, is not thrown away, but ſaved from danger; † while we detain it at home, (as it ſeems to us) it really is abroad, and at adventures; it is out at Sea, ſailing perilouſly in ſtorms, near rocks and ſhelves; amongſt Pirates; nor can it ever be ſafe, till it is brought into this port, or enſured this way; * when we have beſtowed it on the poor, then we have lodged it in unqueſtionable ſafety; in a place where no rapine, no deceipt, no miſhap, no corruption can ever by any means come at it. All our doors and bars, all our Forces and guards, all the circumſpection and vigilancy we can uſe, are no defence or ſecurity at all in compariſon to this diſpoſal thereof: The poor man's ſtomach is a granary for our corn, which never can be exhauſted; the poor man's back is a wardrobe for our cloaths, which never can be pillaged, the poor man's pocket is a bank for our money, which never can diſappoint or deceive us; all the rich traders in the world may decay and break, but the poor man can never fail, except God himſelf turn Bankrupt; for what we give to the poor, we deliver and entruſt in his hands, out of which no force can wring it, no craft can filch it; it is laid up in Heaven, whither no thief can climb, where no moth or ruſt do abide. In deſpight of all the fortune, of all the might, of all the malice in the world, the liberal man will ever be rich; for God's providence is his eſtate; God's wiſdom and power are his defence; God's love and favour are his reward; God's word is his aſſurance; who hath ſaid † Μηδὲ νόμιζε τὴν ἐλεημοσύνην ἀνάλωμα εἶναι, ἀλλὰ πρόσοδον, μηδὲ δαπάνην, ἀλλὰ πραγματείαν, μείζω γὰρ λαμβάνεις ἢ δίδως, &c. Chryſ. Tom. 5. p. 208.

* Μὴ τοίνυν φειδώμεθα χρημάτων, μᾶλλον δὲ φειδώμεθα τῶν χρημάτων· ὁ γὰρ φειδόμενος τῶν ὄντων εἰς τὰς τῶν πενήτων χεῖρας αὐτὰ ἐναποτίθεται, εἰς τὸν ἄσυλον θησαυρὸν καὶ λῃσταῖς καὶ οἰκέταις καὶ συκοφάνταις κακούργοις καὶ πάσαις ἐφόδοις ἀνάλωτον. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 55.

Multi Sancti, & Sanctæ omnimodo caventes ipſas velut matres deliciarum divitias diſpergendo pauperibus abjecerunt, & tali modo in cœleſtibus theſauros tutius condiderunt. Aug. Ep. 121.

ſaid it, that He which giveth to the poor, ſhall not lack; no viciſſitude Prov. 28. 27. therefore of things can ſurprize him, or find him unfurniſhed; no diſaſter can impoveriſh him, no adverſity can overwhelm him; he hath a certain reſerve againſt all times and occaſions: He that deviſeth liberal Iſa. 32. 8. things, by liberal things ſhall he ſtand, (ſaith the Prophet.) But on the other hand, being niggardly is the likelieſt courſe we can take to loſe our wealth and eſtate; we thereby expoſe them to danger, and leave them defenceleſs; we ſubject them to the envious eye, to the ſlanderous tongue, to the ravenous and inſidious hand; we deprive them of Divine protection, which if it be away, The watch-man waketh but in vain: We Pſal. 127. 1. provoke God irrecoverably to take it from us, as he did the Talent from that unprofitable ſervant, who did not uſe it well. We do indeed thereby yield God juſt cauſe of war, and enmity againſt us; which being, Omnia dat qui juſta negat; we do forfeit all to Divine juſtice, by denying that portion which belongs to him, and which he claims. Can we hope to live in quiet poſſeſſion of any thing, if we refuſe to pay our due tributes and taxes impoſed upon us by our Almighty Sovereign; if we live in ſuch rebellion againſt his authority, ſuch violation of his right, ſuch diffidence to his word? No: He that truſteth in his riches, Prov. 11. 28. ſhall fall, but the righteous ſhall flouriſh as a branch: ſuch is the difference between the covetous and the liberal in point of ſecurity and ſucceſs concerning their eſtate.

Even according to the humane and ordinary way of eſteeming things, (abſtracting from the ſpecial providence of God) the liberal perſon hath in conſequence of his bounty, more real ſecurity for his wealth, than this world hath any other: He thereby gets an intereſt in the gratitude and affection of thoſe whom he obligeth, together with the good-will and reſpect of all men, who are ſpectatours of his vertuous and generous dealing: the hearts and memories of men are repoſitories to him of a treaſure, which nothing can extort from him, or defraud him of. If any miſchance ſhould arrive, or any want come near him, all men would be ready to commiſerate him, every man would haſten to his ſuccour. As when a haughty, a greedy, or a gripple man do fall into calamity or diſgrace, ſcarce any one regardeth or pitieth him: Fortune deſerting ſuch a perſon, carries all with it, few or none ſtick to him, his moſt zealous flatterers are commonly the firſt that forſake him, contempt and neglect are the only adherents to his condition; that of the Wiſeman appears verified, He that hideth his eyes from the poor, ſhall have many a curſe: ſo the courteous and bountiful perſon, when fortune Prov. 28. 27. ſeems to frown on him, hath a ſure refuge in the good-will and eſteem of men; all men, upon the accounts of honour and honeſty, take themſelves to be concerned in his caſe, and engaged to favour him; even thoſe, who before were ſtrangers, become then his friends, and in effect diſcover their affection to him; it, in the common judgment of people, appears an indignity and a diſgrace to mankind, that ſuch a man ſhould want or ſuffer.

Miraris cum tu argento poſt omnia ponas, Si nemo præſtet quem non merearis amorem. Hor. Serm. 1. 1.

4. Nay farther we may conſider, that exerciſing bounty is the moſt advantageous method of improving and increaſing an eſtate; but that being tenacious and illiberal, doth tend to the diminution and decay thereof. The way to obtain a great encreaſe, is to ſow much: he that ſows little, how can he expect a good crop? It is as true in ſpiritual husbandry, as in the others; that what a man ſoweth that he ſhall reap, Gal. 6. 7, 8. both in kind, and according to proportion: So that great Husband-man Saint Paul aſſureth us, He that ſoweth ſparingly, ſhall reap ſparingly; 2 Cor. 9. 6, 10.

but he that ſoweth bountifully, ſhall alſo reap bountifully: and Solomon Prov. 11. 18. means the ſame, when he ſaith, To him that ſoweth righteouſneſs, ſhall be a ſure reward. The way to gain abundantly is, you know well, to trade boldly; he that will not adventure any thing conſiderable, how can he think of a large return? Honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance, ſo ſhall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy preſſes ſhall burſt out with new wine, Prov. 3. 9, 10. 'Tis ſo likewiſe in the evangelical negotiations; if we put out much upon ſcore of conſcience or charity, we ſhall be ſure to profit much. Liberality is the moſt beneficial traffick that can be; it is bringing our wares to the beſt market; it is letting out our money into the beſt hands; we thereby lend our money to God, who repays with vaſt uſury; an hundred to one is the rate he allows at preſent, and above a hundred millions to one he will render hereafter; ſo that if you will be Merchants this way, you ſhall be ſure to thrive, you cannot fail to grow Prov. 11. 25. rich moſt eaſily and ſpeedily: The liberal ſoul ſhall be made fat, and he that watereth ſhall be watered himſelf: This is that which Saint Paul Phil. 4. 17. again argues upon, when commending the Philippians free kindneſs toward him, he ſays, Not becauſe I deſire a gift, but I deſire fruit that may abound to your account. Bounty yields καρπὸν πλεονάζοντα, a fruit that multiplies and abundantly turns to good account; it indeed procuring God's benediction, the fountain of all deſirable plenty and proſperity:
Prov. 10. 22. for, The bleſſing of the Lord it maketh rich, and he addeth no ſorrow with it. It is therefore the greateſt want of policy, the worſt ill-husbandry and unthriftineſs that can be, to be ſparing this way; he that uſeth it, cannot be thriving; he muſt ſpend upon the main ſtock, and may be ſure to get nothing conſiderable. God ordinarily ſo proceeds, as to recompence and retaliate men in the ſame kind, wherein they endeavour to pleaſe him, or preſume to offend him; ſo that for them who freely offer him their goods, he in regard thereto will proſper their dealings, Deut. 15. 10. and bleſs their eſtates: (For this very thing the Lord thy God ſhall bleſs thee in all thy works, and in all that thou putteſt thine hand unto, ſays Moſes) but they who will not lay out any thing for him, he will not concern Pſal. 73. 17. himſelf in their ſucceſs otherwiſe than to croſs it, or (which is worſe) to curſe it: for if he ſeem to favour them for a time with ſome proſperity in their affairs, their condition is much worſe thereby, their account will be more grievous, and their fate more diſaſtrous in the end.

5. Farther, the contributing part of our goods to the poor, will qualify us to enjoy the reſt with ſatisfaction and comfort. The oblation of theſe firſt-fruits, as it will ſanctify the whole lump of our eſtate, ſo it will ſweeten it; having offered this well-pleaſing ſacrifice of piety, having diſcharged this debt of juſtice, having paid this tribute of gratitude, our hearts being at reſt, and our conſcience well ſatisfied, we ſhall, Acts 2. 46. like thoſe good people in the Acts, eat our meat with gladneſs, and ſingleneſs of heart; to ſee the poor man by our means accommodated, eaſed and refreſhed, will give a delicious reliſh to all our enjoyments. But withholding his portion from the poor, as it will pollute and profane all our eſtate, ſo it will render the fruition thereof ſowre or unſavory to us:
for can we with any content taſte our dainties, or view our plenties, while the poor man ſtands in ſight pining with hunger? Can we without regret ſee our walls cloathed with tapeſtry, our horſes deckt with golden trappings, our attendants ſtrutting in wanton gaiety, while our honeſt poor brother appears half naked, and trembling with cold? Can we carry on Ἐγγὺς ὁ πένης, εἰς τοῦτον ἀπέρευξαί τι τῶν περιττῶν, τί καὶ σὺ κάμνεις ἀπεπτῶν, καὶ οὗτος πεινῶν, καὶ σὺ κραιπαλῶν καὶ οὗτος ὑδεριῶν, καὶ σὺ κάρῳ βαρύνων, καὶ οὗτος περιτρεπόμενος νόσῳ; Nazian. Orat. 27.

one finger enough to furniſh ten poor people with neceſſaries, and have the heart within us, without ſhame and diſpleaſure, to ſee them want? No; the ſenſe of our impiety and ingratitude toward God, of our inhumanity and unworthineſs toward our neighbour, will not fail (if ever we conſiderately reflect on our behaviour) to ſting us with cruel remorſe and ſelf-condemnation; the clamours of want and miſery ſurrounding us, will pierce our ears, and wound our hearts; the frequent objects of pity and mercy, do what we can to baniſh them from our proſpect or regard, will ſo aſſail, and ſo purſue us, as to diſturb the freedom of our enjoyments, to quaſh the briskneſs of our mirth, to allay the ſweetneſs of our pleaſure; yea rather, if ſtupidity and obduration have not ſeized on us, to imbitter all unto us; we ſhall feel that true, which Zophar ſpeaks of the cruel and covetous oppreſſor, Surely he ſhall not feel quietneſs in his belly,——he ſhall not rejoyce in his ſubſtance,——in the fullneſs of his ſufficiency he ſhall be in ſtraights. Job. 20. 18, 20, 22.

6. I ſhall touch but one conſideration more, perſuaſive of this practice; it is this: The peculiar nature of our Religion ſpecially requires it, and the honour thereof exacts it from us; nothing better ſuits Chriſtianity, nothing more graces it, than liberality; nothing is more inconſiſtent therewith, or more diſparageth it, than being miſerable and ſordid. A Chriſtian niggard is the verieſt nonſenſe that can be; for, What is a Chriſtian? What but a Man, who adores God alone, who loves God above all things, who repoſes all his truſt and confidence in God? What is he, but one who undertaketh to imitate the moſt good and bountiful God, to follow, as the beſt pattern of his practice, the moſt benign and charitable JESUS, the Son of God; to obey the Laws of God, and his Chriſt, the ſum and ſubſtance of which is charity; half whoſe Religion doth conſiſt in loving his neighbour as himſelf? What is he farther, but one who hath renounced this world, with all the vain pomps and pleaſures of it; who poſeſſes himſelf in diſpoſition and affection of mind to forſake all things for Chriſt's ſake; who pretends little to value, affect, or care for any thing under Heaven; having all his main concernments and treaſures, his heart, his hopes, and his happineſs in another world? Such is a Chriſtian; and what is a Niggard? All things quite contrary: One whoſe practice manifeſtly ſhews him to worſhip another thing beſide, and before God; to love Mammon above God, and more to confide in it, than in him; One who bears ſmall good-will, kindneſs or pity toward his brother; who is little affected or concerned with things future or celeſtial; whoſe mind and heart are rivetted to this world; whoſe hopes and happineſſes are ſettled here below; whoſe ſoul is deeply immerſed and buried in earth; One who, according to conſtant habit, notoriouſly breaketh the two great heads of Chriſtian duty, Loving God with all his heart, and his neighbour as himſelf: It is therefore, by comparing thoſe things, very plain, that we pretend to reconcile groſs contradictions and inconſiſtences, if we profeſs our ſelves to be Chriſtians, and are illiberal. It is indeed the ſpecial grace and glory of our Religion, that it conſiſteth not in barren ſpeculations, or empty formalities, or forward profeſſions; not in fancying curiouſly, or ſpeaking zealouſly, or looking demurely; but in really producing ſenſible fruits of goodneſs; in doing (as Saint Paul ſignifies) things good and profitable unto men, ſuch as thoſe chiefly Tit. 3. 8. are of which we ſpeak. The moſt gracious wiſdom of God hath ſo modelled our Religion, that according to it piety and charity are the ſame thing; that we can never expreſs ovr ſelves more dutiful toward him, or better pleaſe him, or more truly glorify him, than when we are kind and good to our poor brother. We groſly miſtake, if we take giving of alms to be a Jewiſh or Popiſh practice, ſuitable to children and dullards in Religion, beneath ſo refined, ſo improved, ſo loftily ſpiritual gallants as we: No, 'tis a duty moſt properly, and moſt highly Chriſtian, as none more, a moſt goodly fruit of grace, and a moſt faithful mark 2 Cor. 9. 13. thereof: By the experiment of this miniſtration, we (as Saint Paul ſaith) glorify God for our profeſſed ſubjection unto the goſpel of Chriſt, and for our liberal diſtribution unto our brethren and unto all men: without it our faith is dead and ſenſeleſs; our high attainments are fond preſumptions; our fine notions and delicate ſpiritualities are in truth but ſilly dreams, the iſſues of a proud and ignorant fancy: he that appears hard-hearted and cloſe-fiſted towards his needy brother, let him think or call himſelf what he pleaſeth, he plainly is no Chriſtian, but a blemiſh, a reproach, and a ſcandal to that honourable name.

7. To all theſe conſiderations and reaſons inducing to the practice of this kind of charity, I might ſubjoin examples, and ſet before you the faireſt copies that can be imagined thereof. We have for it the pattern Jam. 1. 5,17. of God himſelf, who is infinitely munificent and merciful; from whom Acts 17. 25. every good and perfect gift deſcendeth; who giveth life, and breath, and 2 Cor. 8. 9. all things unto all; who giveth liberally and upbraideth not. We have the example of the Son of God, who out of pure charity did freely part with the riches and glories of eternity, voluntarily embracing extreme poverty and want for our ſake, that we who were poor, might be en- Acts 10. 38. riched; we that were miſerable might become happy; who went about doing good; ſpent all his life in painful diſpenſation of beneficence, and relieving the needs of men in every kind. We have the bleſſed Patriarchs to follow, who at God's pleaſure and call did readily leave their country, their friends, their goods, and all they had. We have the Matt. 19. 27. practice of the holy Apoſtles, who freely let go all to follow their Lord; who chearfully ſuſtained all ſorts of loſſes, diſgraces and pains, for promoting the honour of God, and procuring good unto men: we have to move and encourage us hereto the firſt and beſt Chriſtians, moſt full of Act. 4. 34,35. grace and holy zeal, who ſo many as were poſſeſſors of lands and houſes, did ſell them, and did impart the price of them to the community, ſo that there was none poor among them, and that diſtribution was made to every one as he had need. We have all the Saints and eminent ſervants of God in all times, who have been high and wonderful in the performance of theſe duties. I could tell you of the bleſſed Martyr Saint Cy- Pontius in vit. Cypr. prian, who was liberal by whole-ſale, beſtowing all at once, a fair eſtate, Greg. Naz. Orat. 40. on God and the poor; of the renowned Biſhop Saint Baſil, who conſtantly waited on the ſick, and kiſſed their ſores; of the moſt pious Con- Sulp. Sever. feſſor Saint Martin, who having but one coat left, and ſeeing a poor man that wanted cloaths, tore it in two pieces, and gave one to that poor man; and many like inſtances out of authentick hiſtory might be produced, apt to provoke our imitation: I might alſo, to beget emulation and ſhame in us, repreſent exemplary practices of humanity and charity even in Jews, Mahometans and Pagans, (ſuch as in theſe cold days might paſs for more than ordinary among us) but I ſhall only propound one preſent and ſenſible example, that of this noble City, whoſe publick bounty and charity in all kinds, (in education of orphans, in curing the diſeaſed both in body and mind, in proviſion for the poor, in relieving all ſorts of neceſſities and miſeries) let me earneſtly intreat and exhort us all for God's ſake, as we are able, by our private charity to imitate, to encourage, and to aſſiſt; let us do this ſo much the more willingly and freely, as the ſad circumſtances of things, by God's judgments brought upon us, do plainly require, that the publick charity it ſelf (lying under ſo great impediments, diſcouragements and diſtreſſes) ſhould be ſupported, ſupplied, and relieved by particular liberality. No words that I can deviſe will be ſo apt to affect and move you, as the caſe it ſelf, if you pleaſe to conſider it: hear it therefore ſpeaking, and, I pray, with a pious and charitable diſpoſition of mind attend thereto:

A true Report, &c.

For this excellent pattern of pious bounty and mercy, let us heartily thank Almighty God: let us humbly implore God's bleſſing on the future management of it; let us pay due reſpects to the worthy promoters thereof, and pray for rewards upon them anſwerable to their charitable care and induſtry employed therein; let us alſo according to our ability perform our duty in following and furthering it: for encouragement to which practice, give me leave briefly to reflect upon the latter part of my Text; which repreſents ſome inſtances of the felicity proper to a bountiful perſon, or ſome rewards peculiar to the exerciſing the duties of bounty and mercy.

The firſt is, His righteouſneſs endureth for ever. Theſe words are capable of various ſenſes, or of divers reſpects; they may import that the fame and remembrance of his bounty is very durable, or that the effects thereof do laſtingly continue, or that eternal rewards are deſigned thereto, they may reſpect the bountiful man himſelf, or his poſterity here; they may ſimply relate to an endurance in God's regard and care; or they may with that alſo comprehend a continuance in the good memory, and honourable mention of men. Now in truth according to all theſe interpretations, the bountiful man's righteouſneſs doth endure for ever, that is, very laſtingly, (or ſo long as the ſpecial nature of the caſe doth bear) in any ſenſe; or for an abſolute perpetuity in ſome ſenſe: the words in their plenitude do naturally and without ſtraining involve ſo many truths; none of which therefore we think fit to exclude, but ſhall briefly touch them all.

1. As for future reputation and fame, (which that it in part is intended here, that which precedes, The righteous ſhall be had in everlaſting remembrance, doth argue) it is evident, that it peculiarly attends upon this practice: the bountiful perſon is eſpecially that juſt man, whoſe memory is bleſſed, (is μετ' ἐγκωμίων, as the Greek renders it; that is, is proſecuted with commendations and praiſes.) No Prov. 10. 7. ſpices can ſo embalm a man, no monument can ſo preſerve his name and memory, as works of beneficence; no other fame is comparably ſo precious, or truly glorious, as that which grows from thence: The renown of power and prowess, of wit or learning, of any wiſdom or skill, may dwell in the fancies of men with ſome admiration: but the remembrance of bounty reigns in their hearts with cordial eſteem and affection; there erecting immoveable trophies over death and oblivion, and thence ſpreading it ſelf through the tongues of men with ſincere and ſprightly commendations. The bountiful man's very duſt is fragrant, and his grave venerable; his name is never mentioned without reſpect; his actions have always theſe beſt Echoes, with innumerable iterations reſounding after them: His goods ſhall be eſtabliſhed, and the congregation ſhall declare his alms, Eccleſ. 32. 11. This was a true friend to mankind; This was a real benefactor to the world; This was a man good in earneſt, and pious to good purpoſe.

2. The effects of his righteouſneſs are likewiſe very durable: When he is departed hence, and in perſon is no more ſeen, he remains viſible and ſenſible in the footſteps and fruits of his goodneſs; the poor ſtill beholds him preſent in the ſubſiſtence of himſelf, and his Family; the ſick-man feels him in the refreſhment, which he yet enjoys by his proviſion; he ſupervives in the heart of the afflicted, which ſtill reſents the comfort, and rejoyces in the eaſe which he procured him; all the world derives benefit from him by the edification it receiveth from his example; Religion obtaineth profit and ornament, God himſelf enjoyeth glory and praiſe from his righteouſneſs.

3. His righteouſneſs alſo endureth in reſpect to his poſterity. It is an uſual plea for tenacity and parſimony, that care muſt be had of poſterity, that enough muſt be provided and laid up for the family: But in truth this is a very abſurd excuſe, and doing according thereto, is a very prepoſterous method of proceeding toward that end; it is really the greateſt improvidence in that reſpect, and the trueſt neglect that can be of our children: for ſo doing, together with a ſeeming eſtate, we entail a real curſe upon them; we diveſt them of God's protection and benediction, (the only ſure preſervatives of an eſtate) we leave them heirs of nothing ſo much as of puniſhments due to our ingratitude, our infidelity, our impiety and injuſtice both toward God and man: whereas by liberally beſtowing on the poor, we demiſe unto them God's bleſſing, which is the beſt inheritance; we recommend them to God's ſpecial care, which is the beſt tuition; we leave them God's protection and providence, which are a wealth indefectible and inexhauſtible; we conſtitute God their guardian, who will moſt faithfully manage, and moſt wiſely improve their ſubſtance, both that which we leave to them, and that which we gave for them to the poor; we thereby in good part entitle them to the rewards appropriate to our pious charity, our faith, our gratitude, our ſelf-denial, our juſtice, to whatever of good is vertually contained in our acts of bounty; to omit the honour and good-will of men, which conſtantly adhere to the bountiful man's houſe and family. Prov. 13. 22. A good man leaveth an Inheritance to his childrens children. It is therefore expreſly mentioned in Scripture as a recompence peculiar to this vertue, that ſecurity from want, and all happineſs do attend the poſterity of the bountiful perſon: He is ever merciful and lendeth, and his ſeed is bleſſed, ſaith David of him generally; and David alſo particularly obſerved, that in all the courſe of his long life, he could find no exception to the rule: I have been young, and now am old, yet have I not ſeen the righteous forſaken, nor his ſeed begging their bread. Pſal. 37, 25, 26. Pſal. 112. 2, 3.

4. His righteouſneſs alſo endureth for ever in the perpetual favour of God, and in the eternal rewards which God will confer upon him, who out of conſcience and reverence toward God, out of good-will and kindneſs toward his brother hath diſperſed, and given to the poor. God will not (as the Apoſtle ſaith) be unjuſt to forget his labour of cha- Heb. 6. 10.

charity

rity in miniſtring to his poor brother: from the ſeed which he hath ſown to the ſpirit, he ſhall aſſuredly reap a moſt plentiful crop of bleſſings ſpiritual; he ſhall effectually enjoy the good foundation that he hath ſtored up: for the goods he hath ſold and delivered, he ſhall bonâ fide receive his bargain, the hidden treaſure, and precious pearl of eternal life; for this beſt improvement of his talent of worldly riches, he ſhall hear the Euge bone ſerve, Well done good and faithful ſervant, enter into thy maſter's joy: he ſhall at laſt find God infinitely more bountiful to him, than he hath been unto the poor.

Gal. 6. 8.
1 Tim. 6. 19.
Matt. 13. 46.
Matt. 25. 21, 26.

Thus when all the flaſhes of ſenſual pleaſure are quite extinct; when all the flowers of ſecular glory are withered away; when all earthly treaſures are buried in darkneſs; when this world, and all the faſhion of it, are utterly vaniſhed and gone, the bountiful man's ſtate will be ſtill firm and flouriſhing, and His righteouſneſs ſhall endure for ever.

It follows, His horn ſhall be exalted with honour: A horn is an emblem of power; for in it the beaſts ſtrength, offenſive and defenſive, doth conſiſt; and of plenty, for it hath within it a capacity apt to contain what is put into it; and of ſanctity, for that in it was put the holy oyl, with which Kings were conſecrated; and of dignity, both in conſequence upon the reaſons mentioned, (as denoting might, and influence, and ſacredneſs accompanying ſovereign dignity) and becauſe alſo it is an eſpecial beauty and ornament to the Creature which hath it; ſo that this expreſſion (His horn ſhall be exalted with honour) may be ſuppoſed to import, that an abundance of high, and holy, of firm and ſolid honour ſhall attend upon the bountiful perſon. And that ſo it truly ſhall, may from many conſiderations appear.

1 Sam. 16. 13.
1 King. 1. 39.

1. Honour is inſeparably annexed thereto as its natural companion and ſhadow. God hath impreſſed upon all vertue a majeſty and a beauty, which do command reſpect, and with a kindly violence extort veneration from men; ſuch is the natural conſtitution of our ſouls, that as our ſenſe neceſſarily liketh what is fair and ſweet, ſo our mind unavoidably will eſteem what is vertuous and worthy; all good actions as ſuch, are honourable, but of all vertues beneficence doth with moſt unqueſtionable right claim honour, and with irreſiſtible force procures it; as it is indeed the moſt divine of vertues, ſo men are moſt apt to venerate them, whom they obſerve eminently to practiſe it. Other vertues men ſee, and approve as goodly to the ſight, but this they taſte and feel; this by moſt ſenſible experience they find to be pleaſant and profitable, and cannot therefore but highly prize it. They, who do their alms before men, although out of an unworthy vain-glorious deſign, have yet, as our Saviour intimates, their reward; they fail not to get honour thereby; and even ſo have no bad penny-worth: for, in the Wiſe-man's judgment, A good name is rather to be choſen than great riches, they receive at leaſt fine air for groſs earth; and things very ſpiritual, for things moſt material; they obtain that which every man doth naturally deſire and prize, for that which only faſhion in ſome places endeareth, and commandeth: they get the end for the means, for ſcarce any man ſeeketh wealth for it ſelf, but either for honour, or for vertues ſake, that he may live creditably, or may do good therewith: neceſſity is ſerved with a little, pleaſure may be ſatisfied with a competence; abundance is required only to ſupport honour or promote good; and honour by a natural connexion adhereth to bounty. He that followeth after righteouſneſs and mercy, findeth life, righteouſneſs and honour, Prov. 21. 21.

Φιλοῦνται χεδὸν μάλιϛα οἱ ἐλευθέριοι τῶν ἐπ' ἀρετῆς, ὠφέλιμοι γάρ. Ariſt.
Matt. 6. 1.
Prov. 21. 21.
Αἱ γὰρ δυναϛεῖαι καὶ ὁ πλοῦτος διὰ τὴν τιμήν ἐϛιν αἱρετά. Ariſt.

2. But farther, an acceſſion of honour according to gracious promiſe, (grounded upon ſomewhat of ſpecial reaſon, of equity and decency in the thing it ſelf) is due from God unto the bountiful perſon, and is by ſpecial providence ſurely conferred on him. There is no kind of piety, or inſtance of obedience, whereby God himſelf is more ſignally Matt. 5. 16. honoured, than by this. Theſe are chiefly thoſe good works, the which men ſeeing, are apt to glorify our father which is in heaven; Phil. 1. 11. Being filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs, which are by Chriſt Jeſus, to the glory, and praiſe of God. To theſe fruits that is moſt applicable, which our Lord ſaith, Joh. 15. 8. Hereby is my father glorified, if you bear much fruit: for, as, He that oppreſſeth the poor, reproacheth his maker; ſo Prov. 14. 31. he honoureth him, that hath mercy on the poor. The comfortable experience of good in this ſort of actions, will moſt readily diſpoſe men to admire and commend the excellecy, the wiſdom, the goodneſs of the Divine Laws, will therefore procure God hearty praiſe, and thanks for them: 2 Cor. 9. 11, 12, 13. For, as Saint Paul teacheth us, The adminiſtration of this ſervice not only ſupplyeth the want of the ſaints, but is abundant alſo by many thankſgivings unto God; whilſt by experiment of this miniſtration, they glorify God for your profeſſed ſubjection unto the Goſpel of Chriſt, and for your liberal diſtribution unto them, and unto all men. Since then God is ſo peculiarly honoured by this practice, it is but equal and fit, that God ſhould remunerate it with honour; God's noble goodneſs will not let him ſeem defective in any ſort of beneficial correſpondence toward us, we ſhall never be able to yield him any kind of good thing in duty, which he will not be more apt to render us in grace; they who (as Solomon ſpeaketh) Prov. 3. 9. honour God with their ſubſtance, ſhall by God certainly be honoured with his bleſſing: reaſon intimates ſo much, and we beſide have God's expreſs word for it; 1 Sam. 2. 30. Them (ſaith he) who honour me, I will honour. He that abſolutely and independently is the fountain of all honour, 1 Chron. 29. 12. from whom (as good King David ſaith) riches and honour cometh, for that he reigneth over all, he will aſſuredly prefer and dignify thoſe, who have been at ſpecial care and coſt to advance his honour. He that hath the Prov. 21. 1. hearts of all men in his hands, and faſhioneth them as he pleaſeth, will Pſal. 33. 15. raiſe the bountiful man in the judgments and affections of men. He that ordereth all the events of things, and diſpoſeth ſucceſs as he thinks fit, will cauſe the bountiful perſon's enterprizes to proſper, and come off with credit. He will not ſuffer the reputation of ſo real an honourer of himſelf to be extremely ſlurr'd by diſaſter, to be blaſted by ſlander, to be ſupplanted by envy or malice; but will bring forth his righteouſneſs as the light, and his judgment as the noon-day. Pſal. 37. 6.

3. God will thus exalt the bountiful man's horn even here in this world, and to an infinitely higher pitch he will advance it in the future ſtate: He ſhall there be ſet at the right hand, in a moſt honourable place and rank; among the chief friends and favourites of the heavenly King: in happy conſortſhip with the holy Angels, and bleſſed Saints; where, in recompence of his pious bounty, he ſhall from the bountiful hands of his moſt gracious Lord receive an incorruptible crown of righteouſneſs, and an unfading crown of glory: The which God of his infinite mercy grant unto us all, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; to whom for ever be all praiſe. Amen.

Heb. 13. 20. Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jeſus, that great Shepherd of the ſheep, through the blood of the everlaſting Covenant, make us perfect in every good work to do his will, working in us that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight, through Jeſus Chriſt: To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

SERMON XXXII.

A Sermon upon the Paſſion of our Bleſſed Saviour.

PHIL. 2. 8.

And being found in faſhion as a man, he humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Croſs.

WHen, in conſequence of the original apoſtacy from God, which did baniſh us from Paradiſe, and by continued rebellions againſt him, inevitable to our corrupt and impotent nature, mankind had forfeited the amity of God, (the chief of all goods, the fountain of all happineſs,) and had incurred his diſpleaſure, (the greateſt of all evils, the foundation of all miſery:)

Cyril. c. Jul. 8. p. 278. 9. p. 303. Joh. 3. 36. Col. 3. 6.

When poor man, having deſerted his natural Lord and Protector, other Lords had got dominion over him, ſo that he was captivated by the foul, malicious, cruel Spirits, and enſlaved to his own vain mind, to vile luſts, to wild paſſions:

Iren. 3. 33, 34. Iſa. 26. 13. Iren. 3. 8.

When, according to an eternal rule of juſtice, that ſin deſerveth puniſhment, and by an expreſs Law, wherein death was enacted to the tranſgreſſours of God's command, the root of our ſtock, and conſequently all its branches ſtood adjudged to utter deſtruction:

Gen. 4. 7. Gen. 2. 17. Iren. 5. 16.

When, according to St. Paul's expreſſions, all the World was become guilty before God, (or * ſubjected to God's Judgment;) † all men (Jews and Gentiles) were under ſin, || under condemnation, * under the curſe; † all men were concluded into diſobedience, and || ſhut up together (as cloſe Priſoners) under ſin; * all men had ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God: † Death had paſſed over all, becauſe all had ſinned:

* Rom. 3. 19. ὑπόδικος τῷ Θεῷ. † Rom. 3. 9. || Rom. 5. 16, 18. * Gal. 3. 10. † Rom. 11. 32. εἰς ἀπείθειαν. || Gal. 3. 22. * Rom. 3. 23. † Rom. 5. 12.

When, for us, being plunged into ſo wretched a condition, no viſible remedy did appear, no poſſible redreſs could be obtained here below: (For, what means could we have of recovering God's favour, who were apt perpetually to contract new debts and guilts, but not able to diſcharge any old ſcores? What capacity of mind or will had we to entertain mercy, who were no leſs ſtubbornly perverſe and obdurate in our crimes, than ignorant or infirm? How could we be reconciled unto Heaven, who had an innate antipathy to God and goodneſs? [|| Sin (according to our natural ſtate, and ſecluding Evangelical grace) reigning in our mortal bodies, * no good thing dwelling in us; there being a predominant law in our members, warring againſt the law of our mind, and bringing us into captivity to the law of ſin; a main ingredient of our † old man being a || carnal mind, which is enmity to God, and cannot ſubmit to his Law; we being * alienated from the life of God by the blindneſs of our hearts, and enemies in our minds by wicked works?] How could we revive

|| Rom. 6. 12, 14, 20, 22. *Rom. 7. 18, 5. Rom. 7. 23. † Rom. 6. 6. Coloſſ. 3. 9. Epheſ. 4. 22. || Rom. 8. 7. οὐχ ὑποτάσσεται. * Epheſ. 4. 18. Coloſſ. 1. 21. Rom. 5. 10.

Epheſ. 2. 5. (Rom. 6. 13. 11.) Pſal. 143. 2. Exod. 34. 7.

revive to any good hope, who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, God having withdrawn his quickning Spirit? How at leaſt could we for one moment ſtand upright in God's ſight, upon the natural terms, excluding all ſin, and exacting perfect Obedience?)

Ezek. 16. 6.

When this, I ſay, was our forlorn and deſperate caſe, then Almighty God, out of his infinite goodneſs, was pleaſed to look upon us (as he ſometime did upon Jeruſalem, lying polluted in her blood) with an eye of pity and mercy, ſo as graciouſly to deſign a redemption for us out of all that woful diſtreſs: And no ſooner by his incomprehenſible wiſdom did he foreſee we ſhould loſe our ſelves, than by his immenſe grace he did conclude to reſtore us.

Eph. 1. 4, 9, 11. & 3. 11. 2 Tim. 1. 9. 1 Pet 1. 20. Rev. 13. 8. Rom. 16. 25. Tit. 1. 2. Athan. de Incarn. Geneſ. 2. 17.

But how could this happy deſign well be compaſſed? how in conſiſtence with the glory, with the juſtice, with the truth of God, could ſuch enemies be reconciled, ſuch offenders be pardoned, ſuch wretches be ſaved? Would the Omnipotent Majeſty, ſo affronted, deſign to treat with his rebels immediately, without an interceſſour or advocate? Would the Sovereign Governour of the world ſuffer thus notoriouſly his right to be violated, his authority to be ſlighted, his honour to be trampled on, without ſome notable vindication or ſatisfaction? Would the great Patron of Juſtice relax the terms of it, or ever permit a groſs breach thereof to paſs with impunity? Would the immutable God of truth expoſe his veracity or his conſtancy to ſuſpicion, by ſo reverſing that peremptory ſentence of death upon ſinners, that it ſhould not in a ſort eminently be accompliſhed? Would the moſt righteous and moſt holy God let ſlip an opportunity ſo advantageous for demonſtrating his perfect love of innocence, and abhorrence of iniquity? Could we therefore well be cleared from our guilt without an expiation, or re-inſtated in freedom without a ranſom, or exempted from condemnation without ſome puniſhment?

No: God was ſo pleaſed to proſecute his deſigns of goodneſs and mercy, as thereby no-wiſe to impair or obſcure, but rather to advance and illuſtrate the glories of his ſovereign dignity, of his ſevere juſtice, of his immaculate holineſs, of his unchangeable ſteddineſs in word and purpoſe. He accordingly would be ſued to for peace and mercy: nor would he grant them abſolutely, without due compenſations for the wrongs he had ſuſtained; yet ſo, that his goodneſs did find us a Mediatour, and furniſh us with means to ſatisfy him. He would not condeſcend to a ſimple remiſſion of our debts; yet ſo, that, ſaving his right and honour, he did ſtoop lower for an effectual abolition of them. He would make good his word, not to let our treſpaſſes go unpuniſhed; yet ſo, that by our puniſhment we might receive advantage. He would manifeſt his deteſtation of wickedneſs in a way more illuſtrious; than if he had perſecuted it down to Hell, and irreverſibly doomed it to endleſs torment.

But how might theſe things be effected? Where was there a Mediatour proper and worthy to intercede for us? Who could preſume to ſolicit and plead in our behalf? Who ſhould dare to put himſelf between God and us, or offer to skreen Mankind from the divine wrath and vengeance? Who had ſo great an intereſt in the Court of Heaven, as to ingratiate ſuch a brood of apoſtate enemies thereto? Who could aſſume the confidence to propoſe terms of reconciliation, or to agitate a new Covenent, wherewith God might be ſatisfied, and whereby we might be ſaved? Where, in Heaven or Earth, could there be found a Prieſt fit to atone for ſins ſo vaſtly numerous, ſo extremely hainous? And whence ſhould a ſacrifice be taken, of value ſufficient to expiate for ſo manifold enormities, committed againſt the infinite Majeſty of Heaven? Who could find out the everlaſting redemption of innumerable ſouls, or lay down a competent ranſom for them all? not to ſay, could alſo purchaſe for them eternal life and bliſs? αἰωνίαν λύτρωσιν εὑράμενος, Heb. 9. 12.

Theſe are Queſtions which would puzzle all the wit of man, yea, would gravel all the wiſdom of Angels to reſolve: for plain it is, that no creature on earth, none in Heaven, could well undertake or perform this work.

Where on earth, among the degenerate ſons of Adam, could be found ſuch an High Prieſt as became us, holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners? Heb. 7. 26. And how could a Man, however innocent and pure as a Seraphim, ſo perform his duty, as to do more than merit or ſatisfie for himſelf? How many lives could the life of one man ſerve to ranſom; ſeeing that it is aſſerted of the greateſt and richeſt among men, that None of them can by any means redeem his brother, or give to God a ranſom for him. Pſal. 49. 7.

And how could available help in this caſe be expected from any of the Angelical hoaſt; ſeeing (beſide their being in nature different from us, and thence improper to merit or ſatisfie for us; beſide their comparative meanneſs, and infinite diſtance from the Majeſty of God) they are but our fellow-ſervants, and have obligations to diſcharge for themſelves, and cannot be ſolvent for more than for their own debts of gratitude and ſervice to their infinitely-bountiful Creator; they alſo themſelves needing a Saviour, to preſerve them by his grace in their happy ſtate?

Indeed, no creature might aſpire to ſo auguſt an honour, none could atchieve ſo marvellous a work, as to redeem from infinite guilt and miſery the nobleſt part of all the viſible creation: none could preſume to invade that high prerogative of God, or attempt to infringe the truth of that reiterated Proclamation, I, even I am the Lord, and beſide me there is no Saviour. Iſa. 43. 11. 45. 21. Hoſ. 13. 4.

Wherefore, ſeeing that a ſupereminent dignity of Perſon was required in our Mediatour, and that an immenſe value was to be preſented for our ranſom; ſeeing that God ſaw there was no man, and wondred (or took ſpecial notice) that there was no interceſſor; it muſt be his arm alone that could bring ſalvation; none beſide God himſelf could intermeddle therein. Iſa. 59. 16. κατενόησε, LXX.

But how could God undertake the buſineſs? Could he become a ſuitor or interceſſor to his offended ſelf? could he preſent a ſacrifice, or diſburſe a ſatisfaction to his own juſtice? could God alone contract and ſtipulate with God in our behalf? No; ſurely Man alſo muſt concur in the tranſaction: ſome amends muſt iſſue from him, ſomewhat muſt be paid out of our ſtock: humane will and conſent muſt be interpoſed, to ratify a firm covenant with us, inducing obligation on our part. It was decent and expedient, that as Man, by wilful tranſgreſſion and preſumptuous ſelf-pleaſing, had ſo highly offended, injured and diſhonoured his Maker; ſo Man alſo, by willing obedience, and patient ſubmiſſion to God's pleaſure, ſhould greatly content, right and glorify him.

Here then did lie the ſtreſs; this was the knot which only divine wiſdom could looſe. And ſo indeed it did in a moſt effectual and admirable way; for in correſpondence to all the exigencies of the caſe, (that God and Man both might act their parts in ſaving us,) the bleſſed eternal word, the only Son of God, by the good will of his Father, did vouchſafe to intercede for us, and to undertake our redemption; in order thereto voluntarily being ſent down from Heaven, aſſuming humane fleſh, ſubjecting himſelf to all the infirmities of our frail nature, and to the worſt inconveniences of our low condition; therein meriting God's Epheſ. 1. 8. Luke. 1. 78. Epheſ. 1. 5. Tit. 3. 4. Rom. 5. 8. Gal. 4. 4. Joh. 6. 38. Heb. 10. 7. Joh. 1. 14. Heb. 5. 2. 4. 15. Epheſ. 1. 6. Conſtit. Apoſt. 8. 12.

1 Tim. 2. 6.
Tit. 2. 14.
Heb. 9. 15. 2. 9.
Col. 1. 22.

favour to us, by a perfect obedience to the Law, and ſatisfying God's juſtice by a moſt patient endurance of pains in our behalf; in completion of all, willingly laying down his life for the ranſom of our ſouls, and pouring forth his blood in ſacrifice for our ſins.

1 Tim. 3. 16.

This is that great and wonderful myſtery of godlineſs, (or of our holy Religion,) the which St. Paul here doth expreſs, in theſe words concerning our bleſſed Saviour; Who being in the form of God, thought it no robbery to be equal with God, but made himſelf of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a ſervant, and was made in the likeneſs of men: And being found in faſhion as a man, he humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Croſs.

θανάτου δὲ σταυροῦ.

In which words are contained divers points very obſervable. But ſeeing the time will not allow me to treat on them in any meaſure as they deſerve; I ſhall (waving all the reſt) inſiſt but upon one particular, couched in the laſt words, Even the death of the Croſs; which by a ſpecial emphaſis do excite us to conſider the manner of that holy Paſſion, which we now commemorate: the contemplation whereof, as it is moſt ſeaſonable, ſo it is ever very profitable.

Now then in this kind of Paſſion we may conſider divers notable adjuncts; namely theſe. 1. Its being in appearance criminal. 2. Its being moſt bitter and painful. 3. Its being moſt ignominious and ſhameful. 4. Its peculiar advantageouſneſs to the deſigns of our Lord in ſuffering. 5. Its practical efficacy.

Iſa. 53. 12.
2 Cor. 4. 21.

I. We may conſider our Lord's Suffering as Criminal: or as in ſemblance being an execution of juſtice upon him. He (as the Prophet foretold of him) was numbred among the tranſgreſſours; and God (ſaith S. Paul) made him ſin for us who knew no ſin: that is, God ordered him to be treated as a moſt ſinful or criminous perſon, who in himſelf was perfectly innocent, and void of the leaſt inclination to offend.

Joh. 5. 18. 10. 30. &c. 7. 12.
Matth. 26. 61. 27. 40.
Luke. 23. 2.
Matth 27. 63.
Conſt. Apoſt. 5. 14.
κακοποιός.
Joh. 18. 30.

So in effect it was, that he was impeached of the higheſt crimes; as a violator of the Divine Laws in divers inſtances; as a deſigner to ſubvert their Religion and Temple; as an Impoſtor, deluding and ſeducing the people; as a Blaſphemer, aſſuming to himſelf the properties and prerogatives of God; as a ſeditious and rebellious perſon, perverting the nation, inhibiting payments of tribute to Cæſar, uſurping Royal Authority, and ſtyling himſelf Chriſt a King: in a word, as a Malefactor, or one guilty of enormous offences; ſo his perſecutors avowed to Pilate, If, ſaid they, he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee. As ſuch he was repreſented and arraigned; as ſuch, although by a ſentence wreſted by malicious importunity, againſt the will and conſcience of the Judge, he was condemned, and accordingly ſuffered death.

Cur ſi Deus fuit, & mori voluit, non ſaltem honeſto aliquo mortis genere affectus eſt? &c.
Lact. 4. 26.
Juſt. M. Hab. p. 317.
Orig. c. Celſ. 2. p. 83. 7. p. 368.
Aug. de Civ. D. 10. 28.
Cyril. c. Jul. 6. p. 194.

Now whereas any death or paſſion of our Lord, as being in it ſelf immenſely valuable, and moſt precious in the ſight of God, might have been ſufficient toward the accompliſhment of his general deſigns, (the appeaſing God's wrath, the ſatisfaction of Divine Juſtice, the expiation of our guilt;) it may be inquired, why God ſhould thus expoſe him, or why he ſhould chuſe to ſuffer under this odious and ugly character? Which inquiry is the more conſiderable, becauſe it is eſpecially this circumſtance which croſſeth the fleſhly ſenſe, and worldly prejudices of men, ſo as to have rendred the Goſpel offenſive to the ſuperſtitious Jews, and deſpicable to conceited Gentiles. For ſo Tryphon in Juſtin Martyr, although, from conviction by teſtimonies of Scripture, he did admit the Meſſias was to ſuffer hardly, yet that it ſhould be in this accurſed manner, he could not digeſt. So the great adverſaries of Chriſtianity (Celſus, Porphyrie, Julian,) did with moſt contempt urge this exception againſt it. So S. Paul did obſerve, that Chriſt crucified was unto the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and unto the Greeks fooliſhneſs. Wherefore to avoid thoſe ſcandals, and that we may better admire the Wiſdom of God in this diſpenſation, it may be fit to aſſign ſome Reaſons intimated in Holy Scripture, or bearing conformity to its Doctrine, why it was thus ordered. Such are theſe.

1 Cor. 1. 23.

1. As our Saviour freely did undertake a life of greateſt meanneſs and hardſhip, ſo upon the like accounts he might be pleaſed to undergo a death moſt lothſome and uncomfortable. There is nothing to man's nature (eſpecially to the beſt natures, in which modeſty and ingenuity do ſurvive) more abominable than ſuch a death. God for good purpoſes hath planted in our conſtitution a quick ſenſe of diſgrace; and of all diſgraces that which proceedeth from an imputation of crimes is moſt pungent; and being conſcious of our innocence doth heighten the ſmart; and to reflect upon our ſelves dying under it, leaving the World with an indeleble ſtain upon our name and memory, is yet more grievous. Even to languiſh by degrees, enduring the torments of a long, however ſharp diſeaſe, would to an honeſt mind ſeem more eligible, than in this manner, being reputed and handled as a villain, to find a quick and eaſie diſpatch.

Of which humane reſentment may we not obſerve a touch in that expoſtulation, Be ye come out as againſt a thief with ſwords and ſtaves? If as a man he did not like to be proſecuted as a thief; yet willingly did he chuſe it, as he did other moſt diſtaſtful things, pertaining to our nature, (the likeneſs of man,) and incident to that low condition, (the form of a ſervant,) into which he did put himſelf: ſuch as were, to endure penury, and to fare hardly, to be ſlighted, envied, hated, reproached through all his courſe of life.

Luk. 22. 52.
Matt. 26. 55.

It is well ſaid by a Pagan Philoſopher, that No man doth expreſs ſuch a reſpect and devotion to Vertue, as doth he who forfeiteth the repute of being a good man, that he may not loſe the conſcience of being ſuch. This our Lord willingly made his caſe, being content not only to expoſe his Life, but to proſtitute his Fame, for the intereſts of Goodneſs.

Nemo mihi videtur pluris æſtimare virtutem, nemo illi magis eſſe devotus, quàm qui boni viri famam perdidit, ne conſcientiam perderet. Sen. Ep. 81.

Had he died otherwiſe, he might have ſeemed to purchaſe our welfare at a ſomewhat eaſier rate; he had not been ſo complete a ſufferer; he had not taſted the worſt that man is liable to endure: there had been a comfort in ſeeming innocent, detracting from the perfection of his ſufferance.

Whereas therefore he often was in hazzard of death, both from the clandeſtine machinations, and the outrageous violences of thoſe who maligned him, he did induſtriouſly ſhun a death ſo plauſible, and honourable, if I may ſo ſpeak; it being not ſo diſgraceful to fall by private malice, or by ſudden rage, as by the ſolemn deliberate proceeding of men in publick authority and principal credit.

Joh. 5. 18. 8. 37, 40, 59, 7, 1, 19, 25. 10. 32, 39.

Accordingly this kind of death did not fall upon him by ſurprize, or by chance; but he did from the beginning foreſee it; he plainly with ſatisfaction did aim at it: He (as it is related in the Goſpels) did ſhew his Diſciples, that it was incumbent on him by God's appointment and his own choice; that he ought ('tis ſaid) to ſuffer many things, to be rejected by the chief Prieſts, Elders and Scribes, to be vilified by them, to be delivered up to the Gentiles, to be mocked and ſcourged, and crucified, as a flagitious ſlave. Thus would our bleſſed Saviour, in conformity to the reſt of his voluntary afflictions, and for a conſummation of them, not only ſuffer in his Body by ſore wounds and bruiſes, and in his Soul by doleful agonies, but in his Name alſo and Reputation by the fouleſt

Joh. 6. 64.

Matt. 16. 21.
Luk. 9. 22. 18. 32.
Mark 9. 31.

ſcandals; undergoing as well all the infamy as the infirmity which did belong to us, or might befal us: thus meaning by all means throughly to expreſs his charity, and exerciſe his compaſſion towards us; thus advancing his merit, and diſcharging the utmoſt ſatisfaction in our behalf.

2. Death paſſing on him as a Malefactour by publick ſentence, did beſt ſute to the nature of his undertaking, was moſt congruous to his intent, did moſt aptly repreſent what he was doing, and imply the reaſon of his performance. For we all are guilty in a moſt high degree, and in a manner very notorious; the fouleſt ſhame together with the ſharpeſt pain is due to us for affronting our glorious Maker, we deſerve an open condemnation and exemplary puniſhment: wherefore he, undertaking in our ſtead to bear all, and fully to ſatisfie for us, was pleaſed to undergo the like judgment and uſage; being termed, being treated as we ſhould have been, in quality of an hainous Malefactour, as we in truth are. What we had really acted in diſhonouring and uſurping upon God, in diſordering the world, in perverting others, that was imputed to him; and the puniſhment due to that guilt was inflicted on him.
Iſa. 53. 6. All we like ſheep have gone aſtray, we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquities of us all. He therefore did not only ſuſtain an equivalent pain for us, but in a ſort did bear an equal blame with us, before God and Man.

3. Seeing by the determinate counſel of God it was appointed that our Acts 2. 23. Lord ſhould die for us, and that not in a natural, but violent way, ſo as perfectly to ſatisfie God's juſtice, to vindicate his honour, to evidence both his indignation againſt ſin, and willingneſs to be appeaſed; it was moſt fit that affair ſhould be tranſacted in a way, wherein God's right is moſt nearly concerned, and his providence moſt plainly diſcernible; wherein it ſhould be moſt apparent that God did exact and inflict the puniſhment, that our Lord did freely yield to it, and ſubmiſſively un-
Deut. 1. 17. dergo it, upon thoſe very accounts. All judgment (as Moſes of old did ſay) is God's, or is adminiſtred by authority derived from him, in his name, for his intereſt; all Magiſtrates being his officers, and inſtruments, whereby he governeth and ordereth the world, his natural Kingdom: whence that which is acted in way of formal judgment by perſons in authority, God himſelf may be deemed in a more ſpecial and immediate manner to execute it, as being done by his commiſſion, in his ſtead, on his behalf, with his peculiar ſuperitendence. It was therefore in our Lord a ſignal act of deference to God's Authority and Juſtice, becoming the perſon ſuſtained by him of our Mediatour and Proxy, to undergo ſuch a judgment, and ſuch a puniſhment; whereby he received a doom as it were from God's own mouth, uttered by his Miniſters, and bare the ſtroke of juſtice from God's hand, repreſented by his inſtruments. Whence very ſeaſonably and patiently did he reply to Pilate, Joh. 19. 11. κατ' ἐμȣ̃. Thou hadſt no power over me, (or againſt me,) except it were given thee from above: implying, that it was in regard to the originally Supreme Authority of God his Father, and to his particular appointment upon this occaſion, that our Saviour did then frankly ſubject himſelf to thoſe inferiour powers, as to the proper Miniſters of Divine Juſtice. Had he ſuffered in any other way, by the private malice or paſſion of men, God's ſpecial providence in that caſe had been leſs viſible, and our Lord's obedience not ſo remarkable. And if he muſt die by publick hands, it muſt be as a criminal, under a pretence of guilt and demerit; there muſt be a formal proceſs, how full ſoever of mockery and outrage; there muſt be teſtimonies produced, how void ſoever of truth or probability; there muſt be a ſentence pronounced, although moſt corrupt and injurious:

injurious: for no man is in this way perſecuted, without colour of deſert: otherwiſe it would ceaſe to be publick authority, and become lawleſs violence; the Perſecutor then would put off the face of a Magiſtrate, and appear as a Cut-throat, or a Robber.

4. In fine, our Saviour hardly with ſuch advantage, in any other way, could have diſplayed all kinds of Vertue and goodneſs, to the honour of God, to the edification of men, to the furtherance of our Salvation.

The Judgment-hall, with all the paſſages leading him thither, and thence to execution, attended with guards of ſouldiers, amidſt the crouds and clamours of people, were as ſo many theatres, on which he had opportune convenience, in the full eye of the world, to act divers parts of ſublimeſt Vertue: to expreſs his inſuperable Conſtancy, in atteſting truth, and maintaining a good conſcience; his Meekneſs, in calmly bearing the greateſt wrongs; his Patience, in contentedly enduring the ſaddeſt adverſities; his intire reſignation to the will and providence of God; his peaceable ſubmiſſion to the law and power of man; his admirable charity, in pitying, in excuſing, in obliging thoſe by his good wiſhes, and earneſt prayers for their pardon, who in a manner ſo injurious, ſo deſpiteful, ſo cruel, did perſecute him, yea, in gladly ſuffering all this from their hands for their ſalvation; his unſhakeable Faith in God, and unalterable Love toward him, under ſo fierce a trial, ſo dreadful a temptation. All theſe excellent Vertues and Graces, by the matter being thus ordered, in a degree moſt eminent, and in a manner very conſpicuous, were demonſtrated, to the praiſe of God's Name, and the commendation of his Truth; for the ſettlement of our Faith and Hope, for an inſtruction and an encouragement to us of good practice in thoſe higheſt inſtances of Vertue.

John 18. 37.
1 Tim. 6. 13.

It is a paſſable notion among the moſt eminent Pagan Sages, that no very exemplary Vertue can well appear otherwiſe than in notable misfortune. Whence 'tis ſaid in Plato, that to approve a man heartily righteous, he muſt be ſcourged, tortured, bound, have his two eyes burnt out, and in the cloſe, having ſuffered all evils, muſt be impaled, or crucified. And, * It was (ſaith Seneca) the cup of poyſon which made Socrates a great man, and which out of priſon did transfer him to Heaven, or did procure to him that lofty eſteem; affording him opportunity, to ſignalize his conſtancy, his equanimity, his unconcernedneſs for this world and life. And, The vertue (ſaith he again) and the innocence of Rutilius would have lain hid, if it had not (by condemnation and exile) received injury; while it was violated, it brightly ſhone forth. And he that ſaid this of others, was himſelf in nothing ſo illuſtrious, as in handſomely entertaining that death to which he was by the bloody Tyrant adjudged. And generally, the moſt honourable perſons in the judgment of poſterity for gallant worth, to this very end (as ſuch Philoſophers teach) were by divine providence delivered up to ſuffer opprobrious condemnations and puniſhments, by the ingrateful malignity of their times. So that the Greeks, in conſiſtence with their own wiſdom and experience, could not reaſonably ſcorn that Croſs which our good Lord (did not only, as did their beſt Worthies, by forcible accidental conſtraint undergo, but) adviſedly by free choice did undertake, to recommend the moſt excellent Vertues to imitation, and to promote the moſt noble deſigns that could be, by its influence.

Magnum exemplum niſi mala fortuna non invenit. Sen. de Prov. c. 3.

Ὁ δίκαιος μαστιγώσεται, στρεβλώσεται, δεδήσεται, ἐκκαυθήσεται τὼ ὀφθαλμὼ, τελευτῶν πάντα κακὰ παθὼν ἀνασχινδυλευθήσεται. Plat. de Rep. 2.

* Cicuta magnum Socratem fecit. Sen. Ep. 13.

Calix venenatus, qui Socratem tranſtulit è carcere in cœlum. Sen. Ep. 67.

Æqualis fuit in tanta inæqualitate fortunæ, &c. Sen. Ep. 104.

Rutilii innocentia ac virtus lateret, niſi accepiſſet injuriam; dum violatur, effulſit. Sen. Ep. 79.

Sen. de Prov. 2, 3, &c.
Plut. de Stoic. Contr. ep. 1931.

So great Reaſon there was, that our Lord ſhould thus ſuffer as a Criminal.

II. We may conſider, that in that kind his Suffering was moſt bitter and painful. Eaſily we may imagine what acerbity of pain muſt be endured by our Lord, in his tender Limbs being ſtretched forth, racked, and tentered, and continuing for a good time in ſuch a poſture; by the piercing his hands and his feet, parts very nervous and exquiſitely ſenſible, with ſharp nails, (ſo that, as it is ſaid of Joſeph, the iron entered into his Soul;) by abiding expoſed to the injuries of the Sun ſcorching, the wind beating, the weather ſearching his griveous wounds and ſores. Such a pain it was; and that no ſtupefying, no tranſient pain, but one both very acute and lingring: for we ſee, that he together with his fellow-ſufferers had both preſence of mind, and time to diſcourſe. Even ſix long hours did he remain under ſuch torture, ſuſtaining in each moment of them beyond the pangs of an ordinary death. But as the caſe was ſo hard and ſad, ſo the reaſon of it was great, and the fruit anſwerably good. Our Saviour did embrace ſuch a Paſſion, that in being thus content to endure the moſt intollerable ſmarts for us, he might demonſtrate the vehemence of his love; that he might ſignifie the hainouſneſs of our ſins, which deſerved that from ſuch a perſon ſo heavy puniſhment ſhould be exacted; that he might appear to yield a valuable compenſation for thoſe pains which we ſhould have ſuffered; that he throughly might exemplifie the hardeſt duties of obedience and patience.

Pſal. 22. 16.
Pſal. 105. 18.
Mar. 15. 25, 34.

III. This manner of Suffering was (as moſt ſharp and afflictive, ſo) moſt vile and ſhameful; being proper to the baſeſt condition of the worſt men, and unworthy of a free-man, however nocent and guilty. It was ſervile ſupplicium, a puniſhment never by the Romans, under whoſe Law our Lord ſuffered, legally inflicted upon free-men, but upon ſlaves only; that is, upon people ſcarcely regarded as men, having in a ſort forfeited or loſt themſelves. And among the Jews that execution which moſt approached thereto, and in part agreed with it, (for their Law did not allow any ſo inhumane puniſhment,) hanging up the dead bodies of ſome that had been put to death, was held moſt infamous and execrable: for, Curſed, ſaid the Law, is every one that hangeth upon a tree; curſed, that is, devoted to reproach and malediction: accurſed by God, ſaith the Hebrew, that is, ſeeming to be rejected by God, and by his ſpecial order expoſed to affliction.

Quod etiam homine libero, quamvis nocente, videatur indignum. Lact. 4. 26.
Deut. 21. 23.
Gal. 3. 13.
Τοῦτο γὰρ μόνον τῆς τελευτῆς τὸ εἶδος ὑπὸ ἀρᾶς ἔκειτο. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 61.

Indeed, according to the courſe of things, to be ſet on high, and for continuance of time to be objected to the view of all that paſs by, in that calamitous poſture, doth infuſe bad ſuſpicion, doth provoke cenſure, doth invite contempt and ſcorn, doth naturally draw forth language of deriſion, deſpight and deteſtation; eſpecially from the inconſiderate, hard-hearted and rude vulgar, which commonly doth think, ſpeak and deal according to event and appearance: (——Sequitur fortunam ſemper, & odit damnatos——) Whence θεατρίζεσθαι, to be made a gazing-ſtock, or an object of reproach to the multitude, is by the Apoſtle mentioned as an aggravation of the hardſhips endured by the Primitive Chriſtians. And thus in extremity did it befal our Lord: for we read, that the people did in that condition mock, jear and revile him, drawing up their noſes, abuſing him by ſcurrilous geſtures, letting out their virulent and wanton tongues againſt him; ſo as to verifie that prediction, I am a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people: All they that ſee me laugh me to ſcorn; they ſhoot out the lip, they ſhake the head, ſaying, He truſted in the Lord, let him deliver him, ſeeing he delighted in him.

Heb. 10. 33.
ἐξεμυκτήριζον· ἐνέπαιζον. ἐβλασφήμουν.
Luk. 23. 35, 36.
Matt. 27. 39.
Pſal. 22. 6, 7, 8.

The ſame perſons who formerly had admired his glorious works, who had been raviſhed with his excellent diſcourſes, who had followed and favoured him ſo earneſtly, who had bleſſed and magnified him, (for he, ſaith

Matth. 9. 33. 21. 9, 12. 23
Luk. 4. 15.

ſaith Saint Luke, taught in the Synagogues, being glorified by all,) even thoſe very perſons did then behold him with pitileſs contempt and deſpight. In correſpondence to that prophecie, they look and ſtare upon me, Pſal. 22. 17.
εἱϛήκει ὁ λαὸς θεωρῶν, the people ſtood gazing on him, in a moſt ſcornful Luk. 23. 35.
manner, venting contemptuous and ſpiteful reproaches; as we ſee reported in the Evangelical Story.

Thus did our bleſſed Saviour endure the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame. Heb. 12. 2.
Deſpiſing the ſhame, that is not ſimply diſregarding it, or (with a Stoical haughtineſs, with a Cynical immodeſty, with a ſtupid careleſneſs) ſlighting it as no evil; but not eſchewing it, or not rating it for ſo great an evil, that to decline it he would neglect the proſecution of his great and glorious deſigns.

There is innate to man an averſation and abhorrency from diſgraceful abuſe, no leſs ſtrong than are the like antipathies to pain: whence cruel Heb. 11. 36.
mockings and ſcourgings are coupled as ingredients of the ſore perſecutions ſuſtained by God's faithful Martyrs. And generally men with more readineſs will embrace, with more contentedneſs will endure the cruelty of the latter, than of the former; Pain not ſo ſmartly affecting the lower ſenſe, as being inſolently contemned doth grate upon the fancy, and wound even the mind it ſelf. For, the wounds of infamy do (as the Prov. 18. 8.
Wiſe-man telleth us) go down into the innermoſt parts of the belly, reaching 12. 18.
the very heart, and touching the ſoul to the quick.

We therefore need not doubt, but that our Saviour as a man, endowed with humane paſſions, was ſenſible of this natural evil; and that ſuch indignities did add ſomewhat of loathſomneſs to his cup of affliction; eſpecially conſidering, that his great charity diſpoſed him to grieve, obſerving men to act ſo indecently, ſo unworthily, ſo unjuſtly toward him: yet in conſideration of the glory that would thence accrue to God, of the benefit that would redound to us, of the joy that was ſet Heb. 12. 2.
before him, when he ſhould ſee of the travel of his ſoul, and be ſatisfied, Iſa. 53. 11.
he moſt willingly did accept, and moſt gladly did comport with it. He became a curſe for us, expoſed to malediction and reviling; He endured Gal. 3. 13.
the contradiction (or obloquy) of ſinful men: He was deſpiſed, rejected Heb. 12. 3.
and diſeſteemed of men: He in common apprehenſion was deſerted by Iſa. 53. 3.
God, according to that of the Prophet, We did eſteem him ſtricken, ſmit- Iſa. 53. 4.
ten of God, and afflicted; himſelf even ſeeming to concur in that opinion. So was he made a curſe for us, that we, as the Apoſtle teacheth, Gal. 3. 13.
might be redeemed from the curſe of the Law; that is, that we might be freed from the exemplary puniſhment due to our tranſgreſſions of the Law, with the diſpleaſure of God appearing therein, and the diſgrace before the world attending it. He choſe thus to make himſelf of no repu- Phil 2. 7.
tation, vouchſafing to be dealt with as a wretched ſlave, and a wicked miſcreant, that we might be exempted, not only from the torment, but alſo from the ignominy which we had merited; that together with our life, our ſafety, our liberty, we might even recover that honour which we had forfeited and imbezzled.

But leſt any ſhould be temped not ſufficiently to value theſe ſufferances of our Lord, as not ſo rare, but that other men have taſted the like; leſt any ſhould preſume to compare them with afflictions incident to other perſons, as Celſus did compare them with thoſe of Anaxarchus and Orig. c. Celſ. 7.
Epictetus; it is requiſite to conſider ſome remarkable particulars about p. 368.
them.

We may then conſider, that not only the infinite dignity of his Perſon, and the perfect Innocency of his life did inhance the price of his Sufferings; but ſome Endowments peculiar to him, and ſome Circumſtances adhering to his deſign, did much augment their force.

He was not only, according to the frame and temper of humane nature, ſenſibly touched with the pain, the ſhame, the whole combination of diſaſters apparently waiting on his Paſſion; as God (when he did inſert ſenſe and paſſion into our nature, ordering objects to affect them) did intend we ſhould be, and as other men in like circumſtances would have been; but in many reſpects beyond that ordinary rate: ſo that no man, we may ſuppoſe, could have felt ſuch grief from them as he did, no man ever hath been ſenſible of any thing comparable to what he did endure; that paſſage being truly applicable to him, Lam. 1. 12. Behold and ſee, if there be any ſorrow like to my ſorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger; as that unparallel'd Luk. 22. 44. ſweating out great lumps of blood may argue; and as the terms expreſſing his reſentments do intimate. For, in reſpect of preſent evils, he ſaid of Matt. 26. 37, 38. himſelf, My ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful to death; he is ſaid ἀδημονεῖν, to be in great anguiſh and anxiety, to be in an agony or pang of ſorrow. In Luk. 22. 44. regard to miſchiefs which he ſaw coming on, he is ſaid to be diſturb'd in Joh. 13. 21. 12. 27. ſpirit, and to be ſore amazed, or diſmayed at them. To ſuch an ex- Mark 14. 33. ceeding height did the ſenſe of incumbent evils, and the proſpect of impendent calamities, the apprehenſion of his caſe, together with a reflexion on our condition, ſkrew up his affections.

And no wonder that ſuch a burthen, even the weight of all the ſins (the numberleſs moſt heinous ſins and abominations) that ever were committed by mankind, by appropriation of them to himſelf, lying on his ſhoulders, he ſhould feel it heavy, or ſeem to crouch and groan under it; that in the myſtical Pſalm, applied by the Apoſtle to him, he Heb. 10. 5. Pſal. 40. 12. ſhould cry out, Innumerable evils have compaſſed me about, mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, ſo that I am not able to look up: they are more than the hairs of my head, and my heart faileth me. The ſight of God's indignation ſo dreadfully flaming out againſt ſin, might well aſtoniſh and terrify him: To ſtand, as it were, before the mouth of Hell belching fire and brimſtone in his face; to lie down in the hotteſt furnace of Divine vengeance; to quench with his own heart blood the wrath of Heaven, and the infernal fire, (as he did in regard to thoſe who will not rekindle them to themſelves,) might well in the heart of a man beget unconceivable and unexpreſſible preſſures of affliction. When ſuch a Father (ſo infinitely good and kind to him, whom he ſo dearly and perfectly loved) did hide his face from him, did frown on him, how could he otherwiſe than be mightily troubled? Is it ſtrange that ſo hearty a love, ſo tender a pity, contemplating our ſinfulneſs, and experimenting our wretchedneſs, ſhould be deeply touched? To ſee, I ſay, ſo plainly, to feel ſo throughly the horrible blindneſs, the folly, the infidelity, the imbecillity, the ingratitude, the incorrigibility, the ſtrange perverſeneſs, perfidiouſneſs, malice and cruelty of mankind in ſo many inſtances, (in the treaſon of Judas, in the denial of Peter, in the deſertion of all the Apoſtles, in the ſpite and rage of the Perſecutors, in the falſhood of the Witneſſes, in the abuſes of the People, in the compliance of Pilate, in a general conſpiracy of Friends and Foes to ſin,) all theſe ſurrounding him, all invading him, all diſcharging themſelves upon him; would it not aſtone a mind ſo pure? would it not wound a heart ſo tender and full of charity?

Surely, any of thoſe perſons who fondly do pretend unto, or vainly do glory in a ſullen apathy; or a ſtubborn contempt of the evils incident to our nature and ſtate, would in ſuch a caſe have been utterly dejected: The moſt reſolved Philoſopher would have been daſhed into confuſion at the ſight, would have been cruſhed into deſperation under the ſenſe of thoſe evils which did aſſault him.

With the greatneſs of the cauſes, the goodneſs of his conſtitution did conſpire to encreaſe his Sufferings. For ſurely, as his complexion was moſt pure and delicate, his ſpirit moſt vivid and apprehenſive, his affections moſt pliant and tractable ; ſo accordingly would the impreſſions upon him be moſt ſenſible, and conſequently the pains which he felt (in body or ſoul) moſt afflictive.

That we in like caſes are not alike moved ; that we do not tremble at the apprehenſions of God's diſpleaſure, that we are not affrighted with the ſenſe of our ſins, that we do not with ſad horrour reſent our danger and our miſery, doth ariſe from that we have very glimmering and faint conceptions of thoſe matters; or that they do not in ſo clear and lively a manner ſtrike our fancy ; (not appearing in their true nature and proper ſhape, ſo heinous and ſo hideous as they really are in themſelves and in their conſequences ;) or becauſe we have but weak perſuaſions about them ; or becauſe we do but ſlightly conſider them ; or from that our hearts are very hard and callous, our affections very cold and dull, ſo that nothing of this nature (nothing beſide groſs material affairs) can mollifie or melt them ; or for that we have in us ſmall love to God, and a ſlender regard to our own welfare ; in fine, for that in ſpiritual matters we are neither ſo wiſe, ſo ſober, ſo ſerious, nor ſo good or ingenuous, in any reaſonable meaſure, as we ſhould be. But our Saviour in all thoſe reſpects was otherwiſe diſpoſed. He moſt evidently diſcerned the wrath of God, the grievouſneſs of ſin, the wretchedneſs of man, moſt truly, moſt fully, moſt ſtrongly repreſented to his mind : He moſt firmly believed, yea moſt certainly knew, whatever God's Law had declared about them: He did exactly conſider and weigh them : His heart was moſt ſoft and ſenſible, his affections were moſt quick and excitable by their due objects : He was full of dutiful love to God, and moſt ardently deſirous of our good, bearing a more than fraternal good-will towards us. Whence 'tis not ſo marvellous that as a Man, as a tranſcendently-wiſe and good man, he was ſo vehemently affected by thoſe occurrences, that his imagination was ſo troubled, and his paſſions ſo ſtirred by them ; ſo that he thence did ſuffer in a manner, and to a degree unconceivable ; according to that ejaculation in the Greek Liturgies, Διὰ τῶν ἀγνώστων σου παθημάτων ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς, Χριστὲ, By thy unknown ſufferings, O Chriſt, have mercy on us. But farther,

IV. We may conſider, that this way of Suffering had in it ſome particular Advantages, conducing to the accompliſhment of our Lord's principal deſigns.

Its being very notorious, and laſting a competent time, were good Advantages. For if he had been privately made away, or ſuddenly diſpatched, no ſuch great notice would have been taken of it, nor would the matter of fact have been ſo fully proved, to the confirmation of our faith, and conviction of infidelity ; nor had that his excellent deportment under ſuch bitter affliction (his moſt Divine Patience, Meekneſs and Charity) ſo illuſtriouſly ſhone forth. Wherefore to prevent all exceptions, and excuſes of unbelief, (together with other collateral good purpoſes,) Divine Providence did ſo manage the buſineſs, that as the courſe of his life, ſo alſo the manner of his death, ſhould be moſt conſpicuouſly remarkable. I ſpake freely to the world, and in ſecret have I done nothing, ſaid he of himſelf; and, Theſe things (ſaid S. Paul to King Agrippa) were not done in a corner. Such were the proceedings of his life, not cloſe or clancular, but frank and open, not preſently huſhed up, but leiſurely carried on in the face of the World, that men might have the advantage to obſerve and examine them. And as he lived, ſo he died moſt publickly and viſibly ; the world being witneſs of his

Joh. 18. 20.

Act. 26. 26.

Death, and ſo prepared to believe his Reſurrection, and thence diſpoſed to
Joh. 12. 32. embrace his Doctrine; according to what he did fortel, I being lifted up from the Earth, ſhall draw all men to me: for he drew all men by ſo (Iren. 2. 26.) obvious a Death to take notice of it, he drew all well-diſpoſed perſons from the wondrous conſequences of it to believe on him. And, As (ſaid he Joh. 3. 14. again) Moſes did exalt the Serpent in the Wilderneſs, ſo muſt the Son of man be exalted. As the elevation of that myſterious Serpent did render Iren. 4. 5. it viſible, and did attract the eyes of people toward it; whereby, God's power inviſibly accompanying that Sacramental performance, they were cured of thoſe mortiferous ſtings which they had received: ſo our Lord, being mounted on the Croſs, allured the eyes of men to behold him, and their hearts to cloſe with him; whereby, the heavenly virtue of God's Spirit co-operating, they became ſaved from thoſe deſtructive ſins, which from the Devil's ſerpentine inſtigations they had incurred.

Another Advantage of this kind of Suffering was, that by it the nature of that Kingdom which he did intend to erect was evidently ſignified: that it was not ſuch as the carnal people did expect, an external, earthly, temporal Kingdom, conſiſting in domination over the bodies and eſtates of men, dignified by outward wealth and ſplendour, managed by worldly power and policy, promoted by forcible compulſion and terror of arms, affording the advantages of ſafety, quiet, and proſperity here; but a Kingdom purely ſpiritual, celeſtial, eternal; conſiſting in the governance of mens hearts and minds; adorned with endowments of wiſdom and virtue; adminiſtred by the conduct and grace of God's Holy Spirit; upheld and propagated by meek inſtruction, by virtuous example, by hearty devotion, and humble patience; rewarding its loyal Subjects with ſpiritual joys and conſolations now, with heavenly reſt and bliſs hereafter. No other Kingdom could he preſume to deſign, who ſubmitted to this dolorous and diſgraceful way of ſuffering: No other exploits could he pretend to atchieve by expiring on a Croſs: No other way could he rule, who gave himſelf to be managed by the will of his adverſaries: No other benefits would this forlorn caſe
Joh. 18. 36. allow him to diſpenſe. So that well might he then aſſert, My Kingdom is not of this World; when he was going in this ſignal way to demonſtrate that important truth.

Luke 2. 35. It was alſo a moſt convenient touch-ſtone to prove the genuine diſpoſition and worth of men; ſo as to diſcriminate thoſe wiſe, ſober, ingenuous, ſincere, generous ſouls, who could diſcern true goodneſs through ſo dark a cloud, who could love it though ſo ill-favouredly disfigured, who could embrace and avow it notwithſtanding ſo terrible diſadvanta-
Matt. 11. 6. ges; it ſerved, I ſay to diſtinguiſh thoſe bleſſed ones, who would not be
Gal. 5. 11. offended in him, or by the ſcandal of the croſs be diſcouraged from adhe-
1 Pet. 2. 7, 8. 1 Cor. 1. 23. ring to him, from the crew of blind, vain, perverſe, haughty people, who, being ſcandalized at his adverſity, would contemn and reject him.

Chryſ. Tom. 6. Orat. 61. Another conſiderable Advantage was this, that by it God's ſpecial Providence was diſcovered, and his glory illuſtrated in the propagation of the Goſpel. For how could it be, that a perſon of ſo low parentage, of ſo mean garb, of ſo poor condition, who underwent ſo lamentable and deſpicable a kind of death, falling under the pride, and ſpite of his enemies, ſo eaſily ſhould gain ſo general an opinion in the world (even a-1 Cor. 2. 8. mong the beſt, the wiſeſt, the greateſt perſons) of being the Lord of Jam. 2. 1. life and glory? how, I ſay, could it happen, that ſuch a miracle could be effected without God's aid and ſpecial concurrence? That King Herod, who from a long reign in flouriſhing ſtate, with proſperous ſucceſs in his enterpriſes, did attain the name of Great; or that Veſpaſian, who triumphantly triumphantly did aſcend the imperial Throne, ſhould either of them, by a few admirers of worldly vanity, ſeriouſly be held, or in flattery be call'd the Meſſias; is not ſo ſtrange: but that one who was trampled on ſo miſerably, and treated as a wretched caitiff, ſhould inſtantly conquer innumerable hearts, and from ſuch a depth of extreme adverſity, ſhould be advanced to the ſublimeſt pitch of glory; that the Stone which the Pſal. 118. 22, builders with ſo much ſcorn did refuſe, ſhould become the head ſtone of 23.

the corner; this (with good aſſurance we may ſay) was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

Hereby indeed the excellency of divine power and wiſdom was much 2 Cor. 4. 7. glorified; by ſo impotent, ſo improbably, ſo implauſible means accom- 1 Cor. 1. 27.
pliſhing ſo great effects; ſubduing the world to obedience of God, not by the active valour of an illuſtrious Hero, but through the patient ſubmiſſion of a poor, abuſed and oppreſſed perſon; reſtoring mankind to life and happineſs by the ſorrowful death of a crucified Saviour.

V. Laſtly, The conſideration of our Lord's Suffering in this manner is very uſeful in application to our practice: No point is more fruitful of wholſome inſtruction, none is more forcible to kindle devout affections, none can afford more efficacious inducements and incentives to a pious life. For what vertue will not a ſerious meditation on the Croſs be apt to breed and to cheriſh? to what duty will it not engage and excite us?

1. Are we not hence infinitely obliged, with moſt humble affection and hearty gratitude to adore each perſon of the bleſſed Trinity?

That God the Father ſhould deſign ſuch a Redemption for us; not Rom. 8. 32.
ſparing his own Son, (the Son of his love, dear to him as himſelf,) Col. 1. 13.
but delivering him up for us, to be thus dealt with for our ſake: That God would endure to ſee his Son in ſo pitiful a condition, to hear him groaning under ſo grievous preſſures, to let him be ſo horribly abuſed; and that for us, who deſerved nothing from him, who had demerited ſo much againſt him; for us, who were no friends to him, (for even when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son;) who Rom. 5. 10. were not any ways commendable for goodneſs or righteouſneſs: (for Chriſt did ſuffer for ſinners, the juſt for the unjuſt; and * God commended 1 Pet. 3. 18.
his love to us, that while we were ſinful, Chriſt died for us:) That God Rom. 5. 6.
thus ſhould love us, ſending his Son to be a propitiation for our ſins, in ſo 2 Cor. 5. 19. * Rom. 5. 8.
diſmal a way of ſuffering, how ſtupendious is that goodneſs? how vaſt 1 Joh. 4. 10.
an obligation doth it lay upon us to reciprocal affection? If we do owe all to God, as our Maker, from whoſe undeſerved bounty we did receive all that we have; how much farther do we ſtand indebted to him as the author of our Redemption, from whoſe ill-deſerved mercy we receive a new being, and better ſtate; and that in a way far more obliging? For God created us with a word, without more coſt or trouble: but to redeem us, ſtood him in huge expences and pains; no leſs than the debaſing his only Son to our frailty, the expoſing him to more than our miſery, the withdrawing his face, and reſtraining his bowels from his beſt beloved. If a Jew then were commanded by Law, if a Gentile were obliged by Nature, to love God with all his heart and all his ſoul; what affection doth a Chriſtian, under the law and duty of Grace, owe unto him? by what computation can we reckon that debt? what faculties have we ſufficient to diſcharge it? what finite heart can hold an affection commenſurate to ſuch an obligation?

And how can it otherwiſe than inflame our heart with love toward Eph. 3. 19.
the bleſſed Son of God, our Saviour, to conſider that meerly out of 5. 2. 25.
charitable pity toward us, he purpoſely came down from Heaven, and Gal. 2. 20. Apoc. 1. 5.
took our fleſh upon him, that he might therein undergo thoſe extreme Joh. 15. 13.
acerbities of pain, and thoſe moſt ugly indignities of ſhame for us? οὐδεὶς ἔχει, ἵνα τις —

Greater love (ſad he) hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends: But that God ſhould lay down his life, ſhould pour forth his blood, ſhould be aſperſed with the worſt crimes, and cloathed with fouleſt ſhame, ſhould be executed on a Croſs as a malefactor and a ſlave, for his enemies and rebellious traitours, what imagination can deviſe any expreſſion of charity or friendſhip comparable to this? Wherefore if love naturally be productive of love, if friendſhip juſtly meriteth a correſpondence in good-will, what effect ſhould the conſideration of ſo ineffable a love, of ſo unparallel'd friendſhip have upon us?

How can any ſerious reflexion on this event fail to work hearty gratitude in us toward our good Lord? For put caſe any perſon for our ſake (that he might reſcue us from the greateſt miſchiefs, and purchaſe for us the higheſt benefits) willingly ſhould deprive himſelf of all his eſtate, (and that a very large one,) of his honour, (and that a very high one,) of his eaſe and pleaſure, (and thoſe the moſt perfect and aſſured that could be;) that he ſhould expoſe himſelf to the greateſt hazzards, ſhould endure the ſoreſt pains, and moſt diſgraceful ignominies; ſhould proſtitute his life, and in moſt hideous manner loſe it, merely for our ſake: Should we not then apprehend and confeſs our ſelves monſtrouſly ingrateful, if we did not moſt deeply reſent ſuch kindneſs; if upon all occaſions we did not expreſs our thankfulneſs for it; if we did not ever readily yield all the acknowledgment and all the requital we were able? The caſe in regard to our bleſſed Saviour is like in kind; but in degree, whatever we can ſuppoſe doth infinitely fall below the performances of him for us, who ſtooped from the top of Heaven, who laid aſide the Majeſty and the Felicity of God for the infamies and the dolours of a Croſs, that he might redeem us from the torments of Hell, and inſtate us in the joys of Paradiſe. So that our obligations of gratitude to him are unexpreſſibly great; and we cannot with any face deny our ſelves to be moſt baſely unworthy, if the effects in our heart and life be not anſwerable.

Nor ſhould we forget, that alſo upon this account we do owe great love and thanks to God the Holy Ghoſt, who, as he did originally conſpire in the wonderful project of our Redemption, as he did executively by miraculous operation conduct our Saviour into his fleſhly Tabernacle, Joh. 3. 34. as he did by unmeaſurable communications of Divine virtue aſiſt his Humanity through all the courſe of his life; ſo in this juncture he did inſpire him with Charity more than humane, and did ſupport him to undergo thoſe preſſures with invincible patience; and ſo did ſanctifie all this Sacerdotal performance, that our Lord, as the Apoſtle Heb. 9. 14. doth affirm, did through the eternal Spirit offer himſelf without ſpot to God.

2. What ſurer ground can there be of Faith in God, what ſtronger en- 1 Pet. 1. 20. couragement of Hope, than is ſuggeſted by this conſideration? For if Epheſ. 1. 4. God ſtedfaſtly did hold his purpoſe, and faithfully did accompliſh his Luke 1. 70. word in an inſtance ſo diſtaſtful to his own heart and bowels; how can we ever ſuſpect his conſtancy and fidelity in any caſe? how can we diſtruſt the completion of any Divine promiſe?

If God ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us, to the ſuf- Rom. 8. 32. fering of ſo contumelious affliction, how can we any ways be diffident of his bounty, or deſpair of his mercy; how (as the Apoſtle doth argue) ſhall he not alſo with him freely give us all things?

If ever we be tempted to doubt of God's goodneſs, will not this experiment thereof convince and ſatisfy us? For what higher kindneſs could God expreſs, what lower condeſcenſion could he vouchſafe, by what pledge could he more clearly or ſurely teſtify his willingneſs and his delight to do us good, than by thus ordering his deareſt Son to undergo ſuch miſeries for us?

If the greatneſs of our ſins diſcourageth us from entertaining comfortable hopes of mercy, will it not rear our hearts, to conſider that ſuch a puniſhment hath been inflicted to expiate them, which might content the moſt rigorous ſeverity; that ſuch a price is laid down to redeem us from the curſe, which richly may ſuffice to diſcharge it; that ſuch a ſacrifice hath been offered, which God hath avowed for moſt available, and acceptable to himſelf? So that now what can juſtice exact more from us? what have we farther to do, than with a penitent and thankful heart to embrace the mercy purchaſed for us? Who is he that condemneth, ſeeing Chriſt hath died, and hath his own ſelf born our ſins in his own body on the tree? Whatever the wounds of our Conſcience be, is not the blood of the Croſs, tempered with our hearty repentance, and applied by a lively faith, a ſovereign balſam, of virtue ſufficient to cure them? and may we not by his ſtripes be healed? Have we not abundant reaſon, with the Holy Apoſtle, to joy in God through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; by whom we have received the atonement? Is it not to depreciate the worth, to diſparage the efficacy of our Lord's Paſſion, any ways to deſpair of mercy, or to be diſconſolate for guilt: as if the Croſs were not enough worthy to compenſate for our unworthineſs, or our Saviour's patience could not ballance our diſobedience?

Quis de ſe deſperet, pro quo tam humilis eſſe voluit Filius Dei? Aug. de. Ag. Chr. c. 11.
Gal. 3. 13.
Epheſ. 5. 2.
1 Pet. 1. 19.
Rom. 8. 34.
1 Pet. 2. 24.
1 Pet. 2. 24.
Rom. 5. 11.

3. It indeed may yield great joy and ſprightly conſolation to us, to contemplate our Lord upon the Croſs, exerciſing his immenſe Charity toward us, tranſacting all the work of our Redemption, defeating all the enemies, and evacuating all the obſtacles of our Salvation.

May we not delectably conſider him as there ſtretching forth his Arms of kindneſs, with them to embrace the World, and to receive all mankind under the wings of his protection? as there ſpreading out his Hands, with them earneſtly inviting and intreating us to accept the overtures of grace, procured by him for us?

Extendit in paſſione manus ſuas, &c. Lact. 4. 26.
Iſa. 65. 2.

Is it not ſweet and ſatisfactory, to view our great High Prieſt on that high Altar offering up his own pure Fleſh, and pouring out his precious blood, as an univerſal complete Sacrifice, propitiatory for the ſins of mankind?

Lev. 9. 22.
Chryſ. Tom. Or. 82.
P. Leo I.

Is it not a goodly object to behold humility and patience ſo gloriouſly rearing themſelves above all worldly, all infernal pride and inſolence; by the Croſs aſcending unto the celeſtial Throne of Dignity and Majeſty ſuperlative?

Is it not pleaſant to contemplate our Lord there ſtanding erect, not only as a reſolute ſufferer, but as a noble Conquerour, where having ſpoiled principalities and powers, he made a ſolemn ſhew triumphing over them? Did ever any Conquerour, loftily ſeated in his triumphal Chariot, yield a ſpectacle ſo gallant and magnificent? was ever tree adorned with trophies ſo pompous and ſplendid?

Col. 2. 15.

To the exteriour view and carnal ſenſe of men, our Lord was then indeed expoſed to ſcorn and ſhame; but to ſpiritual and ſincere diſcerning, all his and our enemies did there hang up as objects of contempt, utterly overthrown and undone.

There the Devil, that ſtrong and ſturdy one, did hang up bound in chains, diſarmed and rifled, quite baffled and confounded, mankind being reſcued from his tyrannick power.

ὁ ἰσχυρός.
Matt. 12. 29.
Luk. 11. 21. 22.
Heb. 2. 14.

There the World, with its vain pomps, its counterfeit beauties, its bewitching pleaſures, its fondly-admired excellencies did hang up all defaced and diſparaged; as it appeared to S. Paul: for, God (ſaith he) forbid forbid that I ſhould glory ſave in the Croſs of Chriſt, by which the world is Gal. 6. 14. crucified to me, and I unto the world.

Gal. 2. 20. 5. 24. Col. 3. 5. Rom. 8. 13. There, in a moſt lively repreſentation, and moſt admirable pattern, was exhibited the mortification of our fleſh, with its affections and luſts; and our old man was crucified, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed.

1 Pet. 2. 24. There our ſins, being (as St. Peter telleth us) carried up by him unto the gibbet, did hang as marks of his victorious proweſs, as malefactors Rom. 8. 3. by him condemned in the fleſh, as objects of our horrour and hatred.

1 Cor. 15. 54, 55. 2 Tim. 1. 10. Heb. 2. 14. There Death it ſelf hung gaſping, with its ſting pulled out, and all its terrours quelled; his Death having prevented ours, and induced Immortality.

Eph .2.15,16. Col. 1. 10. There all wrath, enmity, ſtrife, (the banes of comfortable life,) did hang aboliſhed in his fleſh, and ſlain upon the Croſs, by the blood whereof he made peace, and reconciled all things in heaven and earth.

Col. 2. 14. There manifold yokes of bondage, inſtruments of vexation, and principles of variance, even all the hand-writing of ordinances that was againſt us, did hang up cancelled and nailed to the Croſs.

So much ſweet comfort by ſpecial conſideration may be extracted from this event, which in appearance was moſt doleful, but in effect the moſt happy that ever by Providence was diſpenſed to the world. Farther,

4. This conſideration is moſt uſeful to render us very humble and ſenſible of our weakneſs, our vileneſs, our wretchedneſs. For how low was that our fall, from which we could not be raiſed without ſuch a depreſſion of God's only Son? how great is that impotency, which did need ſuch a ſuccour to relieve it? how abominable muſt be that iniquity, which might not be expiated without ſo coſtly a ſacrifice? how deplorable is that miſery, which could not be removed without commutation of ſo ſtrange a ſuffering? Would the Son of God have ſo emptied, ἑαυτὸν ἐκένωσε. Phil. 2. 7. and abaſed himſelf for nothing? would he have endured ſuch pains and ignominies for a trifle? No ſurely; if our guilt had been ſlight, if our caſe had been tolerable, the Divine wiſdom would have choſen a more cheap and eaſie remedy for us.

Is it not madneſs of us to be conceited for any worth in our ſelves, to confide in any merit of our works, to glory in any thing belonging to us, to fancy our ſelves brave, fine, happy perſons, worthy of great reſpect and eſteem; when as our unworthineſs, out demerit, our forlorn eſtate did extort from the moſt gracious God a diſpleaſure needing ſuch a reconciliation, did impoſe upon the moſt glorious Son of God a neceſſity to undergo ſuch a puniſhment in our behalf?

How can we reaſonably pretend to any honour, or juſtly aſſume any regard to our ſelves, whenas the Firſt-born of Heaven, the Lord of 1 Cor. 2. 8. Phil. 2 7. glory, partaker of Divine Majeſty, was fain to make himſelf of no reputation, to put himſelf into the garb of a ſervant, and under the imputation of a malefactor, to bear ſuch diſgrace and infamy in our room, in lieu of the confuſion due to us?

What more palpable confutation can there be of humane vanity and 2 Cor. 10. 5. arrogance, of all lofty imaginations, all preſumptuous confidences, all turgid humours, all fond ſelf-pleaſings and ſelf-admirings, than is that tragical croſs, wherein, as in a glaſs, our foul deformity, our pitiful meanneſs, onr helpleſs infirmity, our ſad wofulneſs are ſo plainly repreſented?

Well ſurely may we ſay with S. Auſtin, Let man now at length bluſh to be proud, for whom God is made ſo humble. [And ſince (as he doth add) this great diſeaſe of Soul did bring down the Almighty Phyſici an

Jam tandem erubeſcat homo eſſe ſuperbus, propter quem factus eſt humilis Deus. Aug. in Pſ. 18.

Iſte ingens morbus omnipotentem Medicum de cœlo deduxit, uſque ad formam ſervi humiliavit, contumeliis egit, ligno an from Heaven, did humble him to the form of a ſervant, did ſubject him to contumelies, did ſuſpend him on a Croſs, that this tumour by virtue of ſo great a medicine might be cured;] may not he well be preſumed incurable, who is not cured of his pride by this medicine; in whom neither the reaſon of the caſe, nor the force of ſuch an example can work humility?

ſuſpendit, ut per ſalutem tantæ medicinæ curetur hic tumor. Ibid.

Quæ ſuperbia ſanari poteſt, ſi humilitate Filii Dei non ſanatur? Aug. de Agone Chr. cap. 11.

5. But farther, while this contemplation doth breed ſober humility, it alſo ſhould preſerve us from baſe abjectneſs of mind: for it doth evidently demonſtrate, that according to God's infallible judgment, we are very conſiderable; that our Souls are capable of high regard; that it is a great pity we ſhould be loſt and abandoned to ruine. For ſurely, had not God much eſteemed and reſpected us, he would not for our ſakes have ſo debaſed himſelf, or deigned to endure ſo much for our recovery; Divine juſtice would not have exacted or accepted ſuch a ranſom for our Souls, had they been of little worth. We ſhould not therefore ſlight our ſelves, nor demean our ſelves like ſorry contemptible wretches, as if we deſerved no conſideration, no pity from our ſelves; as if we thought our Souls not worth ſaving, which yet our Lord thought good to purchaſe at ſo dear a rate. By ſo deſpiſing or diſregarding our ſelves, do we not condemn the ſentiments, do we not vilifie the ſufferings of our Lord; ſo with a pitiful meanneſs of ſpirit joyning the moſt unworthy injuſtice and ingratitude? Again, Aut vero pro minimo habet Deus hominem, propter quem mori voluit Filium ſuum? Aug. in Pſal. 148.

Si vobis ex terrena fragilitate viles eſtis, ex pretio veſtro vos æſtimate. Aug.

Acts 13. 46.

6. How can we reflect upon this event without extreme diſpleaſure againſt, and hearty deteſtation of our ſins? thoſe ſins which indeed did bring ſuch tortures and ſuch diſgraces upon our bleſſed Redeemer? Judas, the wretch who betrayed him, the Jewiſh Prieſts who did accuſe and proſecute him, the wicked rout which did abuſively inſult over him, thoſe cruel hands that ſmote him, thoſe pitileſs hearts that ſcorned him, thoſe poiſonous tongues that mocked him and reviled him, all thoſe who were the inſtruments and abettors of his affliction, how do we loath and abhor them? how do we deteſt their names, and execrate their memories? But how much greater reaſon have we to abominate our ſins, which were the true, the principal actors of all that woful tragedy? He was delivered for our offences: They were indeed the Traitors, which by the hands of Judas delivered him up. He that knew no ſin, was made ſin for us, that is, was accuſed, was condemned, was executed as a ſinner for us. It was therefore we, who by our ſins did impeach him; the ſpiteful Prieſts were but our Advocates: We by them did adjudge and ſentence him; Pilate was but drawn in againſt his will and conſcience, to be our ſpokeſman in that behalf: We by them did inflict that horrid puniſhment on him; the Roman Executioners were but our Repreſentatives therein. He became a curſe for us; that is, all the mockery, deriſion and contumely he endured, did proceed from us; the ſilly people were but properties acting our parts. Our ſins were they that cryed out, Crucifige, (Crucify him, crucify him,) with clamours more loud and more importunate than did all the Jewiſh rabble: It was they, which by the borrowed throats of that baſe people did ſo outrageouſly perſecute him. He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, and bruiſed for our iniquities: It was they which by the hands of the fierce ſouldiers, and of the rude populacy, as by ſenſeleſs engines, did buffet and ſcourge him; they by the nails and thorns did pierce his fleſh, and

Rom. 4. 25.

2 Cor. 5. 21.

Gal. 3. 13.

Iſa. 53. 5.

rend his ſacred body. Upon them therefore it is moſt juſt and fit that we ſhould turn our hatred, that we ſhould diſcharge our indignation.

7. And what in reaſon can be more powerful toward working penitential ſorrow and remorſe, than reflexion upon ſuch horrible effects, proceeding from our ſins? How can we forbear earneſtly to grieve, conſidering our ſelves by them to have been the perfidious betrayers, the unjuſt ſlanderers, the cruel perſecutors, and barbarous murtherers of a Perſon ſo innocent and lovely, ſo good and benign, ſo great and glorious; of God's own dear Son, of our beſt Friend, of our moſt gracious Redeemer?

8. If ingenuity will not operate ſo far, and hereby melt us into contrition; yet ſurely this conſideration muſt needs affect us Pſal. 119. 120. with a religious Fear. For can we otherwiſe than tremble to think upon the heinous guilt of our ſins, upon the dreadful fierceneſs of God's wrath againſt them, upon the impartial ſeverity of Divine judgment for them, all ſo manifeſtly diſcovered, all ſo livelily ſet forth in this diſmal ſpectacle? If the view of an ordinary execution is apt to beget in us ſome terrour, ſome dread of the Law, ſome reverence toward Authority; what awful impreſſions ſhould this ſingular example of Divine Juſtice work upon us?

How greatly we ſhould be moved thereby, what affections it ſhould raiſe in us, we may even learn from the moſt inanimate creatures: for the whole world did ſeem affected thereat with horrour and confuſion; the frame of things was diſcompoſed and diſturbed; all Nature did feel a kind of compaſſion and compunction for it. The Sun (as from averſion and ſhame) did hide his face, leaving the World covered for three hours with mournful blackneſs; the bowels of the Earth did yern and quake; the Rocks did ſplit; the Veil of the Temple was rent; the Graves did open themſelves, and the dead Bodies were rouzed up. And can we then (who are the moſt concerned in the event) be more ſtupid than the Earth, more obdurate than Rocks, more drowzy than interr'd Carcaſes, the moſt inſenſible and immovable things in nature? But farther,

9. How can the meditation on this event do otherwiſe than hugely deter us from all wilful diſobedience and commiſſion of ſin? For how thereby can we violate ſuch engagements, and thwart ſuch an example of obedience? how thereby can we abuſe ſo wonderful goodneſs, and diſoblige ſo tranſcendent charity? how thereby can we reject that gentle dominion over us, which our Redeemer did ſo dearly
Tit. 2. 14. purchaſe, or renounce the Lord that bought us at ſo high a rate? with 1 Pet. 1. 18, 19. what heart can we bring up on the ſtage, and act over that dire-
Rom. 14. 9. ful tragedy, renewing all that pain and all that diſgrace to our Sa-2 Cor. 5. 15. 2 Pet. 2. 1. viour; as the Apoſtle teacheth that we do by Apoſtacy, crucifying to 1 Cor. 6. 20. Heb. 6. 6. ἀνασταυροῦντες. our ſelves the Son of God afreſh, and putting him to an open ſhame?
Can we without horrour tread under foot the Son of God, and count
Heb. 10. 29. the blood of the Covenant an unholy thing; (as the ſame divine ἑκουσίως ἁμαρτανόντων ἡμῶν, ver. 26. Apoſtle ſaith all wilful tranſgreſſors do;) vilifying that moſt ſacred and precious blood, ſo freely ſhed for the demonſtration of God's mercy, and ratification of his gracious intentions toward us, as κοινὸν ἡγησάμενος. a thing of no ſpecial worth or conſideration; deſpiſing all his ſo kind and painful endeavours for our Salvation; defeating his moſt charitable purpoſes, and earneſt deſires for our welfare; rendring all his ſo bitter and loathſome Sufferings in regard to us utterly vain and fruitleſs, fruitleſs, yea indeed very hurtful and pernicious? for if the Croſs do not ſave us from our ſins, it will much aggravate their guilt, and augment their puniſhment; bringing a ſeverer condemnation, and a ſadder ruine on us. Again,

10. This conſideration affordeth very ſtrong engagements to the practice of charity towards our Neighbour. For what heart can be ſo hard, that the blood of the Croſs cannot mollifie into a charitable and compaſſionate ſenſe? Can we forbear to love thoſe, toward whom our Saviour did bear ſo tender affection, for whom he was pleaſed to ſuſtain ſo woful tortures and indignities? Shall we not, in obedience to his moſt urgent commands, in conformity to his moſt notable example, in grateful return to him for his benefits, who thus did gladly ſuffer for us, diſcharge this moſt ſweet and eaſie duty towards his beloved friends? Shall we not be willing, by parting with a little ſuperfluous ſtuff for the relief of our poor brother, to requite and gratifie him, who, to ſuccour us in our diſtreſs, moſt bountifully did part with his wealth, with his glory, with his pleaſure, with his life it ſelf? 2 Cor. 8. 9.
Shall we not meekly comport with an infirmity, not bear a petty Eph. 4. 32.
neglect, not forgive a ſmall injury to our brother, whenas our Lord Coloſſ. 3. 13.
did for us, and from us bear a Croſs, to procure remiſſion for our innumerable moſt heinous affronts and offences againſt Almighty God? Can a heart void of mercy and pity, with any reaſon or modeſty pretend to the mercies and compaſſions of the Croſs? Can we hope, that God for Chriſt's ſake will pardon us, if we for Chriſt's ſake will not forgive our Neighbour?

Can we hear our Lord ſaying to us, This is my command, That ye Joh. 15. 12.
love one another, as I have loved you; and, Hereby ſhall all men know Joh. 13. 35.
that ye are my diſciples, if ye love one another? Can we hear S. Paul exhorting, Walk in love, as Chriſt alſo hath loved us, and hath given him- Eph. 5. 2.
ſelf for us, an offering and a ſacrifice to God for a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour; and, We that are ſtrong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak—For even Rom. 15. 1, 3.
Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf, but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee, fell on me? Can we attend to S. John's arguing, Beloved, if God ſo loved us, then ought we alſo to love one another. Hereby 1 Joh. 4. 11.
we perceive the love of God, becauſe he laid down his life for us: wherefore 3. 16.
we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren?

Can we, I ſay, conſider ſuch Precepts, and ſuch Diſcourſes, without effectually being diſpoſed to comply with them for the ſake of our crucified Saviour; all whoſe Life was nothing elſe but one continual recommendation and enforcement of this duty; but his Death eſpecially was a pattern moſt obliging, moſt incentive thereto? This uſe of the Point is the more to be regarded, becauſe the Apoſtle doth apply it hereto, our Text coming in upon that occaſion; for having pathetically exhorted the Philippians to all kinds of charity and humble condeſcenſion, he ſubjoyneth, Let this mind be in you, which was in Chriſt Jeſus; Who be- Phil. 2. 5.—
ing in the form of God, &c.

11. But furthermore, what can be more operative than this point toward breeding a diſregard of this World with all its deceitful vanities, and miſchievous delights; toward reconciling our minds to the worſt condition into which it can bring us; toward ſupporting our hearts under the heavieſt preſſures of affliction which it can lay upon us? For can we reaſonably expect, can we eagerly affect, can we ardently deſire great proſperity, whenas the Son of God, our Lord and Maſter, did only taſte ſuch adverſity? How can we refuſe, in ſubmiſſion to God's pleaſure, contentedly to bear a ſlight grievance, whenas our Saviour gladly did bear a Croſs, infinitely more diſtaſteful to carnal will and ſenſe than any that can befal us? Who now can admire thoſe ſplendid trifles, which our Lord never did regard in his life, and which at his death only did ſerve to mock and abuſe him? Who can reliſh thoſe ſordid pleaſures, of which he living did not vouchſafe to taſte, and the contraries whereof he dying choſe to feel in all extremity? Who can diſdain or deſpiſe a ſtate of ſorrow and diſgrace, which he, by voluntary ſuſception of it, hath ſo dignified and graced; by which we ſo near reſemble and become conformable to him; by which we concur and partake with him; yea, by which in ſome caſes we may promote, and after a ſort complete his deſigns, filling up, (as S. Paul ſpeaketh) that which is behind of the afflictions of Chriſt in our fleſh?

Rom. 8. 17.
Phil. 3. 10.
Apoc. 1. 9.
1 Pet. 4. 13.
Col. 1. 24.

Who now can hugely prefer being eſteemed, approved, favoured, commended by men, before infamy, reproach, deriſion, and perſecution from them; eſpecially when theſe do follow conſcientious adherence to righteouſneſs? Who can be very ambitious of worldly honour and repute, covetous of wealth, or greedy of pleaſure, who doth obſerve the Son of God chuſing rather to hang upon a Croſs, than to ſit upon a Throne; inviting the clamours of ſcorn and ſpite, rather than acclamations of bleſſing and praiſe; diveſting himſelf of all ſecular power, pomp, plenty, conveniences and ſolaces: embracing the garb of a ſlave, and the repute of a malefactor, before the dignity and reſpect of a Prince, which were his due, which he moſt eaſily could have obtained?

Cogitemus crucem ejus, & divitias lutum eſſe putabimus. Hier. ad Nepot. Epiſt. 2.

Can we imagine it a very happy thing, to be high and proſperous in this World, to ſwim in affluence and pleaſure? Can we take it for a miſery, to be mean and low, to conflict with ſome wants and ſtraits here; ſeeing the Fountain of all happineſs, did himſelf purpoſely condeſcend to ſo forlorn a ſtate, and was pleaſed to become ſo deep a ſufferer? If with devout eyes of our mind we do behold our Lord, hanging naked upon a gibbet, beſmeared all over with ſtreams of his own blood, groaning under ſmart anguiſh of pain, encompaſſed with all ſorts of diſgraceful abuſes, yielding (as it was foretold of him) his back to the ſmiters, and his cheeks to them who plucked off the hair, hiding not his face from ſhame and ſpitting; will not the imagination of ſuch a ſpectacle dim the luſtre of all earthly grandeurs and beauties, damp the ſenſe of all carnal delights and ſatisfactions, quaſh all that extravagant glee which we can find in any wild frolicks, or riotous merriments? will it not ſtain all our pride, and check our wantonneſs? will it not diſpoſe our minds to be ſober, placing our happineſs in things of another nature, ſeeking our content in matters of higher importance; preferring obedience to the will of God before compliance with the fancies and deſires of men; according to that precept of St. Peter, Foraſmuch then as Chriſt hath ſuffered for us in the fleſh, arm your ſelves likewiſe with the ſame mind—ſo as no longer to live the remaining time in the fleſh, to the luſts of men, but to the will of God?

Quis beatam vitam eſſe arbitretur in iis, quæ contemnenda eſſe docuit Filius Dei? Aug. de Ag. Chr. cap. 11.

Iſa. 56.

1 Pet. 4. 1, 2. Græc.

12. This indeed will inſtruct and incline us chearfully to ſubmit unto God's will, and gladly to accept from his hand what-ever he diſpoſeth, however grievous and afflictive to our natural will; this point ſuggeſting great commendation of Afflictions, and ſtrong conſolation under them. For if ſuch hardſhip was to our Lord himſelf a ſchool of duty, he (as the Apoſtle ſaith) learning obedience from what he ſuffered; if it was to him a fit mean of perfection, as the Apoſtle doth again imply when he ſaith, that it became God to perfect the captain of our ſalvation by ſuffering; if it was an attractive of the Divine favour even to him, as thoſe words import, Therefore the Father loveth me, becauſe ἔμαθεν ἀφ᾽ ὧν ἔπαθε. Heb. 5. 8.

Heb. 2. 10.
Joh. 10. 17.

I

I lay down my life; if it was to him a ſtep toward glory, according to that ſaying, Was not Chriſt to ſuffer, and ſo to enter into his glory? yea, if it was a ground of conferring on him a ſublime pitch of dignity above all Creatures, God for this obedience having exalted him, and given him a name above all names; We ſeeing Jeſus——for the ſuffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; the heavenly Society in the Revelations with one voice crying out, Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain (who redeemed us to God by his blood) to receive power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing: If Affliction did miniſter ſuch advantages to him; and if by our conformity to him in undergoing it, (with like equanimity, humility, and patience) it may afford the like to us; what reaſon is there that we ſhould any-wiſe be diſcompoſed at it, or diſconſolate under it? Much greater reaſon, ſurely, there is, that, with St. Paul, and all the Holy Apoſtles, we ſhould * rejoyce, boaſt, and exult in our tribulations: far more cauſe we have, with them, to eſteem it a favour, a privilege, an ornament, a felicity to us, than to be diſpleaſed and diſcontented therewith.

Luk. 24. 26.
Phil. 2. 9.
Heb. 2. 9.
Rev. 5. 12. 9.
* (Rom. 5. 3.
Col. 1. 24.
Matt. 5. 12.
Luk. 6. 23.
Phil. 1. 29.
Act. 5. 41.
Jam. 1. 2.
Heb. 10. 34.
1 Pet. 1. 7.
Heb. 12. 2.---
1 Cor. 1. 4.---)
1 Theſ. 3. 3.
Rom. 8. 29.
Act. 14. 22.
2 Tim. 3. 12.

To do thus is a duty incumbent on us as Chriſtians. For, † He, ſaith our Maſter, that doth not take up his croſs, and follow me, is not worthy of me; He that doth not carry his croſs, and go after me cannot be my diſciple. He that doth not willingly take the croſs when it is preſented to him by God's hand, he that doth not contentedly bear it when it is by providence impoſed on him, is no-wiſe worthy of the honour to wait on Chriſt; he is not capable to be reckoned among the Diſciples of our heavenly Maſter. He is not worthy of Chriſt, as not having the courage, the conſtancy, the ſincerity of a Chriſtian; or of one pretending to ſuch great benefits, ſuch high privileges, ſuch excellent rewards, as Chriſt our Lord and Saviour doth propoſe. He cannot be Chriſt's diſciple, ſhewing ſuch an incapacity to learn thoſe needful leſſons of humility and patience dictated by him; declaring ſuch an indiſpoſition to tranſcribe thoſe Copies of ſubmiſſion to the divine will, ſelf-denial, and ſelf-reſignation, ſo fairly ſet him by the inſtruction and example of Chriſt: for Chriſt (ſaith S. Peter) ſuffered for us, leaving us an example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps.

† Matt. 10. 38.
16. 24.
Luk. 14. 27.
9. 23.
Greg. Naz. Orat. 38. p. 623.
ὑπογραμμὸν ὑπολιμπάνων.
1 Pet. 2. 21.

13. The willing ſuſception and the chearful ſuſtenance of the Croſs is indeed the expreſs condition, and the peculiar character of our Chriſtianity; in ſignification whereof, it hath been from moſt ancient times a conſtant uſage to mark thoſe who enter into it with the figure of it. The Croſs, as the inſtrument by which our peace with God was wrought, as the ſtage whereon our Lord did act the laſt part of his marvellous obedience, conſummating our redemption, as the field wherein the Captain of our ſalvation did atchieve his noble victories, and erect his glorious trophies over all the enemies thereof, was well aſſumed to be the badge of our profeſſion, the enſign of our ſpiritual warfare, the pledge of our conſtant adherence to our crucified Saviour; in relation to whom our chief hope is grounded, our great joy and ſole glory doth conſiſt: for God forbid, ſaith S. Paul, that I ſhould glory ſave in the croſs of Chriſt.

τὸ τρόπαιον τοῦ σαυροῦ.
Conſt. Apoſt. 8. 12.
Gal. 6. 14.

14. Let it be to the Jews a ſcandal, (or offenſive to their fancy, prepoſſeſſed with expectations of a Meſſias flouriſhing in ſecular pomp and proſperity,) let it be folly to the Greeks, (or ſeem abſurd to men puff'd up and cor[illegible]ed in mind with fleſhly notions and maxims of worldly craft, diſpo[illegible]g them to value nothing which is not grateful to preſent ſenſe or fancy,) that God ſhould put his own moſt beloved Son into ſo very ſad and deſpicable a condition; that ſalvation from death and miſery

1 Cor. 1. 23.

ſery ſhould be procured by ſo miſerable a death; that eternal joy, glory and happineſs ſhould iſſue from theſe fountains of ſorrow and ſhame; that a Perſon in external ſemblance devoted to ſo opprobrious uſage, ſhould be the Lord and redeemer of mankind, the king and judge of all the world; Let, I ſay, this doctrine be ſcandalous and diſtaſteful to ſome perſons tainted with prejudice; let it be ſtrange and incredible to others blinded with ſelf-conceit; let all the inconſiderate, all the proud, all the profane part of mankind openly with their mouth, or cloſely in heart, ſlight and reject it: yet to us it muſt appear grateful and joyous; to us it is πιστὸς λόγος, a faithful and moſt credible propoſition worthy of all acceptation, that Jeſus Chriſt came into the world to ſave ſinners, in this way of ſuffering for them: To us, who diſcern by a clearer light, and are endowed with a purer ſenſe, kindled by the divine Spirit; from whence we may with comfortable ſatisfaction of mind apprehend and taſte, that God could not in a higher meaſure, or fitter manner illuſtrate his glorious attributes of goodneſs and juſtice, his infinite grace and mercy toward his poor creatures, his holy diſpleaſure againſt wickedneſs, his impartial ſeverity in puniſhing iniquity and impiety, or in vindicating his own ſacred honour and authority, than by thus ordering his only Son, cloathed with our nature, to ſuffer for us; that alſo true vertue and goodneſs could not otherwiſe be taught, be exemplified, be commended and impreſſed with greater advantage.

Orig. in Celſ. 2. p. 79.

1 Tim. 1. 15.
2 Tim. 2. 11.

Since thereby indeed a charity and humanity ſo unparallel'd, (far tranſcending theirs who have been celebrated for devoting their lives out of love to their countrey, or kindneſs to their friends,) a meekneſs ſo incomparable, a reſolution ſo invincible, a patience ſo heroical, were manifeſted for the inſtruction and direction of men; ſince never were the vices and the vanities of the world (ſo prejudicial to the welfare of mankind) ſo remarkably diſcountenanced; ſince never any ſuffering could pretend to ſo worthy and beneficial effects, the expiation of the whole world's ſins, and reconciliation of mankind to God, the which no other performance, no other ſacrifice did ever aim to procure; ſince, in fine, no vertue had ever ſo glorious rewards, as ſovereign dignity to him that exerciſed it, and eternal happineſs to thoſe that imitate it; ſince, I ſay, there be ſuch excellent uſes and fruits of the croſs born by our Saviour; we can have no reaſon to be offended at it, or aſhamed of it; but with all reaſon heartily ſhould approve, and humbly adore the deep wiſdom of God, together with all other his glorious attributes diſplayed therein. To whom therefore, as is moſt due, let us devoutly render all glory and praiſe. And,

1 Joh. 2, 2.
2 Cor. 5. 19.

Unto him that loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his blood, and hath made us Kings and Prieſts unto God and his Father, to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever. Amen.

Apoc. 1. 5, 6.
Apoc. 5. 13.

Brief

A Brief

EXPOSITION OF THE CREED,
THE *LORD'S PRAYER AND THE DECALOGUE.

To which is added
The DOCTRINE of the SACRAMENTS.

By ISAAC BARROW, D. D.
And late Maſter of Trinity College in Cambridge.

Orat. Domin.

* Si per omnia precationum ſanctarum verba diſcurras, quantum exiſtimo nihil invenies, quod non iſta Dominica contineat & concludat oratio: unde liberum eſt aliis atque aliis verbis, eadem tamen in orando dicere, ſed non debet eſſe liberum alia dicere. Aug. ad Probam Epiſt. CXXI.

LONDON,
Printed for Brabazon Aylmer, at the Three Pigeons, over againſt the Royal Exchange in Cornhill. 1700.

th

AN EXPOSITION ON THE CREED.

THE Order preſcribed to this Exerciſe directs us to treat upon, 1ſt. The Creed. 2ly. The Lord's-Prayer. 3ly. The Decalogue. 4ly. The Sacraments. 5ly. The Power of the Keys.

The Firſt comprehends the main Principles of our Religion, (I mean the Chriſtian, as diſtinguiſhed from all other Religions) with eſpecial reſpect to which our Practice is alſo to be regulated. The Second directs us in the principal duty of our Religion, (and which procures grace and ability to perform the reſt,) our devotion toward God, informing us concerning both the Matter and Manner thereof. The Third is a compendious Body (as it were) of Law, according to which we are bound to order our practice and converſation, both toward God and Man; containing the chief of thoſe perpetual and immutable laws of God, to which our obedience is indiſpenſibly due; and unto which all other rules of moral duty are well reducible. The next place is fitly allotted to thoſe poſitive ordinances, or myſtical rites, inſtituted by God for the ornament, and advantage of our Religion; the which we are obliged with devotion and edification of our ſelves to obſerve, and therefore ſhould underſtand the ſignification and uſe of them. Laſtly, Becauſe God hath ordered Chriſtians (for mutual aſſiſtance and edification) to live in ſociety together, and accordingly hath appointed differences of office and degree among them, aſſigning to each ſuitable privileges and duties; 'tis requiſite we conſider this point alſo, that we may know how to behave our ſelves towards each other, as duty requires, reſpectively according to our ſtations in the Church, or as Members of that Chriſtian Society. Such, in brief, may be the reaſon of the method preſcribed to theſe Diſcourſes, the which, God willing, we purpoſe to follow.

1. Concerning the Creed.

That, in the primitive Churches, thoſe who being of age (after previous inſtruction and ſome trial of their converſation) were received into entire Communion of the Church, and admitted to Baptiſm, were required to make open profeſſion of their being perſuaded of the truth of Chriſtianity, and their being reſolved to live according thereto; and that this profeſſion was made by way of anſwer to certain interrogatories propounded to them, is evident by frequent and obvious teſtimonies of the moſt ancient Eccleſiaſtical Writers; and St. Peter himſelf ſeems to allude to this Cuſtom, when he ſaith that baptiſm ſaves us (conduces to our ſalvation) as being ἐπερώτημα ἀγαθῆς συνειδήσεως, the ſtipulation, freely and 1 Pet. 3. 21.

ſincerely, bonâ fide, or with a good conſcience, made by us, then when we ſolemnly did yield our conſent and promiſe to what the Church, in God's behalf, did demand of us to believe, and undertake. I conceive alſo, that the Author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews doth allude to the ſame practice when (Ch. 10. 22, 23.) he thus exhorts to perſeverance: Having had our hearts ſprinkled from an evil conſcience, and our body waſhed with pure water (that is, having received baptiſm) let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith (that which we at our baptiſm did make) without wavering (or declining from it) for he that did promiſe is faithfull; God will be true to his part, and perform what he then promiſed, of mercy and grace to us. (Some reſemblance of which practice we have in that paſſage, between Philip the Deacon, and the Æthiopian Eunuch: where, Act. 8. after Philip had inſtructed the Eunuch; the Eunuch firſt ſpeaks: Behold water; what hinders me from being baptized? Philip anſwers: If thou believeſt with all thy heart, it is lawfull. The Eunuch replies: I believe Jeſus Chriſt to be the Son of God: Upon which ſhort confeſſion of his faith, he is Baptized.) Now that this profeſſion (take it either for the action, or the entire res geſta; or for the form, or for the matter thereof; to all which indifferently, by metonymical ſchemes of ſpeech, the ſame words are uſually in ſuch caſes applied) that this profeſſion I ſay, was very anciently (in the Roman eſpecially, and ſome other Churches) called Symbolum, appears by thoſe remarkable words of Cyprian (the moſt ancient perhaps wherein this word is found applied to this matter) in his 76 Epiſtle ad Magnum; arguing againſt the validity of baptiſm adminiſtred by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks (ſuch as were the Novatians:) Quòd ſi aliquis illud opponit, ut dicat, eandem Novatianum legem tenere, quàm Catholica Eccleſia teneat, eodem ſymbolo quo & nos baptizare, eundem nôſſe Deum patrem, eundem filium Chriſtum, eundem ſpiritum ſanctum, ac propter hoc uſurpare eam poteſtatem baptizandi poſſe, quòd videatur in interrogatione baptiſmi à nobis non diſcrepare, ſciat quiſquis hoc opponendum putat, primùm non eſſe unam nobis & ſchiſmaticis ſymboli legem, neque eandem interrogationem. Where thoſe expreſſions, Eodem ſymbolo baptizare, and in interrogatione baptiſmi non diſcrepare; as alſo, Una ſymboli lex, and Eadem interrogatio, do ſeem to mean the ſame thing: and in other later Writers the ſame man- 12. de Trin. ner of ſpeaking doth ſometimes occurr; as when Hilary thus prays: Conſerva hanc conſcientiæ meæ vocem, ut quod in regenerationis meæ ſymbolo, baptizatus in Patre, & Filio, & Spiritu S. profeſſus ſum, ſemper obtineam: where regenerationis ſuæ ſymbolum doth ſeem to import, that conteſtation of his faith, which he ſolemnly made at his baptiſm. Now the reaſon why this profeſſion was ſo called, may ſeem to be, for that it was a ſolemn ſignification of his embracing the doctrine and law of Chriſt; even as Ariſtotle calls words, σύμβολα τῶν ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ παθημάτων, the ſymbols or repreſentations of the conceptions that are in the mind; this ſeems to be the moſt ſimple reaſon of this term being ſo uſed: but if the ſimplicity of this notion doth not ſatisfie, there is another very agreeable to the nature of the thing, not wanting the countenance of ſome good * Plato, Demoſthenes, &c. authority. The word συμβαλλω doth in the beſt Greek * Writers not uncommonly ſignifie to tranſact commerce, to make contract, to agree about any bargain or buſineſs; and the word συμβόλαιον (thence derived) doth according to moſt common uſe denote any contract or covenant made between two parties: Now, that the ſtipulation made between a perſon by baptiſm initiated and received into Chriſtianity, and God Almighty (or the Church in his behalf) may moſt appoſitely be called a covenant or contract, none I ſuppoſe will doubt; wherein we confeſs faith and promiſe obedience; God vouchſafes preſent mercy, promiſes grace and future reward;

ward; and that the word σύμβολον ſhould hence import thus much, we cannot much wonder if we have obſerved how commonly words are wont to borrow ſignification from their kindred and neighbours: and thus Chryſologus plainly interprets the meaning of the word: Placitum, vel pactum, (ſaith he) quod lucri ſpes venientis continet vel futuri, ſymbolum nuncupari etiam contractu docemur humano; quod tamen ſymbolum inter duos firmat ſemper geminata conſcriptio---inter Deum verò & homines ſymbolum fidei ſolà fide firmatur; and commonly (in his Sermons upon this Creed) he ſtyles it, pactum fidei. Ruffinus indeed tells us (and divers after him) that the reaſon why this Creed was called ſymbolum or indicium, is, becauſe it was deviſed as a mark to diſtinguiſh the genuine teachers of the Chriſtian doctrine from ſuch falſe teachers, as did adulterate or corrupt it; or becauſe it was a kind of military * token (a badge as it were, or a watch-word) by which the true friends of Chriſtianity might be diſcriminated and diſcerned from the enemies thereof: Symbolum teſſera eſt & ſignaculum, quo inter fideles perfidóſque ſecernitur. But if we conſider the brevity and ſimplicity of the ancient forms, unſuitable to ſuch a deſign, it may ſeem more probable, that it was intended not ſo much to ſeparate Chriſtians from each other, as to diſtinguiſh them from all of other Religions; or more ſimply as we ſaid, to be a mark, whereby the perſon converted to Chriſtianity did ſignifie, that he did ſincerely embrace it, conſenting to the capital doctrines thereof, and engaging obedience to its laws. Indeed afterward (when it was commonly obſerved, that almoſt any kind of Hereticks, without evident repugnance to their particular opinions, could conform to thoſe ſhort and general forms, to exclude, or prevent compliance with them) occaſion was taken to enlarge the ancient forms, or to frame new ones (more full and explicite,) to be uſed, as formerly, at baptiſm. But (to leave farther conſideration of the name, and to purſue what more concerns the thing) for the more ancient forms, wherein the fore-mentioned profeſſion was conceived, it ſeems that in ſeveral places, and times, they did ſomewhat vary, receiving alteration and encreaſe, according to the diſcretion of thoſe, who did preſide in each Church; the principal however and more ſubſtantial parts (which had eſpecial direction and authority from the words and practice of our Saviour and his Apoſtles) being every-where and at all times retained (thoſe namely, which concerned the Perſons of the Holy Trinity, and the great promiſes of the Goſpel, remiſſion of ſins, to be miniſtred here by the Church, and eternal life to be conferr'd hereafter by God upon thoſe who had conſtantly believ'd and obey'd the Goſpel.) That in the more ancient times, there was no one form, generally fixed and agreed upon (to omit other arguments that perſuade it) is hence probable, for that the moſt learned, and generally knowing perſons of thoſe times, when in their Apologies againſt disbelievers for Chriſtianity, or in their aſſertions of its genuine principles and doctrines againſt misbelievers, they by the nature and ſequel of their diſcourſe are engag'd to ſumm up the principal doctrines of our Religion, they do not yet (as reaſon did require, and they could hardly have avoided doing, had there been any ſuch conſtantly and univerſally ſettled or avowed form) alledge any ſuch, but rather from their own obſervation of the common ſenſe agreed upon, and in their own expreſſion ſet down thoſe main doctrines, wherein the chief Churches did conſent, as may be ſeen by divers of them, eſpecially by Tertullian (the oldeſt of the Latines) if we compare ſeveral places, wherein he delivers the rule of Serm. 62. pag. 16. 2.

* Cognizance.

Maximus Taurinenſis.

His additur indiviſibilem & impaſſibilem: Sciendum quòd duo illi ſermones in Eccleſiæ Romanæ ſymbolo non habentur, conſtat autem apud nos additos hæreſeos causâ Sabellii, &c. Ruff. in Sym.

De vel. Virg. Præſcript. adv. hæret. contra Praxeam.

of faith, (as he conſtantly calls it, that is, ſuch a ſummary of Chriſtian principles, by which the truth of doctrines concerning matters therein touched, might be examined,) wherein, I ſay, he delivers ſuch rules of faith, to the ſame purpoſe in ſenſe, but in language ſomewhat different, yet never referring us to any ſtanding and more authentick form. Among theſe forms, that which now paſſes under the title of the Apoſtles Creed (about which we diſcourſe) ſeems to have been peculiar to the Roman Church, and that very anciently (as to the chief Articles thereof, for it appears that in proceſs of time it hath been ſomewhat altered, eſpecially by addition,) and becauſe it had been uſed from ſuch antiquity, that its original compoſition and uſe were not known, was preſumed to have derived from the Apoſtles; the firſt planters of that Church (as it was then uſual, to repute all immemorial cuſtoms to be deduced from Apoſtolical tradition,) or poſſibly becauſe the Roman Church (as in common belief founded by the two great Apoſtles Peter and Paul) was by way of Excellency called the Apoſtolical Church; and the ſucceſſion of Roman Biſhops ſedes Apoſtolica; ſo whatever belonged to that Church, obtained the ſame denomination; and among the reſt, the Roman Symbol might for that reaſon be called Symbolum Apoſtolicum; that is, Symbolum Eccleſiæ Apoſtolicæ. For that it was compiled by joint advice, or by particular contributions of all the Apoſtles, is a conceit, ſuſtained by very weak grounds, and aſſailed by very ſtrong objections: As, that a matter of ſo illuſtrious remarkableneſs, and of ſo great concernment, ſhould be no where mentioned in the Apoſtolick acts, nor by any authentick record atteſted, (and indeed had it been ſo teſtified, it muſt have attained canonical authority,) that it was not received by all Churches; and that thoſe which uſed the ſubſtance thereof, were ſo bold therewith, as to alter and enlarge it, are conſiderations ordinarily objected thereto; but that which moſt effectually, to my ſeeming, doth render ſuch original thereof altogether uncertain (and doth amount almoſt to a demonſtration againſt it; I mean againſt the truth, or which is all one in matters of this nature, its certainty of being compoſed by the Apoſtles) is that which I before intimated, viz. That the moſt ancient (and thoſe the moſt inquiſitive and beſt ſeen in ſuch matters) were either wholly ignorant that ſuch a form, pretending the Apoſtles for its authors, was extant, or did not accord to its pretence, or did not at all rely upon the authenticalneſs thereof; otherwiſe (as I before urged) it is hardly poſſible that they ſhould not have in moſt direct and expreſs manner alledged it, and uſed its authority againſt thoſe wild hereticks, who impugned ſome points thereof. Nothing can be more evident, than ſuch an argument (as it was more obvious than not to be taken notice of, ſo it) muſt needs carry a great ſtrength and efficacy with it; and would have much more ſerved their purpoſe, for convincing their adverſaries, than a rule (of the ſame ſenſe and import) collected from their own obſervation, and compoſed in their own expreſſion; and that argument, which they ſo much inſiſt upon, drawn from the common conſent of the Apoſtolick Churches, could not have been more ſtrongly enforced, (nor the ground thereof more clearly evidenced,) than by propounding the atteſtatlon of this form, if ſuch an one there had been commonly received and acknowledged: And if they were ignorant, or uncertain thereof, after-times could not be more ſkilfull or ſure in the point. I ſpeak not this with intent to derogate from the reputation of this Creed, or to invalidate that authority, whereof it hath ſo long time ſtood poſſeſſed: For, as for the parts thereof, which were undoubtedly moſt ancient, the matter of them is ſo manifeſtly contained tained in the Scripture, and ſuppoſing the truth of Chriſtianity it ſelf, they are ſo certain, that they need no other authority to ſupport them, than what Chriſtianity it ſelf ſubſiſts upon; and for other points afterwards added, they cannot by vertue of being inſerted there, pretend to Apoſtolick authority, but for their eſtabliſhment muſt inſiſt upon ſome other Baſe. It is, in general, ſufficient (that which we acknowledge) to beget a competent reverence thereto, that it was of ſo ancient uſe in the principal and for long time (till ambition and avarice, and the conſequences of general confuſion, ignorance, corruption, over-ſpreading the earth, did ſoil it) the faireſt perhaps and moſt ſober Church in the world; that it was, I ſay, in ſo illuſtrious a place, ſo near the Apoſtles time, made and uſed (and might thence ſeem probably to derive from ſome of them) may conciliate much reſpect thereto; but yet ſince it is not thoroughly certain that it was compoſed by any of them, nor hath obtained the ſame authority with their undoubted writings, what ever is therein contained muſt be explained according to, and be proved by them; and cannot otherwiſe conſtrain our faith; and indeed divers Authors of great credit acknowledge it to be collected out of the Scriptures: Illa verba (ſaith Auguſtine) quæ audiviſtis (ſpeaking of this Creed) per Scripturas ſparſa ſunt, & inde collecta, & ad unum redacta. And another ancient Writer: De ſacris omnino voluminibus quæ ſunt credenda ſumamus; de quorum fonte ſymboli ipſius ſeries derivata conſiſtit. Its authority therefore, will at the ſecond hand prove Apoſtolical; its matter being drawn from the fountains of Apoſtolical Scripture. But ſo much ſhall ſuffice, for Preface, concerning the title and other extrinſecal adjuncts of the Creed. As for the ſubject it ſelf, 'tis a ſhort Syſtem of Chriſtian doctrine; comprizing the chief Principles of Chriſtianity, as diſtinct from all other Religions; in a form (or manner of ſpeech) ſuted for every ſingular perſon, thereby to declare his conſent to that Religion; which to do, as it is eſpecially befitting at Baptiſm (when the perſon is ſolemnly admitted to the participation of the benefits and privileges of that Religion; and ſhould therefore reaſonably be required to profeſs that he believes the truth thereof, and willingly undertakes to perform the conditions and duties belonging thereto,) ſo it cannot but be very convenient and uſefull at other times, and deſerves to be a conſtant part of God's ſervice; as both much tending to the honour of God, and conducing to private and publick edification: We thereby glorifie God, frequently confeſſing his truth (the chief and higheſt points of his heavenly truth, by his goodneſs revealed unto us,) we re-mind our ſelves of our duties and engagements to God; we ſatisfie the Church of our perſeverance, and encourage our brethren to perſiſt in the faith of Chriſt.

Paſchaſius de Sp. S. cap. 1.

As for the interpretation thereof, I ſhall not otherwiſe determine or limit its ſenſe, than by endeavouring to declare what is true in it ſelf, and agreeable to the meaning of the words, wherein each article is expreſſed; proving ſuch truth by any kind of ſuitable arguments, that offer themſelves; ſuch as either the reaſon of the thing, or plain teſtimony of Holy Scripture, or general conſent and tradition of the ancient Churches, founded by the Apoſtles, do afford. Proving I ſay; for the Creed it ſelf (as we before diſcourſed) not being endewed with higheſt authority to enforce its doctrine, it muſt be confirmed by ſuch other grounds as may be proved more immediately valid, and efficacious to convince or produce faith in men's minds. For Faith it ſelf is not an arbitrary act, nor an effect of blind neceſſity; (we cannot believe what we pleaſe; nor can be compelled to believe any thing,) 'tis a reſult of judgment and choice, grounded upon reaſon of ſome kind, after deliberation and debate concerning the matter. But more diſtinctly what the faith, we profeſs to have, is, I will immediately inquire; addreſſing my ſelf to the expoſition of the firſt word, I believe, or I believe in. Before we proceed, we muſt remove a rubb, which criticizing upon the phraſe, hath put in our way.

It comes from Auguſtine, the father of ſcholaſtick diſtinctions.

They give us a diſtinction between to believe a thing, to believe a perſon, and to believe upon a thing or perſon: For example, taking God for the object, there is, they ſay, a difference between Credere Deum, credere Deo, and credere in Deum: Credere Deum doth import ſimply to believe God to be: Credere Deo is to believe God's word or promiſe (to eſteem him veracious:) Credere in Deum, is to have a confidence in God, as able and willing to do us good, (to rely upon his mercy and favour; to hope for help, comfort, or reward from him; the which after St. Auguſtine the Schoolmen account an act of charity or love toward God, as may be ſeen in that late excellent Expoſition of the Creed;) and in this laſt ſenſe would ſome underſtand the faith here profeſſed, becauſe of the phraſe I believe in: But I briefly anſwer; That this phraſe being derived immediately from the Greek of the New Teſtament; and the Greek therein imitating the Old Teſtament Hebrew, we muſt interpret the meaning thereof according to its uſe there, as that may beſt agree with the reaſon of the thing, and the deſign of the Creed here. Now in the ſaid Greek and Hebrew πιστεύειν εἰς, (or πιστεύειν ἐν, or πιστεύειν ἐπὶ, which import the ſame,) and האמין ב (heemin be) are uſed to ſignifie all kinds of faith, and are promiſcuouſly applied to all kind of objects: It is required, to believe not only in God and Chriſt, but in Men alſo *, in Moſes †, in the Prophets; as likewiſe in the works of God; in God's Commandments; in the Goſpel. Whence in general it appears, that to believe in, hath not neceſſarily or conſtantly ſuch a determinate ſenſe, as the fore-mentioned diſtinguiſhers pretend, but is capable of various meanings, as the different matters to which it is applied do require: To believe in Moſes (for example) was not to confide in his power or goodneſs, but to believe him God's Prophet, and that his words were true; to believe in God's Works, was to believe they came from God's Power, and ſignified his Providence over them; to believe in the Commands of God, and the Goſpel of Chriſt, was to take them for rules of life, and to expect due reward according to the promiſes or threatnings in them reſpectively pronounced to obedience or diſobedience: In a word, we may obſerve (and there be inſtances innumerable to confirm the obſervation) that in the New Teſtament πιστεύειν εἰς Χριστὸν, εἰς Κύριον, εἰς ὄνομα Κυρίου, and πιστεύειν τῷ Χριστῷ, τῷ Κυρίῳ, τῷ ὀνόματι Κυρίου, do indifferently bear the ſame ſenſe, both ſignifying no more, than being perſuaded that Jeſus was the Chriſt, the Son of God, ſuch as he declared himſelf, and the Apoſtles preached him to be. Since therefore the phraſe in it ſelf may admit various ſenſes, we may (with moſt reaſon and probability) take it here, according to the nature and deſign of the Creed; which is to be a ſhort comprehenſion of ſuch verities, which we profeſs our aſſent unto: It hath (I ſay) been always taken (not directly for an exerciſe of our charity, or patience, or hope in God, or any other kind of devotion, but ſimply) for a confeſſion of Chriſtian principles and verities; and accordingly when I ſay, I believe in God Almighty, the Maker of Heaven and Earth; 'tis moſt proper ſo to underſtand my meaning, as if I had ſaid; I believe there is one God; that he is Almighty; that he is Maker of Heaven and Earth, and ſo of the reſt: To confirm which interpretation, I ſhall only add, That anciently πιστεύειν εἰς was commonly applied to the Church, to the reſurrection, to repentance and remiſſion of ſins: Many examples might be produced

* Exod. 14. 31. 19. 9.
† 2 Chron. 20. 20.
Pſal. 78. 32.
Pſal. 119. 66.
Mar. 1. 15.

duced to that purpoſe; I ſhall only mention thoſe words of Hierom: Solenne eſt in lavacro poſt Trinitatis confeſſionem interrogare, Credis in ſanctam Eccleſiam? Which expreſſion, according to the Schoolmen's interpretation of believing in, were not allowable.

Hieron. contra Lucif.

So much for the general notion of Belief; it is ſome kind of aſſent to the truths propounded in the Creed; but what kind particularly it is, that we may more clearly judge, we ſhall obſerve that Belief hath two acceptions moſt conſiderable; One more general and popular; the other more reſtrained and artificial: In its greateſt latitude, and according to moſt common uſe, (as alſo according to its origination, from πέπεισται, by which it ſhould import the effect of perſuaſion;) thus I ſay it ſignifies generally, being well perſuaded, or yielding a ſtrong aſſent unto the truth of any propoſition: ἡ σφοδρὰ ὑπόληψις, (ſo we have it defined, agreeably to common uſe, in Ariſtotle's Topicks;) that is, a vehement or ſtrong opinion about a thing: and ſo it involves no formal reſpect to any particular kind of means or arguments productive of it; but may be begot by any means whatever. So we are ſaid to believe what our ſenſe repreſents, what good reaſon inferrs, what credible authority confirms unto us. Whence in Rhetorick all ſorts of Probation (from what Topick ſoever of Reaſon deduced, upon what-ever atteſtation grounded) are called πίστεις, by a metonymy, becauſe they are apt to beget a perſuaſion concerning the Cauſe maintained, its being good or bad, true or falſe. But according to a more reſtrained and artificial acception (artificial I call it, becauſe it is peculiar to men of art, and invented by the ſchool, to the purpoſe of diſtinguiſhing ſuch aſſent or perſuaſion into ſeveral kinds, whereof they make Belief in one kind diſtinct from thoſe others, which are grounded upon experience or apparence to ſenſe; or upon rational inference, according to which acception) Belief doth preciſely denote that kind of aſſent, which is grounded meerly upon the authority (the dictate or teſtimony) of ſome perſon aſſerting, relating, or atteſting to the truth of any matter propounded; the authority I ſay of ſome perſon, which implies two things. 1. That ſuch a perſon hath, de facto, aſſerted or atteſted the matter. 2ly. That his qualifications be ſuch, that his affirmation ſhould in reaſon have an influence upon our minds, and incline them to conſent; for that he is both able to inform us rightly, and willing to do it; is ſo wiſe that he doth know, and ſo juſt that he will ſpeak according to his knowledge and no otherwiſe. And this authority (which by reaſon of the Author's qualities mentioned is called credible; that is, ſuch, as in ſome meaſure is apt in a well-diſpoſed underſtanding to beget ſuch an aſſent to the truth of what is depoſed) is one kind of argument (diſtinct from thoſe which are drawn from experience, or from principles of reaſon, before known or admitted by us) whereby perſuaſion concerning the truth of any propoſition (concerning either matter of fact, or any doctrine) is produced in our minds: and according to the degrees of our aſſurance either concerning the fact, that the Author doth indeed aſſert the matter; or concerning the perſon's qualifications (rendring his authority credible) are the degrees of our Belief proportioned; it is more ſtrong and intenſe, or weak and remiſs; we are confident or doubtfull concerning the matter; if we plainly can perceive by our ſenſe, or have great rational inducements to think, that ſuch an aſſertion proceeds from ſuch an Author; and then by like evidence of experience or reaſon are moved to think him not liable himſelf to be deceived, nor diſpoſed to deceive us, then we become ſtrongly perſuaded; believe firmly, in proportion to the validity of the ſaid grounds.

Top. IV. 5.

So Act. 17. 13. πίστιν παρασχὼν πᾶσιν.

'Tis now to be determined according to which of theſe two acceptions, the belief we here profeſs is to be underſtood: and to my ſeeming, we ſhould adequately mean, according to the firſt, the more general and vulgar notion: That, I ſay, we profeſs, to be perſuaded in our minds, concerning the truth of the propoſitions annexed, not implying our perſuaſion to be grounded upon onely one kind of reaſon, that drawn from authority; but rather involving all reaſons proper and effectual for the perſuaſion of all the points jointly, or of each ſingly taken. In this notion I underſtand the word, for theſe reaſons.

The very nation of the Jews no Logicians.

* 1 Cor. 2. 4. σεσοφισμένοι μύθοι. 2 Pet. 1. 16. Deviſed too after their times; for this ſcholaſtical acception is not ancient.

1. Upon a general conſideration, becauſe the ancient teachers of our Religion, both as being themſelves men not ſeen in ſubtility of ſpeculation, nor verſed in niceties of ſpeech (uſed by men of art and ſtudy) and as deſigning chiefly to inſtruct the generality of men (for the greateſt part being ſimple and groſs in conceit) could not or would not uſe words otherwiſe, than according to their moſt common and familiar acception. They did not employ ἀνθρωπίνης σοφίας λόγοις, terms * deviſed by humane wiſdom for extreme accuracy and diſtinction; but expreſſed their conceptions in the moſt vulgar and beſt underſtood language.

2. Becauſe we find that de facto the word πιστεύειν is uſed by them (in Scripture I mean) according to this general notion, that is, ſo as to ſignify indifferently all kind of perſuaſion, having regard to the particular ground thereof. Thomas would not believe that our Saviour was riſen, except he diſcerned viſible marks, diſtinguiſhing his perſon from others: he did ſo, and then believes: whereupon our Saviour ſaith: Thou believeſt, becauſe thou haſt ſeen; bleſſed are they that have not ſeen, and yet have believed: We ſee that faith may be grounded upon ſenſe. And, If I do not the works of my father (ſaith our Saviour) believe me not; but if I do, though you believe not me, believe the works. Our Saviour requires them not to rely upon his bare teſtimony concerning himſelf, but to conſider rationally the quality of his works; and upon that to ground their faith: which kind of perſuaſion ſeems grounded rather upon principles of reaſon, than any authority. The Devils (St. James tells us) do believe there is one God: how-ſo? Becauſe they know it by experience, rather than upon any relation or teſtimony given to them. And you know: He that comes to God muſt believe that he is; that is, muſt be perſuaded of God's exiſtence, by arguments proper to enforce ſuch aſſent. For I argue farther,

Joh. 20. 29.

Joh. 10. 37.

Jam. 2. 19.

Heb. 11. 6.

3ly. That the belief of the firſt and main Article of this Creed, that there is a God, cannot be grounded only upon authority; humane authority cannot alone ſuffice to prove ſo great a point; and divine authority doth pre-ſuppoſe it: for how can we believe that God doth this, or that; that he hath revealed his mind to us; that he teaches us ſo or ſo, before we believe that he is? The belief of the ſubject muſt precede the belief of any attribute or action belonging to it: the belief therefore of God's exiſtence is properly grounded upon other arguments, beſide authority. Yea farther,

4ly. The belief of other main points, not expreſſed indeed, but underſtood and ſuppoſed as the foundation of our believing all the other articles thereof, doth depend upon more than bare authority: As for inſtance, the belief of God's veracity (taken moſt largely, as including his infallible wiſdom, and his perfect ſincerity or fidelity) the truth of God's having actually revealed his mind to us by Jeſus and his Apoſtles; and by all the Prophets before: (or the truth of Chriſtianity it ſelf in groſs, as alſo of ancient Judaiſm) the truth of the Holy Scriptures: the validity of general tradition, and common conſent of the Chriſtian Churches inſtructed by the Apoſtles, ſo far as they may conduce to the probation of any of theſe articles: theſe things, I ſay, we muſt be perſuaded of, as grounds of our believing all the other articles, not immediately deducible from principles of reaſon: and yet none of theſe points can properly be grounded upon meer authority: to prove God is veracious becauſe he ſaith ſo; or that revelation in general muſt be truſted from particular revelations, are petitiones principii, moſt inconcluſive and ineffectual diſcourſes. Spirits are to be 1 Joh. 4. 1. tried, and revelations themſelves are to be examined, before we can upon Mar. 7. 15, 16. their word believe any particular doctrine avouched by them: This muſt be performed by uſe of our ſenſes, and of our reaſons; and therefore virtually and mediately the belief of whatever relies upon ſuch foundations, doth depend upon them and not upon bare authority.

5ly. I will add laſtly, that if we conſider the manner how the faith of the firſt Chriſtians was produced, we may perhaps alſo perceive that even their faith was not meerly founded upon authority, but relied partly upon principles of reaſon taking in the aſſiſtance and atteſtation of ſenſe. They that beheld the ſincerity and innocency of our Saviour's converſation; the extraordinary wiſdom and majeſty of his diſcourſes; the excellent goodneſs and holineſs of his doctrine; the incomparably great and glorious power diſcovered in his miraculous works (withal comparing the ancient, prophecies concerning ſuch a perſon to come with the characters and circumſtances of his perſon) were by theſe conſiderations perſuaded, not meerly by his own teſtimony; that our Saviour himſelf did not ſo much inſiſt upon, but rather diſclaimed it, as inſufficient to beget faith: If I Joh. 5. 31. witneſs of my ſelf, my witneſs is not true, (not true, that is, not credible:) You were not obliged to accept my teſtimony as true, if it were not alſo accompanied with other convincing reaſons: It was by ſuch a ſyllogiſm as this, that believers did then argue themſelves into faith upon our Saviour: He that is ſo qualified (doth ſo live, ſo ſpeak, ſo work; ſo admirably in himſelf, ſo agreeably to prophecies foregoing) his pretences cannot reaſonably be deemed falſe; 'tis juſt that we aſſent to his words. But we plainly ſee and experience Jeſus to be ſo qualified (ſo to live, to ſpeak, to do,) therefore 'tis juſt and reaſonable we believe him. This kind of diſcourſe did de facto, and of right it ought to produce faith in thoſe, who came under the influence of it: the being convinced by it was the vertue of faith, ſhewing the ingenuity and diſcretion of thoſe ſo wrought upon; and the not being convinced ſo, was the fault for which unbelievers were liable to juſt condemnation. If I had not come and ſpake to them, they had Joh 15. 22, 24. not had ſin: and; If I had not done the works among them, which never any other man did, they had not had ſin: That is, If my doctrine had not been very good, and my diſcourſe very reaſonable; if my works had not diſcovered abundance of divine grace and power attending them; had not both my words and works been very open and manifeſt to them; they had been excuſable, as having no reaſons cogent enough to perſuade them; but now they deſerve to be condemned for their unreaſonable and perverſe incredulity. And give me leave by the way to obſerve, that by the like ſyllogiſm it is that faith may (and perhaps in duty ſhould) be produced even in us now: The major propoſition is altogether the ſame: A perſon ſo qualified is credible (this is a propoſition of perpetual truth, evident to common ſenſe, ſuch as by all men of reaſon and ingenuity ſhould be admitted: otherwiſe no meſſage from heaven or teſtimony upon earth could be received.) The minor; Jeſus was a perſon ſo qualified, was indeed evident to the ſenſes of thoſe with whom he converſed (to ſuch as were not blinded with evil prejudice, and wilfully diſpoſed to miſtake) and will now appear as true to thoſe, who ſhall with due care conſider the reaſons, by which it may be perſuaded: that it is atteſted by ſo many and in all reſpects ſo credible hiſtories, yet extant and legible by us; confirmed by ſo clear, ſo general, ſo conſtant a tradition; maintained by ſo wonderful circumſtances of providence; in a word, that it is evidenced by ſo many and ſo illuſtrious proofs, that no matter of fact had ever the like, none ever could have greater to aſſure it.

Upon theſe and ſuch like premiſes I embrace the more plain and ſimple notion of the word Belief; meaning when I ſay, I believe, that I am in my mind fully convinced and perſuaded of the truth of the propoſitions hereafter expreſſed (or implied;) not excluding any objects there contained under any formality (either of being apparent to ſenſe or demonſtrable by reaſon, or credible by any ſort of teſtimony) nor abſtracting from any kind of reaſons, perſuaſive of their truth. I believe there is a God, the Creatour of the World; that he is infallibly wiſe, and perfectly veracious; that he hath revealed his mind and will to mankind; as well for that good reaſon dictates theſe things unto me, as that the beſt authorities avow them. I believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt and our Lord, and the Son of God, becauſe the Holy Scriptures do plainly ſo teach, and Apoſtolical tradition thereto conſents: and in like manner of the reſt.

[I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth.]

Primus eſt Deorum cultus Deos credere. Sen Ep. 95. Deum colit qui novit. Ib.

Ἔρεισμα καὶ βάσις ὑφιςῶσα κοινὴ πρὸς εὐσέβειαν. Plut.

WHat the phraſe I believe in doth moſt properly here import, I did endeavour (the laſt time) ſomewhat to explain: I would have deduced ſome corollaries, and added ſome conſiderations preventive of miſtake, and farther explicative of that matter, if my intention hereafter to endeavour greater brevity did permit: but for that cauſe I proceed to the objects of our belief: whereof in the firſt place, as is meet, and in the front, God is placed; the belief of whoſe exiſtence is the foundation of all religion; the ſupport of all vertue; the principal Article in all the Creeds of all the world. He that comes to God (whoever applies himſelf to any religious performance) muſt firſt of all be perſuaded, that God is; as the object of his devotion, and the rewarder of his obedience. For the explication of which, we will conſider, 1. What it is that we are to believe. 2ly. Why and upon what grounds we ſhould believe it.

For the firſt: That in the world there are Beings, imperceptible to our ſenſes, much ſuperiour to us in knowledge and power, that can perform works above, and contrary to, the courſe of nature, and concerning themſelves ſometime to do ſo for the intereſts of mankind; for theſe qualifications and performances deſerving extraordinary reſpect from us, hath been a conſtant opinion in all places and times; to which ſort of Beings ſome one general name hath been in all languages aſſigned, anſwering to that of God among us. Of ſuch Beings, that there is one, ſupreme and moſt excellent, incomparably ſurpaſſing in all thoſe attributes of Wiſdom, and Power, and Goodneſs; from whom the reſt, and all things beſide, have derived their Beings, do depend upon, are ſuſtained and governed by; the author (I ſay) of all Being, and diſpenſer of all Good; to whom conſequently ſupreme love, reverence, and obedience is due; hath been alſo the general ſenſe of the moſt ancient, moſt wiſe, and moſt noble nations among men; to whom therefore in a peculiar and eminent manner the title of God (and Φαμὲν δὲ τὸν θεὸν εἶναι ζῶον ἀΐδιον ἄριστον. Ariſt. Metaph. XII. 7.

Deus ſummum magnum, & forma & ratione, & vi, & poteſtate, &c. Tertull. adverſ. Marc. l. 3.

(and thoſe which anſwer thereto) is appropriated: ſo that when the word is abſolutely put without any adjunct of limitation or diminution, he only is meant and underſtood: to which ſometimes, for fuller declaration, are added the epithets; of Optimus, Maximus, Summus, Æternus, Omnipotens, Dominus, and the like: the Beſt, the Greateſt, the moſt High, the Eternal, the Almighty, the Soveraign God. Thus, according to the common ſenſe of mankind, is the word God, underſtood; the notion thereof including eſpecially theſe attributes and perfections of nature: Supreme and incomprehenſible Wiſdom, Power, Goodneſs, being the fountain and author; the upholder and governour of all things: And what is contracted with or is conſequent upon theſe; namely, the moſt excellent manner of being, and of activity, eternity and immortality, independency and immutability, immenſity and omnipreſence, ſpirituality and indiviſibility, inceſſant energy of the moſt excellent life, intuitive underſtanding, abſolute freedom of will, perfect holineſs and purity, juſtice, ſincerity, veracity: as alſo complete happineſs, (ſelf-enjoyment and ſelf-ſufficiency) glorious Majeſty, ſoveraign right of dominion; to which higheſt veneration and entire obedience is due. In ſhort, whatever our mind can conceive of good, excellent, and honourable, that in the moſt tranſcendent degree is, by the conſent of mankind, comprehended in the notion of God, abſolutely taken, or in the laſt ſenſe fore-mentioned.

Neither doth divine Revelation commend any other notion thereof to us, but explains, amplifies, and confirms this; expreſſing more clearly and diſtinctly theſe attributes and perfections; with the manner of their being exerted, eſpecially to our benefit; and determining our duty in relation to them.

Now that really ſuch a Being doth exiſt (that this main principle of Religion is not a meer poſtulatum, or precarious ſuppoſition, which we muſt be beholden to any reaſonable man for to grant us,) I ſhall endeavour to prove briefly by three or four arguments, which are indeed of all moſt obvious and ſuitable to every capacity, (for they be not grounded upon metaphyſical ſubtilty, nor need any depth of ſpeculation to apprehend them; common ſenſe and experience will ſuffice to diſcover their force,) and yet of all that have been produced, they ſeem to me moſt forcible. The firſt is drawn from natural effects obſervable by every man; A ſecond from the common opinions and practices of mankind from all antiquity; A third, from particular diſcoveries of ſuch a divine power atteſted by hiſtory; A fourth, from every man's particular experience concerning a divine providence. And,

1. I ſay, that natural effects do declare ſuch a being, incomprehenſibly wiſe, powerful and good, from whence this viſible world did procede, and by which it ſubſiſts and is conſerv'd. That it is true, which the Prophet Jeremy ſaith, That He hath made the Earth by his power, hath eſtabliſhed the World by his wiſdom, and ſtretched out the Heavens by his diſcretion, Jer. 10. 12. It may be aſſumed for a principle, which common experience ſuggeſts to us; that matter of it ſelf doth not run into any order, &c. if not now, then not yeſterday, nor from eternity: it muſt therefore by ſome counſel be digeſted. There is not indeed any kind of natural effect, which either ſingly taken, or as it ſtands related to the publick, may not reaſonably be ſuppoſed to contain ſome argument of this truth; we do not indeed diſcern the uſe and tendency of each particular effect; but of many, they are ſo plain and palpable, that we have reaſon to ſuppoſe them of the reſt: Even as of a perſon, whom we do plainly perceive frequently to act very wiſely, at other times, when we cannot diſcern the drift of his proceeding, ceeding, we cannot but ſuppoſe that he hath ſome latent reaſon, ſome reach of policy that we are not aware of: Or as in an engine, conſiſting of many parts curiouſly compacted together, whereof we do perceive the general uſe, and apprehend how ſome parts conduce thereto, we have reaſon, although we either do not ſee them all, or cannot comprehend the immediate ſerviceableneſs of each, to think they all are ſome way or other ſubſervient to the artiſts deſigns. Such an agent is God, ſuch an engine is this viſible world: we can often diſcover evident marks of God's wiſdom; ſome general uſes of the world are very diſcernible, and how that many parts thereof do contribute to them, we may eaſily obſerve: and ſeeing the whole is compacted in a decent, and conſtant order, we have reaſon to deem the like of the reſt. Our incapacity to diſcover all doth not argue defect, but exceſs of the maker's wiſdom; not too little in it ſelf, but too great perfection in the work, in reſpect of our capacity. The moſt to us obſervable piece of the Univerſe is the Earth, upon which we dwell; which that it was deſigned for the accommodation of living creatures, that are upon it, and principally of man, we cannot be ignorant or doubtfull, if we be not ſo negligent or ſtupid, as to let paſs unobſerved thoſe innumerable ſigns and arguments that ſhew it: if we look upon the frame of the animals themſelves, what a number of admirable contrivances in each of them do appear for the ſuſtenance, for the ſafety, for the pleaſure, for the propagation, for grace and ornament, for all imaginable convenience, ſuitable to the kind, and ſtation of each? If we look about them, what variety and abundance of convenient proviſions offer themſelves even to a careleſs view, anſwerable to all their needs, and all their deſires? Wholeſome and pleaſant food to maintain their life; yea to gratify all their ſenſes; fit ſhelter from offence, and ſafe refuge from dangers: all theſe things provided in ſufficient plenty and commodiouſly diſpoſed for ſuch a vaſt number of creatures; not the leaſt, moſt ſilly, weak or contemptible creature, but we may ſee ſome care hath been had for its nouriſhment and comfort: what wonderfull inſtincts are they endued with for procuring and diſtinguiſhing of their food, for guarding themſelves and their young from danger? But for man eſpecially, a moſt liberal proviſion hath been made to ſupply all his needs; to pleaſe all his appetites; to exerciſe, with profit and ſatisfaction, all his faculties; to content (I might ſay) his utmoſt curioſity*: All things about him do miniſter (or may do ſo, if he will uſe the natural powers and inſtruments given him) to his preſervation, eaſe, and delight. The bowels of the earth yield him treaſures of metals and minerals; quarries of ſtone, and coal ſerviceable to him for various uſes. The vileſt and commoneſt ſtones he treadeth upon are not unprofitable. The ſurface of the earth, what variety of delicate fruits, herbs and grains doth it afford to nouriſh our bodies, and cheer our ſpirits, and pleaſe our taſts, and remedy our diſeaſes? how many fragrant flowers, moſt beautifull and goodly in colour and ſhape, for the comfort of our ſmell and delight of our eyes? neither can our ears complain, ſince every wood hath a quire of natural muſicians to entertain them with their ſprightfull melody? Every wood did I ſay? yes too, the woods adorned with ſtately trees yield pleaſant ſpectacles to our ſight, ſhelter from offences of weather and ſun, fewel for our fires, materials for our buildings (our houſes and ſhipping) and other needfull utenſils. Even the barren mountains ſend us down freſh ſtreams of water, ſo neceſſary for the ſupport of our lives, ſo profitable for the fructification of our grounds, ſo commodious [*] Neque enim neceſſitatibus tantummodo noſtris proviſum eſt, uſque in delicias amamur. Sen. de Benef. IV. 5. Vide locum optimum.

—Ut omnis rerum naturæ pars tributum aliquod nobis conferret. Ibid.

dious for conveyance and maintaining of entercourſe among us. Even the wide Seas themſelves ſerve us many ways: they are commodious for our traffick and commerce: they ſupply the bottles of heaven with water to refreſh the earth: they are inexhauſtible ciſterns, from whence our ſprings and rivers are derived: they yield ſtores of good fiſh, and other conveniencies of life. The very rude and diſorderly winds do us no little ſervice in bruſhing and cleanſing the air for our health; in driving forward our ſhips; in ſcattering and ſpreading about the clouds, thoſe clouds which drop fatneſs upon our grounds. Pſal. 65. As for our ſubjects the animals, 'tis not poſſible to reckon the manifold utilities we receive from them: How many ways they ſupply our needs, with pleaſant food and convenient cloathing: how they eaſe our labour; and how they promote even our ſport and recreation. And are we not, not only very ſtupid, but very ungratefull, if we do not diſcern abundance of wiſdom and goodneſs in the contrivance and ordering of all theſe things, ſo as thus to conſpire for our good? Is it not reaſonable, that we devoutly cry out with the Pſalmiſt: O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wiſdom haſt thou made them all; the earth is full of thy riches: So is the wide and great Sea,&c. Pſal. 104. 24. To ſay this grace with him: The eyes of all wait upon thee, and thou giveſt them their meat in due ſeaſon; Thou openeſt thine hand, and ſatisfieſt the deſire of every living thing: Pſal. 145. 15. Eſpecially to ſay farther: Lord, what is man that thou art ſo mindfull of him, and the ſon of man that thou viſiteſt him: Thou haſt made him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou haſt put all things under his feet. Pſal. 8.

Can any man, endued with common ſenſe, imagine that ſuch a body as any of us doth bear about him, ſo neatly compoſed, fitted to ſo many purpoſes of action; furniſhed with ſo many goodly and proper organs; that eye by which we reach the ſtars, and in a moment have, as it were, all the world preſent to us; that ear by which we ſo ſubtly diſtinguiſh the differences of ſound, are ſenſible of ſo various harmony, have conveyed unto our minds the words and thoughts each of other; that tongue by which we ſo readily imitate thoſe vaſt diverſities of voice and tune, by which we communicate our minds with ſuch eaſe and advantage; that hand by which we perform ſo many admirable works, and which ſerves inſtead of a thouſand inſtruments and weapons unto us; to omit thoſe inward ſprings of motion, life, ſenſe, imagination, memory, paſſion; with ſo ſtupendous curioſity contrived. Can any reaſonable man, I ſay, conceive that ſo rare a piece, conſiſting of ſuch parts, unexpreſſibly various, unconceivably curious, the want of any of which would diſcompoſe or deſtroy us; ſubſervient to ſuch excellent operations, incomparably ſurpaſſing all the works of the moſt exquiſite art, that we could ever obſerve or conceive, be the product of blind chance; ariſe from fortuitous jumblings of matter; be effected without exceeding great wiſdom, without moſt deep counſel and deſign? Might not the moſt excellent pieces of humane artifice, the faireſt ſtructures, the fineſt pictures, the moſt uſefull engines, ſuch as we are wont ſo much to admire and praiſe, much more eaſily happen to be without any skill or contrivance? If we cannot allow theſe rude and groſs imitations of nature to come of themſelves, but will preſently, ſo ſoon as we ſee them, acknowledge them the products of art, though we know not the artiſt, nor did ſee him work; how much more reaſonable is it that we believe the works of nature, ſo much more fine and accu-

Archimedem arbitrantur plus valuiſſe in imitandis ſphæræ converſionibus, quàm naturam in efficiendis, &c. pag. 86.

Si ergò meliora ſunt ea, quæ natura, quàm illa quæ arte perfecta ſunt, nec ars efficit quicquam ſine ratione, ne natura quidem rationis expers eſt habenda. Cic. de Nat. D. II. p. 86. Quod ſi mundum efficere poteſt concurſus atomorum, cur porticum, cur templum, cur domum, cur urbem non poteſt, quæ ſunt minùs operoſa, & multo quidem faciliora? Ib. 89.

rate, to proceed from the like cauſe, though inviſible to us, and performing its workmanſhip by a ſecret hand? I am ſure, the moſt diligent contemplatours of nature, and thoſe of the moſt incredulous temper, and freeſt from any prejudice favourable to religion, have not been able to deny, that abundance of counſel and wiſdom diſcovers it ſelf in the works of nature: Ariſtotle (whom no man ſurely takes for ſuperſtitious or partial to the intereſts of religion) hath a whole chapter in his Phyſicks to prove that nature works with deſign and for an end: and otherwhere he affirms, ἡ φύσις ἕνεκα τοῦ πάντα ποιεῖ: Nature doeth all things for ſome end: Yea farther: Μᾶλλον δ' ἐστὶ τὸ οὗ ἕνεκα, καὶ τὸ καλὸν ἐν τοῖς τῆς φύσεως ἔργοις, ἢ ἐν τοῖς τῆς τέχνης: Tending to an end, and endeavouring what is beſt is more obſervable in the works of nature, than in thoſe of art: This he ſpeaketh in his books de partibus Animalium, the conſideration of which extorted this confeſſion from him; and if nature works ſo much for an End, there muſt be an underſtanding that intends it, and orders fit means for attaining it. Galen is obſerved in ſome places of his Writings to ſpeak ſomewhat irreligiouſly, yet in his Books de Uſu partium, he cannot forbear admiring the wiſdom, that ſhines forth in the ſtructure of our bodies, breaking forth ſometimes into hymns of praiſe and thankfulneſs to him that made it. The like expreſſions hath Cardan, ſuch another not over-devout Philoſopher; and even our own Countryman Mr. Hobbs; how little a friend he otherwiſe ſeems to religion, and how ready ſoever to deride thoſe that by reaſon endeavour to prove there is a God; yet being overcome by the evidence of the thing, hath ſomewhere let fall theſe words: Itaque (ſaith he) ad ſenſus procedo: ſatis habens ſi hujuſmodi res attigero tantùm, pleniùs autem tractandas aliis reliquero, qui ſi machinas omnes tum generationis tum nutritionis ſatis perſpexerint, nec tamen eas à mente aliqua conditas, ordinatáſque ad ſua quaſq; officia viderint, ipſi profectò ſine mente eſſe cenſendi ſunt.

2 Phyſ. cap. 3.

De part. Animal. II.

Ἡ φύσις οὐδὲν ἀλόγως, οὐδὲ μάτην ποιεῖ: de cœlo, II. 11.

Ὀυδὲν τῶν καλῶν εἰκῆ καὶ ὡς ἔτυχε γίνεται, ἀλλὰ μετά τινος τέχνης δημιουργούσης. Plut. de placitis, ph. I. 6.

Cujus (naturæ) ſolertiam nulla ars, nulla manus, nemo opifex conſequi poſſit imitando, Cic. de. N. D. p. 83.

De Homine, cap. 1.

Neither doth the force of this argument ſubſiſt here, but, as we intimated, the correſpondence and relation of outward things to our needs, appetites and capacities doth mightily confirm it: if we had organs of nutrition and nothing to feed them; ſenſes and nothing to prove or pleaſe them; hands and feet without means or cauſe to uſe them, we might have ſome reaſon to think theſe things made cauſeleſly and vainly; but it is, we ſee, altogether otherwiſe; all things are accommodated for us, ſo that we could not wiſh, or conceive better. Which to them, who will not perverſely dote, cannot but argue not a wiſdom only, but an exceeding benignity, carefull and tender of our good.

Quis hunc hominem dixerit, qui cùm tam certos cœli motus, tam ratos aſtrorum ordines, támque inter ſe connexa & apta viderit, neget in his ullam ineſſe rationem, eáq; caſu fieri dicat, quæ quanto conſilio gerantur, nullo conſilio aſſequi poſſumus? Cic. 2. De Nat. D. p. 90. Who will call him a man, &c. ἡ φύσις ἀεὶ ποιεῖ τῶν ἐνδεχομένων τὸ βέλτιστον· Ἀεί τε γὰρ ἥλιος, καὶ σελήνη, καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ τῶν ἀστέρων τὴν ὑπόγειον φορὰν ἐνεχθέντα, ὅμοια μὲν ἀνατέλλει τοῖς χρώμασιν, ἴσα δὲ τοῖς μεγέθεσι, καὶ κατὰ τόπους καὶ κατὰ χρόνους τοὺς αὐτούς. Plut. de Plac. Phil. I. 6.

Thus much the moſt common and obvious effects of nature here below, within us and about us, do ſignifie to us: thus (as St. Paul preached) God hath not left himſelf unatteſted, doing good, ſending us from heaven rains, and fruitfull ſeaſons, filling our hearts with food and gladneſs: Nor do the heavens leſs declare the glory of God, and the firmament his handy-work: He that ſhall conſider with what regularity, and οὐκ ἀμάρτυρον ἑαυτὸν ἀφῆκεν. Act. 14. 17.

An cum machinatione quâdam moveri aliquid videmus, ut ſphæram, ut foras, ut alia permulta, non dubitamus quin illa opera ſint rationis; cùm autem impetum cœli admirabili cum celeritate moveri, vertique videamus, conſtantiſſimè conficientem viciſſitudines anniverſarias cum ſumma ſalute, & conſervatione rerum omnium, dubitamus quin ea non ſolùm ratione fiant, ſed etiam excellenti quâdam divinâque ratione? Cic. II. de N. D. 90.

what conſtancy, thoſe vaſt bodies perform their rapid motions; what pleaſure, comfort and advantage their goodly light doth yield us; how neceſſary and profitable to us the viciſſitudes of time and recourſes of ſeaſons are, which they make; how their influences conduce to the general welfare and preſervation of things even here below, cannot but wonder, and wondering adore that beneficent wiſdom, and power, that hath diſpoſed and ſtill preſerves them in ſuch order? Could they without a wiſe hand, by a caſual running together of Atoms, or whatever ſenſleſs matter, be ſo ordered, as for ſix thouſand years together to perſiſt in the ſame places, and retain the ſame periods of time, in their motion, without any ſenſible alteration? he that can think it, may think any thing, and it were in vain to endeavour to confute him: how much more reaſonable is that Heathen Philoſopher, who thus ſpeaks: Eſſe præſtantem aliquam, æternámque naturam & eam ſuſpiciendam, adorandámque hominum generi, pulchritudo mundi, ordóque rerum cæleſtium cogit conſiteri.

Quid poteſt eſſe tam apertum, támque perſpicuum, cùm cœlum ſuſpeximus, cœleſtiáq; contemplati ſumus, quàm aliquod eſſe numen præſtantiſſimæ mentis, quo hæc regantur? Id. p. 53.

Cic. 2. de Divin.

Quòd ſi omnes mundi partes ità conſtitutæ ſunt, ut neque ad uſum meliores potuerint eſſe, neque ad ſpeciem pulchriores, &c. 2. de N. D. p. 85.

Καλὸν ποίκιλμα τέκτονος σοφοῦ. Eurip. de mundo, apud Plut. de plac. I. 6.

But this argument is infinite and inexhauſtible; as full and pregnant as is the world of creatures; each of which is a wonder, and proclaims the incomprehenſible wiſdom, power, and goodneſs of its Maker to us: We cannot without ſtopping our eyes exclude that light of divine glory, which fills and illuſtrates the world; without ſtopping our ears we cannot but hear that univerſal ſhout (that real harmony of the ſpheres) which all creatures in heaven and earth conſent in utterance to his praiſe. Every ſtar in heaven, every beaſt upon earth, every plant, every mineral, yea every ſtone; ſome in a language very loud and expreſs proclaim, others in a more ſtill and low (yet to an attentive ear ſufficiently audible, and ſignificant) ſtrain do ſpeak thoſe moſt glorious properties of God: There is no ſpeech or language, where their voice is not heard; their accent is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the ends of the world, as the Pſalmiſt ſings. The τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ (as St. Paul ſpeaks) the cognoſcibility of God is manifeſt in and by them: and the inviſible things of God, even his eternal power and divinity are perceived by obſerving the makes or conſtitutions of the creatures in the world; as St. Paul's words may be rendred, with which I conclude this argument.

Vid. Tertull. adv. Marc. I. 13.

Quocunque te flexeris, ibi illum videbis occurrentem tibi, &c. Senec. Benef. IV. 8.

Pſal. 19.

Rom. I.

2dly. That there is a God, is proved by the general conſent of mankind concerning it; by that teſtimonium (as Lactantius ſpeaks) populorum atq; gentium in una hâc re non diſſidentium; that unanimous teſtimony of all people and nations not diſagreeing in this only point. If the authority of ſome particular men, agreeing in vote, of one city, of one nation doth paſs for an argument, and ſhews the thing probable, how can we decline or contemn the common ſuffrage of mankind? He had need have a very clear and ſtrong reaſon for it, who will dare to diſſent from all the world. Hear Seneca thus diſcourſing: Multum dare ſolemus præſumptioni omnium hominum; apud nos veritatis argumentum eſt, aliquid omnibus videri; tanquam Deos eſſe ſic colligimus, quòd omnibus de Diis opinio inſita eſt; nec ulla gens uſquam eſt adeò extra leges moréſque projecta, ut non aliquos Deos credat: Cùm de animarum æternitate diſſerimus, non leve momentum apud nos habet conſenſus hominum, aut timentium inferos, aut colentium. That is: We are wont to attribute much to what all men preſume; 'tis an argument with us of truth, that any thing ſeems true to all: as that there be Gods, we hence collect, that all men have implanted in them an opinion

Lact. I. 2.

Epiſt. 117.

Vid. Gr. de V. R. p. 37. De Jure B. ac P. II. 20. 45.

concerning the Gods; neither is there any nation ſo deſtitute of laws or manners, that it doth not believe there be ſome Gods.

De Nat. D. II. p.57. vid. p.53.

In like manner Cicero: Itaque inter omnes omnium gentium ſententia conſtat: omnibus enim innatum eſt, & in animo quaſi inſculptum, eſſe Deos: quales ſint varium eſt, eſſe nemo negat: It is therefore an opinion manifeſt among all men of all nations, and as it were engraven in their minds, that there be Gods: how qualified they are, there is a difference; that they are, none denies.

I. de N. D. p. 22. Vid. Tuſcul. Q. I. p. 299.

Even Nelleius, the Epicurean, in his diſputation againſt Creation and Providence; yet acknowledges there are Gods, being compelled, as he ſaith, by this argument: Cùm enim non inſtituto aliquo, aut more, aut lege ſit opinio conſtituta, maneâtque ad unum omnium firme conſentio, intelligi neceſſe eſt eſſe Deos, quoniam inſitas eorum, vel potius innatas cognitiones habemus. De quo autem omnium natura conſentit, id verum eſſe neceſſe eſt; eſſe igitur Deos confitendum eſt, &c. For ſince (ſaith he) not by any inſtitution or cuſtom, or law this opinion is eſtabliſhed, and among all (not excepting one) a firm conſent doth abide; it is neceſſary there ſhould be Gods; becauſe we have implanted, or rather in-bred opinions of them: But about whatever thing all men naturally agree, that muſt needs be true; therefore we muſt confeſs there be Gods.

De cœlo, I. 3.

Ariſtotle: Πάντες γὰρ ἄνθρωποι περὶ θεῶν ἔχουσιν ὑπόληψιν, καὶ πάντες τὸν ἀνωτάτω τῷ θείῳ τόπον ἀποδιδόασι καὶ βάρβαροι καὶ ἕλλενες: That is, All men have an opinion concerning the Gods, and all men (both Barbarians and Greeks) do aſſign to the divinity, the higheſt place in the world, (viz. they believe his habitation to be in heaven.)

Cap. 6.

The Author of the book de Mundo (attributed to Ariſtotle, and dedicated to Alexander the Great) ἀρχαῖος μὲν οὖν τις λόγος καὶ πάτριός ἐστι, πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις, ὡς ἐκ θεοῦ τὰ πάντα, καὶ διὰ θεοῦ ἡμῖν συνέστηκεν. There is then indeed a certain ancient ſaying, and familiar to all men, That from God all things, and by God all things ſubſiſt unto us.

I alledge theſe authorities, ſelected from many others producible to the ſame purpoſe, from the wiſeſt Heathens (that is, from witneſſes in this cauſe moſt impartial and unſuſpected,) not only to ſtrengthen the argument, but to evidence the matter of fact, upon which it is grounded; to whoſe teſtimony all hiſtories both ancient and modern do conſent.

Nor doth the force of this diſcourſe rely meerly upon the authority of mankind, thus conſenting in opinion, (though that, as I ſaid, is not contemptible) but upon a much more ſolid foundation: and that is upon the manner of this opinion its being produced in men and propagated. That men ſhould ſo conſpire, muſt neceſſarily proceed either from that ſuch an opinion was put into them by nature (by way of natural notion or inſtinct; as the firſt moſt evident principles of ſcience, and the moſt powerfull inſtincts (after what is good) are ſuppoſed innate) at leaſt a very near diſpoſition to entertain and embrace it; or that ſome very manifeſt and prevalent reaſon (obvious to all, even the moſt rude and barbarous) did beget this agreement in them; or that it was derived from ſome common tradition, ſome one common fountain of inſtruction to them: be it which of theſe ways it will, that this opinion became ſo univerſally inſtilled into men's minds, the argument carries great weight and validity: if nature either plainly forces men, or ſtrongly inclines them to this perſuaſion; 'tis a vain extravagancy to oppoſe it; but if it came (as moſt probably to my ſeeming it did) from primitive tradition, it argues mankind to have proceeded from one ſtock; from ſome one or few men at firſt gathered together; of whoſe original who could be more credible witneſſes than themſelves? if they did teſtify and teach their poſterity, that they came from God, why ſhould we disbelieve them? eſpecially ſeeing whence elſe ſhould they come; who ſhould form their bodies; who ſhould infuſe their reaſons; who ſhould inſtill this very notion into them, we cannot well imagine: of themſelves they could not be (what ſuch thing as a man did we ever obſerve, or can we conceive to ſpring up of it ſelf?) nor is there any other cauſe here, to which (without great fondneſs) we can attribute their original. 'Tis true, that original tradition did by degrees over the world (by the Devil's malice and man's infirmity or wickedneſs) degenerate into many ſhapes of Polytheiſm and Idolatry: but ſo was Judaiſm depraved by the Scribes; and Chriſtianity it ſelf hath been much debaſed by a long courſe of bad times; yet who doubts but they both derived from one pure inſtruction (that of Moſes, and this of Chriſt, our Lord? It is very obſervable what Ariſtotle hath concerning this matter, being ſpoken with ſo much judgment: It was delivered by our anceſtours (ſaith he) and the ancients, being left in a fabulous dreſs to poſterity; that theſe are Gods, and that a divinity contains all nature: but other things concerning religion were fictitiouſly ſuperinduced; for the inveagling of the vulgar, and for accommodation of laws and the publick utility. Hence they ſpeak of them as of having humane ſhape, or being like to other animals; and other things ſuitable to theſe, and agreeable to what is ſpoken: of which things, if we making a ſeparation, take only what was firſt delivered, that they thought the Gods the firſt ſubſtances, he may ſuppoſe it divinely ſpoken: ſeeing it is probable, every art and philoſophy being invented, (as things would bear) and afterward decayed, that ſuch opinions as reliques ſhould be preſerved even untill now. The opinion of our Fathers, and that which was derived from the firſt man, is therefore only thus far manifeſt unto us: So Ariſtotle expreſly.

Vid. Plat. Tim. pag. 1053. ἀδύνατον θεῶν παισὶν ἀπιστεῖν, &c.

Metaph. XII. 8.

To confirm which diſcourſe, (and to prevent farther objections againſt it) we may conſider, that (however perhaps among ſome very barbarous nations this tradition may have been almoſt worn out by time, and men's ſtupid negligence) yet the moſt ancient hiſtories (that of Moſes eſpecially, the far moſt ancient of all, and in this matter to no man incredible) do atteſt that this opinion was moſt univerſal, running in a moſt ſtrong and clear current, among the Eaſtern people, the Chaldæans, Phœnicians, and Egyptians; who that they were moſt ancient people, from whom the reſt were propagated, the multitude of people, the antiquity of dominion, the uſe of letters, the riſe of arts, the greater progreſs in all kind of civil culture (all which things argue longer continuance in one place and ſtate) do plainly enough ſhew; whoſe conſent therefore doth involve that of all men beſide; and confirms this general opinion to ariſe from the clear ſpring of our firſt parents inſtruction. I might add the ſame manner of worſhipping God (by invocation, by conſulting him in way of oracle, by conſecrating temples and altars, by vows and dedications, by ſacrifices and oblations) which likewiſe men did anciently agree in, doth alſo argue that all religion did proceed from one ſimple original inſtitution, or inſtruction common to all mankind. But I cannot inſiſt upon and purſue every particularity.

A third argument of God's exiſtence is from the diſcoveries of a divine power, in works that cannot be aſcribed to any other cauſe viſible or natural: Such are the prediction and preſignification of future events (eſpecially ſuch as are contingent and depend upon man's free choice;) curing the ſick of great chronical diſtempers without any medicinal applications; reſtoring limbs to perſons maimed; ſight to the blind; and raiſing the dead to life (a thing which * Pliny deems impoſſible to God himſelf:) theſe and ſuch-like things all men will confeſs do ſurpaſs the power of any natural agent to effect, and are performable only by a cauſe, whoſe power exceeds our comprehenſion: Now that ſuch effects have been performed, we cannot deny without belying the moſt credible records of hiſtory that are extant; without accuſing all ages not only of extreme folly and weak credulity, but of notorious forgery and impoſture; without derogating from the common credit of mankind, and rendring all teſtimony, that can be yielded to matter of fact, ineffectual and inſignificant, Vetus opinio eſt (ſaith Tully concerning prediction of future events) jam uſque ab heroicis ducta temporibus, eáque & populi Romani, & omnium gentium firmata conſenſu, verſari quandam inter homines divinationem, quàm Græci μαντικὴν appellant, id eſt præſentionem, & ſcientiam rerum futurarum: There is an ancient opinion untill now drawn even from the heroical times (that is, from utmoſt antiquity) that there is among men a certain divination, which the Greeks call prophecy (or inſpiration) that is, a preſention and knowledge of future things: of which even the heathen ſtory doth afford many inſtances, but the holy Scriptures moſt evident and eminent ones: ſuch as that to Abraham, concerning his children's ſojourning and being afflicted four hundred years in Egypt: of the Prophet (ſome hundred years before) concerning Joſias; of Iſaiah concerning Cyrus; of Jeremy concerning the duration of the Captivity; of Daniel concerning the revolutions of Empire in the world; wherein the atchievements of Alexander and his ſucceſſours are ſo expreſly deſcribed: And for miraculous works; although all nations have had ſo many of them performed among them, as to beget a common opinion, that God did frequently interpoſe ſo as to alter the courſe of nature; yet the holy Scriptures do moſt fully teſtify concerning them, in great number, performed for the confirmation of divine truth, and diſcovery of God's will to men; for the relief and encouragement of Good; the diſcouragement and chaſtiſement of Bad men; which are the proper cauſes in all reaſon, why they ſhould be performed: and why that teſtimony ſhould not be received, there can no good reaſon be aſſigned; why it ſhould, there is very great reaſon; upon which I did formerly touch, and cannot now ſtand to enlarge thereupon: and indeed, God's patefaction of himſelf to mankind (his ſpeaking to the fathers in many ways, and laſtly to all the world by his Son, ſent on purpoſe from heaven to reveal his deſigns of mercy and favour to mankind) accompanied with ſo many prodigious miracles, and ſo many glorious circumſtances of providence, viſible to all the world, and ſo accommodated as in the firſt place to beget this belief in us, is an argument that cannot but in all honeſt and well-diſpoſed minds obtain effect. To this head belong thoſe opinions, and teſtimonies of mankind, concerning apparitions, of which the ancient World (their Poets and Hiſtorians) ſpake ſo much, all which probably could not be deviſed without ground: concerning the power of enchantment, to which ſome inviſible power muſt co-operate: concerning conjuration, witchery, all entercourſe and confederacy with bad ſpirits; which he that ſuppoſes to be all meer delusion,

Vid. Cic. de Nat. p. 54.

*---Ne Deum quidem poſſe omnia: námque nec ſibi poteſt mortem conſciſcere quod homini dedit optimum in tantis vitæ pœnis; nec mortales æternitate donare, aut revocare defunctos. Lib. II. cap. 7.

1. De divin. init.

De Nat. II. pag. 54.

Gen. 15. 13.

1 Kings 13. 2.

44 & 45 Iſai.

Jer. 25. 12. 29. 10.

Dan. 8. 21.

That the prediction of future events did belong only to the ſupreme God, even the Heathens ſeemed to know and acknowledge: The wiſe Poet, Æn. 3.

Accipite ergo animis, atque hæc mea figite dicta,
Quid Phœbo Pater omnipotens, mihi Phœbus Apollo
Prædixit, vobis Furiarum ego maxima pando.

Serv. Notandum Apollinem quæ dicit à Jove cognoſcere.

Heb. 1.

Preſignification by dreams.

deluſion, muſt ſomewhat over-rudely and immodeſtly ſuſpect the world of exceeding vanity and credulity; many worthy hiſtorians of inconſiderateneſs, &c. moſt law-makers of great raſhneſs and folly; moſt judicatories of indiſcretion or cruelty; and too great a number of witneſſes of extreme malice or madneſs: the truth and reality of which things being admitted, inferring the exiſtence of inviſible powers, (though inferiour ones) doth by conſequence inferr (at leaſt conferr much to) the belief of the divine exiſtence, removing the chief obſtacles of incredulity. But I cannot farther inſiſt upon this point.

Vid. Grot. de Ver. I. 18.
Tert. de An. 46.

4. The laſt argument I mentioned, was divine providence: which being of two ſorts (general, in the government of mankind, particular, in God's dealing with each ſingle perſon) although to him that will carefully attend and reflect upon it (that, to uſe the Pſalmiſt and the prophet's language, will regard the work of the Lord, and conſider the operation of his hands,) even the general providence doth afford no ſmall evidences of his exiſtence; (he that ſhall obſerve the ſtrange detections of miſchief both that which is deſigned, and that which hath been committed: the reſtraints, diſappointments, and exemplary puniſhments of oppreſſion and injuſtice, and all wickedneſs (when it grows outragious and exorbitant) the ſupports, encouragements and ſeaſonable vindications (often by unexpected means,) of innocence and goodneſs; the maintenance of ſuch rules and orders in the world, that notwithſtanding the irregularity and violence of men's paſſions, they commonly ſhift to live tolerably in peace and ſafety; the ſo many poor, weak and helpleſs people (among ſo many crafty, malicious, and greedy ones) being competently provided for; the reparations of good manners and piety being decayed and overborn by power and ill cuſtom; theſe, I ſay, and other ſuch occurrences in the world, he that ſhall conſider wiſely, may diſcern the hand of a wiſe and good Providence watching over humane affairs;) but yet ſeeing commonly the reaſons of God's proceedings with men here are various, myſterious, and ſecret; not to be diſtinctly apprehended by us, (who for example can certainly and eaſily diſtinguiſh between God's mercifull patience toward bad men, and his gracious recompencing the good; between his juſt vengeance of one, and his paternal correction of the other; between his reclaiming one from vice by either adverſe or proſperous accidents, and his exerciſing the others vertue by the like;) and becauſe God's governance hath not its complete iſſue here (this being not the only, nor the chief place of reward or puniſhment; therefore we cannot now with ſo clear evidence demonſtrate the divine attributes from general providence; but are here forced by perverſe antagoniſts to be ſometime on the defenſive; being ſufficiently able in this point to defend our ſelves, but not ſo able hence to convince ſuch ſturdy adverſaries: it is only the children of wiſdom here, that will juſtifie her: therefore I wave that plea: But for particular Providence, I dare appeal to moſt men, eſpecially to thoſe, who have ever had any fear of God or ſenſe of goodneſs; if ſometime or other in their lives, they have not in their needs (eſpecially upon their addreſſes to God) found help and comfort conveyed unto them, by an indiſcernible hand; if they have not, ſometimes in an unaccountable manner, eſcaped grievous dangers: if they have not experienced, in performance of their duty and devotion toward God, a comfort extraordinary; if they cannot apply that of the Pſalmiſt to ſome events of their life: This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and ſaved

Ariſtotle de Gener.

Iſa. 5. 12.
Pſal. 28. 5.

Vid. Gr. de Ver. 63, &c.

This is a place, where God permits men to act much according to their freedom, not interpoſing but upon great reaſon, and they have here γνῶμα κελσεως, Chryſ.

Pſal. 34. 6, 7, 8.

Indeed this opinion being not fixed ſteddily in men's perſuaſion, there can be no ſteady bottom of vertuous practice: no, nor to a wiſe man any comfortable life: τί μοι ζῆν ἐν κόσμῳ κενῷ θεῶν, ἢ προνοίας κενῷ, ſaith that noble Emperour nobly: τί καὶ ἐπιθύμῳ εἰκαίῳ συγκείματι καὶ φύρμῳ τοιούτῳ ἐνδιατείβειν· to live in ſuch a blind confuſion,&c. II. 2. VI. 10.

ſaved him out of all his troubles: The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them: O taſt and ſee that the Lord is good! O taſt and ſee: If God's goodneſs may be felt and ſeen by us, then is our own experience an argument of his exiſtence: which indeed it is to all good men; (for whoſe comfort and confirmation I mention it; though it is not likely to have much influence upon thoſe that have driven God's preſence out of their ſouls; except they have ſo much ingenuity as to believe others teſtimony, who aſſert this great truth to them from their own inward conſcience and experience.

I have inſiſted two long upon this ſubject, it being ſo rich and copious that I could not eaſily get out of it; nor can I much repent thereof, it being of ſo great conſequence throughly to be perſuaded of this point: the deeper and more ſtrongly this foundation is laid, the more ſtable will the ſuperſtructure of religious practice be thereupon; and I fear moſt of that coldneſs and imperfection which appears therein, doth ariſe chiefly from the weakneſs of our faith in this very article.

1. I ſhall only farther obſerve one or two particulars: firſt, that the preceding arguments as they do moſt immediately evince thoſe three principal attributes of God, his incomprehenſible wiſdom, power, and goodneſs, ſo in conjunction with (or conſequence from) them, they do declare thoſe his other attributes (which are ingredients alſo of that notion, which in the beginning of this diſcourſe I deſcribed) namely, the eternity, and indefectibility of his exiſtence; his immenſe omni-preſence; his ſpirituality: as alſo his juſtice and veracity; his rightfull ſoveraignty of dominion, and the like, (for I cannot proſecute all the divine perfections, according to that multiplicity of diſtinction which our conceit and expreſſion doth make of them:) If God made all things he could not receive being from another (and he who made this world, what reaſon can we have to ſuppoſe him from another?) nor can any thing receive being of it ſelf; nor from meer nothing of it ſelf ſpring up into being: therefore the Maker of the World is eternal: ſomething muſt be eternal, otherwiſe nothing could be at all; other things ſhew themſelves to have proceeded from the wiſdom and goodneſs of one; that one therefore is eternal; and ſo all nations conſent; and ſo Revelation declares: that he is immortal and immutable, doth as plainly follow: for not depending for his being on any thing belonging to it, neither can he depend for his continuance or conſervation: having ſuperiour power to all things, as having conferred to all whatever of power they have, nothing can make any prevalent impreſſion upon him, ſo as to deſtroy or alter any thing in him: From his making and from his upholding; and from his governing all things, it follows that he was and is every-where: where his power is, there his hand muſt be: for nothing can act upon what is diſtant; every action with effect requires a Conjunction of the agent and patient: That he doth penetrate all things with his preſence and power, operating inſenſibly and imperceptibly, doth argue the ſpirituality of his being; and that he doth not conſiſt of ſuch matter, as all the things we feel and perceive do: His over-reaching wiſdom argues him incapable of being deceived; and his over-bearing power ſhews that he doth not need to deceive; and his tranſcendent goodneſs proves him unwilling to deceive or injure any: from whence is conſequent his perfect veracity and juſtice. The excellency of his nature; the eminency of his wiſdom and power; the exceſs of his goodneſs; and his having firſt given being, and then preſerving it to all things, do declare his rightfull title to ſupreme dominion; and accordingly that all love, eſteem, worſhip and obedience is due to him; according to that devout acknowledgment of the bleſſed Elders in the Apocalypſe: Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive the glory, and the honour, and the power (or authority) becauſe thou haſt made all things; and for thy will they are, and were created.

Ψευδηγορεῖν γὰρ οὐκ ἐπίσταται στόμα τὸ δῖον---- Æſch. Prom.

Apoc. 4. 11.

I might add, that the conſtitution of our own ſouls doth ſhew and confirm divers of God's attributes: It is not reaſonable to think that our Maker made us to admire other qualities than ſuch as are in him: Therefore ſince we love and eſteem and admire goodneſs, mercifulneſs, &c. and diſlike the oppoſites; therefore God is in the higheſt degree good and gracious, &c.

I obſerve ſecondly, that in this article the Unity of God is implied, (the authors of the Creed thought it ſufficiently ſignified by the ſingular number;) the which in other ancient Creeds was expreſſed: Orientis Eccleſiæ omnes ità tradunt (ſaith Ruffin) Credo in unum Deum patrem Omnipotentem. All the Churches of the Eaſt thus expreſs it: I believe in one God, the Father, Almighty. So in Irenæus his Creed it runs: Eccleſia quaqua per univerſum orbem terrarum uſque ad fines terræ diſperſa ab Apoſtolis & ipſorum diſcipulis fidem accepit, quæ eſt in unum Deum omnipotentem, qui fecit cœlum, & terram, & maria, & omnia quæ in eis ſunt.

And in all Tertullian his forms: * Regula quidem fidei una omnino eſt, ſola immobilis & irreformabilis, credendi ſcilicet in unicum Deum omnipotentem, mundi conditorem.

* De velandis virginibus.

Regula fidei; quâ creditur unum omnino Deum eſſe, nec alium præter mundi conditorem: And in Irenæus and Tertullian his form, 'tis likewiſe expreſſed, as alſo in the Nicene Creed afterwards: And this is a main point of our Belief, diſtinguiſhing us from Pagans and Idolaters; who aſcribed the incommunicable attributes of the one God, and imparted the religious veneration due only to him, unto falſe Deities, invented by themſelves, or ſuggeſted by bad ſpirits; thereby greatly wronging God and themſelves; robbing him of his due honour, and themſelves of that protection and aid, which God is ready to impart to them, who faithfully ſerve, and humbly invoke him.

De præſcript.

Now this truth the precedent arguments do alſo manifeſtly enough inferr: The uniformity, concord, and perfect harmony which appears in the conſtitution and conſervation of things; their conſpiring to one end, their continuing in the ſame order and courſe, do plainly ſhew it: even as the laſting peace of a Common-wealth (compoſed of different perſons and humours) argues one law, that regulates and contains them; and the orderly march of an army ſhews it managed by one conduct; and the uniformity of a houſe, or of a city, declares it contrived by one architect.

And thereto alſo the common ſuffrage of mankind doth in a manner agree: For that there was one ſupreme God, the author, and governour of the reſt, (and of all other things) tranſcending in power and wiſdom and all kind of perfection, was evidently the common opinion; whom therefore we ſee the Poets do ſtyle, the Father of Gods and Men; the King of the Gods, ὕψιςος, μέγιςος, κράτιςος; The Higheſt, Greateſt, moſt excellent God.

Vid. Tertull. adv. Marc. L.10. denique major popularitas generis humani, &c.

Even the Vulgar had this conceit; but the wiſeſt of them had more clear and full apprehenſions of this Unity: and commonly they ſpeak of God, but as of one, whom he calls πατέρα ϗ ποιητὴν:

Vid. Hug. Grot. de jure B. ac P. lib. 2. cap. 20. ſect. 45.

So

De ver. Rel. Chr. p. 37. Max. Tyr. I.

Cic. 1. de N.D.

Ariſt. de Mundo, cap. 7.

Sen. de Benef. IV. 7. Vid. Lactant.

Vid. Sophoclis dictum apud Grot. excerpt. pag. 149. εἷς ταῖς ἀληθείαισιν, εἷς ἐστὶν θεὸς, &c. Notab.

So Plato referrs the making of the World to one: and Ariſtotle, when he hath occaſion to ſpeak of God, doth uſually ſpeak in the ſingular number; and ſo do other Philoſophers; and ſometime expreſsly they ſignifie their opinion to be, that there is but one: There are many popular Gods, but one natural, Antiſthenes ſaid in Tully: εἷς δὲ ὢν πολυώνυμός ἐστι (ſaith the Author de Mundo.) Being one in reality, he hath many names, according to the ſeveral affections he diſcovers and the operations he exerts; whom Seneca thus conſents to: Quoties voles tibi licet aliter hunc auctorem rerum noſtrarum compellare: Tot appellationes ejus eſſe poſſunt, quot munera; Hunc & liberum patrem, & Herculem ac Mercurium noſtri putant; ſic hanc naturam voca, fatum, fortunam; Omnia ejuſdem Dei nomina ſunt variè utentis ſuâ poteſtate.

Marſil. Fic. arg. 10. de leg. Sed nè turbet quæſo Deorum numerus, quem non turbat numerus angelorum. Nihil enim plus apud Platonem tot poſſunt Dii, quàm apud nos tot angeli, tótque beati.

But divine Revelation doth moſt fully declare this truth: I need not mention places; the whole Scripture doth chiefly teach and inculcate it; That there is but one Maker and one Governour of the World; to whom all veneration and obedience is due: and to whom be all honour, and glory, and worſhip for ever aſcribed and payed, &c. Amen.

Ψιλὴν καὶ ἄλογον πίστιν. Orig. 1.

It was anciently objected by Celſus and other adverſaries of our Religion, that Chriſtianity did exact of men a blind, groundleſs belief; that it condemned humane wiſdom, baniſh'd underſtanding, and prohibited all inquiry; commanding men to ſwallow its dictates without any previous examination or debate concerning the truth of them; impoſing νόμους ἀναποδείκτους, laws uncapable of proof, and inculcating this rule, μὴ ἐξέταζε, ἀλλὰ μόνον πίστευε. Do not examine, but only believe.

The ground of this accuſation ſeems to be a great miſtake, proceeding from the not diſtinguiſhing that belief, whereby we embrace Chriſtianity it ſelf in general and in groſs; and the belief, whereby we aſſent to the particular doctrines thereof, (eſpecially ſuch as concern matters ſupernatural, and above the reach of our underſtanding to find out or comprehend.)

Orig. V. pag. 248, &c.

As for the firſt, that faith, whereby we embrace Chriſtianity in the groſs; I ſay, that Chriſtianity doth not propound it ſelf as immediately evident; nor requires a precipitate aſſent to it; but offers blind reaſon for it ſelf, and invites men to inquire, conſider, and judge about its truth: Never any Religion was ſo little liable to this cenſure; none ever ſo freely expoſed it ſelf to a fair trial at the barr of reaſon: it deſires of men an εὐγνώμων ἐξέτασις, a candid and diſcreet examination for its ſake and their own: Other Religions have for their juſtification inſiſted upon the example of anceſtours, and cuſtom of times; their large extent and prevalence among many people; their eſtabliſhment by civil laws, and the countenance of ſecular power; (arguments extrinſick to the matter, and very weak in themſelves) declining all other teſt or trial of reaſon: and it is remarkable, how Celſus and thoſe (who made the foreſaid objection) did therein contradict themſelves, when they affirm men ought, without ſcruple, to conform to the Religion preſcribed by the laws of their Country, be they what they will; never ſo abſurd, or diſhoneſt: This is indeed an exacting of irrational belief; a ſtifling of our underſtandings and muzling our judgments; a requiring of men to yield their conſent to innumerable moſt palpable falſhoods and inconſiſtencies. The teachers and defenders of Chriſtianity proceeded otherwiſe; confiding in the truth and reaſonableneſs of their cauſe, they excited men to lay aſide all unreaſonable prejudices; to uſe their beſt underſtandings; to apply themſelves to an induſtrious and impartial ſearch of the truth: Hear Lactantius Lib. II. cap. 7. ſpeaking for the reſt: Oportet in ea re maximè, in qua vitæ ratio verſatur, ſibi quémque confidere, ſuóque judicio ac propriis ſenſibus niti ad inveſtigandam, & perpendendam veritatem, quàm credentem alienis erroribus decipi tanquam ipſum rationis expertem: Dedit omnibus Deus pro virili portione ſapientiam, ut & inaudita inveſtigare poſſent, & audita perpendere: That is; We ought eſpecially, every one of us, in that matter, which chiefly concerns our life, to confide in our ſelves; and rather with our own judgment and our proper ſenſes ſtrive to find out and weigh the truth, than believing other men's errours, to be deceived as men void of reaſon: God hath given all men their ſhare of wiſdom, that they might both inquire into what they hear, and weigh it: ſo he diſputing againſt the heathen credulity.

Thus doth Chriſtianity call upon men to inquire into its ſelf; yea it obliges them thereto: it propounds faith as a vertue highly commendable (ſuppoſing it therefore voluntary and managed with reaſon) for all vertue is ἕξις προαιρετικὴ μετ᾽ ἀληθοῦς λόγου, 'tis ἑκούσιος συγκατάθεσις, a voluntary aſſent, promiſing ample rewards thereto; and infidelity it propounds as a vice very blameable (and conſequently very irrational) threatning very ſevere puniſhments thereto: it doth not inveagle men by ſlight, nor compell them by force; but fairly perſuades them to imbrace it: it doth not therefore avoid examination, nor diſclaim the uſe of good reaſon; but ſeeks and procures the one; cheerfully and confidently appeals to the other.

Indeed after it hath convinced men of its truth in general; having evidenced the truth and certainty of its fundamental principles, it then requires a full and cordial conſent (without exception) to all its particular doctrines grounded upon them: when (I ſay) it hath propounded ſufficient reaſon to ſatisfy men's minds, that is grounded upon moſt ſolid principles, it then requires men to ſurceaſe farther doubt or ſcruple concerning what it teaches: which is a moſt reaſonable proceeding, and conformable to the method uſed in the ſtricteſt ſciences: for the principles of any ſcience being either demonſtrated out of ſome higher ſcience, or evidenced by fit examples and experiments to common ſenſe, and being thence admitted, 'tis afterward unlawful and abſurd to refuſe the concluſions deduced from them: ſo it having been proved that our principles are true; (viz. that God is perfectly veracious; and that Chriſtian Religion did proceed from him, and is built upon his atteſtation;) 'tis a part of abſurd levity and ſelf-contradiction then to queſtion any particular propoſition evidently contained therein, and in this ſenſe it is true (and thus I take thoſe Chriſtians to be underſtood * who commend immediate * Vid. Orig. faith, and exclude reaſon from being too buſy in matters of religion, and pag. 9. diſcountenance curious inquiry:) thus I ſay it is true, that Chriſtianity engages us to believe, without reaſon or diſpute. It will allow (yea it invites, and exhorts) an infidel to conſider and judge of its truth; but it will not allow a Chriſtian to be ſo vain and inconſtant, as to queſtion any particular of its doctrine; by doing ſo he renounces his faith, at leaſt ceaſes to be a ſteady Chriſtian.

Now the firſt principle of Chriſtianity (common thereto and all other religions) is, That there is one God: the next (which alſo no Religion doth not acknowledge) that God is perfectly veracious; or, that whatever appears to be aſſerted or atteſted to by God is certainly true: which two principles we have already proved by reaſons proper and ſufficient (we conceive) to ſatisfy any well-diſpoſed mind. A third principle is, that God is the Author of the Chriſtian doctrine in general; that it hath been revealed and impoſed upon mankind by divine authority. And a fourth is, that thoſe authorities and traditions upon which we ground and by which we prove (mediately or immediately) the particular doctrines of Chriſtianity to be truely ſuch (that is, admitting the former principle, to have come from God) are proper and ſufficient to that purpoſe. Theſe two latter principles involving matter of fact and conſequently being not evident in themſelves, do (for a full conviction of a man's mind and producing therein a ſolid perſuaſion) require a rational probation; and that it may appear we believe like reaſonable men, not upon wilfull reſolution, or by meer chance (as Pagans and Mahometans, and other ignorant opinioniſts do) as alſo to confirm the grounds upon which the ſubſequent articles or doctrines of faith are built, I ſhall endeavour briefly to ſhew the reaſonableneſs of them; beginning with the firſt; and advancing my diſcourſe by ſeveral ſteps or degrees. And, I obſerve that,

1. It is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that God ſhould ſometime reveal unto men the truth concerning himſelf, and concerning them, as they ſtand related toward him; (his nature and will; our ſtate and duty) His prime attributes perſuade thus much. It is moſt evident to common experience, that mankind, being left to it ſelf (in matters of this nature eſpecially) is very inſufficient to direct it ſelf; it is apt to lie under a wofull ignorance; to be poſſeſſed with vain conceit; to wander in doubt; and fall into errour; 'tis ſubject to all kind of deluſion, which either the malice of wicked ſpirits, or the ſubtilty of naughty men, or the wildneſs of its own unruly paſſions and deſires can bring it under; and conſequently 'tis liable to incurr all thoſe ſins (diſhonourable, hurtfull, and deſtructive to its nature) and all thoſe miſeries, which from ignorance, errour, and ſin do naturally ſpring; (an eſtrangement eſpecially from God, and his grievous diſpleaſure) we ſee that not only the generality of mankind did ſometime lie in this ſad condition, but that even the moſt elevated and refined wits, thoſe among men, who by all poſſible improvement of their reaſon did endeavour to raiſe and reſcue themſelves from the common ignorance, miſtakes, ſuperſtitions and follies of the world, could by no means, in any good meaſure attain their end: what did their diligent ſtudies and inquiries produce but diſſatisfaction and perplexity of mind? wherein did their eager diſputations conclude, but in irreconcilable differences of opinion, and greater uncertainty, than at firſt? moſt were plung'd into a deſperate Scepticiſm; (a doubt and diffidence of all things;) none arrived higher, than ſome faint conjectures, or ſome unſteady opinions, concerning thoſe matters of higheſt conſequence: ἐματαιώθησαν ἐν τοῖς διαλογισμοῖς: they were (as St. Paul obſerved) made vain (were fruſtrated and befooled) in their reaſonings, and their fooliſh heart was darkned, &c. The world by wiſdom did not know God: could not attain to a requiſite meaſure of knowledge in divine things. This being the natural ſtate of men, deſtitute of divine help and direction, doth it not (I pray) greatly need another light to guide it in this darkneſs; a helpfull hand to relieve it from theſe inconveniences? Can then that infinite goodneſs hear mankind groan under ſo lamentable oppreſſions, and not pity it? Can he behold his own dear offſpring, the flower of his creation, lying in ſo comfortleſs, ſo remedileſs a diſtreſs, without affording ſome relief? Can ſuch a ſpectacle delight that gracious eye? or can he forbear long to remove it out of his ſight? his goodneſs makes it highly improbable that he ſhould: We accompt it great want

Rom. 1. 21.
Eph. 4. 17.
1 Cor. 1. 21.

want of goodneſs not to direct a bewildred traveller; not to relieve, if we can, a perſon greatly diſtreſſed? and if we, being bad, often perform ſuch good offices to one another; how much more ready ſhould we think him, that is goodneſs it ſelf, to do the like, for all mankind, ſo much needing it? his wiſdom alſo gives us to ſuppoſe the ſame: If God made the world to expreſs his goodneſs, and manifeſt his glory; is it likely, he ſhould ſuffer himſelf to be utterly fruſtrated in his deſign by letting men continue in ignorance and doubt concerning who it was that made it and how he governs it? who but men can admire his excellent perfections, and render him his due honour; and how can they do it, without competent knowledge, and full perſuaſion concerning him? Doth not God expect duty and ſervice from men? would he not have the world proceed in ſome good order? doth he not deſire the good of men, and delight in their happineſs? And then being infinitely wiſe, muſt he not diſpoſe fit means for accompliſhing theſe ends? will he not provide, that himſelf be not totally diſappointed? So his wiſdom grounds an argument for divine revelation: He had made an inward faculty of ſeeing in vain, if he had not given an outward light, &c. God's juſtice alſo doth in ſome manner perſuade the ſame: Doth not every good Governour take care that his ſubjects ſhould underſtand his pleaſure, and be acquainted with his laws? doth he not propound fit encouragements to obedience; and deterr them from diſobedience by menacing puniſhment? and the ſoveraign Governour and Judge of the World can he fail ſufficiently to declare his will? will he leave any apology for diſobedience? ſhall he neglect any means apt to promote his ſubjects performance of their duty; fit to prevent the breach of his laws? If he loves righteouſneſs, and deſires to be duely obeyed, and delights in his ſubjects good; he will ſurely diſcover his mind, and encourage men to comply with it; and terrify them from oppoſing it. Indeed that God ſhould for a while connive at mens ignorance, and ſuffer them to grope after truth (as St. Paul expreſſeth it in the 14 and 17 of the Acts) Acts 17.27,30. 14. 16. to try them, as he did the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs, how they would behave themſelves, in the uſing their talent of natural light; to make them ſenſible of their natural infirmity; more ready to embrace; more able to value the redreſs vouchſafed them; to commend his extraordinary grace and mercy to them; that for ſuch purpoſes, unſearchable wholly by our ſhallow underſtanding; he ſhould, I ſay, for ſome time forbear with a full evidence to declare all his mind, is not ſo ſtrange or unlikely. I might add, that it is not likely God ſhould ſuffer the World (his Kingdom) perpetually to lie under the uſurpation and tyranny of the Devil (καταδυναστευομένους ὑπὸ τοῦ διαβόλου, Acts 10. 38.) That his imperial throne ſhould be poſſeſſed; his authority uſurped; his name inſulted and triumphed over as it were by that arch-rebel, and capital enemy of his; but that he ſhould for ever ſuffer men to abide in ſuch depth of ignorance, ſuch perplexity of doubt, ſuch captivity under ſin, and miſery, ſeems not probable; and much leſs, can it ſeem improbable that he hath done it: it cannot, I ſay, ſeem misbecoming the goodneſs, wiſdom, or juſtice of God, Vid. diſcurſum Quintii Ciceronis in l. de divin. that he ſhould ſhew them clearly, what he requires of them to do; what good he intends for them: what way leads to their happineſs; and how they ſhould avoid miſery. This conſideration, though it doth not fully prove God hath made ſuch revelation (for we cannot reach the utmoſt of poſſibilities, nor are judges of what God muſt needs do) yet it removes all obſtruction to our belief, and diſpoſes us to admit the following reaſons: it being not unprobable, yea in the reaſon of the thing very probable, he ſhould do it; we cannot wonder, and have leſs reaſon to diſtruſt thoſe arguments, by which it may appear that he hath done it.

2dly. We may conſider, that no other religion, that hath been, or now is could (or can) with any probability pretend thus to have proceeded from God, or by him to have been deſigned for the general, complete and perpetual inſtruction and obligation of mankind. There have been but three pretenſions thereto: that of Paganiſm, of Mahometaniſm, and of Judaiſm; let us a little examine each of them.

As for Paganiſm, it was never one ſimple, or certain; one fixed or conſtant thing; but according to difference of place and time infinitely various and mutable: diverſly ſhaped and modelled according to fancy and humour, deſign or intereſt of the ſtate that allowed it, the prieſts that managed it, or the people that received it; a plain ſign that (excepting ſome general confuted notions, derived from ancient tradition) it did wholly proceed from humane device, or ſome worſe cauſe: ſurvey it all, and what ſhall you find but a company of idle, ridiculous, ill-contrived, incredible and inconſiſtent ſtories, arguing nothing of truth, and little of wit in them that invented them; theſe attended by practices moſt fond, lewd, and cruel, unworthy of humane nature, contrary to common ſenſe and honeſty. Their worſhip directed to objects moſt improper: to the ſouls of dead men (men famous for nothing ſo much as the vicious enormities of their lives, bloudy cruelties, thefts and rapines; murders and parricides; horrid luſts, adulteries, rapes and inceſts; and ſuch perſons, alive or dead, what good or wiſe man would not rather deteſt and abominate, than reſpect or worſhip!) To brute beaſts; and them the moſt vile and miſchievous (Dogs, Serpents, Crocodiles) which to pay devotion unto, what a debaſement is it of humane nature? To creatures inanimate; the ſtars and elements; rivers, trees, &c. which we ſee acting by a natural neceſſity; yielding no ſignification of any life, ſenſe, or underſtanding in them, and conſequently much inferiour to us in dignity of nature; which therefore 'tis a ſottiſh baſeneſs in us to adore: yea, which is yet an extremer degree (if it may be) of folly, they dedicated temples, and offered ſacrifices to things void of all ſubſiſtence; to meer qualities and accidents of things; the paſſions of our minds, and the diſeaſes of our body, and accidents of our lives: who would think men ſhould be ſo mad as to reckon impudence (that odious vice) or a fever (that tormenting diſeaſe) or fortune (that which we can ſo little truſt, and ſo oft complain of) among things venerable? and from ſuch thorns, what fruits of good life and morality can we hope ſhould ſpring? what piety towards God, what juſtice, truth, or goodneſs towards men, what ſobriety or purity in men themſelves can we expect ſhould ariſe from ſuch conceits, and ſuch practices in Religion? none other, than ſuch as St. Paul deſcribes in the firſt Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Romans, and in the ſecond of the Epiſtle to the Epheſians; which hiſtory and experience ſhew to have been no ſlanderous imputations upon Gentiliſm. But 'tis needleſs to diſcourſe againſt that, which I ſuppoſe hath no reaſonable Patron; and which hardly any wiſe-man, when it was practiſed, did ſeriouſly think had any truth or reality in it: Plato often inveighs againſt the inventours of thoſe fictions in heathen Theology: Ariſtotle attributes the conſtitution of thoſe Religions to the policy of lawgivers: there was no Philoſopher, who did not ſignifie his diſlike or contempt of the vulgar opinions; that is, of their Religion. What Tully ſaith of one part, the wiſer ſort of men did judge of all: Tota res eſt inventa fallaciis aut ad quæſtum, aut ad ſuperſtitionem, aut ad errorem: The whole buſineſs was deceitfully forged either for gain, or out of ſuperſtition, or from miſtake.

Ariſt. Metaph. XII. 8.
Example Cic. de. div. II. pag. 240.
Tuſc. Qu. I. p. 301.
De Div. II. p. 245.

They did in their external carriage comply with common practice, out of politick diſcretion; for their ſafety, and for peace-ſake: but in their mind they believed nothing, nor liked any thing in it: they obſerved the common things, tanquam legibus juſſa, non tanquam diis grata (as commanded by the laws, not as acceptable to the Gods) as Seneca ſpeaks.

Vid. Auguſt. de Civ. Dei, lib. IV. 33. VI. 10.

I might add, that all theſe Religions did vaniſh with the countenance of authority and power that ſuſtained them; which ſhews they had no root in the hearty belief or approbation of thoſe that profeſſed them. 'Tis therefore plain that this Religion did not proceed from God; but either from humane device, or diabolical ſuggeſtion.

As for Mahometaniſm, a Sect in later times ſprung up and vaſtly ſpread about the World; neither can that fairly pretend to a divine original: In times of great diſturbance and confuſion in the World (when even among Chriſtian's ignorance and diſſenſion, ſuperſtition, and viciouſneſs of manners had hugely prevailed) in a very blind corner of the earth, among a crew of barbarous thieves and wild runnagates (ſuch have thoſe Arabians been always famed to be) this Sect did firſt ariſe; being accommodated to the genius of ſuch people, and infuſed into them, partly by jugling pretences to wonder-working and prophecy, partly by ſeditious violence; by a perſon not, as their own legends deſcribe him, of any honourable qualities; but having all the characters of an impoſtor, (rebellious and perfidious; inhumane and cruel; lewd and laſcivious:) propagated it was afterwards by rage and terrour of arms, and grew wholly among barbarous people, void of learning and civility; having no religion before, and therefore (as all mankind is naturally receptive of religious impreſſions) capable to admit any, eſpecially ſuch an one as this, agreeable to their ſavage humours and luſts; It ſubſiſts upon the ſame grounds of ignorance and force, refuſing all examination, and upon extreme penalties prohibiting any diſpute, or controverſy about its truth; being ſo far wiſe, as conſcious to it ſelf, that the letting in a little light, and a moderate liberty of diſcuſſing its pretences, would eaſily overthrow it. Even theſe exteriour circumſtances of its riſe, growth, and continuance, (ſo full of iniquity and inhumanity) are great preſumptions againſt its divinity, or rather plainly demonſtrate, that it did not proceed from God; whoſe truth cannot need ſuch courſes, whoſe goodneſs abhorrs them: And if we look into it, we ſhall find it to be a lump of abſurd opinions, odd ſtories, and uncouth ceremonies, compounded chiefly of the dregs of Chriſtian hereſies, with ſome ingredients of Judaiſm and Paganiſm, confuſedly jumbled and tempered together: From Chriſtian hereſies it hath its negative doctrines, oppoſite to Chriſtianity; for allowing Chriſt much reſpect, it yet denies his being the Son of God; and his having really ſuffered; it rejects his true ſtory, and affixes falſe ones upon him; that God hath a body and a humane ſhape, (Mahomet felt his hand forſooth, and it was very cold,) an opinion ſo unreaſonable and miſbeſeeming God, he might draw from the Anthropomorphites; and from the Manichees that doctrine concerning the fatal determination of all events; a doctrine ſo prejudicial to Religion, taking away thoſe foundations of juſtice between God and Man; Man's free choice in ſerving God, and God's free diſpoſal of rewards to men, ſuitable to their actions. The Jew contributed his ceremonies of circumciſion, and purgations by waſhing; his abſtinence from Swine's-fleſh; his allowance of Polygamy and Divorce. I might add, that from him it borrowed its inhumane condemning, deſpiſing, and hating all the world; calling all men dogs (beſide themſelves) and adjuring all to certain damnation; affirming withall, that all of their belief, lief, how wickedly ſoever they have lived, ſhall at length partake of ſalvation. The Pagan Elyſium might be a pattern, whence their paradiſe of corporeal delight, and brutiſh ſenſuality might be tranſcribed; which any man ſees how poor an encouragement it is, how unworthy a reward to vertue; yea, how much it rather detracts from and diſcourages all performances of honeſty and reaſon. He muſt be very ſtupid, who can ſuffer himſelf to be perſuaded that theſe conceits did come from the God of Holineſs and Wiſdom. And how Mahomet was inſpired with truth, his ſtories alone would evince; ſtories patched out of old hiſtories corrupted, mutilated, and tranſplaced, interlarded with fabulous legends; contrary to all probable records of hiſtory (the perſons, places, times, and all circumſtances of which it moſt unskilfully confounds,) yea repugnant to the nature of things, and to all imaginable poſſibility; Evident arguments both of an ignorant and impudent impoſtor: He that will lye or blunder about matters of fact, who can truſt him in matters of right and reaſon? All which (if time would permit and it were worth the while) might by manifold inſtances be ſhewed. I might add its multitude of ſilly ceremonies, grounded on no reaſonable deſign, nor ſubſervient to any purpoſe of vertue. But what is ſaid doth enough declare this Religion to be of no divine extraction.

Vid. Pſ. 78. 5. 76. 1. Deut. 4. 7, &c.

As for ancient Judaiſm; that it has no ſuch revelation as that we require, and did in the former concluſion aſſert, (nor has any probability to expect an univerſal, complete, ſtanding revelation) upon many ſcores may appear. It is from the tenour thereof evident, that it was deſigned only for one ſmall nation, poſſeſſing a very inconſiderable portion of the earth; purpoſely diſtinguiſhed and as it were concealed from the reſt of mankind; and in effect ſo remaining for many ages (untill the Roman Conqueſts opened the World and diſcovered them) in a ſolitary obſcurity; ſo that the moſt inquiſitive ſurveyours of the earth and ſearchers into the cuſtoms of people, (Herodotus for inſtance and others) could not diſcern them, did take no notice of them; though for their peculiar manners Pſal. 14. 19. otherwiſe moſt remarkable. He ſhewed (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) his word unto Jacob, his ſtatutes and judgments unto Iſrael: He hath not dealt ſo with any nation; and as for his judgments, they have not known them. I the Lord am Holy, and have ſevered you from other people, that ye ſhould be mine (ſaith God to the Jews, Levit. 20. 26.) and: So ſhall we be ſeparated (ſaith Mo- Exod. 33. 16. ſes in his addreſs to God, Exod. 33.) So ſhall we be ſeparated, I, and thy Deut. 7. 6. 14. 2. people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth. Thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord hath choſen thee to be a ſpecial people unto himſelf, above all people that are upon the face of the earth: And for this very purpoſe (of diſtinction and ſeparation) many of their laws Levit. 20. 24, 25. were appointed: I am the Lord your God which have ſeparated you from other people; Ye ſhall therefore put difference between clean beaſts and unclean, &c. We ſee the laws of that Religion particularly directed to that Deut. 4. 1. 5. 1. 6. 3, &c. Exod. 20. people, Hear, O Iſrael, being the uſual compellation, ſet in the head of them: and, I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, is the introduction to the very Decalogue it ſelf; the encouragements alſo to and diſcouragements from obedience do peculiarly appertain to them; a long and proſperous enjoyment of the land of Canaan, if they did obey; Deut. 5. 33. vid. Deut. 6. 3, &c. and, diſpoſſeſſion or affliction therein, if they ſhould preſume to diſobey: You ſhall walk in all the ways, which the Lord your God hath commanded you, that ye may live, and that it may be well with you, and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye poſſeſs. Such were the promiſes, exciting to obedience; and the threatnings to diſobedience ſuitable; as every-where in their law and ſtory is viſible.

This revelation therefore cannot be deemed general, ſuch as we argued in reaſon might be expected from him, who (as the Pſalmiſt ſings) is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works : who hath made of one bloud πᾶν ἔθνος ἀνθρώπων, the whole nation of mankind (as St. Paul, in the Acts, expreſſeth it) who (as St. Peter there implies) is no reſpecter of perſons, or of nations : who is the Maker and Saviour of all men, (and, as the Wiſeman tells us) careth for all alike : being deſirous that all men ſhould be ſaved, and come to the knowledge of the truth; not willing that any ſhould periſh, but that all men ſhould come to repentance. Who is not φιλεβραῖος only, or φιλέλλην (a lover of Jews only or Greeks) but φιλάνθρωπος, a lover of men, and φιλόψυχος, a lover of ſouls; who, laſtly, is not the God of the Jews only, but of the Gentiles alſo : as not our Prophets and Apoſtles only tell us, but the reaſon of the thing and the voice of nature doth declare.

Pſal. 145. 9.
Acts 17. 26.
Acts 10. 34.
1 Tim. 4. 10.
2. 4.
Wiſd. 6. 7.
11. 23, &c.
2 Pet. 3. 9.
Tit. 3. 4.
Sap. 11. 26.
vid. Ezek. 18.
Rom. 3. 29.
οὐδεὶς Θεὸς δύσνους ἀνθρώποις. Plat. Theat.

And as this revelation was particular, ſo was it alſo partial; as God did not by it ſpeak his mind to all, ſo neither did he in it ſpeak out all his mind. Surveying this Religion, may we not eaſily deſcry a great redundance in the circumſtantial and exteriour parts; a great defect in the ſubſtantials, and inwards thereof? Ritual inſtitutions innumerable we ſee, nicely deſcribed, and ſtrongly preſſed; moral precepts more ſparingly delivered, not ſo clearly explained, nor ſo fully urged by rational inducements : Obſervation of times, and places; diſtinction of meats, and habits; corporal cleanſings and purgations; modalities of outward ſervice in ſacrifices and oblations, thoſe δικαιώματα σαρκὸς, (Heb. 9. 9, 10.) juſtifications of the fleſh, that could not perfect the obſerver's conſcience, or (mind or inward man;) touch not, taſte not, handle not, moſt largely and with extreme punctuality, ſome of them under heavy penalties (exciſion and extermination) injoined; while moral duties, and ſpiritual devotions (ſo exceedingly more agreeable to rational nature, and more pleaſing to God) ſeem not ſo perfectly provided for. Many things are tacitly connived at, or plainly permitted to them, (as Polygamy, Divorce, ſome kind of revenge and uncharitableneſs;) which even natural reaſon diſlikes, or condemns: God's placability, and aptneſs to forgive great ſins, wilfully and preſumptuouſly committed, (ſuch as no man lives altogether free from,) not openly revealed, but rather the contrary expreſſed, (Curſed is he that abides not in all things written in this law to do them :) which excludes all aſſurance, and diſcourages from hope of mercy; and conſequently obſtructs repentance and amendment of life. And where do we ſee any clear diſcovery concerning the immortality of the ſoul, or the future ſtate, ſo material a point of Religion, of ſo great moment to encourage vertue and piety? Even the gentile Theology ſeems more expreſs in this point, than the Jewiſh law; and the Pagan prieſts (by help of ancient tradition) ſeem to have reached farther than the Hebrew prophets: God indeed ſeems to have ſhewed only his back-parts to Moſes; when he diſcovered no more of his nature, and his pleaſure to him; when he ſeems to delight in, and lay ſo much ſtreſs upon thoſe carnal and ceremonious performances. Neither do we herein charge God : for he did herein but what wiſdom required : The laws and inſtitutions of this Religion were ſurely accommodated to the ſtate, and diſpoſition, and capacity of that people; people not very wiſe or conſiderate; grave or conſtant; meek or flexible; but a very ſtubborn, froward, humorous generation of men, as their own writings deſcribe them; and therefore not capable of perfect inſtruction, or rigorous precepts; like children, by reaſon of the groſsneſs of their apprehenſion, and unrulineſs of paſſion, not οἰκεῖοι ἀκροαταὶ (no proper auditors)

Deut. 27. 26.
Gal. 3. 10.
vid. Ezek. 20. 25.

Vid. Orig. adv. Celſ. lib. 3. Gr. V. 6.

Gal. 4. 9. 4. 3. 3. 24.

* Νήπιοι.

Remiſſion of ſins not clearly diſcovered under the Jewiſh Diſpenſation, a fundamental point of Religion.

Heb. 8. 6.

tors) of a pure and accurate diſcipline; and as with ſuch God in his wiſdom and tender goodneſs ſeems to have dealt with them; diſpenſing with the infirmities of their age, and condeſcending to their mean capacities; feeding them with milk, and indulging them innocent trifles; and ſo tempering his ordinances given unto them, as might beſt ſerve partly to pleaſe and humour them, partly to curb and reſtrain them: whence St. Paul calls them poor and weak elements, and elements of the word, (ſuch as vulgar and ſilly people were fit to learn) adapted to the learning and practiſing of * children; the law being a School-maſter to keep them in order and prepare them for a higher inſtruction. Such variety of ſuperficial formalities might well agree to childiſh fancies, and content ſlaviſh ſpirits; but to men improved in reaſon, who could reliſh ſpiritual entertainments, they muſt needs ſeem burthenſome and tedious: Wiſe-men cannot be much affected with pomps and ſolemnities. In the practice of vertue and piety there are alluring ſweetneſſes and beauties, which it muſt needs diſpleaſe him, that is ſenſible of them, to be avoked from, by an obligation to attend preciſely to ſuch an abundance of outward ſapleſs obſervances; to be bound to chew ſuch husks, neglecting ſo delicious a kernel, cannot but be irkſome and grievous: they are therefore ſtyled well in the New Teſtament an intolerable yoke and burthen, (Acts 15. 10, 28.) and to be freed of them is a very valuable privilege, which Chriſt hath purchaſed for us, (Gal. 5. 1.) 'Tis true, by degrees God imparted farther manifeſtations of light even to that people by the examples, and inſtructions of holy men and prophets ſent among them, in a manner and upon occaſions extraordinary: Holy men by their practice ſhewed that the rigour of the law might in ſome caſes be relaxed and diſpenſed with; that a more ſpiritual ſervice was acceptable to God; that he loved a purer devotion, and a higher charity, than the law required. And the Prophets often declared, that God did not ſo much delight in ceremonious obſervances; but chiefly did require hearty piety, perfect juſtice and tender charity; accompanied with meekneſs and patience, temperance and ſobriety. By them alſo God diſcovered more of his gracious diſpoſition and mercifull intentions; that he could pardon the greateſt ſins, and was reconcilable to the moſt heinous offenders, upon ſincere repentance and amendment of life. But theſe arbitrary and extraordinary diſpenſations of farther light and inſtruction to the Jews do confirm our purpoſe, ſhewing that God did not primarily intend the Jewiſh law for a complete diſcovery of his mind; having reſerved ſo much to be diſcovered in fit opportunity, argues, that more ſtill might be behind; as indeed we ſee that future life and immortality was not even by the prophets quite brought to light; that better covenant, eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes, was not yet revealed.

Deut. 18. 15.

Jer. 31. 31.

Heb. 8. 7, 13.

Yea this Religion, as it was not univerſal, and complete, ſo neither was it immutable and perpetual: It ſelf tells us, that God hereafter would raiſe another Prophet (for extraordinarineſs and eminency like to Moſes) which ſhould have words by God put into his mouth, (new words ſurely, new revelations from God) whom they particularly ſhould be obliged to hear and obey: That the days ſhould come, when the Lord would make a new covenant with the houſe of Iſrael, different from that which he made with their fathers after their delivery from Egypt; not to be written upon ſtones, but impreſſed upon men's hearts: concerning which we may ſay with the author to the Hebrews: If the firſt had been ἄμεμπτος, faultleſs and perfect; there would have no place been found for the ſecond: And: by ſpeaking of a new one, he antiquated the old one.

That another Prieſthood ſhould infallibly be eſtabliſhed, not after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchiſedeck; (not to offer carnal ſacrifices, but to impart ſpiritual benedictions.) Pſal. 110. 4.

That time ſhould be, when God would gather all nations and tongues; and they ſhould come and ſee his glory; and out of them God would take (that which the Moſaical conſtitution would not permit) of them for Prieſts and for Levites. Iſa. 66. 18, 21. Vid. Jer. 3. 16.

That there ſhould be a Sion, a Mountain ſeated above all Mountains, wherein God would place his perpetual reſidence, (his ſeat of worſhip and government) to which all nations ſhould flow, to learn God's will and walk in his ways. (Which could not be Jeruſalem, which is long ſince deſolated; and which if ſtanding, could be no convenient reſort for all the world; 'tis another ſpiritual Sion, a myſtical Rock is ſurely propheſied of. Pſal. 132. 13. Mic. 4. 1, 2, &c. Joel 2. 28. 3. 26.

That God will create a new heaven and a new earth; (a wholly new World and ſtate of things) ſo that the former ſhould not be remembred, nor come into mind. Iſai. 65. 17. 66. 22.

That God would pour his ſpirit of prophecy upon all fleſh (though the prophetical ſpirit hath long deſerted the Jewiſh nation;) that the earth ſhall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the ſea. (Judaiſm cannot be this knowledge, which was never likely to fill the earth.) That from the riſing of the Sun, to the going down of the ſame, God's Name ſhall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incenſe ſhall be offered unto his Name, and a pure offering. (In every place incenſe ſhall be offered unto God, not only at Hieruſalem, to which the Jewiſh ſervice was confined.) For that a time was determined to finiſh tranſgreſſion, and make an end of ſins, to make reconciliation for iniquity and introduce everlaſting righteouſneſs, to ſeal up the viſion and prophecy; and to anoint the moſt Holy: that is, in fine; that God would ſend the Meſſias, to enlighten the World with a perfect inſtruction; revealing God's will, and declaring his mercy to mankind; to erect an univerſal ſpiritual Kingdom over men's hearts, reducing them to the knowledge and obedience of God: theſe things (to which I might add divers more) ſufficiently ſhew that the Moſaical diſpenſation was but temporal and changeable: and that that was intended by God to be done, which the Author of the Hebrews affirms done by Chriſt: An abrogation is made of the precedent command, for its weakneſs and unprofitableneſs, (its unprofitableneſs to the purpoſes of bringing men to ſuch a ſpiritual ſanctity, which would pleaſe God; which is another conſideration, that ſhews the imperfection of the Jewiſh Religion. If Judaiſm could not diſpoſe men to any tolerable degree of piety and righteouſneſs acceptable to God (that which St. Paul ſo largely proves in the Epiſtle to the Romans,) if it alſo tenders no favour or pardon to thoſe, which had tranſgreſſed the law and offended God, (which he alſo there and other-where ſhews,) it was neceſſary, that either all men ſhould lie under a deſperate ſlavery to ſin and guilt, or that God ſhould diſcover another way of righteouſneſs and mercy to be obtained. Joel 2. 28. Hab. 2. 14. Mal. 1. 11. Dan. 9. 24. Heb. 7. 18. Διὰ τὸ ἀσθενὲς ϗ ἀνωφελές. Rom. 3. Gal. 3, &c.

That the Chriſtian doctrine did proceed from God, is a principle, upon which our faith of all particular articles in our Creed doth rely; the truth and reaſonableneſs of which I began to ſhew, proceeding by ſome ſteps; whereof the firſt was, The probability that God ſhould reveal ſuch a doctrine for the benefit and direction of mankind. The ſecond, That no other religion can pretend to ſuch a revelation: theſe aſſertions do well prepare our way to a third (which now we proceed to) that I might farther conſider how unſuitable the Jewiſh Religion was to the common nature and genius of mankind; and therefore unapt to prevail upon men's minds: Judæorum mos abſurdus, ſordidúſque, (the Jewiſh way of religion is uncouth and ſordid) was Tacitus his cenſure, but it agreed to the general conceit of men about it, at that time when it began to be commonly known and obſerved; and a religion ſo little plauſible or probable (ſo apt to be diſliked and deſpiſed) it is not likely that God would commend to the generality of mankind. But I will not farther inſiſt upon this argument; but proceed to aſſert, Hiſt. V. 5.

3ly. That the Chriſtian doctrine is in all reſpects ſuch, as might become God to be the Author of; worthy his wiſdom and goodneſs to reveal and impoſe upon mankind. We cannot imagine a better, more clearly true, more full and exact: more ſatisfactory to our minds and to our wants: We have therein the nature and will of God plainly declared, ſo far as it is fit and uſefull for us to know them; together with our relations to him, and all the ſtate of our own ſouls. An exact rule of life preſcribed to us, with all fit helps, and proper encouragements to the performance of our duty; The way of obtaining all the happineſs we are capable of, and avoiding all miſery clearly ſet before us, all the darkneſs removed, the doubts reſolved, the miſtakes corrected, with which mankind, in thoſe matters of higheſt concernment, hath been hitherto diſturbed and diſtracted. It, aſſigns, I ſay, a true and lively character of God; true, becauſe worthy of him; agreeable to whatever reaſon dictates, and the works of nature ſhew concerning him; aſcribing all conceivable perfections to him in the higheſt degree, and aſſerting all his due rights, and prerogatives; Omniſcient wiſdom, and Almighty power; Infinite benignity and beneficency toward his creatures; Supreme majeſty and authority over all; Having made all things with eſpecial regard to man: and upholding them with the ſame gracious reſpect; and governing them with a particular care and providence; ſearching all the thoughts, and ordering all the actions of men to a general (and ultimate) good end: This is the firſt excellency of our Religion, which is great both as to the object and influence thereof. The ignorance of God's nature, or miſconceptions about him, what miſchief and what ſuperſtitions do they not produce in the worſhip of God? Chriſtian Religion repreſents him in his eſſence One, perfectly ſimple, ſpiritual, omnipreſent, eternal, impaſſible and immutable; ſelf-ſufficient and infinitely happy: in his interiour diſpoſition of will and in all his purpoſes abſolutely free, pure and holy; juſt, faithfull and conſtant: in all his dealings with rational creatures, as very carefull and tender of their good; exceedingly gracious and mercifull toward them; ſo in no wiſe fond or indulgent, but impartially juſt and ſevere againſt all iniquity, obſtinately purſued and perſiſted in; moſt amiable in his goodneſs, moſt terrible in his juſtice, moſt glorious and venerable in all his proceedings: it repreſents him compaſſionate of our evils: placable for our offences; acceſſible and inclinable to help us in our needs. Thus, but with advantage beyond what I can expreſs, it deſcribes God to us, mixing nothing unworthy or miſ-becoming him (as other religions and doctrines may be obſerved to do) adding nothing repugnant to what natural light diſcerns or approves, but ſhewing ſomething beſide and beyond what it can diſcover; concerning his incomprehenſible nature and manner of ſubſiſtence; his unſearchable counſels of wiſdom; his admirable ways of providence; whereby he he hath deſigned to commend his goodneſs and glorifie his juſtice to us: which kind of truths (exceeding the reach of humane invention and capacity) as it becomes God, (ſo far tranſcending us in wiſdom and knowledge) to reveal them, ſo they ſo wonderfully ſuiting to the perfections of God otherwiſe diſcernible by us, do argue the divinity of the doctrine that acquaints us with them. That God ſhould ſend his ſon out of his boſom to partake our nature, and appear in our fleſh; to manifeſt his will unto us; to ſet before us an exact pattern of holy life (the moſt difficult parts eſpecially thereof, humility and patience) by his obedience and ſuffering to expiate our ſin and reconcile God to mankind, is a myſtery indeed and depth of goodneſs, which our reaſon cannot fathom, which we can better admire than underſtand; but neither can any reaſon contradict or diſprove it: nothing can be incredible to us concerning that immenſe goodneſs; whoſe common care of us even in matters of ordinary providence is ſo wonderfull and unaccomptable that the conſideration thereof made Job and the Pſalmiſt thus exclaim: What is man, that thou ſhouldeſt magnify him, and that thou ſhouldeſt ſet thy heart upon him? (Job 7. 17.) Lord, what is man, that thou takeſt knowledge of him? or the ſon of man, that thou makeſt accompt of him? (Pſal. 144. 3. Pſal. 8. 4.)

2. This doctrine alſo informs us concerning our ſelves, and the ſtate of our ſouls: concerning the nobleneſs of our extraction and the dignity of our nature, derived from God and reſembling him; how we fell from our original felicity, and laps'd into this wretched blindneſs, errour, and diſorder of ſoul, into this ſtate of frailty, ſorrow, and miſery, by our diſtruct and diſobedience to God; how being thus eſtranged from God and expoſed to his wrathful diſpleaſure we may recover again his love and favour; and may by returning to God and complying with his will be reinſtated in a happy condition, more happy far than that, from which we fell. That our ſouls are immortal (a point, which the wiſeſt men have ſo much diſputed about, and doubted of; and in the certain deciſion of which they would have been ſo much ſatisfied) and what its ſtate ſhall be after its ſeparation from this body, ſuted to its demeanour and demerits in this life; what a judgment and trial all our actions (even our moſt ſecret thoughts, and words) muſt undergo after this life; theſe ſo important truths, ſo uſefull for the ſatisfaction of our minds and the direction of our lives; ſo conducible to the clearing of our notions, even concerning nature and the courſe of things, in this world; this doctrine plainly ſhews us; and is it not in that reſpect worthy to come from God, who alone could teach and ſatisfy us in theſe things?

3. As for that rule of life it preſcribes us, nothing can be more exactly agreeable to our reaſon, more perfective of our nature; more conducible either to the publick good, or to our private content. What can be more juſt and reaſonable, than all thoſe duties of piety, which it requires? than higheſt eſteem and honour of him which is moſt excellent, moſt hearty love and affection to him, who is in himſelf moſt good, toward us moſt beneficent; moſt awfull fear of him, who is ſo powerfull, ſo pure, ſo juſt and ſevere; gratitude to him, from whom we have received our being, and all our good things; truſt and hope in him, who can do what he will, and will do what ever he hath promiſed; and what ever in reaſon we can expect from his goodneſs; all obedience and obſervance of him, whoſe children and ſervants, and ſubjects we are born? can there be a greater privilege, than liberty of acceſs to him in our needs, who is alone able to ſupply them; can we deſire upon eaſier terms to receive benefits, than by acknowledging our wants and asking for them? Is there a more equal or favourable kind of ſatisfaction for our offences, than confeſſion, and repenting of them? is it not fit we ſhould endeavour to promote his glory, who hath been ſo carefull of ours? the practice of ſuch a piety cannot but produce excellent fruits, a joyfull peace of conſcience, a comfortable hope; a freedom from all ſuperſtitious terrours and affrightments; and therefore is not our obligation to theſe duties moſt reaſonable? And for our behaviour toward each other, what better directions can we have, than thoſe which our Goſpel affords us: that we cordially love one another, earneſtly deſire each others good, pity all the evils of our brethren, be ready to afford them all the help, and comfort we can: not limiting Gal. 6. 10. this our charity, but extending it to all, in imitation of God's boundleſs Mat. 6. 44. beneficence. That we ſhould mutually bear infirmities; and pardon all injuries done us, not rendring evil for evil; but requiting evil with good: that we be juſt and honeſt in all our dealings; obſervant of all duties concerning our relations; diligent in our callings; peaceable and quiet in our ſtations; reſpective and obedient to our ſuperiours; meek and gentle, and courteous in our behaviour, toward all men: rooting out all malice, wrath, envy, ſtrife, animoſity, ill ſuſpicion out of our hearts; forbearing to revile, ſlander, detract, or raſhly to cenſure any man: Now what great benefits is it not evident that the practice of ſuch duties would bring forth? what miſchiefs would it prevent? how ſociable and pleaſant and ſecure a life ſhould we lead therein? what innumerable griefs and troubles; fears, and ſuſpicions; diſcompoſures and diſtractions of mind at home; what dangers, tumults, confuſions, and tragedies abroad would it remove? This part therefore of our rule plainly deſerves the impreſſion of divine authority upon it. As for the precepts concerning the management of our ſelves; our own ſouls and bodies; thoſe which oblige us to be humble and modeſt; calm and ſerene; contented and patient; pure and chaſt; ſober and temperate, baniſhing all haughty conceits, and vain opi- 1 Theſ. 4.4. nions concerning our ſelves; regulating our paſſions and reſtraining our appetites; moderating our ſelves in all corporeal enjoyments; poſſeſſing our veſſels in ſanctity and honour; abſtaining from all unlawfull and irregular pleaſures, (baſe in kind, or exceſſive in degree) which may corrupt our minds, or impair our healths, or diſturb our quiet: It prohibits us not the uſe of any creature, whence we may receive any profit or delight, but indulges us a prudent and ſober enjoyment of them all, with ſenſe of God's goodneſs, and thankfulneſs, (1 Tim. 4. 4.) And who ſees not what benefit and convenience doth accrue to us from obeying ſuch commands? Philip. 4. 8. In few words, Whatſoever things are true, whatſoever things are juſt, whatſoever things are decent, whatſoever things are pure, whatſoever things are lovely, whatſoever things are of good report, if there be any vertue, or any praiſe, thoſe things the Chriſtian doctrine injoin us to regard and practiſe? and what other religion I pray, or what philoſophy hath ſo perfectly and clearly, with ſuch conſiſtence, and with ſuch confidence, taught us the like? If any have taught us ſome of them (as 'tis no wonder if they ſhould, ſince all of them are ſo plainly agreeable to good reaſon) yet could none preſs them with ſuch effectual inducements, nor enforce the practice of them upon ſo true, and neceſſary grounds. Some philoſophies have highly commended vertue, and vehemently exhorted thereto; but the ends are mean, which they aim at; the grounds very weak, from which they argue: preſent ſatisfaction and tranquility of mind; ſafety, quiet, convenience, and pleaſure of this life; can they perſuade men eaſily that theſe are ſufficient inducements ſo carefully and painfully to follow vertue? doth that thing deſerve ſuch mighty elogies, which hath no greater rewards, or benefits, than thoſe, attending it? No ſurely; He that tells us, by doing theſe things, we ſhall imitate the higheſt goodneſs; we ſhall honour God and pleaſe him; we ſhall perform a duty of gratitude to our great benefactour; we ſhall obtain the love and favour of God; we ſhall avoid his wrath and diſpleaſure; we ſhall acquire not only comfort and peace of conſcience here, but an everlaſting crown of joy and bliſs hereafter; he propoundeth ends infinitely more noble, he uſeth arguments incomparably moſt efficacious and perſuaſive to the practice of vertue. No philoſophy in any meaſure repreſents vertue ſo truly upon all accompts eſtimable and eligible as this; none can diſcover the excellent fruits that grow upon it.

4. Neither doth this religion only teach and perſuade us to ſo excelcellent a way of life, but (what no other law or doctrine pretends to) it ſhews us the means, it affordeth us help, and ability to practiſe it (without which, ſuch is the frailty of our nature, experience ſhews, that all inſtruction or exhortation whatever would ſignify little;) 'tis no dead letter but hath a quickning ſpirit accompanying it; it ſounds not only through the ear, but impreſſes it ſelf upon the heart: If our mind be doubtfull or dark, it directs us to a ſure oracle, where we may receive certain counſel and information: if our paſſions be turbulent, and our appetites outragious; if temptation overbear us, it leadeth us thither, whence we may procure ſtrength to reſiſt and ſubdue them. This doctrine (laſtly) fully ſatisfies us about that inquiry, which hath ſo much perplexed all men, and with ſo much final irreſolution hath exerciſed philoſophers, wherein mans happineſs conſiſts, and what the means are to attain to it: that it doth not conſiſt in any one of theſe tranſitory things, nor in a confluence of them all; but in the favour of God, and enjoyment of him, and in the bleſſings flowing thence; which happineſs only by a ſincere and conſtant obedience to God's Commandments; a practice of that vertue and piety (in moſt part before ſpecified) is obtainable. Such is the tenour of the Chriſtian doctrine: theſe things it diſcovers and teaches, not with fine methods of artificial eloquence and ſubtilty, πειθοῖς ἀνθρωπίνης σοφίας λόγοις, the perſuaſive words of humane wiſdom, but with a majeſtick ſimplicity, confidence and authority, with demonſtration of ſpirit and power: ſuch as becomes the ſoveraign Lord to uſe, when he vouchſafes to declare his mind. I ſhould have interpoſed this very material obſervation, that Chriſtianity requires chiefly and in a manner only a rational and ſpiritual ſervice, not clogg'd with multitude of external rites and obſervances, (thoſe few it injoins are plainly moſt reaſonable, very decent and uſefull, fit to inſtruct us in and excite us to our duty,) which ſhews that this revelation is complete, ſuitable to the moſt adult age, the moſt ripe and improved capacities of man. But I muſt leave this point: And I think, thus much may ſuffice to ſhew, that a doctrine ſo beneficial and ſatisfactory to mankind; ſo exceedingly beautifull and amiable; ſo agreeable to reaſon, and yet ſo much ſurpaſſing it, may well be ſuppoſed to have proceeded from divine authority and revelation: Non vox hominem ſonat; the true tone and air of it ſounds above the voice of man; its looks ſo much reſemble the divine wiſdom and goodneſs, one cannot think it had any other parent.

2 Pet. 1. 16. σεσοφισμένοι μῦθοι
1 Cor. 2. 4.

To theſe abſtracted conſiderations I add (which is the laſt ſtep of our diſcourſe,) Laſtly, that de facto, in very deed, God hath aſſerted and atteſted to the Chriſtian doctrine: God is himſelf inviſible and indiſcernible to our ſenſes; neither could we endure the luſtre and glory of his immediate preſence; it muſt be therefore by works ſupernatural and extraordinary (ſuch as no creature can effect or counterfeit) that he muſt (if ever aſſuredly) ſignify his mind and purpoſe to us: and of ſuch there is no kind of atteſtation needfull or (perhaps) poſſible, which God hath not afforded to this doctrine. He had by many ſeveral prophecies, in different times, long before præſignified,that he would make ſuch a revelation to mankind, to be diſpenſed by a perſon, extraordinarily qualified, and eſpecially to be favoured by himſelf; whom therefore the Jewiſh nation did with much deſire expect: to which prophecy,as no other hath appeared that can pretend to agree, ſo this is very congruous. And this is one way moſt proper to God of atteſting his mind; becauſe it cannot be any wiſe counterfeited, it being only in God's power to foretell ſuch future events. Another way is by expreſs voices and apparitions from heaven; and by theſe God declared the ſame at ſeveral fit ſeaſons: To St. John the Baptiſt (that moſt juſt and holy perſon, ſo taken and acknowledged by all, even by his enemies that murthered him) when Jeſus was baptized; To St. Peter and St. John, and St. James, three moſt credible witneſſes, if any can be, concerning matter of fact: and again, before the multitude, a little before his death; To St. Paul, a perſon alſo in all reſpects credible, and in moſt remarkable circumſtances; and ſuch atteſtations as theſe it is not likely God would ſuffer to be given to falſhood or impoſture; if any creature ſhould be ſo daring as to endeavour it, we cannot reaſonably deem, that God would permit his name and authority (in ſo direct a manner) to be abuſed.

Matt. 3.
Matt. 17. 5, &c. Luk. 9.
2 Pet. 1. 16, &c.
Joh. 12. 28.

3. But farther; to thwart the courſe of nature, and act againſt its eſtabliſhed laws, can only belong to him, who is Lord of nature, who made it and upholds it and governs it by a perpetual decree: and this in favour and countenance to this doctrine hath God performed not once, but often; in many places; through a long courſe of time; in ſeveral ways; by many inſtruments; moſt openly and viſibly: Numerous were ſuch ſupernatural works performed by the principal author of this doctrine, our Lord himſelf; many of them ſo publick and palpable, that they convinced many of the ſpectatours; and them not only indifferent and ingenuous people, but thoſe who were moſt unwilling to be convinced and aſhamed,or afraid to acknowledge their conviction: Many (ſaith St. John) believed on him,beholding the miracles that he did: Nicodemus came ſecretly to him, and confeſſed thus: We know that thou haſt come a teacher from God; for no man can do theſe miracles which thou doeſt, except God be with him: Again 'tis ſaid: Many of the people believed in him, ſaying; When Chriſt comes, will he do more miracles than this man hath done? Alſo of the rulers, many believed on him; but becauſe of the Phariſees they did not confeſs it, leſt they ſhould be put out of the Synagogue: What ſhall we do (ſaith the chief Prieſts and Phariſees) for this man doth many wonders? if we thus let him alone, all men will believe on him. St. Peter thus confidently appeals to the Jewiſh nation: Ye men of Iſrael, hear theſe words; Jeſus of Nazareth, a man approved (or demonſtrated) by, or from, God among you by miracles, and wonders, and ſigns, which God did by him in the midſt of you, as you your ſelves know. So notorious were many of our Saviour's miracles, that his worſt adverſaries could not but acknowledge them: And of theſe the moſt ſignal, his reſurrection, was ſuch, that no evaſion ſeems deviſable to withſtand either its truth,as to the fact; or its force to confirm our purpoſe, (that God did atteſt to this doctrine,) by it indeed God did (as St. Paul ſpeaks) πίϛιν παρέχειν πᾶσι, yield an argument moſt perſuaſive to all; that what our Saviour taught (particularly concerning the immortality of our ſouls, the reſurrection of our bodies, and the judgment to come) is moſt certainly true. That our Saviour really died, all the world could teſtifie (no death was ever more ſolemn, or remarkable;) that he riſe again, was atteſted not by one or two, but by many perſons, (thoſe moſt familiarly acquainted with him) who did not ſee him once,in paſſing, at

Jer. 5. 22.
Heb. 2. 4.
Ὅσα, Joh. 10. 41.
Joh. 2. 23.
Joh. 3. 2.
Joh. 7. 31.
Joh. 12. 42.
Joh. 11. 47.
Act. 2. 22.
Act. 17. 31. Rom. 1. 4. 1 Pet. 1. 3.
Vid. Act. 13. 31, &c. Act. 1.

1 Cor. 15. 6.
Matt. 28 7.
Luk. 1. 2.

at a diſtance, but often, for a good time, (forty days together) converſed with him, (above five hundred of ſuch perſons at once did ſee him, as St. Paul tells us,) ſo that they could not be deceived themſelves therein, being αὐτόπται, and αὐτήκοοι τοῦ λόγου; perfectly informed concerning the matter as eyes and ears could make them: Not having followed cunningly-deviſed fables, did we acquaint you with the power and preſence of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but being ἐπόπται τῆς ἐκείνου μεγαλειότητος, having a full view of his majeſty: and, what we heard our ſelves; what we did ſee with our eyes; what our hands did feel of the word of life: ſuch as to their ability of teſtifying the truth, was theſe men's teſtimony: and concerning the fidelity and honeſty of theſe witneſſes, that they ſhould not either in this caſe (or concerning other actions of Chriſt, which they atteſted to) wilfully deceive others, there be preſumptions as great as can be: They were men that preached all goodneſs and ſincerity to others; and in other things irreprovably practiſed them; they could have no deſign imaginable upon any profit, or honour, or advantage whatever to themſelves; (they refuſed all; they willingly underwent all afflictions, and diſgraces for the ſake of this very teſtimony; bearing the Croſs was the officium they pretended to undertake; and the beneficium too they did promiſe themſelves to enjoy in this world.) Peace of conſcience, and hope of future reward was plainly all the ſupport they had, neither of which they could have enjoyed or expected, in the maintenance of a lye; perſecution from men, and damnation from God they muſt be ſure of, if conſcious of ſo villainous a deſign, to abuſe the world with a tale; neither were they downright mad-men or fools (as they muſt have been if they could have believed themſelves, or thought to perſuade others ſuch ſtories, had they been falſe) their excellent Writings ſhew the contrary, and the prodigious efficacy their endeavours found: ſo unanimous a conſent, ſo clear a confidence, ſo firm reſolution, ſo invincible conſtancy and patience, nothing but truth it ſelf and a good conſcience could inſpire men with: 'Tis poſſible in matter of ſpeculation and ſubtilty men upon weak grounds might be deſperately pertinacious; but in matter of fact to be ſo, none in ſuch circumſtances, and to ſuch purpoſes could be ſo baſely ſtupid; no ſuch men ſurely: No matter of fact ever had, nor could have in any reſpect a ſtronger atteſtation: to doubt or diſtruſt it were to invalidate all proof by teſtimony; (upon which yet all adminiſtration of juſtice, all commerce and tranſaction of humane affairs doth in a manner ſubſiſt and depend,) it were to embrace the vanity of the moſt impudently pertinacious Scepticks: and admitting the truth of their teſtimony (as if we be reaſonable and ingenuous we muſt) to believe that God ſhould do ſuch works, or ſhould permit them to be done (ſhould lend his ſoveraign power and interpoſe an extraordinary hand) for procuring credit to a falſhood; that he ſhould ſo far contribute to men's deluſion in matters of this nature, concerning his own honour and men's ſalvation, is a conceit as blaſphemous, and diſhonourable to God, as derogatory to his attributes of Wiſdom, Juſtice, and Goodneſs, as can be. This kind of atteſtation did God yield not only to the Perſon of our Lord, but to his diſciples and followers for a long time after; as by the ſame authentick teſtimonies doth appear; yea it continued for ſome ages, ſo long as any ſuch extraordinary means were needfull or convenient for conviction of the world; as by many expreſs paſſages in Tertullian, Juſtin Martyr, Origen, Cyprian, and other ancient Writers might be ſhewed. I ſhall only add one kind of divine confirmation more; which was that of an extraordinary Providence attending this doctrine in the conveyance and propagation thereof: That by the miniſtery of a few mean, poor, unlearned and ſimple

2 Pet. 1. 16.
1 Joh. 1. 1.

Butler's Anal. Part 2 ch 7 men, without any outward circumſtances commending them to men's regard; without any aſſiſtance of power; any ſubtilty of wit; any trains of policy; any eloquence of ſpeech; any external advantage diſcernible; yea againſt all theſe; againſt the utmoſt endeavours of all the force in the world; all politick devices; all cruel perſecutions; againſt all prejudices of education, publick law, inveterate cuſtom; againſt moſt ſubtle, and eloquent adverſaries, it ſhould in a ſhort time ſo vaſtly prevail, ſo that within a while all the power, and wit, and eloquence of man did ſubmit unto it and ſerve under it; is an argument that God did interpoſe his almighty hand; no leſs power could effect ſo unaccountable a charge; it ſeems no leſs a miracle in matters of this nature (a moral or political miracle I may call it) than to blow up a great Oak with one's breath, or remove a Mountain with a word ſpeaking would be a miracle in nature.

I might adjoin, that this doctrine being ſo much directed againſt, ſo vigorouſly impugning the domination and deluſion of wicked ſpirits, (being ſo prejudicial and deſtructive to the intereſt of hell) all the malice, wit, and power of the devil we may preſume employed againſt it; and ſuch potent combinations of mundane and infernal force to withſtand, ſubdue, and overthrow, cannot juſtly or reaſonably be aſcribed to any other power, than that of heaven. The proceeding alſo in ſo meek and quiet a way, without any tumult or terrour, not rudely forcing men's outward complyance, but ſweetly drawing their hearts into the love and approbation of this doctrine, ſo different from the courſe of humane proceeding, ſo becoming the divine goodneſs, doth well conſent and conferr to the efficacy of this diſcourſe. But I cannot inſiſt longer on theſe things; yet think I may well upon all theſe premiſes (though very ſlightly and curſorily handled) conclude, that the Chriſtian Doctrine did proceed from God.

I ſhall briefly touch the laſt principle: That there be proper and ſufficient means, by which we may diſcern the genuine doctrines and dictates of Chriſtianity. Indeed if there were not ſuch, our diſcourſe hitherto uſed would be all vain, having no certain ſcope or ſubject; to no purpoſe had God diſpenſed a revelation for the direction and benefit of mankind, if he had not withall provided means of apprehending it with a competent certainty, ſuch at leaſt as might ſuffice to engage men honeſt and moderately wiſe upon the practice of all neceſſary duties preſcribed (for enough to ſatisfy cavilling ſpirits, that are poſſeſſed with prejudices, or proceed upon deſign, or delight in doubt and diſpute, whoſe buſineſs and intereſt, (or humour) it may be to confound things, did not need, perhaps could not be, provided: there have been men that have queſtioned what the moſt evident reaſon, the moſt common ſenſe and experience ſhews; and ſuch ſcepticks, or ſuch politicks no means will ſerve to ſatisfy their minds, at leaſt to ſtop their mouths, but) in reality there be ſeveral means, by God's wiſe providence afforded, whereby we may diſcern Chriſtian truth, ſome more convenient and ſecure, all in their kind proper and good. For tranſmitting to poſterity any particular doctrine, no man can doubt, but the moſt ſure way is its being commended to writing by the authors and inventours thereof (thoſe upon whoſe authority it doth rely) as if Pythagoras, or Socrates, or Zeno their writings were extant, by them we ſhould be beſt aſſured, what their philoſophies were: and no man will diſpute whether that be genuine Peripateticiſm which is plainly read in the Writings of Ariſtotle the father of that Sect; though even his unskilfull expoſitors ſhould miſtake, or his prejudiced adverſaries ſhould pervert or calumniate his meaning. They that write are wont with moſt care and deliberation (and conſequently with moſt perſpicuity and exactneſs) to expreſs their minds: and litera ſcripta manet: letters are ſubject to leaſt variation: memories are frail, fancies are buſie, but writings are eaſily preſerved without conſiderable alteration. The next moſt ſure way of conſerving ſuch doctrines, is the writings of the next diſciples, that immediately received them from the authors, or before they had paſſed through many hands, and commended them to writing: ſo what Socrates (for inſtance) did teach, the writings of Plato and Xenophon can with a very good degree of certainty acquaint us. The next is the writings of men (ſtudious and learned in thoſe matters) after larger diſtances of time; ſo as we may be informed concerning Stoiciſm by the writings of Cicero, of Epictetus, of Seneca; the which way is more imperfect; every writer being apt to miſapprehend and miſrepreſent ſomething; eſpecially all affecting to do ſomewhat more than tranſcribe what they find in former authors to comment and deſcant upon; to adorn and ſet out; to confirm or confute the doctrine they relate, in order thereto repreſenting it with advantage to their purpoſe. The laſt way, is by continued tradition, by oral inſtruction, ſucceſſively from time to time; which is of all ways moſt liable to defect and corruption: for the teacher may unaptly expreſs his meaning, and the hearer may not rightly underſtand him; the memory of both may in ſome material thing faulter: Men love to be curious in their ſpeech; to vary in expreſſion, to make explications, to draw conſequences, to mix their own conceits and inventions, to ſhew the acuteneſs of their wit, and the fruitfulneſs of their fancy; to diſplay all their faculties of ratiocination and eloquence; eſpecially they are apt to accommodate doctrines to their own prejudices, inclinations, and deſigns: whence errour and difference may inſenſibly creep through this conduit; and the farther ſuch tradition departs from the original ſpring, the more ſubject it is to contract ſuch alterations and impurities. Every doctrine thus propagated is like a ſtream; at the head 'tis ſmall and narrow, clear and pure; proceeding on, it grows larger and fouler: ſo tradition ſwells, by taking in what oblique channels of private fancy and pragmatical invention diſcharge into it; and by receiving tincture from particular inclination, or politick deſign it grows muddy and feculent. We have all theſe ways afforded us, and for confirmation and diſtinction of our doctrine may uſe them all: in the principal doctrines (ſuch as we mentioned) they all conſpire, and therefore there can be no reaſon to doubt, that they are pure and genuine: But in reaſon the beſt and ſureſt means of knowing what our Saviour and his Diſciples taught, are the Writings of his Diſciples, (perſons, beſides their advantage of immediately learning from our Saviour's mouth, extraordinarily aſſiſted by God in their miniſteries and inſtructions) of whoſe Writings many have by God's good providence been preſerved to our times; being ſuch as no man hath reaſon to queſtion, that they came from them (no more than concerning the moſt undoubted Writings of any author; wherein they aim at nothing elſe, but to declare the doctrine of Chriſtianity and inculcate the practice thereof, in the moſt ſimple, plain, and familiar manner; plainly agreeing with each other in the main drift and deſign of their diſcourſes; ſo that we may juſtly preſume that all important doctrines of Chriſtianity are in them fully delivered; and that whatever we find in them perſpicuouſly expreſſed we are obliged to take for ſuch. To the ſame purpoſes we may uſe the Writings of the Chriſtians of the firſt ages; who with care committed to writing what they had learned from the mouths of the Apoſtles, or their ſucceſſours; for in ſo ſmall diſtance of time 'tis not likely any conſiderable variation ſhould intercurr; neither would ſuch men, living in times of perſecution, and ſuffering for conſcience-ſake, ſo free from all deſigns of avarice or ambition, be ſo ready to alter, or adulterate the doctrine they received: and ſuppoſing the Writings of the Apoſtles were wanting, even theirs would yield us a competent knowledge of the Chriſtian doctrine; neither were their monuments alſo loſt, ſhould we be quite deſtitute of means, from the loweſt and lateſt, whether writings or traditions of Chriſtianity, to diſcover its principal and fundamental doctrines: for diſcreetly parting off ſome excreſcencies, diſcernible enough to have proceeded from humane invention; what ſophiſtical curioſity hath introduced (nice poſitions and queſtions about the right application of terms of art) what politick deſign hath added (wherein ſome ſorts of men are, we may plainly ſee, privately concerned) what plainly reliſhes of thoſe ages, wherein ignorance and ſuperſtitious dotage did ſo generally prevail; what is inconſiſtent with the moſt generally acknowledged principles of our Religion; refining I ſay with ſome ſerious conſideration, the pure ore from ſuch droſs, we may not difficultly perceive, even by the uſe of the moſt inferiour means allowed us, what the true principles of Chriſtianity are. But ſince God hath vouchſafed us ſo various helps, we may in their due order, according to our capacity, apply them all; comparing preſent Traditions with ancient Writings, and confirming what we learn from theſe, by the ſupreme and unqueſtionable authority of holy Scripture. But this argument the time will not permit me to proſecute diſtinctly and as it deſerves. Theſe digreſſionary diſcourſes (which yet I thought pertinent to the deſign of our buſineſs, declaring and confirming the grounds of our faith) being thus paſs'd over; I ſhall hereafter cloſely purſue the explication of the Creed: In the mean while craving pardon from your patience, &c.

I Believe in God the Father.

THE Appellation of God not improperly taken (as when it is attributed to creatures, upon ſome reſemblance in nature or office they bear to the ſupreme God) but relating to him, who only truely and properly is ſtyled God, is ſometimes put abſolutely, ſometimes hath a relative appoſition going along with it. Being abſolutely (or ſingly) put, it ſometimes referrs, by way of eminency particularly to the firſt Perſon in the glorious Trinity; as when Chriſt is called the Son of God; and the Holy Ghoſt, the Spirit of God; and when God is put in diſtinction from the other Perſons: (when for inſtance it is ſaid: That they may know thee the only true God, and whom thou haſt ſent, Jeſus Chriſt: Bleſſed be the God and father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: The word was with God. To ſerve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven: and in that form of bleſſing: The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghoſt be with you all:) but commonly it is to be underſtood for God eſſentially conſidered (according to that divine eſſence common to the three perſons) to whom in that reſpect all the divine attributes agree, and from whom all divine operations (abſolute and ad extra) do jointly proceed. And to this ſenſe or notion we have hitherto ſuppoſed that the name of God might here be applied: for that there is one God, having ſuch eſſential attributes, is the firſt principle and foundation of all religion; which we muſt therefore ſuppoſe, if not directly expreſſed, yet at leaſt ſufficiently implyed in the Creed. And ſuppoſing the word, in part doth imply this ſenſe, the attribute, or title of

Vid. 1 Theſ. 1. 9, 10.
1 Cor. 8. 6.
Eph. 1. 3. 4. 6.
Joh. 17. 3.
2 Cor. 1. 3.
1 Pet. 1. 3.
2 Cor. 13. 14.

of Father, doth in many reſpects, truly and properly belong to God. Being a father denotes cauſality, ſuſtenance, beneficence, governance; eſpecially when theſe operations are attended with particular care and affection; in all which reſpects (ſeverally conſidered or jointly) God may fitly be ſtyled Father: Father of all things being: Father of all intellectual Beings eſpecially: The Father particularly of all men; and among men, chiefly of Good men. He is the Father of all Beings, as the maker and efficient cauſe of them: So is he called in that famous ſentence of Plato's Timæus: Τὸν μὲν οὖν ποιητὴν καὶ πατέρα τοῦδε τοῦ παντὸς εὑρεῖν τε ἔργον, καὶ εὑρόντα εἰς πάντας ἀδύνατον λέγειν. That maker and father of this Univerſe 'tis hard to find out, and having found him 'tis impoſſible to expreſs him, unto all men; and πατέρα πάντων (St. Paul calls him) the father of all things (taking πάντων in the largeſt ſenſe.) To us there is one God, the father, from whom are all things. Neither only as author, but as he by whoſe care and providence all things ſubſiſt and are contained in order; He commanded, and they were created: He hath alſo eſtabliſhed them for ever and ever; he hath made a decree, which ſhall not paſs; upon whom the eyes of all wait, and he giveth them their meat in due ſeaſon, as the Pſalmiſt ſings; and in this reſpect, we often find, even in heathen Poets, the title Pater (Father) abſolutely put to denote God, as the author and diſpoſer of all things.

Plat. p. 1047.
Eph. 4. 6.
1 Cor. 8. 6.
Pſal. 148. 5, 6.
Pſal. 145. 15.

Virg. ——————— Pater ipſe colendi,
Haud facilem eſſe viam doluit.—— Georg. 1.

Hor. Jam ſatis terris nivis atque diræ
Grandinis miſit Pater,——:

And Pater omnipotens is the Periphraſis, by which the wiſeſt of Poets doth frequently uſe to deſign the ſupreme God. But more eſpecially God is called the Father of intellectual Beings: The Father of Spirits: particularly the Angels are (by excellency) called the Sons of God: (Job 1. 6.) There was a day, when the Sons of God came to preſent themſelves before the Lord, and Satan came alſo among them: Job 38. 7. When the morning-ſtars ſang together, and all the Sons of God ſhouted for joy: where, for the Sons of God, the Seventy have ἄγγελοί μου; (though perhaps all God's creatures may there be underſtood, as it were rejoycing and exulting in their Being newly conferr'd on them by God.) And of theſe Beings God more eſpecially is Father, not only for that he did produce them, and upholds them (as all other things) in being, but becauſe they nearer reſemble him in their nature; becauſe he hath a more dear affection unto, a more particular care over them, and becauſe he governs them in a more excellent kind, (by obligations of reaſon, ingenuity, and juſtice,) they alſo being capable to render offices of piety, obedience, and gratitude to him again. [And thus even the Pagan Theologers did conceive God in eſpecial manner the Father of the Gods, (intending ſuch Gods, as were not of men's making, creatures conſecrated by the flattery or fondneſs of men; but of a higher rank, anſwering to our Angels, which they conceived as to approach in excellency of nature, ſo to attend upon God, partaking of his glory and happineſs,) hence Divûm Pater is a common title of God among them: and we have in Plato's Timæus an Oration, which he feigns God made to them, at the Creation, beginning Ζεῦ πάτερ ἡμέτερε Κρονίδη ὕπατε κρειόντων.

O Pater & Rex Jupiter. Hor. Serm. II. 1.

Heb. 12. 9. Numb. 16. 22.
Ezek. 18. 4.

Vid. Pſal. 89. 6. 29. 1.
The Sons of the Mighty: ſome take to be the Angels, בני אלים in heaven.

Ὅτι κοινωνεῖν μόνον ταῦτα πέφυκε τῷ θεῷ τῆς συναναστροφῆς κατὰ τὸν λόγον ἐπιπεπλεγμένα. Epict. Arr. I. 9.

Pag. 1054.

beginning thus: Θεοὶ θεῶν, ὧν ἐγὼ δημιουργὸς, πατήρ τε: O ye principal Gods, of whom I am the Maker and Father; concerning which kind of God's children, he pretends to deduce all he can ſpeak from ancient and original tradition.] But (to come nearer to our particular relation) God is alſo in eſpecial manner the Father of mankind,

Gentis humanæ Pater atque Cuſtos, (as Horace calls him:)

Hor.Carm.I.12.

* Adam was the Son of God; and ſo (at leaſt) we are God's off-ſpring; his hands made and faſhioned us; and his mouth breathed into us the ſpirit of life: † he formed our ſpirit within us: we were made after his image; and naturally reſemble him: he hath aſſigned us the principal and moſt honourable ſtation in this his family of viſible creatures; he hath ſhewed an eſpecial tenderneſs toward us in providing for us all manner of ſuſtenance and accommodation; in educating us * with wholeſome advices and precepts; in bearing with exceeding patience our infirmities and offences; in inflicting moderate chaſtiſements to reduce us to duty and amendment: all his carriage toward mankind argues a paternal regard and affection thereto.

* Omnes ſi ad primam originem revocentur à Diis ſunt. Sen. Ep. 44.
† Zach. 12. 1. Vid. Epict. Arr. I. 3 & 9.
* Pſal. 71. 6.

Farther, in a peculiar notion God is the Father of good men: ſuch relation being built upon higher grounds and conſiderations: The ſeeds of vertue are by his grace ſown in their hearts; that emendation, and perfection of nature is effected by him. They reſemble him in diſpoſition of mind, in purpoſe, in action; which are more perfect and noble reſemblances, than thoſe of nature, (being holy as he is holy; beneficent and mercifull as he is: theſe qualities our Saviour tells us do render or at leaſt declare him our Father; do conſtitute men or argue them to be the Sons of God: Love your enemies, bleſs thoſe that curſe you, do good to thoſe that hate you---That you may be the ſons of your father in heaven: Love your enemies, and do good, and lend, expecting nothing thence, and your reward ſhall be great, and ye ſhall be the ſons of the moſt High.---) To ſuch God bears a paternal affection and compaſſion: Like as a father pitieth his children, ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear him. He deals with them as with his children, in all reſpects; he inſtructs and guides them; he cheriſhes and comforts them; he maintains and protects them: He gently reproves and corrects them: Whom the Lord loveth, he correcteth, even as a father the ſon in whom he delighteth. [Patrium habet Deus adverſus bonos viros animum, & illos fortiter amat: Inter bonos viros ac Deum amicitia eſt, conciliante virtute: amicitiam dico? imò etiam neceſſitudo & ſimilitudo: quoniam quidem bonus ipſe tempore tantùm à Deo differt, diſcipulus ejus, æmulatórque & vera progenies; quem pater ille magnificus, virtutum non lenis exactor, ſicut ſeveri patres, duriùs educat: God (ſaith a Pagan Philoſopher) hath a fatherly mind toward Good men, and mightily loves them:--- Between them and God there is a friendſhip, vertue conciliating it: A friendſhip, ſay I? yea a kindred and reſemblance: For that a good man differs only from God in time (and degree,) being his diſciple and imitator, and his true off-ſpring; whom that magnificent Father, no ſoftly exactor of vertue, as ſevere fathers do, brings up hardly.] And we may obſerve, that God in his proceedings with men (ſuch as he deſigns to contain them by within their duty, and lead them to happineſs) delights to repreſent and commend himſelf under this obliging and endearing relation: he did ſo toward the Iſraelites, Deut. 32. 6. Do ye thus requite the Lord, O fooliſh people, and unwiſe? is not he thy father, that bought thee? hath he not made thee and eſtabliſhed thee? Of the rock that begat thee, thou art unmindfull, and haſt forgotten God that formed thee: So God expoſtulates with

1 Pet. 1. 23.
Bonus vir ſine Deo nemo eſt, Sen. Ep. 41.
Matt. 5. 45.
Luk. 6. 35.
Pſal. 103. 13.
Ὡς υἱοῖς προσφέρεται, Heb. 12. 7.
Prov. 3. 12.
Sen. de Prov. 1. 2.
1 Chron. 29. 10.

with that people; and thus David in their behalf addreſſes himſelf to God:
Bleſſed be thou, Lord God of Iſrael our father, for ever and ever: Thine, O Vid. Exod. 4. 22.
Lord, is the greatneſs, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majeſty, &c. and, I am a father to Iſrael, and Ephraim is my firſt-born: Is Jer. 3. 9, 20.
Ephraim my dear Son? is he a pleaſant child? So God argues with them.
But in the Chriſtian diſpenſation God more ſignally repreſents himſelf in this quality: he treats us not ſo much as a Lord and Maſter, with imperious awfulneſs; but as a friend and a father, with gracious condeſcenſion and allurement of kindneſs: I call you not ſervants: you are my friends, Joh. 15. 14, 15.
if you do what I command you: So that ('tis St. Paul's collection from a precedent diſcourſe) thou art not ſtill a ſervant, but a ſon: Our Saviour Gal. 4. 7.
(ſaith the Author to the Hebrews) was not aſhamed to call them (his diſciples Heb. 2. 11. and followers) brethren. · Go (ſaith our Saviour) to my brethren, and Joh. 20. 17.
ſay to them: I aſcend to my father and your father, and my God and your God: Accordingly all the performances of God toward us and in our behalf are of ſuch a nature, and are ſet out by ſuch terms, which ground and import this relation.

2. That renovation of our nature, and qualifying our ſouls, as the Goſpel requires, is called regeneration, a new creation, a new birth, the begetting a new man within us: We are αὐτοῦ ποίημα (his work or production) being Epheſ. 2. 10.
created in Chriſt Jeſus to good works. Te have been taught----to put on Eph. 4. 21, 24.
the new man that is created according to God (* according to God's image) * Col. 3. 10.
in righteouſneſs and true holineſs: If a man be not born again from above, he Joh. 3. 3. cannot ſee the Kingdom of God: Whoever is begot of God, doth not do ſin. 1 Joh. 3. 9.

1. The reception of a Believer into the privileges and advantages of Gal. 4. 5.
Chriſtianity, is termed * υἱοθεσία, the making of him a Son, adopting Rom. 8. 15.
him into God's family; conferring upon him the title, and the quality Epheſ. 1. 5.
of God's child; the internal diſpoſition of ſpirit, and the liberty of acceſs * Eph. 3. 15. 2. 19.
to God ſuitable to this relation: Whoſoever (ſaith St. John) did receive Joh. 1. 12.
him, he gave to them authority to become the Sons of God (he inveſted them Gal. 3. 26.
in that dignity) even to them who believed in his Name: Te are all the Sons 1 Joh. 3. 1.
of God by faith in Chriſt Jeſus (i. e. by embracing Chriſtianity:) and, *Behold, Rom. 8. 15.
what manner of love the father hath given us, that we ſhould be called* the Sons of God? Te have not received the ſpirit of ſervitude again to fear, Gal. 4. 6.
but ye have received the ſpirit of adoption, by which we cry, O father: (by which in our prayers, with humble affection, according to our Saviour's inſtruction, we ſay, Our father.)

3. That reſurrection after death to a better ſtate of life; entring into glory and happineſs and immortality, is worthily ſtyled παλιγγενεσία, a being generated or born again: whereby they receive from God another Mat. 19. 28.
more excellent life and ſtate of being, more like and conformable to God: They which ſhall be accompted worthy to obtain that world, Luk. 20. 35.
and the reſurrection from the dead----are the Sons of God, being the Sons of the Reſurrection:----We know, that if (or when) he ſhall appear, 1 Joh. 3. 2.
we ſhall be like him. As we have born the image of the earthly (man,) we 1 Cor. 15. 49.
ſhall alſo bear the image of the heavenly. We ſhall be metamorphoſed 2 Cor. 3. 18.
(or transfigured) into the ſame image; ſhall be made partakers of the divine nature. That ſtate of bliſs is therefore ſtyled a portion or inheritance, 2 Pet. 1. 4. allotted to Sons; and conſequent upon that relation: If ſons (ſaith St. Paul) Gal. 4. 7.
then heirs; heirs of God, co-heirs with Chriſt; receiving the reward and promiſe Rom. 8. 17.
of an eternal inheritance: and, ſaith St. Peter, Bleſſed be the God and Col. 3. 24.
Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who according to his abundant mercy hath Heb. 9. 15. 1 Pet. 1. 3, 4. begotten us again unto a lively hope by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead; To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reſerved in heaven for us. I might add, that Chriſtian men become the Sons of God by our Saviour's intervention; by his aſſumption of our nature, and our conformity to his image (as St. Paul ſpeaks,) whereby he becomes the firſt-born among many brethren, (Rom. 8. 29.) God ſent forth his Son, born of a woman, that we might receive the privilege of being made Sons, (Gal. 4. 4, 5.) Heb. 2. 14. In this reſpect our Saviour is πρωτότοκος ἐν πολλοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, (the firſt-born among many brethren,) Rom. 8. 29. Upon ſo many ſeveral ſcores is God our Father; as we are his creatures; (being made, preſerved and maintained by him) as we are intellectual creatures (placed in degree and quality of nature ſo near him;) as we by vertue and goodneſs any-wiſe reſemble him; as we are Chriſtians (adopted into his family renewed by his grace, and deſtinated to a participation of his glory.)

Vid. Forb. p. 52. Now the conſideration and belief of theſe grounds (each one and all of them together) upon which this relation of God to us is founded, hath manifold good uſes, is apt to inform us of, to inforce upon us many neceſſary duties, reſulting from it: It teaches us what reverence and honour and obſervance is due to him; (not from gratitude only and ingenuity, Mal. 1. 6. but in juſtice:) If I be a Father, where is my honour? ſaith God, in Malachy. If we be bound to love and reſpect thoſe, who, under God, have been inſtrumental in producing and maintaining us, how much more to him, who principally hath beſtowed our Being, and all the ſupports, comforts, and conveniences thereof upon us? from whoſe free bounty we derive not only the benefits of this tranſitory life, but the privileges of the future, incomparably better, eternal ſtate: If we neglect our duty, may not God juſtly expoſtulate with us, as with thoſe children of his, Deut. 32. 6, 18. Do ye thus requite the Lord, O fooliſh people and unwiſe: is he not thy father that bought thee? (ὅς ἐκτήσατό σε, who procured and acquired thee to himſelf) hath he not made thee, and eſtabliſhed thee?

It will induce us to humility, if we are God's Sons, have received our being, all our powers and abilities, all our goods and riches from his diſpoſal, what reaſon have we to aſcribe any thing to our ſelves; to be raiſed in conceit, ambitious of praiſe, or reputation upon the ſcore of any ſuch 1 Cor. 4. 7. things? Who made thee to differ? For what haſt thou that thou didſt not receive? and if thou haſt received, why doeſt thou glory, as if thou hadſt not received? It ſhews us, that we are (as Plato often ſpeaks) Θεοῦ κτήματα, God's poſſeſſions, God's riches they are called, Pſal. 104. 24. If he made us, whatever we are, (according to all accompts and capacities; whether ἐκτήσατό σε. Deut. 32. 6. men by his common providence, or good men by his eſpecial grace) he hath the beſt right and title poſſible unto us; he may juſtly make ſuch uſe of us, as he thinks good: We may well be obliged to Glorify God in 1 Cor. 6. 20. our body, and in our ſpirit, which are God's. We have reaſon alſo hence to be content with whatſoever condition God diſpoſeth us unto, or impoſeth upon us; he doth therein juſtly; and if we complain, may we not be Mat. 20. 15. anſwered: Is it not lawfull for me to do what I will with my own? Is it not lawfull? yea, is it not probable, that God will order things for the beſt for the good of his children? will he willingly hurt them? can he deſign their Iſa. 49. 15. miſchief? Can a woman forget her ſucking-child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the ſon of her womb? yea they may forget, yet will not I forget thee. Sooner may the moſt tender parents become unnaturally regardleſs, malicious, and cruel towards their children, than God neglect the good of his off-ſpring. We have reaſon therefore to be ſatisfied with all that befalls us; to be patient in the soreſt afflictions; eſteeming them to come from a paternal hand, inflicted with great affection and compaſſion; deſigned and tending to our good: Thou ſhalt conſider in thy heart, that as a man chaſtneth his ſon, the Lord thy God chaſtneth thee: ſaith God to the Deut. 8. 5. Iſraelites. We have had fathers of our fleſh, which corrected us, and we Heb. 12. 9, 10. gave them reverence; ſhall we not much rather be in ſubjection unto the father of ſpirits and live? For they verily for a few days chaſtned us after their own pleaſure, but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs. What ſweeter comfort can there be, than to know that the moſt diſtaſtfull and croſs accidents befalling us do conduce to our profit; ſhall prove moſt beneficial to us? This conſideration alſo ſerves to cheriſh our faith, and raiſe our hope, and quicken our devotion: Whom ſhall we confide in, if not in our father? from whom can we expect good, if not from him, who hath given us already ſo much, even all we have? if we in our need with due reverence and ſubmiſſion requeſt help from him, can ſuch a father refuſe us? No: What man is there of us, that if his ſon ask him Matt. 7. 9, 10, bread, will give him a ſtone? or if he ask fiſh, will give him a ſerpent? 11. If we then who are evil know how to give good gifts unto our children; how much more ſhall your father who is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?

This conſideration alſo may beget in us a due valuation of our ſelves; and thereby raiſe us from baſe and unworthy practices; excite and encourage us to worthy deſigns and attempts: Even natural light dictates to us the uſe of this conſideration, and heathen Philoſophers much apply it: " If any one (ſaith Epictetus) could duely be affected with this opi- Epict. diſſert. " nion that we are all originally deſcended from God, and that God is the I. 3. " father both of men and Gods, he would not, I ſuppoſe, conceive any " thing ignoble or mean concerning himſelf: if Cæſar ſhould adopt thee, " none could endure thy ſuperciliouſneſs: and if thou knoweſt, that thou " art God's Son, will it not elevate thee? ſo the Philoſopher. Shall we that are ſo nobly born, of ſo illuſtrious an extraction, ſo far debaſe our ſelves, as to regard and purſue trivial, abject, diſhonourable things? ſhall we not be aſhamed of ſuch a contemptible degeneracy? ſhall we not be afraid, for ſuch unworthineſs to be degraded, rejected, and diſinherited by our holy Father? who can no wiſe brook that ſuch blots and diſhonours ſhould ſtick to his lineage, that ſuch diſorders and misbehaviour ſhould be committed in his family, that we ſhould ſo deform his image impreſſed upon us. Every branch that beareth not good fruit, he loppeth Joh. 15. 2, 6. it from his ſtock, and caſteth it away (as our Saviour tells us.) 'Tis proper for children to reſemble their father, in their countenance, in their temper, in their doings: If ye were Abraham's children (ſo our Saviour ar- Joh 8. 39, 44. gues) ye would do the works of Abraham: and, Ye are of your father the Devil, becauſe ye perform the luſts of your father; (becauſe ye reſemble him in his murderous and treacherous diſpoſition.) So if we pretend to be the children of God, we muſt (according to St. Paul's exhortation) imi- Epheſ. 5. 1. tate him as dear children: we muſt be holy, and pure, juſt, beneficent, 1 Pet. 1. 14, 15. mercifull, perfect as he is; otherwiſe we fall from this high dignity, we Mat. 5. 45, 48. Luk. 6. 35, 36. forfeit this excellent privilege of being thus related to God; we become Joh. 1. 3. 3. 17. aliens and exiles, and enemies inſtead of ſons and friends unto him.

Conſidering alſo this relation will prompt us how we ſhould be affected and how behave our ſelves towards all God's creatures: if God be the father of all things, they are in ſome ſort all our brethren: ſhall we then abuſe, trample upon or tyrannize over any of them? will God permit it, doth it become us to do ſo? If we be all branches ſprouting from one Vid. Epict. root; ſtreams iſſuing from one common ſource of divine beneficence, mem- I. 9. diſſert. bers of one family, we are obliged to univerſal good-will and charity; to be kind and compaſſionate; to be helpfull and beneficial ſo far as our capacity reacheth; to endeavour, as we may, to preſerve the order and promote the welfare of the world; and all things in it. Eſpecially toward thoſe beings, who according to a more proper and excellent ſenſe are entitled the ſons of this our common father; toward beings intellectual, we hence learn our reſpective duties, of love and reſpect toward thoſe elder brethren of ours, the angels (the bleſſed and holy ones I mean, ſuch as have not degenerated from their nature and apoſtatized from their duty toward God) of charity and good will to each other; which if we do not maintain, let us conſider we are undutifull and unkind to God firſt, and then to our ſelves; both his relations and our own we hate and harm, his children and our brethren, by hating or harming any man whatever, eſpecially any good man, any Chriſtian brother, who by ſo many other more eſpecially bands is ſtraitly tied unto us, upon ſo many better grounds doth ſtand related both to God and us.

But let thus much ſuffice for this attribute or title of God, underſtood in this manner, as applicable to God eſſentially conſidered, which notion we ſee how true and uſefull it is. But that God is alſo here (and that according to the principal intention of the words) to be underſtood ſo as by way of eminency to ſignify the firſt perſon in the bleſſed Trinity, and that the Title or Appoſition Father doth reſpect eſpecially him, who according to a more proper and excellent manner * is the Son of God, our Lord Chriſt Jeſus, may upon divers accompts appear. 1ſt. Becauſe it follows, and in Jeſus Chriſt his Son: God is to be taken in that notion according to which Chriſt is his Son: the Father preceeding relates to the Son following. 2. Becauſe this Creed appears (according to our former diſcourſes) enlarged upon the foundation of the firſt moſt ſimple confeſſions, uſed in baptiſm, and thoſe derived from the form preſcribed by our Saviour, of baptizing in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt: wherefore the father here is to be interpreted, according to that form. 3. The ancient Chriſtians (from whom we received the words and may beſt underſtand the ſenſe) did thus generally take and expound them. Now that God is the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the univerſal tenour of the Goſpel ſpeaketh, and it is the chief doctrine thereof: this God from hea-
Joh. 10. 38. ven by a vocal atteſtation declared (this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed;) our Saviour profeſſed; the Apoſtles preached; the miracles (performed by our Saviour) were intended to confirm. In this God manifeſted his tranſcendent love and mercy and goodneſs to mankind, that
Joh. 3. 16. he gave his only begotten Son, that no believer in him ſhould periſh, but have everlaſting life;
Rom. 8. 32. that he did not ſpare his own Son, but delivered him up for us all: His own Son, ἴδιος υἱὸς, his peculiar Son, in a more proper and peculiar manner ſo: his μονογενὴς, only begotten Son (in a reſpect, according to which no other can pretend to that relation;) his ἀγαπητὸς his darling, (whom he loves with a ſuperlative dearneſs.) So that God is the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and that it is a fundamental point of our religion and belief; and that it is mainly deſigned here, doth ſufficiently appear. Now the grounds of this paternity are ſeveral: his temporal
Luk. 1. 35. generation by the Spirit and Power of God. The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the moſt High ſhall overſhadow thee: therefore that Holy thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God.
Gal. 4. 4. When the fulneſs of time came, God ſent forth his Son born of a woman. His Act. 13. 32, 33. reſtoral from death to life: we preach the promiſe made to your fathers, that God hath fulfilled it to us their children, raiſing up Jeſus; according alſo to what is written in the ſecond Pſalm, Thou art my Son this day have
Joh. 1. 50. I begotten thee. Whence he is called πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, the firſt-born

* Κατὰ τίνα σχέσιν ὑψηλοτέραν, (as Nazianzen ſpeaks) Orat. 37.

born from the dead: His deſignation of him to ſoveraign power and authority: Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Iſrael (was Nathanael's confeſſion) whom God appointed (or made) heir of all; putting all things under his feet. Father (our Saviour prays) glorify thy Son, as thou haſt given him power over all fleſh: All power is given me in heaven and upon earth. But the moſt eminent ground of this paternity (and moſt proper to this place) is that eternal generation, whereby God the Father did in the beginning, before all time imaginable or poſſible (in a manner unconceivable and ineffable) communicate his own divine eſſence to God the Son: his eſſence, not ſpecifically the ſame (ſuch as men impart, when they beget a Son in their own likeneſs) but the ſame individually; begetting him perfectly like himſelf, without any ſo much as accidental diſſimilitude or diſparity; (by an unconceivable irradiation of his glory, and impreſſion of his ſubſtance, as the Author to the Hebrews ſpeaks.)

Col. 2. 18.
Heb. 1. 2.
Compare Joh. 17. 1, 2. vid. Joh. 5. 25, &c.
Matt. 28. 18.
Epheſ. 1. 22.
Heb. 1. 6.

Heb. 1. 3.
Col. 1. 15.
ὃς ἐστὶν εἰκὼν τοῦ θεοῦ τοῦ ἀοράτου, πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως.

Which doctrine (though full of deep myſtery, and tranſcending the capacity of our underſtanding to comprehend) as we are obliged, becauſe it hath been God's good pleaſure to reveal it unto us, with a firm faith and humble adoration to embrace, ſo it is of great conſequence and (even practical) uſe; ſerving to illuſtrate the wonderfull grace of God in the diſpenſation Evangelical, and thereby to beget ſuitable gratitude in us; encouragement and enforcement to our duty, ſtrong faith and hope in God; as alſo to direct and order our devotion toward him.

But theſe conſiderations (with the farther probation of this great truth againſt ſome, who have dared to oppoſe it) I ſhall referr to that Article, in which we moſt expreſſly confeſs, that Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God, and conſequently that God is his Father. And therefore proceed to the next word, Omne nomen dictum de Deo reſpectu creaturæ indicat eſſentiam, adeóque prædicatur de tribus perſonis ſimul, exceptis quæ pertinent ad unionem ſeu diſpenſationem, id eſt ad incarnationem ſive aſſumptam carnem. Forb. p. 24.

Almighty.

THough all the divine perfections (being intrinſecal unto and identified with the divine nature or eſſence) do really and equally belong to each Perſon of the Bleſſed Trinity, yet are eminently in ſome reſpect attributed to the Father, as the firſt Perſon in order of nature, the original fountain and root of the Deity: likewiſe although all divine operations ad extra (as proceeding from the ſame divine will and power) do proceed from all the three Perſons, conſpiring in them, yet are ſome κατ' οἰκονομίαν (by way of myſterious diſpenſation) appropriated to one, ſome to another: as Creation and Dilection to the Father; Reconciliation and Redemption to the Son; Illumination and Sanctification to the Holy Ghoſt. Omnipotency therefore is here aſcribed to God the Father not excluſively, but eminently, (for the Son and the Holy Ghoſt by participation of the divine nature from the Father are alſo omnipotent.) And God the Father is called the Maker of heaven and earth; although by the Son (or eternal Word) alſo all things were made, and without him was made nothing that was made; and all things were created by him, both things in heaven and things in earth, and things upon earth; both things viſible and things inviſible: and the Spirit of God is ſaid to have garniſhed the heavens, (Job 26. 13.) and, By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the hoaſt of them by the ſpirit of his mouth, Pſal. 33. 6. This I premiſe, to prevent miſtake, in ſuppoſing the glorious

Vid. Rom. 16. 27.

Quando unus trium in aliquo opere nominatur, univerſa operari Trinitas intelligitur. Aug.

Una voluntas eſt Patris, & Filii & inſeparabilis operatio. Id.

Sancta & inſeparabilis Trinitas nunquam aliquid extra ſe ſigillatim operare noverit. Ambroſ. in Symb. cap. 9. Forb. p. 23.

Joh. 1. 3.
Col. 1. 16.

Joh. 5. 19.
Matt. 12. 28.

perfections, of works attributed to God the Father, to be aſcribed to him in diſtinction, and excluding the other Perſons. Now to the Attributes themſelves.

Jer. 50. 34.
Amos 4. 13.
Iſa. 18. 7. 48. 2.
Seld. de Diis S. cap. 3.
* Ariſtoph. & Cicero.
Gen. 2. 1.
Iſa. 40. 26.
Iſa. 45. 12.
* Compare Pſal. 147. 4.
Rev. 1. 8. 4. 8. 11. 17, &c.
Pſal. 136. 3.
Deut. 10. 17.
1 Tim. 6. 16.
Apoc. 19. 16.
Pol. I. 1, 3, 4.
Τὸ δυνάμενον φύσει προορᾶν ἄρχον φύσει, καὶ δεσπόζον φύσει. I. 1.

Almighty.] The title or epithet παντοκράτωρ (which we render Almighty (or Omnipotent) there being no other word more properly and fully to expreſs it) is often (in a manner peculiar and characteriſtical) aſcribed to God in the Scripture; but in the New Teſtament from imitation (as it ſeems) or tranſlation of the Greek in the Old, where it anſwers to two famous and uſual names of God, Sabaoth and Shaddai, (eſpecially to the former, for the latter is only ſo rendred in ſome places of the book of Job,) the name Sabaoth I ſay, (for that it is ſo, we have expreſsly affirmed in ſeveral places; Their Redeemer is ſtrong; Jehovah Sabaoth is his Name, Jer. 30. 54. (ſo alſo Iſa. 48. 2.) and Amos 4. 13. He that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind, and declareth unto man what is his thought----- Jehovah Elohei Sabaoth is his name: from whence ſome Criticks deduce Ζεὺς Σαββάσιος, mentioned in ſome heathen * Writers.) Now the name Sabaoth doth ſeem to import God's Univerſal dominion over the world: for all things of the world, as being ranged in a goodly order (like an army marching in array, or marſhalled to battel) are called armies: Thus the heavens and earth were finiſhed, and all the hoſt of them, (καὶ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος αὐτῶν, ſaith the Greek: and all the world, or the furniture of them:) By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the hoſt of them: Bleſs the Lord all ye his hoſts: (that is, all creatures:) Lift up your eyes on high (ſaith the Prophet Iſaiah) *and behold who hath created theſe things: that bringeth out their hoſt by number: * he calleth them all by names, by the greatneſs of his might, for that he is ſtrong in power, not one faileth:* Where God is repreſented bringing forth, and ordering his creatures, as a General ſummons together to a rendezvous, and muſters, and embattels his hoſt. Hence I ſay this title of God (παντοκράτωρ) ſeems derived; (which in the Revelation of St. John is moſt frequently attributed to him: Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God Almighty, (ὁ παντοκράτωρ) who was, and is, and art to be; is that heavenly hymn there reſounded to God.) But not dealing ſo ſtrictly, but taking the word παντοκράτωρ in its common latitude for ὁ πάντων κρατῶν (or ὁ πάντων κράτος ἔχων) it may import, either right and authority over all (omnipoteſtas;) or power and ability to do all things (omnipotentia;) or actual exerciſe of ſuch authority and power, in ruling and diſpoſing all things (omnipotentatus;) alſo the poſſeſſion or holding all things (omnitenentia,) and the preſervation or upholding all things (omnicontinentia,) for κρατεῖν hath in propriety and ordinary uſe all theſe ſignifications, and according to them all God is truely παντοκράτωρ. He hath firſt a juſt right and authority over all things; he is naturally the ſoveraign Lord and King of the World; The Lord of Lords, and King of Kings; the ſpring and original of all right and authority. Whatever imaginable reaſon or ground there is of authority, it doth in reſpect of all things agree to God. Ariſtotle in his Politicks diſcourſeth thus. Government doth aim at and tend to the mutual benefit of the governour and governed; that therefore which is moſt able and beſt diſpoſed to provide for and procure the common benefit in natural reaſon and juſtice deſerves to be, and is fitly the governour; whence the ſoul hath a right to govern the body, and men naturally do rule over beaſts; and were there any ſuch men as did ſo eminently exceed others in wiſdom and goodneſs, to them, according to natural congruity, the government of others ſhould appertain: If then ſuch excellency of nature be a foundation of authority, God, who in wiſdom and goodneſs doth incomparably exceed all things, hath a right to govern all: He is only * wiſe (and thence able,) only good (and thence * Rom. 16. 27. willing to manage all for the general welfare and benefit of the world †.) † Luk. 18. 19.

If eminency of power do qualifie for dominion (as ſurely it doth, for what cannot be withſtood, muſt in reaſon be ſubmitted unto; 'tis vain to queſtion that authority which by force altogether irreſiſtible can maintain it ſelf,) God hath the only right; nothing in the world being able to diſpute his title: For who in the heaven can be compared unto the Lord? who among Pſal. 89. 6, 8.
the Sons of the mighty can be likened unto the Lord? O Lord God of Hoſts, who is a ſtrong Lord like unto thee? All things are weak and feeble in compariſon; are in his hand; lie under his feet; are wholly at his diſcretion and diſpoſal: The Lord is the true God (ſaith the Prophet) and the everlaſting Jer. 10. 10.
King, at his wrath the earth ſhall tremble, and the nations ſhall not be able to abide his indignation. How terrible art thou in thy works? through Pſal. 66. 3, &c.
the greatneſs of thy power ſhall thine enemies ſubmit themſelves unto thee:
He ruleth by his power for ever, his eyes behold the nations; let not the rebellious exalt themſelves. If to have made all things and to preſerve them, do create a right of governing, (as it muſt needs: for what can we challenge juſtly a dominion over if not over our own works; over that which we feed and nouriſh continually; over that which depends altogether upon us, and which ſubſiſts but at our pleaſure?) then well may the Elders acknowledge: Worthy art thou, O Lord, to receive the glory and the Apoc. 4. 11. honour and the power, (that is, the royal majeſty and dominion over the world,) for thou haſt made all things, and for thy will they are, and were made. Well might every creature that is in the heaven, and in the earth, and under the earth, and thoſe things which are in the ſea; and all things in them cry out: To him that ſitteth upon the throne (and to the Lamb) be Apoc. 5. 13.
*the bleſſing, and the honour, and the glory, and * the dominion for ever and* * Τὸ κράτος.
ever: And Nehemiah: Thou, even thou art the Lord alone, thou haſt made Neh. 9. 6. heaven, the heaven of heavens with all their hoſts, the earth and all things that are therein, the ſea and all that is therein, and thou preſerveſt them all, and the hoſt of heaven worſhippeth thee: and King Hezekiah: O Lord of Iſa. 37. 16.
Hoſts---thou art the God, thou alone of all the Kingdoms of the earth, thou haſt made heaven and earth.

Thus is God παντοκράτωρ, the Rightfull Soveraign (upon all accompts) of all things---Divúmque hominúmque æterna poteſtas (as the wiſe Heathen Virg. 10. Æn.
Poet could acknowledge and call him:) He is alſo ſo in regard of his infinite power (Omnipotent:) Natural light affords us pregnant arguments and experiments of the greatneſs of his power, demonſtrated in the conſtitution and conſervation of the world; (diſpoſing ſo ſtupendiouſly vaſt, ſo innumerably various creatures into ſo comely, and ſtable a poſture; by them his eternal power and divinity are diſcerned, as St. Paul Rom. 1. 20.
tells us; he that could effect ſo much, his power muſt needs be greater than we can imagine or comprehend; but Holy Scripture declares more fully and clearly the extent of his power; that it reaches unto the utmoſt poſſibility of things: that whatever is not repugnant to his nature (to his eſſential perfections, his wiſdom and goodneſs; doth not misbecome him to do, or to the nature of things to be done; (that doth not imply a contradiction, and thereby is impoſſible, and no object of any power,) he can eaſily atchieve: there is nothing ſo difficult, but he can perform it; nothing ſo ſtrong or ſtubborn, but he can ſubdue it. Is any thing too hard for Gen. 18. 14.
the Lord? ſaith God to Abraham, when Sarah doubted or admired concerning God's promiſe, that ſhe in ſo extreme an age ſhould become fruitfull.
Behold (ſaith the Prophet Jeremy in his prayer to God) thou haſt made the Jer. 32. 17.
heaven and the earth by thy great power and thy ſtretched out arm, and there 27.

is nothing too hard for thee : οὐκ ἀδυνατήσει παρὰ θεῷ πᾶν ῥῆμα : Nothing Luk. 1. 37. (that can be ſaid, or conceived, or done) ſhall be impoſſible to God (if he pleaſes to undertake it) ſaid the Angel to the Bleſſed Virgin, when he delivered ſo ſtrange a meſſage to her, concerning an event ſo wonderfull and Job 42. 2. ſupernatural. That a rich man ſhould be induced to part with all and ſub-Mat. 19. 26. mit to God's will, our Saviour affirmed exceedingly difficult, (harder than for a Camel to paſs through the eye of a needle :) but to ſatisfie his diſciples ſcruple thence ariſing, he ſubjoins : With men this is impoſſible; but with 2 Chr. 20. 6. God all things are poſſible. In thine hand (ſaid Jehoſaphat) there is power and might, ſo that none is able to withſtand thee. He doth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none Dan. 4. 35. can ſtay his hand, or ſay unto him, What doeſt thou ? Nebuchadnezzar (having felt an experiment of his power, and being returned to a right underſtan-Iſa. 14. 27. ding) did ſo confeſs. The Lord of Hoſts hath purpoſed, and who ſhall diſ- annull it ? his hand is ſtretched out, and who ſhall turn it back ? He is El Shaddai, the God all-ſufficient; able to do whatever he pleaſes. He made the World at firſt with a word : (By the word of the Lord were the heavens Pſal. 33. 6, 9. made(ſaith the Pſalmiſt)and all the hoſt of them by the breath of his mouth :----
Heb. 1. 3. Let the earth fear the Lord---- for he ſpake, and it was done ; he commanded, and it ſtood faſt ;) and by a word he doth preſerve it (upholding all things, (ſaith the Apoſtle) by the word of his power; or by his mighty word : and by a word he can deſtroy all things ; yea more eaſily, in a manner, by his ſilence ; by withdrawing that ſalutary breath, which cheriſheth all things :
Pſal. 104. 29. (Thou hideſt thy face, they are troubled ; thou with-holdeſt thy breath, they Εἰ θεὸν οἶδα, ἴσθι ὅτι καὶ δαίμονι ῥέξαι πᾶν δυνατόν. Callim. Plut. de plac. I. 1. die, and return to their duſt :) for even in this reſpect is God all-powerfull, for that all power is derived from and depends upon him : He not only can do all things, but nothing can be done without him. Without me you can do nothing, is true not only in Spiritual matters, but in all others : He
Joh. 15. 5. gives (as St. Paul preached at Athens) life (or being with all vital faculties) Acts 17. 24, 28. and breath (all natural powers) and all things unto all. In him (or rather, Ῥάδια πάντα θεῷ τελέσαι καὶ ἀδύνατον οὐδέν. by him) we live, and move, and have our being ; whatever we have, or can do proceeds from him : thus is God Almighty. He is alſo ſo, by reaſon that he doth actually exerciſe all dominion, and exerts his power, according to his pleaſure ; he hath not only a juſt title to govern all things, and abi-Pſal. 103. 19. lity to ſway, but he uſes them : The Lord hath prepared his throne in hea-
Vid. Pſal. 47. ven and his kingdom ruleth over all : The Lord is high above all nations, and Pſal. 103. 4. his glory above the heavens ; who is like unto the Lord our God, who humbleth himſelf to behold the things that are in heaven and in the earth ? 'Tis indeed a great condeſcenſion in God, that he will vouchſafe the government of things, ſo much inferiour to him, yet for the general good he doth it.
1 Chron. 29. 11, 12. Thine (ſaid David) is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as head above all, both riches and honour come of thee, and thou reigneſt over all ; in thine hand is power and might, &c. He is indeed the only Governour, abſo-1 Tim. 6. 15. lutely and directly ſo ; (μόνος δυνάστης, the only Potentate) all authority and power are imparted by him, are ſubordinate to him ; by his diſpoſal and direction all Potentates receive them, and in his behalf, by vertue of his commiſſion and command, as his delegates and officers they admi-niſter any dominion or power : It was Nebuchadnezzar's doom to be driven from men untill he did know this truth (ſo neceſſary for all Princes to Dan. 4. 25. know and conſider) that the moſt High ruleth in the Kingdoms of men, and
Dan. 7. 27. giveth it to whomſoever he will : His Kingdom is an everlaſting Kingdom, Pſal. 72. 6, 7. and all dominions ſhall ſerve and obey him. Promotion cometh neither from
Rom. 13. 1. the eaſt, nor from the weſt, nor from the ſouth : but God is the Judge, he put-
Joh. 19. 11. teth down one and ſetteth up another : There is no power but from God ; the powers powers that are, are appointed by God. The Judgment is God's (ſaid Moſes Deut. 1. 17.

in his charge) exerciſed in his behalf, and according to his appointment.
Thus is God παντοκράτωρ; the only direct ſoveraign commander; the author and fountain of all authority, the Lord of Lords and King of Kings.
He alſo is παντοκράτωρ, as the true proprietary, and juſt poſſeſſor of all things. (Omnitenens) Bleſſed be Abram of the moſt high God poſſeſſor of hea- Gen. 14. 19.
ven and earth, ſaith Melchiſedech. The earth is the Lord's and the fulneſs Pſal. 24. 1. thereof, the world and they that dwell therein; for he hath founded it upon the 50. 12.
ſeas, and eſtabliſhed it upon the floods. Behold, the Heaven and the heaven Deut. 10. 14.
of heavens is the Lords thy God, the earth alſo with all that therein is (ſaith Moſes): and the Pſalmiſt again: The heavens are thine, the earth alſo is thine, Pſal. 89. 11.
as for the world and the fulneſs thereof; (that is, all which the world con- 1 Chro. 29. 11.
tains, which it is repleniſhed with.) The ſea is his, and (that is, for) he Pſal. 95. 5.
made it, and his hands formed the dry land. Thou haſt founded them: all things are God's goods and poſſeſſions (for that he hath made and by creation purchaſed them to himſelf; ſo we ſee the Pſalmiſt argues) and ſo the diſpoſal of them do belong unto him; he may and doth apply them to what uſe he pleaſeth. He is alſo Omnitenens ('tis St. Auſtin's word) as containing all things in his hand, encircling and comprehending them (as it were) in his arms. Whither ſhall I go from thy ſpirit (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) Pſal. 139. 7, 8, 9, 10.
or whither ſhall I flee from thy preſence? if I aſcend up into heaven thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there; if I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermoſt parts of the ſea, even there ſhall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand ſhall hold me.

Who hath meaſured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meeted out Iſa. 40. 12.
heaven with the ſpan, and comprehended the duſt of the earth in a meaſure.

Mine hand hath laid the foundation of the earth, and my hand hath ſpanned the heavens. Iſa. 48. 13.

He laſtly is, παντοκράτωρ, in regard that he ſuſtains and preſerves all things: οὐκοῦν (ſaith Gregory Nyſſen) ὅταν τῆς παντοκράτωρ φωνῆς ἀκούομεν τοῦτο νοοῦμεν τὸ πάντα τὸν Θεὸν ἐν τῷ εἶναι συνέχειν: when we hear the word Al- mighty, we underſtand that God doth contain all things in being. Thou, Neh. 9. 6.
even thou (ſay the Levites in Nehemiah) art Lord alone? thou haſt made heaven, the heaven of heavens with all their hoſt, the earth and all things that are therein, and thou preſerveſt them all; and the hoſt of heaven worſhippeth thee. In all theſe reſpects is God truly Almighty.

The belief and conſideration of which truths are of great importance The belief of God's power. For it Abraham juſtified, &c. in the Goſpel.
and uſe to us: if God be the ſoveraign Lord of all things (which is the chief ſenſe of this article) and we conſequently his ſubjects and vaſſals; then is all awfull reverence, worſhip, and obedience due from us to him:
we are in juſtice bound humbly to adore his majeſty, and readily to perform his commands, and patiently to ſubmit to his will. We muſt not think to guide our actions according to our own will or fancy, as if we οὐ γὰρ νομοθετήσοντες πάρεσμεν, &c. Plut. ad Apoll. p. 193, 194.
had no Lord over us; but conform them we muſt to the decrees and determinations of our moſt good and wiſe Governour. 'Tis our duty to do thus, and we have reaſon to do it willingly and cheerfully; for 'tis alſo our happineſs to be under ſo juſt and gracious a government: 'tis no cruel tyrant, no unjuſt uſurper, but a moſt gracious and equal King, whom we are in ſubjection to: of whom 'tis ſaid truly, Juſtice and judgment Pſal. 89. 14.
are the eſtabliſhment of his throne; mercy and truth go before his face; whom we are exceedingly obliged to thank that he will vouchſafe to undertake the tuition and overſight of us: ſo that in this conſideration the Pſalmiſt might well excite the world to joy and Jubilation: O clap your hands all Pſal. 47. 1.
ye people, ſhout unto God with the voice of triumph; for the Lord moſt High Conſ. Socrates in Plato's Phædo, &c.

is terrible, he is a great King over all the earth. All the world hath reaſon not only to be content and acquieſce but to rejoice and triumph in being ſubject to ſuch a governour, ſo able ſo willing to maintain good order, peace and equity therein.

Τραχὺς μονάρχης, οὐδ' ὑπεύθυνος κρατεῖ. Æſchyl. Prom.

—οὐ γὰρ ἐμὸν παλινάγρετον, οὐδ' ἀπατηλὸν, Οὐδ' ἀτελεύτητον γ' ὅτι κεν κεφαλῇ κατανεύσω. Hom. Il. α. 526.

Rom. 4. 20, 21.

Pſ. 78. 19, 20.

Matt. 8. 26. 14. 31. Ὀλιγόπιστε, εἰς τί ἐδίστασας, &c.

Alſo, If God be Omnipotent; able to do all things and of irreſiſtible power, then have we all reaſon, 1. To hope in his providence and rely upon his promiſes. For that he is able to ſupply us with all we need and perform what ever he hath promiſed. It was Abraham's vertue (ſo accceptable to God and ſo richly rewarded by him) that he did not ſtagger at the promiſe of God through unbelief, but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God; being fully perſwaded, that what he had promiſed he was able to perform. It was the Iſraelites great offence that ſo incenſed God; that they ſpake againſt God, ſaying, Can God furniſh a table in the Wilderneſs? Behold, he ſmote the rock, that the waters guſhed out, and the ſtreams overflowed: can he give bread alſo? can he provide fleſh for his people? Our Saviour upon this accompt took it ill of his diſciples, that in the greateſt dangers they ſhould be afraid, or in the leaſt manner diſtruſt. Since nothing is impoſſible, nothing difficult to him (that can be done, or which he will promiſe) we ſhould not in reſpect of any difficulty or improbability appearing, doubt in the leaſt; 'tis injury to him, 'tis folly, 'tis blaſphemy to do it.

2. We ſhould hence dread God; fear to oppoſe his will, or provoke his diſpleaſure. Is it not a madneſs for impotency (ſuch as ours) to contend with, or withſtand Omnipotency, that can ſo eaſily cruſh us into miſery, into nothing? Foraſmuch as there is none like unto thee, O Lord; thou art great, and thy Name is great in might. Who would not fear thee, O King of nations? (Jer. 10. 6, 7) Fear you not me, (ſaith the Lord?) will ye not tremble at my preſence, which have placed the ſand for the bound of the ſea, &c. (Jer. 5. 22.) 'Tis the argument by which Moſes enforces obedience to the law, for that the Lord is a great God, a mighty and a terrible, (Deut. 10. 17.) Our Saviour admoniſhes and inculcates earneſtly, Fear him, which after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into hell: I ſay unto you, Fear him, (Luk. 12. 5.) Do we provoke the Lord to jealouſie, (St. Paul urges) are we ſtronger than he? No, let us follow St. Peter's advice, (1 Pet. 5. 6.) and humble our ſelves under the mighty hand of God. But I leave theſe and other applications eaſily emergent from theſe points of doctrine, to your further meditation.

Adv. Marc. I. 3.

It may be demanded, why, beſide that of Almighty, no other attribute of God is expreſſed in our Creed; why, for inſtance, the perfections of infinite wiſdom and goodneſs are therein omitted. I anſwer, 1. That all ſuch perfections are included in the notion of a God, whom, when we profeſs to believe, we conſequently do aſcribe them to him; for he that ſhould profeſs to believe in God, not acknowledging thoſe perfections, would be inconſiſtent and contradictious to himſelf; Deum negaret (as Tertullian ſpeaks) auferendo quod Dei eſt; he would deny God, withdrawing what belongs to God. 2ly. The title παντοκράτωρ, as implying God's univerſal providence in the preſervation, and government of the world, doth alſo involve or inferr all divine perfections diſplayed therein; all that glorious majeſty and excellency, for which he is with higheſt reſpect to be honoured and worſhipped by us; which added to the name of God doth determine what God we mean, ſuch as doth in all perfection excell, and therewith doth govern the world. I might add, 3ly. That the doctrine of God's univerſal providence being not altogether ſo evident dent to natural light, as thoſe attributes diſcovered in the making of the world (more having doubted thereof and diſputed againſt it with more plauſibility) it was therefore convenient to add it, as a matter of faith clearly and fully (as we did ſhew) atteſted unto by divine revelation. So much may ſuffice to remove ſuch a ſcruple. I proceed:

Maker of Heaven and Earth.

THis clauſe is one of thoſe, which was of later times inſerted into this Creed, none of the more ancient expoſitors thereof (Auguſtine, Ruffin, Maximus Taurinenſis, Chryſologus, &c.) taking any notice thereof. But Irenæus, Tertullian, and other moſt ancient writers in their rules of faith exhibit the ſenſe thereof; and the confeſſions of all General Councils (the Nicene and thoſe after it) expreſs it. And there is great reaſon for it, not only thereby to diſavow and deſcry thoſe prodigious errours of Marcion and Manichæus, and other ſuch hereticks, which did then aſcribe the Creation of the world (or of ſome parts thereof, ſeeming to their fancy leſs good and perfect) to another God (or principle) inferiour in worth and goodneſs to that God, which is revealed in the Goſpel; or did opinionate two principles (not diſtinct only, but contrary to each other) from one whereof good things did proceed, from the other bad things. But alſo for that the creation of the world is that peculiar, auguſt and admirable work of God, by which, we learn that he is, and what he is; by which (I ſay) his exiſtence is moſt ſtrongly proved, and in which his divine perfections are moſt conſpicuouſly diſplayed; which is the prime foundation of his authority over the world; and conſequently is the chief ground of natural religion; of our ſubjection, and duty and devotion toward him. This title alſo moſt eſpecially characterizing and diſtinguiſhing that God whom we believe and adore from all falſe and fictitious Deities: for, as the Pſalmiſt ſings, All the Gods of the nations are idols, but the Lord made the heavens. And the Prophet Jeremy: The Gods that have not made the heavens, and the earth, they ſhall periſh from the earth, and from under theſe heavens. And we preach unto you (ſaid St. Paul to the ignorant Lycaonians) that ye ſhould turn from thoſe vanities unto the living God, which made heaven and earth. There was reaſon therefore more than ſufficient that the Creed ſhould be enlarged and enriched with this ſo material inſertion; that we ſhould be obliged explicitly to acknowledge a point of ſo grand conſideration and uſe. For the explication whereof and the terms wherein it is conceived, we may obſerve firſt, that the ancient Hebrews having (as it ſeems) in their language no one word properly ſignifying the World (or univerſal ſyſtem of things created*) did uſe inſtead thereof a collection of its chief parts (chief either abſolutely in themſelves, or in reſpect to us) the heaven and the earth; adding ſometimes the ſea, (yea ſometimes for fuller explication ſubjoining to heaven its hoſt, to earth its fulneſs, to the ſea its contents,) but moſt frequently heaven and earth are put to deſign the whole. In ſix days (ſaith Moſes) the Lord made heaven and earth. Do not I fill heaven and earth, ſaith the Lord? It is eaſier for heaven and earth to paſs, than one tittle of the law to fail: God (ſaith St. Paul) that made the world and all things therein, ſeeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth: where the world and all things therein doth ſignify the ſame, with heaven and earth; God's dominion being co-extended with his creation, as being grounded thereon. By heaven and earth therefore I ſay we are to underſtand thoſe two Regions,

Pſal. 96. 5.
Jer. 10. 11.
Vid. 2 Kings 19. 15.
Act. 14. 15.
17. 24.

Pſal. 69. 34.
Neh. 9. 60.
Gen. 1. 1.
Exod. 20. 11.
2 King. 19. 15.
Jer. 23. 24.
Luk. 16. 17.
Acts 17. 24.
Vid. Iſ. 42. 5.

* Σύστημα ἐξ οὐρανοῦ καὶ γῆς, καὶ τῶν ἐν τούτοις περιεχομένων φύσεων, 'tis Ariſtotle's definition of the word, de Mund. 2.

gions, ſuperiour and inferiour, into which the whole frame of things is divided, together with all the Beings that do reſide in, belong unto, are comprehended by them; as we ſee ſometimes fully expreſſed. O Lord, thou art the God that haſt made the heavens, the earth, the ſea, and all things being in them (pray the Apoſtles in the Acts); and with utmoſt diſtinction the angel in the Apocalypſe ſwears by him that liveth for ever, who created the heaven and the things that therein are; and the earth with the things that therein are, and the ſea with the things therein.

Acts 4. 24.
Rev. 10. 6.

By heaven is then underſtood, all the ſuperiour Region, encompaſſing the earth, and from it on all ſides extended to a diſtance unconceivably vaſt and ſpacious, with all its parts, furniture, and inhabitants; not only thoſe that are viſible and material, but alſo thoſe that are immaterial and inviſible. By him (ſaith St. Paul) were created all things which are in heaven, and which are in earth, both thoſe that are viſible, and thoſe that are inviſible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers, all things were created by him: That is, not only the material and ſenſible parts (thoſe bright and beautifull lamps of light expoſed to our ſight) but thoſe beings of a more pure and refined ſubſtance, indiſcernible therefore to our ſenſe, how eminent ſoever in nature, mighty in power, exalted in dignity, whoſe ordinary reſidence * is in thoſe ſuperiour regions (as being God's courtiers, and domeſtick officers, attending upon and miniſtring unto him; † encircling his throne (as it is in the Apocalypſe) and always beholding his face (as our Saviour teaches us, Matt. 18. 10.) even theſe all were made by God: for they are included in the univerſal term all: if God made all things, in heaven (as we heard it told us by the mouth of an Angel in St. John's revelation) then certainly the Angels (the moſt conſiderable things therein.) And they are expreſly called the Sons of God; (as deriving their being from him) and they are ſubject to God's government and juriſdiction (which argues their proceeding from him and dependance upon him:) and St. Jude tells us, they did not retain, τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἀρχὴν, their beginning or primitive ſtate; wherefore they had a beginning, and whence that but from God, who alone (originally, intrinſecally, and neceſſarily) hath immortality, and conſequently (as Ariſtotle proveth by ſeveral reaſons againſt Plato) alone hath eternity: and the Pſalmiſt calls them God's works; Bleſs the Lord (ſaith he) ye his Angels, that excell in ſtrength, that do his commandments, hearkning unto the voice of his word: Bleſs the Lord all his hoſts, ye miniſters of his, that do his pleaſure: then concluding and recapitulating, he adds: Bleſs the Lord all his works in all places of his dominion: and again in the 148 Pſalm, ſummoning all the creation to a conſort of doxology; he begins with the heavens; and then proceeds to the earth; making a very particular recitation of the chief parts, and inhabitants belonging to each: and in the firſt place reckoning the Angels, then the ſtars, then the heaven of heavens; he ſubjoins the reaſon, why they ought all to praiſe God: Let them (ſaith he) praiſe the name of the Lord, for he commanded and they were created; he hath alſo ſtabliſhed them for ever and ever; he hath made a decree (concerning them) which ſhall not paſs. Thus doth the Scripture teach us concerning the exiſtence and original of thoſe ſublime beings, to the knowledge of whom (that they are, what they are, whence they are) natural light could not reach; although from primitive tradition even the heathens themſelves did in a manner acknowledge this truth, calling all the inferiour and ſecondary Gods the children of the firſt and ſupreme God, as we did formerly touch, θεοὶ θεῶν ὧν ἐγὼ δημιουργὸς πατήρ τε: ſo

Col. 1. 16.

* Ἴδιον οἰκητήριον (as St. Jude 6. hath it) proper habitation.

Heb. 1. 14. Dan. 7. 10.
Rev. 5. 11. Matt. 18. 10.

† Κυκλόθεν τοῦ θρόνου.

Job 2. 1.
38. 7.
Pſal. 89. 6.
29. 1.
Jud. 6.
1 Tim. 6. 16.

1. de Cœlo, cap. ult.
Pſal. 103.

Pſal. 148.

God ſpeaks to them in Plato's Timæus. And for all other things, both in heaven and earth; the material frame of the world, with all its parts (compacted together in ſo fair, ſo fit, ſo faſt an order) we have before ſufficiently diſcourſed, that they ſpeak themſelves (even to natural underſtanding) to have been produced by a moſt wiſe, moſt powerfull, moſt beneficent author; that is, by God; which is confirmed by teſtimonies of holy writ innumerable and which need not be repeated.

Vid. Comment. in Ant pag. 145.

And thus much (as we did alſo formerly ſhew) the generality of mankind hath always conſented unto; as alſo the moſt and beſt reputed Philoſophers did (in general terms) avow it. There is only one particular, wherein they ſeem to have diſagreed (ſome or moſt of them) from what Chriſtian piety obliges us to acknowledge; which concerns the matter of corporeal things; for even Plato himſelf (who ſo poſitively and expreſsly doth aſſert the world to have been framed by God) is yet conceived to ſuppoſe the matter of things to have been eternal and uncreated; aſcribing only to God the forming, and diſpoſing it into a good order, agreeable to ſome patterns pre-exiſtent in his wiſe underſtanding; even as a good artiſt doth out of an unſhapen lump of matter frame a handſome piece of work, conformable to ſome idea preconceived in his mind. (Socrates and Plato, ſaith Plutarch, did ſuppoſe three principles of things, τὸν θεὸν, τὴν ὕλην, τὴν ἰδέαν, God, Matter, Idea: God is the Mind, Matter the firſt ſubject of generation and corruption, Idea an incorporeal ſubſiſtence in the conceptions of God. Anaxagoras alſo (the ſame Author tells us, and Ariſtotle confirms it in his Metaphyſicks, commending his opinion,) did affirm two principles, One paſſive, Matter; (conſiſting of an infinite number of ſmall particles like to one another in ſhape;) the other active, Underſtanding; and to the ſame effect he reduces Pythagoras his conceits, though with much obſcurity expreſſed *.) And Ariſtotle tells us, that generally all natural Philoſophers before him did conceive and aſſume it for a principle, (it was κοινὴ δόξα τῶν φυσικῶν, ὡς οὐ γινομένου οὐδενὸς ἐκ τοῦ μὴ ὄντος) † that nothing was made out of nothing, or that every thing made had neceſſarily ſome pre-exiſtent matter, out of which it was made; [Which principle Ariſtotle himſelf not only *admits (in his ſenſe) but extends farther, affirming it impoſſible, that any thing ſhould be produced out of matter not pre-diſpoſed to admit the form to be introduced, οὐδὲ γίνεται ὁτιοῦν ἐξ ὅτου ἕν: Every thing is not made of every thing; but out of ſome ſubject fitted thereto, or capable thereof; as Animals and Plants out of their ſeeds.] Which principles, being deduced from obſervation of natural effects (or works of art) performed always by alterations, and tranſpoſitions of ſome ſubjacent matter, we may ſafely in reſpect only to ſuch kind of effects admit; allowing no natural agent, no created artificer able to produce any thing without ſome ſubject, aptly qualified and prepared to receive its influence. But hence to conclude generally, that every action poſſible doth neceſſarily require a matter pre-exiſtent, or pre-diſpoſed ſubject, is no wiſe reaſonable; becauſe ſuch a thing doth not uſually according to the courſe of nature happen, therefore it is in it ſelf abſolutely impoſſible to be, is no good collection; no Logick will allow us from particular expe-

Vid. Tertull. adv. Valent. cap. 15. & adv. Hermog. I.

Cic. de div. II. ſect. 37. Quis hoc phyſicus dixit unquam.

De placitis. I. 3.
Anton. IV. ſect. 4.
Metaph. I. 3, 4.

* Thales his conceit was alſo in a manner the ſame; who (as Tully tells us de Nat. D. I.) Aquam dixit eſſe initium rerum, Deum autem eam mentem, quæ ex aqua cuncta fingeret. The Stoicks alſo had this opinion; as Lipſius by many teſtimonies proves in his Phyſiologia Stoica.

† Δοκεῖ δὲ αὐτοῖς ἀρχὰς εἶναι τῶν ὅλων δύο· τὸ ποιοῦν καὶ τὸ πάσχον· τὸ μὲν οὖν πάσχον εἶναι τὴν ἄποιον ὕλην· τὸ δὲ ποιοῦν, τὸν ἐν αὐτῇ λόγον τὸν θεόν. Laert. in Zen. vid. Sen. Epiſt. 65.

Ἐκ μὴ ὄντων γίγνεται ἀδύνατον περὶ τὰς ταύτης ὁμογνωμονοῦσι τῆς δόξης ἅπαντες οἱ περὶ φύσεως.

* Phyſ. I. 5. Phyſ. I. 9.

Vide locum luculentum. Metaph. I. 3.

Ἀεὶ δεῖ τι ὑποκεῖσθαι, ἐξ οὗ γίγνεται τὸ γιγνόμενον, οἷον τὰ φυτὰ καὶ τὰ ζῷα ἐκ σπέρματος. I. 8.

Cic. de div. II.

—Erit aliquid quod aut ex nihilo oriatur, aut in nihilum ſubitò occidat: Quis hoc phyſicus dixit unquam? Vid. Anton. IV. ſect. 4.

riments to eſtabliſh general concluſions; eſpecially ſuch as concern abſolute impoſſibility of things to be otherwiſe, than ſometimes they appear to be: There may be, for all we can know, agents of another ſort, and powers much differing in kind and manner of efficacy from thoſe which are ſubject to our obſervation; eſpecially to ſuppoſe the Supreme Being (that made the world) can himſelf act no otherwiſe, than we ſee theſe inferiour things do, is groſly vain; nor from any certain principle of reaſon can it ever appear, that it is impoſſible ſome ſubſtances ſhould be totally produced de novo; or receive an exiſtence, which they had not. We cannot derive any ſuch propoſition from ſenſe; it aſſures us that ſome effects are poſſible, but cannot help us to determine what is impoſſible: that which we ſee done is poſſible; but what we cannot perceive done, is not therefore impoſſible: nor can any reaſon of ours reach the extent of all powers and poſſibilities. That opinion therefore of the ancient Philoſophers, that the matter of the World, or of natural things, is eternal and uncreated, had no certain foundation: We may ſay to them, as our Saviour once did to the Sadduces: Ye err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God: and that their opinion was indeed falſe, and contrary to our faith, may appear, 1. Becauſe it is ſo often generally affirmed in holy Scripture, that God did make all things; all things that that are in heaven and in earth: It is unſafe, and not without great reaſon ever to be done, to make limitations, and reſtrictions of univerſal propoſitions, often (yea conſtantly) ſo ſet down. And like as St. Paul ſomewhere diſcourſes: Becauſe it is ſaid in the Prophets: Every one that believeth in him, ſhall not be aſhamed: Whoſoever ſhall call upon the Name of the Lord ſhall be ſaved; therefore both Jews and Greeks (in caſe of belief and calling upon God) are capable of ſalvation and acceptance: οὐ γάρ ἐστι διαστολὴ, for that there is no diſtinction or exception made: So it being ſaid univerſally and without any limitation, all things were made, therefore the matter of things was alſo made; the matter being one thing, yea, in the opinion of moſt Philoſophers, as well ancient as modern, the principal thing, the only ſubſtantial thing in nature; all other things being only the modes and affections thereof. Whence Ariſtotle tells us, that moſt of the firſt Philoſophers did affirm nothing to be made, nothing to be deſtroyed, becauſe matter did always exiſt and abide the ſame; as if nothing elſe in nature had any Being conſiderable. If God therefore did not produce matter it ſelf, he could hardly be accompted author of any thing in nature: how then is he truly affirmed the maker of all things? 2. Again, God is in like manner affirmed generally the true poſſeſſour and proprietor of all things, excepting none; how ſo, if he did not make them? is not this expreſſed the foundation of his right and dominion? The heavens are thine, the earth alſo is thine: as for the world, and the fulneſs thereof, thou haſt founded them: How is God (I ſay) Lord and Owner of matter, (at leaſt by the moſt excellent ſort of right;) but for that he did produce and doth ſuſtain its being, and therefore may juſtly uſe and diſpoſe of it according to his pleaſure? 3. Again: Suppoſing any Being eternal, unmade, and independent upon God, doth advance that Being in ſome reſpect to an equality with God, (imparting thoſe great attributes of God thereto,) and it deprives him of thoſe perfections, making him to depend upon it in his operations, and not all-ſufficient in himſelf without it: it derogates from his prerogative, and limits his power. 4. Farther, as Ariſtotle well diſcourſeth againſt the ancient Philo-

Matt. 22. 29.

Rom. 10. 11, &c.

Metaph. I. 3.
Phyſ. I. 8.

Vid. Lactantii libro II. (p. 179, &c.) diſputationem hac de re.

Pſal. 89. 11.

----de re non ſua, ſcilicet non facta ab ipſo. Tert. ad Herm. 9. De alieno uſus, aut precariò uſus eſt quà egens ejus, aut injuriâ quâ prævalens ejus. Ib.

Quis alius Dei cenſus quàm æternitas?

Philoſophers, who before Anaxagoras, did aſſign but one principle to things, (that material and paſſive one;) as if no active principle were required; ſo may we argue againſt him and them together; if God did produce and inſert an active principle into nature, (as who can well imagine thoſe admirable works of nature, the ſeminal propagation and nutrition of plants; the generation, motion, ſenſe, appetite, paſſion of animals to be performed by a meer blind agitation of matter, without ſome active principle diſtinct from matter, diſpoſing and determining it toward the production of ſuch ſpecifick effects?) If God could, I ſay, produce ſuch an active principle (ſuch an ἐντελέχεια, to uſe the Philoſopher's word,) why might he not as well produce a paſſive one, ſuch as the matter is? 5. Farther, If God did produce immaterial Beings (ſimple and uncompounded ſubſtances, diſtinct from all matter) ſuch as angels and the ſouls of men, meerly out of nothing, (for out of what pre-exiſtent ſubſtance could they be made?) then may he as well create matter out of nothing. What greater difficulty can we conceive in making ſuch a lower imperfect thing, than in making thoſe more excellent Beings, ſo much farther (as it were) removed from non-entity? If any thing be producible out of nothing, why not all things capable of exiſtence, by a vertue omnipotent*? But that ſuch immaterial Beings were produced by God, we ſaw before from many plain teſtimonies of divine revelation. 6. I add, That the manner of God's making the World, delivered in Scripture, by meer will and command: (He ſpake, and it was done; he commanded, and it ſtood faſt:) that by only pronouncing the word fiat, all things ſhould be formed and conſtituted in their ſpecifick natures and perfections, doth argue that matter might be produced out of nothing by divine power: as alſo the effecting miracles, contrary to the courſe of nature (without any preparation or prediſpoſition of the ſuſcipient matter) in the ſame manner (by ſaying only, as our Saviour did, θέλω, καθαρίσθητι (I will, be thou cleanſed.) Woman, great is thy faith; γενηθήτω σοι ὡς θέλεις, *(Be it to thee as thou deſireſt) doth ſhew the ſame. For it is no wiſe harder, nor more impoſſible to produce matter it ſelf, than to produce a form therein without or againſt its aptitude to receive it: Nay, it ſeems more difficult to make children to Abraham out of ſtones, than to make them out of nothing: there being a poſitive obſtacle to be removed; here no reſiſtance appearing; there being as well ſomewhat preceding to be deſtroyed, as ſomething new to be produced. [Eſpecially, I ſay, conſidering that God uſes no other means or inſtruments in theſe productions, than his bare word and command; which why ſhould we not conceive as able immediately to produce the matter, as the forms of things?] 7. Laſtly: The text of Moſes, deſcribing the manner and order of the creation, doth inſinuate this truth: In the beginning (ſaith he) God made heaven and earth: Now the earth was without form: Firſt, it ſeems, God made the matter of heaven and earth, devoid of all form and order; a confuſed and unſhapen maſs; then he digeſted and diſtinguiſhed its parts; by ſeveral degrees raiſing thence all thoſe various kinds, thoſe well arrayed hoſts of goodly creatures. From theſe premiſes we may conclude (againſt thoſe Philoſophers, who deſtitute of the light of revelation, did conceive otherwiſe; and againſt ſuch Chriſtians as have followed them; as Hermogenes, Veritas ſic unum Deum exigit defendendo, ut ſolius ſit quicquid ipſius eſt. Tertull. adv. Hermog. 4, 5.

Nemo non eget eo, de cujus utitur; nemo non ſubjicitur ei cujus eget, ut poſſit uti: Et nemo qui præſtat de ſuo uti, non in hoc ſuperior eſt eo, cui præſtat uti. Ib. 8.

Metaph. I. 3.

Niſi quòd jam non omnipotens, ſi non & hoc potens ex nihilo omnia proferre. Ibid.

*— Cur non omnia ex nihilo, ſi aliquid ex nihilo, niſi ſi inſufficiens fuit divina virtus omnibus producendis quæ aliquid protulerit ex nihilo, &c. Tert. adv. Herm. 15.

Pſal. 33. 9.

Luk. 5. 13.

Matt. 15. 28.

* Νεανίσκε, λέγω σοὶ ἐγέρθητι. Luk. 7. 14.

Mat. 3. 9.

Scriptura terram primò factam edicit, dehinc qualitatem ipſius ediſſerit; ſicut & cœlum primò factum profeſſa, dehinc diſpoſitionem ejus ſuperinducit. Tertull. contra Hermog. 26.

Nihil ſine origine, niſi Deus ſolus. Tertull. adv. M. V. 1.
1 Cor. 8. 6.

whom Tertullian hath upon this occaſion writ a diſcourſe againſt, and ſome Socinians, Volkeim, &c.) that God did create (in the moſt ſtrict and ſcholaſtical ſenſe of that word) produce out of nothing, either immediately or mediately beſtow total exiſtence upon every thing that is, not excepting any one; and that this is the true meaning of theſe words, Maker of heaven and earth; which is aſcribed here to God, the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; a truth, which as all good Chriſtians have always acknowledged, and the Holy Scriptures do moſt plainly avouch, (For to us there is but one God, the Father, from whom are all things, and we from him; and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt (his Son) by whom are all things, and we by him; though Marcion of old (and other Gnoſtical hereticks before and after him) did contradict it, affirming that the God who made the World, and enacted the law (whom Moſes did declare) was a worſe conditioned, a rigid and angry God; but the God of the Goſpel was another more benign and harmleſs God, void of all wrath and ſpleen. [Tertullian thus in Verſe deſcribes this conceit.

Adv. Marc. Poem. I.

Prædicat hic duos eſſe patres, diviſaque regna,
Eſſe mali cauſam Dominum qui condidit orbem;
Quique figuravit carnem ſpiramine vivam;
Quique dedit legem, & vatum qui voce locutus;
Hunc negat eſſe bonum, juſtum tamen eſſe fatetur,
Crudelem, durum, belli cui ſæva voluptas,
Judicio horrendum, precibus manſueſcere nullis.
Eſſe alium ſuadens, nulli qui cognitus unquam,
Hunc ait eſſe bonum, nullum qui judicat, æquè
Sed ſpargit cunctis vitam, non invidet ulli.]

Plut. de Iſ. & Oſir. p. 659. Steph. Gr.

Ἐι γὰρ οὐδὲν ἀναιτίως πέφυκε γενέσθαι, αἰτίαν δὲ κακοῦ τ' ἀγαθὸν οὐκ ἂν παρέσχοι, δεῖ γένεσιν ἰδίαν καὶ ἀρχὴν, ὥσπερ ἀγαθοῦ, καὶ κακοῦ τὴν φύσιν ἔχειν, &c.

Of affinity to this was the errour of the Manichees, who ſuppoſed two firſt cauſes of things, one of good, the other of bad, taken it ſeems from the Perſian, Egyptian, or other Ethnical doctrines, which to this purpoſe we may ſee recited by Plutarch in his Tractate de Iſide & Oſiride: the Perſian from Zoroaſter, he tells us, had their Oromazes and Arimanius; the Egyptians their Oſiris and Typhon; the Chaldæans their good and bad Planets; the Greeks their Zeus and Hades; the Pythagoreans their Μονὰς and Δυὰς; Empedocles his Concord and Diſcord, &c. The common reaſon or ground upon which erroneous conceits were built, was this, That there being in nature ſome things imperfect and bad, theſe could not proceed from perfect goodneſs; it would have produced all things in higheſt perfection, and in indefectible ſtate of goodneſs. (If, diſcourſeth Plutarch there, expreſſing the main of their argument, nothing naturally can ariſe without a cauſe, and good cannot afford cauſality to evil, it is neceſſary that nature ſhould have a proper ſeed and principle of evil, as well as good: and thus it ſeems to the moſt and wiſeſt; for they indeed conceive two Gods as it were counter-plotting each other; one the contriver and producer of good things, and the other of bad; calling the better one, God; the other, Dæmon.)

But this diſcourſe hath two great faults; it ſuppoſeth ſomething imperfect and evil, which is not truly ſo; and that which is truly imperfect and evil, it aſſigneth to a wrong cauſe; it ſuppoſeth ſome things, according to their original conſtitution imperfect and evil; which is falſe: there was no creature, which did not at firſt paſs the divine approbation:

Gen. 1. 31.

God ſaw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good. Good; that is, convenient and ſuitable to its deſign; fair and decent in its place and proportion: Very good; that is, altogether perfect in its degree; without any blemiſh or flaw; not liable to any juſt exception: there be indeed degrees of perfection, (it was fit there ſhould be ſuch, in great variety; that things might commend and illuſtrate each other,) ſome things may comparatively be ſaid to be imperfect, or leſs excellent in reſpect of others; but nothing is poſitively bad or imperfect, void of that perfection due to its nature and kind. Every thing contributes ſomething to the uſe and ornament of the whole; no weed that grows out of the earth; no worm that creeps upon the ground, but hath its beauty and yields ſome profit; nothing is deſpicable or abominable, though all things not alike admirable and amiable. There is nothing therefore unfit or unworthy to have proceeded from God; nothing which doth not in ſome ſort and degree conferr to the manifeſtation of his glorious wiſdom, power, and goodneſs. O Lord, (ſaith the devout Pſalmiſt, after particular conſideration of them) how manifold are thy works, in wiſdom haſt thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches. He created all things that they might have their being, and the generations of the world were healthfull; and there is no poiſon of deſtruction in them; ſaith the Hebrew Wiſe-man.

Pſal. 104. 24.

Sap. 1. 14.

As for thoſe real imperfections and evils (moral evils; habitual diſtempers, irregular actions, with all the miſchiefs conſequent on them) we need not ſeek any one eternal cauſe for them: [though order and uniformity do, diſorder and confuſion do not argue any unity of cauſe, whence they ſhould proceed:] the true cauſes of them are notorious enough; Men (or other intellectual agents) their voluntary declining from the way God doth preſcribe them; diſobeying his laws and precepts; tranſgreſſing the dictates of their own reaſons; abuſing their own faculties; perverting themſelves and others (by their bad example, perſuaſion, allurement, or violence,) theſe cauſes of ſuch evils are moſt viſible and palpable, they are called our ways, our works, our inventions; they are imputed altogether to us; we are blamed, we are puniſhed for them. Nor need we to inquire any other principle of them; no (Arimanius, no uncreated Cacodæmon, no eternal fate to father them upon.)

As for other evils of grief and pain incident to the nature, or conſequent upon the actions of any being, they are ſuch as God himſelf (without any derogation to his goodneſs) may in his wiſdom or juſtice be author of; for ends ſometimes apparent to our underſtanding, ſometimes ſurpaſſing its reach; It may ſuffice that God challengeth to himſelf the being cauſe of them: * Shall there be any evil in the city, and the Lord hath not done it? † Doth not evil and Good proceed out of the mouth of the moſt High? || I am the Lord and there is none elſe, I form the light and create darkneſs, I make peace and create evil; I the Lord do all theſe things. For theſe evils therefore is it in vain to ſearch for any other cauſe, than God's juſt providence. But I will not trouble you farther in conſidering the miſtakes of thoſe blind Philoſophers or blaſphemous Hereticks.

Mali nulla natura eſt, ſed amiſſio boni mali nomen accepit. Aug. de Civ.D.XI.9.

Rom. 11. 33.

* Amos 3. 6.

† Lam. 3. 38.

|| Iſa. 45. 57.

I will only briefly touch upon a conſideration or two (concerning the manner how and the reaſon why God did make the world) which will commend it to us and ground ſomewhat of our duty, and direct our practice in reſpect thereto. The manner of God's producing the World was altogether voluntary, abſolutely free: It did not proceed from him as heat doth from the fire, or light from the ſun by a natural or neceſſary emanation (as ſome Philoſophers have conceited, ſome later Platoniſts, and ſome Stoicks) but from his wiſe counſel, and free choice. (He could have abſtained from making the World, he could have made it otherwiſe.)

Non poteſt aliter facere qui non facit niſi optima. Ipſe eſt neceſſitas ſua. Sen. Nat. Qu. præf. Vid. Baſil. pag. 10.

Rev. 4. 11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power, for thou haſt created all things, ϗ διὰ τὸ θέλημα σȣ, and for, or by thy will (or pleaſure) they are and were created, ſay the Elders in the Revelation. 'Tis Eph. 1. 11. the property of God (St. Paul tells us) to perform all things according to the counſel of his will. He could not be fatally determined, there being no ſuperiour cauſe to conſtrain him. He could not be obliged to impart any perfection being maſter of all, and debtour to none: it would deſtroy all ground of our thankfulneſs and devotion if God was not a free agent. And 'tis plain if the world had been produced by neceſſary emanation, that it ſhould have been eternal; as if the ſun had been eternal, the light had been
ſo. But that the world was produced in time and that not long ſince (within five or ſix thouſand years,) not only faith and divine Chronology aſſure us, but reaſon alſo ſhews, and all hiſtory conſpires to make us believe; there being no monuments, or probable memory of actions beyond that time, and by what progreſſions mankind was propagated and diſperſed over the world; how and when, and where nations were planted, and empires raiſed, and cities built, and arts invented or improved it is eaſie enough to trace near the original times and places. The world therefore in reſpect of time conceivable by us is very young and not many ſucceſſions of men's lives have paſt between its beginning and ours. Whence 'tis evident that it was freely produced by God. And how he produced it the Scripture farther teaches us; not with any laborious care or toil; not with help of any engines or inſtruments ſubſervient; not by inducing any preparatory diſpoſitions, but ψιλῷ τῷ βȣ́λεσθαι (as Clem. Alexand. ſpeaks) by Adv. Herm. 45. his meer will and word (theſe were the hands (as Tertullian expounds it) Pſal. 102. 25. by which 'tis ſaid God made the heavens) at his call they did all immediately ſpring up out of nothing; at his command they obediently ranged themſelves into order. It was not only a high ſtrain of Rhetorick in Moſes Sect. 7. (as Longinus ſuppoſed) but a moſt proper expreſſion of that incomprehenſible efficacy, which attends the divine will and decree.

But (ſince God did not only make the world freely but wiſely, and all wiſe agents act to ſome purpoſe, aim at ſome end) why did God make the world, it may be asked, what reaſon induced him thereto? I anſwer with Sen. Epiſt. 65. Plato, ἀγαθὸς ἦν, (Quæris quid propoſitum ſit Deo? Bonitas: ità certè Plato ait: Quæ Deo faciendi mundum cauſa fuit? Bonus eſt, nulla cujuſquam boni invidia eſt:) He was good: His natural benignity and munificence was the only motive that incited (or invited) him to this great action of imparting exiſtence, and ſuitable perfection to his creatures reſpectively. No benefit or emolument could hence accrue to him; no acceſſion of beatitude:
he did not need any profit or pleaſure from without himſelf; being full within, rich in all perfection, completely happy in the contemplation Pſal. 16. 2. and enjoyment of himſelf. Our goodneſs doth not extend to God, we Job 22. 2. cannot any wiſe advance or amplify him thereby: Can a man (ſaith Eliphaz, can any creature) be profitable to God? no: goodneſs is freely diffuſive and communicative of it ſelf; love is active and fruitfull; higheſt excellence is void of all envy, and ſelfiſhneſs and tenacity: theſe being intrinſecal 1 Joh. 4. 8, 16. ſecal to God's nature (for God is love; that is, eſſentially loving and good*)* did diſpoſe him to beſtow ſo much of being, beauty, delight, and comfort Pſal. 33. 5. upon his creatures. Hence, the earth (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) is full of the good-
119. 64. neſs of the Lord; that is, every creature therein is an effect thereof; par-Pſal. 145. 9. takes thereof in its being and enjoyments. The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works (his tender mercies, rachamavi, his bowels of affection) Good and tender over all his works, as well in producing ducing them as preſerving them; in rendring them at firſt capable to receive Good, as in providing for and diſpenſing good unto them. That thou giveſt them, they gather ('tis ſpoken in reſpect to the whole univerſity of creatures:) Thou openeſt thy hand, they are all filled with good; 'tis from God's open hand (his immenſe bounty and liberality) all creatures do receive all that good, which fills and ſatiates them. A glimpſe of which truth the ancient heathens ſeemed to have, when they delivered (as Ariſtotle tells us,) that love was the original principle of things: [πρώτιστον μὲν ἔρωτα θεῶν μητίσατο πάντων, is a verſe he cites out of Parmenides.]

Pſal. 104. 28.

Ariſt. Metaph. l. 4.

But I will not inſiſt longer upon this point; only I ſhall briefly touch ſome Uſes the belief and conſideration thereof will afford to us.

The belief thereof muſt neceſſarily beget in us the higheſt eſteem, admiration, and adoration of God and his excellencies: what a power muſt that be (how unconceivably great both intenſively and extenſively?) that could erect ſo ſpeedily, ſo eaſily, ſuch a ſtupendiouſly vaſt frame (vaſt beyond the reach of our ſenſe, of our imagination, of any rational collection we can make) the earth we dwell upon, divided into ſo many great empires, full of ſo many inhabitants, bearing ſuch variety of creatures different in kind, having in reſpect to the whole but the like proportion as a little ſand to the earth it ſelf, or a drop to the great Ocean? What a wiſdom muſt that be, (how incomprehenſibly large and penetrant,) that could contrive ſuch an innumerable number of creatures (the artifice that appears in one in the leaſt of which doth ſo far tranſcend our conceit) could digeſt them ſo fitly, and connect them ſo firmly in ſuch order? what a goodneſs and benignity muſt it be (how immenſe and boundleſs) that did extend it ſelf in affection and care, for ſo many creatures, providing abundantly for the needs and comfort of them all? how tranſcendently glorious is the Majeſty of him that was author of all thoſe beauties and ſtrengths; thoſe ſplendours and magnificencies we with ſo much pleaſure and ſo much aſtoniſhment behold? Well might the devout Pſalmiſt and the divine prophets hence ſo often take occaſion to excite us to praiſe and celebrate the perfections of God. Well might even heathen philoſophers from the contemplation of the World be raiſed unto the compoſing of Hymns and Elogies of the Great Maker of the World.

It alſo will conferr to the begetting of humble love and affection and gratitude toward God: what can be more efficacious to this purpoſe than to conſider, that all we have, all we with ſo much content and pleaſure enjoy (our ſelves firſt, then all the accommodations and comforts we find) did proceed from him; did proceed with particular intention from eſpecial good-will toward us; a moſt free good-will, moved with no merit of ours, no profit to himſelf: when I conſider the heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and ſtars, which thou haſt ordained, what is man that thou art mindfull of him? was the Pſalmiſt's contemplation; that the author of ſo great and glorious a work ſhould vouchſafe to regard ſo mean a thing as we, to viſit us with a provident care of our welfare, what a demonſtration of admirable condeſcenſion, grace, and goodneſs is this? what an argument of love and thankfulneſs toward him? What is man? what in compariſon of him that made the world? what is our ſtrength in reſpect of his, what our wit, what our goodneſs, what any quality of ours? how weak, vain, narrow, poor and wretched creatures muſt we needs ſeem to our ſelves, when we ſeriouſly conſider thoſe excellencies diſplayed in the creation? how ſhould this humble and depreſs us in our conceits concerning our ſelves? eſpecially if we reflect upon our ingratitude, our unprofitableneſs, Cogitavit res ante natura, quas fecit. Sen. de benef. 2. 23.

Pſal. 8. 3.

Sen. de Ira 27. Nimis nos ſuſpicimus ſi digni nobis videmus propter quos tanta moveantur.

ſitableneſs, our unjuſtice toward the author thereof: how none, or how ſcant returns we have made to him, who gave to us and all things their being, their all; how faint in our acknowledgments, how negligent in our ſervice we have been; how frequently we have oppoſed his will and abuſed his goodneſs. Farther, it is an inducement to truſt and hope in God, and a great conſolation in all needs and diſtreſſes. He that was able to do ſo great things, and was willing to do ſo much for us; he that becauſe
Dan. 4. 35. he made all things can diſpoſe of all and doth whatever pleaſeth him in heaven and earth; ſhall we diſtruſt or doubt of his protection and ſuccour Pſal. 121. 2. in our need? My help (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) cometh from the Lord, which
124. 8. made heaven and earth: well might he be aſſured, having recourſe to ſo potent and faithfull an aid: and again: Happy is he that hath the God of Pſal. 146. 5. Jacob for his help, whoſe hope is in the Lord his God, which made heaven and earth, the ſea and all that therein is. The prophet Jeremy begins his prayer
Jer. 32. 17. thus: O Lord God behold thou haſt made heaven and earth by thy great power and ſtretched-out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee. The creation of the world is ſuch an experiment of God's power and goodneſs, as may well ſupport our faith in the greateſt difficulties and diſtreſſes, it is finally a general incitement to all obedience: which from God's production of all things doth appear due and reaſonable. All other things obey the law
Iſa. 48. 13. 40. 26. impoſed on them; inſiſt in the Courſe preſcribed to them. And ſhall Job 9. 5. we be only diſobedient and refractary; irregular and exorbitant? ſhall all 26. 11. the hoſts of heaven readily and punctually obey God's ſummons? ſhall the Job 38. 11. Jer. 5. 21. pillars of heaven tremble and be aſtoniſhed at his reproof? ſhall the ſea, Pſal. 48. 8. with its proud waves, be confined by his decree? ſhall fire and hail, ſnow and vapour, and ſtormy winds (ſuch rude and boiſterous things) fulfill his word? and ſhall we be unruly and rebellious? But I leave the farther improvement of this doctrine to your meditation: Concluding with that
Rev. 14. 7. exhortation of the angel in the Revelation: Fear God, and give glory to him: worſhip him that made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and the fountains of water: Even to him be all obedience, adoration, and praiſe for ever and ever. Amen.

THE Firſt part of the Creed, concerning God the Father, we have largely inſiſted upon; the next in order (as is fit) ſucceeds that part thereof, which relates to his ever Bleſſed Son, our Lord and Saviour: the faith in whom; that is, the believing him to be, what he profeſſed himſelf, what he and his firſt Diſciples did teach concerning him, is the principal and peculiar duty of our Religion as Chriſtian, and diſtinct from all other Religions; the ſum of which doctrine is contained in what follows; wherein our Saviour, the object of this faith, is deſcribed and determined unto us, firſt by his proper name Jeſus; next by his moſt notable and comprehenſive title Chriſt; then by his relations, unto God firſt, His only Son; then unto us, Our Lord; laſtly by ſeveral illuſtrious accidents, and circumſtances appertaining to him, (his conception, nativity, paſſion, crucifixion, death, burial, deſcent into hell, reſurrection, aſcenſion, ſeſſion at God's right hand:) which particulars I ſhall endeavour to proſecute ſomewhat more briefly.

JESUS.

THis Name (not unuſual among the Jews; for we read of divers in Eccl. 46. 1. Scripture, that bear it) who, according to his Name (ſaith Sira- Coloſſ. 4. 11. cides) was great for the ſaving of God's elect; Jeſus the ſon of Juſtus, Jeſus the ſon of Sirach, Bar-Jeſus; and eſpecially the famous Jeſus the ſon of of Nun; and many others ſo named occurr in Joſephus :) this name I ſay, was, by God's direction, impoſed upon our Saviour, at his Circumciſion, for the ſignificancy of it, as importing the performance of that great deſign, for which he was ſent into the world, the ſalvation of mankind from ſin and miſery : (for it is ſaid : The ſon of man came to ſave the ſouls of men ; and to ſave that which was loſt : that God ſent him into the world, not to condemn the world, but that the world by him ſhould be ſaved : that he came into the world to ſave ſinners :) that is the reaſon rendred by the Angel of this name being aſſigned to him : She ſhall bear a ſon, and thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus; for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins : from their ſins, taking in all the cauſes and conſequences of them : from all thoſe ſpiritual enemies, which draw or drive us into them : from the guilt and obnoxiouſneſs to puniſhment ; the terrour and anguiſh of conſcience; the wrath and diſpleaſure of God following upon them ; the ſlavery under their dominion; the final condemnation and ſufferance of grievous pains for them : from all theſe miſchiefs he came to free and ſave us from, and did actually perform his part in accompliſhing that ſalvation; and was therefore properly called Jeſus, or the Saviour. To ſave us from our enemies (I ſay) and from the hands of all that hate us, (ſo Zachary in his Benedictus) from the Devil firſt ; For this purpoſe, (ſaith St. John) the Son of God did appear, that he might diſſolve the works of the Devil, thoſe works of tempting, and impelling us to ſin. He went about (ſaith St. Peter) doing benefits, and healing all that were * over-powered (or over-ruled) by the Devil, (poſſeſſed by him whether in body or mind :) By his death (the Author to the Hebrews tells us) he did defeat him who had the power of death ; that is, the Devil : He combated and conquered this ſtrong one (this dreadfull and mighty foe of ours) and bound him, and diſarmed him of his † panoply; and || ſpoiled all his baggage ; leaving him unable (without our own fault, our baſeneſs or negligence) to do us miſchief, (as is inſinuated in Matth. 12. and Luk. 11.) Our own fleſhly deſire, inclining us to vicious exceſs, in ſenſual enjoyments, (another powerfull and miſchievous enemy of ours) he by his grace (enlightning and ſtrengthening us) doth ſave us from : The law of the ſpirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus (ſaith St. Paul) hath freed me from the law of ſin and death : and the world (which often ſollicits, and ſometimes would force us to wickedneſs) he delivers us from, vanquiſhing it in our behalf : Be of good courage (ſaith he) for I have overcome the world : In all theſe things (in the temptations and perſecutions of all our enemies) we do more than conquer, through Chriſt that loved us. As for our conſcience, 'tis the bloud of Chriſt that cleanſes it from the ſtain of guilt ; that delivers it from the fear of puniſhment ; as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews doth aſſure us. And the wrath of God toward us he hath appeaſed ; ſo that being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt : and, If being enemies, we were reconciled by the death of his Son ; much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved by his life : We ſhall be ſaved from all condemnation and vengeance due to us : for there is now no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus :----Jeſus, * that delivers us from the wrath to come. In ſo many reſpects is this bleſſed Perſon our Jeſus ; ſaving us from all our enemies, our ſins, our miſeries; which he performs ſeveral ways ; and in ſeveral reſpects may therefore be ſtyled our Saviour.

Luk. 2. 21.
Luk. 9. 56.
Matt. 18. 11.
Joh. 3. 17.
12. 47.
1 Tim. 1. 15.
Mat. 1. 21.
Luk. 1. 71.
1 Joh. 3. 8.
Act. 10. 38.
* καταδυναστευομένους.
Heb. 2. 14.
Matt. 12. 42.
Luk. 11. 21, 22.
† πανοπλίαν αὐτοῦ.
|| σκευὴ διαρπάσαι.
Rom. 8. 2.
Joh. 16. 33.
1 Joh. 5. 4.
Rom. 8. 37.
Heb. 9. 14.
Heb. 2. 15.
Rom. 5. 9, 10.
Rom. 8. 1.
1 Theſſ. 1. 10.
* ὁ ῥυόμενος.

1. By his conduct of us into, and in the way of ſalvation : It is a very proper title, and moſt due to thoſe brave Captains, who by their wiſdom and valour have freed their people from ſtreights and oppreſſions. So generally were thoſe Judges and Captains, who anciently delivered

Iſrael, called: In the time of their trouble (ſaid the Levites in their prayer Neh. 9. 27. in Nehemiah) when they cried unto thee, thou heardeſt them from heaven, and according to thy manifold mercies thou gaveſt them Saviours, who ſaved them out of the hand of the enemy: ſo particularly are Othniel and Ehud Judg. 3. 9, 15. called; and Moſes ſignally: The ſame (ſaith St. Stephen) did God ſend to Acts 7. 35. be (ἀρχηγὸν καὶ λυτρωτὴν) a Commander and a Saviour (or Redeemer:) as he who by his happy conduct did free them from Egyptian ſlavery. So is Jeſus called ἀρχηγὸς τῆς σωτηρίας, (the Captain of our Salvation, Heb. 2. 10.) ἀρχηγὸς ζωῆς, (the Captain of life, the chief leader of us into the way of eternal life and ſalvation, Acts 3. 15.) ἀρχηγὸς πίστεως (the Captain of our faith, he that brought us into the belief of that ſaving doctrine, which is the power of God to ſalvation, Heb. 12. 2. Rom. 1. 16.) and theſe titles we find together attributed to him, (Acts 5. 31.) Him hath God exalted, ἀρχηγὸν καὶ σωτῆρα, as a Captain and Saviour. And thus hath he conducted us firſt by inſtruction, ſhewing and teaching us the way of Rom. 11. 14. 1 Cor. 9. 22. 1 Tim. 4. 16. Jam. 5. 20. ſalvation, (the doing of which we ſee often called Saving; becauſe it hath ſo much efficacy towards the effecting Salvation) God's gracious intentions of mercy toward us; the conditions of duty required by God from us; the great encouragements to ſaving obedience, and determents from deſtructive diſobedience; the whole will of God, and concernment of man reſpecting ſalvation, he hath revealed unto us: No man hath ever ſeen Joh. 1. 18. God, (not his face or nature; not his purpoſe and pleaſure) the only begotten Son, being in the boſom of the Father, (ἐκεῖνος ἐξηγήσατο) he hath reported and expounded him unto us: all that excellent doctrine, which he that heartily believes, and faithfully practiſes according to, ſhall infallibly be ſaved, he was the firſt author and doctor of: God ſaved and called 2 Tim. 1. 9. us (as St. Paul tells us) with a holy call (called us out of the way of errour and wickedneſs and miſery, into the way of truth, and righteouſneſs and happineſs) according to his purpoſe and grace (his gracious deſign) that was beſtowed upon us in Chriſt Jeſus before the world began; but being now made manifeſt by the appearing of our Saviour Chriſt Jeſus, who hath aboliſhed death, and brought life and immortality to light by the Goſpel. By him the σωτήριος χάρις (the grace of God that bringeth ſal- Tit. 2. 11, 12. vation) did appear to all men; teaching us, that denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, and righteouſly, and piouſly in this world: Neither by his doctrine only, but by his example and real performance he hath conducted us in the ſame bleſſed path: He hath reſolutely marched before us through all the moſt difficult and dangerous paſſages; charging, beating back and breaking through all the forces of our enemies; enduring painfully the moſt furious aſſaults of the world; and 1 Cor. 15. 55, 57. powerfully ſubduing the moſt malicious rage of hell. O death, where is thy ſting? O hell, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God who hath given us the victory by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Victory and ſalvation (from death 1 Pet. 2. 21. Heb. 12. 2. and hell) we ſhall be certain of, if we purſue his ſteps, and do not baſely or falſly deſert ſo good a leader---- If with patience we run the race that is ſet before us, looking unto the captain and perfecter of our faith Jeſus, who for the joy propoſed unto him, endured the croſs, deſpiſed the ſhame, and hath ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God. Would it not raiſe and enflame any courage to ſee his Commander adventure ſo boldly upon all dangers, to endure ſo willingly all hardſhips?

Thus Demetrius, by the Athenians, was entitled εὐεργέτης καὶ σωτήρ; for delivering them from the Macedonian ſubjection, and reſtoring to them their liberty.

Ἵνα γένηται πρωτότοκος ἐκ νεκρῶν, καὶ ὁδοποιήσῃ τῇ ἀνθρώπου φύσει εἰς ἀφθαρσίαν ὁδόν. Cyr. Alex.

2. But he was alſo farther (in a more excellent and peculiar manner) our Saviour, in that he purchaſed for us ſalvation; freeing us from the captivity we were detained in; from the obnoxiouſneſs to puniſhment, we were ſubjected to; by yielding himſelf a ranſom for us, offering his life a ſacrifice for our ſins; procuring by his merit and ſuffering, in our ſtead and behalf, the pardon of our ſins, and reconciliation with God. Him (ſay Peter and the Apoſtles) hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Iſrael and remiſſion of ſins. He gave himſelf, ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων (a ranſom inſtead of all.) We have redemption through his bloud, the forgiveneſs of ſins, according to the riches of his grace. He bare himſelf our ſins in his own body upon the tree. He by the eternal ſpirit offered up himſelf a ſpotleſs (ſacrifice) to God; being thereby a propitiation for our ſins and the ſins of the whole world. God by him did reconcile the world unto himſelf, not imputing unto them their tranſgreſſions. Thus doth the Scripture declare Jeſus to have been our Saviour: For he not only leads us in the way, but (as a gracious reward of our faithfull and conſtant adherence to him) has given us the promiſe of eternal joy and happineſs.

Acts 5. 31.
1 Tim. 2. 6.
Matt. 20. 28.
Epheſ. 1. 7.
Col. 1. 14.
Vid. 1 Pet. 1. 18, 19.
1 Pet. 2. 24.
Heb. 9. 14.
1 Joh. 2. 2.
4. 10.
ἱλασμός.
ἱλαστήριον.
Rom. 3. 25.

3. He is thirdly our Saviour by communication of ſpiritual ſtrength and power, whereby we are inabled to reſiſt and overcome the enemies of our ſoul and our ſalvation; freeing us from the dominion of ſin and Satan. Our own reaſon, however aided by exteriour inſtruction, and excitement, being unable to deal with thoſe powerfull temptations, oppoſitions and diſcouragements we are to encounter with, he hath given us a wiſe and powerfull ſpirit, to guide and adviſe us; to excite, and encourage us; to relieve and ſuccour us in all our religious practiſe and welfare; ſo that all deliverance from the prevalency of temptation and ſin, we owe to his grace and aſſiſtance: By our faithfull embracing Chriſt's doctrine and yoke---Our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin may be deſtroyed, ſo that we henceforth ſhould not ſerve ſin: Sin ſhall no longer lord it over us, becauſe we are not under the law, but under grace; being freed from ſin, we are ſubjected to righteouſneſs: and made ſervants to God; having our fruit unto holineſs; and the end everlaſting life: The law of the ſpirit of life in chriſt Jeſus hath freed us from the law of ſin and of death: Thus is Jeſus our Saviour.

2 Cor. 5. 19.
Col. 1. 20.
Rom. 6. 6, 14, 18, 22.
Rom. 8. 2.

4. He is ſo, laſtly, by final conferring upon us, and crowning us with ſalvation: He not only lead us in the way, and hath purchaſed for us the means, and helps us in the proſecution, and hath promiſed unto us, but will actually beſtow upon us (as a gracious reward of our faithfull and conſtant adherence to him) eternal joy and happineſs. I have fought the good fight, I have finiſhed the race, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, which the Lord the righteous judge ſhall give me at that day; and not to me only but to all them alſo that ſhall have loved his appearance. He is able to ſave them to the uttermoſt, that come unto God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them. Thou haſt given him (thou, O father, to thy Son Jeſus haſt given) the power of all fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal life to all that thou haſt given him (that is to all, who by God's grace have perſiſted in faithfull obedience to him.) The glory which thou haſt given me, I have given unto them. Thus is he the ἀρχηγὸς ϗ τελειωτὴς, the beginner, carrier on, and accompliſher of our ſalvation: and therefore moſt appoſitely was named Jeſus; the name, which anciently that moſt valiant and ſucceſsful Captain did bear, who did of all moſt livelily repreſent and preſignifie him, and had therefore queſtionleſs by God's ſecret Providence this name aſſigned him.

2 Tim. 4. 8.
Heb. 7. 25.
Joh. 17. 2, 22.
Heb. 12. 2.

I need not now much to mind you, what reſpect, what love, what gratitude the very mention of this name, the conſideration of theſe benefits towards us implyed thereby, ſhould beget in us. He that ſhould freely, with great inconvenience to himſelf come out of his own way, to ſhew us ours, bringing us out of a road tending unto certain deſtruction, into a moſt pleaſant and ſafe way, ſurely leading unto the end of our deſires, we ſhould think our ſelves much obliged unto:

He that ſhould draw us out of a wretched ſlavery, deſtitute of all eaſe, comfort or hope, by frankly yielding up himſelf a ranſom for us, we could not know how ſufficiently to value his kindneſs toward us: He that, when we were ſentenced to death, (a death of torment endleſs and remedileſs) ſhould not only expoſe his life for our delivery, but undergo Joh. 15. 13. willingly a painfull and diſgracefull execution in our ſtead; what ſhould we think of his friendſhip? what expreſſion could reach it? He laſtly, that from a ſtate of extreme penury, baſeneſs, and diſconſolacy, ſhould raiſe us to the higheſt pitch of wealth, dignity, and happineſs, how could we worthily thank him? how love or honour him enough? This and much more; much more than we can conceive or expreſs hath Jeſus done for us: well therefore ought our hearts to melt with affection in thinking of him, our knees to bend with reverence at the mention of his Name. It concerns us alſo to take care, that his ſo excellent endeavours for our ſalvation be not fruſtrated, that he be as well in effect, as deſign, Heb. 2. 3. and vertue, our Saviour: what a folly were it, what a crime to neglect (to render uſeleſs and ineffectual) ſo great ſalvation?

CHRIST.

1 King. 19.15. 'TIs a title, or name importing office and dignity; the ſame with Meſſias; this in Greek, that in Hebrew ſignifying The Anointed.
Of ancient times in the Eaſtern countries (abounding as with good oil, ſo with many delicate odoriferous ſpices) it ſeems, by Hazael his unction, to have been the manner (it was ſo however among the Jews) to ſeparate (or conſecrate) perſons (and things too, I might add) deſigned to great and extraordinary employments, by anointing them with Vid. Exod. 30. 23, &c. ointments compoſed of thoſe ingredients; ſymbolizing (or devoting) it ſeems thereby both a plentifull effuſion upon them of gifts, qualifying them for their employment, and a comfortable and pleaſant diffuſion of good and gratefull effects expected from them; from the uſe of things, Cant. 1. 2. and the performances of perſons ſo ſanctified. Thy Name (ſaith the Spouſe Vid. Pſal. 133. in the Canticles) is an ointment powered forth? that is, very delightfull and acceptable; and ſo were thoſe offices hoped to be, to which men by ſuch unction were conſecrated. We find eſpecially three ſorts of perſons, to whom this conſecration did belong, by divine appointment: Kings, and Prieſts, and Prophets; who are therefore (all of them) ſtyled God's anointed, Kings and Prieſts more frequently; but ſometimes alſo Prophets: Touch
1 Chro. 16.22. not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm; where prophets and anointed do ſeem to denote the ſame thing, and to expound one the other; for Abraham (whom with the other Patriarchs thoſe words do concern) is * Gen. 20. 7. called a * Prophet, and becauſe ſo, ſeems here ſtiled God's anointed.) Of Prieſts, (though at firſt all the ſons of Aaron were thus conſecrated, Exod. 40. 15. Exod. 30. 30. according to that law) Exod. 30. 30. Thou ſhalt anoint Aaron and his ſons, that they may miniſter unto me in the Prieſts office; yet they tell us, that afterward in all courſe of times only the High-prieſt was ſo conſecrated, Levit. 4. 3, 5, 16. whence the Anointed, or the Prieſt that is anointed did ſignify the High-prieſt (in diſtinction to other inferiour Prieſts.) Of Kings, all that ſucceeded in the Kingdom of Iſrael in a legal and orderly courſe; and thoſe whom whom God did himſelf by extraordinary deſignation conferr that dignity upon, were ſo ſeparated; (as Hazael, and *Jehu.) Prophets, we do not *1King.19.15. find that they were commonly or according to any rule anointed: but one plain inſtance we have of Eliſha, ſubſtituted to Elijah in this manner; it 1 King. 19.16. ſeems as being a prophet more than ordinary, endued with higher gifts, and deſigned to greater performances than common prophets were. Now whereas the people of the Jews were by prophetical admonitions brought into an opinion and hope, that in times to come God would ſend an extraordinary prophet: I will raiſe them up a prophet from among their brethren, Deut. 18. 15, 18. like unto thee, and I will put my words in his mouth, and he ſhall ſpeak unto them all that I ſhall command him; a prophet, who ſhould eſtabliſh a new covenant with the houſe of Iſrael; and is therefore called the meſſenger of the covenant, Mal. 1. 3. who ſhould propagate the knowledge and worſhip of God; ſhould enlighten and convert the Gentiles; who ſhould inſtruct the ignorant, ſtrengthen the faint, comfort the afflicted according to many paſſages concerning him in the prophets: as for inſtance, that in Iſaiah LXI. 1. cited by St. Luke, Luk. IV. 18. The ſpirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe the Lord hath anointed me to preach Good tidings unto the meek; he hath ſent me to bind up the broken-hearted, &c. And that in the ſame prophet, chap. XLII. 1. alledged by St. Matthew, Matt. XII. 18. Behold my ſervant, whom I uphold, mine elect in whom my ſoul delighteth; I have put my ſpirit upon him, he ſhall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. He ſhall not cry, &c. Which being inſpired, is the qualification of a prophet; and ſuch promulgation of God's will; ſuch miniſtration of comfort and counſel from God are the proper offices of a prophet, (that is, of an eſpecial miniſter and agent ſent by God to tranſact his affairs with men and ſhew them his pleaſure.) This perſon alſo the Jews did from the ſame inſtructions expect to be a Prince, who ſhould govern them in righteouſneſs and in proſperity; endued with power to deliver them from all oppreſſion and ſlavery; to ſubdue their enemies; and reduce all nations under ſubjection to their laws; according to thoſe predictions; Iſa. 32. 1. Behold a King ſhall reign in righteouſneſs, &c. Pſal. 110. 2. The Lord ſhall ſend the rod of thy ſtrength out of Sion, rule thou in the midſt of thine enemies. Jer. 23. 5. and 33. 15. Behold the days come, ſaith the Lord, that I will raiſe unto David a righteous branch; and a King ſhall reign and proſper, and ſhall execute judgment and juſtice in the earth; in his days Judah ſhall be ſaved, and Iſrael ſhall dwell ſafely: and Jer. 30. 8. It ſhall come to Vid. Ezek. 34. 23, &c. 37. 24. paſs in that day, ſaith the Lord, I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burſt thy bonds, and ſtrangers ſhall no more ſerve themſelves of him: But Hoſ. 3. 5. they ſhall ſerve the Lord their God, and David their King, whom I will raiſe up unto them. Iſa. 11. 1, 10. And there ſhall come forth a rod out of the Vid. Iſa. 9. 7. 16. 5. ſtem of Jeſſe, and a branch ſhall grow out of his roots: And the ſpirit of the Lord ſhall be upon him, &c.---he ſhall ſtand for an Enſign of the people, to it ſhall the Gentiles ſeek, and his reſt ſhall be glorious: and many more places clearly ſpeak to the ſame purpoſe. That this Great perſon alſo ſhould be a Prieſt, they did or might have learned from the ſame Prophets: for of him Zechariah thus foretold: Thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts; Behold the man Zech. 6. 12. whoſe name is the Branch, (a name in ſo many places appropriated to the Meſſias) and he ſhall grow up out of his place, and he ſhall build the temple of the Lord; even he ſhall build the Temple of the Lord, and he ſhall bear the glory; and ſhall ſit and rule upon his throne; And he ſhall be a prieſt upon his throne, and the counſel of peace ſhall be between them both. Of him alſo David Pſal. 110. 4. ſpake: The Lord hath ſworn and will not repent; Thou art a prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchizedeck: From divers paſſages alſo concerning his performances of propitiation and benediction they might have collected the ſame. It is no wonder then, that the ancient Jews (although the text of Scripture does not, except once in the 9th. of Daniel, apply this name of Chriſt or Meſſias to this perſon, ſo promiſed and propheſied of) did attribute eſpecially this title to him, it ſeeming moſt proper of any, and moſt comprehenſive; implying all the privileges, endowments, and performances belonging to him: 'tis obſerved that the Chaldee Paraphraſe (compoſed by the Prieſts, as an interpretation of the leſs exactly underſtood ancient Hebrew Scripture, for the benefit and inſtruction of the Vid. Neh. 8. 8. people) doth expreſly mention the Meſſias in above ſeventy places; and according to their Expoſitions we ſee that the People did confidently expect Joh. 4. 25. a perſon (under this name and notion) ſhould come: I know (ſaid the Woman of Samaria, ſo far had this belief extended) that the Meſſias comes; and when he ſhall come, he will tell us all things: (Obſerve, that they did promiſe to themſelves a full declaration of all truth by the Meſſias.)

And when St. John the Baptiſt did live and teach in a manner extraordinary, Luk. 3. 15. 'tis ſaid, That the people did expect, and all men muſed in their hearts concerning him whether he were the Chriſt, or not: And when our Saviour's Joh. 7. 31. admirable works and diſcourſes had convinced divers, they ſaid: When Chriſt cometh, ſhall he do greater miracles than this man hath done? So that 'tis evident, the belief and expectation of a Meſſias to come was general among them. And that indeed Jeſus was ſuch, in correſpondency to all thoſe prophecies, and the characters in them deſcribed and preſignified, that he was ſignally choſen and conſecrated by God, in a manner ſupereminent, to all theſe offices Prophetical, Regal, and Sacerdotal, Act. 10. 38. the New Teſtament doth abundantly ſhew us. Him (ſaith St. Peter in general) God anointed with the holy Spirit, and Power: not with external affuſion of material oil (that did only ſignifie, as Cyrus alſo was not, who yet is called God's Meſſias) but with real infuſion of divine grace and power, enabling him to execute all thoſe great and extraordinary functions:
with this gladſome oil he was thoroughly perfumed and repleniſhed, without meaſure: with this he was ſanctified from the womb;
Pſal. 45. 5. when the power of the higheſt did overſhadow him, at or in his conception:
Luk. 4. 1. with this, at his Baptiſm, he was ſolemnly and viſibly inaugurated; when
Joh. 3. 34. the Heavens were opened unto him, and the Spirit of God deſcended upon Matt. 3. 16. him as a Dove, and came upon him: with this in all the courſe of his life Acts 10. 38. and miniſtery he was continually accompanied; the vertue of it being in moſt ſenſible effects of wiſe and gracious diſcourſe; holy and blameleſs converſation; miraculous and glorious performances, for the good and benefit of mankind, to the delight and conſolation of all well-diſpoſed minds, diſcovered and diffuſed. He was by this made (in right and in effect) a Prophet, a King, a Prieſt. 1. A Prophet; for they were not miſtaken, Luk. 7. 16. who (upon our Saviour's admirable raiſing the Widow's child) were amazed, and glorified God, ſaying, That a great Prophet was raiſed up among them, and that God had viſited his people: nor the diſciples, who Luk. 24. 19. called him a Prophet, mighty in deed and ſpeech before God and all the people:
Joh. 6. 14. nor they, who confeſſed (in St. John's Goſpel) This is in truth the Prophet, that is to come into the world: an extraordinary commiſſion he had from God, declared by vocal atteſtation of God himſelf from Heaven, by the expreſs teſtimony of St. John Baptiſt, by the performance of innumerable great ſigns and miraculous works (arguments in the higheſt degree, to utmoſt poſſibility ſufficient to aſſert and confirm it) he was in greateſt perfection qualified for the exerciſe of that function; by inſpiration complete and unlimited; by diſpoſition of mind altogether pure and holy, declared in a continual practice of life void of all ſin and guile; by an inſuperable courage and conſtancy, an incomparable meekneſs and patience; a moſt winning goodneſs and ſweetneſs; a tranſcendent wiſdom and diſcretion; a moſt powerfull awfulneſs and majeſty, expreſſed in all his demeanour and actions. And ſuitable to the authority of his commiſſion and the qualifications of his perſon was the weight and the extent of his doctrine, concerning no leſs than the ſalvation of mankind; the reconciliation of God to the world; the entire will of God, and whole duty of man, with all the covenants and conditions, the promiſes and threatnings relating to our future ſtate; myſteries never before revealed, decrees never to be reverſed. He did not (as other Prophets have done) propheſie about the conſtitution of one particular law or religion; the reproof or reformation of one ſtate; the judgment and fate determined to this or that nation; but to the inſtruction and converſion of all people; the ſettling of a law univerſal and perpetual; the final doom of all the world, did his prophetical revelations extend. So was he a Prophet. 2. And a King alſo he is; ſuch as the Prophets foretold he ſhould be; who ſhould raiſe the tabernacle of David that was fallen; and reſtore the Kingdom to Iſrael, (Acts 1.6.) that ſhould enact laws, and reduce the nations into ſubjection to them; ſhould erect a Kingdom, and govern it in righteouſneſs, peace, and proſperity; ſubduing and extirpating all the enemies thereof: [A King not of this world, though over it; ruling not in external pomp and ſtate; but by ſecret providence and power; not ſo much over the bodies and temporal eſtates, as in the hearts and conſciences of men; not chiefly by outward compulſion and violence; but by inward allurement and perſuaſion:] A King he is indeed over all the world; to * the lamb is to be aſcribed all power and authority by every creature; he is truly ſtyled King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. God hath advanced him (ὑπερύψωσε) and hath given him a name (that is, a title of dignity and authority) above every name; that at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bend, whether of things in heaven, or upon the earth, or under the ground. Of him in a higher and exacter ſenſe it was ſaid, than of Solomon: All Kings fall down before him, all Nations do ſerve him: All men whatever (all creatures) are his vaſſals, ſubject and tributary to him: All power is given unto him in heaven and earth. But in eſpecial manner he is King over his Church; over that People, whom by the ſword of his word and prevalent operation of his ſpirit he hath ſubdued to himſelf, (that myſtical Sion, built upon the rock of his heavenly grace and truth; in which 'tis ſaid God will place his reſidence and reign for ever; from whence the law ſhall go forth; and to which all nations ſhall flow.) Over this he reigns; having eſtabliſhed moſt righteous and wholſome laws, which his ſubjects are obliged and enabled by him to obey; protecting them by legiſlation, by defence and protection, &c. from the invaſions and inſurrections of their enemies (inteſtine enemies, their own luſts; outward enemies, the Devil and the World,) ſupporting them in their diſtreſſes and afflictions: Alſo exerciſing judgment over all; diſtributing fit rewards and puniſhments, with exquiſite juſtice and equity; moſt juſt, though very ſevere puniſhments upon obſtinate offenders; moſt royal and liberal rewards to the faithfull and obedient; laſtly, reſtraining, defeating, and deſtroying all the enemies to his royal dignity, and to the welfare of his good ſubjects; both viſible and inviſible; temporal and ſpiritual. Out of his mouth (Apoc. 19. 15.) there goeth a ſharp ſword, that with it he ſhould ſmite the nations, and he ſhall rule them with a rod of iron: Theſe mine enemies (he ſhall one day ſay) which would not that I ſhould reign over them, bring them hither and ſlay

1 Pet. 2. 22.
Amos 9. 11.
* Rev. 5. 13.
19. 16.
Rev. 1. 5.
Phil. 2. 9.
Eph. 1. 21.
Col. 2. 10.
Pſal. 72. 11.
Mat. 28. 18.
11. 27.
Joh. 3. 35.
13. 3.
17. 2.
Pſal. 132. 13.
Mic. 4. 7, &c.
Iſa. 2. 2, &c.
Apoc. 19. 15.
Pſal. 2. 9.
Mat. 25. 31, &c.
Luk. 19. 27.
1 Cor. 15. 25, 26.

ſlay them before me; He muſt reign till he hath put all enemies under his Vid. Col.2. 15. feet. Thus is he a King, endued with ſoveraign Power, and crowned with glorious Majeſty; enjoying all pre-eminencies,and exerciſing all functions ſuitable to regal dignity. 3. He is alſo a Prieſt; and that no ordinary Heb. 8. 6. one: διαφορωτέρας τέτευχε λειτουργίας; he hath obtained a more excellent function, than any other Prieſt ever had. An oblation he once offered, in worth and efficacy ſurpaſſing all the ſacrifices and oblations that ever were or could be made (all the fatteſt hecatombs that were ever ſacrificed; 1 Pet. 1. 18. all the gold and precious ſtones that were ever offered; all the ſpices and perfumes that ever were kindled upon the altar, were but vile and ſordid; Heb. 9. 9. ineffectual and unacceptable, in compariſon thereto) a willing oblation of his own moſt glorious body (the temple of the divinity;) of his moſt Heb. 10. 5. Joh. 10. 16. precious blood; of his dear life; of himſelf; his moſt innocent, moſt pure, Eph. 5. 2. moſt ſpotleſs and unblemiſhed ſelf; for the propitiation of our ſins, and Heb. 7. 27. Heb. 7. 26. reconciling us to God; an oblation that only could appeaſe God's wrath, and merit his favour.

He doth alſo (which is another ſacerdotal performance) intercede for the pardon of our ſins: If any man ſin, we have an advocate with (or to) 1 Joh. 2. 1. the father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous; for the acceptance of our ſervices;
Vid. Heb. 5. 7. for the granting our requeſts; for grace and aſſiſtance, comfort and reward, and all ſpiritual advantages to be conferr'd upon us; thus purſuing the work of ſalvation by his propitiatory ſacrifice begun for us.
Heb. 7. 25. Whence (as the Apoſtle ſaith) he is able to ſave to the uttermoſt thoſe that Numb. 6. 23. by him come unto God, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for us. It 1 Tim. 2. 5. is the duty alſo of a Prieſt to mediate between God and man by atonement and interceſſion; ſo is he.

* 1 Chr.23.13. He doth farther, as a * Prieſt, perform the office of bleſſing; bleſſing the Levit. 9. 22, 23. people in God's name: bleſſing God in the people's behalf; as did that Gen.14.19,20. illuſtrious type of him, Melchizedeck. (Bleſſed be Abram of the moſt High God, poſſeſſour of heaven and earth: and bleſſed be the moſt High God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand.) So hath Jeſus effectually pronounced all joy and happineſs to his faithfull people; he pronounced Bleſſedneſs in his Sermons; he bleſſed his Diſciples at his parting; And God Luk.24. 50. Act. 3. 26. (as St. Peter tells us) having raiſed up his Son Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs us,
Vid. Eph. 1. 3. in turning away every one of us from his iniquity; and at the laſt day he will Matt.25.34. utter that comfortable benediction; Come ye bleſſed of my father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; as the great Prophet and Doctor; as the ſoveraign King and Prince, as the High-Prieſt and Advocate of his Church. So in all reſpects is Jeſus a true and perfect Prieſt; and ſo finally in all reſpects is he God's anointed; the Chriſt of God: and indeed that he is ſo, is the fundamental point of our Religion; which the Apoſtles did teſtifie, and preach, and labour to perſuade the world of, the ſincere belief of which doth conſtitute and denominate us Chriſtians: the conſideration of which may ſerve to beget in us a practice anſwerable to our relations grounded thereupon: If he be ſuch a Prophet, we muſt with attention and a docile mind hearken to his admonitions and inſtructions; we muſt yield a ſteady belief to his doctrine; we muſt readily practiſe what he teaches us: if he be our King, we muſt perform all due allegiance to him; pay him honour and reverence; ſubmit to his laws and commandments; repoſe truſt and confidence in him; fly to his protection and aſſiſtance in all our difficulties and needs.
If he be our Prieſt, we muſt apply our ſelves to him for, and rely upon his ſpiritual miniſteries in our behalf; ſue for and expect propitiation of our ſins by his ſacrifice; the collation of all ſpiritual gifts from his interceſſion; terceſſion; all ſpiritual comfort, joy, and felicity in conſequence upon his efficacious benediction; Having ('tis the Apoſtle to the Hebrews his Heb. 10. 21, 22. admonition) a great Prieſt over the houſe of God, let us draw near with a true heart, in full aſſurance of faith. In a word; if Jeſus be Chriſt, let us be Chriſtians; Chriſtians not in name only, in outward profeſſion, in our opinion; but in very deed and reality; in our heart, in our affection, in our practice. Let every one that nameth the name of Chriſt (that confeſſeth 2 Tim. 2. 19. him to be ſo) depart from iniquity.

His only Son.

THat the Meſſias deſigned by God to come for the reſtoring of the Church and reformation of the World, was in eſpecial manner to be the Son of God, ſeems to have been the common perſuaſion of the ancient Jews before our Saviour's appearance; as may be collected from divers expreſſions then uſed, wherein being the Chriſt, and being the Son of God, are conjoined as inſeparable adjuncts of the ſame perſon: as in the confeſſions of Nathanael. * Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, thou art the * Joh. 1. 49. King of Iſrael: Of Martha, † I believe that thou art the Chriſt, the Son of † Joh. 11. 27. God, which ſhould come into the world: Of St. Peter, ‖ We have believed, ‖ Joh. 6. 69. and have known that thou art the Chriſt, the Son of the living God; and eſpecially by that examination of the High-Prieſt: * I adjure thee by the living * Matt. 26. 63. God, that thou tell us, whether thou be the Chriſt, the Son of God. Mar. 14. 61. And that our Saviour was indeed ſo, the New Teſtament doth every-where teach us: calling him not only at large the Son of God, but his μονογενὴς (his only begotten Son,) his ἀγαπητὸς, (his darling Son;) his πρωτότοκος (his firſt-born,) his ἴδιος υἱὸς (his proper and peculiar Son;) thoſe epithets all implying ſomewhat of peculiar eminency in the kind and ground of this relation. Adam is called the Son of God; and the Angels are ſo entitled; Luk. 3. ult. and Princes are ſome-where ſtyled the children of the moſt High: and all Pſal. 82. 6. men; eſpecially all good men; yea all things have God, in ſome ſenſe, their father: But all theſe in a manner (if we compare them with Chriſt's relation) are improper and inferiour; for he is the only Son, (or the only begotten Son) of God. Now we find indeed ſeveral reaſons and reſpects, for which he is called the Son of God: he is ſo in regard of his temporal generation, by the Holy Ghoſt of the Virgin Mary; ſo the Angel doth expreſly tell us: The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the Luk. 1. 35. Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee: therefore alſo that Holy thing, which is be- Vid. Gal. 4. 4. gotten, ſhall be called the Son of God: A generation, ſo wonderfull, and peculiar, without intervention of any father, but God, is one ground of this relation and title. He is alſo capable of this title, by reaſon of that high Office, the which by God's ſpecial deſignation and appointment he was inſtated in: if ordinary Princes and Judges (as being deputed by God to repreſent himſelf in diſpenſation of juſtice, as reſembling him in exerciſe of power and authority) have been called Gods, and the children of Pſal. 82. 6. the moſt High, in the Holy Scripture it ſelf; with how much greater Joh. 10. 36. reaſon and truth may he (whom God hath ſanctified and ſent into the world; hath conſecrated and commiſſionated to the moſt eminent and extraordinary office) be ſo called? 'tis our Saviour's own argumentation. He is alſo in regard of his Reſurrection by the divine power (which is a kind of generation, or a regeneration to another immortal life) ſo ſtyled: if others are the Children of God, being the Children of the Reſurrection, how much more he, who is the firſt-born from the dead? and that of the Luk. 20. 36. Pſalmiſt, concerning Chriſt, Thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee, Col. 1. 18. according to St. Paul's expoſition, was fulfilled by God's raiſing Jeſus Rev. 1. 5. Act. 13. 32, 33.

(Acts 13. 33.) again ; whereas it is ſaid, that God did appoint or make Heb. 1. 2. our Saviour heir of all things ; did put all things under his feet ; did give Eph. 1. 22. Joh. 17. 1, 2. him power over all fleſh ; did commit to him all authority in heaven and upon Matt. 28. 18. the earth ; having ſet him at his right hand ; hath exalted him to the next Act. 2. 33. place of authority and dignity to himſelf, (the right hand of the Majeſty Heb. 1. 3. in the higheſt,) and given him a name above every name : Well may he in Phil. 2. 9. Eph. 1. 20, 21. this reſpect be entitled the Son of God, as having obtained the rank and privilege proper to this relation : (If a ſon, then an heir, St. Paul argues: and reciprocally, if conſtituted heir of all, then in that regard a ſon, Rom. 8.17.) in ſuch reſpects is our Saviour properly or may be fitly ſtyled the Son of God : but his being ſo expreſly called God's only begotten Son, doth imply a ground more peculiar and more excellent (than any of theſe) of this relation (as do alſo thoſe eſpecial prerogatives of affection and favour from God appropriated to him ; with all the glorious preferment conſequent thence argue the ſame.) For the firſt Adam alſo derived his Being immediately from God's power and divine inſpiration ; Iſaac, Samuel, and John the Baptiſt, had a generation extraordinary and miraculous (as being born of aged fathers, or barren mothers, by the interpoſition of divine power ;) and we cannot eaſily conceive how the production of Angels ſhould be ſo much inferiour to our Saviour's temporal generation (ſuppoſing he had no other.) And our Saviour, though he were the firſt, and chief, yet was not the only Son of the Reſurrection ; nor doth the arbitrary collation of power and dignity, how eminent ſoever, ſeem to ſuffice : for we ſee others in regard to their deſignment and deputation to offices of power and truſt (though ſubordinate and inferiour to him) entitled the Sons of God : (beſide, that this is ground of a metaphorical rather than a natural and proper Sonſhip ;) And though our Saviour be the heir of all Rom. 8. 17. things, yet hath he co-heirs ; whom (as St. Paul ſpeaks) God hath together Eph. 2. 5, 6. enlivened, and together raiſed, and together ſeated with him in thrones of Heb. 2. 10. glory and bliſs. In theſe reſpects God hath many Sons (as the author to the Rom. 8. 29. Hebrews tells us) and our Saviour many brethren (as it is in Romans the 8th.) We ſhould therefore ſeek a more excellent and proper foundation of this only Sonſhip; and ſuch we may deduce from the teſtimony of divine Writ. Joh. 3. 13. It is evident thence, that our Saviour had an exiſtence before his temporal 6. 62. generation ; for he did deſcend from heaven, and was there before he did deſcend : (his aſcenſion was but a returning thither, whence he had deſcended at his incarnation) he was before St. John the Baptiſt ; and there- Joh. 1. 15. fore (as St. John confeſſes) was worthily preferred before him. Before Joh. 8. 58. Abraham was born, he did ſubſiſt (and therefore might without any abſurdity affirm, that Abraham and he did ſee each other, might have entercourſe together, as his own diſcourſe with the Jews doth declare :) nay farther, 'tis plain he was of ſtanding, and had a glory before the world had Joh. 17. 5. a being : for he prays thus ; And now father glorify me with thy ſelf with the glory which I had before the world was with thee : (Glory ; that is, a moſt honourable ſtate of being, and excellent perfection, was not only deſigned him, but he really had it, before the World was) and needs muſt it be ſo ; Heb. 1. for by him God made the World : and himſelf made it : By him (ſaith Col. 1. 15, &c. St. Paul) were all things created that are in heaven and that are in earth, Eph. 3. 9. viſible and inviſible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principalities or powers, all things were created by him and for him : And he is before all things, and by him all things conſiſt : (He did not only create anew and reform mankind ; but he created all things ; and among them all degrees of Angels ; all things in heaven ; ſuch things as the new metaphorical Joh. 1. 3, 10. Creation did not extend unto :) All things were made by him (or did exiſt by him) and without him there was not any thing made, which was made (ſaith St. John; and what could be ſaid more expreſly or clearly?) In fine, he did exiſt from all eternity: πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως; that is, born before all the Creation: as, In the beginning was the Word: In the beginning; that Joh. 1. 1.

is, before any point of time deſignable or conceivable; that is, from eternity; whence he is truly ſtyled the firſt and the laſt (ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος;)
and Alpha and Omega, ſeveral times in St. John's Revelation: (a Rev. 1. 17.
phraſe by which God's eternity and immortality are uſually expreſſed.) 2. 8. 22. 13.
He had therefore a Being before his temporal generation; and that before Iſa. 41. 4.
all creatures; even from eternity; therefore that Being was divine; if no 48. 12.
creature; if author of all creatures; if eternally ſubſiſtent, then God: that 44. 6. Rev. 1. 8. action is proper, that attribute is peculiar to God; only God can be the Creator of all things; (He that built all things is God; none but God can be eternal; He only hath immortality, and only therefore hath eternity:)
He is conſequently ſaid, before he did aſſume the form of a ſervant, and Heb. 3. 4. 1 Tim. 6. 16.
became like unto men, to have ſubſiſted in the form of God, and not to have deemed it robbery to be equal (or in equality) to God; (ſo that as he was Phil. 2. 6, 7.
after his incarnation truly Man, partaker of man's nature and properties; ſo before it he was truly God, partaker of the divine eſſence and attributes;) and therefore he is frequently in the Scriptures called God (in the moſt proper and higheſt ſenſe:) In the beginning was the word, and the Vid. Rom. 8. 33.
word was with God, and the word was God. God is ſaid to have been manifeſted Joh. 1. 1.
in the fleſh, juſtified in the ſpirit, ſeen of Angels, preached among the 1 Tim. 3. 16.
Gentiles, believed upon in the World, aſſumed into Glory, (of which poſitions 'tis evident that the ſubject is Chriſt, he is therefore called God:) God is alſo ſaid (by St. Paul) to have purchaſed his Church with his own bloud; Acts 20. 28.
who elſe did that but Chriſt? My Lord and my God; ſo St. Thomas expreſſed his faith in Chriſt (upon his conviction) which our Saviour accepts and approves, as a proper teſtimony thereof. Alſo: We are (ſaith St. John) Joh. 20. 28.
in the true One (the God of truth) in his Son Jeſus Chriſt: This he, is the 1 Joh. 5. 20.
true God, and life eternal, (no falſe, no metaphorical God, but the very true ſupreme ever-living God:) Out of whom (ſaith St. Paul) as concerning Rom. 9. 5.
the fleſh (according to his humanity) Chriſt came, who is over all God bleſſed for ever, (ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς) the God over all, the ſupreme God; the moſt Mar. 1. 61.
High: God, bleſſed for ever; the ὁ εὐλογητὸς, the Bleſſed one, (which is a ſpecial and characteriſtical attribute or title of God.) Now this proper appellation, with the Majeſty and Worſhip due thereto, as alſo the title of Lord and King; King of Kings, and Lord of Lords; with the reverence Pſal. 42. 8. and authority attending them: likewiſe the moſt divine works of creation and providence, and judging the world; immediate working of miracles, remitting of ſins: the divine attributes of wiſe, good, powerfull, abſolutely and perfectly: in a word, all things that the father hath (according to what our Saviour affirmed: All things that the father hath Joh. 16. 15.
are mine;) we cannot imagine that God, who is ſo jealous of his honour, (who will not give his glory to another) would communicate to any creature, how eminent ſoever in nature (for the higheſt creature poſſible muſt however be infinitely diſtant from, infinitely inferiour to himſelf in perfection and dignity; nor can any be capable of it in nature, or in reaſon and juſtice accept ſuch names, ſuch characters, ſuch prerogatives.) Now our Saviour being thus God; and the whole tenour of our Religion (with teſtimonies of Scripture frequent and obvious) aſſerting but one God; therefore our Saviour hath the ſame eſſence with God; and it muſt be neceſſarily true what himſelf affirms: I and the father am one, Joh. 10. 30.
Yet hath he not this eſſence of himſelf, but by communication: For as the father hath life in himſelf, ſo hath he given the ſon to have life in him- Col. 1. 15. Heb. 1. 3. ſelf. Joh. 5. 26. He is the image of the inviſible God (an image moſt perfectly like, becauſe having the very ſame nature) an effulgency of his glory, and a character (or perfect impreſſion) of his ſubſtance; and this eternal communication of the ſame divine eſſence is that generation, in reſpect of which he is moſt properly and truly, The only begotten Son of God: If to produce a Being like (in any kind or degree) be to generate; to impart a Being without any diſſimilitude or diſparity at all, perfectly the ſame, is the moſt proper generation: And that none other (beſide our Saviour) was ſo begotten, in any manner like or comparable to this, is evident enough; for that as no reaſon could have taught us that our Saviour himſelf was thus begotten, ſo no revelation hath ſhewed us that any other was: By creation things receive a Being from God infinitely different, unlike, and unequal to the Being of God, and that filiation which is grounded upon adoption and grace is wholly divers from this: and the communication of the divine eſſence to the Holy Ghoſt, doth ſo differ in manner from this (though the manner be incomprehenſible to us) that it is never called generation in Scripture, and therefore we muſt not preſume it to be ſo.) But ſo much for explication of the point: For application briefly: The conſideration of this point will ſerve to inſtruct and confirm our faith concerning the myſtery of our redemption; to direct and heighten our devotion; to raiſe in us a due gratitude toward God; to beget hope and comfort in us.

1. We may firſt hence learn whence the undertaking of Chriſt (his performances and his ſufferings for us) become of ſo great worth and effi- 1 Joh. 1. 7. Heb. 9. 14. Col. 1. 13. cacy: it is no wonder that God's only Son his mediation ſhould be ſo acceptable and effectual with God; that his bloud ſhould be ſo precious in God's ſight, and his interceſſion ſo prevalent with him. What could υἱὸς τῆς ἀγάπης αὐτοῦ. God deny his own Son, the Son of his love, ſo earneſtly entreating in our behalf? what debts might not ſo rich a price diſcharge? what anger could not ſo dear a ſacrifice appeaſe? what juſtice ſhould ſo full a compenſation 1 Pet. 1. 18. not ſatisfy? We were not redeemed with gold; all the Indies had not been able to ranſom a ſoul; all the hecatombs in the world cannot ſatisfy for a peccadillo: Well might a perſon ſo infinitely worthy and excellent be a ſufficient ranſom for whole World's of miſerable offenders and captives; well might his voluntary ſuffering a bitter and diſgracefull death countervail the deſerved puniſhment of all mankind, if our diſpleaſing, and diſho- Pſal. 49. 7. nouring a perſon ſo great, ſo good, doth aggravate our offence; the equal excellency and dignity of the perſon ſubmitting in our behalf to juſtice and performance of ſatisfaction, may proportionably advance the reparation, and countervail the injury done: Well therefore may we believe Rom. 8. 33. and ſay with the Apoſtle: Who ſhall criminate againſt the elect of God? 'tis God that juſtifieth (the Son of God, as himſelf God, that ſatisfies juſtice for us) who is there that condemns? 'tis Chriſt that hath died for us.

2. We learn what reverence and adoration is due to our Saviour; and Joh. 5. 23. why we muſt honour the ſon, even as we honour the father, (as himſelf hath taught us to do.) Whence it is, that (in St. John's Revelation) every creature, which is in heaven, and on the earth and under the earth, and ſuch as are in the ſea, and all that are in them, did (and ought to) ſay, Bleſſing, honour, glory and power be unto him, that ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the lamb for ever and ever, (aſcribing the ſame pre-eminency, and paying the ſame veneration jointly to God Almighty and to the Lamb his bleſſed Son;) why, not we men only (whom he hath particularly pur- Phil. 2. 9. chaſed and redeemed) but even all things in heaven and earth, and beneath the the earth muſt bend the knee (yield worſhip and obſervance) to him; when the firſt-begotten is brought into the world, it is ſaid, Let all the Angels Heb. 1. 6. of God worſhip him. We are (we ſee) obliged to aſcribe divine glory; to yield divine adoration to Chriſt; why? becauſe he is the only Son of God, equal in Majeſty, One in eſſence with him: were he not ſo, it were injury to God and ſacrilege to do it: God would not impart his glory, we ſhould Iſa. 42. 8. not yield it to another.

